War with England. 1. Becauſe that after the Breach of the Treaty of Bretigny, in the Reign of Charles V, the Kings of England had renew'd their Pretenſions to the Kingdom of France. The Violation of that Peace was at firſt indeed very much to the Advantage of France, but it gave occaſion to the War which Henry V made againſt her afterwards, the Succeſs whereof made the French often wiſh that the Treaty of Bretigny had never been broke. In fine, the untimely Death of Henry V, the Minority of Henry VI, and many other Reaſons, had actually reſtor'd France to a better State than it was left in by Charles V at his Death. Mean time the Pretenſions of the Kings of England ſtill ſubſiſted, and it was not impoſſible but favourable Opportunities might ariſe to draw the Engliſh again into France: for the War renew'd by Charles V continued, and notwithſtanding the Truces which had interrupted it from time to time, no Regulation was made with reſpect to the Pretenſions of the Parties, which were ſtill the ſame as ever. Edward IV was not unmindful of this when he carry'd the War into France, to aſſert the Title which he deriv'd from his Predeceſſors. The Treaty which he made at Pequigny with Lewis XI, did not in the leaſt prejudice that Title, which remain'd as good as it was at the Time of the Violation of the Treaty of Bretigny, without mentioning the Treaty of Troyes made in the Reign of Henry V, whereby his Succeſſors pretended to have acquir'd a new Right. It was therefore the Intereſt of France not to rouſe the Engliſh, becauſe ſhe could get but little by them, and had a vaſt deal to loſe. And this was the conſtant Policy of the Kings of France from the time they drove the Engliſh out of the Kingdom, to the taking of Calais in the Reign of Henry II. Lewis XI, Father of Charles VIII, did not ſtick to purchaſe a Peace of Edward IV, tho' in the main he was able enough to have defended himſelf when he was attack'd by by him; and I ſhall have frequent occaſion hereafter to ſhew that Charles VIII, Lewis XII, and Francis I, never departed from this Maxim.

CHARLES VIII had a ſecond Reaſon yet ſtronger to prolong the Truce with England, viz. The Project he had formed to conquer the Dutchy of Bretagne, which he very well knew it was the Intereſt of England to prevent.

Charles attacks Bretagne.

ACCORDINGLY in the Spring of the Year, 1487, the ſaid Prince attack'd the Duke of Bretagne, and immediately made himſelf Maſter of a great part of his Country. For Henry was at that time employed againſt the counterfeit Earl of Warwick; and beſides, the three Years Truce he had concluded with France ty'd up his Hands; which was a very happy Conjuncture for the King of France. The Civil War in England being over ſooner than Charles expected, by the Victory of Stoke, he was afraid that Henry would relieve the Duke of Bretagne, as indeed he ought to have done, according to all the Rules of State Policy; for this Reaſon Charles immediately ſent Ambaſſadors to him, who exerted all their Rhetoric to perſwade him not to enter into the Quarrel.

Sends Ambaſſadors to diſſuade King Henry from entring into the Quarrel.

To give the full State of Henry's Conduct in this Affair, would run me into ſuch a Train of Particulars as would be too long for an Abridgment. Therefore tho' this be the only Subject of 5 Years of this Reign, I will not dwell upon it, and ſhall content my ſelf with laying down ſome Principles which may be of very great Uſe for underſtanding the Acts in the Fœdera, which relate either to France or Bretagne.

ACCORDING to all appearance, Henry, as ſagacious as he was, had a wrong Notion of the War into Bretagne. He was fully convinc'd how much it was the Intereſt of England to hinder the Dutchy of Bretagne from falling into the Hands of the King of France; but he always thought it was in his Power to prevent it by the means of a Negociation, without giving the Duke of Bretagne any effectual Succours. He believ'd that Charles would never run the Riſque of entring into an open War with England, and that therefore to terrify him with the Fears of ſuch a War, would be giving effectual Relief to the oppreſſed Duke. Being ſtrongly poſſeſs'd with this Fancy, he attended to the Affair no farther than as he might be a Gainer by it, that is to ſay in Money, for never was there a Prince more greedy of Pelf than he, nor more dextrous at converting every thing to his own Profit; of which we ſhall ſee a Proof in what remains for me to ſay upon this Head. While he thought therefore that he could finiſh the War in Bretagne when he pleaſed, by a Treaty, he reſolv'd to make uſe of that opportunity to get a Subſidy from the Parliament, on pretence that England was concern'd in Intereſt not to ſuffer Bretagne to be loſt. For this end, he found it abſolutely neceſſary to give Charles VIII time to make great Progreſs in that Dutchy, that the Duke of Bretagne's Neceſſities might be made manifeſt, and that the Parliament might have no excuſe to refuſe the Subſidy.

Henry's wrong Notion of the War in Bretagne.

His Avarice.

IT was with this View that, at the very time when the Duke was moſt preſs'd, Henry prolong'd his Truce with France for for a Year. The Duke of Bretagne was a Sacrifice to this Policy; he was oblig'd to hazard a Battle in which he was overcome, and then he made a Treaty with the King of France, which left him Master of a great part of the Dutchy. The Duke died soon after, leaving Anne his Daughter, who succeeded him, no Resource but the Succours which she expected from England. Then it was that Henry formed a new Project: As he could not have had a more pressing Occasion than he had then to desire a Subsidy of the Parliament, for the Relief of Bretagne, he obtain'd it, and immediately resolv'd with himself not only to keep every Penny of it in his own Hands, but also to get a good Sum of Money out of the new Dutchess. Within this View he made a Treaty with her, whereby he engag'd himself to send her a Supply of 6000 Men for six or seven Months; but at the same time made her engage to repay him all the Money he should lay out for her, without fixing any particular Sum; for his Design was afterwards to make those Expences rise as high as he pleased. By which means it is clear, that not only the whole Subsidy granted by Parliament was to remain in his Hands, but what he was to receive from the Dutchess over and above what he should expend in the Armament.

The Duke of Bretagne a Sacrifice to Henry's Conduct, who gets a Subsidy of the Parliament for his Relief, and kept it himself.

Henry's Treaty with the Dutchess.

With foreign Powers.

THE whole was founded upon this Principle, that it would be in his Power to oblige the King of France to submit to what he pleas'd, and that the said Prince would do any thing rather than engage in a War with him. To succeed in this Design, he pretended to espouse the Dutchess's Interest as heartily as if it had been his own. For some time Ambassadors were continually going and coming on both sides from London to Paris, and from Paris to London, but to no manner of purpose. In the mean while, lest Charles should perceive his Intentions, he took care in the most publick manner to make Alliances with Princes who were likely to give the most Jealousy to the King of France; namely, Maximilian King of the Romans, Philip his Son, Arch-Duke of Austria, Ferdinand and Isabel, King and Queen of Spain, the Duke of Milan, and some others, in order to make Charles believe that he was preparing to make a powerful Effort against him; tho' we shall find by some of the Pieces in the Fœdera that nothing was farther from his Thoughts. Mean time Charles fearing, or pretending as if he fear'd that a potent League was form'd against him, still continued his Negotiations with England. He even propos'd to take Henry not only for a Mediator, but also for a Judge of his Differences with the Dutchess of Bretagne, and this more and more confirm'd Henry in his Politicks. When he thought he had sufficiently intimidated Charles, he gave over treating of the Affair of Bretagne, and again demanded of him the Arrears of the Pension that Lewis XI had engag'd to pay Edward VI, which amounted to 125,000 Crowns.

His Treaty with Foreign Powers.

Charles's Negotiations with him.

HENRY VII.

His demand upon Charles of old Arrears.

ALL Henry's Negotiations with France producing nothing in favour of the Dutchess of Bretagne, and the 6000 English that returned from thence at the end of the Months, having done no more Service than only suspending the Progress of the King of France for a little while, Anne was at last perswaded to marry the King of the Romans, upon the Hopes given her that he would bring her powerful Succours. This Marriage was concluded privately, John de Chalons, Prince of Orange, being as Proxy for the King of the Romans; but Anne receiv'd no manner of Assistance from her Husband. At length Charles VIII being informed of the Dutchess's Marriage, and knowing that it had not been consummated, press'd her to that degree that he never let her rest 'till he made her consent to marry him, and by that means put himself in Possession of the whole Dutchy of Bretagne.

Dutchess of Bretagne's Marriage to Maximilian, which she is forc'd to renounce and marry King Charles.

THUS was Henry the Dupe of Charles, and his own Politicks. Besides the Loss of Bretagne, which was a substantial one to England, he was at a Loss for his Money, of which, hereafter, Payment must necessarily be demanded of the King of France. Upon this occasion, where his own Interest lay at stake, he easily imagined that the Method of Negotiation would be tedious, and perhaps to no purpose. This was what made him resolve to carry the War into France, or rather to make a Shew of it; for I am perswaded that his Preparations and the great Noise he made of his Alliances had no other View but to frighten the King of France, in order to make him come into his Measures; for his Allies were in no wise oblig'd to assist him, as we shall see by the Treaties he made with them. Nevertheless, he obtain'd for this pretended War a great Subsidy from the Parliament, who believ'd that he really had a Design to revive the ancient Pretensions of the Kings of England to France, as he affected to give out.

Henry's convinc'd of his mistaken Policy.

He gets the Parliament to grant him another Subsidy for a War with France.

AT

FOEDERA Tom. XIII.

At first, Charles despis'd his Menaces; but hearing that the Parliament had taken fire, as he himself was ignorant of the Secret of the Alliances which Henry had concluded with divers Princes, and as he was afraid to have a League upon his Back, which wou'd break all Measures he had already concerted for the War of Naples, he thought it wou'd be more for his Advantage to satisfy his Enemy, who wanted nothing but Money to make him quiet. Therefore he sent Agents to him, who found out the way to content him, or at least to put the matter in a very fair Method of being soon accommodated. But Henry, either that he might have an Occasion to levy the whole Subsidy which the Parliament had granted him, or for other Reasons, made a profound Secret of what had been offer'd to him by France, and always feign'd an inclination to carry the War into that Kingdom. He went therefore to Calais with his Army, the beginning of October 1492, and march'd towards Boulogne, as if he had design'd to besiege that Place. He was no sooner arriv'd before the Town, than Richard Fox his constant Ambassador, who had negotiated with the Marshal Desquerdes, came to bring him Articles which they agreed to refer to the good Pleasure of the two Kings. Then it was that Henry made loud Complaint that the King of the Romans and the King of Spain broke their word to him, by leaving him in the lurch to begin the War by himself. This was a rare handle for him to shew that he was forc'd to make a Peace. Then he call'd a Council of all the great Courtiers and General Officers of the Army, to consider whether it was proper to accept of the Offer made to him by France; and the Council were unanimously of opinion that he ought not to boggle at making a Peace upon those Terms. This was follow'd with a Treaty made at Estaples, whereby Charles VIII. engag'd to pay him all that was due to him from the Queen of France and the Duchess of Bretagne, amounting to 620,000 Crowns. 'Tis very odd, that tho' Henry had made a mighty noise of the War he intended against France, yet Charles, at the same time that the Enemy enter'd Picardy, was taking his Pleasure at Tours, not having an Army in that Province to oppose him; which is a very clear Proof that they were agreed even before Henry went beyond Sea. Thus Henry obtain'd what he propos'd to himself, I mean the filling of his Coffers, what with the Money of France, and the Sums granted him by the Parliament; but England lost the Duchy of Bretagne.

Henry's pretended War with France.

He calls a Council of Courtiers and Officers, who advise him to make Peace.

Treaty of Estaples.

The Loss of Bretagne to England.

FROM the Conclusion of the Treaty of Estaples, to the end of the Reign of Henry VII. there was a good Understanding betwixt the two Courts of France and England. Charles VIII. who had turn'd all his Thoughts towards Italy, was very glad to give no Colour for a Diversion on the part of England. This was the reason that he regularly paid Henry the Sums he engag'd to pay him by the Treaty, viz. 50,000 Livres a Year at two Terms, till the whole was paid. Henry for his part, had no mind at all to enter into a War, either with France or with any other State, but chose rather to make it his sole Care to maintain himself on the Throne, to repel or prevent the Attacks of his Domestick Enemies, and to heap up Money. Nevertheless he enter'd into the League which was made in Italy against Charles VIII. but upon his account it was only a defensive Alliance, in which the King of France was not so much as nam'd.

HENRY VII.

Henry enters into a League in Italy against Charles VIII. of France.

LEWIS XII. Successor to Charles VIII. took extraordinary care to give Henry no Cause of Disgust, by reason of the War of Milan with which his Hands were full.

THE following are the Acts which relate to France or Bretagne.

1. A PROCLAMATION to acquaint the People of a Truce concluded for a Year with France; dated October 12th, 1485[a].

Truces with France. P. 277.

IT was very advantageous to Henry to have the King of France own him as King, even before he was crown'd, and before the Meeting of the Parliament. The Coronation was not till the 30th of October, and the Parliament did not meet till the 7th of Novemb.

2. Charles VIIIth's Letters Patent, whereby he owns that he has concluded a Truce with Henry, which is to last three Years, ending on the 17th of January 1489; dated January 17th, 1486[b].

P. 281.

3. CONVENTIONS with Francis II. Duke of Bretagne, containing among other things a Truce which was to continue for a Year after the Death of the King and the Duke; dated at London, July 22d, 1486.

Henry's Conventions with the Duke of Bretagne. P. 303.

ENGLAND was upon the same Terms with Bretagne as with France, that is to say, always at War, but it had been interrupted by several Truces.

4. A COMMISSION to the Abbot of Abingdon, &c. to treat with the King of France about the Differences betwixt England and France, and betwixt France and the Duke of Bretagne, dated March 17, 1488[c].

Commission to treat with France. P. 337.

THIS was the first Step which Henry took in favour of the Duke of Bretagne, tho' the War of Bretagne was begun a Year before.

5. Henry's Ratification of the Prolongation of the Truce with France to the 17th of January, 1490. dated July 14, 1488[d].

Truce with France. P. 344.

NOTHING is a plain Proof of Henry's backwardness to give effe ual Relief to the Duke of Bretagne, at a time too when that Duke was most press'd for want of it, than this Prolongation of the Truce with with France, when it did not appear there was any manner of neceſſity for prolonging the ſame, unleſs it was to make it eaſy for the King of France to render the greater Progreſs in Bretagne. It was on the 28th of July that the Duke loſt the Battle of St. Aubin du Cormier. Not long after that, he made a diſadvantageous Treaty with Charles VIII. and died in the Month of September.

6. A COMMISSION to Urſewick and others to treat with the King of France concerning his Differences with the Ducheſs of Bretagne; dated December 11, 1488[a].

Commiſſions to treat with the King of France. P. 347.

And with the Ducheſs of Bretagne. P. 349.

8. AN Order to raiſe Troops for the Relief of the Ducheſs of Bretagne; dated December 23, 1488[c].

Order to raiſe Troops for her. P. 355.

SOME have pretended that Henry ſent Relief to the Duke of Bretagne before the the Battle of St. Aubin du Cormier, and that the Engliſh perform'd Wonders in that Engagement. But this Act ſhews it cou'd not be; and if there were any Engliſh in that Battle, they cou'd only be Voluntiers[d].

9. A TREATY concluded at Rennes, betwixt Henry and the Ducheſs of Bretagne; dated February 10, 1489. but not ratify'd by the King till the firſt of April.

Treaty with the Ducheſs of Bretagne at Rennes. P. 362.

THESE were the chief Articles.

"THE King ſhall ſend a Body of 6,000 "Men into Bretagne at his own Expence, "who ſhall ſerve the Ducheſs till the firſt "of November, at which time ſhe ſhall "furniſh them with Veſſels to return to "England.

"THE Engliſh Troops ſhall land in "Bretagne about the end of February, if the "Weather permits.

"THE Ducheſs ſhall reimburſe the King "all his Expences, as well for the Levy of "the 6,000 Men, as for their Tranſportation, Maintenance in Bretagne, and "their Return, and for the keeping of the "Places hereafter mention'd.

"PAYMENT ſhall be made in Eng-"land at the Ducheſs's peril. It may be "made at ſeveral times, but the Places "ſhall remain in the King's hands till the "whole is paid.

"THE Ducheſs ſhall deliver up any "two of the following Places to the King "at his Option, viz. Tomclaromneau, "Hennebond, Avray, Vannes or Gue-"rand, to keep them as a Security and "Mortgage, with all their Revenues, &c.

HENRY VII.

"IF the Ducheſs recover any of the "Places, as for Inſtance St. Malo, the "King may exchange them for thoſe that "he ſhall then have in his hands.

"COMMISSIONERS ſhall be appoin-"ted on both ſides to regulate the Sum of "the King's Expences.

"THE Ducheſs ſhall take an Oath that "ſhe will not diſturb the King in the Poſ-"ſeſſion of the Places which ſhe ſhall de-"liver up to him.

"THESE Places ſhall be furniſh'd with "Proviſions for a Fortnight, as alſo with the "Artillery and Ammunition neceſſary for "their Defence.

"SHE ſhall ſend to the Ships that are to "bring the Engliſh Troops to her, 16 "Hoſtages, viz. —— or at leaſt 4 of them, "to ſtay there till the Places are deliver'd "up to the Engliſh.

"THE Ducheſs, the Marſhal de Rieux, "and 4 Lords of Bretagne ſhall ſwear that "ſhe ſhall not engage in any Marriage with-"out the King's Conſent.

"FOR the future, neither the Ducheſs "nor her Succeſſors ſhall make any Trea-"ty with any Prince or State without the "King's Conſent, except with the King of "the Romans, and the King of Spain; nor "even with them, without expreſſly inclu-"ding the King of England therein.

"SHE ſhall make no Peace, nor ſo "much as a Truce, for above two Years, "without the King's Conſent.

"THE King engages himſelf to make no "new Truce with France, not even for "two Months only, without including the "Ducheſs in it.

10. A COMMISSION from the Ducheſs of Bretagne to treat with Henry; dated February 15, 1490[e].

Ducheſs of Bretagne's Negotiation with Henry. P. 387.

HENRY had already withdrawn the Troops which he had ſent into Bretagne, except ſuch as guarded the Places deliver'd up to them. Therefore the Ducheſs ſent him Ambaſſadors to deſire freſh Succours of him. But inſtead of making any Conventions upon this Article, Henry thought of nothing but to make himſelf more and more ſecure of being repaid the Money which he had already laid out. Mean time he amus'd the Ambaſſadors with the Hopes of a potent League which he was forming againſt France, and which wou'd be more effectual than the Succours he cou'd ſend to the Ducheſs.

This, our Author ſuppoſes, is what gave occaſion to the Miſtake. The Lord Bacon does not ſay this in his Hiſtory, but he affirms that 8,000 Engliſh arriv'd in a few Days after, and that they actually offer'd Battle to the French, who did not think fit to accept it. Polydore Virgil, and many others, ſay the ſame thing; but in this they are all miſtaken: for Henry had not yet made any Treaty with the Duke of Bretagne, and it was not till after, and in the Month of March 1489, that he ſent 6,000 Men to the Ducheſs his Daughter.

THIS Alliance was only in general Terms, and did not engage the two Princes to any reciprocal Aſſiſtance; but it ſerv'd Henry's Purpoſe, who had a mind to frighten Charles VIII. with the noiſe of his Alliances.

Commiſſion to treat of the Affairs of the Duke of Bretagne. 431. 28. A Commiſſion to Richard Fox and others, to treat with the Ambaſſadors of France about the Affairs of the Ducheſs of Bretagne; dated Octob. 8, 1490 [d].

IN this Commiſſion the King gave power to his Commiſſioners to treat about a certain Sum which was due to him from France, viz. the Arrears of Lewis XIth's Penſion. And the ſame Clauſe was inſerted in all the following Commiſſions.

30. ANOTHER for John de Chaalon Prince of Orange, Francis de Dunois, and Philip of Montauban Chancellor of Bretagne; dated Dec. 14 [f].

Other Commiſſions to treat of the Affairs of the Ducheſs of Bretagne. 435, 436. 31. A Commiſſion to Richard Fox, &c. to treat with the Ambaſſadors of France about the Affairs of the King of the Romans and the Ducheſs of Bretagne, and concerning a certain Sum of Money, &c. dated Feb. 17, 1491 [g].

32. ANOTHER Commiſſion to the ſame Perſons to treat with the Ambaſſadors of the Ducheſs of Bretagne; dated Feb. 26, 1491 [h].

'TWAS juſt then, and not before, that Henry was let into the Secret of the Ducheſs of Bretagne's Marriage to the King of the Romans, which had been ſolemniz'd by Proxy in the Month of November 1489. And this made him reſolve to get ſtill farther Security for the Payment of what was due to him, by always pretending a deſire to aſſiſt the Ducheſs.

Treaty with the Ducheſs and States of Bretagne. 438. 33. A Commiſſion to Garter King at Arms, and to Francis Dupon, to go and treat with Anne Queen of the Romans, and Ducheſs of Bretagne, and with the States of Bretagne, for the Payment of the Sums due to the King, and to receive Bonds and other Securities; dated March 29, 1491 [i].

THIS was one of the laſt Efforts that Anne made to obtain Aſſiſtance from Henry, who ſtill continued to amuſe her with the Hopes that he wou'd make a vigorous War againſt Charles VIII.

Henry's Commiſſions to certain Perſons to treat with his Subjects for a Supply for the War with France. 446. 38. COMMISSIONS from Henry to ſeveral Perſons, to let his Subjects know the great need he has of Money to make War againſt the King of France, who detains Normandy, Anjou, Tourain and Guienne from him, and to exhort them to ſupply him; dated July 7, 1491 [o].

THE King had two Views in it. 1. To get Money out of thoſe who were diſpos'd to give him any: and, 2. To make the Inhabitants of Bretagne, and the King of France, believe, that he was fully reſolv'd upon a War.

'TIS remarkable that in all the Negotiations abovemention'd, Henry never engag'd himſelf by any Treaty to give Succours to the Ducheſs, after he had recall'd the 6000 Men that he had ſent her in 1489, and that the Alliances which he made under the pretence of aſſiſting that Princeſs, ſignify'd nothing, by reaſon of the ſecret Articles or Regulations which were added to them. Mean time, Charles VIII. found a way to win the Ducheſs's Heart, and marry'd her on the 16th of December 1491.

The Council's Advice to Henry to make a Peace with France. P. 490.

43. THE Opinion of the Council appointed by the King to consider of the Articles which Richard Fox and his Colleagues had agreed upon, with a reference to the good pleasure of the two Kings[c].

THESE Articles imported in substance, that the King of France shou'd pay Henry 620,000 Crowns of Gold (which is 124,000 l.) to discharge the Debt owing to him from the Duchess his Queen; and 125,000 Crowns (which is 25,000 l.) to pay off the Arrears of the Pension due from Lewis XI. the whole amounting to 745,000 Crowns, or 149,000 l.

THE Council was unanimously of Opinion, that the King should accept the Offers of France for several Reasons mention'd in their Opinion, which was drawn up in Writing, and presented to the King. Some of those Reasons were manifestly false and groundless, others far-fetch'd, and others must have been foreseen; as for example, that the Winter was approaching; that Boulogne was a City stronger and better provided than it was believ'd; that the King's Person wou'd be expos'd to great Dangers. In a word, 'tis very apparent that these Reasons were insinuated to the Council by some Person who was a Confident of the King, or else by the King himself.

The Treaty of Estaples. P. 497.

44. THE Treaty of Estaples between Charles VIII. and Henry VII dated Nov. 3, 1492.

IT was stipulated by the two principal Articles of this Treaty, that the Peace between the two Crowns shou'd continue till the Death of the last Survivor of the two Kings, and that the King of the Romans, and the Archduke his Son shou'd be included in it if they desir'd it, by making their Declaration in four Months time. The Treaty made no mention either of Henry's Pretensions upon France, Normandy or Guyenne, nor of the Debt of 745,000 Crowns.

THESE were the Conventions mention'd above. Charles oblig'd himself to pay Henry 745,000 Crowns of Gold at several Terms, viz. 25,000 Livres Tournois every half Year, till the whole was paid. Each Crown of Gold was fix'd at the Value of 4 s. 2 d. English Money.

49. A CONVENTION betwixt the two Kings for prolonging the time of the Confirmation of the Treaty of Estaples by the general Assembly of the States of France, and by the Parliament of England, to the Term of three Years, tho' the Treaty provided it shou'd be done in one Year[h].

Prayer of the English Ambassadors to the Pope, to excommunicate the King that shou'd break it. P. 531.

50. A PUBLICK Instrument of the Petition sign'd by the Ambassadors of England before a Notary and Witnesses, to Pope Alexander VI. that he wou'd please to excommunicate either of the two Kings that shou'd violate the Treaty of Estaples; dated June 13th, 1493[i].

WE find in this Act that the Pope made Answer, that he wou'd stay till the King of France made the same Request.

Confirmations of the Treaty P. 572, 592, 596, 597, to 623, 625, to 635.

IN the Year 1495, and especially in the following Year, we meet with several Confirmations and Approbations of the Treaty of Estaples, by the Provinces, Cities and Corporations of France, which were probably to supply the place of the general States of the Kingdom, which Charles did not think fit to assemble.

Dunbar Caſtle retaken by the Scots.

THE Fortreſs of Dunbar being in the hands of the Engliſh in 1485, after the Duke of Albany had deliver'd it up to Edward IV. James III. King of Scotland retook it at the beginning of the Reign of Henry VII. who made no Effort at all to ſave it; for that was not a proper Juncture for him to fall out with Scotland.

Rebellion of the Scots Nobility againſt King James III.

SOME time after, viz. in 1487, James III. who was always a capricious turbulent Prince, having given occaſion to the chief Nobility of Scotland to take Arms againſt him, they got Prince James his eldeſt Son into their hands, who was about 15 Years of Age, and put him at their Head. From that time the King wou'd fain have made a Peace with them, but they wou'd not hearken to any Accommodation, unleſs he wou'd yield the Crown to the Prince his Son; which Propoſal terrify'd him to ſuch a degree, that he ſhut himſelf up in the Caſtle of Edinburgh.

HENRY VII.

AT the ſame time Henry VII. having ut a happy end to the Impoſture of Lambert Simnel, by the Victory at Stoke, went to York, where one Snowdon a Herald at Arms came to him from King James to beg his Aſſiſtance, and to treat with him upon Terms. Henry, who never regarded any Affair further than his Self-Intereſt was concern'd in it, immediately hit on a Project to reap ſome Advantage by ſuch a Negociation, without troubling his head with the King of Scotland's Affairs. As the Princeſſes, the Daughters of Edward IV. and the Queen their Mother, were a great Burden upon him, he agreed with the King of Scotland upon this occaſion, to make three Matches, viz. that King James himſelf ſhou'd marry the Queen Dowager of England, Edward IV's Widow; that Cæcilia, Edward's ſecond Daughter ſhou'd be marry'd to the Marqueſs of Ormond and Earl of Rotheſay; and that the Prince of Scotland ſhou'd have another of that King's Daughters. But as to the Succours which the King of Scotland deſir'd, the Negociation to that purpoſe was put off to an Interview which was to be between the two Kings.

He offers a Treaty with Henry VII.

Henry offers him Marriages.

King of Scotland kill'd in Battle, and is ſucceeded by his Son who headed the Rebels.

BUT theſe Projects fell to the ground by the Death of the King of Scotland, who was kill'd in 1488, in a Battle againſt the Rebel Lords, who had the Prince his Son at their head; which Son ſucceeded him by the Name of James IV. but ſome refus'd to own him, becauſe ſaid they, he murder'd his Father.

James IV. delays to prolong the Truce with Henry.

DURING the two following Years, there were ſeveral Negociations between the two Kings, touching the Prolongation of the Truce.

AS Henry threaten'd France, he did not doubt but Charles VIII. wou'd contrive to give him ſome Diverſion by means of the King of Scotland; therefore he left no Stone unturn'd for the ſake of prolonging the Truce with James: And for the ſame Reaſon the latter was not in haſte to do it, while he thought the King of France might ſtand in need of him. At length in the Year 1491, Henry perceiving that this wou'd prove a tedious Affair, lent Money to certain Scots Noblemen, who engag'd to deliver up the King of Scotland, and the Prince his Brother, into his hands. Whether Henry corrupted them, or whether he only accepted their Offers, is uncertain. However, the Plot did not take, and therefore Henry preſs'd the Negociation to the utmoſt of his power, and at length his Ambaſſadors concluded a Truce for five Years with thoſe of Scotland, which he immediately ratify'd. But whether whether there was any Fraud in the case, or for what other Reason soever it was, it seems the King of Scotland refus'd to ratify the Treaty; and not long after, the two Kings concluded another Truce, which was to last only till the Month of November 1492.

THE Peace between Charles VIII. and Henry being just ready to be concluded in 1492; James, who no doubt was inform'd of it, was more tractable than before, and consented to a Truce with England till the Month of April 1494. This Truce was sign'd on the same Day as the Treaty of Estaples, and was afterwards prolong'd in the Year 1493, to the Year 1501; but ill observ'd by the King of Scotland, who broke it in 1496, for the sake of Perkin Warbeck, as was said under the first Article. He invaded England in 1496, and again in 1497; but being forc'd to raise the Siege of Norham, and the Earl of Surrey having taken Ayton from him, he was dispos'd to make a Peace. Henry wish'd it also with all his heart, but he would not be the first to ask it; and to get out of this Difficulty, he made use of Don Pedro d'Ayala the Ambassador of Spain, who being the Minister of a Prince that was a common Friend to both Kings, offer'd them his Mediation; which was accepted, and James dismiss'd Perkin Warbeck, after which the two Kings concluded a Truce of seven Years, and refer'd the Decision of their Quarrel to the Arbitration of Ferdinand and Isabel.

James's Invasions of England.

Another Truce with him.

THIS Truce was very near being broke in 1499, by a Quarrel which happen'd at Norham between the English and Scots, in which the latter were us'd very scurvily. James demanded Satisfaction for it, and it was upon this occasion that while the Affair was in Debate, Richard Fox, who was Henry's never-failing Agent, took an opportunity to treat of a Marriage between the King of Scotland and Margaret, who was Henry's eldest Daughter. The Lord Bacon says, that the King of Scotland himself was the first that propos'd this Marriage. This may be true, but 'tis certain that Henry had it in his head several Years before, as appears from divers Acts in the Fœdera. Be that as it will, this Marriage, which carry'd the Crown of England into the Family of the Stuarts, was compleated to the mutual satisfaction of both Kings; and at the same time a perpetual Peace was concluded betwixt the two Kings, by a Treaty which was sign'd in January 1502.

James marries Henry's eldest Daughter, and makes a perpetual Peace with him.

The Reign of HENRY VIII.

Foedera Tom. XIII.

THERE is such a Connection between Domestick and Foreign History, with regard to the principal Events which happen'd in Europe, in the beginning of the 16th Century, that the Remainder of the XIIIth Tome of the Fœdera, which includes the Acts of the first fourteen Years of Henry VIII. viz. from April 1504, to the middle of the Year 1523, is better stor'd than most of the preceding Tomes with curious and useful Pieces, which relate not only to the History of England, but to those of France, Spain and Italy. England had likewise something to do with Scotland in this Period, of which I shall make a separate Article. But as these 14 Years produc'd nothing very remarkable in Domestick Affairs, the Acts which refer to that Head having no dependency on each other, will not need to be explain'd.

Henry VIII.

Article I. Foreign Affairs.

League of Cambray against the Venetians.

THE League of Cambray may be reckon'd the Spring of the principal Events in Europe, during the first 14 Years of Henry VIII. Tho' the History of it is sufficiently known, especially since it was publish'd in the French Tongue, it will not be unnecessary to mention some of the Circumstances of it, to serve as a Foundation for what I have to say hereafter. This League was form'd in 1508, against the Republick of Venice. The chief Allies were Pope Julius II. the Emperor Maximilian I. Lewis XII. King of France, and Duke of Milan, and Ferdinand King of Arragon and Naples, and Administrator of the Kingdom of Castile.

The Views of the several Powers who form'd it.

The Views of each of those Princes in the War which they design'd to make upon the Venetians were briefly these.

JULIUS II. had a Design to reunite to the Church all the Dominions which had been alienated from it during the Wars of the Guelphs and Gibelins. He had already begun in 1506 to make himself absolute Master in Bologna, after he had expell'd the Bentavoglios, who had usurp'd that Dominion: And to him it was owing that the Duke of Urbino adopted Francis Mary of Rovero, who was Nephew to both of them, and by that means came to be Duke of Urbino. Probably he design'd to form for that Nephew a Dominion, to be compos'd of those Towns which he had a mind to reunite to the Church. This was the very Project that Alexander VI. contriv'd in favour of his Bastard Son Cæsar Borgia, and which only miscarry'd thro' the unexpected Death of that Pope. To bring this Design to bear, it was absolutely necessary for him to take Ferrara from the Duke of that Name, to dispossess the Venetians of Ravenna, Faenza, and Rimini, and to dislodge other Princes and Lords from the other Towns of Romagna. But as this could not be done, while on the one hand the Venetians, and on the other Lewis XII. who was Master of the Duchy of Milan, were in a condition to oppose his Aggrandisement, he resolv'd therefore to ruin the Venetians first, and then to drive the French out of Italy.

MAXIMILIAN's View was to seize the Towns the Venetians possess'd in the Terra Firma, viz. Trevisa, Vicenza, Verona, and Padua, which formerly belong'd to the Emperors. And after he had once settled himself in that Country, his Design was to drive the French out of Milan, and re-establish the Imperial Authority over all Italy, on the same footing as formerly. For this end he knew he must begin with the Venetians.

LEWIS XII. had some Years ago taken the Duchy of Milan from Lewis Sforza, who had also the misfortune to fall into his hands. Having in order to make that Conquest, concluded a League with the Venetians; he consented by the said Treaty, that they shou'd make themselves Masters of Cremona, and all the Country call'd Giradadda. But he was no sooner in possession of the Duchy of Milan than he resolv'd to pick a Quarrel with the Venetians, that he might have a pretence to rob them not only of what he had yielded to them by the Treaty, but of the other Towns which they had acquir'd from the old Dukes of Milan, as Crema, Brescia, Bergamo, and some others of less importance. And 'twas with this Design that he form'd the League of Cambray, of which he may be reckon'd as it were the chief Contriver.

FERDINAND's two principal Views in entring into this League, were in the first place that Lewis XII. might have his Hands too full to undertake the Conquest of the Kingdom of Naples, which he had been turn'd out of by a notorious Fraud: And secondly, to recover five Maritime Towns of that Kingdom, which a King of Naples had made over to the Venetians as a Security.

The Allies take the Field and rout the Venetians at Agnadel.

IN pursuance of this League the Armies of the Allies took the Field in the Month of April 1509, upon the Adda, in Lombardy and Romagna, and in a few days Lewis XII. gain'd the famous Victory of Agnadel or or Giradadda[a], in which the Army of the Venetians was put to the rout. After this, all the Venetian Towns except Trevisa carry'd their Keys to the Conqueror. He kept all those to himself which had formerly belong'd to the Dukes of Milan, and sent away the Deputies of the other Towns to the Emperor, who being then with a few Troops at Trent, though he had no share in the Victory, took possession of Vicenza, Verona and Padua. On the other hand, the Pope seiz'd Ravenna, Faenza, and Rimini; the Duke of Ferrara laid hold of Rovigo and the Polesin, and Friuli submitted to the Emperor. And thus was the State of Venice reduc'd all at once to the only two Towns of Venice and Trevisa.

JULIUS II. was no sooner in possession of the Towns which he coveted from the Venetians, but he thought of driving the French out of Italy, that he might be able to put his other Designs in execution. The Undertaking seem'd very difficult, yet he did not despair of success. The Scheme he form'd was this. 1. He resolv'd upon an Accommodation with the Venetians, who were no longer in a condition to hurt him, and afterwards to make a League with them against France. 2. To procure a Peace between Venice and the Emperor, in order to draw off that Prince from the Interest of Lewis XII. 3. To get the Swissers to invade the Duchy of Milan. 4. To bring Ferdinand into the League. And 5. To engage Henry VIII. the new King of England, to break with France, and to make a powerful Diversion in Picardy.

The Pope's Resolution and Scheme to turn the French out of Italy.

His Peace and League with the Venetians were not the most difficult things to attain to; the same being concluded about the beginning of the Year 1510. But as to the Peace between the Emperor and the Venetians, it was not possible for the Pope to bring it about; nevertheless he went so far in it at length, that the Emperor abandon'd Lewis XII. And as to the Swissers, Matthew Skinner Bishop of Sion, who was the Pope's chief Agent in that Country, made so proper a Use of the Interest he had among them, that he render'd them mortal Enemies to France. King Ferdinand did not require abundance of Sollicitation to join with the Pope and the Venetians; for he found three considerable Advantages in this League. 1. By embarrassing Lewis XII. he hinder'd him from thinking of the Conquest of Naples. 2. The Pope offer'd him the Investiture of Naples upon Terms which he wou'd never hearken to till then. And lastly, The Venetians were willing to restore him the five Towns of that Kingdom, of which they were Masters, provided he wou'd engage in the League. Yet this Prince, who was to the full as sedate as Julius II. was hasty, wou'd not sign the League till he was sure of Assistance from the King of England. Mean time it did not seem an easy Task to engage Henry to break with Lewis XII. for the sake of the Italian Powers; for he had but lately renew'd the Peace with him, and Lewis had all along regularly paid the Sums to which he was engag'd by the Treaty of Estaples. But Ferdinand, a Prince of the greatest Abilities of any in his Age, and at the same time one that was not over and above scrupulous, found means at length to engage Henry to break with France, tho' not till the Year 1512. As what happen'd in Italy, in the two preceding Years, furnish'd him with the opportunity he wanted, 'tis necessary just to mention it.

His League with the Venetians.

His Agents incenses the Swiss against the French. Ferdinand enters into the League with the Pope and Venetians against France.

Draws off K. Henry from France.

JULIUS II. after he had sign'd his League with the Republick of Venice, pick'd a Quarrel with the Duke of Ferrara, that he might have an opportunity to turn him out of his Duchy; and went himself to Bologna, on purpose to make all necessary Preparations there for the Siege of Ferrara. But he narrowly miss'd falling into the hands of Chaumont the Governour of Milan, who had Orders to support the Duke. The Pope made a great noise of this Insult, and wou'd fain have persuaded all Europe that Lewis XII. attack'd him for no cause at all, tho' he himself did all that lay in his power to set all the Christian Princes upon his back. He had endeavour'd once before, to take Genoa from him by surprise; and he made a second attempt, but cou'd not succeed. He tried to set the Emperor at variance with him, and 10,000 Swiss were already on the march to invade the Duchy of Milan; but they found the Avenues so well guarded, that they were forc'd to return. Yet all this while the Pope pretended that Lewis was the Aggressor, because he wou'd not let him turn out the poor Duke of Ferrara. Lewis being attack'd by the Pope without having given him any Provocation, made a more strict League with the Emperor; and both together having corrupted some of the Cardinals, summon'd a General Council at Pisa, where they were for deposing the Pope[b]. But this Council, at which there were no Bishops

[b] The Lord Herbert of Cherbury, who has left us that accurate History of this Reign, in which he has happily conquered the difficulty he complained of, viz. To draw the exact Likeness of a Person who had several Countenances, and who gain'd as great Reputation by writing the Life of this Prince, as Lord Verulam did by penning that of his Father, is the Historian to whom we shall chiefly have recourse, wherever it may be necessary, to supply the Dates of any Transactions wanting in Mr. Rapin's Abridgment. The noble Historian says, that this Council was summoned to be held the first of September 1511, and that the Pope was cited to it, though we don't find that he appeared there. A certain Writer, who quotes Onuphrius's Life of this Pope, says, that though he used means to take off the Emperor, yet Lewis persisted, and caused certain Medals to be coined with this Inscription on some of them, Perdam Babylonem, I will destroy Babylon; and on others,

Bishops present, besides a few French and Milanese, was at last oblig'd to remove to Milan, and from thence to Lyons, without doing any thing of moment. Mean time the Pope excommunicated all the Members of it and their Adherents, and summon'd a Council which was to meet at Rome in the Church of St. John Lateran, the 19th of April 1512.

Excommunicated by the Pope, who calls one to Rome.

BEFORE that time came, the Pope who continued in his Resolution to besiege Ferrara, went once more to Bologna to make Preparations there for that Siege. His Army, and that of the Venetians, lay encamp'd very near Bologna; and he only defer'd entring upon Action, because he waited for a Reinforcement which he expected under Raymond de Cardona, Viceroy of Naples. But during this, Trivulce who commanded at Milan for the King of France, advancing towards Bologna, the Pope found the Inhabitants dispos'd to open their Gates to him, and therefore made haste away; whereupon the Bentivoglios, whom Trivulce brought with him, immediately enter'd the City. The Confederate Army of the Pope and the Venetians hearing of this News, fled in Confusion, and left their Baggage and Artillery in the power of the Citizens of Bologna.

His flight upon the approach of the French.

WHILE these things were transacting in Italy, the King of Arragon was impatient for bringing Henry VIII. into the League of the Pope and the Venetians; for he was not inclin'd to engage himself in it, before he was sure of assistance from that Prince, his Son-in-Law, and very good Friend. He did not directly make a Proposal to Henry to enter into the League, and on the contrary feign'd a perfect indifferency with regard to the Affairs of Italy; but by representing Lewis XIIth's Power in a formidable manner to Henry, he dispos'd him by little and little to break with him. The Pope did all on his part that he could, to gain Henry's Friendship by his extraordinary Civilities to Bambridge Archbishop of York, to whom he also gave a Cardinal's Hat[a]. He profess'd an extraordinary esteem for the King upon all occasions, and sent him a Golden Rose consecrated upon Christmas-Day, as a special Mark of the Regard he had for him. The Venetians also had an Ambassador at London for the same purpose. They and the Pope acted directly, but Ferdinand was still upon the Reserve, and contented himself in terrifying Henry with the too great Power of France: Nevertheless he prepar'd a Fleet and an Army in Spain, as if on purpose for the War with the Moors in Africa. At length, on pretence that he was afraid of a Diversion from France while he shou'd be employ'd in this Expedition; he had the cunning to persuade Henry to make a defensive League with him, which contain'd a mutual Engagement to assist one another with all their Forces, in case either of them shou'd be attack'd, and particularly if the King of France was the Aggressor. The better to convince him of the sincerity of his Intentions touching the War of Africa, he desir'd him to send him 1000 English Archers for his Assistance; which was immediately granted. 'Tis natural to suppose that Ferdinand's Aim in concluding this League, was to secure his Kingdom of Naples in case Lewis shou'd have a mind to attack it; but 'tis not so easy to perceive what Advantage Henry cou'd propose from it.

HENRY VIII.

Ferdinand persuades Henry into a League with him.

THE Loss of Bologna during that time, while the Confederate Army of the Pope and Venetians was broke and dispers'd, reduc'd the Affairs of the Allies to a very sad pass; and Ferdinand did not think he cou'd excuse himself any longer from signing the League, lest the Pope and the Venetians shou'd clap up a Peace with France. But before he proceeded so far, he play'd one of his old tricks, by laying a Trap for his own Son-in-Law, in which that young unexperienc'd Prince was unwarily caught. First he told him of a Scheme he had concerted with the Pope and the Venetians, to make a League together, and to bring a powerful Army into the Field to drive the French out of Genoa and Milan. And then he represented to him, that as Lewis XII. wou'd be oblig'd to send all his Forces into Italy, and to leave his Kingdom defenceless, there wou'd be nothing in the World more easy than to take Guienne from him, because he did not dream of being attack'd on that side. He added, that for his own part he had no pretension to Guienne, but that nevertheless, out of pure affection to his Son-in-Law, he was willing to assist him in that Conquest, which in all appearance cou'd not miscarry. Henry thought this Project so well contriv'd, that without any hesitation he accepted of his Father-in-Law's Proposal.

And into a private Treaty for the Conquest of Guienne.

AS soon as Ferdinand had received the Answer from England, he gave Orders to his Ambassador at Rome to sign the League with the Pope and Venetians, and at the same time sent Instructions to his Ambassador at London to conclude a private Treaty with Henry concerning the Conquest of Guienne. By the latter Henry only engag'd to send 6000 Men into the Province of Guipuscoa under a good General, and to keep a Fleet at Sea. And Ferdinand undertook to do all the rest.

Marquess of Dorset sent with an Army into Spain.

ACCORDING to this Treaty, in the Month of May 1512, Henry sent 6000 Men to Spain, under the Command of the Marquess of Dorset. Not many days after the Arrival of the English, the Duke of Alva put himself at the head of the Spanish Army; but instead of coming to join the English, to form the Siege of Bayonne, as had been resolv'd on, he kept at Logrogno upon the Frontiers of Navarre, and sent word to the Marquess of Dorset, that he thought it convenient, before they engag'd in any Siege, to make the King of Navarre declare who he wou'd be for. He supported this with a very plausible Reason: That this Prince being an Ally of the King of France, might play them some unlucky Trick, and cut off their Provisions while they lay before Bayonne. The Marquess of Dorset, who did not penetrate into the Duke of Alva's meaning, approv'd of this Thought; and the King of Navarre was accordingly summon'd on the part of the Confederates to declare himself. He answer'd, that it was his Intention to continue neuter; but the Duke of Alva not thinking this a sufficient Declaration, demanded four of his best Places for his Security. Upon the King's refusal, the Duke pretended that he cou'd not in Prudence go to Fontarabia, and leave the Dominions of the King his Master expos'd to the Insults of the King of Navarre, who might easily receive into his Kingdom the Duke of Longueville, just then arriv'd from Bayonne: That for this Reason he cou'd not excuse himself from taking his Rout thro' Navarre, and making sure of some places in that Kingdom. He also desir'd the English General to come and join him, to facilitate the Execution of his Design; but the Marquess refus'd it, because he had no Orders to act against the King of Navarre. Therefore the Duke of Alva enter'd the Kingdom alone, and besieg'd Pampeluna. After the taking of that place, he made himself Master of some others; while the English, without knowing it, favour'd his Designs, by keeping the French at Bey, and by hindring them from relieving Navarre, for fear of being hedg'd in between two Armies. In a word, the Duke of Alva soon made a Conquest of the whole Kingdom. The Marquess of Dorset at length perceiving the Artifices of the King of Arragon, return'd to England. Consequently, those 6000 English, who were to conquer Guyenne with the Assistance of Ferdinand's Troops, only serv'd to assist him in the taking of Navarre, which he and his Successors the Kings of Spain have kept ever since. Henry was sensible that he had been trick'd, but dissembled his Resentment, left the three Allies, after having engag'd him to break with France, shou'd make a Peace without him, the rather because the success of Affairs in Italy seem'd to make it necessary for them.

The King of Navarre summon'd to declare himself.

Duke of Alva conquers Navarre.

Marquess of Dorset returns home.

DURING this same Campaign, great Revolutions happen'd in that Country. The Confederate Army of the Pope, the King of Arragon, and the Venetians, having form'd the Siege of Bologna; Gaston, de Foix, who commanded the French Army, forc'd them to raise it. He afterwards beat the Venetians at Brescia, and on the 11th of April defeated the Confederates at Ravenna, where he lost his Life after he had gain'd the Victory. But in the Month of September following, 16,000 Swissers march'd into Italy; and instead of taking the direct Road of Milan, they went by the way of Trent, thro' which the Emperor, with whom the Pope had been secretly tampering, gave them passage, notwithstanding his Alliance with Lewis XII. after which they join'd the Venetian Army, and march'd to Milan. The French were before very weak there, and became still weaker by the Order the Emperor sent at the same time to his Troops, which serv'd as Auxiliaries in the Army of France, to return home forthwith. For this Reason, the French being not in a condition to make Resistance, abandon'd Milan, and repass'd the Mountains. The Loss of the Milanese drew along with it that of Bologna, Parma, Piacenza and Reggio, which surrender'd to the Pope. On the other hand, the Duchy of Milan was restor'd to Maximilian Sforza; the House of Medicis was again put in possession of Florence, and the Emperor solemnly renounc'd the Council of Pisa, which by the defeat of the French was oblig'd to remove to Lyons.

French abandon the Milanese.

AFTER the French were drove out of Italy, the Allies had several Conferences together about their Affairs, sometimes at Rome, and other times at Mantua. The Pope was resolv'd above all things, whatever it cost him, to accommodate the Venetians with the Emperor, lest that Prince should engage again with France: but he propos'd such hard Terms to them, that they cou'd never agree to accept them. For this reason he undertook to force them, by making an Alliance with the Emperor against them. In all these Conferences the Allies thought no more of the King of England's Interest, than as if there had been no such Prince in the World.

as once call'd to theſe Conferences. Henry himſelf knew ſo little of what was doing in Italy, that, tho' the League of Rome no longer ſubſiſted after the Pope had made an Alliance with the Emperor againſt Venice, he ſent his Letters Patent by which he declar'd that he came into it. At the ſame time, his Ambaſſadors at ſeveral Courts had Orders to conclude Leagues for procuring a Reſtitution to the Church, of what France had taken from it, tho' the Pope was actually in poſſeſſion of more than he laid Claim to, when the League of Rome was ſign'd.

HENRY VIII.

Ferdinand's abuſe of King Henry.

WE have lately ſeen by what happen'd in 1512, how much Henry was abus'd by the King his Father-in-law. Yet this Experience did not make him one jot the wiſer; for in the Year following, Ferdinand caught him in another Trap as artfully laid as the former, if one may be allow'd to give the name of Art to one of the moſt egregious Frauds.

Pope Julius's Death and Succeſſor.

IN 1513, in the Month of February, Julius II. died, and in March following Leo X. of the Family of Medicis was elected. This new Pope, being govern'd by very near the ſame Intereſts as his Predeceſſor, declar'd openly againſt France, as well to oblige Lewis XII. to part with his Council, as to hinder him from ſetting his foot again in Italy. But there was a new turn given to the Intereſts of the King of Arragon after he had taken Navarre. Before he had made that new Conqueſt, he wou'd have thought the Expulſion of Lewis XII. from the Milaneſe, and the diſabling him from undertaking the Conqueſt of Naples, a Revolution of very great Advantage to him. But after he became Maſter of Navarre, it was his Intereſt that Lewis ſhou'd get footing in Italy and regain the Duchy of Milan, leſt he ſhou'd endeavour to reſtore the King of Navarre; and at the ſame time it was equally his Intereſt to hinder him from ſucceeding in the Conqueſt of Milan. This was the way he went to work for obtaining his Ends.

IN the firſt place, he ſent a certain Monk privately to Lewis XII. to propoſe a Truce to him, into which he undertook to bring the Emperor and the King of England. Lewis willingly came into it, on condition that Italy ſhould be excepted out of it; which was the very thing that Ferdinand aim'd at. This Affair being in a good way, he caus'd a Repreſentation to be made to Henry, in concert with the Pope and the Empire, that the Allies being no longer oblig'd to act on the Defenſive in Italy, ſince the French were drove out, had reſolv'd to attack France in ſeveral places; and that he ought not to ſlip this opportunity of making himſelf Maſter of Guienne, Normandy or Picardy, becauſe it wou'd be impoſſible for the King of France to defend himſelf againſt ſo many Enemies, who wou'd attack him from ſeveral Quarters at once. Tho', conſidering the Trial which Henry had already made of his Father-in-law's ſincerity, he ought to have ſtood upon his Guard; yet he ſuffer'd himſelf to be tempted by the great Advantages that were propos'd to him. As ſoon as he had given his Approbation of this Scheme, Ferdinand's Ambaſſadors gave him to underſtand that ſecrecy was abſolutely neceſſary, the better to ſurprize the Enemy, but that it wou'd be very difficult to keep it if there was a Congreſs of Ambaſſadors in any place whatſoever, for concluding a League: That therefore it wou'd be ſufficient, if under ſome ſpecious Pretext, he ſent Ambaſſadors to the Governeſs of the Netherlands, who being authoriz'd by the Emperor her Father, might conclude the League with them; and that then the Pope and the King of Arragon wou'd ratify the Treaty; which wou'd have the ſame Force as if their Ambaſſadors had been there preſent. Henry liking this Expedient, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Mechlin; and Ferdinand, according to the Plan he had form'd, had the ſatisfaction of getting two Treaties directly oppoſite to one another, and yet both equally conducive to his own Ends, ſign'd within four Days one of another. The firſt betwixt him and Lewis XII. was ſign'd at Orthez in Bearn on the firſt of April; and the other betwixt the Emperor and Henry, on the fifth of the ſame Month at Mechlin.

Ferdinand's farther abuſe of King Henry.

Treaties betwixt Ferdinand and Lewis XII. and betwixt the Emperor and King Henry.

THE Treaty of Orthez ſtipulated that there ſhould be a Truce for a Year betwixt Lewis XII. the King of Scotland, and the Duke of Guelderland on one part, and the Emperor, the King of England, the King of Arragon, and the Queen of Caſtile on the other, but not in Italy. It muſt be obſerv'd, that at Orthez, there were only the Commiſſioners of France and Arragon; that Lewis XII. ſtood engag'd for the King of Scotland and the Duke of Guelderland; and that Ferdinand undertook to bring the Emperor and the King of England into it. But as he well knew that nothing was farther from Henry's Thoughts, he caus'd it to be inſerted in the Treaty, that the two Kings of France and Arragon ſhou'd be oblig'd to ratify it in a Month, and the other Princes in two Months time; and that the Treaty ſhou'd be of no effect with reſpect to the latter, till the Day of the Exchange of their Ratifications.

THE other Treaty was ſign'd at Mechlin four days after, by Margaret of Auſtria, in the name of her Father, and by the Ambaſſadors of England. It ſtipulated, that in 30 Days after the ſigning of the Treaty, the Pope, the Emperor, the King of England, and the King of Arragon ſhou'd declare War againſt France, and then act effectually againſt against her, viz. the Pope in Provence or in Dauphiny, the Emperor in some other Place out of Italy, the King of Arragon in Guyenne, in Bearn, or in Languedoc, and the King of England in Normandy, or in Picardy: And that for assisting the Emperor to raise and maintain his Army, the King of England shou'd remit 100,000 Crowns to him at three Terms. It was inserted in this Treaty, as well as in that of Orthez, that the Emperor and the King of England shou'd ratify the Treaty in a Month, and the Pope and the King of Arragon in two Months; but that even tho' the two latter did not ratify it, the same shou'd subsist nevertheless betwixt the Emperor and the King of England. This very clearly proves that the Emperor well knew what were the Intentions of the Pope and the King of Arragon, otherwise he would never have thought of getting such a Clause inserted in the Treaty. There is still another Remark to be made upon this head, viz. That the Ratifications of the Pope and the King of Arragon being not to be exchang'd at furthest till the fifth of June, Henry was oblig'd to make all the Preparations for the Campaign, before he knew whether those two pretended Allies would ratify the Treaty; and to begin the War in Picardy, without being sure of the Diversions which he had been promis'd should be made in other places. To bring him compleatly into the Snare, the Ambassador, whom Ferdinand had at London, ratified the Treaty of Mechlin, and swore to the Observation of it upon the Souls of the King of Arragon, and the Queen of Castile, by virtue of a full Power which he pretended they had given him. Thus, by these two Treaties directly contrary to one another, Henry, Maximilian, and Ferdinand engag'd themselves alike in a Truce for one Year with Lewis XII. and actually bound themselves to make War upon him at the same time. But Henry was a perfect Stranger to the Treaty of Orthez, whereas Ferdinand knew as much of the one as the other. Therefore it was not without a reason that he took care to have both sign'd at one and the same time, in places so remote one from the other, and betwixt which there was no Communication.

LEWIS XII. being deceiv'd by the Treaty of Orthez, sent the far greatest part of his Forces into Italy, under Command of Lewis de la Tremouille, who immediately drove Maximilian Sforza out of Milan, and took the whole Duchy from him except Como and Novara, which were guarded by the Swissers. But afterwards going to attack Novara, he was repuls'd in the Assault: and next day the Swissers sallying out of the place, went and fell upon him in his Camp, put his Army to the Rout, and oblig'd him to repass the Mountains and return into France. Thus in about a Month's time, Lewis won and lost the whole Duchy of Milan.

French King loses the Duchy of Milan.

AT the beginning of June, Henry transported his Army to Calais, in order to carry the War into France, pursuant to the Treaty of Mechlin: and some time after, he caus'd Terouenne to be besieg'd, with a design to go thither himself. But before he sail'd from England, he heard that the Pope had refus'd to ratify the Treaty, and that Ferdinand had made a Truce for a Year with France, which till then he knew nothing of. He made his Complaints of it to this Prince, and sent him a Summons to take the Field, in pursuance of the Treaty of Mechlin, ratify'd by his Ambassador. But Ferdinand answer'd gravely, that the Ambassador had exceeded his Orders; that as to the Truce, the necessity of his Affairs had compell'd him to it, but that when it was expir'd, he wou'd make extraordinary Efforts against the common Enemy. Notwithstanding this, Henry repair'd to the Siege of Terouenne; and not many days after, the Emperor came thither to excuse himself for having not been able to make good his Engagement, promising nevertheless to perform Wonders next Year.

IN the mean time, to give Henry a particular Proof of his Esteem, he told him that he was come to serve under him as a private Man, and that he wou'd take his Pay. The King was so good-natur'd as to accept of his Service, and to give him 100 Crowns a Day, besides the hundred thousand Crowns which he had thrown away upon him before. Some days after, Henry won the Battle of Guinegaste *, against the Duke of Longueville, who was there taken Prisoner. Then he made himself Master of Terouenne, and as a reward for the Services he had receiv'd from the Emperor, he deliver'd up the Place to him, which was immediately demolish'd. After this, he besieg'd Tournay, which surrender'd in a few days.

THE success of this Campaign, both in Italy and France, was the same thing to Ferdinand, as if he had gain'd so many Victories, tho' his Troops had not contributed to it, because he obtain'd what he propos'd to himself, by putting Lewis XII. out of a capacity, at least for a time, of attacking Navarre or the Kingdom of Naples. 'Tis true, that he had not carry'd his Point, had it not been for an arrant Cheat; but his Reputation was the least of his Concern.

On the other hand, Maximilian had gain'd 100,000 Crowns by the bare ſigning of a Treaty, which in all appearance he never intended to put in Execution. For this Prince was not a whit more nice of his Honour than Ferdinand. He made a kind of Traffick of Treaties, in which he always found his Account, becauſe he never concluded one which did not procure him ſome Money: ſo that the Italians by way of banter, gave him the Name of Pochi danari.

Maximilian as mercenary as Ferdinand.

HENRY, one wou'd think, cou'd not poſſibly be ignorant how much he had been abus'd by his pretended Allies; yet for all this, when the Campaign was over, he went to Liſle and concluded a new Treaty with the Emperor, by which he engag'd himſelf to give that Prince 200,000 Crowns, that he might have leave to carry home his Army, becauſe by the Treaty of Mechlin he was oblig'd to leave it in Picardy. The Emperor engag'd on his part to maintain, during the Winter, 10,000 Men in Artois and Hainault for the defence of Tournay, and the Dominions of his Grandſon the Archduke. It was alſo ſtipulated by the ſaid Treaty, that the Emperor and Henry ſhou'd next Year put themſelves each at the head of a powerful Army, to attack France in two different places; and that before the 15th of May, the Archduke ſhou'd repair to Calais, there to ſolemnize his Marriage with the Princeſs Mary, Henry's Siſter, according to the Treaty which had been concluded before the Death of Henry VII.

Henry makes a new Treaty with him at Liſle.

IT ſeems that even then, Henry was not yet fully convinc'd that he had been bubbled in the Treaty of Mechlin; but e'er long he was undeceiv'd. The Affairs of Lewis XII. being in a bad ſituation, as well by reaſon of the ill ſucceſs of his Arms in France and Italy, as by the incurſion which the Swiſſers made that ſame Year into Burgundy, and which render'd him apprehenſive of a ſecond, becauſe he had not kept his word with them; he reſolv'd at laſt to make Peace with the Pope, and to renounce his Council, or rather Conventicle of Divines. This Peace was no ſooner concluded, but Leo X. ſent a Letter to Henry, exhorting him to Peace, by repreſenting to him, that ſince he had only taken Arms for the Defence of the Church, he ought to quit them now the King of France was return'd to his Obedience. This Letter diſpell'd the Miſt before Henry's Eyes. He ſaw at length, that the Pope, the Emperor, the King of Arragon, and the Venetians had engag'd him to make War againſt France, only to ſerve their own Ends; and he reſolv'd from that time to mind his own Intereſt ſolely, without regard to thoſe of his faithleſs Allies. He was the more inclin'd to take this Reſolution, becauſe he heard that Ferdinad had renew'd his Truce with Lewis XII. and becauſe the Pope did all that was in his power to reconcile the Swiſſers with France and the Venetians with the Emperor. To this we muſt likewiſe add, that Wolſey the King's prime Miniſter and Favourite, who already had, or was to have the Adminiſtration of the Biſhoprick of Tournay, and the Abbey of St. Amand, was afraid leſt if the War continued, the King wou'd loſe Tournay, and conſequently he ſhou'd loſe the Adminiſtration of that See.

Lewis makes his Peace with the Pope, who likewiſe exhorts Henry to a Peace.

THE Duke de Longueville who had been a Priſoner in England, had been labouring for ſome time paſt, by Order of the King of France, to incline Henry to the Peace, by ſetting before his Eyes the Treachery of his Confederates. And at laſt in 1514, Henry gave him to underſtand that he wou'd conſent to a Peace, provided it was upon reaſonable Terms. Not long after this, the Duke receiv'd a Commiſſion from Lewis XII. to treat with Henry, and to deſire of him in Marriage the Princeſs Mary his Siſter, who was betroth'd to the Archduke. Henry immediately demanded Guyenne and Normandy; but the Duke rejected that demand, and propos'd to give him for all his Pretenſions a Sum of Money payable at ſeveral Terms, and to make a Treaty of Friendſhip which ſhou'd continue till the whole was paid. Henry did not reliſh this Expedient; but at laſt he only demanded that the Crown of France ſhou'd pay him 100,000 Crowns a Year. The Duke plainly perceiv'd that what the King aim'd at, was to engage France to pay him a ſort of Tribute or Acknowledgment, and in ſome meaſure to own the Juſtice of his Pretenſions to Guyenne and Normandy. Mean time, for fear he ſhou'd fly off, he tells him that he thought his Propoſal reaſonable, and that he wou'd inform the King his Maſter of it. And it was not long e'er Lewis XII. ſent Ambaſſadors to England, who there concluded both the Peace, and the Marriage. But as he had taken care to ſecure Wolſey in his Intereſt, he manag'd it ſo by his means, that without the Talk of any Penſion, Henry was contented to take a Million of Crowns in Gold, partly for the Arrears due to him by the Treaty of Eſtaples, and partly towards the payment of a certain Sum which it was pretended the late Duke of Orleans, when a Priſoner in England, had borrowed of Margaret Ducheſs of Somerſet the King's Grandmother. Probably there was no ſuch Debt, and that it was a mere Invention on purpoſe that there might be no trace left of any Tribute, Obligation or Penſion. Thus Henry receded from his Demand, as to the Penſion of 100,000 Crowns, tho' he ſeem'd to have taken Princeſs Mary renounces her Match with the Archduke, afterwards Charles V.

BEFORE the Treaties were ſign'd, the Princeſs Mary, by an authentick Act drawn up in preſence of a Notary, renounc'd her Marriage with the Archduke, becauſe he had not ſent his Proxy to marry her at the time appointed; and ſhe urg'd another very trifling Reaſon, viz. that ſhe was inform'd from good hands, that the Miniſters and the moſt intimate Counſellors of the Archduke had conceived a grudge both againſt her, and the King her Brother. Thus was that Prince, who in a few Years was to be the greateſt Monarch in Europe, treated without any Regard or Decorum. After this, the Marriage of Lewis XII. with Mary, was ſolemniz'd by Proxies, both at London and Paris; and at laſt in the Month of October the ſame was conſummated at Abbeville[a].

Lewis XII. of France, his Death.

THE Peace being made betwixt England and France, Lewis XII. prepar'd to enter Italy with a numerous Army, to recover the Duchy of Milan; but Death, which overtook him on the 1ſt of January 1515, hinder'd him from putting his Schemes in execution.

Francis I. renews the Treaties with England.

FRANCIS I. who ſucceeded him, purſued the ſame Plan; and to ſecure himſelf againſt any manner of Diverſion on the part of England, he renew'd the Treaties which Lewis XII. had lately made with Henry. The Preparations which were making in France, gave uneaſineſs to the Pope, the Emperor, the King of Arragon, the Duke of Milan and the Swiſſers. Ferdinand was afraid that the new King of France, on pretence of a Deſign to recover the Duchy of Milan, wou'd fall all at once upon Navarre. Therefore he perſuaded the Swiſſers to make a League with him and the Emperor, by repreſenting to them that the beſt way to defend the Duchy of Milan, was to attack France it ſelf. For this end he undertook to make an Irruption into Bearn or Guyenne, while the Swiſſers were to do the ſame into Burgundy, and while the Emperor was to continue the War in the State of Venice, to hinder the Venetians from aſſiſting France. Ferdinand's aim was to have an Army ready to march againſt Francis I. in caſe he ſhou'd attack Navarre, and to give him a Diverſion in Burgundy by means of the Swiſſers, to whom a good Sum of Money was promis'd on the part of the Confederates. But as ſoon as he heard that the Army of France was on the Road to Italy, he disbanded his Troops, and left the Swiſſers to defend the Duchy of Milan. The Pope, for whom the Allies had left room in the League, had indeed promis'd to come into it; but he delay'd it under various pretexts, and yet ſent an Army into Lombardy, which render'd Francis I. very ſuſpicious of him. Mean time Francis found a way to paſs his Army into the Duchy of Milan, in ſpite of the Swiſſers who guarded the Mountains. Not long after, he enter'd into a Negotiation with them for their return into their own Country, on paying them a Sum of Money in hand. But while the Treaty went on, the Swiſſers, by the Inſtigation of the Cardinal of Sion, went and attack'd him at Marignan, where they were entirely defeated. After this Victory, Francis made himſelf Maſter of the Duchy, and ſent Maximilian Sforza (who ſurrender'd his Perſon and Rights to him) into France. He took away Parma and Placentia from the Pope; and when he had ſo done, he was glad to compound with him. This Detail, tho' foreign to the Hiſtory of England, is yet neceſſary to give Light to the Affair, of which I am now going to treat.

Ferdinand perſuades the Swiſſers to a League with him and the Emperor, and afterwards abandons them.

AFTER Francis I. came to the Crown, he long'd to get Tournay out of the hands of the King of England; but Wolſey privately oppos'd it, being very ſenſible that he ſhou'd loſe the Adminiſtration of that See upon the Reſtoration of the City. He actually intreated the King of France to grant ſome good Benefice to Lewis Guillard, who was the true Biſhop of Tournay, that he might have no Inclination to diſturb him in the Government of that See. Francis promis'd him he would, but did not deſign to be as good as his word; for he knew on the contrary that this was the main Stumbling-Block, and that as long as Wolſey enjoy'd the Epiſcopal Adminiſtration of Tournay, the Reſtitution of the City would be next to impoſſible. Mean time, as Wolſey was only Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick, becauſe Guillard had refus'd the Oath to the King of England, Francis induc'd that Prelate to make an offer of taking the Oath, and then made ſecret application to the Court of Rome, that he might be reſtor'd to his Biſhoprick. But on the other hand, while he us'd his Intereſt in private to ſtrip Wolſey of the Adminiſtration of Tournay, he publickly ſollicited a Cardinal's Cap for him, in order to curry favour with him, and by that means to gain the Good-will of King Henry. All this paſs'd while Francis I. was ſtill in France; during which, the Pope, who had promis'd to enter into the League form'd againſt him, delay'd to give him Satisfaction with reſpect to Guillard. But when he was inform'd that he had happily paſs'd the Alps, that he was at the very Gates of Milan, and that he was in Treaty with the Swiſſers, and very like to ſucceed, he thought himſelf in great danger, becauſe he had given him no ſmall Cauſe to complain of of his Conduct. For this reaſon he immediately iſſued a Bull, reſtoring Guillard to his Biſhoprick, and permitting him alſo to employ the ſecular Arm, if he met with oppoſition. Henry complain'd bitterly to the Pope againſt this Bull; but Francis I. having in the mean time gain'd the Battle of Marignan, the Pope did not dare to revoke the Bull, for fear of diſguſting him. On the other hand, as he did not yet know how Francis would carry it to him, he ſaw plainly that he might ſtand in need of England, in caſe Francis ſhould be inclin'd to be reveng'd of him, of which there was too great appearance: and therefore, while he was at a Non-plus what to do, he choſe to gain time; and becauſe Henry oppos'd the execution of the Bull, he made that a pretence for referring the Examination of the Affair to two Cardinals, who were in no great haſte to finiſh it.

Pope iſſues a Bull for reſtoring the Nonjuring Biſhop of Tournay.

WOLSEY plainly perceiv'd that this Bull was owing to the ſollicitation of the King of France; and therefore, as well to be reveng'd on him, as to preſerve his Biſhoprick, he reſolv'd to ſet Henry upon his Back, tho' Francis ſoon after procured a Cardinal's Cap for him. With this View he made private intimation to the Emperor, that it would not be impoſſible to draw off Henry from the Intereſt of France; and indeed he left no Stone unturned to effect it, by inſpiring him with Jealouſy againſt Francis I. and with an apprehenſion that his power would one day become fatal to England.

Wolſey ſtudies Revenge on the King of France.

NOT long after this, the Emperor ſent an Italian Gentleman into England, that was Secretary to Francis Sforza, who took the Title of Duke of Milan, after Maximilian his Brother had yielded up his Rights to Francis I. This Envoy had Orders to deſire the King's aſſiſtance to reſtore Sforza (who was in Germany) to the Duchy of Milan. Henry did not think fit to declare himſelf openly, but promiſed to remit a good Sum of Money to the Emperor, to be laid out for that purpoſe. Thus did Wolſey draw in the King by little and little, not doubting but the Emperor's Expedition againſt Milan would occaſion a War, which would give his Maſter an opportunity to declare againſt France. After Wolſey had formed this new Project, an Ambaſſador who came from the King of Arragon to deſire the renewing of the Alliance, and had danced Attendance ſeveral Months at Court to no purpoſe, was at length honoured and careſſed, and the Alliance between the two Kings renewed. With the ſame View, Henry had ſent an Ambaſſador to Bruſſels, to be reconciled with Charles, and to renew the antient Treaties; but he had a very cold reception.

Henry's Treaty with the King of Arragon renewed.

THE Death of the King of Arragon, which happened in February 1516, broke all Cardinal Wolſey's Meaſures. For Charles of Auſtria, his Grandſon, who ſucceeded him in the Kingdoms of Spain, had neither Ability nor Inclination to enter into a new War with France. On the contrary, he found it his Intereſt to ſecure himſelf on that ſide, that he might go without diſturbance to take poſſeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy; yet without Charles, it was in vain to attempt to drive the French out of Italy. The Character of Pope Leo was ſo well known, that it was not prudent to lay much ſtreſs upon his Engagements; and as to the Emperor, he could not carry on the War but at another's Expence, for there was a neceſſity of feeding him perpetually with Money, and generally nothing came of it. The Sum which Henry had remitted to him, enabled him indeed to make an Incurſion into the Duchy of Milan, in May 1516, but it had not the Succeſs which the Court of England expected.

HENRY VIII.

Death of the King of Arragon. His Succeſſor Charles V.

The Emperor's Expedition in Milan.

SOME time after [a], Francis and the new King of Spain concluded a Treaty at Noyon, which reſtored Peace to Europe, and particularly to Italy, notwithſtanding the Efforts of Henry and his Miniſter. They agreed by this Treaty that the Emperor ſhould reſtore Verona to the Venetians, (the only place he had left of theirs in his hands) on their paying him a Sum of Money: That Charles ſhould reſtore Navarre in ſix Months time, and if he refuſed, it ſhould be lawful for Francis to aſſiſt Henry d'Albret in the recovery of it: That Charles ſhould marry Louiſa of France, the Daughter of Francis, then but a Year old, to whom the King her Father ſhould give up for her Portion, all his Pretenſions to the Kingdom of Naples; and that till the Conſummation of the Marriage, Charles ſhould allow 100,000 Crowns a Year for her Maintenance. As Charles was juſt then going to take poſſeſſion of Spain, he thought he could not give too much for a Peace which he ſo much wanted. The Emperor tried all ſhifts to avoid the Ratification of this Treaty, which put him out of hopes of ever ſetting his foot again in Italy; and Henry did his utmoſt to engage Charles to make an offenſive League againſt France: but all ſignified nothing; and the Emperor was at laſt forced to ratify the Treaty of Noyon.

The different Views of the ſeveral Princes.

HENRY and his Miniſter not being able to ſucceed in forming an offenſive League againſt France, were at laſt glad of a defenſive one, which Charles was willing to come into, on condition that it was drawn up in general Terms, without naming the King of France in it. This League was ſigned at London, the 29th of October 1516, between the Emperor and the Kings of England and Spain.

Spain. They engaged, that in caſe either of them was attacked, each ſhould furniſh 20,000 Foot, and 5000 Horſe to defend him. The Pope was declared Head of the League, in hopes that he would come into it. The Swiſſers were alſo included in it; and it was agreed to give them Penſions, which were to be regulated afterwards, and paid by each of the Confederates. But ſince it was very uncertain whether they would chuſe to be included in it, 'twas agreed that each of the Confederate Princes ſhould ſend Ambaſſadors to engage them in it, and to treat with them. It ſeems that theſe Penſions were to be paid both to the Publick, and to private Men. Probably the Aim and Intention of Henry and his Miniſter in bringing about this League, was to take an occaſion from it ſome day or other for arming the Allies againſt France. All this was done for the ſake only of Cardinal Wolſey, who longed to be revenged of Francis I. and found a War neceſſary for preſerving the Government of the Biſhoprick of Tournay. At leaſt one cannot ſee any other Reaſon for the Animoſity which Henry diſcovered at that time againſt France. So that this Prince, after having been chouſed by the Popes, the Emperor, and the King of Arragon, and after having happily got rid of the Wars in which they engaged him, had the Folly moreover to give himſelf up into the hands of his Prime Miniſter, who, as will appear more fully hereafter, had no more regard for him than they had.

All theſe meaſures taken for the ſake of Wolſey.

The Pope ſolicits the Chriſtian Princes to make War againſt the Turks, and for that purpoſe ſells his Indulgences.

THREE important Affairs employed Pope Leo during the Year 1517. The firſt was the Project he had formed to engage all the Chriſtian Princes to make a League againſt the Turks, under pretence of the great Progreſs thoſe Infidels made in Egypt againſt the Mammalucks, who, the Pope imagined, would not fail, after they had ſubdued Egypt, to come and attack Chriſtendom. Upon this occaſion, he ſet his Indulgences to publick Sale; which ſcandalous Traffick provoked Luther, and gave birth to the Reformation, which was afterwards eſtabliſhed in ſeveral parts of Europe[a]. The ſecond thing which employed the Pope during this Year, was to make War upon Francis Maria de la Rovero, who again put himſelf in poſſeſſion of the Duchy of Urbino which the Pope had given away from him to his Nephew Laurence de Medicis. Finally, this very Year he diſcovered a Conſpiracy, which had been formed againſt him by ſome of the Cardinals to poiſon him. I make mention of theſe three Affairs, becauſe of ſome Pieces in the Fœdera which relate to them.

Conſpiracy againſt the Pope.

LEO X. ſtill continued his Sollicitations during the Year 1518, for the League againſt the Turks. He ſent Legates to all the chief Courts of Europe to negotiate this Affair, which, according to the Plan he had formed, could not fail of bringing immenſe Sums into his Treaſury. The Perſon he deputed to go to England, was Cardinal Laurence Campeggio. But Wolſey being affronted that the Pope had not thought of him, the Pope was obliged to make him eaſy by joining him in the Commiſſion with the other. Wolſey found means afterwards to get his Collegue recalled, to remain ſole Legate à latere in England, and to get his Commiſſion prolonged from time to time, tho' there was no neceſſity for it. All the Efforts which the Pope made uſe of, ended at laſt in nothing more than a defenſive League between the chief Sovereigns, in which the Turks were not ſo much as mentioned. But that was not the Thing the Pope wanted. He hoped to have all the Chriſtian Princes engage in a Croiſado, which was to be under his own Direction, and which would help to fill his Coffers.

He continues to ſollicit the Croiſado.

Defenſive League of the Chriſtian Princes.

THE moſt conſiderable Tranſactions of the Year 1518, with regard to England, were the Negotiation, and the Treaty thereupon concluded for reſtoring Tournay; and another Treaty which was made on that occaſion for the Marriage of Francis the Dauphin

Treaties for reſtoring Tournay, and the Marriage of the Dauphin to Princeſs Mary.

[a] The Origin of the Reformation is ſo material a part of Hiſtory, that 'tis preſumed an Explanation of the Indulgences, as given by Mr. Rapin in his Hiſtory, Vol. V. may not be unacceptable. They were plenary Pardons for Sins, ſold every where at ſo moderate a Price, that no Chriſtian who cared for the Salvation of his Soul, would be without them. Therefore the Pope made no doubt of raiſing an immenſe Sum, and for this end he ſent his Collectors into ſeveral Parts of Chriſtendom to levy it, and Preachers who had Orders to extol the great Benefits of them. The Jacobin Friars being appointed for Saxony in the room of the Auguſtins, who uſed to preach there for the Croiſades, the latter were provoked at it, and paſſed ſevere Cenſures both upon the Preachers and Collectors. And among others, Luther, who was one of the Auguſtin Friars, publiſh'd Papers againſt them, in which he expoſed the pious Fraud of the Indulgences themſelves, and thereby brought ſuch a ſwarm of Enemies upon him, as engaged him to prove that neither thoſe Indulgences, nor the Papal Authority itſelf, which till then the Publick had ſo credulouſly eſpouſed, and fondly ſupported, had any Foundation in Scripture. Yet the Pope's Miniſters uſed in Taverns to play away at Dice the power of delivering Souls out of Purgatory; and they were not aſhamed to publiſh in their Pulpits, that there was no Wickedneſs, how great ſoever, nay, though one had raviſhed the Virgin Mary herſelf, but might be forgiven by thoſe Bulls of Indulgence, or Pardons: and that the Souls tormented in Purgatory, as ſoon as the Money was flung into the Baſon, skipped for joy amidſt the Flames, and flew ſtrait to Heaven; but that if the Sum offered was a Farthing leſs than ten Shillings, it would not avail.——See Lonicerus in his Theatrum Hiſtoricum, Fol. 241. Chriſtianus Maſſæus l. 20. Chron. Guiccardini; and above all, Father Paul's Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, Biſhop Burnet's of the Reformation, and the Annals of Goodwin Biſhop of Hereford, tranſlated by his Son Morgan Goodwin LL.D.

Dauphin to Mary, Henry's Daughter. Cardinal Wolsey perceiving that the Peace which Europe enjoyed, rendered him neither so necessary nor so formidable to the King of France as before, and that in all probability Guillard's offer to take the Oath to the King of England, would be a means of restoring him to his Bishoprick, thought it high time to comply with the Sollicitations of Francis, who spared no Cost to make him his Friend. By an Accommodation he might hope that Prince would make him Satisfaction for the Loss of his Government; whereas he hazarded the Loss of all, by striving to keep all. Therefore he induced Henry to restore Tournay to France, on paying down the Sum of 600,000 Crowns; but before he entered into a Treaty on this Head, he took care to secure to himself a Pension of 12,000 Livres by way of amends.

Her Portion.

While the Affair of Tournay was negotiating, a Marriage was also treated of betwixt the Dauphin and the Princess Mary, with whom the King her Father gave a Portion of 333,000 Crowns, which was to be deducted out of the Money he was to receive for Tournay. At the same time another Treaty was concluded for an Interview betwixt the two Kings in some part of Picardy.

Treaty for an Interview betwixt the two Kings.

THE Death of the Emperor Maximilian, which happened in January 1519, caused great alteration in the Affairs of Europe. Every body knows that both Charles King of Spain, and Francis of France aspired to the Empire; and that the Election of Charles gave the King of France that Jealousy, which was one of the principal Causes of renewing the War. However, it did not break out immediately; for the two Monarchs were each of them disposed to take just measures beforehand, that they might be well supported in a War, which, according to all appearance, would be attended with great Consequences. Of all the Powers in Europe, there was none more capable than England to turn the Ballance to which side soever she joined. For this reason the two Rival Princes were exceeding industrious for a while to secure the Friendship of Henry VIII. The only way they had to come at it, was by the Favour of Cardinal Wolsey, which both strove to gain by Caresses, Presents, and extraordinary Honours. Francis gave him a very evident Mark of his Confidence, in a Point about which Sovereigns are generally very nice, by leaving it to his Discretion to regulate every thing relating to the Interview which he was to have with Henry. Moreover, he promised him the Suffrages of 14 Cardinals to chuse him Pope, in case he out-lived Leo X. But Wolsey thought the Emperor was best able to procure him that high Dignity, and it was more for this reason than any thing else, that he closed entirely with Charles, and begun by degrees to form that Union betwixt him and the King his Master, which was like to prove of so much advantage to him.

HENRY VIII.

THE Interview of the two Kings having been put off till June 1520, Cardinal Wolsey according to a Power which he had received from both Kings, settled the Time, Place, and Form of it. He gave the King of England some Advantage, by ordering the first Interview to be made upon his Territories; but Francis seemed to take no notice of it, and to be satisfied with the Reason which was urged by Wolsey, viz. that Henry had faced the dangers of the Sea to pay him the Visit. While Henry was making ready for the Voyage, and was actually advanced as far as Canterbury, he heard that the Emperor was arrived at Dover. All the Historians say that Henry was surprized at this unexpected Visit, tho' 'tis not very likely. At least Wolsey could not but know it beforehand, because in the preceding Month of March, Charles engaged to procure him a Bishoprick in Spain, and a Pension upon some other Bishoprick, immediately after the Conference which he was to have with the King of England. Be this as it will, Wolsey got a Commission to go and compliment the Emperor, and to carry him to Canterbury. 'Tis probable that was the time when the Emperor effectually secured the Cardinal in his Interest, by promising to make him a Pope, for that was properly the end of this Prince's Visit; who was so uneasy at the intended Interview betwixt Francis and Henry, that he made some Efforts to divert Henry from going; but as he was too far engaged to recede, he only promised that he would not enter into any Measures to his prejudice. The Emperor being satisfied, embarked again for the Netherlands, as did Henry for Calais; from whence he repaired to the place of Interview, which was called the Field of Cloth of Gold, or the Golden Camp, because of the Magnificence of the two Courts.

He settles Henry's Interview with Francis.

As Henry was setting out for the Interview, the Emperor arrives at Dover.

WHILE the two Kings took their Pleasure, their Ministers agreed on a Treaty, whereby Francis I. engaged after the entire Payment of the Million of Crowns already mentioned, to give Henry 100,000 Livres Tournois per Annum, till the Dauphin's Marriage with Mary was consummated. This shews how far Francis was convinced of the necessity of making the King of England his Friend. The Emperor was equally persuaded of the same necessity for his own part, but he went a surer way to work by securing the Interest of the Favourite. After the Interview, Henry went to see the Emperor

Emperor at Graveling, and the Emperor return'd him the Viſit at Calais; of which Francis was jealous, and not without Reaſon, becauſe the Foundations of that Alliance, which was afterwards made betwixt the Emperor and Henry, were laid in theſe reciprocal Viſits. Charles V. kept his word with Wolſey, by procuring for him from the Pope a Penſion of 2000 Ducats upon the Biſhoprick of Palencia, and the Adminiſtration of that of Badajox, which brought him in 5000 more.

The Pope's Grants of Biſhopricks in Spain to Wolſey.

IN 1521, the War betwixt the Emperor and France began, after each of them had try'd his utmoſt to provoke the other to ſtrike the firſt Blow, to the end that he might have occaſion to call for the Aſſiſtance of the King of England. But Francis might have look'd for it long enough; for Henry had reſolv'd beforehand to take part with the Emperor, and the only thing wanting was a plauſible pretext for it, which he was not long without. Francis I. having caus'd Navarre to be attack'd, and ſtir'd up * Robert de la Mark to take Arms againſt the Emperor, and even to ſend him a Challenge, the Emperor call'd upon Henry for his Aſſiſtance, in purſuance of the League of London. Henry being deſirous to ſalve Appearances, ſent an Embaſſy upon this Head to Francis, who, that Henry might have no pretence to declare againſt him, oblig'd Robert de la Mark to lay down his Arms. And as to the War in Navarre, that cou'd be no Plea for Henry's declaring againſt him, becauſe Francis was authoriz'd to ſupport Henry d'Albret, by the Treaty of Noyon.

WHILE the Emperor complain'd againſt the King of France for having begun the War by means of Robert de la Mark, he form'd a League with the Pope, to drive the French out of Milan; and e'er that League broke out, he took a ſevere Revenge upon Robert de la Mark, by ravaging his Country with Fire and Sword, and ſeizing his Towns. His aim, as has been ſaid, was to oblige Francis I. to take ſome Step which might repreſent him as the Aggreſſor. On the other hand, Francis was upon his Guard, leſt he ſhou'd fall into the Snare. But as he was apprehenſive of the Fate of Champagne, becauſe of the near approach of the Emperor to it with an Army far more numerous than was neceſſary to chaſtiſe Robert de la Mark, he ſent a Repreſentation to Henry, that he cou'd no longer excuſe himſelf from taking Arms to ſecure his Dominions. Upon this, Henry offer'd himſelf for Mediator; and being accepted as ſuch by the two Parties, it was agreed that a Congreſs ſhou'd be held at Calais, there to treat of a Peace, by the Mediation of the King of England, who ſent Cardinal Wolſey thither to repreſent him, with the Title of his Lieutenant. The Conferences at Calais laſted two Months and a half, during which time there was an open War in Italy, Champagne, the Netherlands, and Navarre. The League of the Pope and the Emperor ſucceeded according to their Wiſhes. Lautrec, who commanded at Milan, was forc'd to abandon that City; of which, and ſome other places, the Allies took poſſeſſion. On the other hand, the Emperor's Army made great Ravage in Champagne, while the French beſieg'd Fontarabia on the Frontiers of Spain.

EACH of the two Princes now in Arms had taken ſuch Precautions, leſt he ſhou'd be thought the Aggreſſor, that it was a difficult matter to judge which of the two had begun the War; and this was properly the only Queſtion debated in the Conferences at Calais, in which Henry and the Cardinal did not act with abundance of Sincerity. For inſtead of endeavouring to procure Peace, Wolſey put it as far back as he cou'd, his only View being to make the King of France chargeable with the blame of the Rupture. In fine, this Negotiation ended only in a Treaty about Trifles which might as well have been let alone. Mean while Wolſey, under pretence of going to perſuade the Emperor to a Peace, went to him at Bruges, and agreed on a League with him againſt France, and about his Marriage with the Princeſs Mary, who had been eſpous'd to the Dauphin. Before he went to Calais, he was furniſh'd with ſufficient Powers to treat with whomſoever he ſhou'd think fit.

Pope Leo's Death.

IN the beginning of the Year 1522, Francis I. ſent Letters Patent to Henry, calling upon him for Succours againſt the Emperor, in purſuance of the League at London; dated October 2. 1518. To which Henry only return'd anſwer by a Herald, who declar'd War againſt him as the firſt Aggreſſor, by virtue of the very ſame Treaty.

THE Conclave that met to chuſe a Pope, broke up in January 1522, after they had elected Adrian VI. who had been Præceptor to Charles V. and was actually Regent in Spain. Wolſey naturally imagin'd that this Election was owing to the Intrigues of the Emperor, tho' he had promis'd to procure the Papacy for him. However he diſſembled his Reſentment, and the Emperor, as he return'd thro' England for Spain, took care to pacify him with Preſents and Penſions. While Charles ſtaid in England, he ratify'd the League which he Ill success of the French Arms in Italy.

THE War which continued in Italy during the Year 1522, was very disadvantageous to Francis I. whose Army, after the Loss of the Battle of Bicoque, was forc'd to repass the Mountains; and not long after the French were likewise drove out of Genoa.

Pope's Bull for a Truce despis'd by Francis, upon which the Pope enters into a League against him.

POPE Adrian VI. being inform'd that Francis I. was preparing to return into Italy with a numerous Army, was prevail'd upon by the Enemies of France to publish a Bull in 1523, by which he order'd a Truce of three Years to be observ'd by all Christian Princes. Francis made a mere Jest of this Bull; for which Contempt the Pope was reveng'd on him by entring into a League form'd against France, in which Ferdinand Archduke of Austria, Francis Sforza Duke of Milan, the Genoese and Florentines were also engag'd.

BESIDES the Advantages which Charles V. expected from this League, he propos'd very great matters to himself from the Rebellion of the Constable (the Duke) de Bourbon, whom he had corrupted to make a powerful diversion in France. But this finishes the Subject of the Acts in this Tome of the Fœdera, as far as they relate to Foreign Affairs, of which these are the chief.

1. AN Act renewing the Alliance which was made June 20, 1502. betwixt the Emperor Maximilian and Henry VII. dated August 20, 1509[a].

2. ANOTHER for renewing the Treaty of Peace and Friendship made betwixt Henry VIII. and Lewis XII. dated March 23, 1510[b].

AFTER this Treaty we meet with a great number of Acts which have a Dependency on it; such as Ratifications, Oaths, &c.

With the King of Arragon. P. 281.

3. A Treaty of defensive Alliance betwixt Henry VIII. and Ferdinand King of Arragon, concluded at London May 24, 1510. and Ferdinand's Ratification of it; dated June 21. following[c]. Ferdinand took care to have this Clause inserted in it.

Item, Rex sic requisitus, statim post ipsam Requisitionem, se Regis sic invadentis Hostem publice declarabit, &c. & guerram actualiter aget in propriâ personâ si Rex Gallorum fuerit. Quod si Rex Gallorum non fuerit, tunc per Capitaneum & Locum suum tenentem, &c.

5. FERDINAND's Letter of Thanks to him for the said Supply[f].

I have already observ'd that Ferdinand intended to imploy his Fleet and his Army against France, and not against the Moors. Yet, mark what he says in this Letter.

Nos tamen confitemur Vobis plurimum debere, cum ad hanc sacrosanctam Expeditionem, non solum cum exercitu tam liberaliter adjuvare nos voluistis; sed etiam prudentissimo amantissimoque consilio, quod, nimirum, lubentissime sequeremur, si hujusmodi nostra esset Expeditio, quæ Ducem aliquem Generalem ex Nostris pateretur, & non propriam personam nostram exigeret. Sunt enim in hoc bello gerendo, magnoque negotio, plures causæ perdifficiles, quæ nostram prorsus personam requirunt, & non alterius Ducis officium. Præterea, non ignoramus, tam in mari, quam in terrâ, subeundos nobis esse labores multos, magnaque pericula. Verum enimverò, cum considerabamus quantò majores Jesus Christus, Dominus noster, pro nobis labores pertulit, & mortem crucis, quam passus est, pro cujus honore & gloriâ hanc expeditionem suscepimus, nullus labor in ea nobis succedere poterit, qui non sit Nobis optata & dulcissima requies, nihilque omittemus tam magnum, quod non sit maximum lucrum Nobis allaturum. NEVERTHELESS we confess our selves very much oblig'd to you, not only for the Army with which you have been pleas'd so generously to assist us for this Holy Expedition, but also for your most prudent and affectionate Advice; which we shou'd most readily follow, if our Expedition was of such a nature as did not require our immediate Presence, and might as well be conducted by any of our Generals. For in the management of this War, and great Affair, there are many very difficult Cases which demand nothing less than our own appearance in Person, and in which any other Leader wou'd be of no service. Besides, we are not ignorant that many are the Toils, and great the Dangers which we must encounter with, as well by Sea as Land. But when we consider the much greater Labours, and even the Death on the Cross which our Lord Jesus Christ, for whose whoſe Honour and Glory we have undertaken this Expedition, went thro' and ſuffered for us, nothing can happen to us in it, which we ſhall think Labour, but rather our moſt deſirable and ſweeteſt Reſt; nor ſhall we reckon any Loſs too great for obtaining the greateſt Gain. But we truſt and hope in his Mercy, for whom we are preparing to make this Expedition, and going to War, that he will favour his own Cauſe, and help us fighting for him.

Pope's League with the K. of Arragon and Venetians. P. 305.

6. THE League concluded at Rome between Julius II. the King of Arragon and the Venetians; dated Oct. 4, 1511.

'TIS ſaid in the Treaty itſelf, that it was concluded with the Approbation and Conſent of the King of England, and with the participation of Cardinal Bambridge his Ambaſſador. It appears likewiſe by the very Terms of the Treaty, that it was made to recover for the Pope not only the City of Bologna, but alſo every thing that belonged mediately or immediately to the Church, that is to ſay, chiefly the Duchy of Ferrara.

Henry's League with Ferdinand. P. 311.

7. THE Treaty of Alliance betwixt Henry and Ferdinand for defence of the Church; dated at London, Nov. 17, 1511.

THE Preamble of this Treaty is of the ſame Style as Ferdinand's Letter abovementioned. The two Kings ſeem to breathe nothing but the Glory of God, and the Welfare of the Catholick Church. Mean while Henry's true Aim was to conquer Guyenne, and Ferdinand's to deceive his Son-in-Law, and to ſeize Navarre under pretence of defending the poor oppreſſed Church. There was not a ſingle Clauſe in the Treaty which did not tend to Ferdinand's Aim; but it was not poſſible for Henry to perceive it, till the thing was done and over.

Commiſſion for his Ambaſſadors to go to the Lateran Council. P. 325.

8. A Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Worceſter, and to Sir Robert Wingfield, to go and aſſiſt at the Lateran Council in quality of Ambaſſadors from England; dated April 1, 1512[a].

Ibidemque pro Nobis & Regno noſtro & Nomine noſtro communicandi, tractandi & concludendi, de & ſuper omnibus & ſingulis, quæ pro bono Univerſalis Eccleſiæ Catholicæ, & pro Reformatione ejuſdem tam in Capite, quam in Membris.

i. e. AND there to confer, treat and conclude for us and our Kingdom, and in our Name, of and concerning all and ſingular the Articles which may be judged neceſſary for the welfare of the whole Catholick Church, and for the Reformation thereof, as well in the Head as in the Members, &c.[b]

Commiſſion to Sir Edw. Howard. P. 316.

9. A Commiſſion to Sir Edward Howard to command the Fleet intended for defence of the Church; dated April 7, 1512[c].

THIS was the Fleet which was to act againſt France, while the King's Troops were employed in the Conqueſt of Guyenne. In all appearance the Marqueſs of Dorſet's Commiſſion ran likewiſe that 'twas for Defence of the Church.

Ferdinand's Commiſſion to treat of a League with the Pope, &c. P. 336.

10. FERDINAND's Commiſſion to Lewis Carroz of Villaragud, his Ambaſſador in England, to conclude a League with the Pope, the Emperor, the King of England, and the Venetians againſt France; dated July 20, 1512[d].

THIS was after the Battle of Ravenna.

Henry's Commiſſion to conclude Leagues for the Pope and Church. P. 341.

11. A Commiſſion to the Earls of Surry and Shrewsbury to conclude Leagues for defence of the Pope and the Church; dated Nov. 10, 1512[e].

His Declaration for the League of Rome.

12. HENRY's Letters Patent, declaring that he adheres to the League of Rome; dated Nov. 13, 1512[f].

IN theſe two Acts the King took it for granted that the Pope was ſtill oppreſs'd, that the French ravaged Romagna, and that the League of Rome was ſtill in force; but he was miſtaken.

Indulgences for thoſe who go with Henry againſt France. P. 343.

13. INDULGENCES for thoſe who ſhall accompany Henry to the War againſt Lewis XII.

I ſuſpect that this Piece, which is without any Date, or ſo much as the Pope's Name, is miſplaced by Mr. Rymer, and that it ought to be put after the Treaty of Mechlin[g].

14. A Commiſſion to treat with the Emperor for the defence of the Church; dated Dec. 20, 1512[h].

THIS was in order to conclude the Treaty of Mechlin.

Truce betwixt France and Spain. P. 350.

15. THE Treaty of Truce between Lewis XII. and Ferdinand, concluded at Orthez the firſt of April 1513, in which we find this Clauſe.

Nos Jacobus de Conchillos, Epiſcopus Cathanienſis, tanquam Orator & Procurator Regis Arragonum, nomine ſuo, ac vice & nomine Maximiliani Imperatoris & Henrici Regis Angliæ Fratrum ſuorum, pro quibus præfatus Catholicus Rex fortem ſe facit, quòd præſentia & infra ſcripta Capitula per utraſque Majeſtates ſuas ratificabuntur, &c.

i. e. WE James de Conchillos, Biſhop of Catana, as Ambaſſador and Proctor of the King of Arragon, in his Name, and in the Name and on the part of the Emperor Maximilian, and Henry King of England his Brothers, for whom the ſaid Catholick King has engaged, that the preſent and underwritten Articles ſhall be ratify'd by both their Majeſties, &c.

Henry's League with the Pope, Emperor, &c. at Mechlin. P. 354.

16. THE Treaty of Alliance betwixt Leo X. Maximilian I. Henry VIII. and Ferdinand, concluded Apr. 5, 1513. at Mechlin.

THE Emperor and Henry were the two only ſtipulating Powers.

P. 358.

17. THE Ratification of the Treaty of Mechlin, in Ferdinand's Name, by Lewis Carroz

[a] At Weſtminſter. [b] My Lord Herbert obſerves, that this Clauſe was only to blind the Publick, becauſe certainly nothing could be further from the Pope's Thoughts than to ſet this Council upon a Reformation, either of himſelf or of the Church. That Hiſtorian ſays, that in this Council the Sentence of Excommunication was confirmed againſt the Authors of the other Council, and the Acts of it revers'd. [c] At Knoll. [d] At Burgos. FOEDERA Tom. XIII.

Carroz of Villaragud, his Ambaſſador in England; dated at London April 18, 1513. It has this Clauſe in it.

Verum quamvis mihi Catholici Regis Arragonum Oratori prædicto ſatis ampla, valida, ac ſufficiens poteſtas, ipſam ligam, una cum Oratoribus prædictis concludendi, a ſupremo Domino meo collata & tributa fuerit; tamen quibuſdam arduis cauſis præpeditus, hujuſmodi Concluſioni intereſſe non potui. Sed quoniam mihi ſatis compertum & teſtatum eſt, nihil in prædicto fœdere contineri quod præfato Domino meo non gratum aut acceptum futurum erit, nihilque magis ei cordi ſit, quam ut fœdus ipſum perfectè compleatur, Ego igitur, &c.

i. e. But altho' valid and ample Powers were given to me the Ambaſſador of the foreſaid King of Arragon, by my Sovereign Lord, to conclude the League my ſelf with the Ambaſſadors aforeſaid; and for certain weighty Reaſons I could not be preſent at the concluſion of it; yet becauſe I am very ſure that there is nothing in the ſaid League but will be grateful and acceptable to my ſaid Lord the King, and that he has nothing more at heart than that the ſame ſhould be ratified, I do therefore, &c.

The Ambaſſador's Oath for the Obſervation of the Treaty of Mechlin. P. 363.

18. THE Oath of the ſaid Ambaſſador in the Name of Ferdinand King of Arragon, and Joan Queen of Caſtille, for obſerving the Treaty of Mechlin [a].

THE Ambaſſador ſays of himſelf, that he was in hac parte ritè ordinatus, legitimè conſtitutus, & ſufficienter authorizatus, i. e. that for this purpoſe he was rightly ordained, legally conſtituted, and ſufficiently authorized.

YET for all this, his Proceeding was diſavowed by Ferdinand.

Acts relating to the Preparations for War. P. 364, to 370.

19. SEVERAL Acts relating to the Preparations for War.

20. LETTERS Patent for authorizing the Queen Regent to give Orders to the Treaſury; dated June 11, 1513 [b].

Cardinal Bambridge's Letter to K. Henry. P. 376.

21. LETTER from Cardinal Bambridge to the King; written [c] Sept. 12, 1513.

IN this Letter there is mention of a certain Brief of Julius II. committed to the keeping of the Cardinal de Sinigallia, in order to be delivered to Henry, after he has vanquiſhed the Enemies of the Church. In all appearance this was a Brief by which Julius II. transferred to Henry the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King. Cardinal Bambridge having demanded it of the Cardinal de Sinigallia, after the Battle of Guinegaſte, and the taking of Terouenne, the latter anſwered that he could not deliver it without an expreſs Order ſigned with the King's own Hand. It appears by this Letter, that there was ſome Formality wanting in the Pope's Brief, and that it was apprehended there would be a Difficulty in getting it confirmed by Leo X.

22. A Letter from the Cardinal de Sinigallia to the King, to acquaint him that according to his Order he has delivered Julius IId's Letter to Cardinal Bambridge. 'Tis dated Octob. 14, 1513 [d].

The Cardinal de Sinigallia's Letter to the K. giving him the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King. P. 379.

HE therein gives the King the Title of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, which is a Confirmation of the abovementioned Conjecture [e].

23. THE Treaty concluded at Liſle between the Emperor and Henry; dated Octob. 15, 1513.

THERE's a miſtake in the Title of this Act, where we read Carolum Imperatorem electum, inſtead of Maximilianum.

Pope's Letter exhorting King Henry to a Peace. P. 386.

24. LEO Xth's Brief to the King, exhorting him to Peace; dated Dec. 17, 1513 [f].

Another Letter to the King from the Cardinal de Sinigallia. P. 387.

25. LETTER from the Cardinal de Sinigallia to the King, to excuſe his having refuſed to deliver Julius IId's Brief to the Cardinal of York, without expreſs Order from his Majeſty; dated Dec. 20, 1513 [g].

THIS Letter being of the 20th of December, and the abovementioned from the ſame Cardinal, wherein he ſaid he had delivered that Pope's Brief, being of the 14th of October, 'tis manifeſt that the Date of one of them muſt be wrong, becauſe the firſt Letter ought to come after the laſt. I conjecture that this ought to have been dated the 20th of September, and not the 20th of December.

HOWEVER, it does not appear that Henry made any Uſe of that Brief. And probably Leo X. refuſed to confirm it.

Pope's Letter to K. Henry when he ſent him the conſecrated Cap and Sword. P. 393.

26. LEO Xth's Letter to Henry when he ſent him the Sword and Cap conſecrated upon Chriſtmas-day; dated March 1, 1514 [h].

27. THE Treaty of Truce betwixt Lewis XII. and Ferdinand, concluded at Orleans, March 14, 1514.

Peter de Quintana, Ferdinand's Ambaſſador, and authorized by the Emperor, therein comprehends the King of England, pro quo idem Sereniſſimus Imperator fortem ſe facit; i. e. for whom the ſaid moſt ſerene Emperor undertakes. 'Tis ſurprizing how Lewis XII. could be content with any more Securities of that Nature, after he had been impoſed upon in the ſame manner at the Treaty of Orthez.

Henry's Letter to Wolſey. P. 403.

28. HENRY VIIIth's Letter to Thomas Wolſey Biſhop of Lincoln, without a Date.

THIS is the Letter wherein the King gives his Miniſter an account of the Conference he had with the Duke of Longueville, when he only demanded the Annuity of 100,000 Crowns.

Lewis grants full Powers for a Treaty with him. P. 405.

29. LEWIS XIIth's Commiſſion to the Duke de Longueville, to John de Selua Chief Preſident of Roan, and to Thomas Bohier, Militi Generali [i] of France, to treat of a Peace with Henry; dated July 29, 1514 [k].

[e] The Lord Herbert, who had ſeen the original Contract of the Capitulation of Tournay, dated Sept. 23, 1513, ſays alſo that the Citizens therein gave K. Henry the Title of Roy tres-Chretien, or the moſt Chriſtian King.

FOEDERA Tom. XIII. Their Treaty of Peace. P.413. Lewis's Marriage-Treaty with Princess Mary. P.423. His Bond. P.428.

30. THE Treaty of Peace and Friendſhip between Lewis XII. and Henry VIII. dated Auguſt 7, 1514 [a].

31. THE Marriage Treaty betwixt Lewis XII. and Mary; of the ſame Date; as is alſo, 32. LEWIS XIIth's Bond for the Payment of a Million of Crowns.

INSTEAD of making the leaſt mention of the Annuity, theſe were the Foundations of the Bond.

Nos igitur Oratores prædicti ——tam pro ſumma dicti Reſti ſive Reſidui nondum ſoluti, quam pro aquitamento & redemptione Obligationis prædicti Caroli Ducis Aurelianenſis: Nec non pro ſingulari benevolentia & ſummo amore, quo Rex noſter Chriſtianiſſimus præfatum Regem Angliæ proſequitur, ac ut firmior ſit & fidelior contractæ jam inter eos amicitiæ obſervantia, nomine dicti Regis promittimus, &c.

i. e. We therefore the Ambaſſadors aforeſaid, as well for the reſidue or remainder of the ſaid Sum not yet paid, as for the Diſcharge and Redemption of the Obligation of the ſaid Charles Duke of Orleans; and alſo for the ſingular Good-will and very great Affection which our Moſt Chriſtian King beareth to the ſaid King of England, and to the end that the Obſervation of the Friendſhip now contracted between them, may be the more firm and hearty, do promiſe in the Name of the ſaid King, &c [b].

The King's Letters to Wolſey. P.439, 455.

33. MANY Acts follow, which are dependent on theſe Treaties and this Bond. And there are three Letters from Lewis XII. to Wolſey, in the two laſt of which, he calls him my good Friend of York [c].

Leo X's Letter to the King about Cardinal Hadrian. P.467.

34. LEO Xth's Letter to the King, relating to Cardinal Hadrian; dated Octob. 31, 1514 [d].

THIS Letter requires an Explanation. Cardinal Hadrian of Cornetto, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, was the Pope's Collector in England, but he got Polydore Virgil to officiate for him as Sub-Collector. Wolſey aiming at the Dignity of a Cardinal, employed Cardinal Hadrian, but he betrayed him, and did him ill Offices; for which reaſon Wolſey, in order to be revenged of him, got him turned out of his Office of Collector, and Polydore Virgil to be clap'd in the Tower [e], and he afterwards prevailed on the King to write to the Pope, to intreat him to depoſe Cardinal Hadrian: to which Letter this from the Pope was the Anſwer. The Pope therein tells him that he had condeſcended to remove the Cardinal from the Poſt of Collector, for no other reaſon but becauſe the King had deſired it, and that he would do even more for him, if it was not plain that he acted only at the Inſtigation of another, and not of his own accord.

39. AN Engagement of Michael de Abbatis, Secretary to Francis Sforza, to give Cardinal Wolſey a Penſion of 10,000 Ducats, as ſoon as his Maſter is in poſſeſſion of Milan. Penſion promis'd to Wolſey. P. 525.

THIS Piece being without Date and Subſcription, was probably no more than a Model or rough Draught.

41. COMMISSION to Robert Wingfield to treat with the Swiſſers; dated Feb. 21, 1516 [i]. With the Swiſs. P. 547.

42. TREATY of defenſive Alliance betwixt the Emperor Henry VIII. and Charles of Spain; dated Octob. 29, 1516 [k]. With the Emperor, and King of Spain. P. 556.

43. A Commiſſion from Leo X. to Nicholas Scomberg a German Cordelier, to go and treat with ſeveral Princes for a League againſt the Turks; dated the Nones of January, 1517 [l]. Pope ſollicits a League againſt the Turks. P. 578.

44. LEO Xth's Letter to acquaint him of the Conſpiracy againſt him, and of the Impriſonment of two Cardinals for the ſame; dated May 19, 1517 [m]. Conſpiracy againſt the Pope. P. 589.

45. A Grant of 3000 Livres Penſion to Cardinal Wolſey by Charles King of Spain; dated June 8, 1517 [n]. Wolſey's Penſion from the King of Spain. P. 591.

CHARLES in the ſaid Grant calls him Our moſt dear and ſpecial Friend.

THIS was in order to make War upon La Rovero, who was ſettled again at Urbino.

47. LEO Xth's circular Letter to the Biſhops of England, commanding them to raiſe His Order to the Biſhops to raiſe a Tenth upon the Engliſh Clergy. P. 596.

[a] At London. [b] Mr. Rapin after having given the Subſtance of theſe Treaties, &c. in his Hiſtory, Vol V. of the Original, makes this juſt Reflexion on the whole: "Thus, ſays he, did this War, which was undertaken, as "pretended, for the ſake of Religion, and for the Glory of God, conclude by a Treaty, in which there was not "the leaſt mention, either of Religion, or of the Pope, or of the Church." [c] The one is dated at Eſtampes, Sept. 2. 1514. the ſecond has no Date, but the third is from Paris in Sept. 1514. [d] At Rome.

[e] He ſtaid in Priſon about a Year, and it was owing purely to the Pope's Interceſſion, that he was then releas'd; which ill Treatment, Mr. Rapin thinks, was enough to make him remember all Wolſey's ill Qualities in his Hiſtory of England. raise an entire Tenth upon their Clergy, in order to help him to support the War of Urbino. 'Tis dated August 24, 1517[a]. and has these Clauses in it.

His Order to the Bishops to raise a Tenth upon the English Clergy. P. 596.

Omni Exceptione, sive Excusatione cessante, cogere & compellere eisque in virtute Sanctæ obedientiæ mandare debeas.

Quod si non succederet, quod Nobis persuadere non possumus, id potius tuâ culpâ & negligentiâ quàm aliundè eveniſſe credere cogeremur, & ad officium quod ad bonum & devotum Sedis Apostolicæ Episcopum pertinet, non sine animi nostri displicentiâ, Fraternitatem tuam defuisse cognosceremus.

i. e. You must not admit of any Exception or Excuse whatsoever, but force and compel them, after you have commanded them upon the Obedience they owe to the Holy See.

AND if this shou'd not succeed which we cannot believe, we shall be forc'd to charge it rather to your Fault and Neglect, than to any thing else, and shall be displeas'd to find you have been wanting in the Duty incumbent upon a good and devout Bishop of the Apostolical See.

Wolsey appointed Collector of the Tenths. P. 598.

48. Leo Xth's Bull, appointing Cardinal Wolsey Collector of the Tenths for the War of Urbino; dated[b] the 9th of the Calends of September 1517.

HE thereby empower'd him to excommunicate all that refus'd the Tenth, and even to deprive them of their Benefices.

Cardinal's Letter to Henry about the Croisade. P. 603.

49. A Letter from the College of Cardinals to the King about the Affair of the Croisade; dated January 8, 1518[c].

THEY represent to him, that the Turks having already destroy'd the Empire of the Mammelucs in Egypt, will infallibly fall upon Europe; that their Designs must necessarily be prevented, &c. Therefore they pray him to send some Person to Rome with a power to agree upon such Preparations as shall be thought necessary.

Wolsey made the Pope's Legate à Latere. P. 606.

50. Leo Xth's Bull, appointing Cardinal Wolsey Legate à Latere in England, jointly with Cardinal Campeggio[d]; dated[e] the 16th of the Calends of June 1518. It has this Clause viz.

Rectè scientes & meritò quidem quanta sit circumspectionis tuæ apud eundem Regem gratia & auctoritas, quid etiam tuo magno prudentive consilio, acrique ingenio rectè ac facile persuadere & dissuadere scias & possis, &c.

i. e. Knowing full well what Favour and Authority you justly have with the said King, and that such is your great Wisdom and Ingenuity, that you can easily persuade or dissuade him as you please, &c.

Cardinal Hadrian's Degradation. P. 607.

51. LETTER from the Cardinal de Medicis to the King, to acquaint him of the Degradation of Cardinal Hadrian of Cornetto: dated July 5, 1518[f].

HE wou'd fain persuade the King that the Cardinal Hadrian was depos'd purely to do him a pleasure: but Guicciardin gives us to understand that the Cardinal had been concern'd in a Conspiracy against the Pope.

Pope's extraordinary Privilege to Wolsey and his Brother Legat. P. 609.

52. THE Privilege granted by Leo X. to his two Legates, Wolsey and Campeggio; dated the 6th of the Calends of August 1518[g]. It was this, viz.

Ut toties quoties aliquis Vestrûm Missam coram eisdem Rege & Regina aut alteri ex eis, celebraverit, omnibus & singulis utriusque sexus Christi Fidelibus verè pœnitentibus & confessis, seu Propositum confitendi habentibus, & celebrationi Missæ hujusmodi, seu saltem Benedictioni super populum largiendæ interessentibus, Plenariam peccatorum suorum Remissionem & Indulgentiam relaxandi atque concedendi Auctoritate Apostolicâ Tenore Præsentium Facultatem concedimus pariter & elargimur.

i. e. That as often as either of you shall celebrate Mass before the said King and Queen, or either of them, we empower you by these Presents to grant plenary Remission of Sins and Indulgence, by the Apostolical Authority, to all and every Believer in Christ of either Sex, who is truly Penitent and has confess'd, or intends to confess, provided they are present at such Mass, or even at the Benediction of the People.

[d] Before he made his Entry into London, which was on the 29th of July, Wolsey being inform'd that he had a mean Equipage, sent him 12 Mules with Coffers, which, as Lord Herbert says, were richly cover'd, but some of them being overturn'd in Cheapside and broke, were found to be empty. Another Author of good Credit, who calls his History of England, in two Volumes 8vo, a faithful Extract from Authentick Records, approved Manuscripts, &c. says, that tho' the Coffers were as rich to all appearance, as if they contain'd half the Treasure of Rome, yet when the Lids flew open, they shew'd nothing but Old Breeches, Boots and Shoes, broken Meat, Marrow-Bones, Crusts of Bread, and the like Trumpery: which caus'd great Laughter amongst the Spectators.

[k] This Marriage was to be celebrated as soon as the Dauphin was 14 Years of Age; and each of the two Kings engag'd to pay 500,000 Crowns in case the Marriage shou'd be put off by his means.

ARTICLE II. Henry VIIIth's Affairs with Scotland.

WHEN Henry VIII. came to the Crown, he took care to renew the Peace with Scotland, as well as with other States. And afterwards, when he was perſuaded into a War with France, he us'd all the Precautions poſſible to prevent a Rupture with King James IV. his Brother-in-Law, by endeavouring to accommodate the Differences which might give any occaſion or pretext for it. But all was to no purpoſe, for it was not poſſible to hinder Scotland from aſſiſting France, from whence upon all occaſions the Scots receiv'd in in their turn powerful Protection, or elſe they would have been ſubdued by the Engliſh long before. It was a fundamental Maxim of the Policy of that Nation to adhere conſtantly to the Intereſts of France: Therefore notwithſtanding all the Care which the Kings of England took to have it inſerted in the Treaties of Peace, that it ſhould not be lawful for either of the two Kings to give aſſiſtance to the Enemies of the other; it ſeems that the Scots pretended that France was naturally out of the queſtion. At leaſt they did not think that when the King of England was the Aggreſſor, they were hindered by this Clauſe from aſſiſting their antient Ally the Kingdom of France. For this reaſon, the Deſign which Henry VIII. had formed in 1512, to make War againſt France, was no ſooner divulged, than James IV. made a League with Lewis XII. of which Henry being informed, gave Orders to the Earl of Surry, before he left England, to oppoſe the Invaſion which he had reaſon to expect from the North.

James IV's League with that Nation.

He challenges K. Henry.

HE was no ſooner gone, but the King of Scotland ſent a Herald to him, with a Challenge, dated July 16, 1513. wherein he declared War againſt him if he did not deſiſt from that which he had undertaken againſt France. Henry received this Letter while he lay before Terouenne, and being not very quick in his Anſwer, James entered England at the head of an Army, and there made himſelf Maſter of Norham. Not many days after, the Earl of Surry coming up with him, they met at Flodden-field, where on the 9th of September they joined Battle, in which the Scots Army was defeated, and the King of Scotland killed [a]. The Engliſh ſaid they found the Corpſe, and ſent it to London; but the Scots aſſerted it was not the Corpſe of their King, and yet they could not ſay what became of it, becauſe it was never ſeen afterwards. Henry wanted the Pope's Permiſſion to interr it in St. Paul's Church, becauſe the deceaſed had been excommunicated by Cardinal Bambridge Archbiſhop of York, in purſuance of a Bull of Julius II. which excommunicated all the Adherents of France.

Henry petitions the Pope for leave to bury his Corpſe in St. Paul's Church.

JAMES IV. left two Sons, the eldeſt of which being of his own Name ſucceeded him, tho' but two Years of Age, by the Title of James V. The Father had by his laſt Will and Teſtament appointed his Wife Margaret, who was Henry VIIIth's Siſter, to be Regent during the Minority of his Son, or at leaſt while ſhe remained in her ſtate of Widowhood; which, according to a Remark of Buchanan, was the firſt Inſtance that was ever known of the Regency of Scotland's being put into the hands of a Woman. Mean time the States did not oppoſe it, becauſe they hoped that Henry, out of regard to the Queen his Siſter, would not take his Advantage of Scotland, which at that time was in a very low Condition.

The Acceſſion of James V. of Scotland.

His Mother made Regent.

THE Queen being married again, not long after [b] to Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, the States diſpoſed of the Regency in favour of the Duke of Albany, who was the neareſt Relation to the young King by the Father's ſide. This Duke, who had never been in Scotland, was at that time in France, where he was born. He was Son to that Duke of Albany whom I formerly mentioned, who retiring into France, died there, and left his Family ſettled in that Country. The Nomination of this Regent being made in 1514, ſome time before the Death of Lewis XII. the ſaid Prince hindered him from going to Scotland for fear of diſobliging Henry VIII. who was diſguſted with the Scots for depriving the Queen his Siſter of the Regency, and giving it to a Prince born and bred in France, and altogether devoted to that Crown. Francis I. did as Lewis XII. had done, and retained the Duke of Albany in France, till the Treaty betwixt France and England was renewed: So that the Duke of Albany did not arrive in Scotland till the 18th of May 1515. During his abſence, Factions were formed in Scotland, which very much diſturbed the Tranquillity of that Kingdom. When the new Regent arrived there, he found that the Engliſh Party was very powerful, and that Henry concerned himſelf a little too much in the Affairs of that Kingdom, on pretence that he was the young King's Uncle. He did ſomething to prevent it, but it was not poſſible for him entirely to cruſh the Engliſh Faction, which was ſupported by the Queen Mother, and Henry VIII.

Henry aims to get the Duke of Albany removed from the Regency.

I have already taken notice of the endeavours which Henry uſed in 1516, for procuring a League againſt France, and for renewing the War. The Duke of Albany being a Thorn in his Side, becauſe, as he rightly judged, the Duke would not fail to take the part of Francis I. he attempted to deprive him of the Regency. For this end, he accuſed him of aiming at the Crown; and pretending to be very anxious for the Life of the King his Nephew, he deſired the States to nominate another Regent, or elſe he himſelf would provide for the Security of the young King. But the States returned him an Anſwer which convinced him they did not deſign to be directed by his Counſels. Mean time the Duke of Albany being willing to keep fair with him, deſired a Truce of him, and offered offered to go to England in Perſon to pay him his Devoirs. This Complaiſance, and the Difficulties Henry met with in the execution of the Project he had formed againſt France, made him conſent to a Truce with Scotland, which was afterwards prolonged to the end of the Year 1517.

His Truce with Scotland.

HENRY not being able to prevail with the States of Scotland to deprive the Duke of Albany of the Regency, found out another Expedient, in which he had better Succeſs. The Duke going to France in 1517, Henry made a ſecret Treaty with Francis I. by which Francis engaged to keep the Duke of Albany in France; and he actually hindered him from returning into Scotland. During this abſence of the Regent, Henry fomented Diviſions among the Scots, with a deſign probably to make his advantage thereof, whenever an opportunity preſented. But the War in which he was afterwards engaged, by ſiding with Charles V. againſt France, broke the Meaſures which he might have taken with reſpect to Scotland.

His ſecret Treaty with the King of France to keep the Duke of Albany from returning home.

THE Congreſs which was held at Calais in 1521, having convinced Francis I. of Henry's Partiality for the Emperor, he naturally ſuppoſed that he ſhould not be long at peace with England. Therefore he made haſte to ſend back the Duke of Albany into Scotland, who arrived at Edinburgh in October 1521, after four Months abſence. As ſoon as he came thither, he took all the meaſures poſſible to humble the Engliſh Faction, and obliged Earl Douglas, who was the Queen's Huſband, to retire to France. But notwithſtanding this, it was not in his power to do all that he wiſhed to make the French Party ſuperior to the Engliſh.

The Duke's Return to Scotland.

He forces the E. of Angus to retire to France.

HENRY being very ſenſible what the King of France had in view when he ſent back the Duke of Albany to Scotland, wrote a Letter to the States of the Realm, which was full of Invectives againſt the Regent; and threaten'd them with a War if they did not expel him the Kingdom; and he actually ſent a Herald to the Duke with a Summons to retire. The Regent returned a very modeſt Anſwer to the King of England's Charge againſt him: but the States gave him an Anſwer that was more ſmart, in which they told him in plain Terms, that he himſelf was the only Author of the Troubles in Scotland.

Henry ſummons the Duke to depart the Kingdom.

His and the States of Scotland's Anſwer.

IF the Duke of Albany had never ſo good an intention to ſerve France, it was not in his power. He raiſed an Army indeed, and actually carried it to the Frontiers. But when they were debating about their entrance into England, he was on a ſudden abandoned by a great part of the Nobility, who refuſed to accompany him any further. For this reaſon he propoſed a Truce to the Engliſh, to which Henry readily conſented, becauſe a Diverſion from Scotland could not but be very troubleſome to him: And when the Truce was renewed, the Duke of Albany returned to Francis I.

HENRY VIII.

He returns to the French Court.

AS for the Acts relating to Scotland, we find none in the Fœdera from the Year 1509 to 1513, but Safe-Conducts for the Ambaſſadors of Scotland, and Commiſſions to negotiate with James IV. without any particular Treaty. The chief Acts that follow in the Year 1513, &c. are,

1. HENRY's Anſwer to the King of Scotland's Charter of Defiance; dated in the Camp before Terouenne, Aug. 12, 1513.

Henry's Anſwer to the King of Scotland's Challenge. P. 382.

THIS Anſwer is very ſharp; Henry tells the King of Scotland, "That he is not "ſurprized at his Inſincerity, becauſe in "this he has only copied after his Pre"deceſſors, who never kept Faith and "Promiſe longer than pleaſed them. He "threatens to cut off all Hopes from him "and his Poſterity of ever ſucceeding to "the Crown of England. He ſets before "his Eyes the Example of the King of Na"varre, who for his devotion to France "loſt his Kingdom, while Lewis XII. "gave himſelf no trouble to reſtore him. "In ſhort, he tells him that he will never "forget this Affront, and hopes by the "help of God and his Patron St. George to "be revenged on him."

WHETHER the King of Scotland received this Anſwer, is uncertain; for he took the Field without ſtaying for it, and was killed about a Month after at the Battle of Floddenfield [a].

2. Leo Xth's Brief or Licence to Henry, to interr the Corpſe of the King of Scotland in St. Paul's Church London; dated [b] Nov. 29, 1513. The Pope concludes it thus:

Pope's Licence to bury the Corpſe of K. James in England. P. 385.

HENRY VIII.

Remarks on thoſe Acts.

'TIS proper to obſerve upon theſe three Acts, that tho' Henry had been eſpous'd to Catherine his Siſter-in-Law, yet by order of the King his Father, he had made a ſecret Proteſt againſt this Marriage [f]. Ferdinand cou'd not but ſee that neither Henry VII. nor the Prince his Son, were very fond of conſummating the Marriage, becauſe Henry was eighteen Years of Age at the Death of the King his Father: And as ſoon as he came to the Crown, he propos'd it to the Conſideration of his Council, whether it was proper that the Marriage, to which he had a ſecret Averſion, ſhou'd be conſummated.

Arguments in Council about Henry's Marriage with Catherine.

Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury oppos'd it to his utmoſt, ſaying it was contrary to the Law of God, and that by conſequence Julius II's Diſpenſation was null. Richard Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter maintain'd on the contrary, that the Diſpenſation was ſufficient. In this caſe one wou'd have thought Prudence ſhou'd have determin'd Henry to the ſureſt ſide of the Queſtion, namely, not to conſummate the Marriage. But Fox, who had been bred up in the School of Henry VII. the moſt covetous Prince upon Earth, alledg'd in favour of the Marriage, that if Catherine ſhould be ſent back, ſhe muſt have her Portion along with her. 'Tis very probable that it had been objected by one or other of the contrary Party, that, even tho' the Marriage ſhou'd be conſummated, a Caſe might happen when the Reſtoration of the Portion wou'd be unavoidable, becauſe Catherine might die without Iſſue. It was no doubt for this Reaſon that the Renunciation contain'd in thoſe Acts, was demanded of Catherine and Ferdinand, in order to ſtop the Mouths of ſuch as ſhou'd oppoſe the Marriage.

[c] This Book, being a Defence of the ſeven Sacraments, was ſent to the Pope richly bound; and the Lord Herbert ſays, he ſaw the Preſent itſelf in the Vatican Library at Rome. It was cried up by the Clergy as the moſt Learned Piece that ever the Sun ſhone upon; and the King was compar'd to Solomon, and to all the Chriſtian Emperors. But Luther, proud of ſuch an Antagoniſt, anſwer'd it, and treated him as much below the Reſpect due to a King, as his Flatterers had rais'd him above it.

Some think that Stephen Gardiner and Sir Thomas More had the Pains of compoſing that Book, tho' their Prince had the Honour of it. And as to the Title beſtowed on him for it by the Pope, Dr. Fuller in his Church-Hiſtory tells us, there went a Tradition, that Patch the King's Fool perceiving the King very jocund one Day, ask'd him the Reaſon; and that when the King told him it was becauſe he had an Honour conferr'd on him more than any of his Anceſtors, reciting the ſaid Title of Defender of the Faith, the Fool made this arch Reply, Prithee good Harry, let Thee and I defend one another, and let the FAITH alone to defend itſelf. Tho' Henry was fonder of this than all his other Titles, yet Spelman has remark'd, that ſeveral of the former Kings of England bore the ſame Title. [e] Mr. Rapin obſerves in his other Hiſtory, that it was no wonder that Chriſtiern was receiv'd by Henry more like a Prince under Oppreſſion, than a barbarous Tyrant as he was, becauſe his Queen was Siſter to the Emperor, by whoſe Intereſt Wolſey hoped to be advanc'd to the Papal Dignity. THERE are many other Acts of ſome importance to Hiſtory, which for brevity ſake we are oblig'd to paſs over, and ſhall proceed now to give an account of the XIVth Tome of Mr. Rymer's Fœdera.

THE Fourteenth Tome takes in the Acts of this Reign for twenty Years, viz. from July 1523, to July 1543 *.

HAVING divided my Account of the Acts of this Reign into ſeveral Stages, I take no more than four Years and a half into this, as well becauſe of the abundance of Matter, and the Importance of the Events which happen'd during that time, as becauſe if I went further, I ſhou'd be oblig'd to enter into the Affair of Henry VIIIth's Divorce, and leave it imperfect, or elſe run it out to an extraordinary length. In theſe four Years, which are fruitful of great Events, the only Article to be conſider'd, properly ſpeaking, is Foreign Affairs; I mean the Quarrel againſt Charles V. and Francis I. into which Henry VIII. could not avoid entring. The Affairs of England with Scotland, tho' of no great Importance, will indeed make a ſeparate Article for the ſake of preſerving the Thread of the Hiſtory: But as to Domeſtick Affairs, we find nothing remarkable enough in the Acts of theſe four Years and half to deſerve a particular Article, nor indeed have they much Connection with one another.

1. Foreign Affairs.

THO' Cardinal Wolſey had no reaſon to like the Emperor upon account of the Pontificate, of which that Prince had given him great Hopes, but procur'd it for another; he did not think fit to be reveng'd of him, nor ſo much as to ſhew his Reſentment for it. On the contrary, he thought it his Intereſt to adhere the cloſer to him, becauſe he had learnt by Experience how powerful his Party was in the Conclave. The great Age and Infirmities of Pope Adrian VI. gave him hopes that the Papal See wou'd quickly be vacant. Therefore it was for his advantage not only to have ſuch a Friend as the Emperor, but alſo to ſtrengthen his hands; ſo that when the See became vacant, he might have it in his power to give law to the Cardinals. Theſe were probably the Motives which determin'd Wolſey to favour the Emperor's Deſigns, and to inſpire the King his Maſter with a Reſolution to ruin France. The Pretext was the great Danger that Francis I. wou'd become too powerful, if he ſhou'd accompliſh his Deſigns in Italy; as if Europe wou'd have been in leſs danger from the too great Power of the Emperor. 'Tis certain that this Miniſter did whatever he pleas'd with the King his Maſter; and that of this, not only the Engliſh, but all the Princes of Europe were thoroughly convinc'd, as we have ſeen from a Bull of Leo X. and a Letter from the Doge of Venice already mention'd.

HENRY VIII.

THE Aim of the Emperor, and of Henry, was to ruin France by the means of the Conſtable de Bourbon, who made them hope for Wonders from the Correſpondence, and the great Credit which he had in the Kingdom. The Conjuncture was as favourable as they cou'd wiſh. Francis I. big with a Deſign to recover the Dutchy of Milan, was preparing to paſs into Italy with a numerous Army conſiſting of his beſt Troops. This made it eaſy for his Enemies to attack his King-

Duke of Bourbon's Revolt.

* It cannot have a better Introduction than Mr. Rymer's Dedication of it to the Queen, as follows.

Moſt Excellent Sovereign,

" In this Tome you give the World a View of what was tranſacted within the Compaſs of twenty Years, " from the 15th to the 35th of HENRY VIII. your Majeſty's Predeceſſor of moſt Noble Memory.

" Nothing of publick Affairs in Europe, Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, were tranſacted without his Countenance or " Direction. His Title, Defender of the Faith, is repeated and confirm'd to him with the higheſt Applauſe, and " in a moſt ſolemn Manner.

" And now it is that he caſts a particular Eye on his two Univerſities, Cambridge and Oxford: Schools and " Colleges are every where, for the Advancement of Learning, founded and endowed; and with the utmoſt " Application they proceed to improve and cultivate the liberal Sciences and good Literature.

" Now it is that we hear of the Hebrew Lectures, and the Linacre Lectures; now is our Holy Bible printed in " Engliſh, as are alſo the Grayle, the Antiphoner, the Hymptual, the Portans, and the other Books for Divine " Service of the Uſe of Sarum: And to ſet the Church in a clearer Light, inſtead of the ill-digeſted rude Oeco- " nomy of former Times, inſtead of white Friars, black Friars, and grey Friars, now have our Clergy an uniform " decent Garb, wear a new Face, grow refin'd, and act a more polite Part in Converſation.

" And now for their greater Dignity, Luſtre, and Authority, New Churches, Cathedral Churches are appointed " all over the Realm; and we have ſo many Biſhop-Suffragans, together with their Deans, Archdeacons, Preben- " daries, and their other Subalterns.

" Now it is that we have a Biſhop of Oxford, a Biſhop of Briſtol, Biſhops of Peterborough, Taunton, Colcheſter, " Ipſwich, Glouceſter, Shaftesbury, Hull, Bedford, Penryth, Thetford, Cheſter; Suffragan-Biſhops up from Berwick " upon Tweed, to the Biſhop of Weſtminſter.

" Furthermore, if a deſerving Perſon came in the way, when no Cathedral vacant, there wanted not for him " Pluralities and Incompatibilities that amount to an Equivalent.

" Nor was the Building of Churches his only Glory. He had his ſhare in the Secular Occurrences of his Time; " he held the Balance of Power in his Hand, and the Scale turn'd according to his Direction. He was declared " Protector of Leagues, and no Confederacy was firm without him. " To which ſoever Party he joins, Succeſs and Victory go along with them: If he ſides with the French, the " Imperial Armies are defeated; when he ſides with the Emperor, King Francis in the Field of Battle is made " Priſoner. In other Expeditions, ſome good French Towns and Territories remain to the Engliſh.

" Thus proceeded the Reign of King Henry VIII. as appears in the Courſe of this Tome, which ends with " the moſt joyful Proſpect of uniting your two Kingdoms, England and Scotland, by the means of a Marriage " for the King's only Son Prince Edward, with the young Queen of Scotland. The Conſtable was to act in Burgundy, aſſiſted by all his Friends, and by all the Malecontents in the Kingdom, beſides ſeven or eight thouſand Men that the Emperor ſent in ſmall Bodies to the Franche Compte, which were to be under the Command of the Count de Furſtemberg. Henry was to ſend an Army into Picardy to join that which the Emperor had promis'd to have on foot in thoſe Parts, under the Command of the Count de Bure: and at the ſame time Charles was to cauſe Bayonne and Fontarabia to be attack'd. But for fear that their too early Preparations wou'd give Umbrage to Francis I. and oblige him to ſtay in his Kingdom, and defer his Expedition to Italy, they agreed not to begin to act all three together, till the Month of September, the very time, when the Pope and the Venetians, who were juſt enter'd into the League, wou'd in all probability have given him the moſt Diſturbance.

Their Miſcarriage, and the Duke of Bourbon's Flight.

THE Conſtable's Conſpiracy was diſcover'd, and the Duke himſelf oblig'd to loſe no time in his Eſcape; and conſequently the great Projects of the Allies vaniſh'd into Smoke, or at leaſt fell far ſhort of the Succeſs they expected. Nevertheleſs the Spaniards made themſelves Maſters of Fontarabia, thro' the Cowardice of the Governour. But the Count de Furſtemberg, who had made an Incurſion into Champagne, was drove out again by the Duke of Guiſe, who purſu'd him even as far as Lorrain, where he overtook and defeated him. The Count de Bure and the Duke of Suffolk enter'd Picardy very late, and were forc'd to retreat before they had made any conſiderable Progreſs, by the Dukes de Vendome and de la Tremouille, who commanded in that Country.

Fontarabia taken by the Spaniards.

Count de Furſtemberg defeated by the Duke of Guiſe.

The Duke of Suffolk forc'd to retreat from Picardy.

The Campaign in Italy.

THIS Year's Campaign in Italy wou'd have been very fatal to the Emperor, if the Admiral de Bonnivet, to whom Francis had given the command of his Army, had improv'd his advantages, or if he had been oppos'd by a General of leſs Experience than Proſper Colonna, who broke all his Meaſures. This Proſper dying not long after, the Emperor ſent the Duke de Bourbon into Italy to command his Troops there.

Pope Adrian's Death.

POPE Adrian VI. died in September, without having been let into the Deſigns of the Emperor and Henry, who had only made him believe, by his Miniſter who was in their Intereſt, that his entring into the League was an infallible means to oblige the King of France to conſent to the Truce of three Years, which he had ſtiffly refus'd. Adrian's Succeſſor was the ſame Cardinal de Medicis, who was ſupported by the Imperial Faction, and aſſum'd the Name of Clement VII. which was matter of great Mortification to Cardinal Wolſey, who having flatter'd himſelf that the Emperor wou'd uſe all his Intereſt to make him Pope, now ſaw that this pretended Friend had no ſuch thing in View. But he conceal'd his Reſentment, that he might the more ſurely work his Revenge.

His Succeſſor Clement VII.

THE Death of Adrian VI. and the Election of Clement VII. put the Imperialiſts in Italy into a ſtrange Confuſion. In 1524, very ſoon after the Pope's Death, the Troops of the Church quitted the Army of the Allies, and Clement VII. was no ſooner elected than he recall'd thoſe of Florence, and declar'd openly that he wou'd be Neuter, tho' it was he who had engag'd his Predeceſſor to join with the Allies againſt France. By this means the Imperial Army was not only weaken'd in number of Troops, but principally by the want of Money, which was no longer furniſh'd by Rome and Florence. But tho' in publick the Pope made a mighty Noiſe of his Neutrality, yet in ſecret he ſupply'd the Duke of Bourbon with 20,000 Ducats, and conſented that the Florentines ſhou'd give him a Remittance of 50,000.

But ſecretly ſupplys the Duke of Bourbon.

WITH theſe Succours, and a Reinforcement of 10,000 Landſqnenets (or German Foot Soldiers) which arriv'd very à propos at Milan, the Duke of Bourbon took the Field, and joining the Venetians, commanded by the Duke of Urbino, he drew near to the French Army, which was very much weaken'd, Francis I. having paid them no Money ever ſince their entrance into Italy. In this ſad plight, Bonnivet reſolv'd to go and give battle to the Allies, but the two Generals did not think fit to run any hazard. They knew what a condition the Admiral was in, and did not doubt but he wou'd ſoon be forc'd to abandon the Milaneſe, which happen'd accordingly; for Bonnivet not being able to fight, nor to ſubſiſt his Army after the Allies came ſo near him, reſolv'd at laſt to make the beſt Retreat he cou'd, and to repaſs the Mountains.

The French abandon Italy.

THE French had no ſooner left Italy, than the Emperor and Henry form'd new Projects. After having happily defended the Duchy of Milan, the Emperor reſolv'd to cauſe Provence to be invaded by the Duke of Bourbon, with an Army, for the Maintenance whereof Henry promis'd to pay 100,000 Crowns per Month, but reſerv'd to himſelf the Liberty of paying only the firſt Month, if he found it more convenient to make a powerful Diverſion in Picardy, by acting there in his own Perſon.

Deſigns of the Emperor and Henry againſt France.

ACCORDING to this Project, the Duke of Bourbon march'd towards Provence, but was not near ſo ſtrong as he expected. The Venetians, who only engag'd in the League for Defence of the Duchy of Milan, wou'd not be concern'd in the Expedition; and the Emperor was oblig'd to leave part of his

Duke of Bourbon marches into Provence.

The French abandon Italy.

THE French had no ſooner left Italy, than the Emperor and Henry form'd new Projects. After having happily defended the Duchy of Milan, the Emperor reſolv'd to cauſe Provence to be invaded by the Duke of Bourbon, with an Army, for the Maintenance whereof Henry promis'd to pay 100,000 Crowns per Month, but reſerv'd to himſelf the Liberty of paying only the firſt Month, if he found it more convenient to make a powerful Diverſion in Picardy, by acting there in his own Perſon.

Deſigns of the Emperor and Henry againſt France.

ACCORDING to this Project, the Duke of Bourbon march'd towards Provence, but was not near ſo ſtrong as he expected. The Venetians, who only engag'd in the League for Defence of the Duchy of Milan, wou'd not be concern'd in the Expedition; and the Emperor was oblig'd to leave part of his Troops

Troops in Italy, under Command of Lanoy Viceroy of Naples, for the Guard of that Country: ſo that the Duke of Bourbon's Army did not exceed 16,000 Men.

HENRY VIII.

AT the firſt News of the March of the Imperialiſts, Francis I. iſſued ſuch good Orders, that the City of Marſeilles was immediately furniſh'd with a good Garriſon, and every thing neceſſary for a long and vigorous Defence. Mean time he aſſembled an Army of 40,000 Men at Avignon, who were in a condition to act, before the Duke of Bourbon, then taken up with the Siege of Marſeilles, had made any conſiderable Progreſs. This was the reaſon that the Duke fearing to be attack'd, reſolv'd to return to Italy. He rais'd the Siege therefore with ſome Precipitation, and march'd back towards Milan. Francis finding himſelf at the head of an Army very ſuperior to his Enemy, reſolv'd to improve the advantage, in order to recover the Duchy of Milan. As the Duke of Bourbon went the fartheſt way about, the King did not think of purſuing him, but march'd a nearer Road to Milan, in hopes of being there before him. The two Armies marching thither with extraordinary Diligence, arriv'd in the Milaneſe much about the ſame time, tho' by different ways. The Duke of Bourbon went to join Lanoy at Pavia, and Francis having made himſelf Maſter of the Town of Milan, left Trivulce there with a Body of Troops to beſiege the Caſtle, and then march'd in purſuit of his Enemy, who retir'd as he advanc'd, and gave him the opportunity of beſieging Pavia. He ſat down before it on the 28th of October.

He arrives in the Milaneſe one way, and the King of France another.

The Imperialiſts abandon the Milaneſe to the French, who beſiege Pavia.

WHILE the Imperial Army was in Provence, Cardinal Wolſey having a Pique againſt the Emperor, put Maxims into the head of the King his Maſter, which were quite the reverſe to thoſe that he had purſued hitherto, and inclin'd him to break with the Emperor. So that Henry being directed by his Miniſter, not only paid but one Month of the Subſidy which he had promis'd, and made no Diverſion in Picardy, but even demanded of the Emperor the Payment of thoſe Sums which he had lent him when he was in England. All this gave the Emperor ſuſpicions which were but too well founded, becauſe Wolſey was diſguſted. We ſhall preſently ſee what were the Effects of his Diſguſt, but we muſt firſt relate what paſs'd in Italy.

Henry begins to fall out with the Emperor.

THE arrival of Francis I. in the Milaneſe, with a formidable Army, put the Duke of Bourbon, and the Viceroy of Naples into very great Confuſion. They were abandon'd by the Pope, the Florentines and the Venetians; their Army was far inferior to his, and they had no Money to pay it. In this Extremity their only Hopes were in the length of the Siege of Pavia, which was like to laſt long enough to give time to take other Meaſures. This Siege was undertaken in the beginning of the Winter, and they had great Expectations from the Valour and Experience of Anthony de Leve who commanded in the place. They reſolv'd therefore to improve this opportunity by ſending for Troops from Germany, and the Duke of Bourbon went himſelf into that Country to haſten the Levies as much as poſſible.

CLEMENT VII. was every whit as much embarraſs'd as the Emperor's Generals. Francis I. was not ignorant how this Pontiff ſtood affected, while he was Cardinal and Prime Miniſter to Adrian VI. and there was no very great Appearance that his Sentiments or Inclination were alter'd ſince he was become Pope. The Step he took in procuring Money for the Duke of Bourbon, was a plain Token which way he was inclin'd. Conſequently the King of France's Arrival in the Milaneſe, and the proſpect there was that he wou'd make himſelf Maſter of the intire Duchy, having given the Pope a juſt Apprehenſion of ſeeing himſelf expos'd to the Reſentment of that Monarch, he thought it his beſt Courſe to prevent it, by falling in with his Intereſt. Therefore, after he had, for Form ſake, ſent a Nuncio to the two Armies to exhort them to Peace, he made a Treaty with Francis, by which he engag'd not to diſturb him either in the Conqueſt, or in the Poſſeſſion of the Milaneſe. Beſides this Treaty which was made publick, and at which the Emperor was very much incens'd, he concluded another ſecret Treaty to make the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Naples the more eaſy for Francis I. by giving paſſage for the Army of France, which was deſign'd for that Expedition, thro' the Territories of Florence and the Church. This Treaty being ſign'd, Francis ſent a Detachment from his Army under Command of the Duke of Albany to attack the Kingdom of Naples. But he order'd the Duke to halt in Tuſcany for 2000 Men, which were to be brought from Provence, by Renzo de Ceri, who had defended Marſeilles.

Duke of Albany ſent with Forces to attack Naples.

Some time after, Renzo de Ceri coming from Marſeilles to join the Duke of Albany, found means in his Paſſage to make himſelf Maſter of Savona; which was the reaſon that Francis ſent another Detachment under the Marquis de Saluces, to poſt himſelf at Savona, with a view to facilitate the Conqueſt of Genoa. The three Detachments which the King had made, the one for the Caſtle of Milan, another for Naples, and the third for Savona, the Severity of the Seaſon, and the Inconveniences of the Siege, ſo weaken'd the Army of France, that the Imperialiſts began to have better hopes of their Affairs, which Hopes were augmented by the Arrival of the Duke of Bourbon, who in the beginning of the Year 1525, brought them them a Reinforcement of 10,000 Men. The Battle of Pavia is ſo well known, that 'tis needleſs to enter into the Particulars of it, farther than juſt to take notice that the Imperialiſts attack'd the Army of France, that this Army was routed, and that the King himſelf was taken Priſoner.

Battle of Pavia, in which the King of France is taken Priſoner.

THIS unexpected Event changed the face of Affairs in a moment, eſpecially in Italy, which was never in ſo great danger of falling under the Dominion of the Emperor. The Venetians, who foreſaw what would be the Conſequences of the Victory of Charles, and of the King of France's being his Priſoner, propoſed immediately to make a League with the Pope, France and England againſt the Emperor. But Clement VII. had ſo lately put a groſs Affront upon the Emperor, that he was afraid to take this Step, and choſe rather to treat for his own part with the Viceroy of Naples, who acted in the Emperor's Name. In order to hinder the Pope from entring into the League propoſed to him, the Viceroy made no difficulty to engage the Emperor to reſtore the Duchy of Milan to Francis Sforza, tho' he was very ſenſible that his Maſter had no ſuch Intention. But this was the only way to defeat the Project of the League, becauſe the Reſtoration of Sforza to Milan was the Baſis of the Liberty of Italy, which could not be ſecured as long as the Emperor remained in poſſeſſion of that Duchy. By this Treaty, which could have no effect till the Emperor had ratified it, the Viceroy baffled the Meaſures which the Venetians were going to take, and made Venice, France and England all ſo jealous of the Pope, that there was no room to imagine that theſe Powers would truſt him long. This was the reaſon that the Emperor's Generals, who wanted Money to pay their Troops, made no ſcruple to disband great part of them; the rather becauſe Trivulce, who had beſieged the Caſtle of Milan, was already returned over the Mountains, and that the Duke of Albany was alſo marched back into France by another Road.

Venetians Propoſal of a League againſt the Emperor.

Pope treats with him.

Emperor's Generals diſband their Forces.

As the Hiſtory of that time is very well known, I ſhall only give the Subſtance of what is moſt neceſſary for underſtanding the Acts in this XIVth Tome of the Fœdera.

THE Emperor offered his Priſoner to ſet him at liberty, on certain Conditions, of which the principal Articles were, that he ſhould reſtore the Duchy of Burgundy to him, which Lewis XI. had taken from Mary his Grandmother; that he ſhould reſtore the Duke of Bourbon to all his Dominions, and give him Provence and Dauphiny; and that of all theſe together, a Kingdom ſhould be formed for the Duke, independent on the Crown of France. We ſhall not inquire here whether the Emperor had a right to demand Burgundy, and whether this Duchy lawfully belonged to the King of France. But as to the ſecond Condition, it was certainly unjuſt and intolerable, and probably it was only added to quaſh the firſt.

Emperor's Offers to the K. of France for his Liberty, which he rejects.

HOWEVER that be, Francis was very far from accepting thoſe Offers, and made other Propoſals in his turn, viz. To marry Eleanor the Queen Dowager of Portugal, Siſter to the Emperor: To hold the Duchy of Burgundy in the nature of her Portion, and to render it Hereditary to the Children that ſhould be born of that Marriage: To reſtore the Duke of Bourbon to his Dominions, and to give him his Siſter the Ducheſs of Alençon in Marriage: To give the ſame Sum for his Ranſom, that King John did when he was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh; and laſtly to pay the King of England all that was due to him from the Emperor.

K. of France's Counter-Offers to the Emperor, which he alſo rejects.

IF Charles had been inclined to a Peace, one would have thought theſe Conditions good enough to have ſatisfied him, but being reſolved to have Burgundy, that was the Article which could not be got over. After this, Francis I. was carried into Spain, where the Negotiations of Peace were continued for ſome time, tho' to no purpoſe.

Francis I. carried to Spain.

MEAN while, the Pope, who by his Treaty with Lanoy, thought he had taken ſufficient Care of his own Affairs, and of the Security of Italy, was quite out in his Reckoning. The Emperor pretending to approve of this Treaty, ſent a Ratification of it, wherein he made no mention of three ſeparate Articles which related to the private Intereſts of the Pope. On the other hand, when he ſent the Inveſtiture of the Duchy of Milan to Francis Sforza, he tacked a Condition to it which rendered it of no effect; namely, that before he renewed the Inveſtiture, Sforza ſhould pay him 1200,000 Ducats: A Sum which 'twas impoſſible for him to raiſe. The Pope having rejected this imperfect Ratification, continued in the ſame Terms with the Emperor as he was before he had treated with him. But the Emperor gained a conſiderable Point, becauſe he had hindered that League. The Venetians being thorowly ſenſible that the Emperor's Deſign was to keep Milan, or to grant the Inveſtiture of it to the Archduke Ferdinand his Brother, laid hold on that Opportunity to renew their Inſtances to the Pope, with reſpect to the League which they had propoſed at firſt. Clement VII. with that Craft which was ſo natural to him, pretended to hearken to them; but at the ſame time that he was negotiating at Rome with the Venetians, he under another pretence, tence, ſent a Legate into Spain to renew his Treaty with the Emperor.

The Emperor lays a Snare for Sforza to ſtrip him of the Milaneſe.

DURING this, the Emperor perceiving that the Powers of Italy were obſtinately bent on demanding the Reſtoration of Sforza, thought of an Expedient, which was to contrive a plauſible Pretext to refuſe it. The Duke of Bourbon being gone to Madrid, the Marquis de Peſcaire who commanded in the Milaneſe, pretended to be very much diſguſted with the Emperor, and to ſeek means to be revenged on him. He acted his part ſo well, that he engaged Sforza, the Queen Regent of France, the Pope and the Venetians in a Conſpiracy, the aim of which was to make himſelf King of Naples, and to eſtabliſh Sforza at Milan, after having cut the Throats of all the Spaniards in that Duchy. When the Emperor had got proofs enough in his hand to ſhew that Sforza was entered into the Conſpiracy, he ſent an Order to Peſcaire to turn him out of every Foot of Land in the Milaneſe; which Order was ſo punctually executed, that Sforza had nothing left but the Caſtle of Milan, where he was actually beſieged. After that time, whenever the Emperor was preſſed to the Reſtoration of Sforza, he made anſwer, that he would reſtore him when he had once purged himſelf of the felonious Crime laid to his charge.

THE Emperor's Artifice doubled the Diligence of the Venetians. They told the Spaniſh Ambaſſador in plain Terms, that they would run all hazards rather than ſuffer his Maſter to remain in poſſeſſion of Milan. Clement VII. did not act with the ſame Reſolution; he amuſed France and the Senate of Venice, in hopes that they would conſent to the League propoſed; but this was only till News came of the Concluſion of the Treaty which he had been negotiating in Spain. At laſt, his Legate having ſent him word that the Treaty was ſigned, without acquainting him with any of the Particulars, he broke off his Negotiations with Venice. But when the Treaty came to Rome, it was full of ſuch Ambiguities, that the Pope abſolutely refuſed to ratify it. Hereupon the Spaniſh Ambaſſador whoſe ſole Aim was to hinder him from joining with the Venetians, played him a Trick which he did not expect. He pretended to be very much ſurprized himſelf to find ſo many double Entendres in the Treaty, and laying the Blame of it upon the Secretary who drew it up, he adviſed the Pope to get it drawn up himſelf in what Terms he thought proper, and ſaid that he would engage to put it into his hand in two Months time, ratified by the Emperor. The Pope was catched in the Snare, and during thoſe two Months he durſt not renew his Negotiations with France and Venice, which was the very thing that the Emperor wanted, in order to break off the Negotiation, or at leaſt to put off the Concluſion of the League as long as poſſible.

The Pope trick'd by the Ambaſſador of Spain.

HENRY VIII.

WE muſt now ſee what part Henry VIII. acted in all theſe Affairs.

WHEN Francis I. was taken Priſoner at Pavia, Henry was at War with him, and in Alliance with the Emperor; but as I have already ſaid, he began to be diſguſted with his Ally, not ſo much upon his own account as his Miniſter's. After the Diſaſter that had happened to France, he was not a little confounded which of the two Parties to join with. There was an abſolute Neceſſity of his coming to a Determination either to continue his League with the Emperor, in order to make powerful Efforts for pulling down the Power of France, which was already conſiderably ſhaken, and to appropriate great part of that Kingdom to himſelf; or elſe to ſupport that tottering Kingdom, and thereby to maintain the Balance of Europe. There were not wanting plauſible Reaſons for both theſe Alternatives, but at laſt he determined to chuſe that which was moſt juſt and honourable; and, if I may venture to give my Opinion, that which was moſt for the advantage of England. 'Tis not to be queſtioned but Wolſey preſſed him to it, in order to be revenged of the Emperor. One ſhould be apt to aſcribe it to his Zeal for the Welfare of his Maſter and the Nation, if his Conduct during all the time of his Miniſtry, did not make it ſhrewdly ſuſpected whether he ever acted from ſuch a Motive.

Henry determines to break with the Emperor.

HENRY having taken a Reſolution to break with the Emperor, ſent the Biſhop of London, and Sir Robert Wingfield, to him, to make certain Demands of him, which he well knew that Prince would not grant. Among other things he pretended, by virtue of an Article in the Windſor Treaty, which he explained after his own manner, that the Emperor was obliged to put the Captive King into his hands. The Emperor returning only a general Anſwer to all the demands, Henry took occaſion from thence to treat openly with France, and acquainted the Regent who was Mother to the Captive King, that if ſhe would pleaſe to ſend her Ambaſſadors to him, they ſhould be welcome. It muſt be obſerved, that at the time when Francis I. was marching for Italy, the Regent ſent a Man into England, who had long Conferences with Cardinal Wolſey, and 'tis not improbable that Henry enter'd into ſome Engagements with France at that very time. Whether it was ſo or not, the Regent ſent two Ambaſſadors to England, of whom one was the ſame Perſon that had conferred with the Cardinal formerly.

Treats with France.

THE Ambaſſadors in an occaſion ſo extraordinary as this was, having no pains to take take to bring over Henry to the Interests of France, left him, as one may say, Charte blanche, and signed several Treaties at the King's Palace at Moore, on the 30th of August, in which it must be owned that Henry treated the French with uncommon Generosity. Though he might have demanded Places, one may say Provinces, as a Præmium for his Alliance; yet he was content with a new Treaty for securing the Sums due to him by the foregoing Treaties, as one may be easily convinc'd by comparing them together. As soon as Charles V. was inform'd of the Treaty of Moore, he recall'd his Ambassador from London, and Henry sent the like Message to his Ministers at Madrid.

Treaty of Moore.

Henry's Generosity to France.

Charles and Henry recall their Ambassadors.

'TILL the Year 1526, the Emperor had gain'd considerably by his Negotiations with France, and the Italian Powers, because it lay in his power to divide his Enemies whenever he thought fit. By yielding Burgundy to France, he was in a manner sure that Francis I. wou'd abandon Italy to him; and by his establishing Sforza at Milan, he cou'd not doubt but the Pope and the Venetians wou'd be easy, and abandon France to his Arms. But the Treaty of Moore made a great Alteration in his Affairs.

THE King of France, who was soon inform'd of it, kept much more upon the reserve than he had been hitherto, and the Pope being disgusted with the Emperor, because in a second Ratification of the Treaty concluded in Spain, he had left the Restoration of Sforza uncertain, sent him word in plain Terms, that without that Article it was in vain to hope for Peace. The Emperor therefore had reason to fear, that all those Powers wou'd at length reunite against him, after he had so long trifled with them; and this made him resolve at last to conclude a Treaty either with the Pope, or with France. While he was pausing which to chuse, Francis I. weary of his long Imprisonment, determin'd at last to restore Burgundy to him, or at least to pretend that the present State of his Affairs forc'd him to such a mortifying Resignation. This produc'd a Treaty which was sign'd at Madrid the 14th of January 1526; but, for what Reason I know not, is inserted in this XIVth Tome of the Fœdera, among the Acts of the Year 1529. By this Treaty Francis I. recover'd his liberty, leaving his two eldest Sons as Hostages in the Emperor's hands, and engaging expressly to return to his Prison if he fail'd in the performance of the Treaty.

Pope will not hear of any Terms of Peace without the Restoration of Sforza.

Francis I. set at liberty by the Treaty of Madrid. P. 308.

'TIS hardly to be doubted that Francis when he sign'd this Treaty, resolv'd to break it when he was at liberty. All the steps he took from the moment he got loose, made it very evident, and the Pope and Venetians had not the least doubt of it, as we shall see hereafter. Mean time the Emperor, having as yet no suspicion upon this Head, had no sooner sign'd the Peace with France, than he broke off the Negotiations with the Pope, and publickly refus'd Sforza the Investiture of Milan.

WHAT the Pope and Venetians imagin'd, came to pass. Francis I. was no sooner return'd home, but he ratified the Treaty of Moore, and refus'd to ratify that of Madrid, alledging to the Viceroy of Naples, who had accompany'd him into France, several Excuses which were the Forerunners of a formal and absolute Refusal. Not long after this, while he was at Cognac, he receiv'd Ambassadors from the Pope and the Venetians, who came to propose a League to him against the Emperor. He made no scruple to sign this League on the 17th of May, but he was not willing it shou'd be publish'd before he had receiv'd an Answer from the Emperor, to whom he had made certain Offers, and particularly a Sum of two Millions of Gold, as an Equivalent for the Dutchy of Burgundy. The Emperor having rejected these Offers, the League was publish'd at Cognac on the 18th of June.

His Return to his Kingdom.

He signs a League against the Emperor at Cognac.

His Offer to the Emperor of an Equivalent for Burgundy.

THE Conduct of Francis I. broke all the Measures of the Emperor, who by making a Peace with France, had hopes of becoming Master of all Italy. Instead of that, he had let go his Prisoner, and was to stand the shock of the League that was form'd against him. Yet for all this, his Condition was not so bad as it seem'd to be. Francis I. had no real Design to force him to restore his Children to him by Arms; his only View was to intimidate him, and to make him believe that France, England, the Pope, and the Venetians were going to join their strongest Efforts to oblige him to make an equitable Peace. But when the Emperor was inclin'd to hearken to Reason, Francis was always for dropping his Allies. This was the reason that for a very long time, he was exceeding cautious, lest he shou'd exasperate this formidable Enemy still more by Efforts too vigorous, whereas his Intention was always to conclude the Affair in question by a Treaty. Probably he had imparted his Design to the King of England, because Henry's Conduct was still the same. These two Monarchs always threaten'd the Emperor, and they concluded several Treaties together, to make him believe that they were just going to unite all their Forces to attack him. But among these first Treaties there is not so much as one for a League offensive.

His aim to frighten the Emperor.

THE Pope and the Venetians were the Dupes of these two Princes. Being deceiv'd with their fair Speeches, which made them hope for great matters from the Union of their Forces, they were the first that took Arms, in hopes of saving the Castle of Milan, then reduc'd to the last Extremity; but they cou'd not succeed, for which Guicciardin blames blames the Duke of Urbino, who commanded the joint Army of the two Allies; and who, says he, betray'd the common Cause, for fear that if the Pope shou'd effect his purpose of driving the Emperor out of all Italy, he wou'd also take away his Duchy of Urbino, of which he recover'd Possession, after the Death of Leo X. As soon as the Pope and the Venetians were thus embark'd in War, the two Kings let them alone to act in the Milanese, without caring how things went there, just to amuse them, and frighten the Emperor. Francis did not send the Emperor the Money he promis'd to pay the Army, and only kept a Body of Italians on foot there, under Command of the Marquis de Saluces.

The Duke of Urbino's Treachery.

The Duke of Bourbon being return'd in the mean time to Milan, found the Imperial Army there very much weaken'd, and in great want of Money, so that he was oblig'd to raise Contributions on the Inhabitants, in order to save them from the Plunder with which the Army threaten'd them. Guicciardin says, that if the Duke of Urbino had improv'd his Advantages, he was so superior to the Duke of Bourbon, that he might have drove him out of Milan, but he contented himself with keeping the City block'd up. For this very Reason, the Emperor, in order to recover the Superiority in Italy, caus'd 14,000 Men to be rais'd in Germany, which the Baron de Frondsperg was to command, and carry to the relief of the Duke of Bourbon.

Emperor raises Succours for the Duke of Bourbon.

DURING this, Hugh de Moncade, who commanded in Naples in the Viceroy's Absence, and the Duke of Sessa the Spanish Ambassador at Rome, did the Emperor very important Service, by stirring up the Colonnas, who were the Pope's Enemies, to enter the Territories of the Church with an armed Force. Clement VII. resenting this, order'd the Duke of Urbino, with the Consent of the Venetians, to bring the Confederate Army from the Milanese to Rome, in order to make an Incursion into the Kingdom of Naples. But the Emperor's two Ministers found means to ward off this Blow, by obliging the Colonnas to give the Pope all the Satisfaction that he cou'd desire; and the Duke of Urbino was countermanded.

The Colonna's make War upon the Pope.

Their submission.

THIS Accommodation was only made to amuse the Pope. For about a Month after, the Colonna's enter'd Rome at the head of 5 or 6000 Men, without any body's having Intelligence of their March, and threaten'd to plunder the City. The Pope had but just time to retire to the Castle of St. Angelo, where he had neither Provision nor Ammunition to sustain a Siege, nor Forces to hinder Rome from being plunder'd. He had no way to get off, but by making a particular Truce with the Emperor for four Months, whereby he was oblig'd to recall the Troops which he had in the Milanese; where the Duke of Urbino remain'd alone with the Venetian Army, but still kept that Capital block'd up; so weak was the Duke of Bourbon! The Pope's Troops were no sooner arriv'd at Rome, but he broke the Agreement he had made with the Colonna's; and the War betwixt the Pope and the Emperor broke out again upon the Frontiers of Naples, and the Lands of the Church, with various Success, of which 'tis needless to mention the Particulars.

They enter Rome on a sudden, and oblige the Pope to retire to St. Angelo Castle.

The Pope's Truce with the Emperor.

He breaks his Agreement with the Colonna's, and renews the War with the Emperor.

MEAN time the Pope cou'd not tell what to think of the Conduct of the King of France, who, tho' the most interested in this War, made not one considerable Effort to maintain it: And Henry was altogether as inactive on his part. So that the Pope, who had always believ'd that the Treaty of Moore contain'd a League Offensive and Defensive between the Kings of France and England, and who, like his Predecessors, had hopes of making them his Tools, was oblig'd to be the Tool of another, and to support a War alone, which run him into such an Expence, that his Revenues were hardly sufficient to defray it. Perhaps this is the first and only Instance that a Pope was ever so impos'd on. Clement VII. often try'd to persuade Henry to enter into the League, by flattering him that he shou'd have the Title of Head, and Protector of the Sacred League, with a considerable Pension to be paid out of the Duchy of Milan, when conquer'd; but Henry was deaf to all his Offers. His own Experience had taught him what it was to make Alliances with Popes; and he very well knew that as soon as the Emperor was resolv'd to let go the Duchy of Milan, neither the Pope nor the Venetians wou'd be much concern'd for the Interest of England.

His endeavours to bring Henry into the League of Cognac.

BUT the Confusion which the Pope was in, tho' very great, was nothing to what happen'd to him afterwards. The Baron de Frondsperg arriving in Italy in 1527, with 14,000 Men, and marching towards the Milanese, the Duke of Urbino rais'd the Blockade of Milan, under pretence of going to stop the march of the Germans, which however he was unable, or else unwilling to do. The Duke of Bourbon being then at liberty, and not knowing how to subsist his Army longer at Milan, upon whose Inhabitants he had often rais'd Contributions, resolv'd to go and join Frondsperg, and to carry the War into the Pope's Country. He executed his Design in the beginning of the Year 1527, and stop'd some time in the Plaisantin to levy Contributions, of which he was in extreme want. Afterwards, he march'd towards the Bolognese, where he halted again to raise Money. Guicciardin says, that the Duke of Urbino only follow'd the Imperial Army at a distance, and was glad to see them take that Road, while for his his own part he contented himſelf with covering the State of Venice.

AT the firſt News of the Duke of Bourbon's march, the Pope rais'd ſome Troops; but ſoon after, he choſe rather to treat with the Viceroy of Naples, and to conclude a Truce of 8 Months with him, on condition of paying 60,000 Ducats to the Duke of Bourbon's Army. This Truce being ſign'd, he made a reduction of his Troops to ſave Charges, and only kept 2000 Men on foot. But the Duke of Bourbon refus'd to agree to this Truce, on pretence that the Sum ſtipulated was not ſufficient to pay the Arrears due to his Troops. Therefore the Viceroy went to Florence, and at laſt agreed with the Duke, that the Pope ſhou'd pay him 80,000 Ducats down, and 60,000 every Month of May. As ſoon as the Pope had receiv'd the News of this ſecond Convention, he disbanded the 2000 Men he had ſtill remaining on foot, that he might be the better able to pay the Sums contracted for. But whether the Duke of Bourbon conſented to this Agreement only to amuſe the Pope, or whether he cou'd not be ſure of his Troops, he continu'd his March towards Rome with extraordinary Diligence, and arriv'd before that City on the 5th of May. He immediately ſent to the Pope to deſire Paſſage thro' that City for Naples; which being refus'd him, he caus'd a Breach of the Town to be attack'd, in which he was kill'd, but the Breach was forc'd, and the City plunder'd[a], while Clement VII. with thirteen Cardinals fled in a great fright to the Caſtle of St. Angelo. The Prince of Orange immediately ſucceeded the Duke of Bourbon in the command of the Imperial Army. The Pope defended his Caſtle till the 6th of June, when he was forc'd to capitulate, and ſurrender himſelf into the hands of the Imperialiſts, who put a Spaniſh Gariſon into the Caſtle, and kept him Priſoner there, together with his Cardinals, till he had perform'd the Articles of the Capitulation. As ſoon as the News of the Pope's being taken Priſoner was known, the Venetians took Ravenna and Cervia; the Duke of Ferrara made himſelf Maſter of Modena; Sigiſmond Malateſta of Rimini; and the Florentines recover'd their Liberty, after they had expell'd the Pope's Legate.

NOT long before the Conqueſt of Rome, Francis I. and Henry VIII. had thought fit to make ſome alteration in their Meaſures. When they ſaw that the Emperor was not ſo eaſily to be frighten'd as they expected, they reſolv'd to ſtrike a bolder ſtroke, and to make an offenſive League together againſt him; but whether it was with a ſincere Deſign to make War upon him, or only to intimidate him, is hard to know. Francis I. wiſh'd to recover his Children, and he was very ſenſible that a War carry'd on by Allies, who had ſeparate Intereſts, was not capable of producing that Effect. Henry VIII. began at that time, in all appearance, to think of his Divorce with Queen Catherine, in which he cou'd not naturally expect any oppoſition, except from the Emperor, who was her Nephew. Therefore it was neceſſary either to weaken him to ſuch a degree that the Pope ſhou'd have no cauſe to fear him, or elſe to perſuade him, for fear of the Union betwixt France and England, to let the Divorce take place quietly. The offenſive League ſeem'd perfectly calculated for this purpoſe. Be this as it will, on the 30th of April, when the Duke of Bourbon was advanc'd very near Rome, the two Kings concluded three new Treaties. The firſt imported in Subſtance, That they ſhou'd both ſend Ambaſſadors to the Emperor, to make him Offers relating to the Reſtoration of the two Hoſtages, and to demand of him the Payment of the Sums which he ow'd to Henry; and that if he did not return an Anſwer in 20 Days, the two Kings ſhou'd declare War againſt him. Another Article of the firſt Treaty was for a Marriage between Francis I. or the Duke of Orleans's ſecond Son, with Mary, who was Henry's Daughter.

HENRY VIII.

Henry's Tricks with France.

THE ſecond Treaty imported, That the two Kings ſhou'd make War againſt the Emperor in the Netherlands, with an Army of 35,000 Men, and a Fleet on which they were to embark 15,000 Men; and that the Pope and Venetians ſhou'd be deem'd as included in the League, on condition they wou'd carry on the War againſt the Emperor.

BY the third Treaty, Henry renounc'd all his Rights and Pretenſions to the Kingdom of France; and Francis engag'd for himſelf and his Succeſſors for ever, to pay every Year to Henry and his Succeſſors, Kings of England, a Penſion of 50,000 Crowns, payable at two Terms, and above 15,000 Crowns in Salt of Brouage[b].

His Renunciation of all Right to the Kingdom of France.

THE News of the taking of Rome, and of the Pope's being made Priſoner, arriving ſoon after the Concluſion of theſe Treaties, the two Kings thought fit to alter an Article of their ſecond Treaty, and to agree to carry on the War againſt the Emperor in Italy; but that, by reaſon of the difficulty of ſending Engliſh Troops thither, Henry ſhou'd furniſh his Quota in Money. They agreeed alſo that Cardinal Wolſey ſhou'd go and confer with the King of France at Amiens. Mean time, Henry having ſent an an Ambaſſador to Madrid, in purſuance of the Treaty of April 30. the Emperor told him that he would ſend his Anſwer to the King by an Expreſs.

But the Majority agree, that the Spaniards were as unkind to the Holy City as the Germans.

Wolſey ſent over to France to confer with the King.

CARDINAL Wolſey ſetting out in the beginning of July, as it had been agreed in the late Treaty, went to Abbeville, there to ſtay till the Arrival of the King of France at Amiens. He was regal'd in France with all the Honours that cou'd be paid to a crown'd Head. While he ſtaid at Abbeville, he receiv'd an Anſwer from the Emperor, touching his Diſpute with the King of France. It ſeem'd by this Anſwer, which ſhall be inſerted hereafter, that the Emperor had a vaſt Regard for Henry, and that he conſented to accept the firſt Offers which Francis I. had made to the Viceroy of Naples, tho' with certain Reſtrictions which very much alter'd them. Nevertheleſs, the Difficulties were not inſurmountable, if Francis had had the ſame Inclination for Peace as he had when he made the firſt Propoſals. But he was quite otherwiſe diſpos'd ſince he had concluded an offenſive League with Henry. Beſides, he had already reſolv'd to ſend a powerful Army into Italy, under the Command of Lautrec, in order to make a Conqueſt of Naples, which he thought very feaſible. For this Reaſon, all the Reply which he made to the Emperor's Propoſals, at leaſt as far as appears to me, was with a deſign to deceive. But this is not a place to conſider it.

The Emperor's Anſwer to the Offers of France.

An Ambaſſador ſent to Rome to negotiate Henry's Divorce from Catherine.

IT muſt be obſerv'd here, as a thing very neceſſary for underſtanding the Affairs to which the Acts in this Tome of the Fœdera relate, that Henry had already reſolv'd upon his Divorce from Catherine; and that in a few days after Wolſey's Departure for Abbeville, Knight was ſent to Italy to negotiate this Affair at Rome. Moreover, while Wolſey was in France, he wrote to Henry that the Affair of the Divorce already made a noiſe in Spain, and that it was abſolutely neceſſary to order the Ambaſſadors of England to quaſh the Report as much as poſſible, by giving out that it was only owing to an Objection rais'd by the Biſhop of Tarbe upon the Birth of the Princeſs Mary.

Three new Treaties with France.

THE Conferences between Francis I. and the Cardinal produc'd three new Treaties; by the firſt of which it was ſtipulated, that ſince by the Treaty of April 30, it was left to the King of France's Option, either to marry the Princeſs Mary himſelf, or to leave her for his ſecond Son the Duke of Orleans, it was agreed that the Duke of Orleans ſhou'd marry her when both Parties came of Age; that then only, and not before, the Marriage-Articles ſhou'd be negotiated; and that even tho' both Kings ſhou'd think fit to diſpoſe of their Children otherwiſe, the other Treaties ſhould nevertheleſs remain in full Force, the ſaid Marriage being to be conſider'd only as a Supplement, and not as dependent on the other Treaties. As it no where appears that Francis I. was diſguſted with Henry for offering to give him, or the Prince his Son, a Daughter whom he endeavour'd in Fact to get declar'd Illegitimate, by demanding his Divorce from the Queen her Mother; yet 'tis very probable that Wolſey told Henry's Deſign to Francis I. in confidence, and that it gave occaſion to this firſt Article of the Treaty, the reſt of which were only Conventions relating to the Expence of the War. HENRY VIII.

THE ſecond Treaty related to the Payment of ſome Penſions which Francis Sforza ſtood engag'd for to the two Kings, in caſe he ſhou'd be reſtor'd to Milan, Henry's Guaranty of the Treaty which Francis I. ſhou'd make with the Emperor, and ſome other Articles.

THE third contain'd a Regulation for the Adminiſtration of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the two Kingdoms during the Pope's Captivity.

THESE Treaties were ſign'd the 18th of Auguſt; and Knight, as I have already ſaid, departed about the beginning of July for Italy, to demand the Divorce from the Pope.

Henry's Aim in the League with France.

HENRY's View in making an offenſive League with France, was to oblige the Emperor to court his Friendſhip, and to let the Affair of the Divorce go on ſmoothly, without giving himſelf any trouble to ſupport the Intereſts of his Aunt Queen Catherine. But to conceal the true Motive of it, he demanded four things of the Emperor. 1. That he ſhould pay him all he owed him. 2. That he ſhould pay him 500,000 Crowns, as he had engaged, in caſe he did not marry the Princeſs Mary. 3. That according to their Treaty, he ſhould make him amends for the Penſion paid him by the King of France. 4. That he ſhould ſet the Pope at liberty, and make good all his Loſſes to him.

His Demands of the Emperor.

Emperor's Anſwer.

The Emperor made anſwer, that he knew he was a Debtor to the King of England, but that he was greatly ſurprized that the Payment of thoſe Debts ſhould be demanded of him at ſuch a Juncture, without the leaſt Offer of giving him up his Bonds; and that he himſelf would write to the King, acquaint him with the Reaſons why he did not think himſelf obliged to pay the 500,000 Crowns for not having married the Princeſs Mary; and that he had already iſſued his Orders to ſet the Pope at liberty.

BEFORE we conclude this Article, we muſt add a word or two of the Occurrences in Italy.

THE Pope was ſtill ſhut up in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, becauſe he was not able to perform the Articles of his Capitulation, and was ſtrictly enough confined; yet yet he found means to write a Letter to Henry, which was sign'd by the 13 Cardinals, his Fellow-Prisoners, intreating him to use his Interest and Power in his favour. On the other hand, Francis I. had already made a particular League with the Venetians to conquer the Kingdom of Naples, of which League Lautrec was appointed to be the General. The two Armies of France and Venice joining in the Milanese, made some Conquests there, and took Pavia by Storm. At the same time Andrew Doria found means to reduce Genoa under the Dominion of the King of France. At length Lautrec leaving the Duke of Urbino in the Milanese with the Venetian Troops, march'd towards the Kingdom of Naples, but so slowly, that it was plain he had Orders to make no great haste. The Reason was, because the King of France was willing to stay for the Emperor's final Answer.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV

Pope's Letter to King Henry from the Castle of St. Angelo.

Pavia taken, and Genoa subdued.

LAUTREC's March, tho' slow, was very lucky for the Pope. For the Emperor understanding that his Army, which was still at Rome, and diminish'd two thirds by the Plague and Debaucheries, would be oblig'd to leave the City in order to go and defend the Kingdom of Naples, consented at length that the Pope shou'd be set at liberty, on condition that he wou'd pay the Arrears due to the Army. Therefore he made a Treaty on this Head, by which it was stipulated that the Pope shou'd remit 350,000 Crowns to the Imperial Army, and that he shou'd be releas'd out of the Castle of St. Angelo on the 10th of December, and remov'd to another place, there to be kept in Custody till he had perform'd this Treaty. But Clement being not sure that he was able to perform his Engagements, escap'd on the 9th of December at Night, in the Disguise of a Merchant, to Orvieto. And not long after, Lautrec advancing to Bologna, receiv'd a Letter from the Pope, which gave him to understand that he did not think himself oblig'd to perform the Articles he had been forc'd to consent to.

The Emperor's Answer to the English Ambassadors about his Dispute with France. P. 200.

33. THE Emperor's Answer given in Writing to the English Ambassadors, relating to his Dispute with the King of France; dated at Valladolid, in July 1527.

As this Answer clearly discovers the matters in Dispute between the Emperor and the King of France, perhaps the Reader will not be displeas'd to see the Substance of it in this place.

" SINCE the most High, and most Excellent Prince, the King of England, as " the most Christian Prince and Defender of " the Faith, has begun to set his Hand to " so good a Work as the procuring a Reconciliation, and a universal Peace in " Christendom, and has therefore oblig'd " himself, since he has repeated his Offer, " to persevere in his good Purpose to employ himself in all things that may conduce to the said Peace of Christendom, " the Emperor and our Lord the King being desirous that the said King, and every " one, may fully know that his Majesty, " as he always did, does now make it his " whole Endeavour to attain to the said " Peace, has order'd the following Representation to be made to the Ambassadors " of England at this Court.

" IN the first place his Majesty lays it " down for a principal Foundation, that he " does not aim in any manner whatsoever, " by this present Writing, nor otherwise, to " make any Innovation in the Faith and " Oaths of the King of France; nor to derogate from the Treaty and Capitulation " made at Madrid; and he backs it with " this Protestation, to the end that every one " may see and know that it was ever his " Majesty's desire, as Experience has fully " shewn, that a good, sure, and firm Peace " may be made for the Service of God, the " Peace and Welfare of all Christendom, " and for obtaining a general Agreement " and Friendship, both for repelling the " Turk, and the Errors of Luther.

" HIS Majesty says, that the Offers made " by the King of France and his Mother to " the Viceroy of Naples are very mean, " and that they do not seem to be a Foundation for a good and firm Peace; nor " can his Majesty, upon that Ground be " more secure of the performance of what " may be concluded hereafter, than of " what has been treated and concluded, " but ill observ'd, by the said Capitulation " of Madrid; and that if the most Christian " King desires to have his Children again, " he knows the reason for which he has " put them in his Majesty's power, and upon what Conditions they continue in his " hands; the Performance of which Conditions is entirely in the Breast of the " most Christian King, without any room " for urging an impossibility. And if he " offers to plead that he is not bound to " them, and produces Reasons why, he " must take this for an Answer, That by " all the Laws, Divine, Civil, and Canon, " and also by all the Laws of War, he is " entirely bound to them, and that no " Fear, Force or Protection can excuse him. " Nevertheless, because for the sake of " such a Peace, his Majesty was willing not " only to give up a part of his Right, but " also to quit his own Property if the King " of France wou'd make the same Offers on " his part, as were made to the Viceroy of " Naples, which were verbatim as follows;

THE King and Madam (Louisa his Mother) say, That they will perform the Treaty of Madrid, provided the Emperor will restore the Duke of Milan; That for Burgundy, they will pay the Emperor two Millions of Gold in the manner following, viz. a good Sum in hand, at which time Queen (Eleanor) shou'd be deliver'd up, and the rest upon a Day to be agreed on, and that then his Children shou'd also be deliver'd up. And if the Emperor had rather have the whole Sum of two Millions at one Payment, the Emperor shall upon Receipt thereof deliver up the Queen and the King's Children. Moreover, the said King will pay the King of England what the Emperor owes him: And the King desires that the Emperor wou'd be pleased to augment Queen Eleanor's Dowry, in proportion to the Sum he was to receive, because he may do it without costing him a Penny.

" HIS Majesty, to give essential De" monstration of the great Love which he " bears to the King of England, his good " Brother; and to the end that by his Me" diation there may be a good and firm " Peace, will not refuse to hearken to the " Offers abovemention'd, admitting them to " be explain'd jointly with the eight De" clarations following.

1. " THAT whatever Capitulation and " Treaty be made, it be according to the " above Protest, without any Innovation or " Alteration of the said Capitulation and " Treaty of Madrid; except in such things " only as shall be expressly innovated and " alter'd by mutual Consent.

2. " THAT whatever Capitulation and " Treaty be made for dropping and sus" pending the Restitution of the Duchy of " Burgundy at this time, be without any " manner of prejudice or diminution of the " Right which his Majesty justly has and " claims to it, as Sovereign thereof, or un" der any Title whatsoever belonging to " his said Majesty, before the Capitulation " of *Madrid.

3. " THAT all the Articles of the Trea" ty of Madrid, of which no mention or alteration

* As there was no Sum stipulated in the Treaty of Madrid, for the King's Ransom, and as the Restitution of Burgundy was mention'd instead of the Ransom, the Emperor was in the right to keep his Claim to Burgundy: otherwise Francis wou'd have paid his Ransom with two Millions, and abolish'd the Emperor's Pretensions to that Duchy.

" alteration is made in the ſaid Offers, " whether general or particular, remain in " full force, and be entirely perform'd ac- " cording to the ſaid Capitulation of Madrid.

4. " THAT ſince his Majeſty does not " accept of the two Millions of Gold over " and above the Penſion given by way " of Indemnity[a] and the Moneys lent, " which the Viceroy, as above mention'd, " offer'd to his Majeſty, he hopes that the " ſaid Lord, the King of England, and the " Legate, will obtain an Augmentation of " the ſaid Sum of two Millions. Never- " theleſs, if an Addition cannot be made to " the ſaid Sum of two Millions, be it un- " derſtood, that what is now to be conclu- " ded and accompliſh'd on the part of the " King of France, be for the Payment of " two Millions of Crowns of Gold of good " and lawful Weight, and of what his Ma- " jeſty owes to the King of England, as " well for Monies lent, which by the ſaid " Propoſals made to the Viceroy, the King " of France has offer'd to his Majeſty[b], as " alſo for the Indemnity Money which the " King of France has undertaken by the " ſaid Treaty of Madrid; and alſo for the " Reſtitution of the Eſtate of the late Duke " of Bourbon, becauſe in his ſtead, his " Heirs have all manner of Right to enjoy " the Benefit of the ſaid Treaty; and that " in all other things for which the King of " France remains anſwerable, he may ac- " compliſh them entirely before the Princes " his Children depart out of the Kingdom " of Spain; ſince conſidering what has hap- " pen'd, the Emperor can have no real Se- " curity that what has been concluded and " agreed on ſhall be perform'd when the " ſaid Children are out of his power.

" THE fifth Declaration is, That what- " ever ſhall be concluded, be ratify'd by " the States General of the Kingdom of " France, and approv'd by the Parliaments, " conformably to the ſaid Treaty of Ma- " drid. And in caſe it can't be done by the " General Aſſembly of the States, that it be " ratify'd however in the ſame Form by the " particular States of every Province.

" THE ſixth Declaration is, That his Ma- " jeſty ſhall not be oblig'd to ſend into " France, Queen Eleanor his Siſter, till " all the Promiſes made by the King of " France are perform'd. And if by Sen- " tence of the ſaid Judges, he is declar'd to " have done nothing whereby he ought to " be depriv'd and ejected out of the State " of Milan, then his Majeſty will be con- " tent, that the ſaid Francis be reſtor'd to " his former State, conform to the Inveſtiture " and Decree which his Majeſty ſent to him " from Toledo[c]. But if, on the contrary, " he is condemn'd, in ſuch Caſe the ſaid " State of Milan ſhall remain at his Ma- " jeſty's diſpoſal, as there is very good " reaſon[d].

" THE eighth Declaration[e] is, That the " ſaid King of England be Conſervator, " Protector and Guarantee of the Treaty " and Capitulation which ſhall be made: " And the ſaid King of England ſhall " give his Bond in ample Form, obliging " himſelf actually to aſſiſt the Party who " ſhall obſerve the Peace, and imme- " diately declare himſelf for him, againſt " him that breaks it; and that for this " purpoſe, he ſend a number of Horſe and " Foot to be rais'd at his own Expence, " and continued even to the end of the " War, as ſhall be declar'd by the ſaid " Treaty.

" AND becauſe, ſince the Treaty of " Madrid, his Majeſty, as is well known, " has been at great Expence to defend " himſelf from the Invaſion of Leagues " form'd againſt him, of which the King " of France has been the principal Con- " tractor, 'tis but reaſonable that the ſaid " King of France ſhou'd recompence and " ſatisfy his Majeſty for ſuch his Expence. II. Affairs of Scotland.

WE left the Duke of Albany going to France, after he had ſign'd a Truce with England. During his Abſence, Henry made all the Efforts poſſible to engage the Scots to deprive the Duke of Albany of the Regency gency, and restore it to the Queen Dowager his Sister, with whom he was reconcil'd. As he saw himself engag'd in a War with France, he fear'd, not without reason, that the Duke of Albany wou'd return to Scotland, and give him a Diversion on the Northern Frontier. To prevent these Inconveniences, he sent an Army to Scotland under the Earl of Surry, who committed great Ravages there, and seiz'd Jedburgh, but with no other View than to compel the Scots to grant him his demand.

Henry sends an Army to Scotland, and foments Divisions there.

ON the other hand, he kept a good Fleet at Sea, in order to catch the Duke of Albany, if he shou'd attempt to return to Scotland. This was in effect what the Duke intended, and the King of France had given him a supply of 3000 Foot Soldiers, and 1200 Men at Arms, in order to keep up the Spirits of the French Faction in Scotland, which was just drooping. But his fear of the English Fleet hinder'd him from attempting the Passage. During this, the Troubles continued in Scotland, and Henry had the cunning to offer his Daughter to the King his Nephew, that his Party might have a pretext to cry out for a Peace with England upon any Terms. Mean time, the Duke of Albany perceiving the impossibility of his returning to Scotland while the English Fleet kept out at Sea, thought of an Expedient which succeeded to his Expectation. He dismiss'd his Ships, and disbanded his Army, as if he had no more thoughts of passing to England, and also retired to Court, after having given Order to his Troops and Fleet to rendevouz again upon the first Notice. Henry hearing that the Duke's Ships and Troops were dispers'd, thought he had broke his Measures, and therefore call'd his own Fleet into his Harbours. But soon after this, the Duke of Albany put to Sea, and happily arriv'd in Scotland on the 20th of September 1523. This very Year he design'd to make an Incursion into England, but when he was got upon the Frontier, perceiving that most of the great Men were not in a humour to go with him, he chose to go back, the rather because he heard the Earl of Surrey was marching directly to attack him. The Season was too far advanc'd for the two Armies to keep the Field any longer, and they went into Winter Quarters.

He proposes his Daughter Mary to the King.

The Duke of Albany returns to Scotland by a Stratagem.

IN the year 1524, Henry being more and more averse to the Emperor, and better inclin'd to France, did not disturb the Tranquility of Scotland. He knew well that there was no danger of any Diversion from that Quarter, so long as he did not molest France. And this made the Duke of Albany resolve to go and offer his Services to Francis I. who carry'd him with him into Provence and afterwards to Italy.

He returns to France.

WHILE the Duke of Albany was absent, King James, who was then thirteen or fourteen Years of Age, being under the Direction of the Queen his Mother, and of the Earl of Arran, who was of the Hamilton Family, summon'd a meeting of the States, and obtain'd an Order that there shou'd be a Regent no longer, and that for the future no more Orders should be dispatch'd under any other Name but the King's. By that means this young Prince fell into the hands of the Queen his Mother, and the Earl of Arran, who managed him just as they pleased. But the Earls of Argyle and Lenox, disgusted at this Alteration, sent for the Earl of Angus from France, who was at variance with the Queen his Spouse, and as soon as he arriv'd, they made a League with him to replace the King under a Guardian. They concerted measures so well, that the Queen and the Earl of Arran were forc'd to put the King into their hands. Then having declared themselves Regents, they agreed to exercise the Regency, each Man four Months a Year in his turn. The Earl of Angus began first, and being a Creature of the King of England, he sent Ambassadors to him to treat of the King of Scotland's Marriage with Mary. Henry being desirous to amuse the Scots with the Hopes of this Match, consented to a short Truce which was afterwards prolong'd several times.

And is set aside from the Regency.

The Earl of Angus arrives in Scotland, and makes a League with the Malecontents to replace the King under Guardians.

Truce with Scotland.

I have already taken notice that after the Battle of Pavia, Henry turn'd intirely in favour of France, and that by Consequence he had nothing more to do than to be upon his Guard against Scotland. Yet he continued his old Grudge against the Duke of Albany; for in one of the Treaties of Moore, he demanded that the Queen Regent of Scotland shou'd not consent directly or indirectly to the Duke's Return into Scotland, during the Minority of King James.

MEAN time, the Earl of Angus having not thought fit to quit the Regency, when his Term of four Months was expir'd, the Earl of Argyle left the Court in great disgust, but the Earl of Lenox stay'd.

DURING the Year 1525, there were several Negotiations relating to the Marriage propos'd between James V. and the Princess Mary. But as Henry had no intention to conclude it, he started several Difficulties which gave occasion to frequent Prolongations of the Truce.

AT length in 1526, a Truce for three Years was concluded betwixt the two Crowns. And for the rest, nothing considerable pass'd in Scotland, during this and the following Years; except an Attempt made by the Queen Mother, and the Earl of Arran, assisted by the Earl of Lenox, to take the King out of the hands of the Earl of Angus; but it did not succeed.

IT appears from the Earl of Angus's full Power in p. 113. that this Truce was agreed on, upon the 10th of October before.

Here follows Mr. RAPIN's farther Account of the State-Records in TOM. XIV. of Mr. RYMER's FOEDERA, viz. from the beginning of the Year 1528 to the end of 1533.

THE Divorce of Henry VIII. is the principal Subject of these six Years; but this Affair, tho' of a domestick nature, is so interwoven with foreign Transactions, that there's no possibility of forming a true Idea of this, without understanding those. Therefore before I enter upon the Divorce, I will, with the utmost Brevity, shew how Affairs stood with Clement VII. Charles V. and Francis I. from the beginning of the Year 1528, to the Rupture betwixt Henry VIII. and the Court of Rome; which I propose for the Boundary of the Period into which I am now entring.

WHEN the Pope was escap'd out of his Confinement[h], and found himself safe at Orvieto, he made serious Reflections upon his past Conduct, and upon the Slips he had been guilty of, which had so much tarnish'd his Infallibility. He had conceiv'd a Notion that if he enter'd into the War against the Emperor, in conjunction with the Venetians, the Kings of France and England wou'd second him with Vigour, and cut out so much Work for the Emperor, that he wou'd at length be forc'd to let go the Duchy of Milan. But Experience had convinc'd him of his Mistake. All that Francis and Henry aim'd at, was to intimidate the Emperor. The first wanted to bring home his Children, who were Hostages in Spain. And the second hoped to deter the Emperor by the apprehension of a cruel War, from opposing the Divorce he was fully resolv'd to obtain from his Queen, who was that Emperor's Aunt. For this Reason, both these Monarchs acted but faintly in reality, tho' they pretended what great Efforts they wou'd make. Consequently the Pope was amus'd by these two Kings, till he lost Rome, Florence, Ravenna, and Cervia, and was taken Prisoner, and forc'd to pay the very Army that had distress'd him. These Disgraces made him see his Error. He found that considering the then State of his own Affairs, and those of the other Princes, it was his Interest to temporize with the Emperor, in order to open a way for a Reconciliation with him, if it happen'd that this Monarch shou'd preserve himself in that degree of Power, to which he was then attain'd. But on the other hand, it was not advisable for him to unite with the Emperor, while there was a French Army in Italy, under the Command of Lautrec, just ready to invade the Kingdom of Naples. He judg'd therefore that as Affairs then stood, he had no better Course to take, than to conform his Conduct to the Times, and to keep fair with the Emperor, as well as the two Kings his Allies, till he saw the Success of the Naples Expedition: (and this was the Motive of his refusing to go again into the League against the Emperor, on pretence that he was too weak to be of any Service to his Allies) and besides, he thought it necessary for the wel-

Welfare of Chriſtendom, that he ſhou'd continue Neuter, to the end he might be in a capacity of ſerving as Mediator.

I HAVE already taken notice that the aim of Francis I. was only to intimidate the Emperor, in order to oblige him to reſtore his Children to him, and to moderate the Conditions of the Treaty of Madrid. This is very plain, becauſe Lautrec, tho' he arriv'd in Piedmont in July 1527, was ſtill at Bologna in January 1528, an evident Token that he had no Orders to haſten his Expedition, and that before he was to enter upon it, Francis had a mind to wait for the Emperor's final Reſolution upon the Offers he had made to him. At length Lautrec march'd the 9th of January 1528, and arriv'd at the beginning of February on the Frontiers of the Kingdom of Naples. Then the Prince of Orange, General of the Imperial Troops which plunder'd Rome 10 Months ago, having got them to rendezvous with great Difficulties, march'd out of the City, and went to ſhut himſelf up in Naples.

Lautrec marches to Naples.

Prince of Orange marches thither from Rome.

AT the ſame time the Kings of France and England ſeverally declar'd War againſt the Emperor by a Herald. The Emperor receiv'd the Declaration with very great Solemnity in preſence of the whole Court, but return'd very different Anſwers to the two Heralds. He preſerv'd a great Decorum toward Henry, but did not think himſelf oblig'd to the ſame regard for Francis, whom he publickly reproach'd for having broke his Oath, and for not returning an Anſwer to the Offer he had made to him by his Ambaſſador the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, to decide their Quarrel by ſingle Combat. Theſe Reproaches occaſion'd reciprocal Defiances from both Monarchs, which came to nothing, and are needleſs to ſpeak of here.

Kings of France and England declare War againſt the Emperor.

Challenges betwixt the Emperor and the King of France.

MEAN time, Lautrec advanced and laid Siege to Naples. It wou'd not be of moment to mention all the Rubs and Difficulties he met with during the Siege, from the want of Proviſions, from the Remiſſneſs of the King his Maſter to ſend him the Troops and Money he had given him reaſon to expect, and from the Revolt of Andrew Doria, who took that opportunity to free Genoa from its ſubjection to France, and to ſet the City at liberty. It will ſuffice juſt to take notice that a great part of the Beſieger's Army was carried off by a Plague; that Lautrec himſelf died of it on the 16th of Auguſt; and that the Marquiſs de Saluces, who ſucceeded him in the Command of the Army, raiſing the Siege, and retiring to Averſa, was there beſieg'd, and oblig'd to ſurrender at Diſcretion; and that thereby the whole Army of France was abſolutely ruin'd.

AFTER ſuch unexpected ſucceſs, the Pope was overjoy'd that he had ſo happily concerted his Meaſures, and that he had avoided to re-engage in the League. From that time, he was firmly reſolv'd to make his Peace with the Emperor; the Succours he might expect from France and England being too uncertain, and too remote for him to depend on. But in order to his making a good Peace, it was abſolutely neceſſary to poſſeſs the Emperor with a ſtrong apprehenſion of a very ſtrict Union like to be betwixt the Holy See, and France and England, to the end that ſuch Terror might force him to grant the Pope the better Terms. The Affair of Henry's Divorce now on foot ſerv'd as a very good Handle for his purpoſe, becauſe while he feign'd an Inclination to favour this Prince, the Emperor did not know but he had farther Views, and that he might intend a ſtrict League with him. The Knowledge of the Views and Intereſts of Clement VII. is abſolutely neceſſary for a true inſight into the Affair of the Divorce, as the Sequel of it will plainly ſhew.

HENRY VIII.

Pope's Negotiation with the Emperor.

Francis I. finding himſelf unable to carry on the War any longer, and having ſome Intelligence that the Pope was ſecretly treating with the Emperor, deſpair'd more and more of recovering his Children from Spain by force of Arms. Therefore it was with great Reluctance, that he was oblig'd to carry on a ſecret Negotiation with the Emperor, at the very time that he made large Promiſes to the Venetians, the Florentines, and the Duke of Ferrara, in order to keep them in the League, that he might obtain the better Terms.

The King of France alſo treats privately with the Emperor.

AT length the Pope receiv'd the agreeable News that his Treaty with the Emperor was concluded and ſign'd at Barcelona, on the 29th of June 1529. By this Treaty the Emperor engag'd to put him again in the poſſeſſion of Florence, to procure him the Reſtitution of Ravenna, Cervia, Modena, and Reggio, and to aſſiſt in the Conqueſt of Ferrara. Moreover he oblig'd himſelf to re-eſtabliſh Francis Sforza in the Duchy of Milan, if he was found Innocent; and if Guilty, not to diſpoſe of that Duchy, but with the Pope's Conſent. Finally, he promis'd to give his natural Daughter Margaret in Marriage to Alexander de Medicis, Son to the late Duke Lawrence, and to grant him the Sovereignty of Florence.

Concluſion of the Pope's Treaty.

TWO Months after the Treaty of Barcelona, a Peace was ſign'd at Cambray, betwixt the Emperor and Francis I. By this new Treaty Francis entirely abandon'd the Venetians, the Florentines, and the Duke of Ferrara his Allies, and he undertook to pay the King of England 290,000 Crowns,

And of the King of France's.

Crowns, on the Emperor's account, and to redeem the rich Flower de Lys, which Maximilian I. had pawn'd to Henry VII. for 50,000 Crowns*. There were ſeveral other Articles, which, tho' more favourable than were thoſe of the Treaty of Madrid, nevertheleſs made him very uneaſy; but he ſaw no way to help himſelf. Henry gave him upon this occaſion a very ſenſible Proof of his Friendſhip, by excuſing him from the Payment which he was to make to him for the Emperor, and by making him a Preſent of the Jewel he had in his cuſtody, that he might reſtore it with his own hands to the Emperor.

The two Treaties of Barcelona and Cambray, entirely chang'd the Face of Affairs almoſt all over Europe. The Pope being now become the Friend and Ally of Charles V. recover'd Ravenna and Cervia, and had the extraordinary Satisfaction to ſee Florence beſieged by the Imperial Army, and at length obliged to receive Alexander de Medicis for its Sovereign; he had alſo the pleaſure of ſeeing Sforza re-eſtabliſh'd at Milan. He wanted nothing more to compleat his Joy, than to ſee himſelf Maſter of Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio; but in this reſpect the Emperor found means to elude his Promiſes, and the Pope was obliged to ſubmit, tho' not a little mortified to find himſelf thus impos'd on. On the other hand, Francis I. recover'd his Children from Spain, after having obliged himſelf by the Treaty of Cambray, to make War no more againſt the Emperor; tho' this Prince became more and more formidable to him every day. For he ſaw too plainly that Charles V. after having in a manner ſubdued Italy, was in a fair way of making himſelf abſolute in Germany, under pretence of reducing the Proteſtants who were united together by the League of Smalcald, for Defence of their Religion and Liberty. All this made Francis to the laſt degree jealous, becauſe the growth of the Emperor's Power could not but be fatal in the end to France. Therefore he ſet up a Reſolution to find out ſuch a Diverſion for that Prince, as ſhould put it out of his power to execute his Projects.

And Sforza re-eſtabliſh'd at Milan.

Francis recovers his Children that were Hoſtages to the Emperor.

Francis's Jealouſy of the Emperor's Growing Power.

With this view, finding that the Pope was diſguſted becauſe of the Protection which the Emperor granted to the Duke of Ferrara, he courted his Intereſt by making a Propoſal to him of a Marriage betwixt his ſecond Son, the Duke of Orleans, and Catherine de Medicis, Daughter of the late Duke Lawrence. At the ſame time he promis'd Succours to the Proteſtants of Germany, and endeavour'd to cultivate his Union with Henry VIII. more and more, by making him believe that he would ſecond him with all his Power, in the obtaining his Divorce at the Court of Rome.

He courts the Pope.

Henry VIII. And King Henry.

Henry deſir'd nothing better than ſuch a Support as the Power of France; but he was not thoroughly Maſter of his Friend's Views. The aim of Francis I. was to breed a variance betwixt the Emperor and Henry, for fear that if they ſhould be good Friends, he ſhould have no proſpect of recovering Genoa and Milan, which he could not attain to, but by embroiling the Affairs of Europe once more. With this view he adviſ'd King Henry to puſh on the Affair of the Divorce in ſpite of all Obſtructions, becauſe he knew that would prevent his Reconciliation with the Emperor; and for this end he made him believe that he would even break with the Pope rather than abandon his Intereſts: But at the ſame time he promoted the Negotiation for the Marriage of Catherine de Medicis with the Duke of Orleans. Mean while, as he pretended to be Henry's dear Friend, he gave him to underſtand, that nothing was more likely to bring the Affair of the Divorce to a happy Iſſue, than to frighten the Emperor and the Pope with the apprehenſion of a powerful League betwixt France and England in order to hinder the Emperor from oppoſing the Divorce, and the Pope from reverting to the Emperor. Accordingly Francis and Henry concluded ſeveral Treaties, to make the Publick believe that they had great Deſigns upon the Anvil. But the bare reading of thoſe Treaties ſhews they had no other end than to create a Jealouſy in the Emperor and the Pope. They alſo conferr'd together in Picardy, and ſign'd a Convention, by which they engag'd to raiſe an Army of 80,000 Men, for Defence of Chriſtendom againſt the Turks, whether in Germany or Italy, as ſhould be judg'd neceſſary. But this was pure Artifice to intimidate the Emperor. Francis I. acted his part ſo well at this Interview, that he fully determin'd Henry to marry Anne of Bullen, and by that means laid an inſuperable Obſtacle in the way of his Accommodation with the Emperor.

Whom he preſſes to puſh on his Divorce.

And makes ſeveral Treaties with him.

And perſuades him to marry Anne of Bullen.

The publick and private Proceedings of the Kings of France and England made Charles V. very uneaſy. It was apparent that theſe two Kings were in Treaty, and Couriers were continually flying betwixt London and Paris; but nothing more of their Treaties was known than what the Contracting Powers thought fit to publiſh; and they affected to have it believ'd that they had great Deſigns in hand. The Emperor,

* This was a Jewel in form of a Flower de Lys, wherein, as M. Bellay ſays, was a piece of Wood, pretended to be that of our Saviour's Croſs.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

peror, who was on the point of being attack'd by the Turks, was very much embarrass'd. He was afraid that Francis and Henry as well as the Protestants of Germany wou'd lay hold of this opportunity to act against him; and he was not sure whether he cou'd depend on the Pope or the other Princes of Italy, because he had us'd none of them well. Mean time, as he was not in a Condition to guard against Opposition from all sides, he betook himself without delay to that where there was most Danger, and dissembled his apprehension from any other Quarter. A Diet which he caus'd to be held in Germany having given such Satisfaction to the Protestants, as hinder'd them from rising, he march'd against the Turks, who had already penetrated into Austria; and tho' he always avoided to run the risque of a Battle with them, he found means to oblige them to retire. After the happy Issue of this Campaign he went into Italy, to execute a Project which he had concerted before-hand. He endeavour'd to persuade all the Powers of Italy to make a League together, and always to keep an Army on foot, of which himself was to name the General, for Defence of the Duchy of Milan, and the rest of Italy, against the Attacks which they had reason to fear from France. But the Pope and the other Italian Princes, knowing that the Emperor wanted to enslave them by means of an Army which they themselves were to maintain, wou'd not engage to sign the League, except only on condition that the Army shou'd not be rais'd but in case of necessity.

Emperor marches against the Turks, whom he drives out of Austria, and then goes to Italy.

And makes a League with the Italian Princes.

At length the Marriage betwixt the Duke of Orleans and Catherine de Medicis being concluded, the Pope and Francis went with both Parties to Marseilles, where the Marriage was consummated. In this Interview, which gave Umbrage to the Emperor, Francis I. put the Differences betwixt the Pope and Henry on the foot of an Accommodation, from which he hoped to reap great Advantage. But Clement VII. being won over by the Emperor, broke the Measures of the King of France, as we shall find in the next Article.

THE Years 1531 and 1533, contain nothing of importance upon this Subject.

II. Domeſtick Affairs.

THAT the matters contain'd in the Acts of theſe ſix Years may not be confounded, I ſhall ſplit this Article into two. In the firſt I will treat of the Affair of the Divorce; and in the ſecond of Cardinal Wolſey's Affairs, to which a great many Pieces in this XIVth Tome of the Fœdera relate.

The DIVORCE of Henry VIII.

Henry had liv'd 18 Years with Catherine of Arragon when he firſt reſolv'd to be divorc'd from her. This Deſign of his was founded chiefly upon two Reaſons, the one drawn from Religion, the other from Politicks. The religious Reaſon was, That as Catherine was Wife to Prince Arthur, Henry's Brother, ſhe could not be the Wife of her firſt Husband's Brother, without Breach of God's Law. The political Reaſon was a dependent on the former; for ſuppoſing, I will not ſay the Invalidity of Catherine's ſecond Marriage, but only the Doubts to which it was liable, it follow'd that the Birth of the Princeſs Mary by that Marriage might be ſubject to Objections. By conſequence, the Succeſſion to the Crown after the King's Death wou'd remain in a ſtate of uncertainty, and moreover there was danger that the Kingdom would be expos'd to a Civil War. For the King having no Male-Iſſue, and indeed no reaſon to expect any, becauſe the Queen had not had any more Children for a long time, it was eaſy to foreſee that after the King's Death there would be three Competitors for the Crown, viz. 1. Mary his Daughter; 2. James V. King of Scotland, who was his Nephew by his eldeſt Siſter; and, 3. His Niece, the eldeſt Daughter of the Ducheſs of Suffolk, Henry's youngeſt Siſter. Mary might take advantage of the Diſpenſation of Julius II. which authoriz'd Henry's Marriage with Catherine. The King of Scotland might pretend that this Marriage was null, according to the divine Law, and that by conſequence Mary was a Baſtard; and the Ducheſs of Suffolk's eldeſt Daughter might alledge, that Mary being a Baſtard, and the King of Scotland a Foreigner, it was her Right to ſucceed to the Crown.

Henry's Motives of ſuing for a Divorce.

THESE were the two Reaſons upon which Henry reſolv'd with himſelf to make his Marriage void. But ſeveral have aſſerted that theſe were only Pretences; and that he had a third Reaſon, which they wou'd have us believe was the principal, or rather the only Inducement of Henry's ſolliciting the Divorce, viz. his being ſo deeply in love with Anne of Bolleyn, that he was reſolv'd to ſacrifice Catherine to that Paſſion. But without enlarging upon ſuch Proofs as might be produc'd to deſtroy this opinion, I ſhall only ſay in two Words, that 'tis in a manner impoſſible to tell the exact time when Henry began to have ſcruples about his Marriage, or when he firſt reſolv'd to have it made void, or at what time Anne of Bolleyn, who was in France, return'd to England, or at what time the King fell in love with her. All that can be ſaid is, that 'tis very certain, that the Divorce was reſolv'd upon before the

the middle of the Year 1527; that 'tis very probable that Anne did not return from France to England with Sir Thomas Bolleyn her Father, who had been Ambaſſador there, 'till September or October in that Year, and that there's no Trace of the King's Paſſion for that Lady to be diſcover'd before the Year 1528. After this, can one be certain that the King's Amour was the true Motive of his demanding a Divorce? If it were only ſaid that the Paſſion which the King was ſmitten with for that Lady, very much contributed to make him perſiſt in the Sollicitation of the Divorce, in ſpite of all the Difficulties he met with, I ſhou'd frankly acquieſce; becauſe I am far from thinking all the Proceedings or Actions of this Prince juſtifiable.

Tho' we have not all the Pieces relating to this Affair in the Fœdera, which no doubt wou'd have found a Place there, if they had not been ſuppreſs'd in the Reign of Queen Mary; and tho' by that means we are depriv'd of ſeveral Hints which might have given Light into the Affair of the Divorce, yet 'tis neceſſary to give a brief account of what paſs'd upon this head. But without entring into the whole detail of it, which has been ſo well perform'd by the celebrated Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation of England, I ſhall ſuppreſs every thing that relates to Religion and Conſcience, and confine my ſelf only to the Hiſtorical Part of the Affair, and eſpecially to the Conduct of Clement VII. throughout the whole Courſe of it *.

The Pope's Conduct in the Affair.

In July 1527, Henry diſpatch'd his Secretary William Knight to Rome, to deſire the Pope, who was at that time a Priſoner in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, to ſign four Acts, which he ſent to him ready drawn up. The firſt was a Commiſſion to Cardinal Wolſey to judge of the Validity of the Diſpenſation of Julius II. and of the King's Marriage with Catherine, concluded in conſequence thereof. The ſecond was a decretal Bull to make the King's Marriage void. The third was an authentic Licence to the King to marry another Woman. And the fourth an Engagement never to revoke any of the three preceding Acts. The Court of England could not but be very confident of the Pope's Complaiſance, to imagine that he would blindly ſign thoſe four Acts without any other notice of the Affair in queſtion, and without being certain whether ſuch an Inſtance of his Complaiſance would procure him his Freedom, and Reeſtabliſhment in St. Peter's Chair. Mean time Henry flatter'd himſelf that the Extremity to which the Pope was then reduced, and his Impatience for a Deliverance, which naturally he could not expect but from France and England, would incline him to diſpenſe with all Formalities. But tho' Clement VII. could not be ſure of Aſſiſtance from any Quarter but from theſe two Confederate Kings, yet he could not be abſolutely certain that thoſe Monarchs would do every thing for him that was in their power, nor indeed that their Efforts would be effectual; becauſe this depended on the Succeſs of the War. Indeed Lautrec was arriv'd in Italy with a French Army, and had Orders to attack the Kingdom of Naples, but the Succeſs of his Expedition was ſtill uncertain. If therefore the Pope had blindly done what Henry would have had him, and it ſhould have happen'd afterwards that the War of Naples had not the expected Succeſs, his Condition would have been worſe than it was, and no hopes of ever retrieving it. But on the other hand, as there was a Probability that Francis I. the King of England's Friend and Ally, would get the upper hand in Italy, it was the Pope's Intereſt to cultivate the Friendſhip of theſe two Monarchs, in caſe he ſhould have need of them. Henry's ſtrong Perſuaſion that the Pope could refuſe him nothing, was the very thing that ſerv'd to keep him in ſuſpence. Clement VII. being ſtrictly guarded by the Spaniards at the time that Knight arrived at Rome, all that this Envoy could do, was to get a Memorial deliver'd to him relating to his Commiſſion. The Pope return'd a favourable Anſwer by word of mouth, but it was not poſſible to puſh the Negotiation any further while he was a Priſoner; ſo that it was not till after his Eſcape that Caſſali the Engliſh Ambaſſador in ordinary, and Knight went to him, in order to preſs him to ſign the four Acts above mentioned. Clement VII. who engaged himſelf only in general Terms, ſhew'd a Diſpoſition to pleaſe the King; but ſaid that for this end he had a deſign to conſult the Cardinal de Sanctorum quatuor. Caſſali and Knight immediately went to that Cardinal to gain him over to their Intereſt,

Henry VIII.

* Mr. Rapin in his other Hiſtory gives this general Account of the three Engliſh Hiſtorians who have treated more largely of this Matter than any others, viz. Sanders, the Lord Herbert, and Dr. Burnet the late Biſhop of Salisbury. Sanders in his Hiſtory of the Schiſm of England, takes pains to run down Henry VIII. and to ſhew that the Reformation of England, to which he gives the Name of Schiſm, was only owing to Henry's Amour with Anne of Bolleyn; by which Suggeſtion that Writer thought he had given a mortal Stab to the Reformation; becauſe Mankind would judge that a Building rais'd upon ſuch a Foundation cou'd not be the Work of God. Lord Herbert in his Hiſtory of Henry VIII. gave a large Account indeed of this Event, but only related naked Facts, and left his Reader to form his own Conſequences. Dr. Burnet's chief View, in his Hiſtory of the Reformation, was to ſhew, that tho' the Divorce made way for the Reformation, yet it was purely accidental. And he has ſo fully confuted the palpable Falſhoods with which Sanders's Hiſtory abounds upon this Subject, that after what the Biſhop has ſaid, no Man of Candour will eſteem Sanders for an Author of Credit.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

tereſt, in which they found no great difficulty, or at leaſt he pretended to be entirely in the King's Intereſt. Yet after having examin'd the four Acts, he found ſo many material Flaws in them, eſpecially in the Commiſſion, that there was a neceſſity for drawing up others. But all this not ſufficing to gain that time which the Pope wanted, and the Ambaſſadors continually preſſing him to Subſcribe the Acts, he reſolv'd at laſt to ſign three of them, viz. the Commiſſion, the Decretal, and the Diſpenſation for the King to marry another Woman. The Pope amuſes the King by ſending him inſignificant Bulls. Theſe Acts when ſent to England, were found to be of no Service. For the Commiſſion was dated in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, while the Pope was Priſoner there; the Decretal contain'd no Clauſe which cou'd hinder the Pope from revoking it; and the Diſpenſation was only conditional, in caſe that Henry's former Marriage ſhould be declar'd void. Beſides, there was a certain Clauſe in it, which left the Pope at liberty to revoke it whenever he thought fit, viz. That he granted the Diſpenſation, as far as he might without offending God, notwithſtanding any Prohibitions of the Divine Law, or other whatſoever declaring the contrary, as far as the Apoſtolical Power extended.

Henry demands other Bulls. ALL this being liable to numerous Exceptions, Henry caus'd other Bulls to be demanded, but the Pope who was inclin'd to ſee the Iſſue of the Naples Expedition, before he came to any Determination, found a way to ſhuffle it off; and in order to gain time, only told Caſſali in ſecret, that the King wou'd do better to marry another Woman, and that it wou'd be more natural to pardon a Fault when committed, than to permit it. Pope's ſly advice to him. Henry not caring to follow this advice, which he look'd upon as a Snare to deliver him up to the Pope's Diſcretion, ſent Fox and Gardiner * to him to ſollicit the Diſpatch of the new Bulls. Gardiner and Fox ſent to Rome. When theſe two Envoys came to the Pope, Lautrec was in full March towards the Kingdom of Naples; but on the other hand, the Imperial Army was march'd out of Rome to ſtop his Progreſs, ſo that it was not doubted but a Battle wou'd quickly enſue between the two Armies. As it was not for the Pope's Intereſt to determine himſelf before the Iſſue of it, he made uſe of all the ſervile Stratagems in nature to gain time. And at laſt being extremely preſs'd by the King's Envoys, he ſign'd a Bull, which empower'd Cardinal Wolſey to give Judgment on the Affair of the Divorce, after taking the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or ſuch other Biſhop as he pleas'd for his Aſſociate. Pope grants a new Commiſſion to Wolſey.

YET this Bull, as favourable as it was, was not thought ſufficient for two Reaſons. In the firſt place, there was no Clauſe in it to hinder the Pope from revoking it. In the ſecond place, it was believ'd, that a Sentence paſs'd by a Judge who was manifeſtly devoted to the King, might be look'd upon as null. Conſequently the King thinking that the Pope had really a Deſign to gratify him, thought it convenient to take all the Precautions poſſible to hinder the Sentence when paſs'd from being conſtrued as a Sentence extorted. Therefore he deſir'd the Pope that he wou'd pleaſe to join another Cardinal in Commiſſion with Cardinal Wolſey, in quality of Legate. King deſires the Pope to join another Legate to Wolſey. But by this means he quite ſpoil'd his Affair, becauſe he furniſh'd the Pope with a plauſible Pretence to prolong the time; whereas if he had let Wolſey have been the ſole Judge of his Cauſe, it wou'd have very much embaraſs'd both the Emperor and the Pope. Juſt at the time of making this demand, Lautrec was actually beſieging Naples, and in a fair way to make himſelf Maſter of that City, and all the reſt of the Kingdom. This made the Pope much more pliable, but as the King himſelf had given him opportunity to temporiſe, he did not neglect it. At the ſame time that he pretended a Reſolution to grant the King his Deſire, he found means to render that Favour of no ſervice to him, if it happen'd that the War ſhou'd take a different turn from what was expected, being nevertheleſs ready to confirm it if France had the Advantage. Another Commiſſion to Wolſey and Campeggio. Therefore he ſign'd a Bull, which appointed the Cardinals, Thomas Wolſey and Lawrence Campeggio †, his Legates in England, to judge of the Affair of the Divorce; and he put the Decretal Bull, which diſſolv'd the King's Marriage with Catherine, into the hands of Campeggio. Moreover, he engag'd himſelf in writing not to revoke the Legates Power. But before we go farther, 'tis proper to ſtop and juſt take an Obſervation of the Artifices tifices he made use of to gain time. The Commission for Wolsey alone was sign'd on the 13th of April. About a Month after, Cardinal Campeggio was declar'd Legate jointly with Wolsey in a Consistory; but his Commission was not dispatch'd 'till the 6th of June. The Engagement not to recall the Legates was dated the 23d of July; the Decretal was not seal'd 'till the Month of August, and Campeggio did not set out with it 'till September, nor arrive in England 'till October: So that when he came away, it was at a Juncture wherein the Pope was in no more Danger from France, but had every thing to fear from the Emperor; for the Siege of Naples was rais'd, and the French Army ruin'd. Therefore when Campeggio left Italy, Clement VII. had resolv'd before-hand to give no Satisfaction to the King, and to make an Accommodation with the Emperor. But since it was necessary, in order to get the better Terms, to make Charles V. believe that he was in a strict League with France and England, he made no scruple to give Henry all the Hopes possible that the Affair of the Divorce wou'd terminate to his Satisfaction. For this reason he sent Campeggio to England with that very Decretal in his Pocket, which Henry so passionately desir'd; but he gave him express Instructions to spin out the matter as far as possible; to give no Sentence without positive Orders from him; and above all things, not to suffer the Decretal to go out of his hands, and not so much as to shew it to any but to the King, and Cardinal Wolsey.

* Stephen Gardiner was at that time Cardinal Wolſey's Secretary, and Fox was the King's Almoner; The former a Canoniſt, the latter a Divine.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

Pope's Instructions to Campeggio.

WHILE Campeggio was on his Journey, the Emperor's Ministers produc'd an authentick Copy of a certain pretended Brief from Julius II. whereby that Pope confirm'd the Dispensation for Henry's Marriage with Catherine, notwithstanding Catherine's former Marriage with Arthur had been consummated; whereas in the Bull of Dispensation, 'tis said, notwithstanding the Marriage, &c. had been celebrated, and perhaps consummated. They pretended to demonstrate from this Brief that Julius II. was not surpriz'd into it, because he suppos'd that the former Marriage had been consummated. But many reasons manifestly shew'd the Forgery of this Brief. In the first place there was no notice taken of it in the Archives, or Offices of the Records. Secondly, as the Dispensation had been granted upon Catherine's Petition, that Princess cou'd not alledge that her Marriage with Arthur had been consummated, because at the beginning of the Process relating to the Divorce she had affirm'd the contrary upon Oath. In the third place, this Brief was dated the 26th of December, 1503. Now as in all the Pope's Briefs the Year begins upon Christmas-day, the 25th of December, it happen'd that according to this way of dating Briefs, the 26th of December 1503, answers to the 26th of December 1502, according to the common Date; that is to say, ten Months before Julius IId's Exaltation to the Papal Chair.

The Emperor's Ministers produce a sham Brief, to delay the Affair.

Proofs of it.

HENRY VIII.

AFTER the Army of France which besieg'd Naples was dispers'd, and when the Pope had resolv'd upon an Accommodation with the Emperor, the Affair of the Divorce met with more and more Remoras every day. Campeggio did his Master very good Service by the several Artifices which he invented to retard the Proceedings, tho' he always pretended to the King that he was intirely in his Interest; 'till at last he receiv'd an express Order to burn the Decretal, which he punctually obey'd. In short, to avoid prolixity, the King suspecting there was some Mystery in these affected Delays sent Vannes and Bryan to Rome, to find out the meaning of it. These two Envoys, after having often sisted, sollicited, and even threaten'd the Pope, wrote at length to the King that it was in vain for him to expect any good from the Court of Rome; which was the Reason that the King resolv'd at last to have Judgment given on the Affair in England by the two Legates, who met on the 31st of May by virtue of the King's Licence. Wolsey, tho' the oldest Cardinal, gave the Precedency to Campeggio; who, according to the Orders he had receiv'd from the Pope, made it his whole study to spin out the Affair to a great length. In the first Session the King and Queen were summon'd to appear before the Legates on the 18th of June. So that here was already a Delay of 18 Days, tho' the Parties were both at London, or in some of the Royal Palaces in the Neighbourhood.

The Pope orders the Decretal to be burnt.

The King sends more Envoys to Rome.

Queen Catherine protests against the Legates.

IN the mean time the Queen having excepted against the two Legates, her Protest was rejected, and that occasion'd a Delay of four Days more. On the 21st the King and Queen appear'd, and the Queen was again summon'd for the 25th; but instead of appearing, she sent an Appeal to the Legates against their Proceedings; which Appeal not being admitted, she was pronounc'd Contumax, but had farther time allow'd her to the 28th, upon which Day the Legates began the Process, and heard Witnesses. But by reaſon of certain Holidays obſerv'd at Rome, the Court adjourn'd to the 12th of July, and 'till then the Legates did not renew the Proceſs, which they continued to the 14th, 17th, and 21ſt. And finally, on the 23d, when it was expected that they wou'd have pronounc'd Sentence, Campeggio adjourn'd the Court to the 21ſt of October, upon account of the great Holidays which would not be over at Rome 'till that Day. From hence 'tis plain, that this Cardinal improv'd all Opportunities to do his Maſter good Service; but no body knows what to think of Cardinal Wolſey, who ſo far yielded to the Artifices of his Colleague, as to abuſe a Maſter who had heap'd ſo many Favours on him. While the Suit was carrying on in England, the Pope receiv'd the News that his Treaty with the Emperor had been concluded at Barcelona. And immediately before the ſame was publiſh'd, he granted an Avocation of the Proceſs to Rome, and ſent away an Expreſs to inform the Legates of it. In the Bull of Avocation Henry was cited to appear at Rome in 40 Days, with a Denunciation of divers Cenſures if he did not obey. But afterwards the Pope diſown'd thoſe Cenſures, and made the King Satisfaction. Thus was Henry amus'd for two whole Years; and after having entertain'd hopes which he thought well-grounded, of ſuecceding in his Deſign, he ſaw himſelf farther as it were from his Journey's end than when he firſt ſet out. The Artifices which the Pope made uſe of were ſo manifeſt, that it wou'd only be Loſs of Time to inſiſt upon the particular Inſtances. He wanted to recover Ravenna and Cervia, to put himſelf in poſſeſſion of Modena and Reggio, to reunite Ferrara to the Church, to reeſtabliſh the Family of Medicis in the Government of Florence, and Duke Sforza at Milan. But all this cou'd not be done without the Emperor's Aſſiſtance: Even tho' France had been victorious, ſhe cou'd not have ſerv'd the Pope in any thing like it; ſo that 'twas very happy for him that the Emperor got the upper hand in Italy, and thereby found himſelf in a fair way to obtain what he wiſh'd, to which the Affair of Henry VIIIth's Divorce was not unſerviceable. No wonder therefore that he turn'd to that ſide which was moſt favourable to him. As to the main Point of the Divorce, I mean the Right of the Parties in Religion and Conſcience, that was not what troubled his Head, becauſe he only had a View to his own private Intereſts; ſo that the Reaſons alledg'd on both ſides were all to no purpoſe, and only ſerv'd to gain the Pope time, which it was his Intereſt to prolong.

The Pope removes the Cauſe to Rome.

Cites Henry thither under certain Menaces, which he afterwards revokes.

Henry did not think proper to obey the Summons, nor was the Pope in great haſte to puſh on the Affair, being pleaſed to find that he had brought it to ſuch a paſs, that nothing cou'd be done in it without him, and that he had ſatisfied the Emperor.

SOMETIME after, Henry hearing of Thomas Cranmer, a Clergyman of profound Knowledge and Judgment, receiv'd advice from him; which was ſo agreeable, that he reſolved to purſue it: His Propoſal was to conſult the Univerſities, and the moſt celebrated Divines of Europe, upon the Affair of the Divorce; which, ſaid Cranmer, wou'd be attended with a great Advantage: for if the Learned and the Univerſities determin'd that the Diſpenſation of Julius II. was ſufficient, the King's Conſcience would be thereby quieted; but if on the contrary, the Opinions of the Univerſities were againſt the Diſpenſation, the Pope wou'd never venture to give any Deciſion contrary to Opinions ſo generally receiv'd and approv'd.

Henry takes advice of Cranmer.

THE Adjournment of the Cauſe of the Divorce to Rome was immediately follow'd by Cardinal Wolſey's Diſgrace, of which I intend to treat in an Article by itſelf. At the ſame time Campeggio return'd to Rome, very glad that he got off with a whole Skin, after he had received ſome Mortification *.

Campeggio returns to Rome.

THE Treaty of Cambray betwixt the Emperor and France being concluded on the 5th of Auguſt 1529, the Children of France were ſet at liberty in the Year following. The Emperor repairing afterwards to Bologna, there ſettled the Affairs of Italy. Francis Sforza was re-eſtabliſhed at Milan, and the Family of Medicis acquir'd the Sovereignty of Florence. Conſequently Henry found himſelf all at once depriv'd of the Aſſiſtance of France, and of the hopes of any Opportunity in his power to give the Emperor a Diverſion in Italy. He did Sforza eſtabliſh'd at Milan, and the Houſe of Medicis at Florence.

* What this was, we learn from Lord Herbert, who tells us, that when he went aboard his Ship, the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers ranſack'd all his Coffers, Bags and Papers, on pretence of ſearching for Money and Letters which he carried from England to Rome, but with real Hopes of recovering that Decretal Bull which the King ſo much long'd for, and of finding ſome Love-Letters which had paſs'd betwixt King Henry and Anne of Bolleyn; and that Campeggio complain'd of it to the King, threatning he wou'd not proceed in his Voyage 'till he had a Reparation; but none was made him.

did not doubt but the Pope wou'd at laſt give Sentence againſt him, and commit the Execution of it to the Emperor; and in the mean time he had neither Friends nor Allies. By good Luck for him, the Troubles in Germany upon the ſcore of Religion, and the Preparations of the Turks againſt Hungary, hinder'd the Emperor from thinking of England. For this reaſon alſo the Pope was afraid to precipitate his Sentence, leſt he ſhould time it ill; and therefore he ſtill endeavour'd to amuſe Henry, with hopes that the Affair of the Divorce would terminate in his favour. 'Twas this that induced Henry to make one Effort more, by ſending Ambaſſadors to the Pope and the Emperor, who were then together at Bologna. The Pope indeed ſhew'd a Diſpoſition to ſatisfy him; but the Emperor ſtrenuouſly oppos'd it, and ſaid, that he would never abandon the Queen his Aunt.

Henry ſends Ambaſſadors to the Pope and Emperor.

Univerſities of Europe decide in his Favour.

DURING this, the moſt celebrated Univerſities of Europe, as well as thoſe of Oxford and Cambridge, were conſulted by the King's order; and almoſt every one decided in his favour. But the Pope and the Emperor did not intend to conform to their Deciſions. Mean while Henry, who had reſolv'd to get that Satisfaction in his own Dominions which he could not obtain at Rome, propos'd to make great uſe of the Deciſions of the Learned, in order to convince his Subjects of the Juſtice of his Divorce. The Reaſons that had engaged him to make application for it firſt of all to the Pope, were two: 1. His Prepoſſeſſion in favour of the Head of the Church. 2. His Fear leſt his being embroil'd with the Pope ſhould involve him in Troubles, by reaſon of the Prejudices of the common People, and particularly of the Clergy and Monks, as happen'd to Henry II. and John. But the artful Conduct of Clement VII. obliging him to take other meaſures, he was glad to find that the People of England in his time had not near ſo much Eſteem and Veneration for the Pope as their Anceſtors had. Wickliff's Doctrine was not yet entirely ſuppreſſed in England, while on the other hand the Books of Luther and other Reformers had open'd the Eyes of abundance of People. As ſoon as they found the King ready to fall out with the Pope, it made many the bolder to propagate novel Opinions, eſpecially with regard to the Papal Power. Conſequently the King was not a little pleas'd to find ſo general a Diſpoſition among his Subjects, to ſupport him in that entire Rupture which he foreſaw wou'd enſue with Rome. For this reaſon therefore, when he cou'd depend no longer on the Pope, he reſolv'd to apply to his Parliament and the Clergy of England for that Remedy which he had in vain expected from abroad. But that the Pope might have no reaſon to complain that they did not let him know what they intended to do in England, the King caus'd the Great Men of the Realm to write a very ſharp Letter to him, wherein they told him that the King's Cauſe was their own, and that if he refus'd the King Satisfaction any longer, they themſelves knew where to find that Remedy which they had in vain expected from Rome. The Pope return'd them a very moderate Anſwer, and actually inſinuated to Caſſali that there was a poſſibility of accommodating this Affair by a Licence which he wou'd grant to the King to have two Wives. But Henry was ſo much upon his Guard againſt the Pope's Complaiſance, that he wou'd not hearken to the Expedient. And fearing leſt the Pope, who was entirely manag'd by the Emperor, wou'd fulminate an Excommunication againſt him, or elſe lay his Kingdom under an Interdict, he iſſued a Proclamation, forbidding the receiving any Bull from the Pope which was prejudicial to the Rights of the Crown. And when that was done, he publiſh'd his Reaſons for demanding the Divorce, that he might meet with the leſs Oppoſition to his Deſign in Parliament. The Pope and the Emperor being diſguſted with each other, and the Marriage propos'd betwixt the Duke of Orleans and Catherine de Medicis, being too honourable and advantageous an Offer for him to refuſe, there was a very great probability that it wou'd not be long e'er Clement VII. wou'd ſtrictly unite with France. Henry thinking this a very lucky Juncture, aſſembled the Parliament, and acquainted them of his Deſign to cauſe his Marriage to be diſſolv'd, and the Reaſons why. Afterwards he caus'd the ſame Reſolution to be communicated to the Clergy in Convocation, who decided that the King's Marriage was contrary to the Law of God. And for the preſent this was all the King deſir'd.

NOT many Days after this, the whole Body of the Clergy was charg'd with having violated the Statutes of the Proviſors and Præmunire, by owning the Legantine Authority which Cardinal Wolſey had aſſum'd to himſelf, without any authentick Permiſſion from the King. As Wolſey had been condemn'd upon the ſame ſcore, the Clergy receiv'd the like Sentence, by which all their Livings were forfeited to the King. At another time, time, they wou'd not have been ſo treated with Impunity, and Excommunications wou'd not have been ſpar'd. But at this Juncture, the Clergy had no Power upon Earth to ſtand by them: For on the one hand, the King was embroil'd with the Pope, and had forbid the Importation of his Bulls into the Kingdom: and on the other hand, the Laity were in no manner of Diſpoſition to ſupport the Intereſts of the Clergy, with whom they were diſguſted, nor to receive any Orders from the Pope, in caſe he had pleas'd to have interpos'd in the Affair. So that the Province of Canterbury aſſembled in Synod or Convocation, reſolv'd to offer the King a Preſent of 100,000 l. Sterling, to ſave their Revenues. In purſuance of this Reſolution, ſome of that Body were order'd to draw up an Act in form of Letters Patent, whereby the [a] Clergy gave the King the ſaid Sum of 100,000 l. In the firſt place, becauſe of his great Merit. Secondly, as a Teſtimony of the grateful Senſe they had of the Advantages which he had procur'd for the Church, by his Arms and Pen. Thirdly, becauſe of his Zeal againſt the Lutherans, who aim'd at the Ruin of the Church of England, of which the Clergy own'd him to be Protector and Supreme Head. Fourthly and laſtly, in hopes that the King wou'd pleaſe to grant the Clergy a Pardon for all the Faults they had committed, contrary to the Statutes of Proviſors and Premunire. When this Act was read in the Aſſembly, it was very much oppos'd with reſpect to the Clauſe which eſtabliſh'd the King's Title of Supreme Head of the Church of England. But the King having ſignify'd to the Convocation, that he wou'd reject the ſaid Act if that Clauſe was taken out of it, they were forc'd to comply. The Convocation of the Province of York imitated that of Canterbury, in making the like Act, whereby they gave the King about 19,000 *l. Thus Henry VIII. obtain'd or rather extorted from the Church of England the Acknowledgment of his Supremacy, of which he afterwards made great Uſe. The King being ſatisfy'd, granted an Amneſty firſt to the Clergy, and afterwards one of the ſame Nature to the Laity; for there was ſcarce a Man in the Kingdom but had been guilty of the pretended Crime of acknowledging the Legate's Authority. As to the Monaſteries, they were forc'd to compound with the King, in order to obtain the Pardon which they as much wanted as others. The Populace, far from making any Diſturbance in favour of the Clergy and the Monks, as they did formerly, expreſs'd a Joy on the contrary to ſee them humbled; and the Pope being afraid to reſent it at ſuch a Juncture, reſolv'd to diſſemble his Indignation.

Joy of the People at the Diſgrace of the Clergy.

MEAN time Henry, who wiſh'd to ſee an End put to the Affair of his Divorce, if poſſible, without any Noiſe, made his laſt Efforts to oblige the Queen to conſent to it, but all was to no purpoſe. She ſtill inſiſted that ſhe was his lawful Wife, and ſo would abide till ſhe was ſeparated from him by a Decree from the Pope. Being ſo fix'd in her Reſolution, the King took his Leave of her on the 14th of July 1531. after having order'd one of his Royal Palaces for her Reſidence [b]; and it does not appear that he ever ſaw her more.

THEY who had embrac'd the Reformation, looking upon the Quarrel betwixt the King and Pope as a Door for introducing the new Religion into the Kingdom, took occaſion from thence to publiſh their Sentiments with the more liberty. But the King ſoon check'd their audaciouſneſs, by putting two or three of the boldeſt of them to death [c]. For he had not chang'd his former Sentiments in the point of Doctrine; and tho' he began to think that Religion might very well ſubſiſt without a Papal Power, yet he was cautious of ſhewing ſo much regard for the Proteſtants as ſhou'd give cauſe to charge him with a Deſign to deſtroy the antient Religion in his Kingdom.

THE Parliament being reaſſembled in the beginning of the Year 1532, preſented an Addreſs to the King, praying he wou'd give them Leave to ſet about the Reformation of certain Abuſes which were crept into the Eccleſiaſtical Immunities. 'Twas the King himſelf who by his Friends in the Horſe influenc'd the Parliament to preſent ſuch Addreſs to him. He was afraid of meeting with great oppoſition from the Clergy, as well upon account of his Divorce as his Supremacy, for he knew that the Majority of them were ſtrongly

But ſince the publication of this Piece, which we find printed p. 413. of the XIVth Vol. of the Fœdera, one may venture to call it not a Petition, but a publick Grant of the Clergy in form of Letters Patent.

strongly attach'd to the Pope. Therefore he had a mind to let them see how much they wou'd need his Protection if they shou'd offer to oppose his Design: And that was the only View he had in this proceeding. But that the Clergy might not be frighten'd, he contented himself with the Regulation of some small Abuses; and at the same time, to make them Amends, got the Parliament to pass an Act to abolish the Annates *, which were a great Burden to the Church of England, and to fix the Price of the Bulls for Bishopricks. By this Act it was enacted, that if the Pope refus'd to grant Bulls, the Bishops shou'd be establish'd in their Sees by other methods. But as the King did not yet despair of an Accommodation with the Pope, he contriv'd it so that the Parliament put it into his power to abolish the Act if he thought fit. The Pope complain'd of this Statute, but the King's Ministers told him he need not be so uneasy, because there was a Remedy still left.

Act for abolishing the Annates.

Thomas Audley made Lord-Keeper.

AFTER the passing of this Act, Thomas More the High Chancellor resign'd his Office, and the Great Seal was given to Thomas Audley. Clement VII. perceiving what a turn things had taken in England, was very much embaras'd. Henry, by suppressing the Annates, had made him sensible that this was but a Flea-bite to what he might be capable of doing afterwards, and that he was in a condition to push things still farther. On the other hand, the Emperor severely threaten'd him if he satisfy'd the King of England in the Affair of the Divorce, and was actually prepar'd to have taken Florence from the House of Medicis, with the same ease as he had put them in possession. Therefore the Pope, as he said himself, was in a manner aground betwixt two, there being great danger that England wou'd fall off from the Church, and the State of Florence from the Pope's Family. In this Confusion he stuck for a while, not knowing which way to determine himself. But at length his private Interest prevailing, he declar'd to the Ministers of England, that he cou'd no longer delay summoning the King, to the end that he might be able to judge of the Queen's Appeal. Upon this Karne was sent to Rome with the new Title of Excusator, to give the King's Reasons why he cou'd not attend. Mean time he was summon'd to appear by his Proxy after the Holidays, which were to end on the 1st of October. Henry having consulted several Universities, pro-

But he resolves to cite King Henry to Rome, who sends an Excusator.

* These Annates were so call'd, because they were the entire Revenues of one Year, in the nature of First-Fruits, which every Bishop and Clergyman paid to the Pope, at his first Entrance into his Living: Godwin de Præsulibus Angliæ has given the Rate of every Bishoprick in the King's Books, and the Sum they were tax'd at for First-Fruits to the Pope, which may not improperly be asserted here.

And as every inferior Clergyman did also pay a full Year's Revenue of his Benefice when he first enter'd upon it, one may venture to conclude, that there was three times more Grist brought to the Pope's Mill from all the Livings in England than from the Bishopricks. Dr. Burnet observes, that since the beginning of the Reign of Henry VII. to this time 800,000 Ducats had been carry'd out of England to Rome on this very account, and the Ducats were then computed at about 8*s*.

protested against this Citation, according as they had determin'd it, and yet for all this, he was again cited upon the 4th of October. But as the Pope was about going to confer with the Emperor at Bologna, he promis'd that nothing shou'd be done in the Affair of the Divorce 'till his Return.

Conferences betwixt the Pope and the Emperor.

And betwixt the Kings of England and France.

IN October that same Year, Francis I. and Henry had a Conference in Picardy; and some say that as soon as Henry return'd from this Interview, he privately married Anne of Bolleyn at Calais, but 'tis more probable that the Marriage was not solemniz'd 'till January following.

Henry marries Anne of Bolleyn.

THE Parliament meeting again in February 1533, pass'd an Act to prohibit the carrying of Appeals to Rome. And not long after Thomas Cranmer was made Archbishop of Canterbury, in the room of Warham who died the Year before.

Cranmer made Archbishop of Canterbury.

ABOUT the same time Henry publish'd his Marriage with Anne of Bolleyn, tho' his former Marriage was not yet dissolv'd; but there was a Necessity for his making it known, because the new Queen was big with Child.

Henry reveals his Marriage.

Cranmer had no sooner taken possession of his new Dignity, but he summon'd Queen Catherine to appear before him on the 20th of May *, and because she refus'd Obedience, he issued a Sentence on the 23d of that Month, declaring the King's former Marriage null and void: and some days after this, he issued another, confirming his second Marriage with Anne of Bolleyn, who was afterwards crown'd on the first of June. It cannot be deny'd but there was some Irregularity in the King's Conduct; for since he had a mind to have his Marriage made void in Law, one wou'd have thought he shou'd have staid 'till this had been done, before he married a second time. As soon as the former Marriage was made void, the King sent notice of it to Catherine, and endeavour'd to persuade her to submit to the Archbishop's Sentence; but his Efforts were in vain. From that time it was order'd that her only Title shou'd be Princess Dowager of Wales †. When the Pope was inform'd of what had pass'd in England, he repeal'd the two Sentences of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and threaten'd the King with Excommunication if by such a time he did not restore all things in integrum, as they were before the two Sentences of the Archbishop; but the King and the Archbishop appeal'd from thence to the next General Council.

THE Marriage of the Duke of Orleans with Catherine de Medicis being at last agreed on, the Pope and the King of France met at Marseilles, where the Nuptials were consummated, but that was not all they went thither for. The Pope wanted to break off Francis from the Interests of the King of England, while it was the View of Francis to induce the Pope to give satisfaction to Henry, and then he propos'd to join with both against the Emperor, in order to recover Genoa and Milan. 'Twas with this view that he mightily press'd Henry to send some Person in whom he cou'd confide, to Marseilles, and upon his earnest Instances Henry made choice of the Duke of Norfolk; but being inform'd during this, of the Sentence issued at Rome against him, he recall'd his Ambassador, who was already set out, and sent Gardiner, Bryan and Bonner to Marseilles.

Henry orders the Duke of Norfolk thither, and countermands him, sending others in his room.

IN the Interview which Francis had with the Pope, he got him to promise that he would give Henry satisfaction; but Bonner had like to have spoil'd all, by informing the Pope in person of the Appeal made by the King and the Archbishop from his Sentence to the next general Council. As soon as Francis was return'd to Paris, he sent John de Bellay, Bishop of that City, into England, to acquaint the King of the Expedients that had been contriv'd to accommodate the Affair of the Divorce to his Satisfaction. Henry approving of the Proposal, the Bishop of Paris set out Post, tho' it was in the Month of December, to go and acquaint the Pope of it. The only Difficulty which stuck with Clement VII. was, that he cou'd not entirely depend upon the King of England's bare Word, therefore he desir'd an Engagement from him in Writing; whereupon a Courier was quickly dispatch'd to England, and a certain time fix'd for his Return; the Pope protesting that if the Courier did not come back within that Term, he wou'd pronounce Sentence against Henry: For he had trifled with Henry so many Years, that he expected to be paid in his own Coin.

The Pope promises to give Henry Satisfaction.

But the Pope is loth to trust him without an Engagement under his Hand.

AS soon as the Emperor's Ministers were inform'd of the Pope's Engagement, they press'd him Day and Night to revoke it, and spar'd no Menaces to oblige him to it, but he did not dare to do it; and all that they cou'd get him to consent to, was, that if the King of England's Answer did not arrive by the time fix'd, he wou'd pronounce Sentence against him. The Courier not arriving on the Day expected, the Emperor's Ministers were so importunate with the timorous Pontiff, and threaten'd him so hard, that tho' the Bishop of Paris only begg'd for a Delay of six Days longer, he cou'd not not obtain it: And consequently the Pope publish'd his Sentence confirming the Lawfulness of Henry's Marriage with Catherine, and enjoining Henry to take his first Wife again, under grievous Penalties. Two days after this, the Courier came with the King's Engagements; but he was too late, and the Pope cou'd never be prevail'd on to revoke his Sentence; whereas if the Courier had arriv'd but two Days sooner, the Pope, as he had promis'd the King of France, wou'd have given a Sentence the very contrary; so that the Validity or Invalidity of Henry VIIIth's first Marriage depended only upon the Diligence of a Courier.

And because the Courier did not bring it by such a time was prevail'd on by the Emperor's Ministers to pass Sentence against Henry, and refuses to revoke it.

THE most material Acts of these six Years relating to the Affair of the Divorce are as follow.

Bull appointing Wolsey Judge of Henry's Divorce.

1. A BULL which empowers Cardinal Wolsey to judge definitively of the Affair of Henry VIIIth's Divorce; dated at Viterbo in the Ides of April, and the 5th Year of the Pontificate of Pope Clement VII. A. D. 1528.

THIS is the Bull which I said was granted in 1528, while Lautrec was marching to Naples. These are some Extracts of it.

Clemens Episcopus, &c.

Sanè ad aures nostras, ex plurimorum fide dignorum relatione, frequenter perlatum est de validitate illius matrimonii, quod charissimus in Christo filius Henricus, Angliæ Rex illustris, cum Catharina Regina, Sedis Apostolicæ dispensatione pretensâ, contraxisse & consummasse dignoscitur, subortam in partibus illis quæstionem, quæ licet in publicum Ecclesiæ judicium deducta hactenus non fuerit, &c.

i. e. THE Relation of very many Persons of undoubted Credit hath reach'd our Ears, concerning the Validity of that Marriage, which our most dear Son in Christ Henry, the illustrious King of England (a Dispensation from the Apostolic See being first had) was known to have contracted and consummated with Queen Catherine, from whence in those Parts a Controversy hath arisen, which hath not yet been try'd in any publick Court of Ecclesiastical Judicature, &c.

'TIS observable, that in this Bull there is no mention either of Motu Proprio, or of any Petition presented to the Pope; but that it was only granted upon publick Fame.

Circumspectioni tuæ, adjuncto tibi venerabili fratre nostro Archiepiscopo Canterburiensi, totius Angliæ Primate, & Sedis Apostolicæ legato nato, seu alio quocunque illius Regni Episcopo, dictumque matrimonium, si ab alterutrà parte petatur, prout animo conscientiæque tuæ juris ratio persuaserit, validum, justum, & legitimum, ac firmum esse: Aut è contra, invalidum, injustum, illegitimum, nullumque fuisse & esse; pro valido, justo, legitimo ac firmo, aut è contra, invalido, injusto, & illegitimo, nulloque haberi & deberi, definiendum, sententiandum & decernendum.

Denique tam Henrico Regi, quam Catharinæ Reginæ, ad alia vota commigrandi licentiam in Domino, facultatem tribuendum.

Secunda concluſio principalis in corpore 816 Quæſtionis, de Diſpenſatione Papæ prohibita circa hoc. Papa in primo gradu affinitatis ſicut conſanguinitatis, non poteſt diſpenſare, cum ſit contra jus Naturale & Divinum, quod uxoribus parentum exhiberemus reverentiam ſicut parentibus etiam noſtris. Item in linea tranſumali in primo gradu, prohibetur, conſanguinitas & affinitas, jure Divino & Naturali, nec Papa poteſt diſpenſare.

Unde etiam, tempore Legis Moſ. non licebat contrahere cum uxore fratris, niſi ad ſuſcitandum ſemen Fratris mortui. Nec modo licet Papæ ſuper hoc diſpenſare, quod illa Diſpenſatio facta fuit à Deo, ſicut pluralitas uxorum. In aliis gradibus proteſt diſpenſare, ut ſcriptum comperi & inveni.

i. e. "James de Lauſanne, upon the "fourth Chapter of Opinions, containing "161 Queſtions.

"The ſecond principal Concluſion in "the Body of the 116th Queſtion concerns "the Illegality of the Pope's Diſpenſation "in this matter. The Pope cannot grant "a Diſpenſation in the firſt Degree of "Affinity and Conſanguinity, becauſe it "is againſt the Law of Nature and the "Divine Law that we ſhould pay the "ſame Reſpect to the Wives of our Kin-"dred, as to our Kindred themſelves; "alſo in the collateral Line in the firſt "Degree, Conſanguinity and Affinity are "prohibited by the divine Law, and the "Law natural, nor can the Pope grant a "Diſpenſation.

"FROM whence alſo in the time of the "Moſaic Diſpenſation, it was not lawful "to marry a Brother's Wife, except for "the ſake of raiſing Seed to ſuch Brother "dying without Iſſue. Nor is it now lawful "for the Pope to diſpenſe with it, becauſe "that Diſpenſation was granted from God, "as was a plurality of Wives. But in "other degrees he may diſpenſe as I have "found it written.

III. Affairs relating to Cardinal Wolſey.

Wolſey's aſcendant over the King.

NEVER had any Miniſter or Favourite a greater Aſcendant over his Maſter, than Cardinal Wolſey had over Henry VIII. Pope Leo X was ſo ſenſible of it, that he made no ſcruple to tell Wolſey himſelf, that he knew with what eaſe he could perſwade or diſſwade the King juſt as he pleas'd. It is highly probable, as Polydore Virgil affirms, that Wolſey was the firſt Man that put it into the King's Head to be divorc'd from Queen Catherine. He was reſolv'd to be reveng'd of the Emperor who had trifled with him on account of the Papacy; and at the ſame time to be even with the Queen who could not help reproaching him for the Irregularities of his Life, unworthy of a Clergyman, a Biſhop, a Cardinal, and a Legate of the Holy See. When the Affair of the Divorce came firſt on the Carpet, the Cardinal ſpar'd no Pains nor Care to bring it about to the King's Satisfaction; but afterwards, whether he was diſcourag'd by the Difficulties that occurr'd in it, or whether he was brib'd by the Emperor or the Pope, he wiſh'd the King to drop it, and it is not unlikely that he himſelf made it his Endeavour to perſwade him to it. This however is certain, that after Campeggio's arrival in England, Wolſey, who was before a flaming Stickler for the Divorce, became very cold in the Affair, and readily gave in to all the Artifices which his Collegue made uſe of to ſpin it out: nay one may gather from his dying Words that he had endeavour'd to diſſwade the King from purſuing it; but the King's Love for Anne Bolleyn was an Obſtacle in the way which his Favourite could never get over. He thought, no doubt, to carry his Point by another Method, in raiſing ſuch Difficulties to diſcourage the King by the means of his Collegue Compeggio, as might ſeem inſuperable; and this was the very thing that ruin'd him. As he diſcover'd what he was driving at a little too ſoon, he drew upon him the Enmity of Anne of Bolleyn, who was reſolv'd to be reveng'd, and knew her Intereſt to be the ſtrongeſt: for no doubt ſhe was ſupported by the generality of the Courtiers, who had much ado to bear with a Prelate of his imperious Temper.

His Motives and Conduct in the Affair of Henry's Divorce.

His Miſtake, and the beginning of his Ruin.

BEFORE Campeggio ſet out on his Return for Rome, the King's Attorney-General had preferr'd an Indictment againſt Wolſey in the Star-chamber, for having preſum'd to exerciſe the Authority of the Pope's Legate, without firſt obtaining the King's Letters Patent; in which he had tranſgreſs'd the Statutes of Proviſors and Præmunire. It is aſtoniſhing that ſo wiſe a Man as the Cardinal ſhould neglect a Formality which the Laws of England had made ſo eſſential. But as the King himſelf, the whole Court, all the Clergy, and in ſhort the entire Kingdom, own'd him for Legate without any ſcruple, he either forgot, or wilfully neglected, to furniſh himſelf with an Inſtrument ſo neceſſary. Tho this was not the real Cauſe, yet it was made a Handle of for his Ruin. Some days after, the King took away the Great Seal from him, tho he had granted it to him for his Life; and the very next Day, which was the 18th of October 1529, the Attorney-General charg'd him with a freſh Information, upon which he was condemn'd, his Eſtate confiſcated to the King, and his Perſon outlaw'd. This done, the King order'd him to quit the Palace call'd York-houſe, where Whitehall now ſtands, and to retire to a Country-houſe in his Dioceſe of Wincheſter. Immediately upon this, an Inventory was taken of his Goods, and he was found poſſeſs'd of immenſe Wealth, which was all forfeited to the King. The Cardinal now finding himſelf at the Mercy of his Enemies, caus'd a Petition to be preſented to the King, praying his Protection to ſecure him againſt thoſe Affronts which private Men were now at Liberty to put upon him with Impunity. The King ſeem'd at that time to be inclinable to Clemency; for he not only granted him the Protection he deſir'd, but alſo the Liberty of making his Defence in any of the Courts of Juſtice. Moreover, he left him the Archbiſhoprick of York, and the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, and ſent him a certain Ring, as a Token that his Friendſhip for him ſtill continued. Then the Cardinal's Enemies were ſadly afraid that he would come again into Favour; and in order to avert ſuch a Blow as that would have been to the whole Party, they got the King's Conſent that Wolſey's Affair ſhould be brought before the Parliament. Conſequently 44 Articles of Impeachment were exhibited againſt him in the Houſe of Lords, very different from thoſe that had been produc'd by the Attorney-General, who adher'd ſtrictly to the expreſs Form of the Statute of Præmunire, which enacted that no Perſon ſhould be diſpens'd with from obſerving it, without the King's Letters Patent. But when all is done, tho, ſtrictly ſpeaking, it might have been ſaid that the Cardinal had tranſgreſs'd the ſaid Statute, yet this was a mere Quirk; becauſe tho the King did not expreſly approve of the Cardinal's Legantine Power by Letters Patent, he had own'd his Authority upon a thouſand Occaſions. Therefore in theſe new Articles, wherein there was no notice taken of ſuch a defect of Formality, the Cardinal was accus'd of having made a tyrannical Uſe of that Power and Intereſt he had with the King, and of Misbehaviour in his Poſt of Chancellor. And among the reſt there was one Article, importing that the Cardinal, tho he knew himſelf ſoundly pox'd, had the aſſurance to whiſper the King frequently in his Ear, and to blow his infectious Breath in his Face. The upper Houſe voted him guilty of High-Treaſon; yet in the lower Houſe he was ſo wittily defended by Cromwell *, who did not excuſe his Faults, but only ſhew'd he was not guilty of High-Treaſon as his Enemies had given out, that the Commons refus'd to carry their Reſentment ſo far as the Lords had done.

Houſe of Lords vote him guilty of High Treaſon.

Commons more moderate.

MEAN time the Cardinal was ſtill baniſh'd the Court †, fluttering betwixt Hope and Fear, and uncertain what the King intended to do with him. At length he thought all would be well again; for the King granted him a Pardon in Form, which was the moſt ample and circumſtantial that had ever been ſeen before. Some Days after, the King made certain Indentures with him, by which he left him the Archbiſhoprick of York, and the Titles of Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Abbot of St. Albans, reſerving the Revenues of the two latter to himſelf; only he gave him a Penſion of 1000 l. Sterling upon the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, and made him a Preſent of 6374 Pounds in Furniture, being part of his own Goods which had been forfeited. The reſt of his immenſe Wealth remain'd with the King, as well as the two Colleges of his Foundation at Ipſwich and Oxford. And all the Revenues thereof were ſeiz'd for the King, who founded thoſe Colleges again with the Title of Henry VIIIth's Colleges.

The King's Pardon and Preſents to him.

HENRY VIII.

BY all this it appear'd that the King did not intend to Ruin him abſolutely, but only to reduce him to a ſtate of Mediocrity. Accordingly he gave him leave to go and reſide in his Archbiſhoprick of York, where he had never been yet, and where it was neceſſary he ſhould be ſolemnly inſtall'd to qualify him for performing the Eccleſiaſtical Functions; for 'till then he had contented himſelf with the Title and Revenues. This was the Reaſon that he halted a few Days at Cawood (a Caſtle within ſeven Miles of York) 'till every thing was ready for his Inſtallation. But at the ſame time, his Enemies finding the King's Heart incline more and more to Clemency, and dreading the return of ſo dangerous a Miniſter, play'd ſo many Engines, and filled the King's Head with ſo many Suſpicions, that when the Cardinal leaſt of all expected it, he ſaw the Earl of Northumberland come in, who arreſted him in the King's Name for High Treaſon. Probably his Death was then reſolv'd upon, but he had the good Fortune to die * upon the Road as they were bringing him to London. Before he expir'd, he adviſ'd the Officer of the Guard, that if ever he had the Honour of being a Member of the Privy Council, he ſhould take great heed what he put in the King's Head, for he would never be able to drive it out again. In all appearance he alluded to the Affair of the Divorce. He ſaid alſo, that if he had but ſerv'd God with as much Zeal as he had ſerv'd the King, he ſhould not have been abandon'd in his Grey Hairs. But to ſpeak the Truth, he had no Cauſe to boaſt ſo much of his Fidelity to the King; for in all his Counſels he ſeldom had a View to any thing but his own private Intereſt.

His Journey to the North, and Arreſt for High-Treaſon.

His Death.

OF the Acts which relate to Cardinal Wolſey, there are a pretty many relating to his Foundation of the two Colleges at Ipſwich and Oxford, which he actually ſet about before the Affair of the Divorce, and which he finiſh'd while it was depending, by making a cunning Uſe of the then Diſpoſition of Clement VII, to refuſe nothing to the King, that he might the leſs reſent the Pope's artful Delays in the grand Affair. This is ſufficient to diſcover what was the motive of theſe Acts that relate to thoſe two Colleges, and

* THIS was he whoſe Abilities lifted him from one Poſt and Dignity to another, 'till he was created Earl of Eſſex, Lord Great-Chamberlain, &c.

THE chief Acts then that we find in these six Years relating to the Affairs of Cardinal Wolsey and his two Colleges, are as follows.

Pope's Bull for degrading of Criminal Priests. 239.

1. A Bull of Clement VII, licensing Cardinal Wolsey to give a Power to any one Bishop, assisted by some Abbats, to degrade Priests that have committed any Crime, in order for their Trial in a Temporal Court; dated at Orvieto the 4th of the Ides of May 1528. THIS Article will not take up much room; but something must be said of it, for the sake of Connection.

JAMES V was still in the Hands of the Earl of Angus, George Douglas his Brother, and Archibald Douglas their Uncle, who were Regents of the Kingdom. But in the Year 1528, Margaret the King's Mother, who had obtained a Divorce from the Earl of Angus, and was marry'd again to Henry Stewart, concerted her Measures so wisely, that she persuaded the young King to get out of the Hands of his Guardians. Accordingly, this Prince made his Escape, and shut himself up in Sterling, where he issued a Proclamation for diſſolving the Regency. Theſe three Noblemen made ſeveral Attempts, and even took Arms to recover their Authority. But they could not hinder the King from taking the Reins of Government into his own Hands, in a Parliament which was held in September after which the Douglaſſes were condemn'd as Rebels, and their Eſtates forfeited to the King; nevertheleſs they ſtill continued in Arms. But ſoon after, Henry VIII fearing that James would be prevailed on to break with him, and knowing that a War with Scotland would have been very inconvenient at the Juncture, found means to make a Peace, or rather a Truce with him for five Years; and obtain'd, by a ſeparate Article, that the Douglaſſes might retire into England and ſtay there, on Condition that if they made any Incurſion into Scotland, Henry ſhould repair the Damage as punctually as if it had been done by his own Subjects.

James V, the young King of Scotland, takes the Government out of the Hands of the Regency. Who are declared Rebels.

Henry makes a Truce with him.

IN 1532 there happen'd to be a Broil between the two Kings, which was very near occaſioning a Rupture; but was accommodated by the Mediation of the King of France.

THE reſt of the 14th Tome of the Fœdera, contains thoſe Acts which relate to Hiſtorical Tranſactions, from the beginning of the Year 1534, 'till towards the middle of the Year 1543. Mr. Rymer had more regard to the Proportion of his Tomes than to the Periods of Time by which the Events might be diſtinguiſh'd. But for my own part, as I have no other View than to ſhew the Relation which the ſeveral Acts bear to the Events we meet with in the Hiſtory, I think myſelf oblig'd to purſue another Method, and ſhall proſecute the farther Account of the Fœdera to the end of the Reign of Henry VIII; tho it carries me unavoidably into the xvth Tome, which contains the three laſt Years of this Reign. I think it not improper to divide the Tranſactions of theſe 13 Years of Henry VIII into four principal Articles. I. Of Affairs relating to Religion. II. Of foreign Affairs. III. Of the Affairs betwixt England and Scotland. IV. Of Affairs Domeſtic. It would be endleſs Labour to undertake a particular Explanation of the Occaſion and Motive of every ſingle Act in this Tome; but by reducing them under diſtinct Articles, we ſhall be able to diſtinguiſh in general thoſe that are the moſt uſeful; and that's enough for our Purpoſe.

HENRY VIII.

ARTICLE I. Affairs which relate to Religion.

TWO Reaſons hinder me from dwelling long upon this Article: The firſt is, becauſe every thing which relates to the Alterations made in England, with reſpect to Religion, has been written with ſo much Care and Exactneſs, by the celebrated Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, that it would be almoſt impoſſible to abridge his Work without ſpoiling it. The ſecond Reaſon is, the little Service that an Abridgment of that nature would be to this Account of the Fœdera; becauſe, for the Reaſon that I have already given, there are few Acts relating to that Subject in the thirteen laſt Years; therefore, I think it may be ſufficient to give the Subſtance of what paſs'd every Year upon this Head, and then direct to the Acts in the Fœdera which relate to thoſe Events.

Anno 1534. THE Subſtance of the Accommodation on foot betwixt Clement VII and Henry VIII, which was broke off by the Pope's Precipitancy, was, That the Cauſe of the Divorce ſhould be try'd by the ſacred College, excepting only the Cardinals of the Imperial Faction. Dr. Burnet obſerves here very judiciouſly, that whoever is Maſter of Henry VIIIth's Character, will never ſuppoſe that this Prince would have engaged to ſend a Proxy to Rome, and to conſent that the Cauſe ſhou'd be try'd there, if he had not been aſſur'd of the Succeſs: But I have another Remark, which I ſubmit to the Judgment of the Reader. Henry had laid claim to the Supremacy of the Church of England, a Prerogative of which he was always extremely jealous. Now, in order to his Accommodation with the Pope, there would be an abſolute Neceſſity for his quitting that Prerogative; but, I confeſs, I don't ſee any Appearance that he ever had any ſuch Intention; and my Reaſon is this: The Biſhop of Paris ſet out from London for Rome in December 1533, but on what Day I know not, nor the Day of his Arrival at Rome. Afterwards a Courier was ſent from Rome to London, and back from London to Rome. Now, ſuppoſing all the Diſpatch was made that could be in theſe three Voyages, it were in a manner impoſſible that Henry could receive the News of the Pope's Sentence given againſt him before the Month of February 1534. Mean time, the Parliament which met on the 15th of January had already taken ſuch Steps as ſhew that an Accommodation with the Court of Rome was what they did not dream of in England; which makes me imagine that the King made uſe of Artifice upon this Occaſion, and that he pretended to deſire an Accommodation on purpoſe to engage the Pope to paſs Sentence in his favour, and to get ſomething out of him afterwards, without any Intention to ſtand by ſuch pretended Agreement. Dr. Burnet paſſes very ſlightly over this Difficulty, either for want of duly conſidering it, or becauſe he did not think it was proper to preſs it. After having told us that Sir Edward Karne, whom the King ſent to Rome to officiate there as his Proctor, met the Biſhop of Paris upon the Road, who inform'd him of the ill Succeſs of the Affair: He proceeds thus; Henry being provok'd to ſee himſelf made the mere Jeſt of the Court of Rome, and deſpairing of any good Succeſs from the laſt Step he took, reſented it beyond meaſure, and reſolv'd therefore to break off from the Pope of Rome. This ſeems to intimate that Henry did not enter upon this Reſolution 'till he had been inform'd of what had paſs'd at Rome, but it was quite otherwiſe; for the Hiſtorian immediately adds what follows, And he had already prepar'd himſelf for it, becauſe in the Parliament which ſate from the 15th of January 1534 to the laſt Day of March, he had chang'd the whole Conſtitution of the ſpiritual Government of his Dominions. Now what could he mean by altering the whole ſpiritual Government of his Dominions, if he really deſign'd to ſtand to the Accommodation on foot with the Court of Rome, of which he had reaſon to expect the News every Moment? But ſuppoſing that he made uſe of this Artifice, on purpoſe only to get his Divorce juſtified by a Juridical Sentence from the Pope, and then to put a Joke upon him, I don't ſee any thing in this that bears the Face of a Contradiction.

THE Parliament above-mentioned, which ſate from the 15th of January to the end of March, paſs'd ſeveral Acts, which did not ſhew that they were very deſirous to be reconcil'd with Rome. In the firſt place, they diſqualify'd Biſhops from taking Cognizance of the Crime of Hereſy, tho without altering the Pains to which Hereticks were ſubject by the old Laws. It muſt be obſerved that the King's main View was to bring the Clergy under, to the end that he might peaceably enjoy his Supremacy; he being very ſenſible that the only People from whom he was to expect the greateſt Oppoſition, were the Clergy and Monks.

Biſhops diſqualified from trying Hereticks.

BY a ſecond Act, it was order'd, that the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions ſhould be examin'd, in order to preſerve ſuch as ſhould be judg'd neceſſary, and to aboliſh the others; and that for this Purpoſe, the King ſhould appoint 32 Commiſſioners, viz. 16 Members of Parliament, and 16 of the Clergy.

HENRY VIII.

Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions examined.

A THIRD Act confirm'd the Sentence paſs'd againſt Elizabeth Barton, commonly called the Nun, or Holy Maid, of Kent; who, pretending to be inſpir'd, had propheſy'd that if the King marry'd Anne of Bolleyn, he would die in a Month's time: She had alſo utter'd bitter Invectives and Menaces againſt the King and his Miniſters. Several Prieſts, Friers, and others were her Abettors, whoſe Aim was to rob the King of the Affections of his Subjects. Even Warham, Fiſher, and More, were made to believe that the Maid was really inſpir'd. But the King having order'd that ſhe ſhould be carefully examin'd, the whole Intrigue was found out, and the Nun with her Accomplices condemn'd to die. Tho they confeſs'd their Crime, yet Sanders puts them into the Roll of Martyrs. 'Tis obſervable, that the Parliament confirm'd the Condemnation of Elizabeth Barton, before they had receiv'd the News of Clement the VIIth's Sentence againſt the King. This confirms the Remark I made above, that according to all Appearrance, Henry only intended to amuſe the Pope in the Accommodation propos'd, becauſe if he had acted bonâ fide, nothing would have been more abſurd than to revive the Affair of the Nun of Kent, at a Juncture when the News of the Accommodation with Rome was expected every Hour.

THIS very Parliament, after having received Intelligence of what paſs'd at Rome, made four other Acts.

THE firſt confirm'd the Abolition of the Annates.

The Annates ſuppreſs'd.

THE ſecond entirely aboliſh'd the Pope's Authority in England, and ſettled the Manner of Electing and Conſecrating Biſhops for the futnre, without having recourſe to the Pope.

The Pope's Authority aboliſh'd together with Peter's Pence, and all Bulls from Rome.

THE third aboliſh'd St. Peter's Pence, and all manner of Bulls and Mandates iſſued by the Court of Rome.

THE fourth annull'd the Marriage of the King with Catherine of Arragon, and confirm'd his ſecond Marriage with Anne of Bolleyn. And it is enacted, moreover, that all Subjects, without exception, ſhould ſwear to the Obſervation of the ſaid Act, on pain of being declar'd guilty of High Treaſon.

The Act for annulling the King's firſt Marriage and confirming his ſecond.

AS ſoon as the Parliament was broke up, the King ſent Commiſſioners into the Counties to adminiſter the above-mention'd Oath to his Subjects; in which Oath, they did not not forget to inſert a Clauſe, acknowledging the King to be ſupreme Head of the Church of England. Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Sir Thomas More, for refuſing to take the ſaid Oath, were committed to Priſon.

A new Pope choſen.

CLEMENT VII dying in September, Cardinal Farneze ſucceeded him by the Name of Paul III; but the Change of a Pope had no effect in England. The Parliament met again upon the 23d of November, and paſs'd ſeveral other Acts which had a manifeſt Tendency to break all the Links of the Chain by which the Engliſh had been bound to the Pope.

More Acts paſs'd againſt the Authority and Intereſt of the Pope and Clergy.

THE firſt confirm'd the King's Title of ſupreme Head of the Church of England: The ſecond was againſt thoſe who had the Inſolence to ſpeak Evil of the King: The third depriv'd Perſons charg'd with High Treaſon, of the Benefit of Sanctuaries. The fourth eſtabliſhed the Form of an Oath with reſpect to the Act for ſettling the Succeſſion to the Crown. The fifth was a very unfortunate Act for the Clergy, becauſe it gave the King the Annates which had been taken away from the Pope: Moreover, it granted to the King the Tenth of the Revenues of Benefices. The ſixth order'd the Eſtabliſhment of twenty-ſix Suffragan Biſhops, with a Power to each Dioceſan Biſhop to nominate two Perſons, of whom the King ſhould chuſe one. Theſe Suffragan Biſhops were properly what the Ancients call'd Chorepiſcopi *.

Annates and Tenths of Benefices granted to the King.

Fiſher and More excepted out of the Amneſty.

THE ſame Parliament condemn'd Fiſher and More to perpetual Impriſonment; and the King expreſly excepted them out of the general Pardon, which he granted not long after †.

The Pope's Name oblitterated, and his Authority renounced by the Biſhops.

THE Parliament being broke up, the King order'd, by a Proclamation, that the Name of a Pope ſhould be expung'd out of all the Books where it could be found, in order, if poſſible, to bury it in Oblivion; and afterwards, all the Biſhops expreſly renounc'd their Obedience to the Biſhop of Rome. Some, no doubt, did this againſt the Grain, of which Number was Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter; but a blind Obedience in this point was the only thing a Man cou'd do to preſerve himſelf in the King's Favour.

ANNO 1535. Henry having thus broke off all manner of Communication with Rome, reſolv'd to leave no Stone unturn'd to ſupport what he had done; tho he could not but ſee that the Submiſſion of his Subjects to the new Laws was owing to the Fear of a very great Number of them, rather than to any Change of their Opinions. But he thought that a few Examples of Severity would be ſufficient to keep the People in Awe, and it was for that very Reaſon he excepted Fiſher and More out of the general Pardon. On the other hand, it was a Pleaſure to him to find Religion in ſuch a State after the Breach with Rome, as render'd him more abſolute: ſome wiſh'd the Reformation to be puſh'd farther, and others dreaded nothing ſo much. Conſequently, each of the Parties ſtriving by a blind Complaiſance to obtain his Favour, it liſted him to a Degree of Authority to which none of his Predeceſſors ever attain'd; and the rather, becauſe the Supremacy with which he was veſted, put him into a Condition to humble the Clergy, who were not ſupported by the Pope now, as they were formerly.

HENRY VIII.

Henry's Power at home more abſolute.

BUT of all the King's Subjects, the Monks were the moſt untractable; for they continually rav'd againſt his Conduct, and charg'd him with being the ſole Author of every thing that was done againſt the Pope: Nay, a Cordelier, nam'd Peyto, had the Inſolence, when he preach'd before him, to tell him, That the Dogs would lick his Blood, as they did formerly that of Ahab. Theſe ſcandalous Invectives, which tended manifeſtly to rob him of the Hearts of his Subjects, gave him ſo much Uneaſineſs, that he cauſed ſeveral Priors and Monks who had transgreſs'd in that Kind to be hang'd: Fiſher and More were alſo executed. Paul III hearing the News, cauſed a Bull to be drawn up which excommunicated Henry, and abſolv'd his Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance; but he deferr'd the Publication of it to a moreconvenient Opportunity.

Priors and Monks hang'd, Fiſher and More exempted.

Bull for excommunicating Henry.

HENRY did not only put the Laws in ſevere Execution againſt ſome inſolent Monks, but he took it into his Head to ſuppreſs all the Monaſteries, and actually propoſed it to his Council; mean time he was made ſenſible that there would be Danger in attempting it all at once, and therefore he reſolv'd to do it by degrees. He cauſed a general Viſitation to be made of the Monaſteries by certain Viſitors appointed by his Vicegerent Thomas Cromwell, to whom he gave the Commiſſion of Viſitor-General. Theſe Viſitors having diſcover'd

Henry propoſes the Suppreſſion of Monaſteries all at once; but is adviſed to do it by degrees.

Viſitation of Monaſteries.

* Biſhop Burnet ſays, that at firſt they were the Biſhops of ſome Villages; but were afterwards put under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of the next City: They were ſet up before the Council of Nice, and continued to be in the Church for many Ages; but the Biſhops devolving their whole ſpiritual Power to them, they were put down, and a Decretal Epiſtle was forg'd in the Name of P. Damaſcus, condemning them. The great Extent of the Dioceſes in England made it hard for one Biſhop to govern them with that Exactneſs which was neceſſary; theſe were therefore appointed to aſſiſt them in the Diſcharge of the Paſtoral Care.

† The Biſhop ſays they were both committed to the Tower, and were not allowed Pen, Ink and Paper, and that the old Biſhop was ill uſed both in his Clothes and Diet; for he had only Rags to cover him, and Fire was often deny'd to him.

great many Diſorders in ſeveral of thoſe religious Houſes, took occaſion from thence to perſuade the Priors or Superiors to ſubmit to the King's Clemency, and to reſign their Monaſteries to him with the Revenues thereof, which ſome accordingly did. Afterwards the King cauſed the Report made to him of this Viſitation to be publiſh'd, in order to leſſen the Veneration of the People for the Monks, when they ſhould reflect on the Diſorders which had been diſcover'd in the Monaſteries, and which probably were very much aggravated *. This alſo furniſh'd the King with a Pretext for publiſhing an Order, whereby in quality of Supreme Head of the Church of England, he permitted the Monks to quit their Houſes, and loos'd them from their Vows; but this had no great Effect.

Italians turn'd out of the Biſhopricks of Sarum and Worceſter.

THIS ſame Year the Cardinal Campeggio, and another Italian, whoſe Name was Ghinucci, were depriv'd of their Biſhopricks of Salisbury and Worceſter, which were given to Shaxton and Latimer.

Why Henry deferr'd the Change of the Conſtitutions.

ANNO 1536. The King ſtill kept the Clergy in a Dependance on him, and made no haſte to appoint Commiſſioners for chooſing the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions which it was neceſſary to keep. The Pope's Authority was aboliſh'd by Act of Parliament, and yet it ſtill ſubſiſted in the Conſtitutions. This put the Clergy into a terrible Confuſion, becauſe in very many Caſes they could not avoid violating either the Conſtitutions or the new Laws; by which means they found themſelves abſolutely dependent on the King, who might fall upon them for tranſgreſſing either, as he thought fit.

Small Monaſteries ſuppreſs'd.

THIS Year the Parliament, at the King's Requeſt, ſuppreſs'd all the Monaſteries which were under 200 l. Sterling Revenue, and gave all their Eſtates to the King. Of this ſort there were 376, by which Reduction the King acquir'd a Revenue of 32,000 l. and a Capital of a above 100,000 l. in Plate, and other Goods and Chattels.

Pope's Propoſal of an Accommodation.

PAUL III perceiving that the Affairs of Religion in England went every Day worſe and worſe for him, caus'd certain Propoſals of a Reconciliation to be made to the King; but they were rejected, and the Parliament by new Statutes confirm'd all that had been done againſt the Pope.

King's Proteſt againſt the Council at Mantua.

SOME time after this, the King was cited to appear before the Council which was to be held at Mantua; but after having taken the Advice of his Clergy upon this Head, he publiſh'd a formal Proteſt againſt the ſaid Council.

I don't ſtop here to mention the ſeveral Attempts which were made in England, either for advancing or checking the Progreſs of the Reformation, becauſe the Curious who wou'd know all the Particulars thereof, may have recourſe to the Hiſtory of the Reformation which I have already ſpoke of.

ANNO 1537. A Rebellion which had been rais'd in the North, and of which I deſign to treat in another Article, having given the King a ſtrong Jealouſy that the Monks were the Authors and Abettors of it, he reſolv'd to ſuppreſs all the reſt of the Monaſteries.

King reſolves to ſuppreſs all the Monaſteries.

BUT being afraid that it wou'd meet with ſome Oppoſition in Parliament, he thought the ſhorteſt and eaſieſt Method wou'd be to follow the Meaſures he had already taken with ſome Succeſs, viz. to get thoſe Monaſteries reſign'd. For this end he cauſed a very ſtrict and ſevere Viſitation to be made of ſuch Monaſteries as were ſtill kept up, and order'd the Report of all the Diſorders therein detected to be publiſh'd. This done, he caus'd all the Images to be burnt, by which the People had been impos'd upon, and under this Pretext he ſeized the Shrines of Saints, and particularly that of St. Thomas of Canterbury, which was very rich, and caus'd his Bones to be burnt in a publick Place. This enrag'd the Bigots to the laſt Degree, and produced ſeveral virulent Libels againſt the King, by which he was only the more exaſperated, and ſpur'd on to make a ſpeedy Concluſion of what he had already begun, I mean the Project of ſecuring himſelf entirely againſt the Enterprizes of the Monks.

Orders a ſtrict Viſitation of them, and their Irregularities to be publiſh'd.

Images and Shrines deſtroyed.

Libels againſt the King.

His Perſecution of the Reform'd.

MEAN time as one of the heavieſt Charges publiſh'd againſt the King, was his deſign to make a total Change of Religion in England, and to introduce the Reformation, he endeavour'd to clear himſelf of it by putting the Laws in Execution againſt Hereticks with the utmoſt Severity. The Term of Hereticks was given at that time to all that believ'd a Tittle more or leſs than the King believ'd, and who did not ſtrictly adhere to the Laws that were made concerning Religion.

Lambert burnt alive.

ANNO 1538. This Year the King cauſed one Lambert to be burnt alive, after having had a publick Diſputation with him, without being able to convince him. And not long after, he was every whit as ſevere againſt ſome Catholicks charg'd with another ſort of Hereſy, viz. the holding a Correſpondence with Cardinal Pool.

* The Biſhop ſays, that among other abominable and monſtrous Diſorders, the Sin of Sodom was found in many Houſes, great Factions and barbarous Cruelties in others; and in ſome, Tools for coining of Money: That the Abbot of Langden in Kent, the firſt Houſe that was ſurrender'd to the King, was found in Bed with a Whore, who went in the Habit of a Lay-Brother.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

All the Monasteries resign'd to the King.

ANNO 1539. At length all the Monasteries were resign'd this Year to the King by the Superiors or Priors thereof, who were oblig'd to sign Resignations which were voluntary in appearance, but were for the generality manifestly extorted. The

Their Revenues.

Revenue of the Monasteries suppress'd amounted to 161,000 l. Sterling, as they were then let, the Priors of most of them having sunk a great part thereof in their own Pockets, when they found what a Storm was coming. Moreover, the King was a great Gainer by the Gold, Silver, precious Stones, Furniture and Materials; insomuch that there was found in the single Abbey of St. Edmondsbury, as much Gold and Silver in Bullion as amounted to 5000 Marks.

The Law establishing the six Articles of Faith, and to whom owing.

THE Reform'd triumph'd at the misfortune of the Monks, but their Joy was not long liv'd. The suppression of the Monasteries was soon follow'd by the famous Law of the six Articles settling the Credenda of Religion *, the Violation of which was fatal to a great many People. 'Twas Gardiner Bishop of Winchester who advis'd the King to this Law, in order to shew the World that tho' he had suppress'd the Monasteries he had no Intention to favour the Reformed, or to change the Religion. This Bishop was mighty zealous for the Pope in secret, but he had the Art of dissembling his Sentiments, and affected a fond Compliance with the King's Will and Pleasure, that he might be in a Condition to do his Party Service.

Cromwell made Earl of Essex, and attainted.

ANNO 1540. Cromwell, the King's Vicegerent in Ecclesiastical Affairs, was created Earl of Essex, but was not long after accus'd of High-Treason, and condemn'd to die by an Act of Attainder, without being admitted to make his Defence.

Parliament's slavish Attachment to the King.

THE Parliament gave a very convincing Proof of their slavish Attachment to the King by one Act, wherein they not only approved of every Regulation that the Commissioners appointed by the King had made concerning Religion, but likewise of whatever Regulation they should make for the time to come with the King's Approbation. As Henry cou'd not bear that his Subjects shou'd believe one Article more or less than he did, several of both Parties were executed for presuming to depart from this Rule.

Six new Bishopricks founded.

ANNO 1541. At the Close of 1540, and the beginning of the Year following, the King founded six new Bishopricks, viz. Westminster, Chester, Glocester, Peterborough, Oxford, and Bristol.

Old Laws of Colleges, &c. repeal'd.

ANNO 1542. This Year the Parliament made an Act for repealing the Laws and particular Constitutions of Colleges and Hospitals. This was to give the King an opportunity to suppress those Houses, which according to such ancient Constitutions, cou'd not be resign'd without the unanimous consent of the Proprietors.

A Plot against Cranmer.

ANNO 1543. There was a deep Plot laid this Year to ruin Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury. The King pretended to give into it, but inform'd him of it at the same time, and assisted in bringing him out of Danger †.

All the Colleges and Hospitals resign'd to the King.

ANNO 1544. This Year all the Colleges and Hospitals were resign'd to the King by Acts, which tho they seem'd to be voluntary, were most of them forc'd. However, the King spar'd the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, after having made them wait a long time for the Favour.

And the Estates thereof granted to the King.

ANNO 1545. This Year the Parliament granted to the King all the Estates which had belong'd to Colleges and Hospitals.

All the rich Furniture of Churches carry'd in Procession and then deposited in the Treasury.

ANNO 1546. A Peace having been concluded this Year betwixt France and England, the King caus'd a Procession to be made with all the richest and most precious Ornaments and Moveables in the Churches; and when the Procession was over, he caus'd the whole to be lock'd up in his Treasury.

Shaxton abjures to save his Life.

THIS same Year Shaxton, who had resign'd his Bishoprick of Sarum, that he might not be oblig'd to sign the six Articles, being again press'd upon that Head, and at last condemn'd to be burnt, made an Abjuration to save his Life. But his Example was not follow'd by Mrs. Anne Ayscough or Askew, who chose rather to be be burnt.

Mrs. Ayscough burnt.

Cranmer protected again by the King.

CRANMER had another desperate Push against him; but the King, who lov'd and valu'd him, took care himself to bring him off with Safety.

THE Acts in the FOEDERA which relate to those Ecclesiastical Affairs, are as follow.

King's Assent to the Bishop of Coventry's Election.

1. THE King's Assent to the Election of Rowland Lee, for Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry, in a Writ directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury; dated March 19, 1534 [s]. 485.

* THIS Law was justly call'd by the name of the Bloody Statute, for it sentenc'd all those to be burnt or hang'd, 1. Who deny'd Transubstantiation. 2. Who pleaded for the necessity of administring the Communion in both kinds. Or 3. That it was lawful for Priests to marry. 4. Or to break the Vow of Chastity. 5. Or that private Masses were of no Service. 6. Or in fine, that Auricular Confession was not necessary for Salvation.

† Dr. Burnet, in his History of the Reformation, says, that Gardiner employ'd many to infuse it into the King, that Cranmer was the greatest Encourager of Heresy in all England, because he had oppos'd the six Articles. But Cranmer wish'd the King to consider well what Heresy was, that he might not condemn such for Hereticks as stood for the Word of God against human Inventions. And he express'd so great a Sincerity, and put so great a Confidence in the King, that instead of being ruin'd, he was now better establish'd than formerly.

THIS

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

THIS is the first we meet with since the passing of the Act of Parliament, appointing the Method of electing and consecrating Bishops. Before that Time the King's Assent began with these Words; Cum Dominus summus Pontifex, &c. i. e. Whereas our Lord the Pope. But neither in this, nor in the following, was any mention made of the Pope.

Oath of the Monks to the King. 489.

2. THE Oath taken to the King by several Monks, and entire Monasteries; dated May 5, 1534.

Quod Henricus Rex noster est Caput Ecclesiæ.

Quod Episcopus Romanus, qui Papæ nomen usurpat, & Summi Pontificis nomen sibi arrogat, nihilo majoris, neque auctoritatis, neque jurisdictionis habendus sit, quam cæteri quivis Episcopi in Anglia, vel alibi, in sua quisque Diœcesi — Episcopi Romani Legibus, Decretis & Canonibus si qui contra Legem Divinam & Sacram Scripturam esse inveniantur, in perpetuum renunciamus.

Quod quisque in suis Orationibus primum omnium Regem tanquam Supremum Caput Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, deinde Reginam cum sua sobole, tum demum Archiepiscopum Cantuariensem, &c.

" i. e. THAT Henry our King is the " Head of the Church.

" THAT the Bishop of Rome, who " usurps the Name of Pope, and assumes " to himself the Title of Chief Priest, is " to have no greater Authority, nor Juris- " diction, than any other Bishop in Eng- " land, or elsewhere, in his respective " Dioceses.

" WE for ever renounce all the Laws, " Decrees and Canons of the Bishop of " Rome, which are found to be contrary " to the Divine Law, and the Sacred Scrip- " tures.

" THAT in the Prayers, the King be " pray'd for first of all, by every one, as " Supreme Head of the Church of Eng- " land, and then the Queen, with her Issue; " and lastly, the Archbishop of Canter- " bury, &c."

THERE are many other Declarations of the like nature, by several other religious Houses, to p. 526.

WE find also in p. 527, that the Bishops Elect were confirm'd by the Archbishop of Canterbury, after he had seen the King's Consent.

Bishop's Renunciation of the Pope. 549.

3. THE Act by which Rowland Lee, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, renounc'd the Pope; dated Feb. 27, 1535.

THIS was a Model for all the rest.

As the Fœdera abounds with the King's Assent to the Election of Bishops, and with Orders for restoring their Temporalities to them, 'tis sufficient to premise here once for all, that here are the like Acts for almost all the Bishopricks of England, which may be useful on some Occasions, when Recourse may therefore be had to the Index.

4. THE following Act shews the manner of electing Suffragan Bishops.

The Writ for electing Suffragan Bishops. 559.

Rex Reverendus in Christo Patri & Prædilecto Consiliario nostro, Thomæ Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi salutem.

Reverendus Pater & Consiliarius noster, Richardus Norwicensis Episcopus, nobis significavit, quod Diœcesis sua Episcopi Suffraganei solatio, qui suæ solicitudinis partem sustinere consuevit, destituta est & existit, & ideo Reverendos Patres Georgium Abbatem Monasterii Sanctæ Mariæ de Leyston, & Thomam Mannygne Priorem Monasterii Beatæ Mariæ de Buslei Norwicensis Diœcesis, Ordine Sacerdotali ritè insignitos, de legitimo matrimonio natos, & in ætate legitimâ constitutos, viroſque in Spiritualibus & Temporalibus multum circumspectos, quibus de Canonicis nihil obviat institutis quominus, ut asseruit, ad Episcopalem Suffraganei Dignitatem admitti possint & deberent, Nobis per suas literas, suo magno sigillo munitas, præsentavit humiliter & devotè, supplicans quatenus Nos alterum ipsorum sic præsentatorum ad aliquam Sedem Episcopi Suffraganei, intra Provinciam Cantuariensem existentem, nominare, ipsique sic nominato, stylum titulum & dignitatem hujusmodi sedis donare dignaremur.

Unde Nos ex gratiâ nostra speciali, & mero motu nostro, dictum Reverendum Patrem Thomam Mannygne, &c. alterum ex dictis præsentatis, Episcopum Suffraganeum Sedis Gipwici Norwicensis Diœcesi antedictæ nominamus, &c.

Requirentes vos, quatenus eundem Patrem sic per nos nominatum in Episcopum Suffragnaeum ejusdem Sedis Gipwici consecratis, eique Benedictionem ac omnia Episcopalia insignia conferatis, cæteraque omnia & singula quæ vestro in hac parte incumbunt Officio Pastorali, juxta modum & formam statuti, in 26 Anno Regni nostri apud Westmonasterium nuper editi, peragatis.

Teste Rege, septimo die Martii, 1536.

i e. THE King, to the most Reverend Father in Christ, and our well-beloved Counsellor, Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury greeting.

OUR Reverend Father and Counsellor, Richard Bishop of Norwich, hath signify'd to us, that his Diocese is destitute of the Comfort of the Suffragan Bishop, who

us'd to bear a part of his Burden; and therefore by his Letters, under his Great Seal, he hath humbly and devoutly recommended to us the Reverend Fathers, George, Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Mary de Leyſton, and Thomas Mannynge Prior of the Monaſtery of St. Mary de Buſley, in the Dioceſe of Norwich, duly inveſted with the Order of Prieſts, born in lawful Wedlock, attain'd to a proper Age, and Men of great Sagacity both in Spirituals and Temporals, ſo that, as he aſſerts, there is nothing in all the Canons that hinders their being admitted to the Epiſcopal Dignity of a Suffragan; and therefore he prays that we wou'd vouchſafe to nominate one of theſe Perſons thus recommended, to ſome See of a ſuffragan Biſhop within the Province of Canterbury, and to confer on him the Stile, Title, and Dignity of the ſaid See.

WE therefore of our ſpecial Grace and mere Motion, do nominate the ſaid Reverend Father Thomas Mannynge, &c. one of the ſaid Perſons recommended as above, to be Suffragan Biſhop of the See of Ipſwich in the Dioceſe of Norwich, &c.

REQUIRING you that you conſecrate the ſaid Father ſo by us nominated, to be Suffragan Biſhop of the ſaid See of Ipſwich, that ye confer the Benediction, and all the Epiſcopal Inſignia upon him; and that ye perform all and every other Duty, in this reſpect, which is incumbent on your Paſtoral Office, according to the manner and form of the Act of Parliament made at Weſtminſter in the 26th Year of our Reign.

Sign'd by the King at Weſtminſter, March 7, 1536.

AFTER

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

The Interests and Aims of the Pope.

AFTER the great Provocation given by Clement VII, and the Resentment express'd by Henry and his Parliament, there was no room to renew the Treaty for an Accommodation betwixt the two Courts. But tho' the Pope had made a Sacrifice of Henry to the Emperor; yet he did not think it his Interest to push that Affair any farther. He expected therefore, according to the ordinary Method of the Court of Rome, that Time might furnish him with an Opportunity, either to reduce Henry by Force, or to reconcile him by Favours and Caresses.

Of the Emperor.

CHARLES V had acted very generously in the Affair of the Divorce, by preferring the Interests of his Aunt, Queen Catherine, to his own. If he had chose to have abandon'd that Princess, 'tis very apparent that he wou'd have drawn off Henry from the Interest of France, and wou'd by that means have been screen'd from any Danger which he had to fear from Francis I; whereas by directly opposing Henry's Design in the matter of the Divorce, he made the Union between France and England the stronger, and thereby laid very great Obstructions in the Execution of the Designs which he had form'd with respect to Germany. Therefore 'tis certain, that in this he did not act like a Politician; tho' it can only be imputed to the Obligation he thought himself under in point of Honour, to support the Queen his Aunt.

Of the King of France.

ALTHO' by the Treaty of Cambray, Francis receded from his Pretensions to the Dutchy of Milan, we may be sure it was against his Will, and that he hop'd one Day or other to find out a Pretext for evading that Article of the Treaty. 'Twas with this View that he marry'd the Duke of Orleans his second Son with Catherine de Medicis; that he kept up an Understanding and secret Treaties with the Protestants of Germany, and with the Turks; and that he labour'd to preserve the Friendship of the King of England, that he might have recourse to it in case of need.

Of Henry VIII.

HENRY VIII, who imagin'd that at last the Court of Rome wou'd grant him a Sentence of Divorce, finding himself depriv'd of all Hopes of it, thought of nothing so much as how to be reveng'd of the Pope, and at the same time to secure himself in the Enjoyment of the Supremacy, which he had extorted from the Clergy. He propos'd also to make himself every Day more absolute in his Kingdom, by putting his Domestick Affairs into such a state of Confusion, as wou'd render him Lord and Master of the Lives and Fortunes of the majority of his Subjects. Yet he had two things to fear, to which he was very attentive: The first was the Rebellion of his People; and the second the Efforts which the Emperor might probably make, in order for the Execution of the Pope's Sentence: And it made him extreamly uneasy when he consider'd that it was not impossible but the Pope, the Emperor, and France might unite against him, and draw the King of Scotland into their Alliance. This it was that made him temporise with the Emperor, and cautious of giving him any new Cause of Complaint. He behav'd in the like manner to the King of Scotland his Nephew, endeavour'd at the same time to keep up a good Union with France, and fed the German Protestants with Hopes of powerful Succours, in order to put them upon Action, in Case he shou'd be forc'd to it by any attacks from the Emperor. Such was the situation of the Affairs of these four Powers, immediately after Clement VII had pronounc'd his Sentence against Henry.

His Negotiation with Francis.

IN the Year 1534, Henry desir'd to make an Alliance with Francis I, even stricter than the last. But Francis wou'd not venture to make an open League, for fear of offending the Pope: Therefore he endeavour'd to persuade Henry, that the best way for him to secure himself against the Emperor's Attacks, wou'd be secretly to assist the Protestants of Germany with a good Sum of Money. Henry did not disapprove of this Expedient, and he desir'd moreover, that Francis wou'd attack Navarre, while he himself made a powerful Diversion in Flanders. But Francis had other Views which did not permit him to engage to carry his Arms into Navarre. He aim'd at the Recovery of the Dutchy of Milan, under pretence of being reveng'd on Francis Sforza, who, to do the Emperor a Pleasure, had put to Death a Milanese Gentleman nam'd Merveille, who was a secret Agent or Envoy of France. Francis I demanded Satisfaction for this Affront, and was not sorry that the Duke refus'd it, because it gave him a pretence to fall upon the Dutchy of Milan. Accordingly he rais'd a considerable Army, and demanded Passage of the Duke of Savoy, who deny'd him, for fear of offending the Emperor; upon which refusal Francis declar'd War against him; but the Death of Clement VII, and the Exaltation of Paul III, caus'd some Alteration in the King of France's Measures.

French Envoy put to Death at Milan.

Francis I declares War against Milan and Savoy.

HENRY cou'd not have wish'd for a more lucky Incident than the Rupture betwixt the King of France and the Duke of Savoy, because it was very apparent that the Emperor wou'd not suffer the Duke to be oppress'd, and that consequently England wou'd be quiet while the Emperor and France were at War. But on the

the other hand, Charles V did what he cou'd to break his Measures, by seeking to embroil him with Francis. For this end he authoriz'd a Proposal to be made to Francis, Anno 1535, for a Marriage betwixt his third Daughter and Prince Philip, Infante of Spain, and another betwixt the Duke of Orleans and Mary, the Daughter of Henry, by Catherine of Arragon, with an Offer of the Dutchy of Milan for the Duke of Orleans, after the Death of Sforza, who had no Children, and of a Pension of 100,000 Crowns 'till he was put in possession of the Dutchy. Francis I easily discover'd the Emperor's Artifice, who having a design to carry his Arms into Africa, wanted to amuse him by this Negotiation, and to stop his Efforts against the Duke of Savoy. But thinking to make an Advantage of this Proposal, he caus'd it to be imparted in Confidence to Henry, by Admiral Chabot, Lord of Brion. It appear'd in the sequel, that the View of Francis was to possess Henry with the Fear of an Union betwixt France and the Emperor, and that he hop'd this wou'd prevail with Henry to excuse him from his yearly Pension of 100,000 Crowns.

Henry's demands of the Arrears of the Pension due from Francis.

But Henry was too cunning to be caught in the Snare, and on the contrary told the Admiral in plain Terms, that he expected Francis shou'd pay him the Arrears of the Pension, with all the other Sums that he ow'd him.

Francis falls upon Savoy.

FRANCIS I miscarrying in his Project, attack'd the Duke of Savoy, and in the first Campaign of 1535, robb'd him of Savoy and la Bresse: During this, Charles V was engag'd in an Expedition in Africa, where he took the Fort of Goulette and Tunis, and re-establish'd Muley Hassem, who had been expell'd by Haradin Barberossa.

Emperor's Expedition to Africa.

MEAN time, as Henry well knew that as soon as the Expedition to Africa was over, the Emperor wou'd be at Leisure for other Designs, he endeavour'd to frighten him by pretending to enter into a strict Union with the League of Smalcald.

Henry's Embassy to the Protestants of Germany.

For this purpose he sent Edward Fox to Germany, while Francis I kept the Lord de Langeais there with the same View. But it was no easy matter to form a sincere Union between those two Monarchs, and the Princes of the League. The latter had no other View but to maintain the Liberty of their Religion, whereas all that the former meant, was to embarrass the Emperor by fomenting Troubles in Germany, without any regard to the Interests of the Protestant Religion, which they openly persecuted in their own Dominions.

Death of Q. Catherine and the D. of Milan.

THE Death of Queen Catherine, which happen'd in the beginning of the Year 1536, together with that of Francis Sforza the Duke of Milan, who dy'd the October before, produc'd some Alteration in the Affairs of the three Monarchs. Charles V improv'd these two Events to his Advantage for breaking the Measures of the Kings of France and England, and hindring them from uniting heartily against him. On the one Hand he made a Proposal to Henry for generously forgetting every thing that pass'd betwixt them relating to the Affair of the Divorce, and for renewing their ancient Alliance. But as he was afraid of being taken at his Word, he clogg'd it with such Conditions as left him at Liberty to protract it as far as he shou'd think it proper. On the other hand, he made a secret Promise to Francis I, to give the Dutchy of Milan to one of his Sons. Francis was taken with the Bait, and as he scarce doubted of the Success of the Negotiation, his Regards and Zeal for Henry abated in Proportion. But Henry plainly perceiv'd that the Emperor's View was only to make a Division betwixt him and France; and as he had an Apprehension that he wou'd gain his Point at last, he made an Overture to the League of Smalcald, tho' with very little Success, for the Reasons I hinted above. Besides, some Domestick Affairs, of which I shall treat in another Place, interrupted his Negotiations.

Charles V proposes an Alliance to Henry, and at the same time promises the Dutchy of Milan to the French King's son.

Henry offers to join with the League of Smalcald.

DURING that time, the Emperor repairing to Rome, declaim'd very much in presence of the Pope and Cardinals against Francis I, and highly aggravated the Injuries which he pretended to have receiv'd from him. This broke off the Negotiation that was on foot for the Dutchy of Milan, and not long after, the Emperor put himself at the Head of an Army, and marching into Provence, laid Siege to Marseilles, but was oblig'd to raise the Siege with Precipitation and Dishonour, and then went to spend some time in Spain.

The Emperor takes the Field against Francis, and lays Siege to Marseilles, but is forc'd to raise it.

THE War betwixt the Emperor and France continued in 1537, but was interrupted in the Course of this Year, by a Truce of 10 Months, which in 1538 was, at the Pope's Mediation, follow'd with a Truce of 10 Years, concluded at Nice. Upon this, Henry seem'd inclinable to unite in good earnest with the League of Smalcald, that they might support him against the Emperor. He had the more reason to be afraid of this formidable Enemy, because since the Truce of Nice, Francis I entirely neglected him, and seem'd in no wise dispos'd to support his Interests in case of need. Besides, the Emperor still amus'd the King of France with the hopes of giving the Investiture of the Dutchy of Milan to one of his Sons. This made Francis exceeding cautious how he disoblig'd him, and very shy of Henry, for whom he had now no longer Occasion;

His Truce with France.

Henry demands the Arrears of his Pension due from France.

FOEDERA Tom. XIV.

Occasion; which Conduct of his so provok'd Henry, that he bluntly demanded the four Years Arrears of the Pension due to him from that Crown.

He courts the Smalcald League again in vain.

In 1539, Henry again courted the Princes of the Smalcald League, but without Success. Those Princes kept still upon their Guard, being sensible that his only Aim was to awe the Emperor by such a Negotiation, and not to unite heartily with them for the support of their Religion, of which he made very little Account.

After the Truce of Nice, the Union betwixt the Emperor and Francis I, seem'd to be very sincere on both sides, insomuch that Charles V, going to Ghent to suppress an Insurrection there, pass'd thro' France upon the King's bare Parole, and arriv'd the first of January, 1540, at Paris. While he stay'd there, he positively promis'd Francis to grant the Dutchy of Milan to the Duke of Orleans; but as soon as he came into the Netherlands, he found a shift to evade his Promise. This occasion'd a fresh Quarrel betwixt those two Monarchs, which was very agreeable to Henry, because it secur'd him from the Attacks of the Emperor.

Emperor goes to Paris, and makes the King a Promise, which he broke as soon as he arriv'd in the Netherlands.

Francis prepares War against him.

Mean time Francis I, being resolv'd to be reveng'd, made great Preparations for War against the Emperor in 1541; and in order to give him a powerful Diversion, he endeavour'd to bring the Turks upon him in Hungary. On the other hand, the Emperor, to frustrate his Measures, made him believe that he wou'd give the Netherlands to the Duke of Orleans, and erect them into a Kingdom.

Emperor promises to erect the Netherlands into a Kingdom for the Duke of Orleans.

At the same time he caus'd it to be insinuated at the Ottoman Porte, that this Treaty was just on the Point of being concluded, in order to hinder Solyman from giving Ear to the Proposals of France. But at length Francis I, perceiving his Artifice, sent away two Ambassadors, the one to Venice, the other to Constantinople, to inform the Venetians and the Turks of it; but as they were going down the Po, they were both murder'd by order of the Marquis de Guast, Governor of Milan; which occasion'd a new Quarrel.

Murder of two French Ambassadors.

Turks Success in Hungary.

Notwithstanding the Emperor's Artifice, the Turks enter'd Hungary, oblig'd Ferdinand King of the Romans to raise the Siege of Buda, and gain'd a Victory over the Germans.

Emperor's unsuccessful Expedition to Africa.

At the same time, Charles V made another Expedition into Africa, which was attended with very ill Success to him; for part of his Fleet being dispers'd by a violent Tempest, he was oblig'd to put to Sea again without doing any thing.

Francis attacks him in 5 places.

In 1542, Francis sent five Armies into the Field to attack the Emperor in several places at once. But the Advantage he gain'd did not answer his Expectation nor Expence.

The next Year, Henry being reconcil'd to the Emperor, concluded a League with him against France. He complain'd that Francis I neglected to pay him the yearly Pension, according to Engagement, and that he had not faithfully executed the Treaties which they had made together; from whence he inferr'd that he was still a Debtor to him for those Sums, from which he was acquitted only on this express Condition, that he wou'd religiously execute those Treaties. He added moreover, as a fresh Cause of Complaint, that Francis I had done his utmost to destroy the English Faction in Scotland, and to engage the two Nations in a Quarrel. The Conclusion of the League betwixt the Emperor and Henry was retarded a long time by this difficulty. The Emperor insisted that Henry shou'd by an authentick Act own the Legitimacy of his Daughter Mary, to which Henry wou'd by no means hearken. At length this Obstacle was remov'd by Henry's verbal Promise to give Mary a Rank in the Succession to the Crown; but he wou'd not consent to the inserting of this Article in the Treaty.

HENRY VIII.

Henry's Reconciliation and Alliance with the Emperor against France.

During this Year, the War betwixt the Emperor and France went on with Vigour. Francis had some Advantage at first, but towards the close of the Campaign, the Emperor arriving in the Netherlands with a very considerable Force, stopp'd his Enemy's Progress.

Prosecution of the War between the Emperor and Francis.

CHARLES and Henry had form'd a Project to attack France during the Campaign of 1544, with an Army of 40,000 Men each, the one in Champagne, the other in Picardy, and then to join together in the Neighbourhood of Paris. This was the Reason that the King of France was oblig'd to recal the best part of his Troops from Piedmont, tho' they had gain'd the Victory of Cerisoles there, under the Command of the Duke of Enghien, who by that means was in a fair way to be Master of the Dutchy of Milan.

Francis recals his Troops from Italy.

The Project of the Emperor and Henry was not executed in the manner it had been concerted. Henry being very early in his Preparations, sent part of his Troops against Scotland, of which more hereafter, hoping that this Expedition wou'd come to an Issue before the Emperor wou'd be ready to join him. During this, the Emperor made himself Master of Luxemburg; and then besieg'd St. Didier, which took him up above 6 Weeks. Mean time the Duke of Norfolk having join'd the Count de Bure with a Body of English Troops, they laid Siege to Monstreuil. Henry arriving in Picardy at the same time with the rest of his Army, and hearing that the Emperor was besieging Didier, suspected his Sincerity, and that he design'd to let him march alone to Paris, on purpose that he might be be mortify'd. For this Reaſon he undertook the Siege of Boulogne, from whence a miſunderſtanding aroſe betwixt thoſe two Monarchs, ſo that each was for making his ſeparate Peace with France. The Emperor was beforehand with Henry, and ſign'd his particular Treaty at Creſſy on the 19th of September. By good Luck for Henry, he made himſelf Maſter of Boulogne ſeveral Days before, and by that means he had time to retire to Calais, and to avoid the Dauphin, who made long Marches to come up with him, and narrowly miſs'd of retaking the City of Boulogne, before they had time to repair the Breaches.

Henry's Conqueſt of Boulogne.

THE next Year, which was 1545, Francis I made a prodigious Effort, both by Sea and Land, for the Recovery of Boulogne, but cou'd not ſucceed; the Blame of which was laid upon the Marſhal de Biez, who commanded the Army of France. Nevertheleſs the Engliſh ſuffer'd very great Damage from the French, by the Deſcents which they made upon the Iſle of Wight, &c.

Peace with France.

THIS Peace reſtor'd the good Underſtanding betwixt France and England. Francis ſtood in need of Henry, becauſe he was on the point of renewing the War with the Emperor. It had been agreed by the Treaty of Creſſy, that the Duke of Orleans ſhou'd marry one of the Emperor's Daughters, and have the Dutchy of Milan, or the Earldom of Flanders, with her, as a Portion. But this Prince dying about a Year after the ſigning of the Treaty, the Emperor thought himſelf quit of his Engagement, and put Francis I to the Trouble of obtaining by a new War, what had been promis'd him by a Treaty of Peace.

MEAN time, the Emperor finding himſelf deliver'd from the War with France, made a League with the Pope, and attack'd the Proteſtants of Germany, over whom he gain'd great Advantages, while neither Francis I, nor Henry VIII, were much concern'd for their Intereſt.

ARTICLE III. Affairs with Scotland.

Peace with Scotland.

THE Truce which had been concluded for a Year betwixt England and Scotland in 1533, was converted on the 11th of May 1534, into a Peace, which was to laſt 'till the Death of one of the two Kings. By this Treaty, the Donglaſſes were allow'd to ſtay in England.

NOTWITHSTANDING this Peace Henry was ſtill diffident of his Nephew the King of Scotland, whom he had us'd ſo ill during his Minority. He knew alſo that the Emperor had been endeavouring to gain him; and that he would have done it effectually, if Francis had not prevented his Deſign, by procuring the Peace betwixt England and Scotland. This put Henry upon perſwading the King his Nephew to make the ſame Alterations in Scotland, with reſpect to Religion, as himſelf had made in England, and to renounce all Obedience to the Pope. For this purpoſe he deſir'd an Interview; to which James conſented at firſt, but in a little time after he receiv'd a Brief from the Pope, forbidding him to have any Interview with the King his Uncle. Upon this Pretence he deſir'd to be excus'd from his Engagement.

Pope forbids the K. of Scotland to hold an Interview with Henry.

IN 1538, James V marry'd Mary of Lorrain, Siſter to the Duke of Guiſe, and the Cardinal de Lorrain.

K. of Scotland's Marriage and Character.

HE was a Prince of a mean Genius, very much addicted to Pleaſure, needleſly expenſive, and therefore always under Difficulties. In 1541, there were two Parties in Scotland; one for the King of England and the Reformation, while the other did their utmoſt to hinder any Alteration in Religion, and to oppoſe the Engliſh Party. Each of theſe endeavour'd to ſecure the King in their Intereſt. The one ſhew'd him what an Augmentation it would be to his Revenues, if, like the King his Uncle, he would but renounce the Pope and ſuppreſs the Monaſteries. The other ſet before his Eyes the vaſt Gain that would accrue to him by the Forfeiture of the Eſtates of the Hereticks, who were already very numerous in the Kingdom, if he would but reſolve to proſecute 'em with Severity. The King follow'd the Advice of the latter; and from thence enſued a cruel Perſecution over all Scotland. Henry perceiving that the King his Nephew ſuffer'd himſelf to be led by the Clergy, was apprehenſive that he would at length make an Alliance with his Enemies, and ſupport the Malecontents of England, and particularly thoſe of the North, who had already taken Arms, as we ſhall find in the next Article. Therefore he wiſh'd once more to have a Conference with him, not without Hopes of gaining him, and that he would be govern'd by other Maxims. James no ſooner receiv'd the Propoſal but he embraced it, and promis'd to go and meet the King his Uncle at York; whither Henry went to expect him: But James was not so good as his Word; which so provok'd Henry, that he resolv'd to make War upon him.

James V promises an Interview with Henry, but disappoints him, for which Henry resolves on a War.

HE put this Resolution in practice Anno 1542, on pretence of a Breach of the Peace, and of an old Dispute that still subsisted between the two Kingdoms, with respect to some Lands situate on the Frontiers. But his true Aim in this War, was to force the King of Scotland to follow his Counsels in Affairs of Religion, for fear of being oppress'd at a time when he could not expect any Assistance from the King of France, who was employ'd elsewhere. I shall not enter here into the Detail of this War, in which Henry appointed the Duke of Norfolk General. It will suffice to declare in a few Words, that what with the ill Conduct of King James, and a Panick with which the Scots were seiz'd, their Army was entirely routed. The English took a great Number of Prisoners; particularly seven Scots Noblemen of Distinction, and above 200 Gentlemen; which broke the Heart of James V, who died on the 14th of December, seven Days after the Birth of Mary his Daughter; to whom he left the Crown, having lost two Sons not long before.

War with Scotland.

Defeat of the Scots, and Death of their King.

THE Death of the King of Scotland put King Henry upon a Project for uniting the two Kingdoms, by the Marriage of Prince Edward his Son with the young Queen of Scotland; which Project having been communicated to the Scots Lords that were Prisoners at London, they approv'd of it, and promis'd to contribute their utmost to bring it about: after which they were releas'd upon their Parole of Honour.

Henry's Project for a Union with Scotland.

IN 1543, a great part of the Scots Nobility having either perish'd in the last Defeat, or being Captives in the Hands of the English, Cardinal Beton, Archbishop of St. Andrews, undertook to make an Advantage of the Confusion which there was in the Kingdom, and to set himself up for Regent, by Virtue of a pretended Will of the late King. But James Hamilton Earl of Arran, to whom the Regency belong'd by Birthright, having prov'd the Forgery of the Will produc'd by the Cardinal, was declar'd Regent, and supported chiefly by the Prisoners that had been releas'd in England, and by the People that were return'd into Scotland.

Cardinal Beton trumps up a sham Will, by which he claims the Regency.

Earl of Arran declared Regent.

NOT long after, Henry caus'd the Marriage of the Prince his Son with the Queen of Scotland to be propos'd to the Regent and the States: His Proposal was accepted, notwithstanding the opposition of Cardinal Beton, and the Queen Mother; and a Treaty was concluded thereupon, which was sign'd the first of July 1543. But these Measures were broke by the Intrigues of the Cardinal and the Queen Dowager, who form'd so considerable a Party that the Regent's Authority went for nothing. Nor did they only oppose the Regent, but they also form'd a Project to supplant him, and to take the Government into their own Hands. For this end, they prevail'd with the King of France to send Matthew Steuart, Earl of Lenox into Scotland, to set him up against the Regent, and to be the Head of their Party; and in order to engage Steuart the more heartily in their Interests, they gave him hopes of marrying the Queen Dowager, and of succeeding also to the Crown, if the young Queen shou'd die.

Treaty concluded for the Marriage of Prince Edw. to the Q. of Scots.

HENRY VIII.

Cardinal Beton's Faction set up the Earl of Lenox against the Regent.

THE Earl of Lenox arriving in Scotland, the Regent was for securing the Person of the young Queen, lest she should fall into the Hands of his Enemies. But Lenox having quickly assembled 4000 Men, repair'd to the young Queen, and broke the Regent's measures, for which reason the Regent finding it was in vain for him to make longer Resistance, chang'd both his Party and Religion, and put himself absolutely under the Direction of the Queen and the Cardinal, who by that means became Masters of the Government in the Regent's Name. Then the first thing they had to do was to find ways and means to send back the Earl of Lenox to France, because he was of no longer use to them in Scotland. To succeed in this Design, they insinuated to Francis I, by means of the Princes of Lorrain, who were Brothers to the Queen Mother, that this Lord was an Enemy to his Interests; and thereby they cut off those Supplies of Money which had been promis'd him by Francis I. Lenox being disgusted at this unworthy treatment of him, resolv'd to be reveng'd; for which end he took Arms, and made some Efforts, but at last was oblig'd to make a disadvantageous Peace, for want of Money to carry on the War. Thus the Queen Dowager and the Cardinal remain'd in sole possession of the Government, and Henry perceiving, to his Mortification, that by this means the Treaty he had made with Scotland wou'd not be executed, and that the method of Negotiation wou'd be to little purpose, was determin'd at last to make War upon the Scots, in order to oblige them by force of Arms to execute the Treaty.

The Regent puts himself under the Cardinal's Direction, whose Faction disgust him and provoke him to take Arms.

HENRY having rais'd an Army in 1544, against France, caus'd part of it to march to Scotland, under the Command of the Earl of Hertford, and John Dudley Baron of Lisle the Admiral. At first this Army made great Progress in Scotland, and actually took possession of Edinburgh, the Queen and the Cardinal having taken no manner of Precaution to defend the Kingdom, so that with this Army Henry might have easily conquer'd it. But as he had occasion for his Troops in France, whither whither he design'd to go in Person; so his Aim was only to intimidate the Scots, and to oblige them by the Terror of his Arms to execute the Marriage Treaty, which however did not succeed. In this War the Earl of Lenox sided with the King of England, and even made Conventions with him, by which he engag'd to deliver up the Town of Dumbarton to him; for which Reason all his Friends and Party were persecuted by the Queen, the Regent, and the Cardinal, after the English Troops were withdrawn. But another Invasion of the English, who tho' but few in number, took Jedburg, Kelso and Coldingham, put a stop to their Proceedings, and forc'd them to raise an Army, which by reason of a panick Terror in the Regent who commanded it, dispers'd of its own accord, and gave the English an opportunity to make a great Progress.

Henry sends an Army to Scotland, where he might have made a Conquest of the whole Kingdom.

His Friends persecuted by the Cardinal, &c.

The Persecution diverted by another Invasion from England.

IN the Year 1545, Francis I having sent some Troops to Scotland, the Scots Army pass'd the Tweed in order to enter England, but upon their Intelligence that the Earl of Hertford was marching against them, they disbanded themselves and went home. The rest of the Year was spent in the Negotiation of a Peace betwixt France and England, in which the main Difficulty to be got over was Henry's refusal to have the Scots included in it.

Scots Army enters England, but disbands on the approach of the Earl of Hertford.

AT length Henry giving up this Point, the Peace was sign'd in 1546, and Scotland on certain conditions was included in the Treaty. Immediately after this, the Queen, the Regent, and the Cardinal persecuted the Reformed, of whom some were condemn'd to be burnt. Among others there was one Wishart a Minister, whom the Cardinal order'd to be burnt before his Window, that he might have the Pleasure of seeing the Execution. They say that this Minister propheſy'd that this haughty Prelate, as high as he was now, shou'd in a few Days be brought as low. Whether there was such a Prediction or not, this is certain, that not many Days after, the Cardinal was actually assassinated in his own House, and his Body cast into the Street, out of the very Window from whence he saw the Minister burnt.

Article IV. Domestick Affairs.

As the Domestick Affairs of the remainder of this Reign have no necessary Connection with one another, because they are of a different Nature, I shall content my self with a Relation of the most material Events under this Head in each Year.

Origin of Henry's exorbitant Power.

In the Year 1535 we begin to discover that the exhorbitant Power which Henry VIII acquir'd over his Subjects, was really owing to Religion. For as the King observ'd a certain medium in that respect, some affected an entire Complaisance to him on that Score, in order to induce him to push the Reformation farther, while others were equally devoted to him for fear that their opposition to him wou'd force him to engage with the other Party. Factions, tho' generally fatal to States, are nevertheless sometimes advantagious to Sovereigns, if they have but the Skill to make them subservient to their particular Views. This was what Henry VIII was not deficient in, and by this means he acquir'd a Power which no King of England had for many Ages.

The Death of Catherine of Arragon which happen'd in 1536, pav'd the way for a Reconciliation betwixt the Emperor and Henry, as was observ'd in the first Article.

Anne of Boleyn divorc'd and beheaded.

About six Months after, Queen Anne of Bolleyn was condem'd by a Sentence of the Peers, and beheaded. I will not descend here into the Particulars of this Event, because there are very few Acts in the Fœdera that relate to it. The curious may be further inform'd, by consulting Dr. Burnet's History of the Reformation. It will be sufficient to observe here, for the sake of connecting the History of this Period, that before the Queen was executed, the King had dissolv'd his Marriage with her, on pretence that before she was marry'd to him, she had enter'd into some Engagement with an English Nobleman; which tho' no more than a mere Pretence, was sufficient to procure a Divorce. And the very next Day after the Execution, the King marry'd Jane Seymour, with whom he had been in Love some time before. Anne had a Daughter by the King nam'd Elizabeth, who tho' declar'd a Bastard, came afterwards to the Crown of England.

King, reviv'd the Hopes of Mary, who was the King's Daughter by his firſt Wife Catherine. She had 'till then obſtinately refus'd to conform to the Acts of Parliament, concerning her Mother's Divorce, and the Affairs of Religion. But after the Death of Anne, ſhe judg'd, by the Advice of her Friends, that ſhe ought not to miſs that opportunity of being reconcil'd with the King her Father. She therefore ſign'd a Writing, in which ſhe own'd the King's Supremacy, and the Juſtice of his Divorce from her Mother, and renounc'd her Obedience to the Pope. This Writing which the King himſelf prepar'd for her to ſign, was the thing that reſtor'd her to his Favour, but not to the Title and Rank of his lawful Daughter.

Princeſs Mary owns the King's Supremacy, and the Juſtice of her Mother's Divorce.

In a ſhort time after, the Parliament made an Act for repealing that which had paſs'd in favour of the King's Children by Anne of Bolleyn; and after having declar'd the two Daughters which Henry had by his two former Marriages, Baſtards, they ſettled the Succeſſion of the Crown on the Children that the King might have by Jane Seymour, or any other Woman that he ſhou'd marry for the future. The Parliament not only gave the King this Proof of their Complaiſance to him, but alſo granted him a Power to ſettle the Succeſſion himſelf in ſuch manner as he ſhou'd think fit, by a Will to be ſign'd with his own Hand, or by Letters Patent under the Great Seal. By this means they empower'd him to leave the Crown to either of the two Daughters whom they had juſt declar'd illegitimate. But whatever the King ſignify'd a Deſire to have done, he was ſure of the Parliament's Compliance.

The Settlement of the Succeſſion by Parliament.

King's Quarrel with Cardinal Pole.

In this Year we find out the Spring of that Broil betwixt the King and Cardinal Pole, who was then at Rome. This Cardinal was the Son of Richard de la Pole, and was conſequently of the York Family, by the Mother-ſide, and near a-kin to Henry. Some have advanc'd that his Aim was to ruin the King, by robbing him of the Affection of his Subjects, and then to marry the Princeſs Mary, in order to aſcend the Throne with her. Be this as it will, he was not ſparing of his Pen to laſh the Conduct of the King, who conceiv'd a Hatred againſt him, of which he made his whole Family feel the Effects. But I ſhall ſay no more on this Head, becauſe there are few Acts in the Fœdera that allude to it.

Rebellions in Lincolnſhire and Yorkſhire.

There was a Rebellion this Year in Lincolnſhire, which was very eaſily quaſh'd, by a Pardon that the King granted to the Rebels, but was ſoon follow'd by another of much greater Conſequence in Yorkſhire. It was upon the Score of Religion, and the King was very much harraſs'd by it; for he had but few Troops on Foot, whereas the Rebels, who were commanded by one Aske, had a numerous Army, and had ſeiz'd Pontefract, Hull, and York. The Duke of Norfolk who commanded the King's Army, was twice in danger of being defeated, but at length found means to pacify the Rebels, by promiſing them certain Conditions, to which the King engag'd himſelf, tho' afterwards he did not think proper to perform them.

Another Rebellion.

In the Year 1537 there was another Rebellion which did not give the King ſo much Trouble as the laſt, and was ſeverely puniſh'd. Jane Seymour was brought to Bed in October of a Prince, who was nam'd Edward; but ſhe dy'd in a few Days after. Edward Seymour her Brother was about this time created Earl of Hertford.

Further Inſtances of Henry's Reſentment againſt Cardinal Pole.

The King's Reſentment againſt Cardinal Pole was prodigiouſly heighten'd in 1538, upon the Intelligence he receiv'd that all the Memoirs drawn up againſt the King in England, were addreſs'd to the ſaid Cardinal at Rome, who put them in order, and caus'd them to be publiſh'd; and there were ſome in which his Stile was too palpable to be conceal'd. He was ſo exaſperated againſt this Cardinal, that he made all his Kindred and Friends feel the Effects of his Indignation; and not long after, the Marquiſs of Exeter, and ſome others, were condemn'd to Death, and executed for correſponding with the Cardinal, which in thoſe Days was a Crime not to be forgiven. At laſt Paul III having publiſh'd his Bull againſt the King, Pole wrote a Book endeavouring to prove that it was more meritorious to make War upon Henry than upon the Infidels: But all his Efforts exaſperated the King more and more againſt him.

Pole writes a Book to prove it more meritorious to fall upon Henry than the Infidels.

HENRY was arriv'd to ſuch a degree of Authority that the Parliament did nothing but by his Direction. In 1539 the two Houſes gave a very flagrant Proof of their ſlaviſh Attachment to him, by paſſing an Act which gave the ſame Sanction to the Proclamations of a King, or the Orders of Council during a Minority, as to Acts of Parliament; of which Act, after Henry VIIIth's Death, Edward VIth's Council made a very good Handle.

Parliament makes an Act, giving the ſame Authority to the Orders of a King and Council in a Minority, as to the ſtatutes.

That ſame Parliament confirm'd the Sentence of Death paſs'd upon the Marquiſs of Exeter, and ſome others, for holding a Correſpondence with Cardinal Pole. Moreover, the Cardinal's Mother, the Counteſs of Salisbury, and the Marchioneſs of Exeter, were condemn'd to die for the ſame Crime, by an Act of Attainder, without being admitted to make their Defence. The Houſe of Lords made ſome Efforts to oppoſe this Injuſtice. But Cromwell ſo bully'd the Parliament, that he made them paſs this Act, which was afterwards urg'd as a Precedent againſt himſelf; self; and a Man had no other way to save his Estate, Honour, and Life, than to conform to the King's Will: 'Tis true, that Henry put no body to Death upon his bare Authority, but he had gain'd such an Ascendant o'er the Parliament, that he got such Laws enacted as he judg'd necessary for establishing his Authority more and more, and then caus'd them to be put in Execution without Mercy against all that were deficient in Complaisance to him.

Henry's Ascendency over the Parliament.

CROMWELL and Cranmer, the two Pillars of the Reformation, knowing what a Strength it wou'd be to their Party if the King marry'd a Protestant Princess, manag'd him so that they prevail'd with him to demand the Princess Anne, Sister to the Duke of Cleves, in Marriage.

His Marriage with Anne of Cleves, by whom promoted, 3.

THIS Princess arriving in England in 1540, the King was so dissatisfy'd with her, that he cou'd not forgive Cromwell, who had engag'd him in the Marriage, from which however he cou'd not go back, because he then thought he shou'd quickly stand in need of Succours from the Protestants of Germany. Mean time he made Cromwell Earl of Essex; but not long after, this Minister was accus'd of High Treason, and condemn'd by an Act of Attainder, without being admitted to make his Defence, in the very same manner as he himself had procur'd the Condemnation of the Countess of Salisbury, and the Marchioness of Exeter.

Cromwell made E. of Essex, and attainted of High Treason.

IMMEDIATELY after, the King resolv'd to have a Divorce from Anne of Cleves, on pretence that she was engag'd beforehand to a Prince of the House of Lorrain. If ever there was a far-fetch'd Pretence, this was one, but the Parliament and Clergy being devoted to the King, he got his Marriage dissolv'd without any Difficulty; and the rather because the Queen, who found the King had no Affection for her, did not oppose it, and was contented with the Title of the King's adopted Sister, and a good Pension. Not long after, the King marry'd Catherine Howard, Niece to the Duke of Norfolk.

Henry's Divorce from Anne of Cleves.

And Marriage to Catherine Howard.

IN 1541, while Henry was at York waiting for the King of Scotland, he put forth a Proclamation, inviting his Subjects who had suffer'd any Wrong from his Ministers to bring their Complaints to him. Mean time his View was not to do them Justice, but only to heap Blame upon the Administration of Cromwell, and to give the Inhabitants of the Northern Counties hopes of a milder Government than they had liv'd under for the time past.

His Proclamation pretended for the Ease of his Subjects, but really to cast an Odium on Cromwell.

THIS Year Ireland was erected into a Kingdom.

Ireland made a Kingdom.

CATHERINE Howard, to whom the King was but lately marry'd, was beheaded in 1542, after having been convicted of being false to the King, and of having led a dissolute Life both before and after her Marriage. The Act which condemn'd her imported, among other Things, that a Woman whom the King shou'd marry for a Virgin that was not so, and did not acquaint the King of it, shou'd be guilty of High-Treason; which made some say, that the King cou'd not safely marry with any but a Widow, as he actually did, in marrying Catherine Parr, the Widow of the Lord Latimer.

Henry's Marriage to Catherine Parr.

THE King's new Marriage was productive of a new Act of Parliament in 1544, for settling the Succession to the Crown. Prince Edward was nam'd first in it with his Issue. In the second Rank were the Male Issue that the King might happen to have by the Queen now reigning. In the third, the Princess Mary and her Descendants; and in the fourth, Princess Elizabeth and her Issue. But as to these two Princesses, the Act subjected them to such Conditions as it shou'd please the King their Father to impose on them; and in case of Disobedience, they were declar'd incapable of succeeding to the Crown; and the Parliament granted the King a Power to settle the Succession in what manner he thought fit, either by a Will sign'd with his own Hand, or by Letters Patent under the Great Seal. So that on the one Hand the Parliament seem'd to acknowledge the two Princesses to be Legitimate by the Rank they gave them in the Order of Succession, while on the other Hand they seem'd to treat them but as Bastards, because what Right of Succession they gave them was altogether dependant on the King's Will and Pleasure: But this is not the only Contradiction we meet with in the Acts of Parliament, with regard to Henry VIIIth's Succession.

A new Act for the Succession.

ANOTHER Act was pass'd afterwards, by which the Title of King of England, France and Ireland, and Defender of the Faith, was inseparably united to the Crown of England.

The Parliament's Settlements of the King's Title.

THIS same Parliament granted the King a Subsidy, after a very extraordinary manner, by declaring him quit of all his Debts; but they were his private Debts for which the Parliament did not stand engag'd. Probably the Parliament was glad of it, in order to put a stop to the Loans, whether voluntary or forc'd, which Kings sometimes had recourse to in their Necessities, and which by degrees wou'd have render'd Parliaments useless, or at least not near so frequent. For as to the Debts of the Nation which have Parliamentary Security, I don't believe there ever was an Instance in the History of England that the Creditors lost their Money; and to the Glory of their Parliament it must be said, that their strict Honour in this Article has given the English Nation that Credit hitherto which

Death of the Duke of Suffolk.

I don't find any thing conſiderable with reſpect to Domeſtick Affairs in the Year 1545, except it be the Death of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, who was mightily belov'd and eſteem'd by the King his Brother-in-Law.

Henry's abſolute Authority.

AFTER Henry had fallen out with the Pope, he acquir'd an Authority over his Subjects that was little ſhort of being abſolute, of which, as I have already hinted in another Place, Religion was the Cauſe. He had made a terrible Uſe of that Power, as well with reſpect to his Wives and Favourites, as to thoſe who wou'd not ſquare their Religion by his, whether they were Catholicks or Reformed. Nay, he was grown ſo fierce, that none cou'd look at him without trembling; and his Peeviſhneſs increas'd by reaſon of his extreme Corpulency, which was ſuch an Uneaſineſs to him, that he was not able at laſt to manage a Pen ſo as to ſign his Name to any thing, ſo big were his Fingers. He had moreover ſuch an Ulcer in his Leg, that he could not walk without being ſupported; yet for all this, inſtead of thinking on Death, which was juſt ready to trip up his Heels, all his Thoughts were how to extend his Authority, for he wou'd have every thing done after his own Fancy; inſomuch that the Queen herſelf narrowly miſs'd of falling a Prey to the ſavage Temper of the King her Husband; for in 1546, the Queen having been accus'd of ſuffering the new Religion to be preach'd in her Apartment, in preſence of her Ladies, the King ſign'd an Order to take her into Cuſtody, and gave it to the Chancellor, who by miſtake loſt it; which Order being found and carry'd ſecretly to the Queen, ſhe improv'd that Time which the Chancellor took to ſeek it, in pacifying the King, who reſtor'd her to his Favour.

His unwieldineſs and ſavage Temper.

The Queen's narrow Eſcape for ſuffering the Proteſtant Doctrine to be preach'd.

HENRY being almoſt choak'd with Fat, and ſtill very much annoy'd by his Ulcer, was ſenſible at laſt that he had not long to live. This made him ſeriouſly forecaſt what might happen after his Death. He was apprehenſive that the Affair of his Divorce from Catherine of Arragon wou'd be ripp'd up again, and that his Daughter Mary wou'd find Intereſt enough among the ſecret Friends of the Pope to get the Sentence of the Divorce repeal'd, and to ſeize the Crown in prejudice of her Brother Edward. He knew that the Pope had ſtill a ſtrong Party in England, and tho' he was ſenſible he had Power enough to cruſh it, yet he was afraid that his Succeſſor wou'd not have ſufficient Strength in a Minority. Therefore he conſulted on his Pillow how to prevent thoſe Accidents which might be capable of making an Alteration in his Eſtabliſhment, either of the Crown or Religion. The Duke of Norfolk, tho' a true Courtier, and one that paid an external Obedience to the King's Will and Pleaſure, yet all Mankind, and the King in particular, knew that he was the Head of the Pope's Party, and his Son, the Earl of Surry, was of the ſame Principle. Theſe two Noblemen were ſo powerful, that the King was afraid that after his Death they wou'd put themſelves at the Head of the Popiſh Party, in order to ſupport the old Religion, and the Intereſts of Mary. This ſingle Conſideration made him reſolve to put them both to Death before he left the World, and accordingly he order'd them to be committed to the Tower, and a ſham Proſecution to be commenc'd againſt them.

His Care about the Settlement of the Succeſſion and Religion.

Duke of Norfolk and his Son committed to the Tower.

WHILE the Proceſs againſt theſe two Lords was carrying on, the King caus'd a Will to be tranſcrib'd, which he made before his laſt Expedition to France. In this Will he ſettled the Order of his Succeſſion according to the Act of Parliament in the Year 1544; but without making any mention of the Poſterity of Margaret Queen of Scotland, his eldeſt Siſter, he order'd that the Daughters of his youngeſt Siſter, Mary Queen of France, and Dutcheſs of Suffolk, ſhou'd ſucceed after Elizabeth, if ſhe dy'd without Children, and even next to Edward, in caſe that Mary and Elizabeth did not perform the Conditions requir'd of them. Thus in Conſequence of the Power that had been granted to the King by the Parliament, namely, by virtue of that Authority, Henry entirely excluded his elder Siſter's Branch from the Succeſſion to the Crown, without giving any Reaſon for it. We find this Will at large in the XVth Tome of the Fœdera, together with the Subſcription of the King and Witneſſes: Whether the King ſign'd it himſelf with his own Hand, or whether his Name was only printed to it, I will not take upon me to ſay, becauſe, as I obſerv'd a little above, he had not been able to hold a Pen for ſome time paſt; and we find in the Fœdera that he had for ſeveral Years appointed Commiſſioners to ſign the Acts for him. We ſhall take notice of the chief Articles of this Will by and by, and only obſerve here, that the King caus'd the Name of Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, to be raz'd out of the number of the Guardians whom he had appointed over the Prince his Son during his Minority.

the usual Form, caus'd a Bill of Attainder to be pass'd in Parliament against the Earl of Surry, for being so insolent as to quarter the Arms of St. Edward in his Escutcheon; which tho' a far fetch'd Pretence, was sufficient to get him capitally condemn'd, and the Sentence was soon follow'd with Execution. Afterwards, the like Act was prepar'd against the Duke of Norfolk, on some pretence or other, as far fetch'd as the former, and the said Acts having passed thro' both Houses, the King gave his Approbation thereof by Commissioners; and immediately after, the Lieutenant of the Tower receiv'd an Order to carry the Duke to the Place of Execution on the 29th of January; but happily for him the King himself dy'd the Night before, viz. the 28th; and thus the Duke escap'd as it were by a Miracle, Edward's Council not thinking it adviseable to stain his Accession to the Crown with the Execution of the first Nobleman of England.

They found it to conſiſt of ſeveral Sheets of ſoft coarſe Paper, tack'd together with a Braid of green and white Ribbon; the Writing of a mean and ſlovenly Character. The Will was ſign'd on the top of the firſt and the end of the laſt Page with the King's Hand-writing, as pretended, but the Character fairer than ever he could make. Upon Comparing his Name on the Will with his Stamp and his uſual Hand-writing, it agreed with neither; and was ſo far from reſembling the trembling Hand of a dying Man, that it was very ſtiff, like a counterfeit Hand; only there is a Scratch, ſeemingly made on purpoſe to ſcreen the Forgery againſt any future Enquiry by the Royal Line of Scotland, which was thereby totally diſinherited, or at leaſt poſtpon'd after all the other Families. It is ſeal'd with his Pocket-Seal, on ſoft Wax appended to the Ribbon which tacks the Sheets together; and upon the whole there is great Reaſon to conclude that this Stamp was cut on purpoſe to reſemble the King's Hand as well as they could, in ſuch Circumſtances as he then was.

HENRY VIII.

The REIGN of EDWARD VI *.

ANNO 1547.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

THE Reign of Edward VI may be properly divided into four principal Articles, viz. Domeſtick Affairs, Affairs with Scotland, Affairs with France, and Affairs concerning Religion.

EDWARD VI.

ARTICLE I.

Of Domeſtick Affairs.

Edward VI's Acceſſion.

EDWARD VI, the only Son of Henry VIII, was but in the tenth Year of his Age, Anno 1547, when he ſucceeded the King his Father. As ſoon as he was proclaim'd, the Council open'd the Will of Henry VIII, in which they found that he had appointed ſixteen Perſons to adminiſter Affairs for the young King during his Minority, with the Title only of Executors of his laſt Will and Teſtament, tho' they had properly the Authority of Regents, and that he had nam'd twelve other Perſons to aſſiſt theſe with their Councils. He empower'd the Executors or Regents, or the Majority of them, to act as they thought convenient; a Clauſe of which they made great uſe, and which gave them room to make ſuch Alterations as without doubt Henry never dream'd of. For example, he never once intended to give the Majority a Power to chooſe a Protector, or to exclude any of the Regents from the Commiſſion. This appear'd from his putting the two Princeſſes his Daughters under a neceſſity of not marrying without the Conſent of ſuch of the Executors as ſhould then happen to be living. Nevertheleſs, theſe two Articles were got over by virtue of the general Clauſe juſt mention'd. Among the Executors, or Regents, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Wriotheſley, Great Chancellor, the Earl of Hertford, who was the young King's Uncle by the Mother-ſide, and John Dudley Viſcount of Liſle, Son to Edward Dudley who was hang'd in the beginning of the Reign of Henry VIII, were they that made the greateſt Figure; as did among the Privy-Counſellors, the Earls of Arundel and Eſſex, and Thomas Seymour, Uncle to the King, and Brother to the Earl of Hertford.

His Executors or Regents.

A Propoſal to chooſe a Protector oppos'd.

THE Regents and Privy-Counſellors having enter'd upon their Offices, the firſt thing propos'd in the Council of the Regency was to chooſe a Protector. Wriotheſley the Great Chancellor oppos'd it to the utmoſt of his Power, and pleaded, that as the late King's Will deriv'd all it's Force from an Act of Parliament, it was not poſſible to

* WE now come to Edward VI, whoſe Reign we ſhall introduce as we have done thoſe of his Anceſtors, with the Dedication of that particular Tome of the Fœdera, viz. Tome XV, which takes in all the publick Acts relating to it.

" THIS, ſays the Compiler, who addreſſes it to the late Queen, is the XVth Tome drawn forth from your " moſt ſacred Treaſures, for a Bounty to the World.

" IT comprehends a Period ſomewhat more than forty Years, in which ſo long Space Atchievements of " War, Battles, Victories, and Triumph, are not ſo much in Vogue.

" 'TIS now Matters of the Church, the Operations of Religion, the Reformation, and Application to " cultivate true Piety, and give our Holy Faith a new Light and Luſtre.

" As to Civil Affairs, it begins with a Ratification of a Treaty concluded for her Majeſty the Queen of " Scotland to marry Prince Edward, apparent and undoubted Heir of King Henry VIII, your Majeſty's Pre- " deceſſor of moſt glorious Memory; and it ends with an Account of the States General, Gueldres, Zutphen, " Flanders, Holland, Weſtfrieſland, Zealand and Utrecht, and other the United Provinces of the Netherlands, " who declare themſelves diſcharg'd from all Ties to the King of Spain, and therefore reſolv'd to provide them- " ſelves with another Maſter capable to defend and protect them againſt the Tyranny of the aforeſaid King of " Spain, and againſt the Spaniſh moſt barbarous Inquiſition, introduc'd for no other End but the Extirpation of " the true Religion.

" HEREUPON they ſue to Queen Elizabeth to take them under her Care and Protection, which readily ſhe grants.

" AND now it is that Eſcluſe, the Brill, with Flushing, and the Rammakins, are deliver'd into the Hands of " Engliſh Governours and Garriſons.

" THIS done, the Queen diſpatches away her Ambaſſadors to Scotland for a cloſer Friendſhip, and a League " Offenſive and Defenſive, in order to ſupport the Reformed Religion againſt all Enemies and Oppoſition, and " for the King to be a Partner with her, and effectually to have his Share in being a Defender of the Faith; " which ſeaſonable Confederacy clear'd the way to a Proteſtant Succeſſion, in the Perſon of King James your " Majeſty's Progeniter, of ever bleſſed Memory.

" HE was a Peace-maker, and he was a King fifty-five Years.

" LONG was the Reign of his Contemporary and Confederate, Queen Elizabeth.

to make any Alteration in it: Beſides this Reaſon, there were other more ſecret Motives which were no leſs prevalent with him to oppoſe it. In the firſt Place, as he was Great Chancellor, and as the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who preceded him in the Commiſſion, did not trouble himſelf with State Affairs, he hop'd to be always Preſident of the Regency, and to be look'd upon as the Head of it. In the ſecond Place he knew full well that the View of this Propoſal was to advance his Enemy, the Earl of Hertford, to the Dignity of Protector. Thirdly, he was afraid that the Catholick Religion, to which he was very much attach'd, would ſuffer too much Prejudice from the Authority of the Earl of Hertford, whoſe Biaſs to the Reformation was known to all Mankind. Notwithſtanding all the Oppoſition he could make, the Choice of a Protector was reſolv'd upon, and it fell upon the Earl of Hertford, with this Reſtriction nevertheleſs, that he ſhould not act without the Conſent of the other Regents. This Election was founded upon the general Clauſe in the Will which I mention'd above, that the Executors ſhould adminiſter the Affairs of the Government in ſuch manner as they thought fit. From whence it was inferr'd, that every thing which the Majority of the Regents approv'd of, was deem'd conformable to the late King's Will.

Earl of Hertford choſe Protector.

THIS firſt Step being taken, they went a little farther, but ſtill on pretence of executing the late King's Will, as he had expreſly charg'd his Executors. When they came to know the Promiſes that he had made to ſeveral Perſons to advance them to high Dignities, they thought themſelves oblig'd to execute his Intention in that reſpect, the rather becauſe it was in favour of many of the Regents and Privy-Counſellors. Conſequently, the Earl of Hertford, who was already Protector, was created Duke of Somerſet; William Parr, Earl of Eſſex, created Marquiſs of Northampton; the Viſcount Liſle had the Title of Earl of Warwick; the Chancellor that of Earl of Southampton; Thomas Seymour was made Baron of Dudley; and Rich, Willoughby, and Sheffield, were promoted to the Dignity of Barons. For ſupport of theſe new Dignities, certain Lands of the Church were alienated and diſtributed to the new created Peers. Immediately after this, the Protector was made High-Treaſurer and Great Marſhal, and Thomas Seymour, his Brother, was preferr'd to the Poſt of High-Admiral. All this was done in the ſpace of a Fortnight after the Death of Henry VIII, and then that Prince's Funeral Obſequies were perform'd, and the new King crown'd.

Honours conferr'd on the Regency and Council.

THE firſt Uſe that the Protector made of his Credit and Authority was, to remove the Chancellor, who furniſh'd him with a Pretext for turning him out of his Office, and confining him to his Houſe *. Afterwards, the Duke of Somerſet, not content with being choſe Protector by the Regents, got a Patent diſpatch'd in the King's Name, by which he was by the King himſelf declar'd Protector, and caus'd certain Clauſes to be inſerted in it, which render'd his Dignity independent on the other Regents, who by that means were no more than his Counſellors. Thus the Duke of Somerſet became abſolute Maſter of the Government, and thereby drew upon him the Hatred and Envy of his Collegues, who took hold of every Opportunity to ruin him, as we ſhall find hereafter.

Lord Chancellor remov'd.

Abſolute Power of the Protector.

THE Protector having remov'd the Chancellor, and given his Poſt to the Lord Rich, his devoted Tool, thought himſelf ſecure from the Attacks that he had moſt reaſon to fear; tho' he found a formidable Enemy in his own Brother the High-Admiral, whoſe Ambition knew no Bounds. This Lord being the King's Uncle, was ſo offended at his not being put in the Liſt of the ſixteen Regents, as well as his Brother, that he could not bear to think of the Diſtinction thereby made between himſelf and his Brother. Immediately after the Death of Henry VIII, he made his Addreſſes to the Princeſs Mary, but being very ſoon convinc'd that his Project was too difficult to put in execution, he pay'd his Compliments to Catherine Parr, the Queen Dowager, and marry'd her ſo ſoon after the Death of Henry VIII, that if ſhe had prov'd with Child, it would have been a Doubt whether the late King or he was the Father. The Advancement of his Brother to the Dignity of Protector fill'd up the Meaſure of his Jealouſy, ſo that he never ceas'd caballing againſt him; and while the Duke was taken up in the War againſt Scotland, he actually try'd to draw the young King into his Party, and to oblige him to take ſuch Steps as tended to the Protector's Ruin. In fine, he behav'd in ſuch a manner that the Duke was under a Neceſſity either of being ruin'd himſelf, or of making away with his Brother, who was condemn'd to Death and executed.

His Brother the Lord Dudley's Enmity to him.

His ſaid Brother marries the Queen Dowager.

The Protector gets him condemn'd and executed.

THIS extraordinary Act of Severity gave a great Handle to the Protector's Enemies, who took Occaſion from thence to run him down as a Man that had ſacrific'd his own Brother;

The Protector hated for it.

* What the Crime of the Lord Chancellor was, and the Proceedings thereupon, may be ſeen at large in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, Tome II. p. 15, 16. the Account whereof he ſeems to have taken from the Council-Book.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

Brother (whoſe Crime, to make the moſt on't, was acting only againſt him, and not againſt the King) to his boundleſs Ambition. The Protector enjoy'd never the more Tranquillity for the Death of the Admiral; for ſoon after, great Inſurrections aroſe in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, and particularly in the Counties of Devon and Norfolk, which were occaſion'd by the Oppreſſions that the common People ſuffer'd from the Nobility on account of certain Lands which the Nobility and Gentry had inclos'd with Pales. The Protector ſeem'd in ſome meaſure to ſupport the Complaints of the Commonalty, by doing all that he could to prevent the treating of the Rebels with Extremity, but he was not able to ſucceed in it; tho' after they had been routed and diſpers'd by the Earl of Warwick, he granted them an Amneſty by his own Authority, and contrary to the Advice of the Council.

Inſurrections in the Country, on account of the Nobilities Incloſures of Land that us'd to lie open.

The Protector pardons them, contrary to the Advice of the Council.

THIS Step was very diſguſting to the great Men, who from that time began to concert Meaſures for his Ruin. And his Conduct afterwards, in Affairs relating to France and Scotland, haſten'd the Execution of the Conſpiracy which his Enemies had form'd againſt him. All on a ſudden, when he thought leaſt of it, the Preſident, and ſome others of the Privy-Council, retir'd to the Biſhop of Ely's Houſe in Holbourn, and proteſted that they were oblig'd to take this Step, becauſe the Council paſs'd for no more than a Cypher; the Protector doing every thing of his own Head, without adviſing with any body. All the Precautions which the Protector took to guard againſt this Conſpiracy, only ſerv'd to furniſh his Enemies with new Pretences. He did but carry the King to Windſor, and it was reckon'd a Crime. And at length, ſeven other Counſellors joining with thoſe who were already withdrawn, and the City of London declaring for them, the Protector began to be diſcourag'd; and this made him loſe ſeven other Counſellors, who join'd with the reſt: ſo that he could keep none with him but Cranmer the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Sir William Paget. When the Counſellors ſaw themſelves ſo well ſupported, they wrote to the King, acquainting him with the Faults and Ambition of the Duke his Uncle, whom they had already declar'd unworthy of being Protector; and they had Leave granted them to repair to the King at Windſor. There they caus'd the Duke of Somerſet to be arreſted, and ſent him to Court. After this they nam'd ſix Governours for the King, of which Number was the Earl of Warwick, who had the Cunning to get all the Authority into his own Hands, and officiated, in a proper Senſe, as Protector, tho' he had not the Title. This new Governour fearing leſt the Duke of Somerſet ſhou'd find means to reſume his Authority, caus'd an Act of Attainder to be paſs'd againſt him in Parliament; whereby he was condemn'd to a Fine of 2000*l.* a Year in Land, and his Goods were confiſcated. Notwithſtanding all this, the Duke ſtill kept himſelf above Water, the King who lov'd him having granted him a Pardon; but he did not recover his former Poſt. The Earl of Warwick procur'd himſelf the Poſt of High-Admiral, and ſtill continued to direct all the Affairs of the Government. The better to maintain himſelf in his Station, and to puſh his Fortune the farther, he made a ſtrict Union with the Lord Gray, Marquiſs of Dorſet, who had marry'd Frances Brandon, eldeſt Daughter of the late Duke of Suffolk, and of Mary, Siſter of Henry VIII, who was Queen Dowager of France. The Duke of Suffolk had had two Sons by a ſecond Marriage, who both dying about the time I ſpeak of, left the Title of Duke of Suffolk extinct, for which reaſon the Earl of Warwick procured it for his Friend the Marquiſs of Dorſet, who by his Marriage with Frances Brandon, had three Daughters, viz. Jane, Catherine, and Mary. The View of the Earl of Warwick, as it afterwards appear'd, was to marry one of his Sons with Jane Gray, the Duke of Suffolk's eldeſt Daughter, and to put her upon the Throne, excluſive of Mary and Elizabeth the King's Siſters. The better to ſucceed in this Project, he endeavour'd to marry Elizabeth to the King of Denmark, but he found Difficulties in it which render'd it abortive.

FOEDERA. Tom. XV.

This Act was founded on that by which the King's two Sisters had been declar'd Bastards in the Reign of Henry VIII, and upon the Danger which wou'd attend the Reformation, if Mary ascended the Throne. The Judges were evenforc'd to draw up this Act, which was nevertheless sign'd by all the Privy Counsellors. The King being very ill, the Duke of Northumberland, who wish'd to have Mary and Elizabeth in his Hands, sent them an Order to come and divert the King their Brother in his Sickness. They were actually on the Road, but being inform'd of the King's Death, they avoided the Snare which was laid for them. Edward VI dy'd the 6th of July, 1553, in the 16th Year of his Age, and every body suspected that his Days were shorten'd by foul Practices.

ARTICLE II.

Affairs with Scotland.

HENRY VIII had expreſly recommended it to his Executors to employ all the Means poſſible in order to put the Treaty in execution which he had made with the Scots for the Marriage of his Son with the young Queen of Scotland. The Duke of Somerſet being made Protector, thought this was an Affair not to be neglected. Therefore he demanded of the Scots, in Scots Refuſal to perform the Treaty for the Marriage of the young Queen to King Edward.

1547, to execute the Treaty, and upon their refuſal, reſolv'd to carry the War into Scotland, not with a View to conquer the Kingdom, but according to Henry VIIIth's Maxim, to oblige the Scots, by the Inconveniencies and Hazards of War, to perform the Treaty. The Regent of Scotland and the Queen Dowager being abſolutely againſt this Marriage, had taken timely Precautions to have Aſſiſtance from France in caſe of need. For Henry II, who was but juſt come to the Throne of France, thought he was concern'd to hinder the King of England from becoming alſo King of Scotland; and the two Princes of Lorrain, who had very great Credit with him, corroborated him in his Deſign to ſupport the Scots, leſt the Match ſhou'd take place betwixt the Queen, their Niece, and a Proteſtant Prince. At that time alſo, it ſeems, they had a Deſign to give their Niece in Marriage to the Dauphin. Be that as it will, when Henry II came to the Crown, he declar'd that he would aſſiſt the Scots with all his Power, which was what made the Protector of England fearful of engaging in this Affair, and he would have been glad of getting off on't with Honour: With this View he offer'd the Scots a Condition which wou'd never have been rejected, if there had not been a Deſign on foot to marry the young Queen to the Dauphin. He was willing to leave Scotland in quiet 'till the Queen came of Age, on condition that during that time ſhe ſhou'd be bred up in Scotland, without engaging in any Marriage. It was manifeſt, that during this Interval, Edward or Mary might die; and happen what would, the Scots would have been in the ſame Condition when the Queen came of Age, as when this Propoſal was made to them, which of Conſequence muſt appear advantageous to them. But the violent Party was too ſtrong for the moderate, and the Propoſal was rejected with very great Contempt. Conſequently the Protector continued his March towards Scotland, which Kingdom he enter'd, and won a great Victory over the Scots in which they loſt 14,000 Men, beſides 1500 Priſoners, of whom 800 were Gentlemen[o]. After this Battle, the Protector ſeiz'd Edinburgh, and made ſuch farther Progreſs as would have reduc'd Scotland to a fatal Extremity, or to the neceſſity of performing the Marriage-Treaty. But during this the Protector being inform'd of the Conſpiracies which his Brother the Admiral was forming to ruin him, quitted Scotland abruptly to return to Court, and loſt all the Fruit of his Victory, by not following the Blow.

Protector's Victory over the Scots at Muſſelburgh.

Earl of Shrewsbury made his Lieutenant-General.

Browghty Castle besieg'd by the Scots,

WHILE this Army was preparing in England, the Regent of Scotland besieg'd the Castle of Browghty, which the English had taken in the preceding War, and he was three Months before that Place with all the Forces of the Scots; which gave the English Time and Opportunity to be Masters of the Castle of Hadington, and to fortify it, which Place being but 12 Miles from Edinburgh, was a very great Annoyance to that Capital.

They receive Succours of France.

BUT it being not long before the Scots received a Succour of 6000 Men from France, under Command of Desse d' Epainvilliers, they join'd him with 8000 Men of their own Troops, and went and besieg'd Hadington; and 'twas during this Siege, that after several Conferences between the French and Scots, a Resolution was taken to send the young Queen of Scotland to France. Indeed the Proposal met with vast Opposition from many of the great Men, who fear'd what wou'd be the Consequence of so important a Resolution; but the French Party prevail'd. The Queen Dowager earnestly wish'd for the Marriage of her Daughter to the Dauphin. On the other hand, the King of France threaten'd to call home his Troops, and wou'd not continue his Assistance of Scotland any longer, but on condition that the Queen shou'd be put into his Hands. At length he gain'd the Regent by offering him the Title of Duke of Chatelherault in France, together with 12000 Livres per Annum in Land; and the young Queen was sent to France with the same Ships that had brought over the French Succours.

rais'd, and threw a fresh Supply of Provisions into it; after which he advanc'd farther into Scotland in order to offer the Enemy Battle, but perceiving that they would not accept it, he retir'd. After he was withdrawn, Desse made an Incursion into England, and advanc'd to Newcastle without meeting with any Opposition; but what became of the Earl of Shrewsbury and his Army we know not.

French lord it in Scotland.

IT was not long e'er the Scots repented of sending their Queen to France. For she was no sooner gone, but the French began to lord it over Scotland. Desse treated the Scots with a deal of Contempt, and in a little time Monluc Bishop of Valence, came over to exercise the Office of Great Chancellor in Scotland. But upon the Complaints of the Queen Dowager, they were both recall'd, and the Court of France sent Thermes to supply the Place of Monluc.

Forces sent against the Rebels in Norfolk.

IN 1549, the Protector put the Earl of Warwick at the Head of an Army, in order to act against Scotland, but was obliged to employ it against the Rebels in Norfolk, who were become very formidable; for which Reason, despairing of being able to keep Hadington, he caused the Fortifications of it to be demolish'd, for fear it wou'd fall into the Hands of the Scots, as Browghty Castle did, which they had just taken.

THIS, properly speaking, put an End to the War with Scotland, from which the Protector could no longer hope for Advantage, because, even tho' he had made greater Efforts, he could never have attain'd to the End which he propos'd to himself when he began the War, I mean the Performance of the Marriage-Treaty, since the young Queen was in the Hands of the King of France. At length a Peace being renew'd in 1550, betwixt France and England, certain Articles were inserted in the Treaty relating to Scotland, viz. the Demolition of two or three small Places, which the English still held in that Kingdom; and it was agreed that Edward should no longer make War against Scotland, unless the Scots gave him some new Occasion to fall out with them; which was as much as to say, that indirectly he desisted from the Execution of the Contract that had been made for his Marriage with the Queen of Scotland.

AFTER that time, Scotland was pretty quiet. The Duke of Chatelherault was still Regent, but suffer'd himself to be govern'd by the Archbishop of St. Andrews, his Bastard Brother, a Man who led a Life not quite so pious as became a Clergyman. Moreover, the Regent's Authority was very much lessen'd by his Dependance on the Court of France, who had the Queen in their Power, and sent him such Orders as they thought expedient.

BESIDES, the Queen Dowager, who was supported at the Court of France by the Duke of Guise, and the Cardinal of Lorrain, her Brothers, kept the Regent so much in Awe, that he had no more than the Shadow of Authority; for strictly speaking, it was the Queen Dowager that govern'd the Kingdom.

return'd to Scotland, she sent a civil Message to the Duke, that it would be much more to his Advantage to yield the Regency to her with a good Grace, than to be forced to it by Orders from the higher Powers. The Duke, who was beforehand informed of the King of France's Will and Pleasure, was convinc'd that it would be in vain for him to oppose it; and besides, he was very glad to keep what he possess'd in France, and therefore he resign'd the Regency to the Queen, notwithstanding the Solicitations of the Archbishop his Brother to the contrary, who did all he could to divert him from it.

THE Prelate missing his Aim, caball'd among the Clergy, in hopes of engaging them to thwart the Queen's Designs; which was the Reason that, in order to support her self against the Attacks of the Clergy, she chose to rely upon the Assistance of the Protestants, who were already very numerous in Scotland, by granting them leave to worship God in their own Houses, after their own manner. By this means she preserv'd the Regency, and baffled the Designs of the Archbishop.

Affairs with France.

IN 1547, immediately after the Death of Henry VIII, Francis I ſent an Ambaſſador to Edward VI, to congratulate him, and to renew the Alliance lately made with the King his Father. This Embaſſy was productive of two Treaties, which were concluded at London March 11, 1547. The firſt was only a Confirmation of the Alliance between the two Crowns. The ſecond regulated the Limits of Boulogne, while that Place remain'd in the Hands of the Engliſh, and the Demolition or Continuation of certain Fortifications which had been begun in the Neighbourhood of Boulogne before, or after the late Treaty.

Treaties with France.

FRANCIS I dying the 31ſt of March, 20 Days after the Concluſion of the Treaties I have now mention'd, without having ratify'd them, the Council of England gave Order to Nicholas Wootton, Ambaſſador in France, to congratulate Henry II, the new King of France, and to deſire the Ratification of the two Treaties concluded at London. But the Court of France, by changing their Sovereign, had alſo chang'd their Maxims and Politicks, and form'd other Projects. The Duke of Guiſe, and the Cardinal of Lorrain, who had a great Share of Credit with the new King, perſuaded him that it was his Intereſt to hinder the King of England from marrying the Queen of Scotland; that for this End he ought to ſupport the Scots: and that to prevent the Engliſh from making a Diverſion in France, by means of Boulogne, it was abſolutely neceſſary, before all things, to regain that Place, coſt what it would. Henry purſuing this Advice, refus'd to ratify the two Treaties concluded at London, and diſown'd the Ambaſſador of the King his Father, who had ſign'd them. He thereby not only reſerv'd to himſelf a Cauſe of Quarrel, touching the Limits and Fortifications of Boulogne, but by refuſing to renew the Alliance, he alſo manifeſtly ſhew'd that he had a Deſign to break the Peace. For, this very Year he ſignify'd to the Protector, that if he did not cauſe a Stop to be put to the Works that were carrying on at the Fort of Bullenberg, he ſhould reckon it an Infraction of the Peace. It had been expreſly agreed in the Treaty, that all the Works that were begun before the Peace, might be perfected; and as thoſe of the Fort of Bullenberg were of this Claſs, the Protector was manifeſtly authoriz'd by the Treaty to continue them. Nevertheleſs, as a new War with France was no ways conſiſtent either with the Deſigns he had form'd, or with his own private Intereſts, or thoſe of the Kingdom, he caus'd the Works that were begun to be diſcontinued.

Which the new King of France refuſes to ratify.

He ſends Succours to the Scots, and takes away the Queen.

BUT this Moderation of his was not capable to avert that War from him which he was afraid of. For in 1548, the King of France ſent 6000 Men to the Aſſiſtance of the Scots, and carry'd off the Queen of Scotland from the King of England, to whom ſhe had been promis'd in Marriage. Nor did he ſtop there, for in 1549, taking the Opportunity with which the Rebellions then in England furniſh'd him, he enter'd into the Boulonnois, at the Head of an Army, without declaring War, and after having taken in ſome of the Forts about Boulogne, he laid Siege to that City. It had been agreed by the laſt Treaty of Peace, that the King of France ſhould pay the King of England two Millions of Crowns of Gold in 8 Years time, and that during that ſpace Boulogne ſhould remain in the Hands of the Engliſh. But Henry II wanted to have the Place, not only before the Time fix'd by the Treaty, but alſo without paying the Sum therein ſtipulated. The only Reaſon he alledg'd to juſtify his Proceeding was, that the War which Henry VIII made againſt Francis I was unjuſt, and that by Conſequence it was allowable for him to lay hold of the Opportunity that preſented to make France Amends for her Loſſes. But beſides that the greateſt part of the two Millions was due to Henry VIII before he had taken Boulogne, if the Reaſon urg'd by the King of France ought to have taken Place, no Treaty of Peace wou'd ever have been concluded that could be rely'd on. Be that as it will, Henry II caring very little what the Engliſh or the Publick could ſay about his Conduct, continu'd the Siege of

The Protector's Reasons for declining a new War.

Boulogne. But his Army being infected with the Plague, he left the Command of it to Gaspar de Coligny, who was at length oblig'd to turn the Siege into a Blockade.

THIS new War made the Protector extremely uneasy for many Reasons. In the first Place, he was for establishing the Reformation in England on a good Footing, for which a time of War was not a fit Juncture. Secondly, He knew that the King of France had promis'd a great Supply to the Protestants of Germany, as soon as he should have recover'd Boulogne; from whence he inferr'd, that the said Monarch would make a powerful Effort next Campaign to execute his Design. By Consequence, England would be expos'd to a very considerable Expence to maintain this War. In the third place, the King's Coffers were empty, and the Protector was afraid of a new Rebellion, if he should be forc'd to oppress the People. Fourthly, He was in as much Fear of the Nobility, among whom he had a great Number of Enemies. Fifthly, Nothing could be more for the Advantage of the Reformation than the Union of France with the Protestants of Germany, to which his Intention of keeping Boulogne was entirely opposite: All these Reasons made him resolve to propose the Surrender of Boulogne in Council. But a Conspiracy being already form'd to ruin him, the Proposal was receiv'd with Indignation, and the Protector's Enemies made this their main Handle, to act openly against him, as I mention'd before in the Article of Domestick Affairs.

IN 1550, the Duke of Somerset being remov'd from Council, the Earl of Warwick and the rest of the Counsellors were as much perplex'd as he, what to do in the Affair of Boulogne. The King of France was just ready to attack the Place with all his Forces; and there had been no Preparation to defend it, tho' the Council made such a Noise of the Dishonour it would be to give it up. 'Twas resolv'd therefore to restore Boulogne to France, and all the Difficulty now consisted in a Punctilio of Honour, which did not permit England to make Advances on that Subject. But this Scruple was remov'd by means of Guidotti, a Merchant of Florence, who liv'd at Southampton; which Merchant being privately sent to Paris, found means to get some loose Proposal in Commission from the Constable of Montmorency: And upon this Foundation, the two Courts sent Plenipotentiaries to Picardy, where the Treaty was soon concluded on the 24th of March, 1550. By the said Treaty Boulogne was restor'd to France, on paying a Sum of 400,000 Crowns in Gold, one half at the time of Restitution, the other before the 15th of August.

EDWARD VI.

IN 1551, the King, by the Earl of Warwick's Direction, sent Ambassadors to Henry II, to carry him the Order of the Garter, and to propose a Match to him betwixt their King and his Daughter Elizabeth; which Proposal being accepted, the Marriage-Treaty was sign'd at Angers the 19th of July, but 'twas not to be consummated 'till the Princess was twelve Years old. It was given out by many, that the Earl of Warwick had nothing in View but to amuse young Edward, who he well knew would die before the time was come for the Consummation of the Marriage.

Affairs of Religion.

I ſhall not enlarge much upon this Article for two Reaſons. 1. Becauſe in this Tome of the Fœdera we find but few important Acts on that Subject. 2. Becauſe the Alteration which was made in Religion in the Reign of Edward VI, has been ſo well accounted for in the Biſhop of Salisbury's Hiſtory of the Reformation of England, that it would be loſs of Time here to enter into a long Train of Particulars upon that Subject.

THE Death of Henry VIII, in 1547, having deliver'd the People of England from that Fear and Slavery to which they were ſubject during that Prince's Reign, the Proteſtants made no longer ſcruple to declare their Sentiments, and even to preach them publickly, tho' the Laws made in the Reign of Henry VIII were ſtill in Force. The Advancement of the Duke of Somerſet to the Dignity of Protector made them conceive great Hopes, becauſe that Lord was entirely of their Party. Moreover, they had the King himſelf on their ſide, together with the two Archbiſhops, ſeveral Biſhops, and others of the Heads of the Clergy, beſides a conſiderable number of Friends among the great Men, and the common People. Conſequently all the Authority was on their ſide, becauſe they were ſupported by the Government. Their Enemies, who were not in ſo advantagious a Situation, were ſenſible that their Religion could expect no Favour; ſo that without ſtriving to alter what was now done, all they pretended to was to hinder any greater Changes. For this Purpoſe they maintain'd that nothing could be decided with reſpect to Religion under a Minority. Becauſe nothing could be done in it but by virtue of the King's Supremacy, they pleaded for the neceſſity of ſtaying 'till he was of Age to exerciſe it, and to know Religion by himſelf, and not by the Eyes of another. But they that were at the Helm, would by no means admit of this Maxim, which might have Influence upon the other Affairs of the Government; and they maintain'd that the Royal Authority was the ſame, whether the King was of Age or not.

The advantageous Situation of the Proteſtants.

UPON this Plea they began to promote the Reformation by a general Viſitation of the Churches, with a Power to the Viſitors to aboliſh the groſſeſt Abuſes, particularly with reſpect to Images. Bonner Biſhop of London, and Gardiner of Wincheſter, were the only Biſhops of the whole Bench that oppos'd the Regulation which the Viſitors made. They went upon the Maxim I have juſt now mention'd, that no Change could be made in Religion during the Minority of a King; but for their refuſal they were both confin'd, Bonner to the Tower, and Gardiner to his own Houſe. The latter had his Liberty by virtue of an Act of Grace which was granted at the End of the firſt Seſſion of Parliament; but in the Year following he was ſent to the Tower for the very ſame Fault. Bonner was alſo reſtor'd to his Epiſcopal Functions, but he did not hold it long. Princeſs Mary complain'd likewiſe very bitterly, in a Letter ſhe wrote to the Council, againſt the Alterations made in Religion during the King's Minority. But the Protector ſent her an Anſwer which convinc'd her that the King and Council did not intend to be directed by her, and that ſhe had nothing to do but to obey.

Princeſs Mary complains to Council againſt the Alterations in Religion.

THE Parliament which met the 4th of November made ſome Advances towards a Reformation beyond what had been known in the Reign of Henry VIII. They repeal'd certain Acts made formerly againſt the Lollards, revok'd the Law of the ſix Articles, confirm'd the King's Supremacy, aboliſh'd private Maſſes, and gave the Cup to the Laity in the Communion. The King was inveſted with a Power to nominate to vacant Biſhopricks, by which means the Conges d' Eſlire, which for ſome time paſt were only Grimace, becauſe they were always at the Pleaſure of the Court, were aboliſh'd. The Juriſdiction of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts was alſo reſtrain'd, and at length the Parliament granted the King all the Lands ſet apart for the Maintenance of Chantries, and all other Revenues appropriated to ſuperſtitious Uſes, as the Support of Lamps, Fraternities, and other things of that Nature. This Article was paſs'd notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who foreſeeing the ill Uſe that would be made of it, deſir'd that the Diſpoſition of thoſe Eſtates might be deferr'd 'till a fit Opportunity preſented to employ them for the Service of the Publick and the Church.

Further Advances of the Parliament towards a Reformation; by Acts repealing thoſe againſt the Lollards, and the ſix Articles, by other Acts concerning the Sacrament, and the Nomination of Biſhops, and for aboliſhing private Maſſes and Chantries.

THE King, the Protector, and the Parliament, having manifeſted by ſuch Conduct their Deſign to make a thorough Reformation, ſeveral eminent Men among the Proteſtants of Germany retir'd to England, there to enjoy that Liberty of Conſcience which was deny'd them in their own Country, after the great Advantages which the Emperor had gain'd over the League of Smalcald. Of this number were Peter Martyr, Bucer, Ochinus, and Fagius, to whom the King granted Penſions and Benefices for their Subſiſtence.

THE

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

THE Parliament, which met again on the 24th of November, 1548, made a farther Progreſs in the Affair of the Reformation. They permitted Prieſts to marry, and approv'd the new Liturgy drawn up by their Order, in which many things were reform'd, eſpecially in the Office of the Communion: This reformed Liturgy is much the ſame that the Church of England makes uſe of at this Day.

Parliament's further Progreſs in the Reformation.

The Liturgy ſettled.

NOTWITHSTANDING theſe advantagious Alterations, yet the greateſt Number of the Reformed were diſpleaſed that Matters were not carried further. They knew that the Protector had a great many Enemies, and were afraid that if he ſhould miſcarry, his Fall would be the Ruin of the Reformation, in which thoſe Zealots were always oppos'd by Cranmer, who was for advancing it by little and little.

Princeſs Mary refuſes it.

IN 1549, after the Prorogation of the Parliament, the new Liturgy was received in all the Churches, only Princeſs Mary refuſed to admit it in her Chapel. But the King and Council had reſolved to have compell'd her, if the Emperor's powerful Interceſſion had not prevented its being put in execution.

Commiſſion to try the German Anabaptiſts.

THE Protector and Council being inform'd ſome time after, that a great Number of Anabaptiſts were come from Germany into England, iſſued a Commiſſion in the King's Name to Cranmer, and ſome others, to proceed againſt them by the Laws of the Realm. An Engliſh Woman, whoſe Name was Joan Butcher, or Bocher, otherwiſe call'd Joan of Kent, being converted by them, was declared a Heretick by the Commiſſioners, and as ſuch deliver'd over to the Secular Power, who condemn'd her to the Flames. The King reſiſted a long time before he could be prevailed on to ſign the Order for the Execution; and it was only owing to the vehement Sollicitations of Cranmer, that he ſign'd it at laſt, with Tears in his Eyes, telling the Prelate at the ſame time, that he ſhould be anſwerable for it in the Preſence of God. But this extreme Severity gain'd Cranmer no Reputation, and he was ſure to be twitted with it as often as an Opportunity offered *. A Dutchman of the ſame Sect was alſo executed in the ſame manner †. But Cranmer and the reſt little thought that the time was coming when they that had the Power in their Hands, would treat them in the ſame manner.

An Engliſh Woman of that Sect burnt, and a Dutch*man.*

EDWARD VI.

IT had been a Rule with Bonner, Biſhop of London, to make the greateſt Oppoſition that he could to all the Alterations that were making in Religion, becauſe he acted upon the Maxim I have already mention'd, touching the Authority of a King under Age; but when the thing was once decided, and paſſed into a Law, he acquieſced in it with a good Grace, and by that means ſuffer'd no Advantage to be taken of him with reſpect to his publick Actions. But it was known, that in private he diſapproved of every thing that was done, and endeavoured to propagate Maxims that were very dangerous. Nevertheleſs, for all his Diſſimulations, he render'd himſelf ſo ſuſpected, that the Council reſolved to make Trial of him: Therefore an Order was ſent him to preach upon a certain Day in St. Paul's Church, London, and ſolidly to eſtabliſh certain Points in his Sermon, of which this was the principal, That a Minor King has as much Authority as a King that is of Age. He preach'd as he had been ordered, and let fall ſome equivocal and dangerous Propoſitions in his Sermon, without mentioning one Word about the main Article relating to the Authority of a King under Age. Upon this the King having appointed Commiſſioners to proceed againſt him, he was depriv'd, and ſent to the Tower.

His Sermon,

and Impriſonment.

THIS was quickly followed by the Diſgrace of the Duke of Somerſet, after which the Earl of Warwick uſurp'd the Adminiſtration of the Government. The Pope's Party knowing that the new Miniſter would be favourable to them, and unravel all that the Duke of Somerſet had done, began already to triumph; but their Hopes were vain. Warwick, who proſtituted Religion to his ambitious Views, thought that in order to ſupport himſelf, it would be better for him to conform to the Inclinations of the King, and the Majority of the People, than to pretend to thwart them. He abus'd the Earl of Southampton, one of the moſt zealous Champions for the Pope, to ſuch a degree that he broke his Heart. Conſequently they who were ſtill attach'd to the old Religion, had Reaſon to be convinc'd that they had no Good to expect from the Credit of the Earl of Warwick.

Ill Treatment of the Earl of Southampton.

* THE Author of the Notes upon this Reign in the Complete Hiſtory of England, Tom. II, vindicates the Archbiſhop from this ſevere Charge, on account of his Humanity and Tenderneſs of Nature; and obſerves that he was put upon it by the Council, according to the Confeſſion of Fox himſelf, whom he blames for Ill-will to Churchmen, in aſperſing a Prelate who was the chief Inſtrument of our Reformation. The late Biſhop Burnet, who ſays that this Joan Bocher was burnt for denying the Incarnation of Chriſt, and that ſhe was ſo extravagantly conceited and enthuſiaſtical that ſhe was fitter for Bedlam than the Stake, obſerves, That the Anabaptiſts that came over from Germany at this time were of two Sorts; that the one only objected to the ſprinkling of Children, but the other held many Opinions that had been anciently condemned as Hereſies, of which latter Sort was this Joan Bocher.

† HIS Name was George van Parre; who, according to the Biſhop of Sarum, was burnt for denying the Divinity of Chriſt.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

In the Year 1550 the Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter, founded by Henry VIII, was united to the Biſhoprick of London, in favour of Nicholas Ridley; and in order to compenſate Thyrleby, who was Biſhop of Weſtminſter, he was made Biſhop of Norwich.

See of Weſtminſter united to London.

STEPHEN Gardiner, Biſhop of Winchester, who was as much ſuſpected as Bonner, was depriv'd in the Year 1551. That ſame Year the old Religion receiv'd a mortal Stab by a new Confeſſion of Faith, in which the Maſs, the real Preſence, and Tranſubſtantiation, were aboliſhed. The Princeſs Mary abſolutely refuſed to conform to theſe Alterations, and finding that the King was reſolv'd to uſe her with Violence, ſhe actually intended to leave the Kingdom, but was prevented *. There's ſome Probability that if the Earl of Warwick had already form'd a Deſign to exclude her from the Succeſſion, he would not have been againſt her withdrawing out of the Kingdom, becauſe ſhe could not have done him ſo much Hurt abroad as at Home.

Bp. Gardiner depriv'd.

A new Confeſſion of Faith rejected by Princeſs Mary.

HEATH, Biſhop of Worceſter, and Day, Biſhop of Cheſter, were depriv'd in the Year 1552, becauſe of their having been ſo vigorous in oppoſing the Progreſs of the Reformation. It ſeems that the Council had reſolved to make all the Efforts poſſible, in order to reconcile by fair means thoſe of the Biſhops who were ſtill attach'd to the old Religion, and to get rid of the moſt obſtinate of them by Deprivation; but theſe Deprivations were attended with great Difficulty. After the King had been veſted with a Power to nominate to Biſhopricks, he gave Patents to the Biſhops, which conferred the Sees on them durante vitâ; therefore in order to degrade a Biſhop, there was a neceſſity of appointing Commiſſioners, and to find out Crimes, either real or imaginary, which might render the Biſhop accuſed worthy of Deprivation. For this Reaſon the Council thought it proper that the King ſhould confer no more Biſhopricks but with this Clauſe or Condition, quamdiu ſe bene geſſerit. By that means, a Biſhop might be turn'd out of his Biſhoprick without any Examination, by the King's meer Will and Pleaſure. Queen Mary did not fail to make uſe of thoſe ſame Patents to turn out thoſe very Biſhops whom Edward had eſtabliſhed with this Condition.

EDWARD VI.

TONSTAL, Biſhop of Durham, was alſo depriv'd this Year, but not ſo much on account of his Religion, as for the Dignity of Palatine, which was annexed to his Biſhoprick, and with which the Earl of Warwick deſired to be inveſted, as he actually was after the Biſhoprick of Durham was ſuppreſſed. Of this ſame Biſhoprick, ſtripp'd of the Palatinate, the King founded two Sees, one at Durham, and the other at Newcaſtle †.

Biſhop of Durham depriv'd.

THUS have I given the Subſtance of the moſt material Events relating to Religion in the Reign of Edward VI. The Curious who wiſh to know farther Particulars, may conſult the Hiſtory of the Reformation of England, ſo often mentioned.

The Acts in this XVth Tome of the Fœdera, relating to Religion, are,

* BISHOP Burnet ſays, the Emperor eſpouſed her Quarrel ſo warmly, that he threaten'd to make War, if ſhe ſhould be hardly us'd; and the Merchants having then great Effects at Antwerp, the Council, for fear they ſhould be ſeiz'd, were willing to let the Matter fall; and prevail'd on her to have her Maſs ſaid ſo privately as not to give Offence, which Edward, tho' with great Regret, conniv'd at.

† THE former was to have 2000 Marks Revenue, and the latter 1000. There was alſo a Dean and Chapter to be endow'd at Newcaſtle, but the King's Death put a Stop to the Affair; and upon the Acceſſion of Mary, the old Biſhoprick of Durham was new erected, and Tonſtal, who was depriv'd and committed to the Tower, as Dr. Burnet ſays, upon an Information of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, was reſtored. See alſo Stow's Annals, where 'tis ſaid, that the Pretence for diſſolving this Biſhoprick was the great Extent of it, ſo that one Biſhop was not enough to take care of it.

‡ M. le Clerc has thought fit to ſubjoin the following Reflections to this Article. They, ſays he, who iſſued this Commiſſion in Edward's Name, as well as they who ſollicited it, did not only violate Chriſtian Charity, which does not warrant the Puniſhment of bare Errors in Judgment, but alſo tranſgreſſed the ordinary Rules

8. A Commission to Archbishop Cranmer, Bishop Ridley, the two Secretaries of State, viz. Sir William Peters, and Sir Thomas Smith, and William May, LLD. and Dean of St. Paul's, to examine Bonner, Bishop of London, with a Power to imprison or deprive him of his Bishoprick; dated Sept. 8, 1549 * [d].

192. 9. ANOTHER explaining some Doubts arisen upon the former one; dated the 17th of the same Month [e].

10. THE Grant of a Pension of 100 l. Sterling to Martin Bucer a German, and Professor of Divinity; dated the 26th of that Month [f]. EDWARD VI. Bucer's Pension. 192.

11. THE Grant of another to Paul Fagius a German, also a Divinity Professor; dated as above. Fagius's. 192.

THIS is the last Piece wherein the King says, By the Advice of Edward Duke of Somerset. &c. for in the following Acts he says, By the Advice of our Council.

12. A Licence granted to the Earl of Warwick, his Family and Visitors, to eat Flesh in the Time of Lent; dated Feb. 18, 1550 [g]. Licences for eating Flesh in Lent. 207.

THERE are others of the same Kind which shew that this Custom was not yet much known in England.

13. THOMAS Thyrleby's Resignation of the Bishoprick of Westminster to the King, in order to dispose of it as he shall think fit; dated March 31, 1550 [h]. See of Westminster yielded to the King. 219.

THESE Resignations of Bishopricks were by no means pardonable, because a Bishop has not such a Property in his See as to dispose of it. Nor is it a Farm or Lease of such Nature, that the King has a Power to redemand it, either to appropriate it to himself, or to give it to any other according to his good Pleasure. But these were some of Henry VIIIth's Rules of Prudence. For these were not of that Sort of Anabaptists who were guilty of so many Disorders and Crimes at Munster, because this Patent granted them Pardon on their Repentance; whereas the Civil Laws do nevertheless punish Rebellion, Polygamy, Murder, and the other Crimes of that Nature, of which those of Munster were guilty, tho' there be Repentance. But in this Patent the Persons to be tried were such as the Archbishops and Bishops had a Power to pardon and enjoin Penance on, if they abandon'd their Sentiments. The Prelates who were empower'd to pardon them, and if the Enormity of the Fact required it, to deliver them over to the Secular Arm, ought to have consider'd that the same Case might happen to themselves, if Mary the eldest Daughter of Henry VIII should chance to succeed her Brother, which might easily be, and as she did accordingly. I cannot imagine how Cranmer and the others, to whom this Commission was directed, suffered themselves to be stiled not only Cognitores, Judices, & Commissarii, i. e. Examiners, Judges and Commissioners, but also Inquisitores, or Inquisitors, a Name abhorred by the whole Body of the Protestants, and even by some of the Catholicks. For after this, they had no Reason to complain of what Protestants suffered from the Roman Catholick Princes, and particularly in the Reign of Queen Mary. If it be objected that the Protestants had Truth on their Side, that does not bring them off; for the Judges in Mary's time pretended to be as much in the Right as they; and as they were likewise both Judges and Parties, they hang'd and burnt the Protestants provisionally, 'till God should decide the Cause for them.

——————————dolendum
Hæc dici potuisse, & non potuisse refelli.

BISHOP Burnet observes, that no Severities were used against that Sort of Anabaptists who only objected to the Mode and Subjects of Baptism; though some Books were written to justify Infant Baptism.

* Dr. Burnet's History takes Notice with what Disrespect and Disingenuity he carried it to the Delegates, and with what foul Language he treated his Accusers, so that he behav'd like one disturb'd in his Brain. He called the Accusers Hereticks, and said they only prosecuted him because they denied the Presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and that therefore they were excommunicate, and not capable to appear in any Court: And when Mr. Secretary Smith said he had acted like a Thief and a Traitor, he told him, that as he was Secretary of State he honoured him, but as he was Sir Thomas Smith, he was a Liar, and he defied him. He also refused to answer while Sir Thomas was present, and for such Contempt of the Court he was committed to Prison, where continuing obstinate, though he was promised gentler Usage, he lay under Sentence of Deprivation 'till Queen Mary's Reign; behaving, says Dr. Burnet, more like a Glutton than a Divine; for he sent about to his Friends to furnish him well with Puddings and Pears, and gave all to the Devil that did not supply him liberally. Such Curses, adds the Historian, were strange Acts of Episcopal Jurisdiction; yet they were mild, compared to those he gave out when he was restored to his See in the next Reign, by which he condemn'd so many Innocents to the Fire. But in order to set this Process of the Delegates against him in the clearest Light, we cannot omit the Opinion of Dr. Burnet upon the whole Matter, that it being resolved to turn him out upon the first Occasion, the Fault was rather aggravated for his Sake, than he depriv'd for the Fault, which would have been more gently passed over in another; but he had been fierce and cruel, and so was much hated, and little pitied.

Monasteries resign'd to the King.

IN this Tome, under the Reign of Edward VI, we find the Surrender of several Monasteries to the King, which 'tis probable Henry VIII had left standing; all which favour'd very much of this Prince's despotick Power, and could not be defended by the Rules either of true Divinity or sound Policy **.

The

* DR. Burnet says, he came over this Year with some Germans of the Helvetian Confession, who were erected by Letters Patent into a Corporation, of which he was their Superintendant; but the Doctor adds, that he meddled too much for a Foreigner with English Affairs, and wrote against the Episcopal Habits, and against kneeling at the Sacrament.

† DR. Burnet says, Poinet had 2000 Marks in Lands assign'd him for his Subsistence; for he has a Remark, that the hungry Courtiers had begg'd the best Manors in several Bishopricks, so that in some it was hardly possible for a Bishop to subsist.

‡ THE Reason why his Consecration was so long deferr'd after the King had given him the Bishoprick, we learn from Dr. Burnet, who says, that he had some Scruples concerning the Episcopal Vestments, and that he thought that all those Garments having been consecrated with much Superstition, were to be reckon'd among the Elements condemn'd by St. Paul. Ridley, Bucer, and Peter Martyr wrote to Hooper in Vindication of those Vestments; but he was very stiff, and was suspended for a while from preaching, 'till at last his Scruples were so far satisfy'd, that he was content to be consecrated in his Vestments, and to wear them when he preached before the King, or in his Cathedral, though he was dispensed with upon other Occasions.

‖ GLOUCESTER was soon after made an exempted Archdeaconry, and he was declared Bishop of Worcester only. See Dr. Burnet.

 For any other considerable Transactions in this Reign, Dr. Nicholson, late Bishop of Londonderry, thought the curious could not consult a better Register than the Diary written with this King's own Hand, and still preserv'd in the Cotton Library, from whence the Reverend Dr. Burnet transcrib'd and publish'd it. See the Appendix to Tom. II. of the Reformation.

The full Character of this hopeful young Prince is given us by the Learned Cardan, who wrote it after his Death, and in Italy, where this Prince was counted an Heretick, so that there was nothing to be got or expected by flattering him; and yet it is so great, and at the same time so strictly true, that we shall give it here in English before we pass to the next Reign.

"All the Graces, says Cardan, were apparent in King Edward; and for the Tongues, he was not only exact in the English, French, and Latin, but understood the Greek, Italian and Spanish: nor was he ignorant of Logick, the Principles of natural Philosophy, or Musick, being apt to learn every thing. The Sweetness of his Temper was such as became a Mortal, his Gravity becoming the Majesty of a King, and his Disposition suitable to his high Degree. In short, that Child was so bred, had such Parts, and was of such Expectation, that he look'd like the Miracle of a Man. These things are not spoken rhetorically and beyond the Truth, but are indeed short of it. —— In fine, he was a marvellous Boy. He began to love the liberal Arts before he knew them, to know them before he cou'd use them; and in him there was such an EFFORT OF NATURE, that not only England, but the World has reason to lament his being so early snatch'd away. How truly was it said of such extraordinary Persons, that their Lives are short. He gave us an Essay of Virtue, tho' he did not live to give a Pattern of it. When the Gravity of a King was needful, he carry'd himself like " like a man in Years, and yet was always affable and gentle as became his Youth. —— In Bounty he emulated " his Father, who in ſome Caſes may appear to have been bad, but there was no Ground for ſuſpecting any " ſuch thing in the Son, whoſe Mind was cultivated by the Study of Philoſophy. EDWARD VI.

Dr. Cox was his Preceptor for Manners, and for the Knowledge of Philoſophy and Divinity, and Mr. Cheek for the Languages and Mathematicks. He was ſo forward in his Learning, that before he was eight Years old, he wrote Latin Letters to his Father, to his Godfather the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to his Uncle the Earl of Hertford, and to Catherine Parr.

To this we ſhall add the Character of this excellent King, as drawn by the late Biſhop of Sarum, Vol. II. of his Hiſtory of the Reformation.

" He was counted the Wonder of his Time: He was not only learned in the Tongues and the Liberal Sci- " ences, but knew well the State of his Kingdom. He kept a Table-Book, in which he wrote the Characters " of all the eminent Men of the Nation. He ſtudy'd Fortification, and underſtood the Mint well. He knew " all the Harbours in all his Dominions, with the Depth of Water, and Way of coming into them. He under- " ſtood Foreign Affairs ſo well, that the Ambaſſadors who were ſent into England publiſh'd very extraordinary " things of him in all the Courts of Europe. He had great quickneſs of Apprehenſion, but being diſtruſtful of " his Memory, he took Notes of every thing he heard that was conſiderable, in Greek Characters, that thoſe " about him might not underſtand what he wrote, which was afterwards copied out fair in the Journal that he " kept.

" His Virtues were wonderful. When he was made believe that his Uncle had conſpir'd the Death of the other " Counſellors, he abandon'd him. Barnaby Fitz Patrick was his Favourite; and when he ſent him to travel, " he writ oft to him to keep good Company, to avoid Exceſs and Luxury, and to improve himſelf in thoſe things " that might render him capable of Employment at his Return. He was very merciful in his Nature, took " great Care to have his Debts well paid, and had ſpecial Regard to the Petitions of the Poor and Oppreſs'd; " but his great Zeal for Religion crown'd all the reſt. " It was not an angry Heat about it that acted him, but " it was a true Tenderneſs of Conſcience founded on the Love of God and his Neighbours.

" Theſe extraordinary Qualities, ſet off with great Sweetneſs and Affability, made him univerſally belov'd by " his People, of whom ſome call'd him their Joſias, others Edward the Saint, and others the Phœnix, that " riſeth out of his Mother's Aſhes: And all People concluded the Sins of England muſt have been very great, " ſince they provok'd God to deprive the Nation of ſo ſignal a Bleſſing as the reſt of his Reign would in all ap- " pearance have prov'd. And indeed ſo great were they, that as they provok'd God highly on the one hand, ſo they " diſpoſed the People much to that ſad Caſtrophe which is to be the Subject of the next Reign.

The REIGN of Queen MARY.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

WE proceed now to the Reign of Queen Mary, the chief Events of which we ſhall range under three Articles, viz. Domeſtick Affairs, religious Affairs, and foreign Affairs. Q. MARY.

ARTICLE I.

Of Domeſtick Affairs, beginning at the Year 1553.

Proclamation of Jane Gray.

THE Act by which Edward VI had transferr'd the Crown to Jane Gray, was not capable to fix her on the Throne. She was indeed immediately proclaim'd Queen by the Duke of Northumberland, purſuant to the Orders of Council, but her Reign was not many Days; for Mary, Siſter to the deceas'd King, ſecur'd a great number of Friends in the Counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, by promiſing the Inhabitants that ſhe would not make any Alteration in the eſtabliſhed Religion. Her Party was ſtrengthened by the Support of the Nobility; and at laſt the Duke of Northumberland was obliged to put himſelf at the Head of an Army to march againſt Mary, whoſe Friends encreaſed every Day. But he was no ſooner gone from London than the Council declared for Mary, and proclaim'd her; and the Duke of Northumberland being abandon'd by his Army, was himſelf obliged, in hopes of ſaving his Life, to cauſe Mary to be proclaim'd at Cambridge; but notwithſtanding this he was arreſted, and afterwards put to Death. He own'd on the Scaffold that he had been always a Catholick from his Soul. But it was the Opinion of many, that he only ſaid it in hopes of obtaining his Pardon *, and that in the main either of the two Religions was the leaſt of his Concern. He had committed a great Overſight in not cauſing Mary and Elizabeth to be ſecur'd before Edward dy'd; but he entertained Hopes of catching them in the Snare that he had laid for them, wherein he found himſelf miſtaken. Mary was not at all belov'd, and yet every Body declar'd for her, by reaſon they were afraid of relapſing under the Duke of Northumberland's Tyranny, if Jane Gray his Daughter in-Law continued on the Throne. Thus it may be truly ſaid, that this Duke was the only Cauſe of the Diſaſter of this unfortunate Princeſs, as he had been the ſole Author of her Advancement. I will not enter farther into the Particulars of the Troubles at that time in England for the ſake of placing Mary on the Throne, not only becauſe the Hiſtory of it is very well known, but becauſe the publick Acts make no mention of it.

* FOX clears up this matter, by telling us that he was promis'd a Pardon, tho' his Head were on the Block, on condition he would recant and hear Maſs; and this is confirmed by the Author of the Hiſtory of England in two Volumes 8*vo*, who ſays, that after the Duke had kneel'd down, and commended his Spirit into the Hands of the Lord, he look'd about as if he expected a Pardon, but none coming, he then patiently ſubmitted his Neck to the Block.

Foedera Tom. XV.

THE Project for re-eſtabliſhing the Catholick Religion in England, and extirpating the Proteſtants, was almoſt the ſole Aim and Buſineſs of Queen Mary, during the whole Courſe of her Reign. I ſhall ſay nothing of it here, becauſe I intend to treat of it under the ſecond Head. In this I ſhall confine my ſelf to certain things which have no relation to the Affairs of Religion; tho' 'tis nevertheleſs very apparent that this bigotted Queen had a View in all her Actions to her main Deſign, which I juſt now mention'd. It was this only Conſideration that engag'd her to marry Philip, Prince of Spain, and Son to the Emperor Charles V. She was made to believe that ſince ſhe had form'd a Deſign ſeriouſly to promote the Converſion of her Subjects, ſhe had reaſon to fear that ſuch an Undertaking wou'd occaſion Rebellions in the Kingdom, and that in that caſe ſhe cou'd not ſubſiſt without a foreign Alliance: that an Alliance with the Emperor was the more neceſſary for her, becauſe Mary Stuart Queen of Scotland, who was in the power of the King of France, and deſign'd as a Match for the Dauphin, had Pretenſions to the Crown of England, which the King of France wou'd think ſo plauſible, that he wou'd be inclin'd to aſſert them, and to take an advantage of the Rebellions of the Engliſh, if he ſaw the Queen without Friends and Allies. Theſe Reaſons were ſo convincing to Mary, that ſhe reſolv'd to marry Philip; and the Man that ſhe employ'd in negotiating it, was Gardiner, the Perſon that firſt put her upon it, who having already ſecretly concerted meaſures with the Emperor, gave him to underſtand that he ought not to diſpute about any Conditions that ſhou'd be demanded of him: and that in order to engage the Engliſh to conſent to the Marriage, it was abſolutely neceſſary to yield ſome Articles to them, the execution of which might afterwards be at Philip's Option, juſt as he thought fit; but that above all things there was a neceſſity of ſending a great Sum of Money to England to bribe the Members of Parliament, and engage them to approve of the Marriage[a]. Tho' the Houſe of Commons had already given the Queen proofs of all the Condeſcenſion in the world, as to the Articles of Religion, yet they were all in confuſion upon the Report of this Marriage, and preſented an Addreſs to this Queen to divert her from it; but their Addreſs was very ill receiv'd, and the Parliament immediately diſſolv'd[b].

Queen Mary's Reaſons for Marriage.

Gardiner employ'd to negotiate it.

Parliament diſſolv'd for oppoſing it.

Q. MARY

IN the beginning of the Year 1554, the Emperor ſent a magnificent Embaſſy to England, and the Marriage was concluded after the manner that Gardiner had contriv'd it; that is to ſay, the Emperor granted every thing that was deſir'd of him[c].

Her Marriage concluded.

NOT long after this, happen'd the Rebellion or Conſpiracy of Wyat, a Kentiſh Gentleman, who took Arms in company with the Duke of Suffolk, and ſeveral other Malecontents, to oppoſe the Queen's Marriage with the Spaniſh Prince. Wyat having gather'd an Army, advanc'd to London without oppoſition, and fancying that the Citizens wou'd take Arms in his favour, he was ſo raſh as to enter the City with his Army, and to engage in a Street where for want of room to extend his Troops, he was taken and committed to Priſon. This Enterprize coſt the Lives of Jane Gray[d], her Husband Lord Guilford Dudley, her Father the Duke of Suffolk, and many others, and was within an ace of being as fatal to the Princeſs Elizabeth; for Wyat, in hopes of ſaving his own Life, accus'd her of being an accomplice in his Treaſon, but afterwards when he came to Execution, he revok'd what he had ſaid. Nevertheleſs, ſo deſirous were the Queen and her Miniſters of finding her guilty, that they ſent her to the Tower, where ſhe was uſed very roughly. And Gardiner ſpeaking of the Efforts that were made to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion, ſaid 'twas in vain to lop off the Branches of that Tree without cutting down the Trunk; by which he meant Elizabeth, whom Providence deliver'd from ſuch imminent danger[e].

THE new Parliament which met in 1554, approv'd of the Queen's Marriage; and Prince Philip arriv'd ſoon after, with a great Sum of Money, to make good Gardiner's Promiſes to thoſe he had hir'd to obtain the Approbation of the two Houſes; and ſo the Marriage was conſummated.

Queen's Marriage approv'd by Parliament, and conſummated.

Philip's arrival was happy for Elizabeth, becauſe at his Intreaty, the Queen laid aſide the Deſigns which ſhe had form'd againſt her. It was pretended that Philip did this more out of Policy than Goodnature; for no doubt he conſider'd that if Mary ſhou'd die without Iſſue, the Crown of Philip's arrival happy for Elizabeth.

[a] Bp. Burnet ſays, that 400,000 l. was order'd to be diſtributed for this end, at the Diſcretion of Gardiner and the Emperor's Ambaſſadors, great part of which was paid in hand, the Emperor having borrow'd it from ſome of the Free Towns of Germany, and the reſt brought over with the Prince.

[c] The Annotator upon Biſhop Godwin's Hiſtory of this Reign in the 3d Vol. of the Compleat Hiſtory of England, proves from the Teſtimony of Sir Francis Haſtings, who flouriſh'd in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and had good Authority for what he ſays; in his Book call'd the Watchword, that the ſecret Deſign of the Spaniſh Court in this Match, was not ſo much to eſtabliſh the Papacy, as to annex the Crown of England to the Spaniſh Monarchy.

[d] The two firſt were beheaded the 12th of February 1554, and the laſt on the 23d of the ſame Month. See Biſhop Godwin's and Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtories, to which we refer for their Behaviour.

[e] She was led into the Tower by the Traytor's Gate, ſo ſtrictly guarded, that none but Spies were admitted to her, and deny'd the Liberty of walking on the Leads, or the ordinary Comforts of Air; and tho' ſhe was ſent to Woodſtock when nothing cou'd be made out againſt her, yet ſhe was kept under ſtrict Guards, and very roughly uſed by Sir Henry Bennifield. See Burnet's Hiſtory.

of England might go to the young Queen of Scotland, and by consequence to the Dauphin, who by that means might one day annex all Great-Britain and Ireland to the Monarchy of France; whereas if Elizabeth was living, she would be a Bar to such Union.

Q. Mary's false Conception.

IN 1555, the Queen fancying her self with Child, at the end of 9 Months thought she was just ready to be brought to Bed, and Couriers were actually posted to carry the News of her Delivery to several Courts; but it happen'd that she was mistaken [a]. They say, that Philip was told there was no hopes of the Queen's ever having any Children, and that this put him out of conceit with his Spouse, who besides was no extraordinary Beauty. Be this as it will,

Philip leaves her.

he left her, and went to the Low-Countries, where soon after, viz. Octob. 25. 1555.

Emperor resigns his Dominions to him.

the Emperor his Father resign'd his Dominions to him in a Convention of the Estates at Brussels.

THE two following Years were employ'd wholly in persecuting the Protestants, as we find in Dr. Burnet's History of the Reformation.

A Member of the H. of Commons sent to Prison, for opposing a Motion to give the same Sanction to the Queen's Proclamations as to Acts of Parliament.

IN 1558, some of the Court-Party in the House of Commons propos'd the giving of the same Authority to the Queen's Proclamations, or Patents, as to Acts of Parliament. But one of the Members strenuously oppos'd the Motion, for this Cause especially, that at this rate it wou'd be entirely in the Queen's Breast to alter the Order of the Succession. The House was alarm'd at his Speech, and so disgusted that any one of their Members shou'd offer to suspect the Queen's having such a Design, that they committed him to Custody [b]. Nevertheless this was sufficient to let the Queen see, that it wou'd not be easy for her to deprive the Princess Elizabeth of her Right; and this made her hate her Sister the more, who was for some time in great danger. The Queen easily foresaw that Elizabeth who was a Protestant in her Heart, and whose Interest it was to be so, wou'd kick down all that she had built, whenever she ascended the Throne.

Q. Mary

THIS was the occasion of terrible uneasiness to Elizabeth, who was forc'd to carry it as fair as possible to the Queen, even so far as to dissemble her Sentiments about Religion, to go frequently to Confession, and to have Mass said in her House. Not long after, she was demanded in Marriage by the King of Sweden, who caus'd it to be propos'd to her before one word was said of it to the Queen; but Elizabeth behav'd so well in so tickliſh an Affair, that she gave her Enemies no advantage over her: And at last, the Death of Mary, which happen'd Nov. 1558, deliver'd Elizabeth from all her Fears, and from the danger to which she was continually expos'd [c].

[a] Bishop Godwin says, she had that sort of Swelling which Physicians call a Mole, and that other Symptoms of Pregnancy seeming to concur, she gave her self up to the Tales of Midwives, and neglecting the Advice of Physicians, affirm'd she felt the Motion of the Embryo, upon which, tho' it turn'd to a Dropsy in process of Time, the Privy-Council on the 27th of November sent a Letter to Bonner Bishop of London, which Hollingshed has set down in his Chronicle, requiring him to publish the good News throughout his Diocese, that Te Deum might be sung for it in his Cathedral, and all other Churches, and that all the Clergy in their Masses and Divine Service, might continually pray to God, that this thing begun by his Omnipotency might be continued and brought to good Effect. In the same Chronicle there are also three Collects which were us'd upon that occasion. The Bishop adds, that much ado there was with all the necessary Provision of Cradle, Clouts, and such Trumpery, against the good Hour; but all to no purpose, for in the Month of June they were undeceiv'd, and the Nation wak'd from this ridiculous Dream, which had even infected the Parliament, who made an Act, vesting King Philip with the future Government and Education of the Child, if the Mother shou'd die before it was grown up. But says Bishop Godwin's Annotator, Happy was it that the Heir of this Kingdom, and the Kingdom it self, had no occasion for the Government of that King of Spain and his Spaniards.

Dr. Howel says, the Queen's Delivery was taken to be so certain, because the Queen took her Chamber, and the Court swarm'd with Midwives, that some were punish'd but for questioning it; that the Bells were rung, Bonfires flam'd, and Processions were made for Joy that a Prince was born; and some in their Sermons fondly describ'd his Beauty. Some said this Rumour was spread in Policy, and that the Queen, to put the Lady Elizabeth beside the Crown, wou'd have Mother'd another Woman's Child, but King Philip scorn'd to Father it.

[b] Bishop Burnet says his Name was Coxley: but in the Notes on Godwin's History he is call'd Copley.

[c] She died of a Dropsy the 17th of November in the 43d Year of her Age, after she had reign'd 5 Years, 4 Months and 11 Days.

Foedera Tom. XV.

THESE two Grants were directly contrary to two Acts of Parliament; the former to an Act of Tonnage and Poundage, which was paſs'd the Year before in Queen Mary's Reign; the latter to an Act paſs'd in the Reign of Edward VI. by which the German Company of the Still-Yard had been ſuppreſs'd. This was the Firſt-fruit of Mary's Marriage to the Emperor's Son.

Marriage Treaty. 377.

8. A Treaty for the Queen's Marriage to Philip.

THE Queen's Ratification of it is dated in March 1554, at Weſtminſter.

THE chief Stipulations of the Treaty are theſe.

THAT by virtue of this Marriage, Philip ſhall enjoy all Mary's Titles, and aſſiſt her in the Government of her Dominions. Salvis tamen Legibus, Juribus, Privilegiis & Conſuetudinibus eorundem Regnorum, & etiam nominatim cauto & convento, quod D. Princeps, Dominæ Conthorali ſuæ Reginæ Mariæ omnimodum diſpoſitionem omnium Beneficiorum, Officiorum, Terrarum, Redituum, Fructuum, &c. relinquet, quodque ea dabuntur Originariis, &c.

i. e. Saving the Laws, Rights, Privileges and Cuſtoms of the ſaid Kingdoms; and be it alſo expreſſly provided and agreed, that the Lord the Prince ſhall leave it to the Lady Queen Mary his Conſort to diſpoſe of all Benefices, Offices, Lands, Revenues, Profits, &c. and that they ſhall be given to Natives, &c.

THAT Mary ſhall bear the Titles of her Husband, and that her Jointure ſhall be 60,000 Pounds per Annum, and that 40,000 thereof be aſſign'd to her on Spain, and the other 20,000 on the Low-Countries.

As to the Succeſſion of the Children,

THE Sons and Daughters ſhall ſucceed to the Mother's Eſtate, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of England.

AS to the Father's Eſtate, Reſervation is made to Don Carlos, Philip's Son, by the firſt Venter, of the Succeſſion of Spain, Naples, Sicily, Milan, and all the Domains of Italy, on his paying the 40,000 Livres, ſettled on Mary for her Jointure; to which Kingdoms and Domains, the Deſcendants of Don Carlos ſhall alſo ſucceed.

THE Children that ſhall be born of Philip and Mary ſhall ſucceed to the Domains of the Netherlands.

THERE were ſeveral other Articles under this Head, which it would be needleſs to mention in particular, becauſe there were no Children by this Marriage.

The Articles annex'd to the Treaty.

THAT Philip ſhall have none in his Service but the Queen's natural born Subjects.

THAT he ſhall not bring Foreigners into England, to make the Engliſh uneaſy, and that he ſhall puniſh the Contraveners. Q. MARY

THAT he ſhall make no Alteration in the Laws and Cuſtoms of England.

THAT he ſhall not carry the Queen out of the Kingdom, unleſs ſhe deſire it, and that he ſhall not convey her Children from thence without conſent of the Engliſh Nobility.

IN caſe that the Queen dies firſt, and leaves Iſſue behind her, Philip ſhall not pretend any Right to the Kingdom.

THAT he ſhall not carry away the Jewels of the Queen, or of the Crown, nor make any Alienation of what belongs to the Kingdom.

THAT England ſhall not directly nor indirectly be involv'd in the Wars of the Emperor againſt France.

popular Hatred againſt the Duke of Northumberland, did not keep her word with the Inhabitants of the County of Suffolk, to whom ſhe had promis'd that ſhe wou'd make no Alteration in Religion, and that ſhe would be content if only ſhe and her Domeſticks were allow'd the Liberty of exerciſing the Catholick Religion. The Duke of Norfolk, Gardiner and Bonner were immediately ſet at liberty, and became the Queen's chief Counſellors and Miniſters. Gardiner, Bonner, Heath, Day and Tonſtal, who had been depriv'd, were reſtor'd to their Sees; and they whom Edward VI. had ſettled therein, were turn'd out, and Gardiner was veſted with the Office of High Chancellor. At laſt the Queen's Council conſiſted wholly of the Pope's Creatures, and ſuch as were the moſt embitter'd againſt the Reformation. By means of ſuch Miniſters and the Changes that were made in all the Offices at Court, and thoſe of the Towns and Counties, the Queen had the ſatisfaction in her firſt Parliament to find a Houſe of Commons entirely at her devotion. Nothing is more eaſy for a Monarch of England than to have what Parliament almoſt he pleaſes, before he has taken any ſtep to render himſelf odious, or to create a ſuſpicion that he has Deſigns which are pernicious to the Liberty of his Subjects. If this Truth ſtood in need of Proofs, a multitude of Inſtances might be produc'd both antient and modern, ſufficient to convince the moſt incredulous.

The Pope's Creatures prefer'd to all Offices.

A Court-Parliament.

Mary having therefore found means to aſſemble ſuch a Parliament as ſhe wanted, overthrew all the Eſtabliſhments made with reſpect to Religion in the two laſt Reigns, and did not fail to get the Sentence repeal'd, which had diſſolv'd the Marriage of Henry VIII. with Catherine of Arragon. To ſay all in a word, ſhe left no Stone unturn'd that might contribute to the Execution of the Project which ſhe had form'd to re-eſtabliſh Religion in England on the ſame footing that it was before Henry VIIIth's Quarrel with the Pope. The upper Houſe of Parliament, tho' compos'd of the ſame Lords that had voted for the Eſtabliſhment of the Proteſtant Religion in the laſt Reign, gave ſo far into the Queen's Paſſion, that in this reſpect they even outſtripp'd the Houſe of Commons, which conſiſted of Members choſe by the Court Intereſt; for on the very firſt Day of their meeting, they turn'd out two Biſhops, becauſe they wou'd not go to Maſs, tho' the Laws of Edward VI. were not yet aboliſh'd. 'Tis eaſy to imagine that the Court, when back'd by ſuch a Parliament, made very great Advances in a little time. This whole Reign was a continued Series of the moſt flagrant Injuries done to the Proteſtants, and of a Barbarity without meaſure, which was never ſatiated with burning thoſe that wou'd not betray their Conſciences by changing their Religion. Nay, Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who from his own Weakneſs, and the Fear of Death, had ſign'd an Abjuration, was nevertheleſs burnt alive to gratify the Malice of the Queen, and the Enemies of the Reformation, who bore him a mortal hatred. It was not enough to burn the Living, but even the Bones of the Dead were dug up and conſum'd. In a word, not to enter into the Detail of Facts that are but too well known, I ſhall only take notice that ſo great was the Barbarity ſhewn upon the ſcore of Religion, that the very Biſhops were aſham'd of it, and wou'd fain have laid it at Philip's door; but that Prince, who was as cunning as they, caus'd a certain Dominican Friar, his Confeſſor, to preach a Sermon in publick, wherein he maintain'd that Hereticks were not to be converted by Tortures. All this however was but Grimace, for the King and Queen, the Miniſtry, the Biſhops, and all the reſt of the Clergy, were but too well agreed in the exerciſe of the moſt horrid Barbarity. Bonner Biſhop of London diſtinguiſhed himſelf during the whole courſe of this Reign, among all the other Tygers ſtain'd with human Gore. Gardiner, who was the principal Author of this Perſecution, was ſo crafty as to charge Bonner with thoſe barbarous Executions; but he was too well known to be believ'd. Foraſmuch as the Hiſtory of this Reign conſiſts chiefly of the particulars of this horrid Butchery; what I have ſaid may ſuffice for the underſtanding of the few Acts in this XVth Tome of the Fœdera that relate to the Perſecution therein carry'd on; and I ſhall only add two things that I think worthy of Remark.

Q. MARY

Cranmer's Execution.

All the late Eſtabliſhments in favour of the Reformation overthrown

House of Lords more ſtrenuous for Popery than the Queen's pack'd House of Commons

Cruelties of her Reign.

The firſt is, that the Queen deſir'd the Pope to ſend her a Legate, and that Cardinal Pole might be the Man. The Pope readily granted it; but as ſhe had given ſome intimation that ſhe intended to make him her Husband, the Emperor found means to detain the Legate in his Dominions, and order'd it ſo, that he did not arrive in England till after the Queen's Marriage with Philip had been conſummated. On the other hand, Gardiner, who had an eye to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, and was afraid that Pole, who had neither Affection nor Eſteem for him, wou'd come and rob him of that Benefice, as well as of the Queen's Favour, made uſe of all the Stratagems he cou'd think of, to retard his coming. The Legate arriv'd nevertheleſs, and reconcil'd the Engliſh Nation to the Pope, after the Parliament had deſir'd Abſolution on their Knees.

Queen Mary's Paſſion for Cardinal Pole, whoſe arrival in England is retarded by the Emperor and Gardiner. Parliament begs the Pope's Abſolution on their Knees.

THE ſecond thing I have to remark, is the Artifices which the Court of Rome made uſe of to evade giving Aſſurance to the Owners of the Church-Lands, that they ſhou'd continue to enjoy them without moleſtation. This was an Article of very great importance.

The Satisfaction deny'd by the Court of Rome to the Owners of Church-Lands.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

Importance. The Queen had given Pope Julius III. to underſtand, that without ſome ſuch Aſſurance, there was great Danger that every thing which had been done till then wou'd be untwiſted. The Court of Rome agreed that there was an abſolute neceſſity of giving the Engliſh ſome ſuch Hopes, but they had a mind to deceive them, and to have it in their power to reſtore thoſe Lands to the Church. A Bill had been propos'd in Parliament for re-eſtabliſhing the Pope's Authority in the Kingdom but this Clauſe was inſerted in it, viz; That the Alienations of Church-Lands ſhou'd be authoriz'd, and that the Poſſeſſor ſhou'd not be ſubject to any Cenſure or Proſecution on that account. Now there was an abſolute neceſſity either for rejecting this Bill, or admitting it with that Clauſe. There was no Artifice which the Pope did not make uſe of for waving his conſent to the ſaid Article. He empower'd the Legate indeed to ratify it, but he did it with ſuch Reſtrictions as were not pleaſing to the Engliſh. Afterwards, on pretence of amending the firſt Power, he gave a ſecond which was liable to more Objections than the firſt, and at laſt he granted a third which was ſtill more equivocal. Nevertheleſs the Legate was oblig'd at laſt to ratify the Article, juſt as it was worded in the Bill; but at the ſame time denounc'd the Judgement of God againſt thoſe who poſſeſs'd the Lands of the Church. Julius III. dying before this Affair was determin'd, Paul IV. who ſucceeded him, openly refus'd to confirm the Legate's Conſent, and ſaid that no Pope had it in his power to permit ſuch a thing. After this, let any one judge whether there's a poſſibility of coming to a Compoſition with the Court of Rome upon this Article, and whether the Acquieſcence of any Pope wou'd be ſufficient Security for the Poſſeſſors of the Church-Lands, if Popery ſhou'd ever make its Return into Great-Britain. Mary was ſo far perſuaded that the Conſent even of the Pope was not ſufficient, that ſhe reſtor'd all the Church-Lands that remain'd in her hands.

Pope's Legate curſes the Owners of Church Lands at the ſame time that he ratifies their Poſſeſſion.

Foreign Affairs.

THE three firſt Years of this Reign were wholly taken up in Affairs of Religion, during which the War continued betwixt the Emperor and France, tho' England was not concern'd in it.

IN 1555, after the Emperor had reſign'd his Dominions to the Prince his Son, the latter was for making a Peace, or at leaſt ſuch a Truce as might give him leiſure to fix himſelf on the Throne. Queen Mary his Spouſe entring into his Views, interpos'd in 1556, for procuring ſuch Peace or Truce, and prevail'd with the two Kings to ſend their Plenipotentiaries to a place betwixt Ardres and Calais; but the Aſſembly broke up without Succeſs. The Exaltation of Paul IV. to the papal Throne, render'd this Peace ſtill more difficult; for this old Man, who was above fourſcore Years of Age, form'd vaſt Projects, and ſuffer'd himſelf to be govern'd by his two Nephews, who were mortal mortal Enemies to the King of Spain, becauſe he ſupported the Colonna's whom they had a deſign to ruin. It was at the Inſtigation therefore of thoſe Nephews that he made an offenſive and defenſive League with France againſt Spain. This League however did not hinder Henry II. from concluding a Truce of five Years ſoon after with Philip. But the Pope, by means of Cardinal Caraffa his Nephew, whom he ſent to him in quality of Legate, engag'd him to break the Truce, and to make a new League with him for the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Naples.

IN purſuance of this League, the Duke of Guiſe carried an Army into Italy in 1557; but when he came to Rome, he found none of thoſe Preparations made which the Pope had promis'd. Mean time Philip II. ſeeing that the Truce was broke, did all he cou'd to perſuade the Queen his Spouſe to declare War againſt France, and for that purpoſe came over to her from Flanders, and at length obtain'd his Deſire. The Queen having declar'd War accordingly, ſent a Body of 8000 Men to the Low-Countries, which join'd Philip's Army commanded by the Duke of Savoy. Not long after the Duke beſieg'd St. Quintin, and after having defeated the Conſtable de Montmorency, who advanc'd near the place, and made him his Priſoner, he took it by ſtorm. This Diſaſter oblig'd Henry II. to recall the Duke of Guiſe from Italy, and the Duke was no ſooner gone from Rome, but the Pope made a ſeparate Peace with Spain, and left France in the lurch. Henry finding himſelf ſo much preſs'd, engag'd the Queen Regent of Scotland to break with England: But the Scots not being diſpos'd to gratify the Regent's Paſſion, ſhe thought 'twas her beſt way to urge Henry to haſten the Concluſion of the Marriage of the Queen her Daughter with the Dauphin, to the end that ſhe might have the more Authority in Scotland. This Marriage was accordingly compleated in the Year following, viz. 1558.

THE Duke of Guiſe returning with his Army into France, quieted the Conſternation which the whole Kingdom was under after the Battle of St. Quintin. Philip II. often admoniſh'd the Queen his Spouſe and her Council to take ſpecial care of Calais; but his Caution was ſo little regarded, that in the Year 1558, the Duke of Guiſe made himſelf Maſter of the Place after ſeven Days Siege, and then of all the Forts thereabouts which belong'd to the Engliſh. The Queen was ſo griev'd at the loſs of it, that ſhe ſaid if her Body was to be open'd after her Death, they wou'd find the Name of it in Characters upon her Heart. Philip indeed would fain have engag'd her to have made one Effort for the Recovery of that place, before the Enemy had render'd it ſtronger, and he alſo offer'd powerful Succours to aſſiſt in it; but 'twas all to no purpoſe: For the Queen's Council, which conſiſted only of Perſons that thirſted for the Blood of the Reformed, would never engage in that Undertaking, on pretence that one Year more would compleat the Ruin of the Reformation, and then they ſhould be more at leiſure to apply to the War.

Philip finding that no good would come of that Propoſal, perſuaded the Queen at length that ſhe might repair the loſs of Calais by ſeizing the Town of Breſt in Bretagne. 'Twas with this view that ſhe ſent a Fleet to Sea, commanded by the Lord Clinton, which made a Deſcent on Bretagne, and burnt the little Town of Conqueſt; but at the approach of the Arrier-ban, and the Militia of the Country, he put his Troops on board again, after having loſt 600 Men, which was all that the Queen got by this Expedition for the great Expence ſhe had laid out in the Preparations. This convinc'd her, that ſhe cou'd never reap any great advantage from the Continuance of the War, and made her conſent to the Propoſal for holding a Congreſs at Cambray, there to treat of a Peace. The Negotiation for that end was begun there in October, about a Month before the Death of Mary, which happen'd on the 17th of November, in the 43d Year of her Age.

† This ends the Reign of Queen Mary, who, ſays Dr. Howel, in leſs than four Years ſpace, thro' a blind Zeal for Religion, more than from her natural Temper, caus'd 277 Proteſtants to be put to death; of whom there were burnt 5 Biſhops, 21 Miniſters, 8 Gentlemen, 48 Artificers, 100 Husbandmen, Servants and Labourers, 26 Wives, 20 Widows, 9 Virgins, 2 Boys, and 2 Infants, one of them whipp'd to Death by bloody Bonner, and the other ſpringing out of its Mother's Womb as ſhe burnt at the Stake, and thrown back into the Fire. Moreover, 64 others were perſecuted for their Profeſſion of the true Chriſtian Doctrine, of whom 7 were whipp'd, 16 periſh'd in Dungeons, and were buried in Dunghills, and many lay rotting in Priſon under Sentence of Death 'till the Acceſſion of Queen Elizabeth.

As to Queen Mary's Character, it has appear'd ſo manifeſtly from the above Hiſtory, that it wou'd be needleſs to give a farther Deſcription of it than what is left us by Dr. Burnet, who ſays ſhe had been bred to ſome more than ordinary Knowledge; but that a froward ſort of Virtue, and a melancholy Piety are the beſt things that can be ſaid of her, becauſe ſhe left the Conduct of Affairs wholly to her Council, and gave herſelf up to follow all the Dictates and Humours of the Clergy.

We ſhall conclude with that excellent Review of the Calamities of her Reign, which was made by the Reverend Matthew Parker in his Preface to the Defence of Prieſts Marriage. "Surely, ſays he, "the brief Remembrance of the things that happen'd under this Queen is a lamentable Retroſpect! What immoderate Rains and Tempeſts raged in one Year! What intolerable Heats and Droughts in another! What Penury and Scarcity of Corn and Victuals, conſequently what Hunger and Famine! What Sickneſs, what Agues, what ſtrange Mortalities reign'd and raged! What Misfortunes commonly fell to Women with Child in their Delivery! What Fires happen'd, far more than uſual in the Reigns of other Princes, waſting in many places whole Villages, Towns and Churches! Again, what cruel Burnings of Old and Young, Men and Women whether with Child or not! What Proſcriptions and Baniſhments of Learned Men! and ſuch as tarry'd within the Realm, how were they driven to Corners, ſpoil'd, impoveriſh'd, and openly ſhamed, by vile Penances and ſhameful Recantations! And furthermore, what uncommon Rapes and Villanies committed by Strangers and Foreigners! Then at laſt, what Diſhonour and Loſs the Realm ſuſtain'd by loſing that notable Borderer Calais, ſo valiantly won by King Edward III. and (till the return of Popery) politickly and chargeably maintain'd, and defended in good and ſure poſſeſſion, to the Comfort of the whole Realm, and Terror of all our foreign Enemies."

The Reign of Queen ELIZABETH.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

THE reſt of the XVth Volume of Mr. Rymer's Fœdera, contains the Acts of the 28 firſt Years of Queen Elizabeth. But it happens, that the number of important Pieces in this Volume does not bear any proportion to the number of thoſe Years, or to the variety of conſiderable Events that fell out in that Period; for of all the Volumes that I have already run thro', I have not found any that has fewer ſuch pieces in it than this, tho 'tis altogether as big as the former. This will not appear ſtrange if it be conſider'd that the Quarrel between Elizabeth and Mary Queen of Scotland, is, as it were, the Hinge upon which almoſt all the Events of this Reign turn; which Quarrel ended at laſt in Mary's Impriſonment and Tragical Death. Several things preceded her Impriſonment which reflect no Honour upon her Memory, and which Hiſtorians cannot paſs over in ſilence, if they will be ſo ingenuous as to give the true Reaſon of her tedious Confinement. There's no doubt but Queen Elizabeth had taken care to preſerve the ſeveral pieces relating to the Queen of Scotland in her Archives, after the Example of her Predeceſſors, who had obſerv'd the ſame Precaution with reſpect to a great many Affairs of leſs importance, as appears from that vaſt Collection of which I have already given ſo many Abſtracts. But from the Year 1563, to the Death of Mary in 1587, we find only one Act in the Fœdera which relates to the Queen of Scotland. This gives a handle for ſuſpicion, that her Son, King James I. who aſcended the Throne of England after the Death of Elizabeth, order'd the Archives to be clear'd of every Act relating to the Queen his Mother, on purpoſe to deprive Poſterity as far as poſſible of the knowledge of her Affairs, and at the ſame time to ſuppreſs every Circumſtance that might conduce to leſſen the Credit of the Annals of Elizabeth, which [a] Cambden wrote by his Order. Otherwiſe, 'tis difficult to account for the barrenneſs of the Fœdera in one of the principal Affairs of Why ſo defective in Pieces relating to Mary Q. of Scots.

Queen Elizabeth's Reign. But ſeveral Authors have taken ſuch care to perpetuate the Memory of the chief Circumſtances of what paſs'd in England and Scotland with reſpect to this famous Queen, that all the Precaution taken to obliterate it has not been effectual. The defectiveneſs of the Fœdera in this ſingle Inſtance might engage me to skip over all that relates to the Queen of Scotland, from the time that ſhe retir'd to England till her Death: But as I have hitherto undertaken to give an Abſtract of the Hiſtory of every Reign, I hope it will not be taken ill that I don't leave ſo great a Blank here; the rather, becauſe 'tis in a manner impoſſible, unleſs it be fill'd up, to give a ſatisfactory Account of the few important Acts which we find in this Volume, with reſpect even to foreign Affairs, moſt of the Tranſactions in the Reign of Elizabeth having a neceſſary relation to, or dependance upon this grand Affair.

Q. ELIZ.

I will begin therefore with a general View of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, which ſhall be the firſt Article. Elizabeth's Affairs with the Queen of Scotland ſhall be the ſecond. Her Affairs with the Kingdom of Scotland, or with K. James VI. ſhall be the third. Her Affairs with France the fourth. Her Affairs with Spain and the Netherlands the fifth. The ſixth ſhall be the domeſtick Affairs; and the ſeventh the Affairs which relate to Religion. I ſhall abridge each of theſe Articles as much as poſſible.

ARTICLE I.

A general View of the Reign of Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, the Daughter of Henry VIII. by Anne of Bolleyn, had been declar'd by Act of Parliament a Baſtard, and incapable of ſucceeding to the Crown, as well as her Siſter Mary, who was that King's Daughter by Catherine of Arragon. Afterwards, Henry VIII. being authoriz'd by another Act, which gave him a Power to ſettle the Succeſſion in what manner he thought fit, provided [a] M. le Clerc is inclin'd to think, that it was rather to deſtroy the Credit of Buchanan's Hiſtory, who has not ſpar'd Mary Stuart, whereas Cambden has us'd her with exceſſive Tenderneſs.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

provided it was by Letters Patent under the Great Seal, or by a Will sign'd with his own Hand, settled it after this manner. 1. His Son Edward. 2. Mary. 3. Elizabeth. 4. Frances Brandon, Daughter of his younger Sister Mary, by the Duke of Suffolk. 5. Eleanor, Sister to Frances: And made no mention of the Issue of Margaret his eldest Sister. This Margaret had to her first Husband James IV. King of Scotland, who was Father to James V. And from James V. and Mary of Lorrain-Guise, descended Mary Queen of Scotland, and Dauphiness of France. This Will was liable to a great number of Objections and Scruples, of which I will mention the chief.

Objections against it.

I. IT was objected that Henry VIII. had not sign'd it with his own Hand; which was probably true enough.

II. IT was affirm'd to be null because the King had made no mention of the Issue of his eldest Sister, and had only plac'd the two Daughters of his younger Sister in the order of Succession; in which a twofold Nullity was observ'd, because he had not only prefer'd the Children of the younger to those of the elder, but had actually pass'd over the latter in silence, without giving any Reason for it.

III. IT was a question whether by the general Power which the Parliament had given to this Prince to settle the Succession, they intended to empower him to settle it on Bastards, unless the Act which declar'd them such had been repeal'd.

IV. IT might also be doubted, whether the King and Parliament had a Right to place Bastards on the Throne to the prejudice of lawful Issue, for which there was no Precedent.

V. AND supposing even that the King and Parliament had such an unlimited Power with regard to the English, it was still a question whether such a Settlement ought to take place to the prejudice of foreign Princes, who might lay claim to the Crown of England. For Edward III. and his Successors, who still bore the Title of Kings of France, did not think themselves bound by the Judgement which the French Nation pass'd in favour of Philip de Valois.

Elizabeth's Accession.

NOTWITHSTANDING these Objections, Elizabeth was proclaim'd Queen, and plac'd upon the Throne by the unanimous Consent of the two Houses of Parliament then assembled; but the Pope, the King of France, the King of Spain, the Queen of Scotland, in a word all the Foreign Catholicks, obstinately maintain'd that Elizabeth was a Bastard, and that by consequence she could not be lawful Queen of England; tho' at first no visible step was taken to hinder her from ascending the Throne. The Act which had declar'd her a Bastard was not the Foundation on which they rais'd their Belief. That Act, demanded of the Parliament upon an unjust Sentence, which was only supported by a Confession that had been extorted from Anne of Boleyn after her Condemnation, when she was terrify'd with the Expectation that the Sentence by which she was condemn'd to the Flames would be executed with all Severity; this Act, I say, made no Impression upon any body. But the Foundation of their Opinion was this, that the Sentence of the Divorce betwixt Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon was null in it self; that moreover it had been repeal'd by the Pope; and from thence they infer'd, that as Elizabeth was born while the former Marriage of the King her Father was still subsisting, her Birth could not be reputed Legitimate. This was the Reason that Mary found no opposition while she was on the Throne, and Elizabeth scarce any rest. And probably it was for this very Cause that Elizabeth did not procure the Repeal of the Sentence of Divorce between Henry VIII. and Anne of Boleyn her Mother. For as there was no reason to fear that such Sentence would ever serve as a Foundation for a Rebellion, so 'tis certain that even tho' it had been repeal'd, the Foundation upon which her Enemies built would have subsisted nevertheless.

Q. ELIZ.

Her Prospect of a troublesome Reign.

WHAT I have now said may suffice to shew, that when Elizabeth ascended the Throne, she could not but foresee that her Reign would be troublesome. But to this 'tis proper to add some other Circumstances which concurr'd to increase her apprehension that she would be expos'd to great Storms. In the first place, she was actually at War with the King of France, who had the Queen of Scotland in his power, and had marry'd her to the Dauphin his Son. It was therefore very apparent, that the said Prince would not suffer the Pretensions of the Queen his Daughter-in-Law to the Kingdom of England to lie long dormant. 2. The two Uncles of the Queen Dauphiness, viz. the Duke of Guise and the Cardinal of Lorrain, were in great Credit at the Court of France. 3. The Dauphin and the Queen his Spouse were Masters of Scotland, and might attack England on that side. 4. The King of Spain indeed was in Alliance with Elizabeth, but she could not promise her self how long he would be her Ally, because it was her Design when she ascended the Throne, to re-establish the Protestant Religion in England, and to abolish the Roman Catholick Religion over all the Kingdom. 5. This Design of her's to re-establish the Reformation, could not but make every foreign Papist her Enemy, as well as deprive her of the Affection of the English Papists who were very numerous. 6. She could not doubt but the Court of Rome would put all Methods in practice, whether open or secret, to rob her of the

Her Legitimacy call'd in question by the Popish Powers.

Crown

Crown. 7. And lastly, in the beginning of her Reign, she found her self without Friends, without Allies, and without Money in her Treasury.

Her Character.

These Difficulties were enough to have shock'd a Princess who had not the Courage of Elizabeth. But the Sublimity of her Genius, her Intrepidity, her Judgement, which was naturally just and solid, and her other Qualities which she had receiv'd from Nature, were such as furnish'd her with the means for preventing the Dangers which she apprehended, and for remedying the Evils which she actually labour'd under. Tho' she was but young; tho' she had been bred till the Age of 25, a perfect Stranger to the publick Affairs; tho' she had no Friends, and no Foreign Alliances; tho' at her first setting out she was engag'd in a War with France; tho' afterwards she was frequently attack'd, sometimes openly, and at other times secretly by the Popes, by the Kings of France, by the King of Spain, by the Friends of Queen Mary in Scotland, and finally by her own Subjects, many of whom were in continual Conspiracies against her Life; yet she procur'd her Subjects that Happiness which the English had not enjoy'd in the former Reigns. And for this, properly speaking, her Reign was more to be admir'd than for the great Events which happen'd while she sat upon the Throne. She attain'd to this high degree of Honour and Glory, not by indulging her Whimsies and Passions, as the King her Father had done; but by an exact Observation of certain Maxims, from which she scarce ever departed, the chief of which was to gain the Love of her Subjects. And therefore every Effort to deprive her of the Affection and Esteem of her People was touching her in the most sensible part, because that was her only Support and Refuge.

Before Elizabeth had openly declar'd herself a Protestant, and before she had re-establish'd the Reformation, which the Queen her Sister had banish'd from England, every one was at a loss to think how she would act. If she had been inclin'd to follow the Steps of her Sister, or at least to have favour'd the Catholick Religion, no Expedients would have been wanting to have establish'd her Right to the Crown of England. The Pope's Power was an inexhaustible Source of Means which would have supply'd all defects in such a Title. She might also have marry'd Philip II. who courted her with so much Zeal, that he undertook to procure a Dispensation from the Pope for the Marriage. But when once she had re-establish'd the Reformation, she was no otherwise treated by the Roman Catholicks than as a Monster, both by her Birth and Religion unworthy to wear the Crown. From that time the Pope, France, Spain, the Roman-Catholicks of the Low-Countries, those of Scotland, and the English themselves never ceas'd to conspire against her Crown and Person. The most plausible Pretext they had, was that of her Birth, which they always reckon'd illegitimate, and from thence infer'd that the Crown of England belong'd by Right to Mary Queen of Scotland: for, as I have already said, her Enemies did not think themselves oblig'd to regard the Will of Henry VIII. in which they pretended to see so many Nullities. The English Papists were of the same Opinion; and even among the Protestants there were some who, tho' they prefer'd the Right of Elizabeth to that of the Queen of Scotland, were nevertheless persuaded, that if Elizabeth died without Issue, they cou'd not refuse the Crown to Mary with any colour of Justice. This Opinion prevail'd so generally, that the first Parliament which met in this Reign was very earnest with Elizabeth to marry, in order to prevent the Realm from relapsing under the Dominion of a Popish Queen.

Prejudices in favour of Mary Queen of Scots.

Therefore Mary Queen of Scotland was Elizabeth's perpetual Competitor: And as long as the said Mary liv'd, all the Roman-Catholicks as well English as Foreigners, had it constantly in view, and exerted all their Industry to place her on the Throne of England; and when she was dead, they try'd to gain the King of Scotland her Son, and to persuade him to assert his pretended Rights, even in Elizabeth's Lifetime. This Project failing, they dropp'd the King of Scotland, and were for improving the Pretensions of Isabella the Infanta of Spain. We may therefore be sure that after Elizabeth ascended the Throne, she was every Moment of her Life expos'd to open or secret Combinations which multiply'd incessantly to deprive her of the Crown. This is the principal, or rather the only Affair of her Reign, all the others being but consequent and dependent on this. It was to defend her self against the Attacks of her Enemies, and to maintain her self upon the Throne, that she fomented the Troubles of Scotland, that she kept Mary Stuart in Prison after she had fled to England for Refuge, and that at last she caus'd her Head to be cut off. 'Twas for this also that she put to death the Duke of Norfolk, and the Earl of Essex, that she gave Assistance to the Hugonots of France, and supported the Interests of the United Provinces of the Netherlands: and 'twas for this very Reason that notwithstanding her great Oeconomy, she employ'd her Treasure for the support of Henry IV. King of France, against the Efforts of the League. All these, which are the principal Articles of this Reign, are as so many Lines tending to one and the same Centre, I mean to the Plots which were laid to ruin Elizabeth, and to the Measures which she took to maintain her self on the Throne. This, and this alone, is properly the Subject of the History of this famous Reign. We will now enter into a more ample detail of this grand Affair, or at least relate the chief Circumstances attending it.

Philip of Spain courts her.

Why Queen Elizabeth caus'd her to be imprison'd and beheaded.

ARTICLE II.

Elizabeth's Affairs with the Queen of Scotland.

IT was observ'd in the last Tome, that Mary Queen of Scotland was carried to France, when but an Infant; and that there she afterwards marry'd the Dauphin Francis, who was Henry IId's eldest Son. The chief View of France in this Marriage was to keep England in awe by the means of Scotland. She had often experienc'd, in the Reigns of Lewis XI. Charles VIII. Lewis XII. and Francis I. how far it was in the power of England to hurt her; not to mention that the Kings of England were always ready to assert their Pretensions to the Crown of France, when fair opportunities offer'd, which were not at all impossible. It was the Interest therefore of France to have it always in her power to give England a strong Diversion: and for this end nothing was better calculated than the Marriage I have just now mention'd, because it might put the King of France in a condition of acting not only as an old Friend and Ally, but also as Sovereign of Scotland.

The Policy of France to make Scotland her Friend.

WHEN Elizabeth succeeded her Sister Mary on the Throne, Henry II. form'd new Projects. His Scheme was not only to defend himself against England by the means of Scotland, but he aim'd to deprive Elizabeth of the Crown, and to place it upon the Head of Mary his Daughter-in-Law, or rather of her Husband the Dauphin, in order by that means to unite Great-Britain and Ireland to the French Monarchy. He was at that time in actual War with England, which was a very lucky Juncture for his Design; but he met with an Obstacle in it, which was insurmountable. Philip II. was England's Ally. It was he who had engag'd Mary his Spouse to declare War against France, and by consequence he could not in honour abandon Elizabeth. Nevertheless he did not act so much from a Motive of Honour and Justice, as from the Expectations he had of marrying Elizabeth. While he fed himself with those Hopes, his Ambassadors at the Congress of Chateau-Cambresis vigorously supported the Interests of England. All the difficulty of the Negotiation betwixt England and France was owing to the Queen of England's Resolution to recover Calais, and to Henry IId's obstinate Refusal to restore it. The Hopes which Philip II. had entertain'd, falling to the ground by the Measures which Queen Elizabeth immediately took with respect to Religion, that Prince became not only colder with regard to England, but he might be said to have entirely abandon'd its Interests. Nevertheless, he was willing to salve Appearances, by not signing his separate Treaty with France, 'till he had procur'd honourable and advantageous Terms for Elizabeth. It is more than probable that this Prince, who, as I have already said, study'd only to salve Appearances, having beforehand settled all the Articles which related to the Peace between France and Spain, agreed with Henry II. that France shou'd make a separate Peace with Elizabeth, which might seem advantageous to England, but that afterwards Henry might perform it as he thought fit, when Spain wou'd have no reason to be dissatisfy'd with it. Consequently, all that Philip aim'd at was, that it might not be said he had abandon'd England after he had engag'd that Nation in his War against France. According to this Plan, the Peace betwixt France and England was sign'd at Chateau-Cambresis, upon this Condition, that France should keep Calais eight Years, and be oblig'd after the Expiration of that Term, to restore the said Place, with all the others that she had taken from the English.

Q. ELIZ.

Peace with France at Chateau-Cambresis.

THIS Treaty was no sooner sign'd, but Henry II. made the Dauphin his Son, and the Queen his Daughter-in-Law, take the Title of King and Queen of England, and caus'd the Arms of that Kingdom to be engrav'd on their Seal, Plate and Furniture: of which Elizabeth caus'd Complaints to be made to Henry, but the Answer he return'd was trifling; so that she could no longer doubt that it was the Intention of the Court of France to take the Crown from her, and place it on the Head of the Queen of *Scotland. The great Credit which the Lorrain Princes, who were Mary's Uncles, were in with Henry, made it shrewdly suspected that they had hatch'd this Scheme in favour of the Queen their Niece; and there was too much Truth in the Conjecture. But as it was not easy to attack England by Sea, their Design was to pour an Army into it from the Frontiers of Scotland. To carry this Point, there was a necessity

French King gives the Queen of England's Title to his Son and Daughter-in-Law.

* Mezeray says, that Sir Nicholas Throckmorton the Queen's Ambassador had this Answer, That it was in conformity to the Custom of Germany, where the Juniors take the Title and Arms of the Chief of their Family. Cambden adds, that the French Court pretended that all the Princes and Princesses had a Right to wear the Arms of their Family with the Bar. At last, the said Court being press'd upon this Head, told the Ambassador, that the King and Queen of Scotland had only taken the Arms of England to oblige Elizabeth to quit those of France. Throckmorton reply'd, that twelve Kings of England had borne the Arms of France, and that by so unquestionable a Right that in all the Treaties which had pass'd between the English and the French, not one single Exception was us'd against it. But his Arguments were of no force, and Francis and Mary kept the Title they had assum'd, as long as Francis liv'd: Tho', as Mr. Rapin observes, Cambden has by mistake asserted that the Constable of Montmorency prevail'd with them to drop it.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

His Policy to become Master of Scotland.

neceſſity for Henry's making himſelf abſolute Maſter in Scotland, in the name of the Queen his Daughter-in-Law: and in order to be Maſter of that Kingdom, there was the ſame Neceſſity for a fair pretence to ſend an Army thither. The Lorrain Princes laid a Foundation for ſuch an Opportunity, by cauſing an Order to be diſpatch'd to their Siſter the Regent of Scotland, not to tolerate any but the Roman Catholick Religion in that Kingdom. This Order, which the Regent prepar'd to put in execution, produc'd the Effect which the Court of France had waited for. The Proteſtants of Scotland, who were already more numerous than the Papiſts, united together in a Confederacy, and both ſides took Arms.

Battle there betwixt the Proteſtant and Popiſh Parties.

THE Earl of Argyle, and James Stuart, Prior of St. Andrews, who was Natural Son to James V. put themſelves at the head of the Confederates, and compell'd the Queen Regent and D'Oiſel who commanded ſome French Troops, and the Scots which were paid by France, to retire to Dunbar. I will not enter farther into the Detail of theſe firſt Troubles of Scotland. It may ſuffice to ſay in a word, that the Lorrain Princes attaining to the End they propos'd to themſelves, which was to raiſe ſuch Broils in the Kingdom, as might give a Handle for ſending an Army thither, Henry II. immediately prepar'd to put his Project in execution, and gave Orders for raiſing Troops to be tranſported to Scotland, under pretence of ſupporting the Queen Regent; but Henry being kill'd at a Tournament, (July 10. 1559.) at the very time that he was beginning to take thoſe Meaſures, Francis II. his eldeſt Son ſucceeded him.

Death of the French King Henry II.

Acceſſion of Francis II.

UNDER this new Reign, the Duke of Guiſe and the Cardinal of Lorrain acquir'd a vaſt degree of Power, and were reſolv'd not to let this opportunity ſlip of placing the Queen their Niece upon the Throne of England. Immediately after the Death of Henry II. the Queen Regent had made a Truce with the Confederates, who thereupon disbanded and went home, thinking that the Death of the King of France wou'd put an end to the Troubles which were rais'd in Scotland. During this, the Earl of Arran, Son to the Duke of Chatelheraud, having made his Eſcape from the Court of France, where he pretended ſome Miſchief had been hatch'd againſt him, acquainted the Heads of the Confederacy with the Deſigns of the Lorrain Princes, and engag'd the Duke his Father to put himſelf at the head of the Party. The Earl of Arran's Informations were confirm'd by the Queen Regent's Precaution to fortify Leith near Edinburgh, during the time of the Truce. The Confederates complain'd of it, and having no ſatisfaction, openly renounc'd all Obedince to the Regent.

Deſigns of the Lorrain Princes at the French Court, divulg'd in Scotland.

Confederates in Scotland for the Reformation, routed, and purſued to the Highlands.

This Action done at a time when they were extremely weak, engag'd the Queen Regent, who had juſt receiv'd Succours from France, to march directly to Edinburgh in order to ſurprize them. As they were not in a Capacity to make any reſiſtance, they choſe to retire to the High-Lands, to which the Regent's Troops, tho' with very great difficulty, purſued them. While they were thus purſued, they ſent the Earl of Maitland to Elizabeth to implore her Aſſiſtance. The Queen perfectly underſtood how far ſhe was intereſted in their Affairs, together with the neceſſity there was of ſupporting them. Therefore ſhe made a Treaty with them, by which ſhe engag'd to take them under her Protection, while the Marriage ſubſiſted betwixt their Queen and the King of France, and a Year after; and to give them Succours anſwerable to their Neceſſities. It was not long before thoſe Succours came, and they no ſooner arriv'd, but the Engliſh and Scots join'd together, and went to beſiege Leith. This Siege was long enough to give the Court of France time to ſend ſeveral Ambaſſadors to Elizabeth, who were to try to perſuade her to call home her Troops from Scotland, and even to offer her the Reſtitution of Calais. But ſhe underſtood her Intereſts too well to accept that Propoſal, which only tended to give Francis the liberty of making himſelf Maſter in Scotland, that he might afterwards with the more eaſe attack England. This was the main Article or Ground of a Manifeſto which ſhe publiſh'd to ſhew the indiſpenſable Neceſſity that ſhe was under to drive the French Troops out of Scotland. The Conſpiracy at Amboiſe breaking out in France at the ſame time, the Lorrain Princes did not think themſelves in a condition to carry on the Project they had form'd with reſpect to Scotland, and reſolv'd to refer the Execution of it to a more convenient time. Conſequently Francis II. having declar'd to Elizabeth that he wiſh'd for a Peace, Plenipotentiaries were ſent on both ſides to Edinburgh, where a Treaty was concluded.

Elizabeth's Treaty with them.

Treaty with France at Edinburgh.

THIS Treaty, according to a Cuſtom inviolably obſerv'd by the Court of France under Henry II. and his three Sons, was only made to deceive Elizabeth; for on pretence that it was contrary to the Honour of the King and Queen of France and Scotland, to treat with Subjects in Rebellion, it was not poſſible to obtain the Conſent of the Ambaſſadors of France that the Confederates of Scotland ſhould be included in the Treaty as Parties. In order to remove this Difficulty, it was agreed that a Memorial ſhould be drawn up in form of a Petition, ſetting forth what the Scots deſir'd, and what the King and Queen were willing to grant them; and that for their Security, there ſhould be inſerted in the Treaty betwixt France and England, an Article whereby whereby the King and Queen of France and Scotland ſhould engage to perform the Articles contain'd in the ſaid Memorial. It ſeems that the Court of France had nothing in view but to ſave a Point of Honour; for when all was done, the Confederates obtain'd what they wiſh'd for. But we ſhall inſtantly ſee the Reaſon which the French Court had, not to confound the Intereſts of the Scots with thoſe of Elizabeth.

The Articles granted to the Confederates were,

Articles granted to the Confederates.

THAT the Troops of France ſhall quit Scotland in 20 Days, and go on board Ships to be lent them by the Queen of England.

THAT the Fortifications of Leith, and thoſe which the French had added to Dunbar, ſhould be demoliſh'd.

THAT the King and Queen of France and Scotland ſhould grant to the Confederates an Amneſty, to be confirm'd by the Eſtates of Scotland.

The Treaty betwixt France and England imported,

Betwixt France and England.

THAT the King and Queen of France and Scotland ſhould not aſſume the Title and Arms of the King and Queen of England and Ireland for the future, and that all Acts paſs'd with thoſe Titles ſhould be repeal'd, or deem'd of no Value.

THAT as to the farther Satisfaction which Elizabeth demanded for the Injury which had been done to her, the ſame ſhould be ſettled in a Congreſs to be held at London, between Commiſſioners of the two Kingdoms.

THAT if the Commiſſioners could not agree, the Deciſion thereof ſhould be refer'd to the King of Spain.

THAT the King and Queen of France and Scotland ſhould punctually obſerve what had been promis'd to the Confederates of Scotland.

King and Queen of France and Scotland refuſe to ratify the Treaty.

* THE Articles promis'd to the Confederates were perform'd to a tittle. But when the French Troops were return'd home, and Elizabeth demanded the Ratification of the Treaty of Edinburgh, Francis and Mary poſitively refus'd it. This ſhews what the Court of France had in view, by confounding the Diſputes ſhe had with the Scots and thoſe with Queen Elizabeth, in one and the ſame Treaty. France, in order to bring off her Troops which were beſieg'd in Leith, and to engage the Confederates to quit their Arms, at a time when that Court was not in a condition to maintain the War in Scotland, was under an indiſpenſable Neceſſity to ſatisfy them, and by that means to deprive Elizabeth of any pretence to keep an Army on foot in that Kingdom. But as to her Quarrel with Elizabeth, it had no relation to the Affairs of Scotland. So that by refuſing to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh, they ran no riſque of engaging the Scots in the Quarrel, and left it to Elizabeth to take ſuch Meaſures as ſhe thought fit, to obtain the Satisfaction ſhe deſir'd. Mean while, either for want of Attention in the Ambaſſadors of France, or by reaſon of their Ignorance of the Affairs of England, or perhaps the better to amuſe the Engliſh, they ſuffer'd this looſe Term, That for the future, &c. to creep into the firſt and principal Article of the Treaty, without fixing the Term to any time; and that very thing prov'd afterwards a Stumbling-block, which always hinder'd the Accommodation between the two Queens, as we ſhall find in the Sequel. Q. ELIZ.

Death of Francis II. and Acceſſion of Char. IX. of France.

Francis II. dying about the latter end of the ſame Year (1560.) Charles IX. his Brother ſucceeded him, under the Guardianſhip of his Mother Catherine de Medicis. Then the two Lorrain Princes having no longer the ſame Credit at Court, and ſeeing no opportunity to execute the Project of attacking England by the way of Scotland, and with the Arms of France, adviſ'd the Queen their Niece to return to Scotland, and gave her ſeveral Directions for her Conduct. 1. To quit the Title of Queen of England. 2. To live to outward Appearance in a good Underſtanding with Queen Elizabeth, and even to feign a great Affection for her. 3. To endeavour to get her ſelf declar'd Elizabeth's Heireſs. 4. To labour to form a Party in England, of which ſhe might make uſe hereafter, as opportunity preſented, to place her ſelf upon the Throne of England.

The Lorrain Princes Advice to Mary Queen of Scots.

Why Queen Mary refus'd to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh.

IN order to perform the laſt piece of Advice, upon which Mary was reſolutely bent, it was abſolutely neceſſary for her to avoid the Ratification of the Treaty of Edinburgh. To take that Treaty in a true Senſe, it muſt be conſider'd, that according to its natural Conſtruction, it could not be ſaid that the Intention of the Parties was to exclude Mary from the Power of laying Claim at any time to the Crown of England, under pretence of the Term for the future, to which no Bounds had been fix'd. The caſe might very naturally happen, that the ſaid Crown would devolve to Mary, without any infringement of Henry VIIIth's Will. But then it muſt be conſider'd, that this unlimited Term for the future, might be liable to ſuch a ſtrict Explanation. Mary therefore made a Handle of the Ambiguity which was couch'd in that looſe Term, to excuſe her ſelf from ratifying the Treaty. Nothing would have been more eaſy than to explain it, as ſhe did afterwards in this manner, That for the future, that is to ſay, during the Life of Elizabeth and her Iſſue, ſhe wou'd forbear to take the Style and Arms of the Queen of England. 'Tis very

* Mr. Rapin obſerves, that Buchanan in his Hiſtory has only given the Articles granted to the Scots Confederates, and that Cambden in his Annals of Elizabeth, has only made mention of the Treaty between the Crowns; which Omiſſion in both thoſe Writers has render'd many Paſſages in their Hiſtories very obſcure.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

very apparent therefore, that if ſhe had explained herſelf thus at the beginning, Elizabeth would have been content. But ſhe did not offer at this Explanation of it, till her Affairs were in a declining condition. 'Tis manifeſt therefore, that the Prejudice ſhe might poſſibly ſuffer from the Ambiguity of that Expreſſion, for the future, was only a Pretence ſhe made uſe of to be excus'd from ratifying the Treaty, and from declaring that ſhe would not lay claim to the Crown of England, during the Life of Elizabeth. For by this Declaration ſhe would have renounced the Rights which ſhe propoſed as her Foundation to form a Party in England, capable of dethroning Elizabeth, according to the Advice of her Uncles. And on the other hand, when the neceſſity of her Affairs in the ſequel, obliged her to offer the Explanation I have mentioned, Elizabeth was not ſatisfied with it, being very ſenſible that Mary only reſolved upon it becauſe ſhe was drove to an Extremity; which confirm'd her in the Thought that all the Artifice her Competitor had made uſe of to be excus'd from ratifying the Treaty of Edinburgh, had no View in it but to ſecure to herſelf a Right of dethroning her whenever occaſion offer'd. This ſhews the Reaſons which Mary had to ſhuffle off the Ratification of the Treaty, on pretence of its being too prejudicial to her. But herein conſiſted the very Ambiguity, which ſhe did not think it was for her Intereſt to clear up. The Prejudice might be in the Conſtruction of the Term for the future, which taken in the moſt ſtrict ſenſe, ſeemed to denote that at no time, ſuppoſing even that Elizabeth died without Iſſue, Mary ſhould take the Title of Queen of England. That was what ſhe deſired might be the Acceptation of it, though ſhe took care not to explain herſelf too clearly. But on the other hand, the Prejudice might alſo conſiſt in this, that if Mary owned ſhe could not take the Title of Queen of England during the Life of Elizabeth, ſhe would thereby be depriv'd of the opportunity of forming a Party in England, which could only be founded on thoſe very Rights ſhe was preſſed to renounce. That was the true Prejudice ſhe was afraid of. Now that ſhe had a Deſign to form a Party in England for dethroning Elizabeth, appears plainly from the Memoirs of Melvil, whoſe Brother was Ambaſſador in ordinary from Scotland to England. Therefore, when after the Death of Francis II. Elizabeth demanded of her to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh, ſhe eluded it, by ſaying ſhe had no Scots Council about her, and that the Court of France did no longer meddle or make with the Affairs of Scotland. And afterwards, when by the Advice of her Uncles ſhe quitted the Title of Queen of England, ſhe anſwered the Ambaſſador of England, who preſſed her on that head, that ſhe had not aſſumed that Title without the poſitive Orders of King Henry II. her Father-in-law, and the King her Husband; and that the latter being dead, ſhe had dropp'd that Title: That therefore it was needleſs to demand of her the Ratification of a Treaty which ſhe had already executed, as well in this Article, as in that which related to the Scots; and that when ſhe came to Scotland, and had her Council about her, ſhe would conſider this Affair more maturely. But Elizabeth was not content with Mary's quitting the Title voluntarily. She would have her do it by virtue of the Edinburgh Treaty, becauſe otherwiſe ſhe might take it up again with the ſame eaſe that ſhe had relinquiſhed it. Nevertheleſs Mary could not perſuade herſelf to ratify the Treaty, while ſhe had any hopes left of aſſerting her claim to the Crown of England. This was the very Source and Origin of the Quarrel that aroſe betwixt the two Queens, a Quarrel which we ſee was of no ſmall Importance, and which could not be determined but by the Death of Mary. I have taken up ſome time to ſhew the Cauſe of it, though I ſhall not ſpend ſo much in demonſtrating the Effects of it. But 'tis neceſſary to ſtop a little, to conſider the Advantages which Mary continually gave her Rival by her ill Conduct, and with how much Art Elizabeth improved them.

Q. ELIZ.

The Source of the Quarrel betwixt the Queens of England and Scotland.

Mary having a deſign to return to Scotland according to the Advice of her Uncles, ſent to deſire a Safe-Conduct of Elizabeth, who anſwered, that ſhe would grant her one with all her heart, provided * the Edinburgh Treaty was firſt ratify'd; and that ſhe ſhould alſo take it ill if Mary did not come through England in her Return to her own Kingdom. Mary, who had no mind to ratify the Treaty, was provoked at this Refuſal, and declared in a very angry Tone to the Ambaſſador of England, that ſhe came into France in ſpite of Edward VI. and would return to Scotland in ſpite of Elizabeth. Accordingly ſhe ventured over thither without a Safe-Conduct, and arrived happily at Edinburgh. But though ſhe ſeemed in a great paſſion with Elizabeth before her Departure from France, yet by the Advice of her Uncles, ſhe did not fail to ſend her an Ambaſſador to inform her of her Arrival, and to deſire her Friendſhip.

Mary's Return to Scotland.

Elizabeth refuſes her a Safe-Conduct.

BUT the Ambaſſador's chief Commiſſion was to feel the Pulſe of Elizabeth, by giving her to underſtand that Mary wiſh'd to be declared next Heir. Elizabeth in like manner pretended abundance of Eſteem and Affection for her good Siſter (as ſhe always called the Queen of Scotland) but told the Ambaſſador in plain Terms, that ſhe thought it

Mary's Propoſal to be declared next Heir to Elizabeth, rejected.

* Mr. Rapin blames Buchanan's Injuſtice, in not giving the Terms upon which Elizabeth was willing to grant the Safe-Conduct.

Fœdera Tom. XV.

it ſtrange that any Propoſal ſhould be made to her, to declare Mary her Heir before the Treaty of Edinburgh was ratify'd. Tho' ſhe took it very ill that Mary eluded the Ratification of that Treaty by ſuch idle ſhifts, yet ſhe thought it proper to diſſemble her Reſentment, and to feign an extraordinary Affection for Mary, as Mary pretended on her part for Elizabeth. Melvil affirms in his Memoirs, that theſe two Queens wrote to each other every Week, in terms the moſt tender and the moſt affectionate; which was a Diſſimulation they both thought neceſſary *. Elizabeth left Mary not without hopes that ſhe would declare her next Heir, in order to draw her in to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh. And Mary on her part endeavoured by her Expreſſions of Friendſhip for Elizabeth, to obtain that Declaration from her which ſhe wanted, becauſe ſhe thought that the Ratification of the Treaty would by that means be of no effect. Not that ſhe propoſed to be compleatly ſatisfied by ſuch Declaration, for ſhe had no great Hopes of ſucceeding Elizabeth, who was but 27 Years of Age, and who moreover might poſſibly marry and have Children. But ſhe looked upon this Declaration as a very proper means to ſtrengthen the Party, which ſhe was endeavouring to form in England, as appears by Melvil's Memoirs. On the other hand, when Elizabeth conſidered that Mary was ſupported by all the Roman Catholick Powers in Europe, as well as by a Party in England, which though at preſent kept under, was very ſtrong; and that ſhe might happen to marry ſome Prince of a great Family, powerful enough to promote her Pretenſions; ſhe could not but think Mary a very dangerous Rival. What had been the Effect of her Marriage with Francis II. might give cauſe to fear a like Attempt from ſome other Quarter: So that when not long after, Mary asked her Advice relating to the Marriage propoſed to her, with the Archduke Charles II. Son to the Emperor Ferdinand, ſhe repreſented to her, that after ſuch a Marriage, ſhe muſt never expect to come to the Throne of England, and gave her to underſtand at the ſame time, that ſhe could not do better to gain the Love of the Engliſh Nation, than to marry an Engliſhman. By that means ſhe gave her a broad hint, that her Requeſt to be declared next Heir to the Crown, depended upon her good Behaviour to herſelf and the Engliſh Nation; but ſhe took care not to engage poſitively to grant her Satisfaction. Theſe two Queens lived for ſeveral Years as good Friends to all outward appearance, but no Cunning or Diſſimulation was wanting in either.

Q. Eliz.

The Diſſimulation of both Queens.

'Tis time now to ſay ſomething of the Weight which turn'd the Ballance in favour of Elizabeth, and gave her all the Advantage over her Competitor; and that was Mary's ill Conduct. If this Queen had not given way to her Paſſions, 'tis hardly to be doubted but ſhe would have proved ſuch a Plague to Elizabeth, that, as cunning as ſhe was, ſhe would have found it very difficult to have ſtood her ground. For notwithſtanding all the Miſtakes of which Mary was guilty, and notwithſtanding the loſs of her Liberty, ſhe was ſtill ſo formidable to her, that Elizabeth could not be ſure of her Peace, nor even of her Life, but by the Death of her Competitor.

Mary had been brought up from a Child in a Court of Gallantry, though of Bigotry, of which ſhe naturally took ſuch Impreſſions as proved her Ruin. After the Treaty of Edinburgh, and even during the Life of Francis II. the States of Scotland had ſettled the Reformation in that Kingdom by their own Authority, and had only left the Queen the liberty of having Maſs ſaid in her Chapel, without any Pomp. Before Mary ſet out from France, her beſt Friends, who perfectly knew the Affairs of Scotland, adviſed her to ſtick to the Proteſtants, as the only Party able to ſupport her. She immediately comply'd with this Advice, and committed the chief Management of her Affairs to James Stuart, Prior of St. Andrews, her Baſtard Brother, to whom ſhe not long after gave the Title of Earl of Murray. But ſhe was ſoon weary of being govern'd by this Brother, who was a Proteſtant, and whoſe Temper was too rigid for him to approve of certain Irregularities which he perceiv'd in her Conduct. In fine, without entering into too many Particulars under this head, I ſhall only ſay in one word, that ſhe reſign'd herſelf, as we may call it, into the hands of one David Riccio or Rizzo, an Italian Muſician, who became on a ſudden her Prime Miniſter and Favourite †.

James Stuart made Earl of Murray.

Mary conſults her about a Match propoſed to her with the Archduke.

'Tis

* Mr. Rapin in that large Hiſtory of England which he wrote after he had made this Extract of Mr. Rymer's Fœdera, ſays, he can't but think that Melvil was miſtaken in the Account he gives of the weekly Correſpondence betwixt theſe two Queens, ſo ſoon after Mary's Return to Scotland, becauſe hitherto nothing had paſs'd betwixt them, which could tend to form or to cement ſuch a reciprocal Intercourſe and Friendſhip; and on the contrary, ſeveral things had happened which contributed to ſet them at greater variance. But Mr. Rapin adds, if Melvil, who was at that time in Germany, was rightly informed, every one muſt own the two Queens were very arrant Diſſemblers.

† As this Man was the original Cauſe of the Troubles in Scotland, and of the Diſgrace of his Miſtreſs, we ſhall juſt take notice from Rapin's Hiſtory, that he was the Son of a Muſician at Turin, and that he came over to Scotland in the Retinue of the Count de Moretto, who was ſent thither as Ambaſſador. He had not only Judgment in Muſick, but ſo fine a Voice, that he ſoon got acquainted with the Court Muſicians, and was preſented to the Queen, who wanting ſuch a Voice as he had for her Muſick, prevailed on the Ambaſſador to let her have him. After which ſhe preferred him firſt to the Poſt of Secretary of her French Diſpatches, from whence he roſe to that of her Prime Miniſter. Buchanan, who was a great Enemy of Queen Mary, ſays, that ſhe often made him eat at her Table, and that ſhe as often eat at his; inſinuating, that ſome Familiarities paſs'd betwixt them which were not common

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

'Tis ſaid that Riccio became a Penſioner to the Pope, as ſoon as he became a Favourite with the Queen, if he was not ſo before. Be this as it will, the Queen was determined by the Advice of this Favourite to marry with a Roman Catholick, and by degrees to rid herſelf of the Earl of Murray, who was always teazing her. To compaſs this Deſign, ſhe began with recalling certain Enemies of Murray, who had been baniſhed from Court; and then ſhe caſt her Eyes upon Lord Darly, with a view to make him her Husband. The Lord Darly was Son to Matthew Steuart, Earl of Lenox, and Margaret Douglas Neice to Henry VIII. by that King's eldeſt Siſter Margaret; who after the Death of her Husband James IV. married Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus. Conſequently the Lord Darly might lay claim to the Crown of England after Mary, becauſe his Birth gave him Place before the Daughters of the Queen (Ducheſs of Suffolk) though Henry VIII's Will had ſettled the Succeſſion otherwiſe. 'Tis clear therefore, that by this Marriage Mary united the Claims and Intereſts of the two Branches that deſcended from Margaret, Henry VIII's eldeſt Siſter. The Earl of Lenox having declar'd for this Prince when he made War upon Scotland, was baniſh'd the Kingdom, and retired with his Wife to England, where Henry had given them Lands in compenſation for thoſe they had loſt in their own Country. They were there ſtill, when Mary reſolved to marry Lord Darly, their eldeſt Son. She found means to draw both the Father and Son into Scotland, with the Conſent of Elizabeth, who imagined that it would be always in her power to obſtruct the Marriage, and only meant to amuſe the Queen of Scotland, but was at laſt deceived; for Mary actually married the Popiſh Lord Darly, Riccio having taken a great deal of pains to bring it about, for fear leſt Elizabeth ſhould find out a Husband for her that was a Proteſtant: and indeed ſhe had ſtrenuouſly ſollicited her to marry Robert Dudley, Son to the late Duke of Northumberland, to whom ſhe had given the Title of Earl of Leiceſter.

Q. ELIZ.

Queen of Scots marries him, after Elizabeth had recommended the Earl of Leiceſter to her.

An Account of Lord Darly's Pedigree.

Mary's Marriage was not approved by all the Scots Nobility: The Earls of Argyle, Murray, and ſome others, took * Arms to hinder it, but were forced to fly to England, where they were well received. Riccio made uſe of this opportunity to compleat the Ruin of the Noblemen who were fled; and who being the Heads of the Proteſtant Party, he therefore called an Aſſembly of the Eſtates in order to get their Lands confiſcated, and their Names ſtruck out of the Peerage. During this, the Queen had conceived ſuch a Diſguſt at the King her Husband, that ſhe could hide it no longer; ſhe made him ſuffer the moſt cruel Mortifications in private, and treated him with the utmoſt Indignity in publick. The King aſcribed all this baſe Treatment to Riccio, who governed the Queen; and, as 'tis ſaid, was too familiar with her †: Therefore the King privately recall'd the Noblemen who were fled to England, that he might have their Credit and Support; and two Days before they arriv'd, he cauſed Riccio to be aſſaſſinated in the very Chamber common nor commendable. But as Buchanan may naturally be ſuſpected to have aggravated this Matter, Mr. Rapin is for adhering ſtrictly to what Melvil ſays about it, who cannot be charged with any Deſign to blacken the Queen's Character, becauſe upon all occaſions he diſcovers a great Veneration for her, yet without concealing her Errors and Defects. This Author ſays, "That Rizzo's Pride and Inſolence rendered him hateful to all the Nobility, that "when the great Men went to confer with the Queen about Affairs of Government, they always found Rizzo in her "Chamber; that he often affected to whiſper her in the Ear when ſhe was in Conference with them, or in a full "Aſſembly of the States; and that he was extremely covetous and ſelfiſh. Melvil adds, That when he himſelf took "the liberty to repreſent to the Queen how much ſhe already did and might hereafter ſuffer by the Favours which "ſhe heap'd on that Foreigner, ſhe told him, that ſhe was not to be directed by her Subjects in the Diſpenſation "of her Favours."

Barneſtaple, one of the ſixteen Writers concerning Mary Queen of Scots, collected in two Volumes by Mr. Jebb, gives Rizzo the Character of a Man of great Judgment, Wiſdom, and Sagacity, as ready to praiſe and promote the Counſels of the Good, as he was quick at diſcerning and baffling thoſe of the Wicked; only he had this Fault, that he ſung too ſoft for a Man, and too often for a Cabinet-Counſellor to the Queen.

Two others of thoſe Writers, viz. Counſellor Blackwood and George Coney, both Scots-men, ſay, that this David was an old, crabbed, and deformed Fellow; and that 'twas his Loyalty and Sagacity which made him ſo dear to the Queen. Thuanus too ſays, that notwithſtanding his mean Original, the Queen made him ſit at Table with her every Day.

* Mr. Rapin, in his Hiſtory, obſerves a notorious Contradiction here betwixt Buchanan and Camden. The former ſays the Nobility did not take Arms till after the Marriage, when they ſaw the Court had a Deſign to oppreſs them. The latter will have it, that the Queen was obliged to march againſt the Confederate Lords, to hinder them from diſturbing the Marriage-Ceremony; and that ſhe forced them to fly to England: which, if true, is an Argument that ſhe ſurprized them before they had duly concerted their Meaſures. Melvil firſt gives an Account of the Inſurrection, and then of the Marriage.

† Camden, whoſe Aim was to juſtify Queen Mary upon all occaſions, and for which reaſon he ſcarce makes mention of Riccio, accuſes the Earl of Murray, then in England, of having made miſchief between the Queen and her Husband, both by Letters and his Friends; and he takes notice of the Queen's putting the King's Name after her own, in the publick Acts and Coin, as a Reaſon of the Queen's Diſguſt; which, as Mr. Rapin obſerves, was only an Effect of it. Our Author is inclined to think, that what Buchanan has ſaid of the Queen's Diſguſt with the one, and her Familiarities with the other, is very much aggravated; though he agrees that the King was jealous: but whether the Queen gave cauſe for it, according to Buchanan; or the Earl of Murray, according to Camden; is the Queſtion to be decided. Melvil, whoſe Authority can hardly be ſuſpected in this Matter, manifeſtly ſuppoſes the King's Jealouſy, though he ſays nothing of the Cauſe of it; and we may be ſure, as it were, that if he had thought the Queen innocent, he would not have fail'd to have clear'd her.

But we will leave the curious Reader to his own Reflections, after he has conſulted N. Cauſin, M. de Caſtelnaud, and Adam Blackwood, three of the Authors whoſe Memoirs of this Queen are collected by Mr. Jebb, and who have done all they can to acquit her of the Imputation of Adultery.

ber of the Queen, who was six Months gone with Child, and then put her under Arrest, ordering her Guard to keep her always in sight*. Nevertheless, she found means to make her Escape, and to retire to Dunbar, where she resumed her Authority; the Earl of Murray her Brother having done her signal Service upon this Occasion, by refusing to join with the Men of that Party who had assassinated Riccio. From that time the Queen reposed all her Favour and Confidence in the Earl of Bothwel, Murray's capital Enemy; and retained such a pique against the King, that she could never forgive him. She gave such evident Tokens of her Hatred of him, at the Baptism of the Prince of whom she was brought to bed, that the English Ambassador who came to be Surety at the Font, in the name of Elizabeth, could not help sending her word that he thought her Conduct scandalous: He pressed her also to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh, but could obtain nothing.

Arrest of the Queen, and her Escape.

Her Advancement of Bothwel.

AT length the King finding himself so unworthily treated, was resolved to retire to his Father the Earl of Lenox at Glascow. A League from Edinburgh he fell sick of a poisonous Dose which had been given him before he set out; but the Strength of his Constitution saved him from this Danger for another that was greater; for this Stroke failing, the Queen found means to draw the King to Edinburgh, where he was lodged in a House near the Walls of the City. Being not yet well recovered, the Queen frequently visited him, and seemed to be heartily reconciled to him: But one Night as he was asleep, the House was blown up by the means of some Barrels of Powder placed under the Chamber where he lay, and he was found dead in the Garden, and no Wound appeared on the Body: All Mankind accused the Queen and Earl Bothwel of the Murder. No Credit ought to be given to the Stories which Camden tells about it in his Annals of Elizabeth, in order to bring the Earl of Murray under a Suspicion of that Murder. If there was room for it here, I could shew the Falshood of his Narrative by undeniable Proofs. After the King's Death, the Earl of Murray retir'd to France with the Queen's leave, for fear that Bothwel should play him a scurvy Trick.

An Attempt to poison the King of Scotland; but his Constitution being stronger than the Dose, he is blown up in his Bed.

Earl of Murray retires to France.

AT last, the Queen being blinded by her Passion, caused herself to be carried off by Earl Bothwel, and married that hateful Man, who was not only suspected, but had even been publickly accused of having put the King to death. This Action drove the Scots Nobility beyond all the Bounds of Patience. They made a League together to punish the Murderers of the late King, took Arms, and obliged the Queen to retire with Bothwel her new Husband to Dunbar, where she raised Troops. When they were ready, she marched against the Confederates, who made haste on their part to meet her: But perceiving that her Army did not serve her chearfully, her Courage fail'd her; and while the two Armies as it were faced each other, she entered into a Treaty with the Confederates, and surrendered herself into their hands. A Promise was made to obey her, provided that she would abandon Bothwel, who was fled to Dunbar; and upon this condition she was carried to Edinburgh. But on the very Day that she arrived there, she brib'd one of her Guards, and wrote an excessively tender Letter to Bothwel, wherein she promised never to forsake him. But this Letter falling into the hands of the Confederates, they would trust her no longer, and sent her Prisoner to Lochlevin: and some days after, they obliged her by Menaces to resign the Crown to the Prince her Son, and to appoint the Earl of Murray Regent of the Kingdom during the King's Minority.

THE Earl of Murray arriving from France, caused pursuit to be made after Bothwel, who was put to Sea, and turn'd Pirate. He narrowly miss'd of being taken; but finding means to escape, he retired to Denmark, where he was committed to Prison, and about ten Years after he died. Mean time a Party was formed in Scotland for the Queen; and as soon as they had gathered Numbers and Strength, she escaped from Prison, and went to put herself at the head of an Army which was formed ready for her. The Regent, tho' he was surprized, and by much inferior in number of Troops, did nevertheless march to meet her. A Battle ensued, and the Queen's Troops being routed, she resolved to fly to England, since she could no longer stay in Scotland with safety. Elizabeth being informed of her Arrival, caused her to be received with Honour, but refused to see her till she had acquitted herself of the Crime laid to her charge, in having married the Murderer of the King her Husband, and having been herself an Accomplice in the Murder. This was the result, in short, of the irregular Conduct of Mary; a Conduct which made her fall into the hands of Elizabeth, from whence it was not possible for her to extricate her self but by a shameful Death. There was a Necessity of making this known, for the better

* Buchanan says, that upon this there was a great Tumult in Edinburgh, and that the Citizens took Arms; but Melvil makes the Tumult inconsiderable. Because the Earl of Murray return'd to Scotland so soon after the Murder, Camden will needs have it, that it was committed in that Earl's favour, and by his privity. But Mr. Rapin makes it appear from Melvil's Memoirs, that his Consequence is very unjust; that the Friends of the other Lords, and not those of the Earl, were the Authors of the Murder. And he observes upon the whole, that by such Strokes, and by a perpetual Raving against Murray, Camden has disfigured not only the History of Scotland, but that part of the English History which is connected with it.

FROM the time that Mary arriv'd in England, she was really a Prisoner, tho' Elizabeth pretended it was only a Point of Decorum which did not allow her to see her till she had clear'd her self, of which she made her believe she had no manner of doubt. The better to play her Game, she feign'd to be in a very great Passion with the Scots for having dethron'd their Queen. She declar'd that by so doing, they had signally affronted and extremely prejudic'd all other Sovereigns, who were all concern'd to support the Rights of this depos'd Queen. At the same time, she gave Mary to understand that she was convinc'd of her Innocence; but that nevertheless it was necessary the same should be made publick to the whole World, in order to give Authority for the Succours she intended to furnish for replacing her on the Throne. Mary fell into the Snare, and imagining that Elizabeth really design'd to serve her, and that she only wanted a Pretext to salve Appearances, she consented to have the Cause try'd by English Commissioners. As soon as she had given her consent to this fatal Examination, Elizabeth wrote to the Earl of Murray, that she was resolv'd to make a thorow Inquiry into the Proceeding of the Scots; and that if they could not prove what they had alledg'd against their Queen, she would assist her with all her Forces: That she desir'd him therefore to send some Deputies to York, to which she would dispatch Commissioners on her part, and that he would furnish them with such Proofs as he had in hand; to the end that after a proper Examination she might know what to determine: That if the Scots refus'd to consent to such Examination, she would look upon their Refusal as a Conviction of the Injustice of their Rebellion. The Regent being intimidated by these Menaces, resolv'd to go himself into England in company with some others of the Nobility, and several Civilians, in order to impeach the Queen his Sister there, and to justify the Conduct of the Estates of Scotland. This was the very thing that Elizabeth desir'd: for she only engag'd to support her good Sister in case she was found innocent; but at the same time she put it in the power of the Scots to prove her Crimes.

Her Letter to the Regent of Scotland.

Meeting of the Commissioners at York upon the Affair of Mary Queen of Scots.

THE English Commissioners with the Duke of Norfolk at their head, going to York, the Regent of Scotland and the Agents of Queen Mary repair'd thither also; but the Duke of Norfolk, who was a secret Friend to the Queen of Scotland, perceiving what was Elizabeth's Design, made use of Methods too tedious to mention, which hinder'd the Conference from having any Success. Yet Elizabeth, unwilling to to lose the Fruit of her Artifice, found means to bring the Regent of Scotland to London, and caus'd a second Conference to be held at Hampton-Court in presence of other English Commissioners, who were not such Friends to the Queen of Scotland as was the Duke of Norfolk. Mary perceiving, or being inform'd of the Artifice of Elizabeth, revok'd the Power which she had given to her Agents; but this did not prove a Hindrance to the Examination of her Affair. The Earl of Murray produc'd his Proofs against the Queen his Sister, to which no answer was made; and those Proofs which were committed to Writing were put into the hands of the Queen, who feign'd nevertheless that she gave no Credit to them; and she actually rav'd against the Regent and the Scots Commissioners, and treated them as Rebels. But all this was only a Copy of her Countenance, that there might be an Opportunity for saying that this Affair did not seem in her Opinion to be clearly discuss'd, and that it wanted fuller Explanation. It was on this pretence that she detain'd the Queen of Scotland for the space of eighteen Years without giving her the Assistance, which she had at first put her in hopes of, and without convicting her of the Crime of which she was accus'd, by starting fresh Pretences every Day for deferring that Explanation which she seem'd to wish for.

Q. ELIZ. Another at Hampton-Court.

WHEN Mary once perceiv'd the Artifices of Elizabeth to detain her in Prison, she thought her self warranted to make Attempts of every kind to procure her self Liberty. A multitude of Conspiracies were form'd for her, to some of which she consented, and particularly to that for marrying the Duke of Norfolk against the Will of Queen Elizabeth, tho' Bothwel was still alive: It cost that Duke his Life for pursuing that Chimerical Project with too much Zeal. All these several Conspiracies, none of which succeeded, produc'd no other Effect than to convince Elizabeth how much she was concern'd to look well to her Prisoner. For since she found Means to get so many Men to act for her while she was in Prison, what would she not have been able to have done, if she sate peaceably upon the Throne of Scotland, or if even after her Disgrace she had been permitted to go over to France?

Conspiracies for Queen Mary's Liberty.

I have no design to enter into the Particulars of all the Conspiracies that were form'd for Mary's Liberty, and at the same time to place her upon the Throne of England. I shall only say in few words, that the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland took Arms in her favour, as well as the Lord Darcy; that it cost the former his Life, and that the two others were oblig'd to fly out of the Kingdom: That the Duke of Norfolk lost his Head upon a Scaffold:

Fate of the Lords that took Arms for her.

Foedera Tom. XV.

that the Pope, Spain, the Duke of Alva, France, and the Duke of Guiſe ſerv'd Mary with all their Power; that they acted with the ſame Zeal in Scotland in order to find an Opportunity to attack Elizabeth from that Quarter; that the young King of Scotland ſeem'd at one time to have been gain'd by the Roman Catholicks to favour thoſe Conſpiracies; and finally, that ſeveral Plots were carried on againſt the Life of Elizabeth, and that they came to nothing at all. Moreover, the Biſhop of Roſs in Scotland, Author of a Hiſtory of that Kingdom, who was at the Court of Elizabeth in quality of Ambaſſador from Mary, had a hand in all theſe Conſpiracies. He was a Man of a very turbulent fiery Temper, who did the Queen his Miſtreſs more harm by endeavouring to ſerve her, than her Enemies did with all their Contrivances to hurt her.

Leſley, Biſhop of Roſs, his Character.

During all theſe Intrigues, which laſted many Years, Elizabeth was continually embarraſs'd; ſhe only kept Mary in Priſon, upon a vain Pretext which was already known. This extreme Rigour was the Cauſe, or rather the Pretext of the Conſpiracies I have juſt now mention'd. It ſeems at firſt view that Elizabeth, by ſetting Mary at liberty, might have deliver'd her ſelf out of all thoſe Troubles; but this Step would have been ſtill more dangerous. Mary's Impriſonment was only a Pretence, as I have already ſaid, for the many Conſpiracies form'd in her favour. The real View of her Friends was to place her on the Throne of England; and the ſetting her at liberty would only have made it the more eaſy for them to execute their Deſigns. Elizabeth was oblig'd therefore for her own Safety to detain her in Priſon. Indeed Mary offer'd to ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh in the manner I have already ſaid; that is to ſay, not to lay claim to the Crown of England during Elizabeth's Life: but this Offer was made too late, for Elizabeth knew the Deſigns of her Enemies too well to accept of ſuch a Propoſal, which ſhe look'd upon as a Snare. Her Jealouſy of her was rais'd to the higheſt pitch; ſhe ſaw that this Affair was come to ſuch a paſs, that ſhe could not deliver Mary without expoſing her ſelf to the greateſt Danger; and therefore ſhe reſolv'd to make her Priſoner for Life. The only Difficulty was, what Excuſes to make to France and Scotland, which ſtrongly ſolicited her Liberty, but by their Importunities only ruin'd the Affairs of the Captive Queen, and confirm'd Elizabeth more and more in her Suſpicions and Reſolution. She found no better Pretence than that which had already ſerv'd for her Excuſe, viz. to feign that ſhe wiſh'd Mary might appear Innocent. Therefore ſhe ſignify'd that ſhe would have this Affair examin'd once more; and the Earl of Morton went to London, there to accuſe the Queen a ſecond time. But this came to nothing, becauſe Elizabeth was reſolv'd that the Affair ſhould never be put into a clear Light: not but ſhe was fully convinc'd by the Proofs ſhe had in her own hands, that Mary was guilty. But as ſhe had no Right to condemn her for that Fact, ſo ſhe did not care to try her for it; it was ſufficient for her that ſhe did not appear to be innocent. All this was Artifice in order to amuſe the Ambaſſadors with Hopes that this Affair would ſoon be clear'd up, and that in all probability Mary would be fully juſtify'd; and in the mean while ſhe always gain'd time. 'Twas for this ſame reaſon that ſhe feign'd an Inclination to treat with Mary, and that ſhe caus'd Propoſals to be made to her of ſuch a Nature, that even tho' Mary had granted every one, there would have been inſurmountable Difficulties in the Execution of them. At laſt theſe two Queens continually laid Traps for one another. Mary pretended that all ſhe aim'd at was to obtain her Liberty, while her Friends left no Stone unturn'd to place her upon the Throne of England, under pretence of working for her Deliverance. And Elizabeth on her part acted with equal Diſſimulation: She declar'd that ſhe had nothing more at heart than to ſet Mary at liberty on Terms that might be ſafe for England; but at the ſame time order'd it ſo, that the Security which ſhe deſir'd could not be granted her.

Elizabeth's Reaſons for detaining the Queen of Scots in Priſon.

The Diſſimulation of the two Queens.

While this paſs'd, Conſpiracies were diſcover'd againſt Elizabeth's Life from time to time. In 1584, there was one in which the Ambaſſador of Spain was concern'd: This produc'd a general Aſſociation in England for the Safety of the Queen's Perſon, and caus'd double Precautions to be us'd as to the guarding of the Queen of Scotland, who was put into the hands of *Drury.

Plots againſt Elizabeth's Life.

Aſſociation thereupon.

In 1585, a new Conſpiracy, contriv'd by one Parr, produc'd an Act of Parliament which confirm'd the Aſſociation, and order'd that twenty four Commiſſioners, to be appointed by the Queen, ſhould make Inquiry and Search after ſuch as had a Deſign upon the Life of the Queen, or ſhould challenge any Right to the Crown of England: That the Perſon by or for whom ſuch Attempt ſhould be made, ſhould be thereby render'd incapable of ſucceeding to the Crown, and ſhould be proſecuted to Death, if the 24 Commiſſioners ſhould declare ſuch Perſon attainted and convict.

And a Commiſſion of Enquiry after Traitors.

Probably it was already reſolv'd to put the Queen of Scotland to Death upon the firſt Opportunity that preſented; for things were come to ſuch a height, that one of the two Queens muſt neceſſarily periſh. This Opportunity offer'd it ſelf the Year following, viz. 1586.

Queen Mary's Trial.

A Reſolution was thereupon taken to have Mary try'd and condemn'd upon the Letter of the Act juſt now mention'd. I cannot here enter into the Particulars of this Trial, which have been given by Camden, an Author very much ſuſpected in this Paſſage. It is ſufficient to ſay in a word, that out of 42 Commiſſioners who were appointed her Judges by the Queen, 36 repair'd to Fotheringhay, where Mary was Priſoner; and that after having examin'd the Accuſations and Defence, they declar'd her attainted and convict of the Crime contain'd in the Act of Parliament above-mention'd; namely, for that an Attempt had been made in her favour upon the Life of Queen Elizabeth, and that ſhe was not ignorant of it. Nor ſhall I give an Account of the cunning Stratagems Elizabeth made uſe of, in order to be importun'd by ſeveral Lords, and by the Parliament themſelves, to put the Sentence in execution, and to make the Publick believe that the Sentence was executed without her Order; for ſuch a Train of Particulars would carry me too far. 'Tis ſufficient to ſay in a word, that Mary was beheaded,

Parties in Scotland.

FROM the Year 1568, that Mary retir'd to England, to the Year 1573, there were always two Parties in Scotland, the one for the Depoſed Queen, and the other called the King's Party. The Queen's Party was favour'd by the Pope, the King of France, the King of Spain, and the Duke of Alva, as long as he was Governor of the Netherlands; and the King's Party was under the Protection of the Queen of England. Each of theſe Parties was divided into ſeveral Branches, which had different Views and Intereſts. There was one which pretending to be attach'd to the King, did nevertheleſs ſerve the Queen much more to the purpoſe than they who openly declar'd for her. At the head of this Branch was Lord Grange. When he perceiv'd what a vaſt Advantage Elizabeth's Protection gave to the Regent who was at the head of the King's Party, he did what he could to perſuade all Mankind that ſuch a Dependency on England was injurious to Scotland: and he pretended that it was the Intereſt of the Scots to be reconcil'd to one another, in order to ſhake off that Yoke, and act like a free Nation. Elizabeth plainly perceiv'd that the Deſign of this Pretext was to weaken the King's Party and her own, and to engage the two Kingdoms in a War, which might be a Colour for ſending for foreign Aids into Scotland. For this reaſon ſhe took all poſſible care to hinder this Union, and neglected no Opportunity to foment a Diviſion in Scotland, leſt ſhe ſhould be attack'd from that Quarter. Q. ELIZ.

IT was not poſſible for Lord Grange's Party, which at laſt affected a kind of Neutrality, to gain the Earl of Murray, any more than the Earl of Lenox who ſucceeded him in the Regency: ſo that as long as thoſe two Regents liv'd, the Diviſions continued in Scotland, to the great Satisfaction of Elizabeth, who had nothing to fear from that Kingdom while it was ſo diſturb'd by a Civil War. She only took care that the King's Party ſhould preſerve a ſort of Superiority, but without giving him the neceſſary Succours to render him Maſter of the other Party. Earl of Lenox Regent.

THE Earl of Lenox being kill'd about the end of the Year 1571, the Regency was confer'd upon the Earl of Mar; who entring into the Sentiments of Lord Grange, employ'd all his Induſtry to reconcile the two Parties; but he acted ſecretly, being very ſenſible that if this Deſign came to be known, no Obſtruction would be wanting to the Execution of it. He took ſuch effectual pains, that he engag'd the chief Men of the Queen's Party to conſent to a Reconciliation upon Terms which were very much to their advantage. He had actually ſworn privately to obſerve the Conventions he had made with them: But going to ſee the Earl of Morton at Dalkeith, in order to obtain his Conſent, he there fell ſick of a Diſtemper, of which in a few days he died; and it was ſuſpected that he was poiſon'd[d]. Earl of Mar Regent. His Negotiation with the Queen's Party.

THE Earl of Morton, who was a Creature of Elizabeth, was choſe Regent in the room of the Earl of Mar, whoſe Project vaniſh'd with his Life. Till then, Elizabeth contented her ſelf with fomenting the Troubles in Scotland; but being apprehenſive at laſt that there would be a Reconciliation between the two Parties in ſpite of her, ſhe thought fit to make uſe of the Earl of Morton, who depended on her, entirely to ruin the Queen's Party, and to put them out of a condition of calling foreign Aids into Scotland. Beſides, a very fair opportunity preſented, becauſe the Duke of Norfolk, on whoſe Projects the Queen's Party founded all their Hopes, was juſt beheaded. Conſequently, by Elizabeth's Direction, the Regent Earl of Morton Regent.

[d] Melvil inſinuates, that the Regent was only induced to this Accommodation, to deliver Scotland from the Yoke of the Engliſh. But the Memoirs of Walſingham ſhew us that Melvil was not rightly inform'd, becauſe the Accommodation was brought about by Elizabeth's Approbation, and that there were Articles actually ſign'd, of which Mr. Secretary Smith ſent a Copy to Walſingham at Paris. Camden, who ſays that this Regent was a Man of a very mild Nature, and very affectionate to his Country, reports that after he had ſtruggled 13 Months, as much with the turbulent Counſels of his own Party, as with the Inſolence of his Adverſaries, he died for Grief.

Foedera Tom. XV.

Regent offer'd very advantageous Terms to the chief Men of the contrary Party, who ſeeing they had no Remedy left, accepted them; and thereby the Queen's Party was depriv'd of their greateſt ſupport. None but the Lord Grange Governour of Edinburgh-Caſtle, and ſome others that were with him in that Caſtle, refus'd what was offer'd them, or at leaſt endeavour'd to gain time by various Artifices, till the arrival of the Succours they were made to expect from France and the Netherlands. But the Earl of Morton, who was better inform'd of their Affairs than they imagin'd, was too cunning to be caught in their Snare. He made a Treaty with Elizabeth, who ſent him Troops, Artillery, and Ammunition, with which he beſieg'd the Caſtle of Edinburgh. Grange defended it a long time, but being at laſt oblig'd to ſurrender it, was condemn'd to be hang'd. Thus ended the Civil-War of Scotland in the Year 1573. Elizabeth not finding it her Intereſt to ſupport it any longer.

Concluſion of the Civil War in Scotland.

From that time to the Year 1578, the Earl of Morton ſtill continued to govern Scotland, in quality of Regent, without any jealouſy from Elizabeth, becauſe ſhe was very ſure of him. But at laſt Morton having unwiſely diſoblig'd the young King's Governour and Preceptors, they made a League againſt him to ruin him; and having brought the Earls of Argyle and Athol into the Plot, they perſuaded the King, who was but twelve Years of Age, to turn off the Regent, and to take the Reins of the Government into his own hands. This Project was executed with ſuch Diſpatch, that it was not poſſible for the Earl of Morton to be quick enough for his Enemies. The States of the Kingdom confirm'd what the King had done, and appointed him a Council conſiſting of twelve Perſons. Morton diſſembling his Reſentment, retir'd to his Houſe at Dalkeith, where he ſeem'd to employ himſelf in nothing but the Cultivation of his Gardens. But it was not long e'er he found means to make himſelf Maſter of the King's Perſon, and to reſume his former Poſt.

Earl of Morton remov'd from the Regency.

Reſumes it.

He was made uneaſy in the Regency ſoon after he had recover'd it. For, in the following Year, 1577, the King entertain'd an extravagant Affection for two young Men both of the Stuart Family, tho' of diſſerent Branches. The one was James Stuart of Oghiltry, and the other Eſme Stuart Baron of Aubigny, lately come from France, where that Branch had been ſettled ever ſince the Reign of Charles VII. 'Tis ſaid that the latter was ſent into Scotland by the Duke of Guiſe, to endeavour the Ruin of the Earl of Morton, and to incenſe the young King againſt Elizabeth, and that the other was alſo brib'd for the ſame purpoſe. Be this as it will, thoſe two Favourites, of whom the firſt was created Earl of Arran, and the ſecond Duke of Lenox, gain'd ſuch an Aſcendant over the King, that he ſaw nothing but with their Eyes. Elizabeth was quickly ſenſible how much the King was alter'd by the Counſels of thoſe Men; for this Prince began to conſider her in no other Light than as an Enemy. 'Tis ſaid alſo that he was inſpir'd with Sentiments favourable to the Roman Catholick Religion, that there was a Deſign of marrying him to a French Woman, and then to engage him to appoint the Duke of Guiſe his Lieutenant General in Scotland. The Advice which Elizabeth receiv'd of all theſe Projects giving her uneaſineſs, ſhe ſent Bowes into Scotland, with Orders to accuſe the Duke of Lenox in full Council, for doing his utmoſt to alienate the King's Affection from the Intereſts of England. This Envoy was very ill receiv'd, had no ſatisfaction given him, and as it were to inſult Elizabeth, the Earl of Morton the Regent was accus'd of High Treaſon and arreſted.

He is ſupplanted by the King's two Favourites;

And accus'd of High Treaſon.

Elizabeth then repented of having departed from her Favourite Maxim, which ſhe had obſerv'd a long time, of keeping up the Diviſions in Scotland, and was reſolv'd to put it again in practice. For this purpoſe ſhe ſent Randolph into that Country, under ſome pretence, and order'd him to uſe his Endeavours to excite new Troubles there. Randolph diſcharg'd his Commiſſion as far as lay in his power, by caballing among the great Men; but being diſcover'd, was oblig'd to retire without taking his Leave. It coſt the Earl of Morton his Life, who was condemn'd to be beheaded. He own'd at his Execution that his Deſign was to carry the King into England. Nothing can be a better Proof of his entire Correſpondence with Elizabeth.

Elizabeth ſends Randolph to foment new Troubles in Scotland.

Things growing worſe and worſe every Day on that ſide, and the Queen having ſecret Intelligence that the Duke of Guiſe had a Deſign to attack her by the way of Scotland; ſhe was oblig'd to have recourſe to violent Remedies in order to prevent it. I am very ſenſible that perhaps it can't be clearly prov'd that ſhe was concern'd in the Deſign I juſt now mention'd, but at leaſt it cannot be deny'd that the ſame is highly probable. However, in the Year 1582, the King going to make a Viſit to Earl Gowry, at a Seat in the Country, was there taken into Cuſtody, his two Favourites being at that time abſent. The Earl of Arran, who was not far off, making an Effort to reſcue the King, was taken and committed to Priſon. As for the Duke of Lenox, he retir'd to his Government of Dunbar, from whence he afterwards return'd to France. The two Favourites being thus put away, they who had ſecured the King's Perſon, ſet him at liberty, and the ſaid young Prince having aſſembled the Nobility, declar'd before them that he approv'd of every thing that had been done, done, as tending to his Service. But he afterwards recall'd the Earl of Arran, who made uſe of his Credit to perſecute the Party of Ruthwen, which was the Name given to the Party who had detain'd the King, becauſe the Earl of Gowry was of the Ruthwen Family. That was the Subject of a Letter which Elizabeth wrote to King James, to perſuade him to alter his Conduct. She alſo ſent Secretary Walſingham to him, to give him advice, but it was attended with little ſucceſs *.

Elizabeth ſends Daviſon to Scotland, to bribe the Earl of Arran.

At length Elizabeth perceiving that the Earl of Arran, who was a Man of no Religion, perverted the King's Heart, and that he alſo held a Correſpondence with the Roman Catholick Powers, found no other way to get rid of his Intrigues than to win him over to her Party by her Bounty; and ſhe ſucceeded accordingly by the Management of Daviſon, whom ſhe ſent into Scotland for the purpoſe. As there had been ſome Talk of the King's Marriage with a Princeſs of Denmark, the Earl of Arran promis'd to uſe his Efforts to prevent it. Elizabeth wiſh'd that James wou'd never marry, or at leaſt that he would marry an Engliſh Woman. For this purpoſe ſhe had gain'd the beſt part of the Council of Scotland, and by this very Means ſhe got the King to conſent to make an Alliance with her for the common Defence of the two Kingdoms, and of the Proteſtant Religion. After this the Earl of Arran did not continue long in favour; Elizabeth, who cou'd not ſafely confide in him, having herſelf contributed to his Ruin. But it was not poſſible for her to hinder the King's Marriage with Anne of Denmark, James having abſolutely determin'd to conclude it, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of his Council.

Elizabeth's Alliance with the King of Scotland.

His Marriage.

THE only Piece we find in this XVth Tome of the Fœdera relating to Elizabeth's Affairs with the King of Scotland, is as follows, viz.

Elizabeth's Treaty with K. James VI. P. 803.

A Treaty of more ſtrict Alliance betwixt Elizabeth and James VI. dated at Berwick, July 5, 1586. the Articles of which were as follow.

1. THAT they ſhall uſe their Endeavours to maintain the true and pure Proteſtant and Evangelical Religion in the two Kingdoms.

2. THAT this is a League againſt all Princes who forbid the Exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion in their Dominions; all former Treaties to the contrary notwithſtanding.

3. THAT they will give no aſſiſtance directly nor indirectly, to ſuch as ſhall attack either of the two Kingdoms.

4. IF England is attack'd in any Place remote from Scotland, James ſhall furniſh 2000 Horſe and 5000 Foot to aſſiſt her.

5. IN the ſame Caſe, Elizabeth ſhall furniſh the King with 3000 Horſe, and 6000 Foot. Q. ELIZ.

6. IF England is attack'd in any Place, which is not above 60 Miles from Scotland, James ſhall aſſiſt Elizabeth with all his Forces for 30 Days, or in caſe of need, as long as his Vaſſals are oblig'd to ſerve him.

7. HE ſhall hinder the Earl of Argyle's Vaſſals from infeſting Ireland.

8. THE King and Queen ſhall give no ſhelter to Rebels.

9. THEY ſhall make no Alliance to the prejudice of the preſent Treaty but by mutual Conſent.

10. THIS Treaty ſhall be ratified in ſix Months.

11. ALL other preceding Treaties ſhall continue in force.

12. James ſhall ratify this Treaty, and cauſe it to be approv'd by the Eſtates as ſoon as he attains to the Age of 25.

ARTICLE IV.

Elizabeth's Affairs with France.

I have already mention'd the Treaty concluded at Chateau Cambreſis, between Henry II. and Elizabeth, in the Year 1559. But 'tis neceſſary to ſay ſomething more of it here. The only View of this Treaty, properly ſpeaking, was the Reſtitution of Calais. Philip II. wou'd not have ſign'd the Peace, only that it might appear he had procured the Reſtitution of that place to England; and yet 'tis highly probable that he was not much in pain about the Performance of that Article. This Treaty imported,

"THAT the King of France ſhould "keep Calais, and the other Places in Picardy, conquer'd from the Engliſh, during eight Years.

"THAT within ſix Months he ſhould "provide ſeven Merchants, who are not "his Subjects, to be Sureties that if he or "his Succeſſors refuſed or delayed to give "up thoſe Places at the Time prefixed, "they ſhould pay Elizabeth the Sum of "500,000 Gold Crowns of the Sun, as a "Penalty for the Refuſal or Delay of Reſtitution. That nevertheleſs, whether "the ſaid Sum be paid or not, the King "of France and the Dauphin ſhall continue bound to the Reſtitution of thoſe "Places according to their Engagement. "That, beſides, they ſhall give the Queen "certain Hoſtages."

Mezeray ſpeaking of this Treaty, reports it in this manner: "That in eight "Years time Henry was to reſtore Calais, "and the reconquer'd Countries, or, if he "choſe it, to pay the Sum of 500,000 "Crowns.

Parties in France.

THEN

* Cambden turns this whole Affair to the King's advantage, by his paſſing over all the Particulars mention'd by Melvil in ſilence.

Foedera Tom. XV.

THEN he adds, "Which being left to "his Option, it was not to be doubted "but he would keep that Place which "was the Key of his Kingdom."

FATHER Daniel ſeems a little more confus'd with reſpect to this Treaty. He ſays indeed the ſame thing as Mezeray in ſubſtance, but he gives an Explanation of it, and adds a Clauſe to it, which does not appear in the Treaty. Theſe are his words:

"Elizabeth could not make an abſo-"lute Ceſſion of Calais to France without "diſguſting the Engliſh. Beſides, ſhe ſaw "the King determin'd not to reſtore that "Place. Therefore ſhe choſe a Medium, "which was to leave that Prince in poſſeſ-"ſion of Calais for eight Years, at the Ex-"piration of which he was engaged to re-"ſtore it on the penalty of paying 500,000 "Crowns to England. That notwithſtand-"ing the Payment which ſhould be made "for the Refuſal or Delay of Reſtitution, "the Engliſh would have a Right to take "Arms for the Recovery of Calais."

I am fully perſuaded that when Henry II. ſign'd the Treaty, he never intended to put it in execution; and that he only conſented to this Article, to ſatisfy the deſire of Philip II. of Spain. But Henry's Breach of Faith could be no Warrant for the two Hiſtorians before mentioned to report the Treaty in a manner quite different from the Tenor of it, and even with Additions of which there is no Trace in the Treaty itſelf. 'Tis eaſy to prove that the Court of France did not think they had a Right to keep Calais by the ſaid Treaty, after the Expiration of eight Years; becauſe when the Reſtitution of it was demanded of her, ſhe did not urge this Reaſon to ſupport her Refuſal, as may be ſeen in Hiſtory.

'TIS not neceſſary here to repeat what gave occaſion to the Treaty of Edinburgh, nor to the Refuſal of Francis II. to ratify it, becauſe this Subject was handled in the ſecond Article. Francis II. dying at the cloſe of the Year 1560, his Succeſſor Charles IX. had no right to meddle with the Affairs of the Kingdom of Scotland. Nevertheleſs, he might have found a Pretext to purſue the Project of the King his Brother, as he was an Ally of Scotland, Brother-in-Law to Mary. But the Queen, Catherine de Medicis, Regent of France, was not ſo fond of her Daughter-in-Law Mary, to engage in an Enterprize ſo difficult as the placing of the Crown of England upon her Head. Beſides, the Troubles which happen'd in France in this new Reign, found the Court too much Employment for them to take effectual Methods to bring ſuch a Deſign to paſs.

Parties in France.

TWO Parties were form'd in France during the Minority of Charles IX. viz. that of the Prince of Conde, and that of the Duke of Guiſe. The latter was ſupported by the Roman Catholicks, and the former by the Hugonots, who were by much the ſmalleſt Number. The Regent fomented the Diviſion between the two Parties, and for this end judg'd it proper to ſupport the weakeſt, leſt it ſhould be cruſhed by the ſtrongeſt; becauſe if ſhe had abandon'd the Hugonots, ſhe feared to fall again under the power of the Lorrain Princes, which ſhe found inſupportable during the laſt Reign. For this Reaſon ſhe granted the Hugonots that called the Edict of January, which was very much in their favour. The Duke of Guiſe, and the Cardinal of Lorrain his Brother, well-knowing what was the Regent's Deſign, did their utmoſt to render themſelves ſuperior. With this View they made an Offer to the King of Navarre, who was ſtill wavering between the two Parties, of the Queen of Scotland their Niece in Marriage, with all her Rights to the Crown of England, and the Aſſiſtance of the Pope and the King of Spain to back them. Tho' the King of Navarre was married, yet as the Queen his Wife was a Hugonot, there was no difficulty in getting his Marriage diſſolv'd, if he had been willing to have conſented to it. Elizabeth being ſenſible by this Project, of which ſhe had Information, that thoſe Princes had not relinquiſhed their Deſigns, thought it neceſſary for her own Safety to keep them employed in France, by relieving the Hugonots who had taken Arms in 1562, after the Maſſacre of Vaſſy. Therefore ſhe made a Treaty with them, by which ſhe engaged to ſend them 6000 Men, of whom 3000 were to be employed in the Defence of Diep and Roan; and the other half were deſign'd for garriſoning Havre de Grace, which the Hugonots were to put into her hands, as they did accordingly. The French Ambaſſador at London made great Complaints of theſe Succours, but to very little purpoſe. The Queen publiſhed a Manifeſto, in which ſhe ſaid that ſhe had only ſent her Troops to France, to ſecure thoſe Places for the King, and to hinder the Lorrain Princes from ſeizing them, that they might from thence with the more eaſe make a Deſcent upon England.

Some time after this, Roan was beſieg'd by the King's Army, and taken by ſtorm, after the King of Navarre had receiv'd a Wound in the Trenches, of which he died. The taking of Roan was ſoon followed by the Battle of Dreux. The Succeſs of it was pretty equal on both ſides, becauſe the two Generals, viz. the Conſtable of Montmorency, and the Prince of Conde were taken Priſoners. In the Year following, viz. 1563, the Hugonots made a Peace without including England in it. Soon after, the King cauſed Havre de Grace to be beſieg'd, and made himſelf Maſter of it; the very Men who had delivered up that place to the Engliſh, having ſhewed a world of Zeal to take it from them. The taking of Havre was followed by a Truce, and a Peace betwixt France and England was concluded at Troyes in 1564.

Peace of Troyes.

AFTER that time it ſeem'd that the Court of France was deſirous, coſt what it would, to purchaſe the Good-will of Elizabeth, and that they neglected the Intereſts of the Queen of Scotland more and more. In 1566, Charles IX. ſent two Collars of the Order of St. Michael to Elizabeth, to make a preſent thereof to any two Engliſh Noblemen whom ſhe thought fit. But this Mark of Affection was far from being ſincere. Nor did Elizabeth put too much ſtreſs upon it. She knew that in an Interview at Bayonne betwixt the two Courts of France and Spain, the Ruin of the Proteſtants was reſolv'd upon, and ſhe could not doubt there was a Deſign to ſurprize them; yet ſhe diſſembled her Thoughts, and anſwered the Marks of Eſteem which Charles IX. gave her, by outward Tokens of reciprocal Affection.

Charles's pretence of Friendſhip for Elizabeth.

THE next Year ſhe had occaſion to be confirmed in her ſuſpicions by Charles IXth's Refuſal to reſtore Calais to her; a Refuſal which M. l'Hopital the Chancellor did not think fit to found upon the Treaty of Chateau Cambreſis, but upon other general Reaſons altogether inſufficient, and eſpecially on the Omiſſion of that Reſtitution in the Treaty of Troyes. Elizabeth being in no condition to recover the Place by force of Arms, took care to conceal her Reſentment at the Refuſal.

Charles IX. refuſes to reſtore Calais to Elizabeth.

THE Civil War breaking out again this Year in France, Elizabeth gave the King to underſtand in plain Terms, that ſhe would not ſit ſtill and ſee the Hugonots oppreſs'd. This Declaration in favour of the Hugonots, their own Reſolution, and the Succours they received from Germany, procured a Peace for them; but it was of no long Duration. Charles having made an attempt to carry off the Prince of Conde, gave occaſion by ſuch a Proceeding for renewing the War. Elizabeth who was by Intereſt obliged to ſupport the Hugonots, ſent them 100,000 Crowns of Gold, with a Train of Artillery. The War laſted till 1570, when it was concluded by a fallacious Peace, which the King granted to the Hugonots. It was probably at that very time that the Project was contrived for the Maſſacre, which was executed two Years after.

Her Relief of the Hugonots.

WHEN Charles IX. had formed a Deſign at once to exterminate all the Hugonots out of his Kingdom, he omitted nothing that the deepeſt Diſſimulation could ſuggeſt to him, in order to lull them aſleep. I ſhall here only treat of one ſingle Article which falls in with my Subject, viz. the Negotiation which was ſet on foot in the Year 1571, for the Duke of Anjou's Marriage with Elizabeth. 'Tis more than probable that neither Charles nor Elizabeth had any great Deſire to ſee that Marriage accompliſhed. Mean time they both had their different Reaſons to feign that they wiſh'd it. But the Diſſimulation of Charles proceeded only from the barbarous Deſign he had entertained to extirpate the Hereticks, and to hinder them from ſuſpecting it, by pretending an Inclination to marry the Prince his Brother to a Queen, who was looked upon as the Protectreſs of the Proteſtant Religion.

French King's Deſign upon the Hugonots.

A Match propos'd for Elizabeth.

ON the contrary, Elizabeth's Diſſimulation had no other end but to guard againſt the Snares and Attacks of her Enemies; ſhe imagined that when they ſaw ſhe was on the point of uniting with France by her Marriage, Mary's Friends would lie ſtill; and that by that Means ſhe ſhould, at leaſt for a time, put a ſtop to the Conſpiracies which were continually on foot to dethrone her. The Match did not go forward. Elizabeth found a way to clog the Treaty with Propoſals on the ſcore of Religion, which the Court of France could not but think very harſh. Nevertheleſs, Charles, underſtanding no doubt what was the Queen's Aim, relaxed the more upon this Article, the more ſhe ſeemed to inſiſt upon it; and thereby he brought the Hugenots the more eaſily into the Snare.

Q. ELIZ.

THE Marriage Treaty being broke off, another Negotiation was ſet on foot for a defenſive Alliance betwixt France and England; which Treaty met with two great Difficulties. The firſt was Elizabeth's Demand that both Parties ſhould mutually engage to defend each other in caſe they were attack'd, even tho' it were for the Cauſe of Religion. But Charles could not diſpenſe with this Article, for fear of offending the Pope and the Catholicks. Nevertheleſs he offered, that without mentioning Religion, it might be ſaid in general, for any Cauſe whatever, and to write to the Queen a Letter with his own hand, wherein he would declare that the Cauſe of Religion was included in this general Clauſe, with which Elizabeth found herſelf obliged at laſt to be contented.

Her Alliance with France.

THE ſecond Difficulty was Charles's abſolute Demand that the Queen of Scotland ſhould be included in the Treaty, to which Elizabeth neither would nor could conſent. The Expedient they found to get over this Obſtacle, was to make uſe of an ambiguous Expreſſion, viz. That the two Crowns ſhall engage to maintain the preſent Laws of Scotland. By this Queen Elizabeth meant every thing that the Eſtates had done againſt Mary; and Charles ſuppoſing every thing that had been done by the States as null, might pretend that by the preſent Laws, thoſe muſt needs be underſtood which had preceded the Troubles of Scotland. Upon the whole Matter, this Alliance was patch'd up for no other end but to amuſe the Publick. Elizabeth had had no Intention to make uſe of the Succours of France, if ſhe had been attack'd upon the ſcore of Religion; but it was her Intereſt the World ſhould think otherwiſe. On the other hand, Charles made that Difficulty about Mary's Affair only to ſalve Appearances, for fear that if he had been too pliant upon that head, it might have created a ſuſpicion that he had ſome Deſigns which he did not think fit to own. This Alliance was concluded in April 1572, at Blois.

Maſſacre of St. Bartholomew.

The Maſſacre of St. Bartholomew (ſo call'd becauſe it was committed on the Feſtival of that Saint, viz. Auguſt 24, in this Year) at length diſcover'd the Deſigns which Charles had with ſo much Diſſimulation conceal'd. Elizabeth was not only touch'd with the Misfortune of the Hugonots, but ſhe was even under ſome dread of what might be her own Fate. Charles IX. had juſt given a proof how imprudent it would have been to have rely'd on his Bona Fide for the future. The Duke of Guiſe, Couſin-German to the Queen of Scotland, did what he pleas'd with the Court of France, and there was too much reaſon to ſurmiſe that the King of Spain was enter'd into this horrid Conſpiracy, and that it would not ſtop there. In this uncertain State of Affairs, Elizabeth was reſolv'd to be upon her Guard, without making a noiſe, for fear of giving her Enemies a handle, and to prepare for her Defence in caſe ſhe ſhould be attack'd. On the other hand, Charles, who had not extirpated all the Hugonots, as he had propos'd, and who found that thoſe who had eſcap'd the Maſſacre were reſolv'd to ſell their Lives dearly, was afraid that Elizabeth would afford them powerful Succours; therefore he palliated what had been done in the beſt manner he could, and declar'd to the Engliſh Ambaſſador, a very particular Eſteem and Affection for the Queen, proteſting that it was his Intention religiouſly to obſerve the Treaty. Elizabeth pretended to be captivated by thoſe Expreſſions of Friendſhip, and in anſwer return'd the like Proteſtations on her part. It ſeem'd by thoſe external Tokens as if they had a perfect Eſteem and ſincere Affection for one another, tho' their Diffidence of each other was then at the higheſt pitch. Nay, their Diſſimulation went ſo far, that Charles having a Daughter born at that very Juncture, deſir'd Elizabeth to be Godmother; and ſhe made no ſcruple to conſent to it. The Hugonots did not know what to think of the Queen's Conduct, but ſhe ſuffer'd them to believe what they pleas'd, and conſtantly purſued what her Politicks dictated.

The Diſſimulation both of Charles and Elizabeth.

Montgomery prepares Succours for the Rochellers.

All this did not hinder the Queen from permitting Montgomery to prepare Succours in England for Rochel, which was on the point of being beſieg'd. The Ambaſſador of France made a great Clamour about it; but all the Anſwer he had was, that they who made thoſe Preparations, were Perſons unauthoriz'd, and that if they could be taken, they ſhould be puniſh'd.

The Arreſt of the French Envoy ſent to Scotland to foment Troubles there.

On the other hand, the Troubles of Scotland being juſt brought to a period by the Siege of Edinburgh-Caſtle, Charles ſent *Virac into Scotland to foment them, and to encourage the Garriſon to hold out in hopes of ſpeedy Succour. But Virac being oblig'd by a Storm to put in at Scarborough, was there apprehended and carry'd to London, under pretence of a general Prohibition to let any body go without a Paſſport. By that means, France was diſappointed in her Deſign, becauſe her Envoy was detain'd at London till the War in Scotland was determin'd.

The Ambaſſador of France complain'd again of this Proceeding, but was told that the Queen having had no Advice of the ſending of Virac into Scotland, could not poſſibly prevent the Execution of the general Order ſhe had given for the Government of the Frontiers.

Siege of Rochel.

Mean while, the King of France caus'd Rochel to be beſieg'd, and at the ſame time ſet a Treaty of Marriage on foot at London, between his ſecond Brother the Duke of Alençon and Elizabeth, who receiv'd the Propoſal calmly, and made it believ'd that ſhe had an Inclination to marry, tho' till then ſhe had declar'd the contrary.

Another Match propos'd for Elizabeth.

Duke of Anjou choſe King of Poland.

Not long after, the Duke of Anjou, who commanded at the Siege of Rochel, having receiv'd the News that he had been choſe King of Poland, rais'd the Siege, and a Peace was granted to the Hugonots.

The King of Poland, ſet out for his Kingdom, notwithſtanding all that the Queen-Mother could do to retain him. 'Tis ſaid that ſhe knew beforehand that it could not be long e'er Charles IX. would infallibly die. 'Twas for this Reaſon that ſhe was not willing that the King of Poland, who was the deareſt to her of all her Children, ſhould by his Abſence venture the Loſs of the Crown of France, which the King his Brother was going to leave to him. But Charles was ſo jealous of the King his Brother, that he abſolutely inſiſted on his Departure, ſo much did he dread the Intrigues of his Mother.

Death of Charles IX.

Not long after, Charles IX. by the Advice of his Mother, put a guard upon the Duke of Alençon. Catherine was afraid this young Prince would ſupplant the King of Poland his elder Brother, after the Death of the King which actually happen'd on on the 30th of May 1574*. Henry his Brother, who was already in Poland, having receiv'd the News, ſtole away from the Poles and return'd to France, where he ſucceeded the King his Brother by the Name of Henry III. Immediately after his Arrival in France, he made War upon the Hugonots, tho' they had given him no Provocation. Elizabeth not daring to declare her ſelf openly for them, ſecretly furniſh'd the Prince of Conde with ſome Money to pay the Troops which Caſimir the Couut Palatine rais'd for him in Germany. This War held but a Year, and was follow'd by a Peace, which was the more willingly granted to the Hugonots, becauſe they had at their head the Duke of Alençon the King's Brother, and ſome good German Troops. It was during this Peace, that the Duke of Guiſe began to form the famous Catholick League which occaſion'd ſo much miſchief in France, and oblig'd the Hugonots to unite ſtrictly together for their common Defence under the Conduct of the King of Navarre, the chief Prince of the Blood-Royal next to the Duke of Alençon.

FOEDERA Tom. XV.

The beginning of the Catholick League, and the Proteſtants Counter-League.

IN 1578. this Duke, who had taken the Title of Duke of Anjou, was choſe Protector of the Belgick Liberties, and immediately after, he ſent a Gentleman to England nam'd Baqueville, in order to treat of his Marriage with Elizabeth. This Envoy was very well receiv'd, and the Queen did not appear very averſe to the Propoſal. The Negotiation was continued with warmth in the Year 1579. the Queen ſeeming always diſpoſed to conclude it, provided they could agree as to the Article of Religion. The Duke himſelf went over to pay her a Viſit incognito; but he made a very ſhort ſtay in England. At length in 1581, the Marriage-Articles were agreed on to the Queen's Satisfaction; but the Articles were ſcarce ſign'd, when Elizabeth ſtarted a Difficulty, by demanding that France ſhould conclude an Offenſive Alliance with her, to which the King would not conſent before the Marriage was conſummated. Mean time the Duke of Anjou repairing to England, was receiv'd by the Queen with great Demonſtrations of Kindneſs and Reſpect; and one Day ſhe even gave him a Ring from her Finger. Every body then thought the Marriage was on the point of being ſolemniz'd: But all on a ſudden the Queen chang'd her Mind; and the reaſon ſhe pretended for it was the Oppoſition made to it by ſeveral Lords of her Council, whom ſhe had herſelf in all appearance excited to murmur againſt her Marriage. The Duke ſet out in the beginnig of the Year 1582, loaded with Honours and Preſents, tho' not a little mortify'd that he had not ſucceeded in the Affair which carry'd him to England. He went to Bruſſels, where he was crown'd Duke of Brabant.

Another Marriage propos'd to Elizabeth.

Q. ELIZ.

FROM that time Elizabeth had very little to do with Henry III. except in the Year 1585, when this Prince having been compell'd by the League to make War upon the Hugonots, the Queen lent 50,000 Crowns to the Prince of Conde, and ten Ships, with which he rais'd the Blockade of Rochel.

The Acts relating to Elizabeth's Affairs with France in this 15th Tome are very few.

IT appears from thence, that it was not at the Option of France, either to reſtore Calais or to pay the 500,000 Crowns, and that this Sum was only a Penalty for the Refuſal

The Obligation is dated at St. Valery, the 13th of October 1581.

Article V.

Elizabeth's Affairs with Spain.

I have already taken notice, that immediately after Queen Mary's Death, Philip II. courted Elizabeth, and undertook to get a Dispensation from the Pope for the Marriage. Elizabeth was very much at a loss, not whether she should accept or refuse the Suit, having already resolv'd on that Point, but which way she should come off: For as she had not only determin'd in appearance before-hand not to share her Throne with a Husband, so she consider'd that in the Marriage which was propos'd to her, there was a Difficulty which she could not get over; namely, that by her Compliance she would have expressly condemn'd the Conduct of the King her Father towards Catherine of Arragon, and every thing in consequence thereof. For if with a Dispensation from the Pope she could have marry'd her Brother-in-law Philip II. Henry might with the like Dispensation have marry'd Catherine of Arragon; from whence it would necessarily follow, that his second Marriage with Anne of Boleyne was illegal, and that by consequence Elizabeth was a Bastard; therefore by accepting Philip's Proposal, she must needs have been oblig'd to the Pope for her Legitimation, and she must have been forc'd to own that she only held the Crown by his favour. But nothing was farther from her Thoughts; for, on the contrary, she had taken a firm Resolution to re-establish the Reformation in England, and to cause those Laws to be confirm'd, which had been made against the Pope in the Reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. but on the other hand she was in a very unhappy Condition when she came to the Crown. She was actually at war with France, and had no Ally in the World but Philip II. Indeed there was a Peace negotiating at Chateau Cambresis, but it was not yet concluded. Philip might abandon her, and in that Case she would be expos'd to bear the Burden of a very heavy War upon her own shoulders; which could not but break her Measures with respect to Religion, and might expose her Crown to the Danger of being disputed by the King of France, under colour of the Rights of the Queen of Scots his Sister-in-Law. It was necessary therefore to carry it fair to the King of Spain, and not to provoke him by an absolute Denial. In order to extricate her self out of this Difficulty, she made haste to re-establish the Reformation in England, and that was Demonstration enough to Philip that his Courtship would come to nothing. After that time he carry'd it very coldly to Elizabeth; and if he seem'd to do any thing for her in the Treaty of Peace, it was only to save his own Honour.

She determines to re-establish the Reformation.

Her Embassy to Philip II.

This Coldness still increas'd: Elizabeth having sent an Ambassador to him to consult him upon her Transactions with France in regard to Scotland, whither she had already sent Troops; he did not seem to interest himself in the Affair, otherwise than by advising her to stipulate the Restitution of Calais when she made a Peace with France. At the same time he took that opportunity to return the Order of the Garter into the Ambassador's hands. Elizabeth on her part refus'd him a Favour which he desir'd, viz. that the Family of his Ambassador who marry'd in England might be permitted to keep their Estates in that Kingdom, and go and live at Brussels. All these things, one after another, occasion'd so wide a Breach betwixt them, that Elizabeth could not but suspect that Philip was was entered into the Projects of the Duke of Guiſe in favour of the Queen of Scots.

English Exports to the Netherlands prohibited.

THE Trade betwixt England and the Netherlands, which if we may believe Camden, amounted yearly to above twelve Millions of Gold-Ducats, was almoſt entirely ſunk in 1564, by the artifice of Cardinal Granville, who had perſuaded the Governeſs of the Netherlands to prohibit the Importation of Engliſh Cloth; for which reaſon the Engliſh ſettled a Cloth-Staple at Emden in Eaſt-Friezeland. But a new Ambaſſador from Spain arriving in England, found means to reconcile the two Nations: And it was agreed that the Treaty of Commerce called Intercurſus Magnus, made in the time of Maximilian I. ſhould be obſerved on both ſides.

Reſtoration of the Trade.

IN 1568, Philip, I know not upon what occaſion, baniſhed the Ambaſſador of England to a Village near Madrid. The ſame year, as one Hawkins an Engliſh Merchant, was going to trade to America, purſuant to a Treaty concluded between Charles V. and Henry VIII. a Spaniſh Squadron in thoſe parts ſeized his Ships, and took out his Merchandize; for which the Queen could not get ſatisfaction.

Spaniards ſeize our Merchant-Ships.

ANOTHER Accident which happened in 1569, increaſed the miſunderſtanding betwixt Elizabeth and Philip. The Genoeſe Merchants having cauſed a Sum of Money to be put on board a Ship in one of the Harbours of Spain with the King's permiſſion, in order to ſend it to the Netherlands, the Ship which carried the Money was purſued by Pirates, and obliged to put into England: The Spaniſh Ambaſſador having told the Queen that the Money belonged to the King his Maſter, ſhe cauſed it to be taken out and carried by Land to ſome Port that was neareſt to the Low-Countries, from whence there would be leſs danger in the Paſſage. But while this was doing, ſhe was informed that the Money belonged to private Men, and that the Duke of Alva intended to ſeize it for defraying the Expences of the War. This was the reaſon that ſhe ſtopped the Money by way of Loan, and gave Security for the payment of it. The Duke of Alva made a great clamour againſt it, and cauſed the Effects of the Engliſh Merchants to be ſeized. The Queen did the ſame with reſpect to the Flemiſh Merchants, and put a Guard upon the Ambaſſador of Spain, who had the inſolence to ſcatter Libels on this ſubject, which were very injurious to the Queen; but the Guard was taken off from him two days after. She demanded of Philip to puniſh his Ambaſſador, but could not obtain it. On the contrary, Philip cauſed the Effects of the Engliſh in Spain to be ſeized; but the Engliſh revenged themſelves by the Repriſals they made upon the Spaniards; which were carried to ſuch a degree, that the Queen was obliged to ſtop them by a Proclamation, for fear of engaging herſelf in a War with Spain.

Other Broils with Spain.

Q. ELIZ.

IT appeared plainly next year, that Philip intereſted himſelf very much in the Affairs of the Queen of Scots, becauſe his Ambaſſador joined the Ambaſſador of France, in vigorouſly demanding that Queen's Liberty. Soon after, Elizabeth was informed, that Mary thinking herſelf entirely abandon'd by France, on account of the Marriage which was actually treating betwixt Elizabeth and the Duke of Anjou, was quite tack'd about to Spain, and that ſhe laid a ſcheme to marry Don John of Auſtria, natural Brother to Philip II. This convinced Elizabeth that ſhe ought to be upon her guard againſt Spain and the Netherlands.

Philip eſpouſes the Intereſt of Mary Q. of Scots.

IN 1577, the Prince of Orange acquainted her that Don John of Auſtria, who was arrived in the Netherlands, had formed a Project not only to ſubdue thoſe Provinces, but after that to attack England, and to marry the Queen of Scots. This Intelligence had ſuch an effect upon her, that after the States had declared War againſt Don John, ſhe made no ſcruple to lend them 100,000 l. Sterling *, in order to keep the ſaid Prince employed in that Country. Now to palliate this proceeding, ſhe wrote to Philip that ſhe had only lent that Money to the States to ſecure the Low-Countries for him, which were in danger of falling a prey to France; but Philip ſaw thro' this pretence.

The Deſigns of Don John of Auſtria.

Elizabeth lends the States Money to go to war with him.

IN 1580, ſeven hundred Spaniards, under the name of the Pope's Troops, made a Deſcent on Ireland, where they propoſed to fortify themſelves; but were almoſt all of them put to the ſword.

Spaniards Deſcent on Ireland.

NOT long after this, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador complained that Drake, who was juſt come home from his Voyage round the World, had robbed the Subjects of the King his Maſter in the Indies. After he had waited ſome time for ſatisfaction, the Queen cauſed part of the Booty which Drake had brought to be reſtored to him.

Their Complaint againſt Drake.

NOTWITHSTANDING the reaſons which both Philip and Elizabeth had to complain of one another, yet to outward appearance they carried on a fair Correſpondence. Trade, which their Subjects could not well be without, was the reaſon that the Differences betwixt the two Crowns were

* Camden ſpeaks here of a Treaty, by which the Queen engaged to ſend the States a thouſand Horſemen well mounted, and five thouſand Foot, on condition that the Commander or General thereof ſhould be admitted into the Debates of the Council of State, and that no Reſolution ſhould paſs without his Conſent. But Grotius does not ſpeak of this Treaty in his Annals of the Netherlands; and only ſays, that at this Juncture, Elizabeth intereſted her ſelf ſo much in the Affairs of the United-Provinces, that ſhe would not ſuffer the States to take any important Reſolution, without giving her advice of it: Yet in 1585, we find there was a Treaty with the States, wherein there was ſuch a Stipulation as Camden mentions in this. And it will appear by and by from the Fœdera, that even in the Year 1578, there was a Treaty with the States, wherein they bound themſelves to do nothing of Importance with reſpect to War or Peace, without the Conſent of the Queen or her Miniſters.

Fœdera Tom. XV.

were not yet arrived to an entire Rupture. Beſides, Philip found his account more in ſupporting Elizabeth's Enemies underhand, than in attacking her himſelf with open force: therefore he always kept an Ambaſſador at London, who let no opportunity ſlip for doing the Queen a prejudice.

Mendoza the Spaniſh Ambaſſador diſcovered in a Conſpiracy.

Mendoza, who was Ambaſſador in 1584, entered very far into a Conſpiracy which Throckmorton and ſome others had formed to deliver the Queen of Scotland by means of a foreign Army. He was diſcovered by Throckmorton's Confeſſion, and was called before the Council, where he was inform'd of what had been depoſed againſt him.

His bad Defence.

Inſtead of defending himſelf from the charge, he recriminated, complained upon account of the Money which the Queen with-held from the King of Spain, and accuſed the Miniſters of uſing means of all ſorts to foment a Diviſion betwixt the King his Maſter and the Queen.

The Queen ſends him away.

Upon this, he was ordered to depart the Kingdom, and it was very happy for him that he got off ſo cheap. Immediately after this, the Queen ſent [a] Waad to Philip to complain of his Ambaſſador, and to tell the King that ſhe would be glad to receive another in his room; but it was not poſſible for the Envoy to obtain Audience of the King.

Philip denies her Envoy Audience.

This ground of quarrel was accompanied with another much more conſiderable. After the Aſſaſſination of the Prince of Orange, the States of the United Provinces, who were in a very dangerous ſituation, offered the Sovereignty of their Country to Elizabeth.

She refuſes the Sovereignty of the Netherlands offered her by the States.

She refuſed the offer, being very ſenſible that if ſhe accepted it ſhe ſhould engage herſelf in a War of very great expence, which it would not be in her power to moderate when and how ſhe pleaſed. Therefore ſhe choſe rather to make a Treaty with the States, which was every way more agreeable to her political Maxims.

Her Treaty with the States.

By this Treaty ſhe was willing to engage herſelf to furniſh the States with 5000 Foot and 1000 Horſe, and to pay them herſelf during the War, on condition that the Sum ſhe advanced ſhould be repaid to her after the concluſion of the Peace. The States put into her hands for ſecurity the Town of Brill in Holland, together with the Town of Fluſhing and Fort Ramekens in Zealand. It was alſo agreed that the General who commanded the Engliſh Troops, and two other Perſons named by the Queen, ſhould have a Seat in the Council of State; and that no Peace or Truce ſhould be made without mutual conſent.

Her General, and Manifeſto.

Elizabeth made choice of the Earl of Leiceſter to command her Troops in the Netherlands; and at the ſame time, ſhe publiſhed a Manifeſto, wherein among other reaſons for her ſending Succours to the United Provinces, ſhe laid down this, viz. that the Alliance made heretofore with the Houſe of Burgundy was not ſo much between the Sovereigns of two Dominions as between the Dominions themſelves. But being very ſenſible that the King of Spain would not be ſatisfied with ſuch a reaſon, and that he would look upon thoſe Succours as a Declaration of War, ſhe was reſolved to get the ſtart of him. For this end ſhe cauſed a Fleet to be fitted out, and commanded by the Earl of Carliſle, who had under him the famous Sir Francis Drake. This Fleet made great Ravages among the Spaniards in America, at Cape Verde, St. Domingo, Carthagena, Florida, and returned to England with a Booty of 60,000 l. Sterling.

She ſends a Fleet againſt the Spaniards in America.

The Earl of Leiceſter repairing to Holland in 1586, the States made him Captain General, and gave him a Power which was almoſt abſolute. The Queen thought it a piece of mere complaiſance to engage her, whether ſhe would or no, to accept of the Sovereignty which had been offered to her; and complained to the States of this artifice. Nevertheleſs, after ſhe had been informed of their reaſons, ſhe ſuffered the Earl of Leiceſter's Patent to ſtand; but told them very frankly, that ſhe was only engaged to ſupport them according to the terms of the Treaty, or as far as her Affairs would permit her. The fifteenth Volume of the Fœdera goes no farther.

Domeſtick Affairs.

AS I mean by Affairs purely Domeſtick, ſuch as have no relation either to Scotland, or France, or Spain, or the Netherlands, or to the Queen of Scots in particular; I cannot engage my ſelf to give an Abridgment here of the Affairs of this ſort which have no Connexion together, eſpecially ſuch as are altogether foreign to the Matter treated of under the preceding Articles: Such an Abridgment would be the rather unneceſſary, becauſe I find nothing under this Claſs in the Fœdera that is proper to illuſtrate or explain any important Paſſage of Elizabeth's Hiſtory, excepting only the Dates, which are always very uſeful, or rather abſolutely neceſſary. I fancy therefore if we only direct the Reader to the independent Acts of theſe twenty eight Years, he will be able at firſt View to comprehend the Occaſion and Motives of them, without the Trouble of any Explanation. They are,

Article VII.

Affairs of Religion.

As to this head, 'tis sufficient to say that as soon as Elizabeth was upon the Throne, she by means of her Parliament reviv'd the Laws which had been made in the Reign of Edward VI. in favour of the Reformation; and that the English, who were such staunch Papists but a few Months before, became on a sudden zealous Protestants; at least the Government of England became such, tho' probably every one harboured the same Faith in their Hearts that they had before, as was the Practice in other Reigns. It would be very strange indeed that the English should voluntarily and without constraint change their Religion four times in less than 30 Years. But no wonder that the Kings and Queens who had different Sentiments on this Article should induce their Parliaments to change so often, because a great number of Examples, both ancient and modern, make it very manifest, that the Kings of England are sure, as it were, of the Means to have Parliaments at their devotion, provided they will condescend to make a prudent use of them. Henry VIII. by means of a Parliament, established a motley Religion in England, which was neither entirely Roman Catholick, nor entirely Protestant, and yet had something of both. That Prince did what he thought fit in this respect. He added, he retrenched, and as if he had been infallible, he had nothing to do but to declare his Sentiments, and the Parliament was sure to approve and give them the Sanction of Law. By the same means the Governors of Edward VI. caused such Laws of Henry VIII. as they did not like, to be repeal'd, and established the Reformation. Mary in her turn made use of the same Method to abolish the Reformation, and to re-establish Religion as it stood before the Disputes between Henry VIII. and the Court of Rome. Nay, more than this, she got the Parliament to make Laws which gave her a handle to persecute the Protestants with Cruelty. And finally, Elizabeth found the same ease to re-establish the Reformation by the Parliament. Shall it be said therefore, that the English changed from white to black voluntarily in every Reign, just as it pleased their Kings or Queens? No verily; but the Sentiments of the greatest number of the Deputies of the lower House were chang'd into Statutes, which were deem'd conformable to the Sentiments of the Nation; and by that means such as did not approve them were oblig'd to feign that they did. The Parliament is a fine Name; 'tis what they call the Bulwark, and Support of the Liberties of the People. This is very true upon certain Occasions. Yet for all this, one may venture to affirm, that the Power of the Members of the House of Commons is sometimes too great, because they are not obliged either to receive Orders from those they represent, or to give an account of their Administration. This Power being skilfully managed by an artful Prince, may as well turn to the prejudice of the People as to their advantage, of which there are frequent Instances in the History of England. But without departing from my Subject, which way soever we turn, one cannot avoid seeing what I have just now mentioned in some of the four Reigns that I have been treating of, with regard to Religion. The Papists and Protestants had equal reason to complain of the too great Power of the Parliaments in the Reign of Edward VI. The Papists were the only Body that felt the Inconveniencies of it in the Reign of Edward VI. The Protestants had their turn in the Reign of Mary; and at last, in the Reign of Elizabeth, the Papists had reason to wish that the Members of Parliament had a more limited Power. Really, 'tis not very strange to find the House of Commons altering their Sentiments and Maxims, because in every new Parliament there there are new Members, the Majority of whom are commonly in the Court-Intereſt. But what is moſt ſurpriſing, is, to find the upper Houſe, which is not liable to ſuch Alterations in its Members, ſubject to the ſame Alteration in its Maxims. In the four Reigns laſt mentioned we find, in the ſpace of about 30 Years, the ſame Lords, except a very few who died in that Interval, complying with four ſucceſſive Changes in Religion; according to the Pleaſure of the Kings, the Queens, and the Houſe of Commons. I will not venture to gueſs at the reaſon of ſuch groſs Inconſtancy, but 'tis certain that all theſe Alterations did not proceed from new Light.

THE Acts of theſe 28 Years which relate to Religion, being of no great moment, all that needs be ſaid on this Subject is, that when the Roman Catholicks perceived that Elizabeth openly declared for the Reformation, they ſpared no Care, nor Pains, nor Intrigue, nor Expence to favour the Pretenſions of the Queen of Scotland. They well knew, that if they could but place her on the Throne of England, ſhe would find it no harder a Task than Elizabeth did to alter the Religion, becauſe all the Buſineſs would be for her to have a Parliament at her Devotion, which Experience had proved would be very eaſy to obtain. From hence aroſe ſo many Projects for invading England with foreign Forces, either by the way of Scotland, or ſome other part. They who contrived thoſe Schemes, made not the leaſt doubt that the Engliſh Papiſts would join the Foreigners; and the number of the Roman Catholicks at that time in England, could not but be greater than they ſeem'd to be in outward appearance, becauſe thoſe Projects, and the Conſpiracies againſt the Queen's Life were inceſſantly carried on during her whole Reign. The Knowledge of theſe Diſpoſitions made Elizabeth perpetually uneaſy. She had always an eye upon her Roman Catholick Subjects, and left no Stone unturned to obviate their Deſigns, and to render their Union with the Pope, France, Spain, the Netherlands, the Queen of Scots and the Roman Catholicks of that Kingdom, of no effect. From thence proceeded that Severity with which ſhe treated ſome of them who could not live peaceably; but it was a Severity very ſhort of that which Mary ſhewed to the Reformed. Elizabeth put no Roman Catholick to death upon the ſcore of Religion; and if any were executed in her Reign, it was only for having conſpired againſt the Queen, or for having attempted to ſubvert the Government, and to aboliſh the Religion eſtabliſhed in the Kingdom. If the Queen of Scots had not ran headlong, as it were, into Plots of this kind, which under pretence of ſetting her at liberty were only calculated to place her on the Throne of England, ſhe would never have ſuffered that Death which has been honoured with the Name of Martyrdom. In thoſe Projects which ſhe was drawn into by her evil Counſellors, there were two things complicated together, which neither ſhe nor her Friends ever ſeparated; for their conſtant aim was to dethrone Elizabeth, and to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion in England. Tho' this appears ſo evidently from the Hiſtory of this Reign, yet the greateſt number of the Roman Catholicks have been pleaſed to give no Attention to the Firſt of theſe, to paſs lightly over the Second, and to impute the Tragical Death of Mary to no other Cauſe than the Hatred which the Queen and the Engliſh bore to her Religion. It were to be wiſh'd that Elizabeth had treated the Anabaptiſts, who certainly did not conſpire againſt her Life, or againſt the Government, with the ſame Moderation as ſhe treated the Roman Catholicks, and that ſhe had not been ſo ſevere as to give up ſome of them to the Flames.

Q. ELIZ.

The Efforts of the Papiſts to place Mary Queen of Scots on the Throne of England.

Queen Elizabeth more ſevere to the Anabaptiſts than the Papiſts.

I ſhall not inſiſt longer on the Affairs of Religion, becauſe the principal Occurrences of this Reign under that Claſs are manifeſtly but Dependencies on thoſe that relate to the Queen of Scots, and becauſe moſt of the others, to which the Acts of this Tome relate, are of no Importance, or need not Explanation. Such, for inſtance, are the Changes which were made in the Body of the Clergy, by the Deprivation of ſeveral Biſhops, and of many other beneficed Clergymen, whoſe Places were filled up by the Reformed; a very great number of Preſentations to Benefices; Conges d'Eſlire for Biſhopricks; Aſſents of the Queen to Elections; Reſtitutions of Temporalities; Benefices granted in Commendam, and ſo many other things of this nature, that it ſeems Mr. Rymer intended to make it the principal Subject of this XVth Tome. Such ſort of Inſtruments may be of uſe in an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, or in Annals: But I am of opinion, that nothing more is neceſſary here than barely to hint at Affairs of that kind, without undertaking to ſet down all the particular Acts.

Elizabeth's Vigilance to defeat their Contrivances.

WE proceed now to the XVIth Tome of the Fœdera.

MR. Rymer, who had prepared Materials for bringing down the Collection of the publick Acts, to the end of the Reign of King James I. being taken away by death, Mr. Robert Sanderſon undertook to continue this Work according to the Memoirs left by Mr. Rymer *. In this XVIth Tome he has given the reſt of the Acts of Elizabeth's Reign, from the 2d of November 1586,

* This Gentleman was Aſſiſtant to Mr. Rymer in compiling the former Volumes of the Fœdera, and therefore upon that account, as well as for his Learning and Judgment, the better qualified to continue them. He was made Uſher of the Rolls in his late Majeſty's Reign, to whom he inſcribed this Volume.

Fœdera Tom. XVI. 1586, to the end of January 1603; and those of James I's Reign, from the 28th of March the ſame Year, to the 4th of November 1616. So that this Tome contains the Acts of 30 Years. I ſhall confine my ſelf at preſent to what relates to the Reign of Elizabeth.

Q. Eliz

THIS Tome is much better ſtor'd than the laſt with ſuch Pieces as are neceſſary for explaining the Hiſtory of England. Among them, there are ſome which ſo depend upon one another, and which ſtand in ſuch a Relation to certain particular Circumſtances of Affairs, that 'tis ſcarce poſſible to underſtand them, or at leaſt to apply them to any purpoſe without bearing in mind the principal Events to which they refer. As to theſe, I ſhall follow my uſual Method, by diſtributing them into ſeveral particular Articles, under each of which I will give an Abſtract of the Hiſtory on which thoſe Acts are founded. There are others which don't ſtand in need of any Explanation, either becauſe they are of little importance, or becauſe they were not attended with any material Conſequences. Out of theſe I ſhall ſelect ſome which I ſhall only point to in the cloſe of this Extract. The Acts which require ſeparate Articles are ſuch as relate, 1. To Elizabeth's Affairs with Spain. 2. To her Affairs with France. 3. To her Affairs with the United Provinces of the Netherlands. 4. To her Affairs with Scotland. 5. To her Affairs with the Hanſe Towns, or the Commerce of the Engliſh; and 6. To Affairs Domeſtick.

ARTICLE I.

Elizabeth's Affairs with Spain from 1587, to 1603.

IF I had regard only to the Acts of this XVIth Tome which relate directly to Spain, I might be excus'd from making a ſeparate Article of them, becauſe they are very few. But as in the firſt part of this Reign, the Quarrel betwixt Elizabeth and Mary was the grand Affair, tho' we have no Acts in the Fœdera upon that Subject; ſo Elizabeth's Tranſactions with Philip II. are the chief Subject of this ſecond Part, and the Foundation of all the reſt.

Philip was reſolv'd to dethrone Elizabeth if it lay in his power; Elizabeth made no doubt of it, and 'twas to defend her ſelf from his open and ſecret Attacks, that ſhe was continually attentive to what paſs'd in Scotland, in France, in the Netherlands, and in her own Kingdom. 'Tis neceſſary therefore juſt to ſhew what were the King of Spain's Pretenſions, and the Efforts he made to enforce them.

The Queen of Scots makes Philip of Spain her Heir to the Crown of England.

THE Queen of Scots, juſt before ſhe died, had made a Will, whereby ſhe yielded her Rights to the Crown of England to Philip II. in caſe that the King of Scotland her Son did not embrace the Roman Catholick Religion. This Queen no ſooner thought her ſelf entirely abandon'd by France, but ſhe was perſuaded to make over her Rights to the King of Spain; and when this very thing was charg'd upon her at her Trial, ſhe did not poſitively deny it. This alſo ſhe put in execution by this Will, which was grounded upon the Maxim, that a Prince or Princeſs who are Hereticks, cannot lawfully wear the Crown. By this Maxim, which it ſeems Mary admitted in its utmoſt force, Elizabeth was to be depriv'd of the Crown of England, and James VI. excluded from the Succeſſion. This was a Point that was hardly diſputed by the greateſt part of the Roman Catholicks, as was fully made appear in France not long after, by the Efforts uſed to deprive Henry IV. of his juſt Rights, upon this ſole Foundation. As to the Choice which Mary made of the King of Spain to transfer her Right to him in caſe that the King of Scotland refus'd to be converted, it was founded on Philip's being deſcended equally from the two Daughters of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, the 3d Son of Edward III. one of which Daughters was marry'd to a King of Portugal, and the other to a King of Caſtile. On the Suppoſition therefore that Elizabeth could not legally fill the Throne of England, as well on account of the Illegitimacy of her Birth, as on the account of her Religion, and that the Will of Henry VIII. was null and void; it follow'd neceſſarily that the Crown of England was devolv'd to Mary Queen of Scots, as I ſaid before. But as ſhe could not enjoy her Right, becauſe ſhe was at the point of Death, ſhe thought ſhe might and ought to transfer it to Philip II. who was the firſt in Rank of all the Roman Catholick Princes that could lay claim to the Succeſſion of the Houſe of Lancaſter. This Right would have been indiſputable for the King of Scotland, Mary's Son, if he had not been a Heretick. But this ſingle Conſideration oblig'd Mary to poſtpone the Rights of Nature to the Intereſts and Advantages of the Roman Catholick Religion. And even tho' Mary had not made this Will, as ſome there are who queſtion it; the Pretenſions of Philip II. would have been every whit as legal, by the Admiſſion of this Principle, that a Heretick is not worthy to wear the Crown.

Philip's Relation to the Crown.

BE this as it will, Philip II. had ſo ſtrong an Opinion of this Right, that he thought himſelf thereby authoriz'd to make a vigorous Effort to put himſelf in poſſeſſion of the Throne of England. There could not have been a more favourable Conjuncture for him: He had nothing to fear from France, that Nation being embroil'd in a Civil War, and the ſtrongeſt Party attach'd to his Intereſts. The Emperor who was at peace with the Turks, was in a Condition to curb the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, in caſe they ſhould offer to give England any aſſiſtance. Laſtly, Philip had all the reaſon in the World to depend on the King of Scotland, who might well be expected to favour his Undertaking, inſtead of giving Aſſiſtance to a Queen who had lately done him ſo mortal an Injury, by cauſing his Mother to be put to death by the hands of a Hangman; and this was what was inculcated to him by many Scotſmen. On the other hand, the Pope was fully reſolv'd to contribute every thing in his power to the Succeſs of his Deſigns. He not only approved them, and gave them his Bleſſing, but he even publiſhed a Bull afterwards, which was poſted up in London, whereby he releas'd the Engliſh from the Oath of Allegiance which they had taken to the Queen, and conſign'd England to the firſt Poſſeſſor. This firſt Poſſeſſor could be no other than the King of Spain, who made prodigious Preparations in all the Ports of Spain and Portugal, in order to put himſelf in a condition to attack England in ſuch a manner, that there ſhould be no neceſſity for invading it a ſecond time. He cover'd theſe Preparations with various Pretences, for fear it ſhould be known that they were deſign'd againſt England. But Elizabeth, who had good Spies [a], had undoubted Information that ſhe was the only Perſon againſt whom this great Armament was intended. She reſolv'd therefore not to loſe one moment for preventing the Danger with which ſhe was threatened. Therefore without being dallied with vain Negotiations, ſhe caus'd a ſtrong Fleet to be fitted out, of which ſhe gave the Command to Sir Francis Drake, in order to go and burn, or ſink the Ships that were preparing in the Ports of Spain. At the ſame time ſhe ſent another Fleet under the Command of — Cavendiſh, to make War upon the Spaniards in America.

The Queen ſends Fleets againſt the Spaniards in Europe and America.

Drake ſail'd directly to the Port of Gibraltar [b], where were the greateſt Stores of Ammunition and Proviſions. He there burnt above 100 Ships, which were all laden, beſides a great Galleon called the Raguſa, which had a very rich Cargo. After this Expedition he put to Sea again, enter'd the Tagus, and burnt all the Ships he found there. From thence he ſailed to the Azores Iſlands, where he took a Carrack call'd the St. Philip, which was return'd with a very rich Lading from the Eaſt-Indies. The loſs which Philip ſuffer'd upon this occaſion, put him under a neceſſity of deferring the Expedition againſt England till next Year [c]. While Drake was acting in Europe, Cavendiſh ſail'd towards the Streights of Magellan, thro' which he enter'd into the South-Sea, and plunder'd the Coaſts of Chili and Peru, from whence he carried off a great Booty.

NOTWITHSTANDING all this, Philip did not deſiſt from purſuing his Project: He continued his Armament with more heat even than he began it, being reſolv'd to make a Conqueſt of England, whatever it coſt him. While he was making his Preparations at an incredible Expence, he endeavoured to amuſe Elizabeth, and to make her believe that he had no other Deſign but to live at Peace. 'Twas with this View that he cauſed a Treaty to be propos'd to the States of the United Provinces, of which he willingly conſented that Elizabeth ſhould be Mediator. The Snare was too groſs for Elizabeth to be caught by it; yet ſhe pretended not to perceive it, and accepted the Mediation. For this purpoſe ſhe ſent Plenipotentiaries into France; and becauſe it was for her advantage to have the Negotiation continued, her Ambaſſadors gave very plain Intimation that ſhe would compel the States to accept of what ſhe thought reaſonable, and that ſhe would make very large Conceſſions with regard to Religion. But all this was only to gain time, and this too was the ſole View of the King of Spain; for all that while he haſtened his Preparations as much as poſſible. The Queen on her part left no Stone unturned to put herſelf in a State of Defence. Conſequently the Negotiation was broke off, as it were, before it began, three Months having been waſted in ſettling the Place of Congreſs: and it was now high time to leave off diſſembling, becauſe the

[a] Biſhop Burnet obſerves, that Walſingham's chief Spies were Prieſts; and that he always uſed to ſay, an active but vicious Prieſt was the beſt Spy in the World.

[b] Mr. Rapin ſeems to have been miſtaken both here, and in his larger Hiſtory of England, Vol. VI. for Camden, Sir William Monſon in his Naval Tracts, Echard, and all the Engliſh Hiſtorians ſince their Time, ſay, that this Execution was done by Sir Francis Drake (not at Gibraltar but) at Cadiz.

[c] Biſhop Burnet in the Hiſtory of his Time, Vol. I. p. 313. gives an account how this Expedition was delay'd; which, if true, is certainly one of the moſt curious Paſſages in all our Engliſh Hiſtory. He had it from two Sons of the famous Boyle Earl of Cork, who had then a great ſhare in the Affairs of Ireland; and the Biſhop is of opinion, that it was thought too great a Myſtery of State to be communicated to Camden, or to be by him publiſhed, when the Inſtructions were put into his hands for writing the Hiſtory of this Reign. The Story in ſhort is this: When it ſeem'd impoſſible to divert the preſent execution of ſo great a Deſign, and there was no Strength ready to reſiſt it, a Merchant of London effected it by this means. Being very well acquainted with the Revenue and Expence of Spain, and all that they could raiſe, and knowing that their Funds were ſo ſwallowed up, that it was impoſſible for them to victual and fit out their Fleet, but by their Credit in the Bank of Genoa; he undertook to write to all the Places of Trade, and to get ſuch Remittances made on that Bank, that he might have ſo much of the Money in his own hands, that there ſhould be none current there equal to the great occaſion of victualling the Spaniſh Fleet. He reckoned the keeping of ſuch a Treaſure dead in his hands till the Seaſon of victualling was over, would be a loſs of 40,000 l. He managed the Matter with ſuch Secrecy and Succeſs, that the Fleet could not be ſet out that Year; at ſo ſmall a Price, and with ſo skilful a Management, ſays the Biſhop, was the Nation ſaved at that time.

the Spaniſh Fleet was juſt ready to ſail for invading England.

Miſcarriage of the Invincible Armada.

THE Succeſs of this Fleet, which was before-hand call'd by the Name of the Invincible Armada, is ſo well known, that to give the Particulars of it here, would be Loſs of Time. 'Tis ſufficient to ſay in a word, that the Fleet being enter'd the Channel, ſuffer'd very great Damage there from the Engliſh, who took and deſtroy'd ſeveral Ships; and that at laſt it was oblig'd to make the Tour of Scotland in order to return to Spain *.

IN 1589, Elizabeth caus'd a Fleet to be fitted out, which after being join'd by the Dutch, conſiſted of 84 Ships of all ſorts, of which Drake was Admiral, and Sir John Norris had the Command of the Land-Forces on board. They carry'd with them Don Antonio, who ſtyl'd himſelf King of Portugal, and the Project was to place him on the Throne of that Kingdom. The King of Morocco had promis'd a Supply of Men and Money to Don Antonio, who had ſent him one of his Sons as a Security; but he was not ſo good as his word, which was partly the reaſon that the Enterprize miſcarry'd. Norris having put his Troops aſhore, march'd as far as the Gates of Lisbon without Oppoſition; but for want of Artillery and Ammunition he was oblig'd to retire Expedition for making Don Antonio King of Portugal.

* Since the Printing of the firſt Edition of Acta Regia, the Tranſlator has met with a curious Authentick Piece, printed for Richard Field at London in 1588, which contains many Particulars relating to this Expedition that are not to be found elſewhere.

'Tis intitled "A Copy of a Letter ſent out of England to Don Bernardin Mendoza, Ambaſſador in France, for "the King of Spain, declaring the State of England, contrary to the Opinion of Don Bernardin, and of all his Par- "tizans Spaniards and others; of which Letter, Copies were found in the Chamber of one Richard Leigh a Semi- "nary Prieſt, who was executed for High Treaſon, committed in the time that the Spaniſh Armada was on the "Seas.

"Whereunto are added, certain Advertiſements concerning the Loſſes and Diſtreſſes which happen'd to the Spaniſh "Navy, as well in Fight with the Engliſh Navy in the narrow Seas of England, as alſo by Tempeſts and contrary "Winds upon the Weſt and North Coaſts of Ireland, in their return from the Northern Iſles beyond Scotland."

The Author ſays, that in the beginning of the Year 1588, upon the firſt Rumor of the readineſs of the Spaniſh Armada at Lisbon, the Queen's Navy was divided into three Squadrons, the greateſt under the charge of Charles Lord Howard High Admiral of England; another under Henry Seymour, 2d Son to the Duke of Somerſet, who was Protector in King Edward's time; which two Companies continued for a time in the narrow Seas betwixt England and Flanders, under the charge of the ſaid High Admiral, to guard againſt the Motions of the Duke of Parma; and the third Squadron was arm'd in the Weſt-part of England towards Spain, under the Conduct of Sir Francis Drake.

When it was known that the Armada was juſt ready to come out of Lisbon, the Lord Admiral was commanded to ſail with the greateſt Ships to the Weſt of England to join Drake, whom he made Vice-Admiral, and to continue in the Channel to ſtop the Landing of the Armada. And with the Lord Admiral went the Lord Thomas Howard, 2d Son to the Duke of Norfolk, and Lord Sheffield Son to the Admiral's Siſter. At the ſame time the Lord Henry Seymour was left with a good number of Ships in the narrow Seas, on the Coaſt of Flanders, to attend on the Duke of Parma.

When the Armada came upon the Coaſt of England, the Lord Admiral and Drake with only 50 Ships out of Plymouth Haven, attack'd the whole Armada, conſiſting of 160 Ships; which after being cannonaded one whole day, fled; and when the Engliſh Navy was increas'd to 100 great and ſmall, they renew'd the Fight, and chas'd the Spaniards for 9 days together, in which they deſtroy'd, ſunk, and took ſeveral of the biggeſt Ships without the Loſs of one Engliſh Ship, Boat, or Maſt; which made the Spaniſh Priſoners, who were taken, ſay, that in all the Engagments Chriſt ſhew'd himſelf a Lutheran.

Beſides the Army encamp'd (to oppoſe the Spaniards Landing) at Tilbury in Eſſex, which was commanded by the Earl of Leiceſter, and which was honour'd, and not a little animated, by the Preſence of the Queen, who review'd it, having the Sword born before her by the Earl of Ormond; there was another Army of 40,000 Foot and 6000 Horſe under the Charge of the Lord Hunſdon, Lord Chamberlain, rais'd from the Inland Parts of the Realm without diſarming the maritime Counties, to be conſtantly about the Queen's Perſon.

The firſt Nobleman that came in to her Aſſiſtance, was the Lord Viſcount Mountague, who, tho' very ſickly and advanc'd in Years, was reſolv'd to defend his Queen and Country againſt all Invaders at the hazard of his Life, his Children, his Lands and Goods; and therefore he preſented himſelf before the Queen with a Band of near 200 Horſe, led by his own Sons, and with them a young Child the eldeſt Son of his Son and Heir.

The other Noblemen that came to Town with their Bands, amounting to ſeveral thouſand Horſe and Foot, were the Earl of Lincoln, Lord Windſor, the Lord Chancellor Hatton, the Earl of Warwick, the Lord Treaſurer Burghley, the Lord Compton, the Earl of Leiceſter, the Lord Rich, Sir Walter Mildmay, Sir Henry Cromwell, Sir John Pointz, and the Earl of Eſſex Maſter of the Horſe to the Queen, the Earl of Worceſter, the Earl of Hertford, Lord Audley, Lord Morley, Lord Dacres, Lord Lumley, Lord Mountjoy, Lord Stourton, Lord Darcy, Lord Sandes, Lord Mordaunt.

Thoſe who rais'd great Bodies in the remoter Counties were the Marquiſs of Wincheſter, Lord Lieutenant of Hampſhire, the Earl of Suſſex Governour of Portſmouth and Lord Lieutenant of Dorſet, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Earl Marſhal of England, and Lord Lieutenant of many Counties, with his Son the Lord Talbot; the Earl of Derby and his Son the Lord Strange, Lord Lieutenant of Lancaſhire and Cheſhire; the Earl of Bath, Lord Lieutenant of Devonſhire, the Earl of Pembroke Lord Lieutenant of Somerſet and Wilts, and Lord Preſident of all Wales, and the Earls of Northumberland and Cumberland. The two latter went on board the Queen's Navy, and ſerv'd in the Attack of the Armada before Calais; as did alſo Mr. Henry Brooke Son and Heir to the Lord Cobham, Sir Thomas Cecil Son and Heir to the Lord Treaſurer, Sir Will Hatton Heir to the Lord Chancellor, Sir Horatio Palavicino a Knight of Genoa, Mr. Robert Cary Son to the Lord Hunſdon, Sir Charles Blunt Brother to Lord Mountjoy, Sir Thomas Gerard and Mr. William Hervey, the Earl of Oxford, Mr. Robert Cecil 2d Son to the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Dudley, Sir Walter Raleigh a Gentleman of the Queen's Privy Chamber, William Cecil the Heir of Sir Thomas Cecil, Mr. Edward Darcy, Mr. Arthur Gorge. Beſides theſe, the Earl of Huntington Lieutenant-General in the North rais'd 40,000 Foot and near 10,000 Horſe; who were join'd by other Forces rais'd by Lord Scroop, Lord Darcy and Lord Ewers. Other Lords who rais'd Forces at their own Charge, were the Earl of Kent Lieutenant of Bedfordſhire, the Lord Hunſdon Lord Chamberlain and Lieutenant of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Lord Cobham Lieutenant of Kent, the Lord Gray of Buckinghamſhire, the Lord North of Cambridgeſhire, Lord Chandos of Glouceſterſhire, Lord St. John of Huntingtonſhire, Lord Buckhurſt of Suſſex.

retire, and to go on board Drake's Fleet again, which ſtaid at the Mouth of the Tagus, and took Caſcais. While the Fleet was in the Tagus, they took ſixty Ships laden with Corn, belonging to the Hanſe Towns. This Affair was attended with Conſequences, of which I ſhall treat hereafter. The Engliſh Fleet in its Return took and burnt Vigo.

IN 1591, the Queen ſent ſix Men of War to the Azores Iſlands, under Command of the Lord Howard, there to wait for the Spaniſh Fleet, which was returning from the Indies. But the Engliſh Admiral was himſelf ſurpriz'd by a numerous Fleet of the Enemy, which he had much ado to eſcape from, with the loſs of one of his Ships, that was not ſo nimble as the reſt.

Conſpiracy againſt the Queen's Life by the Spaniards in the Netherlands.

THE Duke of Parma, Governour of the Netherlands, dying in 1593, the Count de Fuentes and Don Diego d'Ibarra took care of the Affairs of that Country, till the Arrival of a new Governour. During their Adminiſtration, they form'd the Project to ſend a Spaniſh Army into Scotland, and at the ſame time to diſpatch Elizabeth either by Dagger or Poiſon; for which purpoſe they had bribed Lopez a Jew, one of the Queen's Phyſicians, an Iriſh Fencing-Maſter, and ſome other Ruffians. Their Conſpiracy having been defeated, the Queen complain'd of it to the Archduke Erneſt, who was lately appointed Governour of the Netherlands; but ſhe could not obtain any ſatisfaction. On the contrary, ſome of the Accomplices who made their Eſcape, were well receiv'd at Bruſſels and Madrid.

IN 1594, all poſſible Endeavours were us'd to engage the King of Scotland to join the King of Spain, in order to dethrone Elizabeth; and he ſeem'd for ſome time to give hopes that he would enter into the Deſign. But at laſt being made more ſenſible of his true Intereſt, he turn'd a deaf Ear to all thoſe Temptations, and appear'd to be ſtrongly attach'd to the Queen's Cauſe. Upon the Miſcarriage of this Deſign, Philip took it into his head to procure the Crown of England for the Infanta Iſabella his Daughter, by transferring all his Rights to her. For this purpoſe he caus'd a Genealogy to be publiſh'd, whereby it manifeſtly appeared that he was deſcended from the two Daughters of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter. Notwithſtanding the Diſaſter which had attended his invincible Armada, he was in hopes of better ſucceſs this time, by avoiding certain Miſtakes which had render'd his former Expedition abortive. The Preparations which were making in Spain, occaſion'd a Rebellion in Ireland by the Earl of Tyrone, to whom Philip had promis'd Aſſiſtance. This Rebellion made the Queen very uneaſy, becauſe from that time to the day of her death, ſhe was always oblig'd to maintain a good Body of Troops in Ireland. Q. ELIZ.

Tyrone's Rebellion.

IN the Year 1595, the Spaniards obtain'd great Advantages over Henry IV. who had declar'd War againſt them; and at the ſame time Philip continued his Preparations with Zeal for attacking England. But Elizabeth prevented him once more, by ſending to the Coaſt of Spain, (in 1596) a numerous Fleet, to which the Dutch furniſh'd 22 Ships. The Lord Howard was Admiral of it, and the Earl of Eſſex commanded the 7000 Men that were put on board it. This Fleet arriv'd at Cadiz perfectly unexpected, and burnt in the Harbour ſeveral Ships laden, and took two Galleons with above 100 braſs Guns. Beſides thoſe two Galleons which were richly laden, the King of Spain loſt upon that occaſion thirteen Men of War, eleven Ships outward bound for the Indies, and thirteen others; not reckoning the Stores which were amaſs'd there, to be employ'd againſt England. Moreover, the Earl of Eſſex having landed his Troops, took Cadiz; but it was not thought convenient to keep it, and the Fleet return'd for England with a very great Booty. The loſs which the King of Spain ſuſtain'd upon this occaſion, was eſtimated at twenty Millions of Ducats.

Another Expedition of the Engliſh Fleet.

THIS did not hinder Philip from perſiſting in his Deſign to conquer England. As the Engliſh Fleet had done him damage but in one of thoſe Places only where he made his Preparations, he caus'd all the reſt to rendezvous at Liſbon, and diſpatch'd his Fleet from that Harbour at the time that Elizabeth leaſt of all expected to be attack'd, and had nothing in readineſs for her Defence. But by a good Providence both for the Queen and her Kingdom, a violent Storm overtook the Spaniſh Fleet when it was under ſail, and fruſtrated the Expedition.

Another Expedition of the Spaniards fruſtrated by a Storm.

SO many Misfortunes one upon the neck of another, put Philip at laſt out of a Capacity of executing his vaſt Deſigns. This Prince died in 1598, after having ſign'd the Peace of Vervins with France. Philip III. his Son, who ſucceeded him, did not think fit to purſue the Project of the King his Father for the Conqueſt of England; only in 1601, he ſent Succours to the Earl of Tyrone, in order to raiſe Troubles in Ireland againſt Elizabeth. Don John d' Aquila who commanded thoſe Succours, arriving at the Port of Kinſale, preſently took the Town of that Name, but was immediately beſieg'd in it by the Viceroy of Ireland. The Earl of Tyrone attempted to relieve the Place, and loſt a Battle; after which the Spaniards capitulated, and return'd to their own Country.

Elizabeth's Affairs with France.

Parties in France.

In 1587, the Year that Elizabeth caus'd Sentence of Death to paſs upon the Queen of Scotland, France was divided into two Parties, viz. that of King Henry III. and that of the League. The latter had the Duke of Guiſe indeed for their Chief, and was ſtrongly ſupported by the King of Spain. The Duke was become ſo powerful, that the King had every thing to fear from his Ambition. On the one hand, the Duke could not attain to the end he propos'd to himſelf of uſurping the Crown of France, but by the Death or Depoſition of the King; and on the other hand, it was ſcarce poſſible for the King to deliver himſelf from the danger he was in, but by reſtraining the exorbitant Power of the Duke of Guiſe, which was no eaſy thing to do. Therefore there were two very oppoſite Intereſts in France, tho' the two Leaders conceal'd their Deſigns with all the Artifice they could. Theſe two contrary Intereſts appear'd manifeſtly, when the Queen of Scots was condemn'd to die in England. There being an Interval of ſome Months between the Sentence and the Execution, Henry III. had time to ſend the Preſident Bellievre to ſollicit Elizabeth in Mary's favour. The Intereſt of Religion, that of Sovereigns in general, Mary's Relation as Siſter-in-Law to the King, and her being Queen Dowager of France, ſeem'd to demand this Office from Henry III. But then this ſame Queen was Couſin-German to the Duke of Guiſe; and if ſhe ſurviv'd Elizabeth, whoſe Death her Friends continually aim'd at, ſhe might aſcend the Throne of England; and in that caſe the Duke of Guiſe's Party would be ſo ſtrengthen'd, that it would be impoſſible for the King to ſtand againſt him. Conſequently the King's private Intereſt demanded that the ſaid Queen of Scots ſhould be cut off. And Du Maurier tells us in the Preface to his Memoirs, that he had heard his Father ſay, that the Preſident de Bellievre, tho' ſent in appearance to ſollicit favour for Mary, had a ſecret order to haſten her Execution as much as poſſible[b]. On the other hand, Lord Aubeſpine, who was Ambaſſador in ordinary from France at London, and who was a Creature of the Duke of Guiſe, did all that Man could do to prevent the Execution. It even appeared that he had hir'd a couple of Aſſaſſins to kill Elizabeth, and that one of them diſcovered it. Camden, from whom we have this Circumſtance, adds, that the Ambaſſador being ſummoned to appear before the Council, made a very bad defence, and that he only intrench'd himſelf in the Privileges of Ambaſſadors, who were not obliged to give an account of their Actions to any but their own Maſters. I am tempted to think, that as Elizabeth made uſe of all the means poſſible at that time to convince the People of the neceſſity of putting Mary out of her way, theſe two Men were detach'd to the Ambaſſador to enſnare him, and conſequently to animate the People from a conſideration of the Queen's being perpetually in danger. But I own this is mere Conjecture. I will only obſerve, that the French Tranſlator of Camden's Annals, has thought fit in his Tranſlation to ſuppreſs every Tittle of what I have mentioned touching l'Aubeſpine.

Q. Eliz.

A Conſpiracy to murder Elizabeth.

As Elizabeth did not begin to intereſt herſelf very much in the Affairs of France till the Year 1591, I ſhall but juſt mention what paſs'd in that Kingdom in the mean time; which gave occaſion to the Queen to ſend conſiderable Succours to the Party, which the League ſought to oppreſs.

Henry IIId's Interceſſion for the Queen of Scots.

The Duke of Guiſe growing every day more potent, enter'd Paris in the Month of May 1588, and compell'd the King to leave the City, after having ſeen the People in a Fury, hanging Chains a-croſs the Streets, and puſhing the Barricadoes as far as the Gates of the Louvre. He was in ſo weak a Condition to puniſh this Inſolence, that in order to ſupport himſelf, he was oblig'd to accommodate matters with the League, or rather with the Duke of Guiſe, and to put ſeveral Places into his hands. But in the Month of December following, having entic'd the Duke of Guiſe, and his Brother the Cardinal

[a] At Otelands. [b] This was not kept ſo ſecret, but that after the Death of the Duke of Guiſe, Henry was accus'd by the Leaguers of having contributed to the Queen of Scotland's Death.

FOEDERA Tom. XV

Cardinal to Blois, where he had assembled the States, he caus'd them to be assassinated on the Spot.

THIS Action lost him all the Affection of his Roman Catholick Subjects, most of whom were engag'd in the League; so that he was oblig'd to make Levies in Swisserland, and to call to his assistance the King of Navarre, his presumptive Heir, who was at the Head of the Hugonots*. With these Forces he undertook to block up Paris, and he had like to have made himself Master of it; when he was assassinated at St. Cloud, where he quarter'd, by James Clement a Jacobin Friar.

Henry III. of France assassinated.

AFTER the Death of Henry III. the last Prince of the House of Valois, Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre assum'd the Title of King of France, by the Name of Henry IV. But as he was a Hugonot, the Leaguers refus'd to own him. The very Roman Catholicks who had serv'd the late King against the League, wou'd not engage to obey him, but on condition that he should put himself under Instruction; that is to say, in the sense they put on the Term, that he should embrace the Roman Catholick Religion. Nevertheless he evaded his pretended Conversion for some Years, on pretence that he did not refuse to be instructed, but that such Instruction did not necessarily import an Alteration of Religion.

His Successor Henry IV.

IN 1590, this Prince found himself embaras'd to the last degree. He was without Allies, and without Cash. The League Party which was against him, was very powerful, and supported by the King of Spain. The Hugonots who were devoted to him were weak; and the Roman Catholicks that serv'd him threaten'd to abandon him, if he did not perform his Promise in the sense which they put on it. Nevertheless he struggled against the Difficulties, and gave a great deal of trouble to the Duke of Mayenne, Brother to the late Duke of Guise, who was at the head of the League. He defeated him at the Battle of Ivry, and immediately went and block'd up Paris; but the Duke of Parma arriving with an Army from the Netherlands, compell'd him to retire. Not long after the Duke of Mercœur, of the Lorrain Family, made himself Master of a great part of Bretagne by the Assistance of the Spaniards, who at the same time fortify'd themselves in Hennebond and Blavet, two Sea-port Towns of that Province.

Duke of Mercœur seizes Bretagne.

TILL the Year 1591, Elizabeth was a very quiet Spectator of the Troubles in France, because she thought them rather of advantage to her than otherwise. But when she saw the Spaniards had cast Anchor in Bretagne, a Province so near to England, that they might easily attack her from thence; and when she was inform'd that Philip's Design was to place his Daughter the Infanta Isabella upon the Throne of France, on pretence that she was Grandaughter to Henry II. she thought it her Interest to support Henry IV. for fear he should be unable to stand his Ground against Enemies so numerous and so powerful. Henry IV. on his part could not stand it without foreign Assistance, and this Assistance could only come to him from the Protestants of Germany, or of England. But how much soever Elizabeth and the German Princes were concern'd to hinder France from falling into the Hands of the House of Austria, which was already but too powerful, there were such Difficulties to reconcile the several Interests, as it was not easy to surmount. The Germans were willing to furnish France with Troops, but there was an absolute necessity for the King's Engagement to pay them; and he had no Money, because the League being dispers'd over all the Kingdom, he could only raise Taxes in such of the Provinces as were affected to him. As to Elizabeth, he might hope indeed that she would furnish him with Troops, and that she would undertake to pay them, in expectation of being reimburs'd what she advanc'd, when he came to be Master of the Kingdom; but on the other hand, she propos'd to reap a present Advantage from the Succours which she was inclin'd to furnish him with, and that those Succours should serve to drive out the Leaguers and the Spaniards from the Maritime Provinces next to England, as Bretagne, Normandy, and Picardy. But that was not for the King's Interest, whose View was to expel his Enemies from the Heart of the Kingdom, and to push them towards the Frontiers. These Difficulties were enough to have defeated the Hopes that he might have expected from those foreign Succours, if he had been so obstinate as to dispute those Points with the Powers that offer'd him Troops. But considering the unhappy State of his Affairs, he accepted of the Succours which the Elector of Brandendurgh and the Count Palatine offer'd him; and he propos'd to engage for the Pay of those Troops, tho' he was not sure where he should have the Money to fulfil his Engagement. He did the very same thing with Elizabeth. He made a Treaty with her, whereby she engag'd to furnish him with 3000 Men, to prevent the Spaniards from making any farther Progress in Bretagne and Picardy, and to pay those Troops, on condition of being repay'd the Money she advanc'd in a Year's time. The 3000 English arriv'd in France not long after, part of them in Bretagne under the Command of Norris,

Q. ELIZ.

Elizabeth's Treaty to support Henry V.

* Mr. Rapin has a Remark on this Passage, which is so just, as well as pertinent, that we cannot omit it, viz. That this Prince, who had taken a solemn Oath to extirpate the Hugonots, and as solemnly declar'd that he would never keep his word with them if ever he was oblig'd in necessity to make any Promise to them, scarce found any other Subjects now but these in whom he cou'd confide.

Norris, and the reſt in Picardy under the Command of Roger Williams.

These 3000 Men, and 11000 more which the Prince of Anhalt brought from Germany, not ſufficing to give the King the Superiority he wiſh'd for, he had recourſe again to Elizabeth; and in order to obtain freſh Succours with the more eaſe, he gave her to underſtand, that if ſhe would but ſend him 4000 Men more, he ſhould be in a condition to beſiege Roan, and poſitively promiſed to lay aſide every other Affair for the ſake of that Siege. The Queen's great deſire to ſee Roan out of the Power of that League, put her upon making a new Treaty with Henry, whereby ſhe engaged to ſend him another Supply of 4000 Men to be employed in the Siege of Roan, and to pay them for two Months, in hopes that would be time enough to take the City. She put the Earl of Eſſex at the head of this freſh Supply, which was to be join'd by the Troops under Williams. But the Earl arriving in France, found that the Siege of Roan was not ſo much as thought of, that the King was beſieging Noyon, and that he intended to make the Engliſh ſerve in Champagne. Elizabeth very much reſented this Proceeding, and ſent the King word that ſhe did not intend to be his Dupe, and that ſhe would immediately call home every Soldier ſhe had in France. This Declaration put Henry into the greater Confuſion, becauſe he had juſt receiv'd certain Advice that the Duke of Parma was preparing to return to France to ſupport the League. Tho' in his Treaty with Elizabeth, he had no Intention to beſiege Roan, yet he was forc'd to cauſe the Town to be inveſted; and he went to the Siege himſelf in hopes of carrying the Place before the Arrival of the Duke of Parma, who march'd about the end of November. While he was employ'd in this Siege, he made another attempt to obtain 5000 Men more of the Queen, and actually ſent Du Pleſſis Mornay to preſs her on that Head. But in the ſhort Audience which Du Pleſſis obtain'd of the Queen, ſhe told him in plain Terms that the King his Maſter had ſerv'd her ill; that inſtead of beſieging Roan, according to his Promiſe, he had ſpent time at the Siege of Noyon, and that he had made War in Champagne; that he had thereby given the Duke of Parma four Months time to make Preparations; that if his Affairs went ill, he had no body to blame but himſelf, and that ſhe was not in a Temper to be his Bubble. Not long after this, the Duke of Parma arrived, and cauſed the Siege of Roan to be rais'd.

She ſends him a freſh Supply under the E. of Eſſex.

The Queen complains of Henry's Proceeding.

He beſieges Roan to ſatisfy her.

And deſires freſh Succours of her.

Siege rais'd by the D. of Parma.

In 1592, Henry knowing perfectly well how much Elizabeth wiſh'd to be deliver'd from the Neighbourhood of the Spaniards, made uſe again of this Method to amuſe her. He pretended to ſet himſelf in good earneſt to expel the Duke of Mertœur and the Spaniards from Bretagne. Tho' Experience had already convinc'd Elizabeth that ſhe could not rely very much on his Promiſes, yet ſhe made a freſh Treaty with him, whereby ſhe engaged to furniſh him with 4000 Men more, together with Artillery and Ammunition, to carry on the War in Bretagne, on condition that he ſhould join to thoſe Troops 4000 French Foot Soldiers, and 1000 Horſe, and that what ſhe advanc'd ſhould be reimburs'd her in a Year. This Treaty was no better executed than the former. Henry, inſtead of ſending his Forces into Bretagne, made the Engliſh Troops ſerve in Normandy, either becauſe he was more preſs'd on that ſide, or becauſe it was his Intention to leave Bretagne to the laſt, in order to keep Elizabeth always in dread of the Spaniards. She was in ſuch a Paſſion to ſee her ſelf deceiv'd, that ſhe was juſt going to call home her Troops; but the Information ſhe had, that the Duke of Parma was preparing to return into France a third time, made her ſacrifice her Reſentment to the Intereſts of Henry, or rather to her own, becauſe France could not fall into the hands of Philip without great danger to England.

Elizabeth makes another Treaty with Henry.

He deceives Elizabeth.

In 1593, Henry in order to pacify Elizabeth, who was provoked to the laſt degree, poſitively promis'd her that he would think ſeriouſly of Bretagne. But the Efforts he made on that ſide were very mean, all he deſign'd being to make uſe of the Engliſh who were in that Province, to check the Spaniards, and to hinder them from making a greater Progreſs there; for he was very certain that the Queen would not eaſily reſolve to abandon Bretagne.

This ſame Year Henry chang'd his Religion, and in order to juſtify the Alteration, he told the Ambaſſador of England that he had delay'd it as long as poſſible, but that he was at laſt convinc'd he ſhould never be at reſt upon the Throne of France, as long as he continued a Proteſtant. The Queen wrote a very ſharp Letter to him upon this Head, but it produced no effect, for the thing was already done *. Nevertheleſs ſhe complain'd bitterly that he had not perform'd the Treaty with regard to Bretagne, and that he had not allow'd the Engliſh in that Province a maritime place for their Retreat, as he had thereby engaged. Henry vindicated himſelf the beſt he could, but his Reaſons would perhaps have produced an effect quite contrary to that which he expected from it, if the Queen had not heard that the King of Spain was going to make a grand Effort to ſupport the League, which droop'd very much after Henry turn'd Roman Catholick. This was the Reaſon that for her own Intereſt ſhe made an offenſive and defenſive League with Henry

He changes his Religion.

Elizabeth makes another Treaty with him.

* She alſo ſent Tho. Wilkes to try if he could diſſuade him from turning Papiſt. The Reader will ſee the King's Diſcourſe upon this Head to Wilkes, in Camden's Annals; and what it was that gave the advantage to his Crown in the ballance againſt his Conſcience.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

Henry, in which there was the uſual Clauſe that no Peace ſhould be made without the mutual Conſent of both.

SOME time after, viz. in 1594, Henry made himſelf Maſter of Paris, and then order'd the Marſhal d'Aumont to go and make War upon the Duke of Mercœur in Bretagne. The Marſhal made ſome Conqueſts in that Province, with the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh Troops under the Command of Sir John Norris. But inſtead of gratifying thoſe Troops, he ſhew'd them that it was not his Intention to make good the King's Promiſe to them. He beſieg'd the City of Morlaix, which had been promis'd them for a Place of Retreat, and granted a Capitulation to the Beſieged, wherein he got a Clauſe cunningly foiſted in, that none but Roman Catholicks ſhould ſerve in the Garriſon of the Town. Elizabeth offended at this Proceeding, recall'd Norris with his Troops, and ſent them to ſerve in Ireland.

War in Bretagne.

Henry perceiving his Affairs to mend, had declar'd War againſt the King of Spain, who prepar'd on his part to make powerful Efforts to ſupport the tottering League. Henry, who ſaw that he was not very well able to continue the War, becauſe France was exhauſted both of Men and Money, addreſs'd himſelf once more to Elizabeth. He complain'd in 1595, that ſhe had recall'd Norris at a Time when he was moſt neceſſary to him, and he deſir'd freſh Succours. The Queen complain'd in her Turn of the Non-performance of all the Treaties, and deny'd his requeſt: For ſhe had no longer that Eſteem for him which ſhe had before; and yet her Fear that he would ſink, kept her from quite deſerting his Intereſt.

Henry declares War with Spain.

Deſires a freſh Supply of Elizabeth, but is deny'd.

THE Progreſs which the Spaniards made not long after, put Henry under freſh Difficulties. The Conſtable of Caſtile repairing with an Army into the Franche Comte, and threatning the Duchy of Burgundy with an Invaſion, Henry was oblig'd to go in Perſon to the relief of that Province. During this the Count de Fuentes enter'd Picardy, where he took Catelet and Dourlans, and beat the French as they were attempting to relieve the latter. This ill News oblig'd Henry to deſire Succours of Elizabeth for the defence of Picardy, according to the Treaty of the League. The Queen anſwer'd, that ſhe would ſend a Body of Troops into Picardy as ſoon as poſſible, for the Security of Calais, Diep, and Boulogne, according to the Aim of the Treaty, which was to hinder the Spaniards from making themſelves Maſters of the Sea-port Towns of that Province. But the King had no Intention to commit thoſe Places to the Protection of the Engliſh. He was afraid he ſhould have enough to do to get them out, if once they were in; and pretended that the Queen was obliged to help him not only to defend the Maritime Places, but the whole Province likewiſe. At the ſame time, the Deputies of Bretagne repair'd to London, to deſire Succours of the Queen, without ſpecifying what number of Troops they wanted, or for what end they deſign'd to employ them, without offering the Engliſh any place of Retreat; and in fine, without being authoriz'd by the King. So that their Demand was rejected.

Labours under great Difficulties.

Again deſires Succours of Elizabeth.

Q. ELIZ.

DURING this, the Spaniards laid Siege to Cambray. Henry not knowing how to ſave the Place, ſent de Lomenie to the Queen, to deſire ſpeedy Succours, but ſhe deny'd him; which put the Envoy ſo much out of Temper, that he ſpoke very pertly to the Queeen, accuſing her of being the Cauſe of the Loſs of Cambray, and threatning her that the King would make Peace without her. Elizabeth being offended at the Inſolence with which he talk'd to her, ſent him home without granting him a ſecond Audience. For ſome time paſt ſhe had look'd very coldly upon Henry, and really ſhe had no great reaſon to be pleas'd with his manner of dealing with her. Pretending that it was her Intereſt to ſupport him, he took it very ill that ſhe would not do every thing that he thought fit. But ſhe was too cunning to be ignorant that Henry had nothing leſs at heart than the Intereſt of England.

Spaniards Progreſs in France.

Henry ſends Lomenie into England, who threatens the Queen.

Elizabeth's Coldneſs for Henry.

IT ſeem'd as if Elizabeth had form'd a Reſolution not to concern herſelf any more with the Affairs of the King of France, but new Events made her take new Meaſures. The Archduke Albert who had ſucceeded Erneſt his Brother in the Government of the Netherlands, advancing in 1596 towards La Fere, which was beſieg'd by the French, threw ſome Succours into the place, and then went and laid Siege to Calais. Henry as uſual had recourſe to Elizabeth. Firſt he ſent M. de Sancy to her, and then the Marſhal de Bouillon, to deſire ſpeedy Succours. The Queen did not refuſe it, but ſhe demanded that if ſhe caus'd the Siege of Calais to be rais'd, the Place ſhould be put into her hands, ſince France could hold it no longer. The Ambaſſadors evaded the Demand, by ſaying that they had no Inſtruction upon this head. Notwithſtanding this, the Queen order'd the Troops to be rais'd with all poſſible Diligence. But before theſe Succours could be ready, Calais ſurrender'd, after having held out but 12 Days: And ſoon after, Ardres had the ſame Fate.

Farther Progreſs of the Spaniards againſt France.

Calais beſieg'd. Henry again demands Succours.

Calais and Ardres taken.

The Spaniards Progreſs in Picardy made Henry and the Queen equally apprehenſive of ſome unhappy Alteration in the Affairs of France; the rather, becauſe the People were not yet well eſtabliſh'd in their Obedience to the King. This Fear produc'd a new League, by which Elizabeth engag'd to furniſh 4000 Men for the Defence of Normandy and Picardy. Henry oblig'd himſelf on his part to ſend 4000 Men to the Queen, in caſe that ſhe was attack'd; tho' if ſuch Queen makes another League with the French King, to which the Dutch accede.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

ſuch a thing had happen'd, he would undoubtedly have found himſelf in no very good Condition to have perform'd his Promiſe. The States of the United Provinces acceded to this new League, and it was expreſly agreed in the Treaty, that a Peace ſhould not be made but with the Conſent of the three Allies.

French King negotiates privately with the Spaniard.

NOTWITHSTANDING this new Treaty, and all the Succours that Henry had received from the Queen on various Occaſions, yet he carry'd on a ſecret Negotiation with the King of Spain by the Pope's Mediation, without making the leaſt Communication of it either to the Queen or the States. The Negotiation was already far advanc'd when it was interrupted by the Loſs of Amiens which the Spaniards took by Surpriſe. This Accident, which retarded the Peace, occaſion'd very great Uneaſineſs to the King, who not caring to leave that Place in the Hands of his Enemies, reſolv'd to retake it coſt what it would. Accordingly he beſieged it the ſame Year, and while he was employ'd in the Siege, he Summon'd Elizabeth to ſend him 4000 Men according to their Treaty. The Queen anſwer'd, that ſhe was ready to ſend that number of Troops, provided that the King would ſubſiſt them. But the King being diſpleas'd with this Condition, publickly threaten'd the Queen to make Peace without her, and declar'd that it was in his own Power to make a Peace, ſince an Offer had been made to reſtore all the Places to him except Calais. By that he would have her to underſtand that it was only in regard to her that he had refus'd to make a Peace: whereupon ſhe wrote to him, "That ſhe could not believe that ſuch a "Prince as he would violate a ſolemn "Treaty, ſo lately made and confirm'd "by his Oath. That as for her Part, in"ſtead of failing in her Promiſe, ſhe did "more than what ſhe was engag'd to, and "that to convince him of it, ſhe deſir'd "him to caſt his Eyes upon the Treaty, "where he would find this Article, "The Queen ſhall ſend this Year into France 4000 Foot, who ſhall ſerve the King ſix Months. They ſhall ſerve him alſo for the ſame time in the following Years, if the State of the Queen's Affairs will permit it with Conveniency; for which the Queen's Conſcience and Word ſhall be truſted. Mean time to engage Henry to continue the War, ſhe was willing to lend him ſome Money. When ſhe demanded a Security for the Payment, Henry offer'd to deliver up Calais to her, provided that ſhe would engage to retake it by a certain Time to be agreed on. As 'tis probable that the Time he propos'd was little enough, his View was only to engage the Queen to give the Spaniards a powerful Diverſion, that he might have Time to take Amiens himſelf, without being diſturb'd in the Siege. The Queen did not ſuffer her ſelf to be enſnar'd by this Offer, yet ſhe lent the Money on the Security of the Marſhal de Bouillon, and M. de Sancy. Not long after, the King made himſelf Maſter of the Place which he beſieg'd.

Amiens beſieg'd and taken.

Again demands Succours of Elizabeth.

And threatens to make a Peace without her.

She vindicates her Conduct.

AFTER the taking of Amiens, Henry renew'd the Negotiation with Spain, without informing his Allies of it, and at length he concluded it at Vervins without their Intervention; for Philip II would not ſuffer them to ſend their Plenipotentiaries thither. Before it was ſign'd, Henry was ſeverely reproach'd both by the Queen and the States General; but this did not make him alter his Reſolution. He would have them take it even as a Mark of his Condeſcenſion to them, that he gave them a Promiſe, without being ask'd, to ſtay 40 Days before he ratify'd the Treaty of Vervins, in order to give them Time to make their Peace with Spain. This Term was not ſufficient for them to ſettle Affairs of ſo great Importance with a Prince who was not willing ſo much as to permit their Ambaſſadors to be preſent at the Congreſs. Mezeray owns that the Peace was already made, as to the principal Articles, before the Ambaſſadors of the two Crowns met at Vervins, and that the Treaty might have been concluded there in leſs than three Weeks, if the King had not ſpent ſo much Time to make the Publick believe that he had not made the Peace without the Knowledge of his Allies.

French King's ſeparate Treaty with Spain at Vervins.

The Complaint of his Allies without Effect.

FROM the Treaty of Vervins, to the Death of Elizabeth, no Affair of Moment was tranſacted betwixt France and England.

THE Acts which relate to France in this Firſt part of the XVIth Tome of the Fœdera are very numerous, and run for moſt Part upon the Queen's Complaints concerning the Non-performance of the Treaties.

THOSE of the moſt important are,

Henry IVth's Oath to the R. Catholick Nobility. 19.

1. HENRY IVth's Oath which he took to the Roman Catholick Nobility after the Death of Henry III; dated Aug. 2, 1589 [x].

HE promiſes to maintain the Roman Catholick Religion at the Peril of his Life, to cauſe himſelf to be inſtructed by a General or National Council, and to conform himſelf to its Deciſions.

Letter to his Ambaſſador. 22.

4. HENRY IVth's Letter to M. de Buzenual, his Ambaſſador to Elizabeth; dated Aug. 27, 1589, at Diep.

He therein acquaints him of ſome Motions he was about to make, and adds this Poſtſcript.

WHEN I came to this Town, I was told the Queen was at Rye. I cannot expreſs to you how much I was rejoiced at it, for I reſolv'd to go over and ſtay a Week with her, and to take that very Opportunity of kiſſing her Hands.

Fr. Ambaſſador's Propoſal to the Engliſh Council. 23.

5. The Propoſals which M. de Beauvoir la Nocle the French Ambaſſador made to the Council of England, relating to the Succours demanded by Henry IV.

He demands, 1. "A good Sum of Money to pay his Troops, both German and "French.

2. "Sixty-thouſand pound Weight of "Gun-powder, and 2000 Cannon Bullets.

3. "An offenſive and defenſive League, "and that the Queen would exhort the "Proteſtant Powers to come into it.

4. "That the neceſſary Means be con-"ſulted to form ſuch a League.

5. "That the Queen take care that the "King may be reliev'd with a good Army "from Germany.

6. "That the Sum which the Queen "ſends may be 100,000 Crowns.

Their Letter to the Treaſurer Burghley about a League with the Proteſtant Powers. 24.

6. A Letter from Meſſieurs de Beauvoir, and de Freſnes, the Ambaſſadors of France, to the Lord Burghley, High-Treaſurer; dated in Sept. 1589 [z].

This Letter contains the French King's Propoſals for a League with the Proteſtant Powers.

Henry's Letter to the Queen. 29.

7. HENRY IVth's Letter to the Queen without a Date.

He tells her that he has ſent to Beauvoir the Account of what paſs'd at the Attack of the Suburbs of Paris, where the Lord Willoughby and the Engliſh Troops had behav'd very well.

Decree of the Sorbonne againſt Henry III. 32.

8. The Deciſions of the Sorbonne againſt Henry III; dated Jan. 7, 1589 *[a].

It ſeems that this Act which is inſerted among thoſe of 1590, ſhould have been plac'd at the Head of the abovemention'd in the preceding Year, becauſe it bears the Date of it, and that Henry III was not alive in 1590.

ELIZABETH. King of Spain's Articles with the French League. 33.

9. Articles agreed betwixt the King of Spain and the League; dated Jan. 11, 1590.

That Philip II be declar'd Protector of the League upon the following Conditions.

That in the enſuing Month of April he ſhall ſend into Picardy 6000 Foot and 1500 Horſe. Into the Lyonnois 5000 Foot and 1000 Horſe, with 20 Field-pieces and 12 battering Pieces. Into Languedoc 500 Horſe and 2000 Foot. To Nantes 500 Horſe and 3000 Foot, one Ship laden with Ammunition, and 10 with Corn.

That he ſhall lend 500,000 Crowns ready Money to the League, and 20,000 Crowns a Month as long as the War ſhall laſt.

The League engages to repay thoſe Sums in three Years, and to put into his Hands for Security the Towns of Cambray, Abbeville, and others in Burgundy.

That by the End of April, the League ſhall be ready with 40,000 Foot, 5000 Horſe, and 100 Cannon for the Battery and Field.

That they ſhall not treat with Henry of Navarre, but at the Court of the King of Spain, or of the Duke of Savoy.

That the Governors of the Maritim Places ſhall receive the King of Spain's Ships in their Harbours.

That during the War, the League ſhall be bound to nothing more, even tho' the King ſhould make War againſt England or Scotland; but that after the end of the War, the French ſhall furniſh the King of Spain with 3000 Horſe, and 28000 Foot, together with 6000 Pioneers upon all Expeditions.

That in all the publick Acts the King ſhall be ſtyl'd Protector of the Crown of France, and that the ſaid Article ſhall be ſworn to by the League, and by the King who ſhall be elected.

That the League ſhall make no Alliance without the Conſent of the King of Spain.

Henry IV's Inſtructions to la Tour. 36.

10. HENRY IVth's Inſtructions to the Sieur de la Tour who was to paſs thro' England in his way to Germany.

He was to repreſent to the Queen, that as the Duke of Parma was to come into France in the Month of March, 'tis neceſſary to haſten the Succours from Germany.

* The Accounts of the extravagant Inſolencies of the Leaguers upon this occaſion againſt their Sovereign, were taken from the Files and Regiſters at the re-entrance of Henry IV into Paris, whereby many of their Villanies were loſt; but if the Reader conſults Jo. de Buſſieres, Tom. 4. p. 287, and the Journal De juſta, Hen. III. Abdic. l. 4. c. 38, he will find that they not only deny'd him the Title of King, and made it Capital to have ſo much as his Picture, unleſs it was in the moſt ridiculous and ſhameful Habits and Poſtures that the Painters were pleas'd to draw him in, but they call'd him Heretick, Tyrant, and what not; threw down his Arms and Statues, which they broke to pieces, and dragg'd along the Streets; while their Prieſts falſly accus'd him of Magick from the Pulpit, perſwading their Auditors to fight againſt that Belial, to give no Quarter to him or his Friends, for the Kingdom was ſick, and nothing could cure it but a good Draught of French Blood. Some made many wicked and malicious Anagrams to render him odious; others, thinking thereby to haſten his Death, made little Images of him in Wax, which they ſet on the Altars at Maſs, and prick'd to the Heart; and others carry'd lighted Papers up and down, repeating ſuperſtitious Words, and then putting them out: And for Libels and Satyrs they were innumerable, the Preſs as well as the Pen labouring continually with infamous Defamations of their Sovereign.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

THAT the Spaniards are to ſend 3000 Men into Bretagne, and that the King not being in a Condition to ſend Succours thither, deſires the Queen to provide Forces againſt them.

THAT he deſires her to take care that the States General do ſend 7 or 8 Ships to guard the Coaſts of Bretagne and Normandy.

THAT he cannot recal M. Buzennal with Honour, but that nevertheleſs he will do it if the Queen abſolutely inſiſts upon it.

French Ambaſſadors Letter to the Treaſurer. 40.

To diſpatch the Succours with all ſpeed to Bretagne.

IF the Duke of Parma come into France the King deſires the Queen to ſend him 4000 Men for three Months, 'till the Arrival of the Army from Germany.

IF the Duke of Parma does not come, the King promiſes to repair to Diep, and to join the Engliſh Troops with 6000 French Foot, 4000 French Horſe, and 5000 Switzers, in order to recover Roan, Havre-de-Grace, and all the Coaſt of Normandy, &c.

His Letter to the Duke of Longueville on the Victory at Mante. 52.

13. HENRY IVth's Letter to the Duke of Longueville, concerning the Victory at Mante; dated at Raymer, a League from thence, March 14, 1590.

Others to the Engliſh Ambaſſador. 53.

14. ANOTHER from the King to the (Earl of Stafford) Engliſh Ambaſſador; dated March 22, 1590 [d].

" HE thanks the Queen for the Care ſhe " takes of his Affairs, and deſires ſhe " would haſten the Succours from Ger- " many." From this and ſeveral other Pieces it may be inferred, that Elizabeth was properly the chief Perſon that gave Motion to the Succours which came to the King from Germany.

51.

15. ANOTHER from Henry IV to the Earl of Stafford; dated May 6, 1590 [e].

York's Credentials and Inſtructions. 89.

19. CREDENTIALS for Edmund York ſent into France: As alſo his Inſtructions; dated Jan. 30, 1591 [f].

THESE Inſtructions relate chiefly to Bretagne; and among other things, York had Orders to preſent certain Articles to the King, mention'd in the following Anſwer.

Henry IV's Anſwer. 92.

20. THE King's Anſwer to the Articles preſented by Mr. York; dated March 4, 1591 [g].

ARTICLE I. What Forces will the King join to the Engliſh? At what Place are they to join? At what Port ſhall the Engliſh land?

Anſwer. THE King deſires 3000 Men, and propoſes to have as many there himſelf. The Deſcent may be at Breſt, Graveling, or Cherburg, at the Choice of the Engliſh.

ARTICLE II. What Orders ſhall be given to furniſh them with Proviſions, and at what Price?

Anſwer. The Engliſh ſhall be treated in the ſame manner as the French. But as to Beer, ſince the Country does not afford any, it will be neceſſary perhaps to ſend for ſome from England.

ARTICLE III. What Port or Harbour ſhall be allowed that is fit to receive Ships of 200 Tuns?

Anſwer. Becauſe the Queen has ſignify'd her Inclination to ſend 25 or 30 large Ships, on Condition of being reimburſed, the King offers the Port of Breſt, with the Town and Territory, for the Engliſh to retire to, but not the Caſtle, for fear of offending the Roman Catholicks. That he thinks the Port of Relanor to be very convenient, which he offers to allow if it can be retaken, and conſents that this ſhall be the firſt Enterprize.

ARTICLE IV. What Security will the King give to reimburſe the Expence of raiſing, tranſporting, and paying the Troops?

Anſwer. THE King has ſent a full Power to La Nocle, his Ambaſſador in England,

Inſtructions to Sir Roger Williams, ſent with a Reinforcement to Diep. 94.

21. INSTRUCTIONS to Sir Roger Williams, ſent to Diep with 600 Men for the Security of that Place.

THE chief Point of theſe Inſtructions is, That Williams ſhall not expoſe the Engliſh Troops, unleſs the French have an equal Share in the Danger, at leaſt out of the Town.

French King's Letters to Elizabeth, deſiring Succours. 96, 98.

22. HENRY IVth's Letter to Elizabeth, deſiring Succours; dated May 21, 1591 [h].

23. ANOTHER which he ſent to her with M. de Reaulx; dated June 3, 1591 [i].

HE gives her an Account of the taking of Louviers. He deſires her to leave Williams in France, and to reinforce his Regiment. He tells her that he did not inſtruct his Ambaſſador to deſire that the Earl of Eſſex ſhould command the 4000 Men; but that knowing what a great Eſteem ſhe had for that Lord, he ſhould be very glad if ſhe would pleaſe to make that Choice.

24. A Treaty betwixt Henry IV and Elizabeth; dated at Greenwich, June 25, 1591.

The ARTICLES.

1. THAT upon the Queen's ſending 3400 Men into Normandy, beſides the 600 already there under the Command of Williams, the King undertakes to be at all Expence for the raiſing, tranſporting, and paying the Soldiers, Officers, and General, according to the Bill ſigned by the Commiſſioners of France and England.

2. THAT as to the Pay of thoſe 4000 Men, and of the 3000 that are to be ſent into Bretagne, and the other Sums which the King owes to the Queen upon ſundry Bonds, the King conſents that the Queen ſhall enjoy the Revenues of Roan and Havre-de-Grace when thoſe two Places are retaken, 'till the whole Debt is paid.

3 THE King promiſes to pay the Engliſh Troops every Week, after they have ſerv'd two Months, and on Failure thereof they ſhall be at liberty to go back.

4. THE King obliges himſelf to get theſe Articles, touching the Money, ratify'd by the Parliament and the Chamber of Accompts ſitting at Tours.

Inſtructions to Sir Henry Unton. 103.

25. INSTRUCTIONS to Sir Henry Unton, going Ambaſſador to France, together with the Credentials; dated in July, 1591 [k].

" THERE is nothing of very great Im- " portance in theſe Inſtructions; only the " laſt Article imports, that the Queen ha- " ving Information that the King of " France neglects his Proteſtant Subjects, " and beſtows all the Governments upon " the Catholicks, if the Ambaſſador finds " it true, he ſhall take an Opportunity " to talk to the King about it in her " Name.

26. THE Lord Treaſurer Burghley's Letter to Sir Henry Unton; dated Auguſt 3, 1591 [l]. 109.

" HE tells him, that the Queen having " heard that the King's Troops had quit- " ted Bretagne, has given Orders to Nor- " ris to draw off his Men towards the " Sea-Coaſt, in order to put them on board " Ships which ſhe will ſend him. Elizabeth's Letter to Henry IV. 111.

27. ELIZABETH's Letter to Henry IV, without a Date.

SHE reproaches him with having abus'd her by drawing her into a Treaty, whereby ſhe was to ſend him 4000 Men into France, on Pretence of beſieging Roan, and that afterwards he trifled away the Time in the Siege of Noyon. She tells him frankly, that the Delay of his moſt urgent Affairs has done him more Harm than the Activity of his Enemies, and gives him ſome Inſtances of it. Laſtly, ſhe declares, that for the future ſhe will keep her Troops for a better Purpoſe, and that ſhe is not in a Humour to expoſe them, merely to do a Pleaſure to the common Enemy.

" He ſays, that the Queen has not al- " tered her Purpoſe; that ſhe is deter- " min'd to recal her Troops, becauſe the " King has not kept his Word, and given " no Aſſurance how they were to be paid " at the end of two Months; that ſhe " has ordered the Earl of Eſſex to re- " turn to England; and that all his Friends " ſhould exhort him to Obedience. That " upon Advice that Unton intended to go " and wait upon the King at Louvieres, " ſhe had ordered Letters to be diſpatch- " ed for his Recal. That if he was al- " ready at Louvieres, ſhe commanded " him immediately to leave the Place, " being unwilling that her Ambaſſador " ſhould do Honour to a Prince who " abuſed her. That to heighten the " Queen's Diſpleaſure, the Ambaſſador of " France has preſented a Memorial, re- " quiring that the Earl of Eſſex with " his Forces might follow the King into " Champagne, a Demand which could not " be made at a more unſeaſonable time.

Reasons for sending no more Succours to the French King. 194.

67. THE Reasons given by the Queen's Privy Council to the Ambassadors of France; why she desires to be excused, for the future, from giving any Succours to the King of France; dated in 1593.

"As this Piece is very long, I shall abridge it as much as possible. 'Tis necessary to take notice of it, because it contains a brief Summary of what the Queen had done for the King of France, and how she was all along requited for it.

"IN September 1589, Messieurs de Beauvoir and de Fresnes were bound for the King, to pay to the Queen 20,000 l. Sterling, besides 2000 l. more, and 383 l. for Ammunition, amounting in the whole to 22,383 l. which is still due.

"IN October following, the same Gentlemen engag'd for the Sum of 15,700 l. Sterling.

"IN the Month of May, 1590, there was another Obligation of Messieurs de Beavoir, and de Saldagne, to pay in November following to the Lord Mayor of London 2100 l. which is still unpaid.

"IN Sept. 1590, there was another from M. de Beavoir for 10,000 l. payable in June following.

"MOREOVER, the Queen has sent Ammunition and Artillery into Normandy to the value of 2600 l.

"'TIS pretended that the King is insolvent, but he has punctually paid the other Foreigners in his Service.

"THE English have never had any Place of Retreat in France, tho' it has been often promis'd, which has occasion'd the Destruction of great Numbers of her People.

"THE King engag'd himself to pay the 4000 English two Months after their Arrival in France, which he has not perform'd; and those Troops are still left to be paid by the Queen.

"IT ought to be remember'd how long the Earl of Essex and his Troops remain'd in the Neighbourhood of Diep, without being employ'd, tho' the King had promis'd to begin the Siege of Roan immediately after their Arrival. By that means the Duke of Parma had Time to march into France, and to cause the Siege of Roan to be rais'd.

"IN the Month of June, 1592, new Conventions were made, and the Queen was pleas'd to engage her self to send 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horse into Bretagne, as soon as she should be inform'd that the King had sent 2000 Foot, and 1000 Horse thither, and that the States of the United Provinces had sent thither the Quota they had promis'd; but it was on Condition that the King should pay those Troops, and allow them a wall'd Town to retire to. But the Queen having sent her Troops before the King had made good his Promise, she could never since obtain the Place of Retreat as promis'd her, tho' the King had it in his Power.

"THE Queen having sent fresh Troops since that Time, as well from England as from the Netherlands, to serve in Bretagne, they have been forc'd to reside in Normandy, Anjou, and Maine. The Duke d' Aumont did not go into Bretagne with 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horse, nor did the Sieur de St. Luc repair thither as was promis'd. By that means the English Forces were oblig'd to quit Bretagne, and to retire to the neighbouring Countries, to wait for Orders from the Duke d' Aumont. Consequently, all this Expence has prov'd to no purpose.

"THE Ambassador of France having nothing to alledge against these Facts, he is desir'd that for the future, Care be taken either to make no Promises at all, or else to see them better observ'd.

Duke of Main's to Guyonelle. 179.

69. LETTER from the Duke of Main to Guyonelle; dated March 21, 1593, from the Camp at Noyon on the Sea.

"HE commands him to come and join him with all the Troops under his Obedience, in order to give Battle.

Conference about the Hugonots. 210.

A Narrative of a Conference between Henry IV and some Princes, &c. about the Hugonots.

"THE King in this Conference espous'd the part of the Hugonots, and spoke sharply to the Cardinal de Bourbon on that Head.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

ARTICLE III.

Elizabeth's Affairs with the United Provinces.

Earl of Leiceſter complain'd of by the States, and recalled by the Queen.

THE Earl of Leiceſter, to whom the States of the United Provinces had given more Power than the Queen wiſh'd, ſoon abus'd that exorbitant Grant. He aim'd to make himſelf abſolute Lord of the Country, by ſeizing the greateſt Towns all at once, as the Duke of Anjou had done before him. This View of his being timely diſcover'd, was the Reaſon that, upon the Complaint of the States, the Queen recall'd him, and appointed Peregrine Bertie, Baron of Willoughby, to ſucceed him. But he was not truſted with ſo large a Power as the Earl of Leiceſter had *.

Her Union with the States.

FROM that time to the Year 1595, nothing conſiderable occur'd in the Tranſactions betwixt the Queen and the States, who maintain'd a good Union with each other; the States having always a great deal of Reſpect and Complaiſance for the Queen, tho' at the ſame time they conſtantly maintain'd their Prerogatives and their Liberty with Vigour, as often as the Queen's Ambaſſadors, or her Commiſſioners, who had admittance to the Council of State, offer'd to exceed the Limits of their Commiſſion. This good Underſtanding was a little diſturb'd in the Year 1595. Henry IV having complain'd ſharply of the States, who, as he ſaid, had occaſion'd the Loſs of Cambray, and threatning to make a Peace without them, they thought it neceſſary to pacify him, by ſending him two Regiments, and a great quantity of Corn, and by lending him ſome Money. Upon this the Queen demanded the Money due to her from the States, and ſaid, that ſince they had Treaſure enough to lend to the King of France, ſurely they had enough to pay their Debts. The States alledg'd in their behalf the Treaty they had made with her, by which they were not oblig'd to pay her 'till after the end of the War. She made anſwer, that this Article was only inſerted in the Treaty, becauſe it was not ſuppoſed they would be able to pay her during the War; but that ſince they were rich enough to make Payments before the Peace, ſhe would be paid now. This Affair bred ill Blood; but at laſt it was accommodated for the preſent, by an Engagement which the States enter'd into to pay the Engliſh Troops for the future, and to eaſe the Queen of that Burden.

K. of France complains of them, who find him Men, Proviſions, and Money.

The Queen demands her Debt of them.

An Accommodation for the preſent.

The Queen again demands Payment of her Debt.

NEVERTHELESS in 1596, the Queen renewed her Demand with more Earneſtneſs; but having received Advice that the King of Spain was preparing to make a great Effort againſt England, ſhe by degrees dropp'd it.

They are admitted into the Treaty betwixt England and France.

IT was in this Year that the Queen made a new Offenſive and Defenſive Alliance with Henry IV, into which the States enter'd, though it was not without difficulty. The Queen inſiſted that they ought not to be included in it, as Sovereigns, but as aſſociate Towns under her Protection; and it was only owing to the preſſing Inſtances of the King of France, that ſhe relax'd upon this Article.

The Queen's Reaſons for continuing the War with Spain.

THE Peace of Vervins, which was concluded in 1598, without the Participation of the Queen or the States, oblig'd this Princeſs to take new Meaſures. The Point in Debate was, whether ſhe ought to make a ſeparate Peace with Spain, or to continue the War in Conjunction with the States. The firſt of theſe two Reſolutions would have been eaſy to form, and put in Execution. Philip would undoubtedly have left the Queen a Chart Blanche, if ſhe had been inclined to have abandoned the States: But the Conſequences of ſuch a Peace might have been fatal to England; for thereby the States would have been forc'd to ſubmit to Spain, and the Queen would have been left without Friends, and without Allies, and expoſed to ſtand ſingly upon her own Defence, the firſt time that Philip ſhould be inclin'd to pick a Quarrel with her. She judg'd therefore, without Heſitation, that it was her Intereſt to carry on the War, and to unite more ſtrictly with the States. But ſhe took care not to let them know her full Reſolution: On the contrary, ſhe cauſed a Repreſentation to be made to the States, that ſhe was not able to ſupport ſo heavy a War, and that ſhe had a ſtrong Inclination to a Peace. The States being alarm'd at this Declaration, made all poſſible Efforts to incline her to carry on the War. They were not in a Condition to diſſemble as ſhe did, becauſe their All was at Stake, and that if they ſhould be abandoned by England, they could not avoid relapſing under the Dominion of Spain. Elizabeth did not deny that they were in great Danger, but this very Plea ſhe made uſe of to convince them that their Intereſt, and not hers, was the Point in queſtion. Conſequently, ſhe made them own, that if the War ſhould be continued, it would be only to maintain them in their Liberty. From thence ſhe inferr'd, that there was a Neceſſity for a new Treaty upon this Principle; and it was not poſſible for the States to get off on't. Therefore a new Treaty was concluded, wherein all the Advantage was on the Queen's ſide, which was the whole

Her Treaty with the Dutch.

* Mr. Rapin obſerves, in his large Hiſtory, that he had no other Commiſſion than to command the Engliſh Troops.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

that she had in View from this Negotiation.

THE Death of Philip II, which happened about a Month after the signing of this Treaty, gave the Allies some Respite; and even the Court of Spain seem'd to wish for a Peace, because the Archduke Albert caus'd it to be propos'd immediately after his return from Spain; but it appear'd afterwards that it was only a Snare to divide the Allies; and the Conference which there was at Bruges on this Subject, was to no purpose, or rather broke off as soon as it began. For the Spaniards having felt the Pulse of the English Plenipotentiaries relating to a separate Peace, and finding there was no room to expect it, insisted firmly on the Article of Precedency which Spain claim'd of England, and the Conference was quash'd before they were able to hold an Assembly for it.

ARTICLE IV.

Elizabeth's Affairs with Scotland.

ALTHOUGH the XVth Tome of the Fœdera extends no farther than the Month of November, 1586, and though the Queen of Scots was not executed 'till February, 1587, yet I mention'd her Death in the laſt Account of Elizabeth's Affairs with Scotland, that I might not leave that Article imperfect.

James of Scotland's Reſentment for the Execution of his Mother.

IN 1587, immediately after Mary's Death, Elizabeth ſent her Couſin *Carew to the King of Scotland with a Letter, in which ſhe gave him to underſtand that the Sentence upon the Queen his Mother had been executed againſt her Intention. James fretted and ſum'd to a degree, and ſeem'd reſolv'd upon the moſt deſperate Meaſures to take Revenge for the Queen his Mother; but his Paſſion was ſoon over; for Elizabeth found Means to pacify him, firſt of all, by ſacrificing Daviſon the Secretary of State to him, whom ſhe accus'd, contrary to the Truth, of having exceeded her Orders by producing that which ſhe had ſent to him for Execution. It would be too tedious to give all the Particulars of this Affair. 'Tis ſufficient to ſay in a Word, that the Queen drew the Secretary into her Snare, and that afterwards ſhe made him ſuffer dearly for his Obedience. This I take to be the greateſt Blot in Elizabeth's Life. The ſecond Expedient ſhe made uſe of to pacify the King of Scotland, was to get a Repreſentation made to him by his own Miniſters, whom ſhe had taken care to ſecure in her Intereſt, that if he fell out with her, he would run a Riſque of being for ever excluded from the Throne of England; whereas if ſhe ſaw him in a calm Temper, ſhe would make it her Buſineſs to repair the Wrong ſhe had done to the Queen his Mother, and would ſecure the Succeſſion to him. James gave Ear to theſe Arguments, and from that time ſeem'd ſo eaſy, that not a Word more was ſaid of Mary's Death.

ELIZABETH. He is pacified.

Elizabeth's Repreſentations to him.

NOTWITHSTANDING this, Elizabeth was ſtill miſtruſtful that the King of Scotland was ſecretly hatching a Revenge. This Suſpicion was conſiderably confirm'd in 1588, when the Invincible Armada was juſt ready to make its Appearance on the Coaſts of England. She apprehended that James would ſuffer himſelf to be drawn away by the King of Spain, and ſhe thought ſhe had the more Reaſon to fear it, becauſe ſhe knew that Philip II had a Party in Scotland, and that this Party long'd for nothing more than to favour the Deſigns of the Spaniards. At this Juncture therefore ſhe ſent an Ambaſſador to the King of Scotland, to deſire him not to favour the Spaniards, and at the ſame time to aſſure him of her Affection, and of her Deſign to procure the Crown of England for him after her Death. This very Ambaſſador actually gave the King Hopes that the Queen would grant him a conſiderable Penſion, but 'tis pretended that he made this Offer without the Queen's Order. One might eaſily judge from the Character of Elizabeth, that ſhe had given Orders to her Ambaſſador to offer as it were of his own accord, and without making any poſitive Engagement, whatever he ſhould think proper to hinder the King of Scotland from laying hold of this Opportunity to revenge the Death of his Mother. Be this as it will, it appear'd that James had enter'd into no Engagement with Spain. He aſſured the Ambaſſador of it, and actually wrote a Letter to the Queen upon this Subject, with which ſhe was very well ſatisfy'd.

Elizabeth ſtill ſuſpects, and therefore careſſes him.

His Marriage negotiated.

IN the laſt Account I gave of the Affairs of Scotland, by a meer Miſtake I was guilty of an Impropriety, in mentioning the Marriage of the King of Scotland, which was not concluded 'till 1589. But as I only touch'd it en paſſant, what I ſhall now add upon the ſame Subject cannot be reckon'd as an unneceſſary Repetition.

THE King of Scotland having a Deſign to marry, in 1585 he caſt his Eyes upon the Princeſs, eldeſt Daughter of Frederick II King of Denmark. This Prince having had ſome ſecret Intelligence of it, ſent an Embaſſy into Scotland, on Pretence of renewing the Alliance betwixt the two Kingdoms, in order to give King James an Opportunity of propoſing this Marriage. But at that time the Earl of Arran, the King's Favourite, who had already been corrupted by Elizabeth, together with Wotton, Envoy from that Queen, who was become a ſort of Favourite too with the King, did all that was in their Power to ſow a Miſunderſtanding betwixt the two Kings, to the degree even of affronting the Daniſh Ambaſſadors. Nevertheleſs James being better adviſ'd afterwards, treated the Ambaſſadors with more Civility, but did not mention one word to them about the Marriage. The Earl of Arran, and Wotton, acted by the Direction of Elizabeth, who wiſh'd to hinder the King's Marriage at leaſt with an Engliſh Woman. And if we may believe Melvil, ſhe had actually form'd a Conſpiracy to have the King of Scotland deliver'd up to her, and it was with this Deſign that ſhe ſent Wotton to him. Tho' the King had not propos'd his Marriage, yet he ſtill kept it in View. For not long after this, he ſent one of his Chaplains to Copenhagen, to thank the King for his Embaſſy, and to aſſure him that he would quickly ſend him the like. The ſecret motive of this Meſſage was, that the Chaplain might ſee the two Princeſſes, Daughters to the King of Denmark, and make a Report thereof to his Maſter.

* He was related to the Queen by her Mother Anne Bolleyn. This was Robert Carew, Son to the Lord Hunſdon, who was Governour of Berwick.

THIS Affair ſpun out ſome time by the Artifices of Queen Elizabeth, who after the Fall of the Earl of Arran, drew in the Earl of Maitland the Great Chancellor, and moſt of the Members of the Council of Scotland, to her Party. Mean time as the King was abſolutely reſolv'd on this Marriage, they cou'd not avoid ſending an Embaſſy to Denmark to propoſe it. But the Power of the Ambaſſadors was ſo limited, that Frederick knew not what Judgment to make of a Propoſal ſo unauthoriz'd. At the ſame Time, one Du Bard*, a French Poet, going to Edinburgh on ſome pretence or other, ſpoke to the King about Princeſs Catherine, Siſter to the King of Navarre. He prais'd her to the Skies, ſignify'd that ſhe would be perfectly agreeable to the King of Scotland, and that he did not doubt but it would be eaſy to obtain her of the King her Brother. James being ſet on Fire by the Enumeration of Catherine's Fine Qualities, ſent the Lord Tungland (Melvil's Brother) to the King of Navarre, on pretence of ſome Negotiation with the King, but on purpoſe that he might ſee her, and make his Report to him accordingly. Melvil will have it, that Elizabeth acquainted the King of Denmark of Lord Tungland's being ſent to France. 'Tis certain however that the King of Denmark not reliſhing ſuch looſe Propoſals as had been made to him on the part of the King of Scotland, gave his eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of Brunſwick.

THIS did not diſhearten the King of Scotland, who, that he might not miſs his Aim a ſecond time, in the Year 1589, made a poſitive Demand on the King of Denmark for Princeſs Anne his ſecond Daughter. Frederick agreed to it, on condition that he would demand her by a ſolemn Embaſſy before the Month of May. But that Prince dy'd before the departure of the Embaſſy from Scotland, leaving his Crown to his Son Chriſtian, who was under Age. Notwithſtanding Frederick's Death, James did not deſiſt from his Project. But when he was pleas'd to propoſe to his Council the ſending of an Embaſſy to Denmark, it was repreſented to him, that he would provoke Elizabeth to the laſt Degree, if he marry'd without acquainting her with the Match. Therefore he was under an abſolute Neceſſity to conſult the Queen, who did not fail, as the Council plainly foreſaw, to oppoſe the Marriage, and to repreſent the various Inconveniencies that attended it. At the ſame time ſhe propos'd the King of Navarre's Siſter as a Match for the King, and offer'd to ſtand his Friend in the Courtſhip. The Queen's Anſwer being read in Council, there was not one of the Members but approved of it. Mean time the King who perceived, no doubt, from whence all theſe Obſtructions came, ſet the Provoſt of Edinburgh at work, who rais'd a Sedition in the City, ſo that the Chancellor and Counſellors were threaten'd to be knock'd o'th' Head, if the King's Marriage with the Princeſs of Denmark was not forthwith concluded. Theſe Menaces oblig'd the Council to conſent to the King's ſending of Ambaſſadors into Denmark. But, by the Artifices of the Chancellor, their Power was ſo limited, that when they ariv'd at Copenhagen, they found themſelves oblig'd to ſend the Lord Donegal to the King, to deſire his Majeſty either to recall them, or to grant them more ample Powers. This Envoy came to wait on the King at the very time when the Chancellor and moſt of the Miniſters were abſent. Conſequently the King taking hold of the Opportunity, diſpatch'd that Power with his own Hands which his Ambaſſadors deſir'd, and the Marriage was quickly concluded to his great Satisfaction. By this we may learn what an Influence Queen Elizabeth had in the King of Scotland's Council.

* THE Name being ſpelt after this manner in Melvil's Memoirs, Mr. Rapin did not think fit to vary from his Author; but he is of Opinion that it ſhould have been Du Bartas, that celebrated Poet and Stateſman, who was actually ſent into Scotland by the King of Navarre, tho' 'tis not certain whether it was that ſame Year. De Thou. Tom. V. p. 100.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

NOT long after this the new Queen was put into the Hands of the Scots Ambaſſadors, but as ſhe was on her Voyage to the King her Husband, a Storm forc'd her to put into one of the Ports of Norway. The Wind was contrary ſo long, that James, impatient to ſee his new Bride, went on board a little Veſſel with a ſmall Retinue, and ſail'd to Norway, and ſtay'd the whole Winter either in that Country or in Denmark, without going to Scotland, 'till the Month of May in the Year following, which was 1590.

The King meets his Bride in Norway.

WHEN the King was return'd, he found his Kingdom as full of Diviſion and Trouble as ever. This Prince being extremely good natur'd, was eaſily wrought upon by thoſe in whom he plac'd his Confidence; and being moreover naturally inconſtant, he frequently chang'd his Miniſters and Favourites, juſt as he was impreſs'd by the different Parties that gain'd his Ear. There had been always two Factions in Scotland, that of Elizabeth, and that of the King of Spain. When the Queen's prevail'd, it kept the King in a State of Bondage, as we have ſeen in the Affair of the Marriage. But it was the King's unhappineſs that he could not get rid of this Yoke, without abandoning himſelf to the Spaniſh Party, which was much more dangerous. Elizabeth's Aim was only to prevent ſuch Turns in Scotland as might be to her Prejudice; whereas the View of the Spaniards was to incenſe the King againſt the Engliſh, in order to be able to attack Elizabeth by the means of Scotland. Conſequently whenever the King diſcover'd any Byaſs for this Party, the Queen, or her Emiſſaries in Scotland, never fail'd to excite Troubles and Broils to oblige him to continue in the way from which he diſcover'd an Inclination to depart.

His Character.

Parties in Scotland.

IN the Year 1592, the Chancellor and the other Miniſters being of the Spaniſh Faction, Earl Bothwel, Son to a Baſtard of James V, who had been accus'd of Sorcery, and made his Eſcape from Priſon, undertook to make himſelf Maſter of the King's Perſon, alledging, that his Miniſters kept him Captive in his own Palace; and he narrowly miſs'd of executing his Deſign, for he was advanc'd with his Men as far as the King's Chamber-Door, to which he had ſet Fire, and he endeavour'd to break open the Door of the Queen's Chamber; but the King being timely aſſiſted, he was oblig'd to retire. After his Friends had procur'd him a Pardon for this Crime, he made a ſecond Attempt while the King was at Falkland. He had ſo good an Intelligence at Court, that he found means to repair on a ſudden to the Palace, where the King was oblig'd to barricade himſelf in his Chamber 'till Aſſiſtance came to him, when Bothwel and his Friends were forc'd to fly, and the Earl eſcap'd to England. I ſhould be loth to affirm that this was done by the Direction of Elizabeth or her Miniſters, but as the Scots Miniſtry at that Juncture was not in her Intereſt, 'tis highly probable that Bothwel hop'd to be ſupported either by the Queen herſelf, or by the Party ſhe had in Scotland.

Attempts of Earl Bothwel to ſeize the King's Perſon.

ELIZABETH.

ELIZABETH taking Occaſion from thoſe Troubles, ſent an Ambaſſador to the King in 1593, to tell him that ſhe had certain Advice that the Spaniards were plotting ſome Miſchief in Scotland, in which they had engag'd the Earls of Angus, Huntley and Errol; and that as this was what he could not be ignorant of, ſhe deſir'd him to take ſpecial Care what Perſons he employ'd in his Councils, and to inform her of the Plots that were contriv'd againſt her in Scotland. James return'd a very ambiguous Anſwer to the Ambaſſador, and ſaid, that ſince 'twas the Queen's Deſire that he ſhould proſecute the Lords whom the Ambaſſador had mention'd, he expected that the Queen ſhould be at the Charge. He demanded alſo the Surrender of Bothwel according to their Treaty, and ſoon after ſent an Ambaſſador to her, to demand him in form. The Queen reply'd, that by the Treaty ſhe was not oblig'd to contribute to the Expence of any but a War againſt Foreigners. That as to the Rebels, it was at her Option, according to the ſame Treaty, either to deliver them up, or to baniſh them out of her Dominions. That as Bothwel retir'd to England without her Knowledge, and as ſhe knew not where he was, all that ſhe could do was to forbid her Subjects to entertain him, which ſhe did afterwards by a Proclamation; and Bothwel being unable to ſtay longer in England, went and conceal'd himſelf in Scotland.

Elizabeth, ſuſpicious of Scotland, ſends an Ambaſſador to the King.

His Anſwer.

Elizabeth refuſes to ſurrender Bothwel.

BUT Bothwel's Party ſoon after increaſed ſo much, by means of the Faction that oppos'd the Miniſters, that he had the Aſſurance to go the King without being call'd, and falling at his Feet, humbly begg'd his Pardon. The King had no Intention to pardon him; but perceiving, to his great Surprize, that the whole Court, except his Miniſters, were of Bothwel's Party, and that it would not be an eaſy matter to arreſt him, he was forc'd to grant him his Pardon, on Condition that he would depart the Kingdom. Bothwel accepted the Condition, but he left ſo ſtrong a Party at Court, as well as in the Country, that the King was under an abſolute neceſſity to diſmiſs the High-Chancellor, the High-Treaſurer, and ſome others of his his Miniſters. This was a ſort of Violence upon the King, but it did not hold long; for he aſſembled the States, and having declar'd to them that he had been forc'd to pardon Bothwel's Crimes, he deſired them to ſupport his Authority, and to deliver him from the Yoke of Slavery which had been laid upon him. The States having declar'd for him, he recall'd his Miniſters, and baniſh'd all thoſe of the oppoſite Party from Court.

The Fall of his Party.

MEAN time in order to give ſome Satisfaction to the People, who were very much uneaſy with the Miniſters, and ſuſpected them to be contriving ſomething in Favour of the Roman Catholicks, the States made a Decree for confirming the Eſtabliſhment of the Proteſtant Religion in Scotland. But through the Intrigues of the Miniſters, this Decree was thought ſo uncapable of ſecuring the Religion, that it only confirm'd the People in their Suſpicions, who complain'd againſt the uſe of Lenitives at ſuch a Juncture as this, when it manifeſtly appear'd there had been a Deſign to ſubvert the Religion; and that therefore the Authors of thoſe Conſpiracies ought to be proſecuted with Vigour.

Suſpicions of the King's Affection to the Papiſts.

ELIZABETH being well inform'd of what paſs'd in Scotland, ſent the Lord Zouchy to the King, to ſhew him the Inconveniencies that might attend his Neglect to puniſh, or rather the Protection he granted to thoſe, who aim'd at the Ruin of the Religion. The King anſwer'd at firſt after his uſual manner, that he would do what was beſt for the Intereſts of his Kingdom, and that he would actually proſecute the Lords whom the Queen ſuſpected, provided ſhe would contribute to the Expence of the War. The Ambaſſador not being ſatisfy'd with this Anſwer, and continuing to preſs him to do what the Queen deſir'd, he anſwer'd with ſome Paſſion, that the Queen had nothing to do to preſcribe to him after what manner he ſhould govern his Kingdom. At the ſame time he demanded that ſhe would deliver up Bothwel, who was retired to England.

Queen ſends him an Ambaſſador.

His Anſwer.

ELIZABETH finding the King obſtinately reſolv'd to ſupport his Miniſters, and the Spaniſh Faction, did probably aſſiſt Bothwel in his Return to Scotland. Be this as it will, he put himſelf at the Head of 400 Men, and took Leith, a Place about a Mile from Edinburgh, where he publiſhed a Manifeſto, containing the very ſame things which the Lord Zouchy had repreſented to the King, viz. "That there was a Spaniſh Party in the "Kingdom, which aim'd at the Reſtora- "tion of the Catholick Religion, and to "incenſe the Scots againſt the Engliſh, "in order to excite a War between the "two Kingdoms. That the Roman Ca- "tholicks were very much elevated, and "caus'd Maſs to be ſaid in publick: That "the Spaniards were on the Point of in- "vading the Kingdom, and that there "was no Poſſibility of avoiding the E- "vils threaten'd, but by delivering the "King out of the Hands of thoſe per- "nicious Miniſters who were the Au- "thors of thoſe dangerous Conſpiracies."

Bothwel's Return to Scotland.

His Manifeſto and Appearance in Arms.

James was at no great Loſs to comprehend the true Cauſe of Bothwel's Inſolence and Confidence. But that he might not ſeem to truckle to thoſe that had a mind to govern him, he rais'd Troops, march'd againſt the Rebel, and obliged him once more to retire to England. As ſoon as Elizabeth was inform'd of it, ſhe caus'd Proclamation to be made on the Frontiers, ſtrictly forbidding any Reception or Shelter to be given to Bothwel. This Proceeding gave the King an Opportunity to be reconcil'd to her. He perceived at laſt how much it was in her Power to make him uneaſy, if he ſhould obſtinately perſiſt to favour her Enemies, and what a Riſque he ran of loſing the Crown of England, if he did not alter his Courſe. Being therefore reſolved to pleaſe Elizabeth, he chang'd his Miniſters, aſſembled the States, caus'd new Laws to be made in favour of the Proteſtant Religion, and a general Aſſociation was enter'd into in Scotland for maintenance of that Religion. Afterwards, the Lords of the Romiſh and Spaniſh Party were baniſh'd out of the Kingdom. Elizabeth was very well ſatisfied with all theſe Proceedings, and Scotland continu'd in Peace 'till the Year 1600, when the Sons of the Earl of Gowry, who had been beheaded, form'd a Plot againſt the King, from which he only eſcap'd by a Sort of Miracle. But this does not fall in with my Subject, becauſe neither England, nor Elizabeth had any Concern in it.

James alters his Conduct.

IN the Year 1601, the Earl of Eſſex having form'd a Conſpiracy againſt the Queen, wrote word to the King of Scotland, that the Queen's Miniſters, of whom Cecil the High-Treaſurer was the Chief, had a Project on foot to exclude him from the Succeſſion to the Crown of England. He told him that it was Time that he ſhould demand by a ſolemn Embaſſy to be declar'd Preſumptive Heir and Succeſſor to Elizabeth, and that his Ambaſſadors ſhould be ſeconded. 'Tis not very clear whether the Deſign of the Earl of Eſſex was to place the King of Scotland upon the Throne of England before the Death of Elizabeth, but 'tis very probable that James thought ſo for theſe three Reaſons: Firſt, Earl of Eſſex's Plot againſt the Queen.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

First, because Camden, who wrote the Annals of Elizabeth by that Prince's Order, has not decided this Point clearly, though he might easily have known it. Secondly, King James when he came to the Crown of England, call'd the Earl of Essex his Martyr. Thirdly, The Embassy which the Earl had desir'd from Scotland arrived in England. But the Ambassadors being inform'd upon the Road that the Earl of Essex had miss'd his Blow, and that he was a Prisoner, took care not to say one Word about the Succession. The Queen, though very well inform'd, feigned as if she knew nothing of the matter, and the two Courts liv'd in a good Understanding 'till 1603, when the Queen on her Death-bed nam'd the King of Scotland for her Successor.

23. INSTRUCTIONS to the Lord Zouchy, who is going Ambaſſador to Scotland in 1593.

" The King of Scotland being govern'd " at that time by the Spaniſh Faction, " had got the States to paſs a Decree, " whereby the Earls of Huntley, Angus, " and Errol, had liberty to depart the " Kingdom, on Condition of enjoying " their Eſtates. The Queen thinking this " Decree too favourable to the three Earls, " and tending to introduce the Spaniards " into Scotland, orders her Ambaſſador to " impart the Reaſons of her Diſſatisfacti- " on with it to the King. Theſe Reaſons " ſhew how diffident the Queen was of " the King and his Council.

" IF the King return an equivocal An- " ſwer, the Queen orders Robert Bowes, " her Ambaſſador in Ordinary, to addreſs " himſelf to the Council, and there to ex- " hibit the Reaſons ſhe has to complain of " the King and his Miniſters, and of the " Indulgence he gives on account of Re- " ligion. The Lord Zouchy is to add, " that it muſt not be imagin'd that the " Queen ſo little underſtands her own In- " tereſts as to ſuffer any Intrigues to be " carried on in Scotland, for the bringing " in of the Spaniards in order to attack " England from that Country, and that " ſhe will employ the Means which " God has put into her Hands to prevent " it.

" IF the King alledge that the Queen " her ſelf made Sollicitation in favour of " the three Earls, the Ambaſſador is to " make Anſwer, that Sir Robert Melvil " has miſreported her Words; that ſhe " only ſaid that the King might pardon " them if they acknowleg'd their Fault, " and gave Sureties for their Behaviour in " time to come; but not at the bare In- " terceſſion of their Friends.

ARTICLE V.

ELIZABETH'S Tranſactions with the Hanſe-Towns, and others, relating to Commerce.

Hanſe-Towns.

In the 12th Century, ſeveral good Towns ſituate upon the Sea, and which for that reaſon were call'd Hanſe-Towns, had form'd a Society for the Security of their Commerce. They had ſeveral Offices or Warehouſes for the Sale of their Goods, of which one of the chief was at London, where a Society of German Merchants was form- ed, call'd the Still-yard Company, to which Edward I had granted great Privileges. This Company was become ſo powerful, that by little and little it engroſs'd almoſt all the Cloth-Trade * In 1552, under the Reign of Edward VI it was made appear, that in the preceding Year they had ſent 50,000 Pieces of Cloth out of the Kingdom, and that all the Engliſh together had ſhipp'd off but 1100 Pieces. Upon Complaints hereof by the Engliſh Merchants, the Parliament revok'd all thoſe Privileges, be- cauſe of the Damage which the Engliſh Nation thereby receiv'd. But Mary, who aſcended the Throne in the Year following, having taken a Reſolution to marry Philip, Son to the Emperor, ſuſpended the Exe- cution of this Act for three Years, and order'd that during that time the Still-yard Company ſhould enjoy their ancient Privileges. After that time the Privileges of the ſaid Company were no longer re- garded, either by reaſon of ſome new Sta- tute that was made, or in purſuance of that enacted in the Reign of Edward VI. The Hanſe-Towns made ſome Efforts to recover what they had loſt, but 'twas to no purpoſe.

Still-yard Company's Hiſtory.

Hanſe-Towns Complaints for the Seizure of their Corn in the Tagus, and the Queen's Anſwer.

† In 1589, in the Reign of Elizabeth, an Accident happen'd to the farther Mor- tification of the Hanſe-Towns. The Engliſh Fleet commanded by Sir Francis Drake, entring the Tagus, met ſixty Ships there laden with Corn belonging to the Hanſe-Towns: He took out the Corn, and return'd the Ships to the Merchants. The Hanſe-Towns complain'd of it to the Queen; who made Anſwer, that the Neutrality which they pretended to obſerve, did not warrant them to ſend ſuch Contraband Goods to her Enemy as Proviſions were, the rather becauſe they had been warn'd not to do it: That even tho' they ſhould enjoy all the Privileges which they had heretofore obtain'd from Edward I, the very Original Patent expreſly forbad them to carry Merchandize to the declar'd Ene- mies of England.

Engliſh Merchants forbidden to trade in Ger- many.

Those Towns not being able to obtain the Reſtitution of their Corn, carry'd their Complaints to the Diet of the Empire; and the Queen ſent an Ambaſſador thither to declare her Reaſons. The King of Po- land intereſted himſelf likewiſe in this Af- fair, becauſe the City of Dantzick was under his Protection. At laſt the Empe- ror excluded the Engliſh Company of Merchant Adventurers, who had conſide- rable Factories at Stade, Emden, Bremen, Hamburgh, and Elbing, from all Trade in the Empire. The Queen ſtrove hard to preſerve the Commerce of the Engliſh in Germany; and there were ſeveral Ne- gotiations on this Head, which are the Subject of a very great Number of Pieces in the beginning of the 16th Tome of the Fœdera.

ELIZABETH had alſo ſome Diſputes with the King of Denmark a- bout the Fiſhery and Commerce, and like- wiſe with the Cities of Cologn and Augs- burgh. One of the grand Articles of Com- plaint againſt the Engliſh was, that when they took any Spaniſh Ship, they confiſ- cated every thing they found on board, whether the Merchandize belong'd to the Spaniards, or to the Merchants of other Nations.

Some of the Acts in this Tome rela- ting to theſe Matters, are as follow;

Yet we don't find here the Iſſue of any of thoſe three Affairs.

ARTICLE VI.

Domeſtic Affairs.

OF all the Domeſtic Affairs of this latter part of Elizabeth's Reign, I ſee not one that requires a particular Explanation except that relating to the Earl of Eſſex; to which ſome of the Acts of this XVIth Tome refer.

History of the Earl of Eſſex's Family.

ROBERT D' Evereux, Earl of Eſſex, was the Son of Walter D' Evereux, the firſt Earl of Eſſex of that Family. He had ſo much of Elizabeth's Favour that upon all Occaſions ſhe gave him ſingular Marks of her Eſteem. But this Favour made him exceſſively inſolent. It was unhappy for him that he imagin'd it was due to his Merit, rather than to I know not what to call it, which made the Queen prefer him before many others; and this was the Reaſon that he thought himſelf the leſs oblig'd to the Queen for what ſhe did for him. In fine, he perſuaded himſelf that he was abſolutely neceſſary, and this Thought made him very troubleſome both in the Council and elſewhere; becauſe he was for carrying every thing with a high Hand, and could not bear to be contradicted: But he was never able to make the Queen his Property; who on the contrary mortify'd him ſeveral times, in order by degrees to bring down his Pride. When he commanded the Engliſh Troops in France, he excus'd himſelf to the very laſt from obeying the Orders of the Queen, who recall'd him to England, and was fain to exert all her Authority to make him return. This made her uſe the greater Precaution, to convince him, that notwithſtanding her Affection for him, ſhe did not intend that he ſhould govern her. At his Return from the Expedition at Cadiz, where he had perform'd great Services, he found that the Queen had given the Poſt of Secretary of State to Robert Cecil, Son to the Lord Treaſurer, tho' he had recommended Thomas Bodley to it. This produc'd a mortal Enmity betwixt the Earl and Cecil, which prov'd very prejudicial to the Earl.

His Preferment and Vanity.

His Hatred of Cecil.

IN the Year following, viz. 1597, the Earl having the Command of a Fleet againſt Spain, had a great Quarrel with Sir Walter Raleigh, who was treated with the laſt Degree of Diſdain, and forc'd to truckle, becauſe he was under the Earl's Command; but at his Return he did him ill Offices, and join'd himſelf to Cecil's Party. Not long after this, the Earl of Eſſex receiv'd a freſh Mortification. The Queen made Admiral Howard Earl of Nottingham; and in the Enumeration ſhe gave in his Patent of the Services which the Admiral had done to the Crown, ſhe aſcribed to him the taking of Cadiz. The Earl of Eſſex was extremely diſguſted at it; and his Vexation was the greater, becauſe the Admiral being made an Earl, ought to take place of him, according to an Order of Henry VIII. But the Queen, to make him eaſy, gave him the Poſt of Earl

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

Marshal of England, which secur'd him the Precedency before the Earl of Nottingham.

IN 1598, the Earl of Tyrone, who had rebell'd in Ireland, making a very great Progress in that Island, it was resolved to send a new Governour thither. The Queen and the Earl differing in Opinion, as to the Choice of a proper Person, the Earl talk'd and behav'd with so much Insolence upon this Occasion, that the Queen gave him a Box o'th' Ear. The Earl complain'd, and threaten'd; but at length his Friends reconcil'd him to his Duty, and the Queen restor'd him to her Favour: But this Affront took deep Root in his Heart.

His Insolence to the Queen.

NOT long after this, the Affairs of Ireland growing worse and worse every Day, the Queen assembled her Council for the Choice of a Governour. The Earl of Essex highly blam'd the Neglect of the former Governours for not pursuing the Rebel from Place to Place; adding, that this was owing to the Continuance of the War, and the great Expence of the Queen, and that the only way to make a speedy End of the Affair was, to send a General into Ireland who had Experience and Reputation, and who would not let the Rebel have a Moment's Rest. In short, he spoke in such a manner, as gave a plain Indication that he wanted to be the Man, though he did not name himself. The Queen therefore made him Viceroy of Ireland, and gave him a much larger Patent than any of his Predecessors. When he was arriv'd in Ireland, he acted the very reverse to the Advice he had given in Council. Though he had a very considerable Army, he did nothing of great Importance, and continually call'd for fresh Succours. Instead of directly attacking the Earl of Tyrone, he carried his Army another Way, and did not march against the Rebel 'till his Troops were too much diminish'd to make any great Progress. He had also several Conferences with the Earl of Tyrone, and granted him a Truce very prejudicial to England. The Queen beginning to suspect him, wrote him a pretty sharp Letter, which made him immediately resolve to go over to England with the Flower of his Army: But the Queen, who had timely Notice of it, caus'd Troops to be rais'd in England to oppose his Designs. This made him act with Deliberation, but nevertheless he return'd to England without Leave, and took with him a great Number of Officers, who, at their Arrival, dispers'd. He had but six to accompany him to Court, where after having had a very cold Audience of the Queen, he was arrested, and committed to the Custody of the Lord Privy-Seal. Being examined, he made a very ill Defence; and yet the Queen reserv'd a Kindness for him, she having no other Design in the arresting of him than to humble his Pride. But the Efforts which his Friends made to stir up the Populace in his Favour, determin'd the Queen to give Order for his Trial in the Star-Chamber *, in order to convince the People that she had not proceeded against him thus without a Cause. According to the Queen's Direction, the Sentence pass'd upon him was not the most severe, though he was removed from several of his Employments; and the Queen being desirous to leave him some Hopes of recovering her Favour, caus'd him to be set at Liberty. The Earl appeared very humble for a while, and fell into a Fit of Devotion. But the Queen, who knew him very well, being desirous to make a longer Trial of his Humility and Repentance, he could not digest his Disgrace so long, but abandon'd himself to the Council of his Friends and Domesticks, who gave him to understand, that the Queen was resolved utterly to ruin him, and made him take Measures to extricate himself from his imaginary Danger. They who put the most favourable Construction upon his Designs, said that his Project was to make himself Master of the Queen's Person, and to drive his Enemies from the Court. But the Letter he wrote to the King of Scotland denotes something more. Be this as it will, having not Patience to stay any longer for his Restoration to his former Favour, he kept open House for all the Malecontents, and particularly his intimate Friend the Earl of Southampton, for whom the Queen had no Kindness. He resolved afterwards to make a Rising in the City of London, imagining that the Populace would take up Arms whenever he beckon'd them. To bring this Plot to bear, he assembled three or four hundred of his Friends at his own House. The Queen at the same time being better inform'd of his Designs than he imagined, sent the Keeper of the Privy-Seal to him, with two other Lords of the Council, to demand the Reason of that Assembly of armed Men. These three Lords were admitted through the Wicket, and their Retinue left without. As soon as they were enter'd, the Earl of Essex led them into a Chamber and locked them in, leaving a Guard at the Door. Immediately upon this he marched with all his Men into the City, crying out that his Life was in Danger, and desiring the People to take Arms; but finding no body that was will-

The REIGN of JAMES I.

Foedera Tom. XVI.

In the firſt 14 Years of this Reign we muſt not expect to find any ſignal Events which are of very great importance to the Readers. For firſt of all, the Foreign Affairs we ſee in that Period are very few. And in the ſecond Place the Domeſtick Affairs, if we except the Gunpowder-Plot, are in themſelves of little importance. Nevertheleſs, 'tis abſolutely neceſſary to be well informed of this Reign, if one would have a juſt Idea of what paſs'd in thoſe that ſucceeded. And the Reaſon of it is, becauſe in this Reign we find the true Spring and Origin of the Revolutions that have happened in England for about a hundred Years paſt. Now in order to have a right Underſtanding of the Reign of James I, a Man muſt of neceſſity be fully acquainted with that Prince's Genius and Character, and with his Maxims and Principles, as to Government and Religion. This will be the Subject with which I ſhall begin, before I enter into the Narrative of thoſe Events to which the Acts of the Fœdera have a Relation.

James I.

Six Hours after the Death of Elizabeth, James VI King of Scotland, was proclaim'd King of England, by the Name of James I. As it was the Council that caus'd him to be proclaim'd, one might fairly ask the Queſtion, Who had given the Council that Power? Becauſe neither James, nor the Queen his Mother, had ever been recogniz'd as the Preſumptive Succeſſors of Elizabeth, nor did the deceaſed Queen, 'till ſhe was at the very point of Death, reſolve with herſelf to declare that ſhe looked upon the King of Scotland as her lawful Succeſſor. The Council, 'tis true, had for their Foundation three ſorts of Titles concentring in the Perſon of King James. The firſt was a Nuncupative and Teſtamentary Right, from his having been nominated by Queen Elizabeth for her Succeſſor, and ſuch Nomination appearing to be confirm'd by her Will. But that Title was too weak a Baſis to ſupport the Council in the Proclamation I have juſt now Proclamation of K. James I, by the Council. Reflections on it.

His Titles to the Crown examined.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

now mentioned. It was a Maxim 'till then not known in England, that either a King or Queen had the Power to leave the Crown to whom they pleas'd by a bare Nomination, or even by a Will, without the Intervention and Concurrence of Parliament. Thus Edward VI transferr'd the Crown to Jane Grey, who relying only upon this Title could not ſtand her Ground.

THE ſecond Title on which the Council founded their Proclamation, was James's being Elizabeth's neareſt Heir. This could not be diſputed. But Henry VIIIth's Will, authoriz'd by an Act of Parliament which had never been revok'd, had regulated the Succeſſion after another manner. It was the Turn of the Deſcendants of the Queen (Ducheſs of Suffolk) to aſcend the Throne after the Death of Elizabeth. Therefore to proceed regularly, it would have been neceſſary in the firſt Place to have made that Act null and void, and to have quaſh'd the Will of Henry VIII, in order to let the Succeſſion run in a free Channel, and to preſerve the Rights of the elder Branch. Conſequently, this ſecond Title was liable to Objections which the Council had no Power to decide. We ſee an evident Proof of what I here advance in the Precautions taken by the late Parliament with regard to the Settlement of the Houſe of Hanover, that it may not be left to the Diſcretion of the Council to decide on whom the Crown is to devolve after the Death of Queen *Anne, and that it may not be in their Power to cauſe whom ſoever they think fit to be proclaim'd.

KING James's third Title may be call'd a Parliamentary Right, becauſe it was derived from a Statute made in the Reign of Henry VII, whereby the Succeſſion to the Crown was ſettled in that King's Family according to the Order of Nature, by conſtantly preferring the elder Branches to the younger. This third Title was undoubtedly the beſt, and yet Henry VIIIth's Will, which was authoriz'd by Act of Parliament, was directly againſt it. Notwithſtanding theſe Objections, the Council decided the Point, and cauſed James to be proclaimed, as having an indiſputable Right for his Foundation. There's no doubt but Secretary Cecil, who had great Credit in the Council, and who was devoted to the King of Scotland ſome time before Elizabeth's Death, and kept a ſecret Correſpondence with him, ſerv'd him with Zeal upon this Occaſion. James accepted of the Crown of England, which he had impatiently wiſh'd for a long time, without giving himſelf the Trouble of a nice Inquiry into the Foundation on which they had cauſed him to be proclaimed. But when he was ſeated on the Throne, he rejected the three ſorts of Titles that I have been ſpeaking of, and choſe to ſtand upon no other Foundation than an Hereditary Right, which deriv'd no Force from any Act of Parliament; as if the Succeſſion to the Crown of England was in itſelf Hereditary, and had no need to be ſupported by any Statutes. No King of England before him had formed any ſuch Pretenſion; or at leaſt, if any there was of that Opinion, he never made it known. For this was a Claim liable to ſo many Objections and Difficulties, that 'tis aſtoniſhing how this Prince, who was well acquainted with the Engliſh Hiſtory, could be ſo ſtrongly prepoſſeſs'd upon this Head. This is what I am now going in a few Words to ſhew.

JAMES I.

A Diſſertation upon Hereditary Right.

IF we examine the Hiſtory of England from the Beginning of the Monarchy to our own Time, we ſhall find no Law, no Cuſtom, on which 'tis poſſible to found the Hereditary Succeſſion to the Crown, independently of Acts of Parliament. Not to mention the Days of the Engliſh Saxons, where we find, during the Space of 600 Years, ſuch a Number of Examples contrary to any ſuch Law or Cuſtom, 'tis certain that the five firſt Kings who reign'd after the Conqueſt, including William the Conqueror, did not aſcend the Throne by Hereditary Right. If the Succeſſion after the Demiſe of the laſt of thoſe five Kings had prevailed in favour of the neareſt Heir, and had been but ſeldom or never diſcontinued, then indeed it might be ſaid, that Cuſtom ſupplies the Place of Law. But ſince 'tis evident, that ſuch Succeſſion has been very often interrupted, and that from William I, to Henry VIII, there never were above three Kings following one another that ſucceeded from Father to Son; what ground can there be for ſuch Hereditary Succeſſion, if we reject the Acts of Parliament which have ſettled the Succeſſion in certain Families? But ſuppoſing ſuch Hereditary Right of Succeſſion independent on Acts of Parliament were perfectly proved, it would follow that Henry VII, from whom James I derived his Origin, was not a lawful King, becauſe he was neither the legal Heir of Richard III. whom he ſucceeded, nor the legal Heir of the Houſe of Lancaſter; and becauſe that Family was not the legal Heir of Richard II. Henry VIII had ſo mean an Opinion of this Hereditary Right, that in his Will he ſilently paſſed over the Right of his elder Siſter's Branch, to ſettle the Succeſſion on the younger. Edward VI had as little ſcruple about it as Henry VIII, and he choſe to transfer the Crown to Jane Grey, to the Prejudice of his two Siſters. Nevertheleſs this Hereditary Right of Succeſſion independently of the Parliament, pretended to be indefeaſible, though ſo

* The Reader is to obſerve, that Mr. Rapin wrote theſe Reflections towards the Cloſe of Queen Anne's Reign.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

often altered, took ſuch ſtrong Root in the Reign of James I, that it has been impoſſible to pluck it up to this Day. 'Tis even now urg'd as an undeniable Principle, to ſhew that the Parliament has no Right to change the Order of Succeſſion, let what will happen. But on the other hand, 'tis certain that this was never the Sentiment of the Nation repreſented in Parliament*.

K. James's fondneſs for abſolute Power.

It will be demanded perhaps what Intereſt James I had more than his Predeceſſors to inſiſt upon this Right, which was ſo very uncertain. To be ſhort, he was prepoſſeſs'd to Infatuation in favour of the abſolute Power of Kingly Government; and he thought that a Power which depended upon Acts of Parliament, or upon the Approbation of the People, could not be ſo abſolute as that which was founded upon a Law of Nature, or an unalterable Cuſtom from the beginning of Monarchy. This conſtitutes one of the chief Characters of this Prince, and is a neceſſary Help to form a true Notion of him †.

Richard IId's Example a Warning to his Succeſſors.

AFTER the ſad Cataſtrophe of Richard II the Kings of England were cautious of referring their Prerogative to Arbitration, but avoided it as a dangerous Rock, chuſing rather to leave that Point in the Obſcurity in which they found it, than to make Efforts to clear it up to their Advantage; becauſe they were afraid of alarming the Engliſh, who have always been very jealous of their Liberties. Richard II miſcarry'd in ſuch a Manner, that no wonder his Misfortunes gave his Succeſſors reaſon to be apprehenſive of the like Fate. To know how far the Royal Prerogative extended, and wherein the Privileges of the People really conſiſted, was a very delicate and difficult Queſtion. The Hiſtory of England ſhews that the moſt prudent, and moſt able of its Kings, even they who were the moſt abſolute, have with exceeding Care avoided to trump up all Queſtions of this nature. All that they aim'd at was, to accompliſh by the Help of a Parliament, what they thought conducive to the Welfare of the Nation, or their own Intereſts, without affecting to act by an abſolute Power. If any of them ever deviated from this Rule, it was but ſeldom, and in ſuch a manner that the Subjects were not alarm'd at it, becauſe they did not ſee that they pretended to found the Extent of their Prerogative upon ſuch general Principles as admitted no Bounds. They regarded ſome particular Caſes, in which the Kings ſeemed to go too far, as ſuch that would have no Influence upon the reſt of their Conduct. The Civil Wars between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter, were, in this reſpect, very lucky for the Subjects, becauſe their Sovereigns were thereby under a Neceſſity of their Aſſiſtance. By Conſequence that was not a favourable Conjuncture to extend the Royal Prerogative. Henry VIIIth, the moſt abſolute of the Kings of England, attempted only once to break down the Fence, by advice of Cardinal Wolſey; but when he ſaw that the People began to take Alarm, he choſe rather to truckle than to ſupport the Enterprizes of his ambitious Miniſter. Without taking upon himſelf therefore to decide what he was able to do by Virtue of his Sole Prerogative, he continually back'd it with the Authority of Parliament, and by that means did whatever he pleaſed, without raiſing the Jealouſy of his Subjects. Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, purſued the ſame Maxims, and therein found their Account. James I, arriv'd from Scotland with a Mind fraught with other Principles, and other Prejudices. Not that the Kings of Scotland were more independent than thoſe of England; on the contrary, he had a Notion that Kings were no where ſo dependent as in Scotland, and that in Scotland it could be nothing but an Uſurpation of the People. He had reign'd thirty-ſix Years in that Kingdom, and could never extricate himſelf from that uneaſy Dependency. It was the People, or States, who had placed him on the Throne during the Life of the Queen his Mother, and they maintained him on it. It was that ſame People who murmur'd, and actually roſe in Arms, as often as the King or his Miniſters did not govern to their Mind, and who obliged him to keep in one certain Path whenever he ſhew'd an Inclination to go out of it. It was that which render'd his Dependency hateful to him, and which made him think it the

His miſtaken Notion about the Prerogative of King and his Paſſion for abſolute Authority.

* Le Clerc obſerves, that the ancient Scots had the ſame Cuſtom, and that it was with great Difficulty, and very late, that the contrary was introduced, as may be ſeen by Buchanan's Hiſtory of Scotland.

† Le Clerc obſerves in another Note upon this Paſſage, that it would have been much better both for himſelf and his Poſterity, if they had follow'd other Maxims. He refers here to what he had formerly ſaid, p. 199, of his Bibliotheque Choiſie, Tom. VIII, where he has the following Reflection. "That if James VI had made a "right Improvement of his Tutor Buchanan's Lectures, he would not have had ſuch unhappy Diſputes with "his Parliaments; and if his Son had been well read in Buchanan's Works, and enter'd into his Sentiments, he "would never have left his Head upon a Scaffold: And his Grandſon perhaps, who was of his own Name, if he "had been train'd up in the ſame Notions, would have died in Peace upon the Throne. If they had been all "perſuaded that they were the Protectors, and not the Maſters of the Laws of their Kingdom, they would "undoubtedly have lived happily. If in Monarchical States, Princes were Republicans, their Subjects would "become all Royaliſts, by Reaſon of the Confidence they would repoſe in their Kings. Princes never have "more Authority than when they think and ſeem fully convinc'd, that they have no Right to augment ſuch Au"thority ad infinitum; and the People are never more obedient than when they are induced by the Moderation of their Princes.

Foedera Tom XVI.

greateſt Happineſs of a King to be deliver'd from that Yoke of which he had long felt the Pain. It was alſo for this very Reaſon, that while he ſtudy'd Politicks, he approv'd of the Arguments uſed by ſeveral Authors in favour of the Independency of Kings in general, as if there ought to be no differenceat all between Monarchical Governments: That was his Favourite Maxim: It was this that he inceſſantly countenanced, ſometimes openly, at other times more obſcurely; and the only way to pleaſe him was to be, or at leaſt to ſeem to be, perſuaded that Kings had a Right to do whatever they liſt. Yet he could never get the Scots to admit this Principle; nevertheleſs he hop'd for better Succeſs in England, where he knew, that ſince the Reign of Henry VII, the Kings and Queens had done what they pleas'd with the People. But inſtead of aſcribing this Power to the Prudence of thoſe Monarchs, who had the Policy never to ſeparate the Royal Prerogative from the Authority of Parliament, he attributed it to another Cauſe, viz. the natural Right of Sovereigns. The thing which rivetted this Notion in him, was the Flattery of ſome Engliſh Courtiers, who ſoon perceiving his Genius and Character, endeavour'd to creep into his Favour through that Paſſage. It was reported, that an honeſt Scotſman in his Retinue, obſerving theſe Flatteries, cry'd out, That they were enough to ſpoil the beſt King in the World. Be this true or not, James made Efforts, as long as he liv'd, to reconcile the People to that Arbitrary Power which he aim'd at, not only by his Conduct but by his Speeches. He us'd however a little Artifice, which was quickly diſcovered, and that was this: The Engliſh being obliged to own that there was a Royal Prerogative, which he himſelf extended to a Degree of abſolute Authority, he complained perpetually that they ſtruck at the Royal Prerogative, if they departed ever ſo little from his Principles. 'Twas this that bred Animoſities and Quarrels betwixt him and his Parliaments, which made him always unhappy, notwithſtanding the Peace he enjoy'd during the whole Courſe of his Reign. From theſe Diſputes aroſe frequent Diſſolutions of Parliaments, and by neceſſary Conſequence, Monopolies, and the other illegal Methods which the King's Miniſters put in Practice in order to help him to Money. This occaſioned Complaints and Murmurings among the People, by which he loſt their Eſteem and Affection; and in the End, Foreigners put Contempt upon a Prince who had no hopes of any great Aſſiſtance from his Subjects. I ſhall ſay no more of it upon this Head, becauſe I have no Deſign to write a Hiſtory of King James here; but only to ſhew what were his Principles with regard to the Authority of Kings.

James I.

K. James's Principles of Religion.

It is much more difficult to know exactly what was this Prince's Religion. His Father and Mother were both Roman Catholicks, but he had been trained up from his Infancy in the Proteſtant Religion as it was eſtabliſh'd in Scotland, namely the Presbyterian, yet was almoſt always ſuſpected to favour the Popiſh. As ſoon as he arriv'd in England, he profeſs'd the Religion of the Engliſh Church, and ſeem'd, at leaſt in outward Appearance, to be join'd to it all the remaining Part of his Life. He diſcover'd an implacable Hatred to the Preſbyterians or Puritans, with whom he had been educated, while upon all Occaſions he openly favour'd the Roman Catholicks; and there are ſome Perſons who ſtick not to affirm, that he made a Promiſe not long before his Death, that he would embrace the Roman Catholick Religion. I ſhall not here pretend to examine all the ſeeming Contradictions to this Aſſertion, but ſhall only make ſome Remarks which may ſerve to ſet them in a clear Light.

In the firſt Place, it muſt be remember'd what I ſaid in the laſt Reign, that Queen Elizabeth being always in fear of ſome Storm from Scotland, had form'd a powerful Party in that Kingdom, which conſiſted altogether of Proteſtants, and particularly of Miniſters of the Reformed Church, who never failed to inſpire the People with terrible Apprehenſions of the Danger of their Religion, as often as the King ſeem'd to depart from the Intereſts of England. If the King adher'd to this Party, he was kept in Bondage; and if he abandon'd it, he preſently ſaw his own Court and the whole Kingdom full of Troubles and Diviſions. This was enough to make him hate the Agents that Elizabeth made uſe of, as well as the Religion which ſerv'd them for a Cloak. On the other hand, the Catholicks, who had no other Means to execute their Projects but the King's Good-will, flatter'd him to an extraordinary Degree; and in order to attach him to their Party, endeavour'd to convince him that the Principles of the Proteſtant Religion were againſt the Authority of Kings, as he found by fatal Experience; for if he ſcrupled ever ſo little to behave as the Synods would have him, the whole Church roſe againſt him. They ſuggeſted moreover, that the Presbyterian Government of the Church of Scotland was a continual Source of Rebellions, and that the Presbyterians not being able to bear a Head in the Church, followed the ſame Principles with reſpect to the Government of the State. By theſe Inſinuations the King was more and more embitter'd againſt the Presbyterian Government, and at laſt he came to hate it mortally: But he did not dare to give too publick Proofs of it, 'till aſcending the Throne of England, he found himſelf at full Liberty to declare War againſt it.

His Enmity to the Preſbyterians.

Mr

FOEDERA. Tom. XVI.

My ſecond Remark is, that James I, having a Notion that the Presbyterians, who thought the Government of their Church the moſt perfect, could not but wiſh to ſee the Government of the State on the ſame Baſis, he inferr'd from thence that they were Enemies to Kingly Power; and he confounded theſe two things continually, as if they had been inſeparable. He looked upon the Presbyterians as Enemies to Monarchy, and all that had not the ſame Notions with himſelf of the unlimited Power of Kings, as real Puritans. Therefore there was a two-fold Puritaniſm in England, during the whole Courſe of his Reign, the one in the Church, and the other in the State; which nevertheleſs the King and his Miniſters affected inceſſantly to confound with one another, becauſe they hated both alike. This Notion has been perpetuated to our Times, and makes it ſo difficult to define the Nature of Toryiſm and Whiggiſm, becauſe the Principles of thoſe two Parties refer ſometimes to the State, at other times to Religion.

K. James's Averſion to War.

I ſhall obſerve in the third Place, that James I being naturally timorous, had an extraordinary Averſion to War. Having in the then Situation of Affairs in Europe no War to fear but from the Roman Catholicks, he endeavoured to gain their Good-will by favouring their Religion as much as was in his Power. Therefore nothing could give him greater Uneaſineſs than to be treated as a Perſecutor of the Catholicks. He defended himſelf againſt that Charge with ſo much Zeal and Vigour, that, in order to let the World ſee he did not perſecute the Catholicks, he fell into the other Extreme, and gave Reaſon to believe that he thought the Perſons of both Religions had an equal Title to his Favour, as evidently appeared by his Apology for the Oath of Allegiance. The Jeſuits were the only Perſons he could not bear with, by reaſon of the Doctrine they held, that Kings might be depos'd, and even murder'd. There was too great a Harmony betwixt this Doctrine and Puritaniſm for him to perceive it without Anxiety. By purſuing this Method, the King hoped to live in Peace with the whole World; with the Proteſtants, by actually profeſſing the Religion of the Church of England, and with the Roman Catholicks, by exempting them from the Severity of the Laws which were in Force againſt them. But he did not obtain by this Conduct what he propoſed. The Catholicks were not contented with this ſmall Favour, and the Proteſtants thought he was a Catholick in his Heart.

My fourth and laſt Remark is, That this Prince, who had ſtudy'd a great deal, and had a vaſt Opinion of his own Knowledge, had formed to himſelf in all appearance a particular Religion to his own Taſte. Puritaniſm was in all likelihood entirely excluded out of the Plan which he had formed, and the Hierarchy admitted, excluſive of a Power over crowned Heads. As to the Doctrines which make a Separation betwixt the two Religions, Catholick and Proteſtant, James ſhewed upon ſeveral Occaſions, and even in his Speeches to the Parliament, that he only looked upon them as meer School-Queſtions, and that they might either be believed or not believed without any danger to Salvation. Therefore it ſeems that in the Plan which he had formed to himſelf, he had no regard to Religion, farther than as it might be uſeful or prejudicial to Government, and eſpecially to the abſolute Power of Kings. This, according to him, was the only thing neceſſary. Every thing that oppoſed this Principle was to be rejected, and what made neither for nor againſt it might be tolerated. If it were not for fear of being too tedious, I could ſupport what I aſſert by ſuch Proofs as are far beyond Conjecture.

After what I have now ſaid of the Principles of James I, with regard to Government and Religion, it will be eaſy to account for all his Actions that fall within theſe two Articles. It remains now for me to mention ſome other things which may help to give a fuller Diſplay of his Character. And I chooſe to inſiſt the longer upon this Matter, becauſe the few conſiderable Events of this Reign are meer Conſequences and Dependencies of the King's Honour and Genius.

I have already ſaid that this Prince was ſenſible he had no martial Qualities. So that with all poſſible Care he avoided a War, and ſometimes, even to the Prejudice of his Honour, and of the Intereſt of his State. He covered his natural Timorouſneſs with the ſpecious Pretext of Juſtice and Equity, which did not allow Princes to cauſe Blood to be ſhed for Trifles. This Principle was very good in it ſelf, but he puſh'd the Conſequences of it ſo far, that he thought himſelf in no caſe obliged to the Neceſſity of taking Arms. He ſaw the Deſigns which were formed at Rome, in Spain, in France, in Germany, to ruin the Proteſtant Religion, without thinking himſelf oblig'd to concern himſelf about them, otherwiſe than by Recommendations, which were always unſucceſsful, becauſe the Foreign Princes well knew that they might reject them with Impunity. By this means he had indeed the good Luck to live out all his Reign without a War, which he deſired might be remark'd as the Perfection of Happineſs. But with all this, one may venture to affirm, that before his, there was no Reign more unhappy or more inglorious for the Engliſh.

FOEDERA: Tom. XVI.

K. James's Pedantry.

James I had been a great Student: He had for one of his Preceptors the famous Buchanan, one of the greateſt Genius's at that time in Europe. But I know not whether it was through his own Fault, or his Preceptor's (who had not rightly diſtinguiſh'd the Learning fit for a King, from that which is only proper for private Men) that he had acquired a certain pedantic Knowledge which was only admired by Flatterers, but ridicul'd by Men of Honour. He lov'd to make long Harangues full of Diviſions and Sub-diviſions, more like the Lectures of a Profeſſor than the Speeches of a King. But an Oſtentation of his Learning was not his only View; what he chiefly aim'd at was, to convey into thoſe artful Pieces ſuch Principles as he had at Heart touching Government. In the beginning he affected the Uſe of Expreſſions which were capable of a Senſe favourable to the Subject, but ſuch as in the main were not prejudicial to his own Principles. For Example, in his firſt Speech to the Parliament he ſaid, "That the Difference betwixt a rightful King and an uſurping "Tyrant is this; viz. The proud and "ambitious Tyrant thinks that his Kingdom and People are ordained for the "Satisfaction of his unreaſonable Appetites: But the juſt King acknowledges "on the contrary, that he is only ordained to procure the Wealth and Proſperity of his People, and he makes his "greateſt Felicity therein to conſiſt". All that can be gathered from theſe Words is, that a juſt King conducts himſelf by other Maxims than a Tyrant. It might even be inferr'd from it, that the Speech-maker had a Deſign to follow the Rules of Juſtice and Equity. But there was not one Word in it which tended to ſhew that the Subjects might refuſe to obey a Tyrant when he departed from thoſe Maxims. This appeared manifeſt, becauſe upon another Occaſion he told the two Houſes, in plain Terms, "That it was as much "Sedition in the Subjects to diſpute what "a King might do in the Height of his "Power, as it was Blaſphemy to pretend "to ſet Bounds to the Power of God". It muſt be own'd, that he was a great Maſter in the Art of chooſing Expreſſions of this ſort, which ſeemed to carry a great deal in them, but ſignify'd nothing; or others, which though he ſeemed to make uſe of without Deſign, conceal'd a Meaning in them of great Importance; as for Example, when in the above-mentioned Speech he thanked the People of England for having received and embraced him as their lawful and undoubted King. If I had room here, I could produce a great Number of other Examples.

Remark on his Speeches to Parliament.

YET theſe Methods did not anſwer his Hopes. Some did not underſtand him, and others feign'd not to underſtand him, 'till at length he was obliged to explain himſelf more clearly, both by Word of Mouth, and by his Actions. Conſequently, it could no longer be doubted that he challenged a Right of governing with a deſpotic Power; though he would always have it ſuppoſed that it was not his Intention to make uſe of that Power to the Oppreſſion of his Subjects. For this Reaſon, he thought it very ſtrange, that the Parliament ſhould offer to intermeddle in any Affair which related to the Government of the State, or to examine the Abuſes of it. This, according to him, was a Matter above the Capacity of the Parliament, Ne ſutor ultra crepidam: Tractent fabrilia Fabri. If the Neceſſity of his Affairs engaged him ſometimes to permit the two Houſes to enquire into the Grievances of the People, he pretended that they had no other Right than to repreſent thoſe Grievances to him, and that from his Equity they ought to wait for what Remedy he thought convenient. And if they offered to go farther, he diſſolv'd the Parliament, and committed to Priſon ſuch Members as had appeared the moſt zealous for ſupporting the Liberties of the People. He choſe rather to go without the Money he ask'd, than to ſuffer any Enquiry to be made into the Extent of his Prerogative. By this means he was under an abſolute Neceſſity to employ unuſual Methods to get Money; ſuch as Monopolies, forc'd Benevolences, and other things of that Nature. But as theſe Methods did not always anſwer his Expectation, and finding himſelf oblig'd to call another Parliament, he was willing that his Conſent to the Abolition of thoſe Monopolies ſhould be interpreted as the pure Effect of his Complaiſance, and of his great Affection for his People, and he expected large Subſidies for his Reward. On the other Hand, when he ſaw himſelf oblig'd to ſtoop ſo low as to deſire Money of the Houſe of Commons, he did it with ſo much Haughtineſs, and ſuch an Air of abſolute Power, as if he had been a warlike triumphant King, with a victorious Army at the Gates of London, though his Fleet and his Troops were always in a ſorry Condition.

His Straits for Money.

THESE Principles concerning abſolute Power were the Cauſe alſo that he put out frequent Proclamations. Twenty of the preceding Reigns had not produced ſo many as this alone. The King would fain have given the ſame Force to them as to Acts of Parliament; but he could not ſucceed in it, becauſe of the Reſiſtance of the common People and the Judges. No wonder if with ſuch Principles he never agreed with his Parliaments. The Commons eſpecially were not in the Humour to ſuffer themſelves to be robb'd all at once of the Privileges vileges which they looked upon as an Hereditary Right of the Engliſh Nation. On the other hand, the King was vex'd to the laſt degree that he could not beat his Maxims into them, neither by his Addreſs, nor by his Menaces. This Diſagreement betwixt the King and Parliament makes up the moſt conſiderable part of the Hiſtory of this Reign; tho' we find but few Traces of it in the Acts of the Fœdera.

His first Act of Arbitrary Power.

It will be thought ſtrange, perhaps, that a Prince who never had any War upon his hands, ſhould ſo often be in want of extraordinary Supplies from his Parliament, or that he ſhould make uſe of unuſual Methods to augment his Revenues. But the Wonder ceaſes, when 'tis conſider'd that the Finances were never managed with leſs Regularity and Precaution than in this Reign: The King was liberal, or rather prodigal to an Exceſs. He gave without Diſcretion, and without enquiring whether there was Money in his Coffers, and ſcarce ever call'd for an Account of his Finances. He maintain'd three Courts, viz. His own, the Queen's, and that of the Prince his Son, with an incredible Expence. He lov'd to enrich thoſe who were about his Perſon, as well Scots as Engliſh; and all theſe things together made him always poor and deep in Debt. He would fain have had the Parliament to furniſh him with all the Money neceſſary to ſatisfy his profuſe Temper, but he neglected the Uſe of the moſt proper Means to gain their Affection.

His Laviſhneſs, and Miſmanagement of the Finances.

His Proclamation againſt the Crowds of Spectators.

After having given a general Idea of the Temper, the Genius and Character of James I, I ſhall lightly paſs over the firſt fourteen Years of his Reign, in which we find but few Facts of Importance. To do this with the greater Clearneſs, I ſhall divide what I have to ſay into five Articles. The firſt ſhall be Domeſtick Affairs; the ſecond, thoſe which relate to Religion; the third, Affairs with France; the fourth, Affairs with Spain; the fifth, Affairs with the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

Article I.

Affairs Domeſtick.

James's joyful Reception in England.

JAMES being inform'd of the Death of Elizabeth, and that he had been proclaim'd King of England, ſet out a few Days after for London. He was received every where in his new Kingdom with ſuch Acclamations, and ſuch extravagant Joy, that it look'd as if the People had been vaſt Gainers by this Change of their Sovereign. James was charm'd with all the Marks of Love and Eſteem which he ſaw in the People of England. Yet he gave them two Cauſes of Diſcontent upon the very Road; firſt, by cauſing a Pick-pocket, who had been taken in the Fact, to be hang'd upon the Spot, without any Form of Law; in which he acted directly contrary to the Privileges of Engliſhmen. In the ſecond place, he caus'd a Proclamation to be publiſh'd, forbidding the great Concourſe of People about his Perſon, either for fear of ſome Miſchief intended to him, or elſe becauſe he thought that ſo much ſtriving to come near his Perſon to ſee him, ſhew'd too little reſpect. Robert Cecil, Secretary of State, who held a ſecret Correſpondence with him during the laſt Years of Elizabeth, went to preſent his Reſpects to him at York, and was very well received by him, quite contrary to the Opinion of thoſe who being ignorant of this Secret, and knowing that he had been a great Enemy to the Earl of Eſſex, were perſuaded that in this new Reign he would be diſgrac'd; for indeed he was the only one of that Earl's Enemies who found Favour with the King. Sir Walter Raleigh and ſome others of the ſame Party were receiv'd very coldly. The King ſtopp'd ſome Days at Theobald's *, a Seat of Secretary Cecil's, and there conferr'd Honours and Dignities upon a great Number of People.

His Stay at Theobalds.

The Face of the Court of England was entirely chang'd by the Acceſſion of King James to the Crown. The late Queen's chief Favourites were diſgrac'd in this new Reign, Cecil only excepted, who was afterwards made Earl of Saliſbury. The Howard Family, who never had Acceſs to Elizabeth after the tragical Death of the Duke of Norfolk, was advanc'd to the Pinnacle of Honour. The Brother of that Duke was made Earl of Northampton, Governour of the Cinque-Ports, and Keeper of the Privy-Seal; and the Son of that Duke was made Earl of Suffolk, and Great Chamberlain. The Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland, whom the deceaſed Queen had always look'd upon as her Enemies, were admitted into the new King's Privy-Council. But in all this there's nothing ſurprizing, becauſe 'tis no more than what commonly happens in every new Reign: Nor is it very ſtrange to find James advancing many Scotſmen to Engliſh Dignities, tho' it could not be done without raiſing the Jealouſy of the Engliſh. And on the other hand, 'tis no wonder that ſome Perſons could not ſee theſe Changes without murmuring, and without making Efforts to change a Government which was againſt their Intereſt. Not long after James's Arrival at London, a Conſpiracy, or rather a Project of a Conſpiracy was form'd to Cecil made Earl of Saliſbury.

Advancement of the Howard Family.

A Plot to ſet up Arabella Steuart on the Throne.

* Mr. Rapin has a Note in his large Hiſtory of this Reign, that the King bought this Houſe afterwards, and that it belong'd to the late Duke of Portland.

place

place Arabella Steuart on the Throne. She was first Cousin to the King, being the Daughter of the younger Brother of the King his Father. This Circumstance alone shews how rash this Project was, supposing it to have been real; because James did not ascend the Throne of England by the Right of his Father, but that of his Mother. By consequence, Arabella, who tho' of the Steuart Family, stood in a very remote Degree of Relation to the late Queen Mary, had no Claim to the Crown of England, the rather because James had three Children. The Authors of this Conspiracy were the Lords Grey, Cobham, Carew, Sir Walter Raleigh, and two Priests, named Clarke, and Watson. These Conspirators apply'd themselves to the Count d' Aremberg, who was come to London from the Arch-duke Albert, in order to congratulate the King upon his Accession to the Crown of England. Their Aim was to get 600,000 Crowns from the Arch-duke, which they were to share among them. 'Tis very probable that the Count d'Aremberg only gave ear to the Proposal on purpose to ruin Sir Walter Raleigh, who of all the English was the most formidable to the Spaniards; and that this very Ambassador discover'd the Conspiracy to the King. However this be, the Conspirators were apprehended and condemn'd to die; but none of them were executed, except a Brother of the Lord Cobham, and the two Priests. The King order'd that the others should be remanded to the Tower, and Raleigh liv'd there twelve Years; during which he wrote his History of the World.

Coronation of King James and his Queen.

THE Coronation of the King and Queen was perform'd at Westminster with the usual Solemnities on the 25th of July 1603, being St. James's Day.

THE Plague which rag'd in London when the King arriv'd there, did not permit him to assemble the Parliament before the 25th of March 1604. The Proclamation which he issued for the calling of this first Parliament was drawn up in an extraordinary Stile. The King told the Electors what sort of Men he would have them depute to the House of Commons, and not only exhorted them to make such a Choice, but even threatned them in case they did not obey his Proclamation, and declar'd before-hand that the Corporations which neglected to put his Orders in execution, should for such their Disobedience be for ever deprived of their Liberties and Privileges. This was what no King of England ever did before James.

His extraordinary Proclamation for calling his first Parliament.

Character of his first Speech.

HIS first Speech to the Parliament was of an extraordinary Length, and very much confounded with Divisions and Subdivisions, so that at first reading 'tis scarce intelligible. This Confusion gave him an Opportunity to drop some Maxims in it, of which few People perhaps knew the Drift at that time; tho' his Method of Government made it very plain in the Sequel. This Speech was generally disapprov'd by reason of its excessive Length. The Puritans in particular were very much disgusted at it, because the King said, They were insufferable in any well govern'd Commonwealth. The People in general took it very ill that the King in so solemn an Act should so publickly discover his Bias to the Romish Religion, and his Design to protect and favour the Professors of it: Nor were the Catholicks themselves pleased with his cautious Conduct towards them. They had expected greater Favours from him. But what was most offensive to the English, was the King's Demand in Parliament for the uniting of the two Kingdoms into one State, in which they saw no Advantage. He expatiated very much upon this last Article, and with extraordinary Force display'd all the Reasons he could think of to bring the Parliament into this Union, among which were some that appear too childish. For Example, he said that he was the Head of the two Kingdoms; that he was the Shepherd, and the two Nations his Flock; that he was the Husband, and the Island of Great Britain the Wife. By favour of these Comparisons he inferr'd, that it would be unreasonable to offer to oblige him to separate himself from a part of his Body, to divide his Flock into two Parts, and to engage him in Polygamy, by forcing him to maintain two Wives. Nevertheless, he was so very much conceited of the Solidity of those Arguments, that he made no scruple to tell the Parliament that he did not apprehend he should meet with any Opponents, but the Ignorant, the Blind, the Turbulent and Dissaffected. He went still farther after the Session of the Parliament was at an End: For the two Houses having appointed Commissioners to consider of the Advantages and Disadvantages of this Union, without staying for the Report of those Commissioners, he publish'd a Proclamation, wherein by his single Authority he united the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland into one Body; and of his own Accord, assum'd the Title of King of Great Britain, 'till such time as the Parliament of the two Kingdoms should confirm this Union. It must be observ'd that this Proclamation was publish'd about a Month after another appointing the Day and Place where the Parliament's Commissioners were to assemble.

ſemble. He alſo caus'd new Money to be coin'd, on which the Union was repreſented by Emblems and Inſcriptions; and all this was done even before the Commiſſioners met. But we ſhall find afterwards, that he had the Mortification to ſee this Union which he had ſo earneſtly deſired, rejected by the Parliament.

They confirm his Title to the Crown.

THOUGH the King did not deſire the two Houſes to ſtrengthen his Title to the Crown of England, as thinking he had no need of it, yet they made an Act to confirm it, which was perhaps a great Mortification to him.

His Quarrel with the Commons about a controverted Election.

IN this firſt Parliament happen'd the firſt Quarrel betwixt the King, and the Lower Houſe, on account of a Controverted Election. The Houſe having determin'd the Queſtion which was put upon that Head, the King undertook to make them alter their Vote, and order'd the Commons to have a Conference with the Lords. They abſolutely refus'd to take a Step ſo contrary to their Privileges, and gave the Council their Reaſons, which in all appearance the Council thought very ſtrong: Nevertheleſs, the King, after his deſiſting from the Demand of the Conference with the Lords, ſent an abſolute Order to the Lower Houſe to confer upon that Head with the Judges of the Kingdom. It was not without a vaſt deal of Difficulty that the Commons comply'd ſo far, though they were reſolv'd at the ſame time to make no Alteration in their Vote. But the Moderation of the * Member whoſe Election had been confirm'd, prevented a Breach betwixt the King and the Houſe. He deſiſted from his Right, and ſo the Houſe proceeded to a new Election. Thus early did the King attempt to domineer over the Houſe of Commons.

Charter for a Monopoly of the Trade to Italy and Spain.

THE King having made a Peace with Spain this Year, granted Letters Patent to a Company of Merchants for the ſole Trade to Spain and Italy. But this Monopoly, which did a very great Prejudice to the Nation, was aboliſh'd the Year following by an Act of Parliament.

Gunpowder-Plot.

IN 1605, while the King was in a very happy quiet State to all appearance, he was in extreme Danger, though he knew it not, from one of the moſt horrid Conſpiracies that ever was invented: I mean the Gunpowder-Plot, the Story of which is ſo well known, that it would be loſs of Time to inſiſt upon it here. It is ſufficient to ſay in two Words, that certain Papiſts, aſſiſted by two Jeſuits, had concerted Meaſures to blow up the King, the Prince, and the two Houſes of Parliament, by means of ſome Barrels of Powder which they had plac'd in a Cellar; and that this Conſpiracy was diſcover'd by a Sort of Miracle. The Parliament being aſſembled ſome Days after this, the King, according to Cuſtom, made a long Speech, the Purport of which was only to excuſe the Romiſh Religion, and to throw the Conſpiracy which the People held in Abhorrence, at the Doors of ſome private Perſons. Yet it is true, he ſaid in his Speech, that many honeſt Men, blinded perhaps with the Opinions of Popery, as if they be not ſound in the real Preſence, the Number of the Sacraments, and ſome ſuch School-Queſtions, do either not know, or not believe at leaſt, all the true Grounds of Popery, which is indeed the Myſtery of Iniquity. And therefore we juſtly confeſs that many Papiſts, eſpecially our Forefathers, laying their only Truſt upon Chriſt, and his Merits, may be ſaved; deteſting in that Point, and thinking that Cruelty of Puritans worthy of Fire that will allow no Salvation to any Papiſt. It is manifeſt that his Deſign was to divert the Indignation of the People upon the Puritans. But the Pretence he had for it was ill choſen, becauſe if there were any Puritans who were guilty in this reſpect towards the Papiſts, it would have been a Rarity to have found one Papiſt who was innocent of that Charge with regard to the Proteſtants.

King's Speech upon it.

Execution of ſome of the Conſpirators.

IN 1606, notwithſtanding the King ſo much deſir'd to turn the Animoſity of the People upon the Puritans, he could not help bringing eight of the Conſpirators to a Trial, who were condemn'd and executed, beſides the two Jeſuits, who were convicted not only of being privy to the Conſpiracy, but of having likewiſe approv'd of it. That was all the Revenge which was taken on the Conſpirators, though they were a much greater Number.

Oath of Allegiance admini ſter'd.

IT was upon Occaſion of the Gunpowder Plot that the Parliament ordered every Subject to take an Oath, call'd the Oath of Allegiance, by which they own'd the King to be entirely independent on every foreign Power, and that the Pope had no Authority either over his Perſon or his Dominions. But before this Oath paſs'd in Parliament, the King took Care to correct certain Terms of it which might have been offenſive to the honeſt Catholicks, I mean ſuch as were not ſlaviſhly bigotted to the Pope. Notwithſtanding this, the Court of Rome made ſuch Efforts to divert the Papiſts of England from taking this Oath, that the King was oblig'd to publiſh a long Apology, in which he ſhew'd that he had always favour'd his Roman Catholick Subjects equally with the Proteſtants.

His Apology for it.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

THE Parliament being pretty well ſatisfy'd with the King, granted him a very conſiderable Sum, though he was at that time in Peace with all the World. This Money came very ſeaſonably to enable him to give a moſt magnificent Reception to the King of Denmark, his Brother-in-Law, who arrived to pay him a Viſit. The King of Denmark was hardly gone, but the Prince of Vaudemont, Son to the Duke of Lorrain, came alſo to pay the King a Viſit, which conſum'd all the Money that the Parliament had granted him.

His Reception of the King of Denmark, and of the Prince Vaudemont.

THE Parliament, which aſſembled again in 1607, rejected the Union of the two Kingdoms, without regard to what the King had already order'd. They only repeal'd certain Laws which were called Hoſtile, and which related ſolely to the frequent Differences between the Inhabitants of the two Frontiers. The King had put forth another Proclamation, by which he declar'd thoſe in both Kingdoms who were born ſince his Acceſſion to the Crown of England, naturaliz'd. They were call'd Poſt-Nati, to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe born before his Acceſſion, who were called Ante-Nati. But the Parliament by not confirming that Proclamation, render'd it of no Effect, becauſe the Judges did not regulate their Decrees by Proclamations, but by the Laws. The rejecting of the Union of the two Kingdoms gave the King an extreme Diſguſt to Parliaments. On the other hand, the People murmur'd very much, not only upon account of the King's ſuperfluous Expences, which tended wholly to enrich his Favourites, and particularly the Scots, but on account of the great Number of Proclamations, which ſeem'd to imply a deſpotic Power in the Sovereign. There was actually an Inſurrection in Northamptonſhire, but it was ſoon ſuppreſs'd; and the Parliament, in which a Storm began to ariſe, was prorogued, and the Prorogation thereof continued to the 19th of February, 1610.

BEFORE the Year 1607 was expir'd, the King had Advice that the famous Earl of Tyrone, whom he had pardon'd in the beginning of his Reign, had quitted Ireland, and given out in foreign Parts, that it was by reaſon of the Oppreſſions which the Roman Catholicks ſuffer'd in that Iſland. Upon this the King, who did not care to be reckon'd a Perſecutor of thoſe People, publiſh'd an Apology, wherein he ſtrenuouſly refuted this Charge.

King James's Apology againſt the Charge of Perſecutor of the Papiſts.

NOTHING conſiderable happen'd in the Year 1608 but the Death of the High-Treaſurer Sackvil Earl of Dorſet, who was ſucceeded by Robert Cecil Earl of Salisbury.

Cecil made High-Treaſurer.

IN 1609 there came out two Books printed with the King's Privity, in which the Authors maintain'd the moſt extravagant Maxims of Deſpotick Power. The Parliament which aſſembled in the Year following was going to take Cognizance of this Affair, but the King took Care to ſtifle it, by publiſhing a Proclamation for ſuppreſſing thoſe Books, after he had licens'd them with his Imprimatur.

JAMES I. The King firſt licenſes and then ſuppreſſes two books in favour of Arbitrary Power.

THE Seſſion of Parliament which had been put off to the 19th of February, 1610, was opened by Commiſſioners, who repreſented to the Houſe of Commons the preſſing Neceſſities of the King, the unavoidable Expences which he had been engag'd in, and the Greatneſs of his Debts. From thence they took Occaſion to deſire the Houſe to grant him a Supply proportionable to his Occaſions, and gave Aſſurance, that when that was done the King would conſent to have the Grievances of the People enquir'd into. But the Houſe, inſtead of ſpeedily granting the Money which the King demanded, rang with Complaints againſt the Government. Some complain'd of the King's Prodigality, and particularly of the exorbitant Grants he had given to the Scots. Others publickly ſaid, that the King aim'd to ſubvert the Conſtitution of the Government of England, and to render himſelf abſolute. Some others inſiſted particularly upon the extravagant Power of the High Commiſſion, which, under pretence of purging the Church of the Puritans, oppreſs'd all ſuch as would not own a deſpotick Power in the Sovereign. The King being inform'd of theſe Declamations, ſent for the two Houſes to Whitehall, and made ſuch a Speech to them as gave them fully to underſtand, that he intended to act after what manner he thought fit; and that if he did not govern tyrannically, it was only owing to his Moderation and Choice, and not to a want of Power and Authority. Then it was that he told them, "That as it is Blaſphemy to diſpute what God may do, ſo it is Sedition in Subjects to diſpute what a King may do in the Height of his Power. And as he will not have his Subjects diſcourſe of what he may, ſo he will do nothing but what ſhall be conſonant to Law and Reaſon." This was a perfect Commentary on what he had ſaid in his firſt Speech to the Parliament, relating to the Conduct of a juſt King, and that of a Tyrant. He made many other Harangues to the two Houſes, and concluded with ſaying, that ſince he had gone ſo far as to ask the Money, his Reputation would be too great a Sufferer if he did not obtain it. The Commons, who did not expect ſuch clear and poſitive Declarations, and who had taken no Meaſures to defend their Rights, judg'd that that for this Time it was proper to diſſemble their Reſentment, and granted him a Subſidy, though much leſs than what he had deſir'd; and then the Parliament was prorogued.

They grant him a Supply.

Henry created Prince of Wales.

DURING this Seſſion, the King created Henry his eldeſt Son Prince of Wales, and ſettled his Houſhold: And not long after this, he ſent an Ambaſſador to Spain to negotiate the Prince's Marriage there with a Daughter of Philip III.

Deſign to match him to the Infanta of Spain.

Parliament diſſolv'd.

THE Parliament meeting again in October with the ſame Reſentments againſt the King, was diſſolv'd by Proclamation. Every body imagined that the King would call no Parliaments; which was Matter of Joy and Triumph to the Courtiers, who, glad to ſee the King freed from ſuch a Dependance, minded nothing but Feaſt and Diverſions.

Robert Carr's Riſe in the King's Favour.

IT was during this that the King choſe for his Favourite a Scotſman named Robert Carr, a young Man without Education, Knowledge or Experience; who nevertheleſs became very powerful in a ſhort ſpace of Time, and was made Viſcount of Rocheſter.

IN 1612, Frederick V, Elector Palatine, came over to the Court of England to marry the King's Daughter the Princeſs Elizabeth: Upon which Occaſion nothing was followed for one while but Entertainments and Diverſions. But this Joy was damp'd by the Death of the Prince of Wales, which happen'd juſt as they were going to celebrate the Nuptials of the Princeſs his Siſter. All Hiſtorians agree that he was an accompliſh'd Prince; and ſome have been pleaſed to inſinuate, as if the King had caus'd him to be poiſon'd. But theirs are only looſe Conjectures, inſufficient to prove a Fact of this Nature.

Prince Henry's Death.

Elector Palatine's Marriage to the King's Daughter.

THE Elector's Marriage was celebrated on the 14th of February, 1613; and in May following he ſet out with his Bride for their Dominions. This Marriage coſt the King 100,000 l. Sterling, though her Portion was but 40,000 l. During the reſt of the Year 1613, we find but one Affair in Hiſtory of which 'tis neceſſary to take notice, becauſe the King's Favourite was concern'd in it.

Hiſtory of the Earl of Eſſex's Marriage and Divorce.

THE Earl of Eſſex had left a very young Son, to whom the King, when he arrived in England, reſtor'd the Honours and Eſtate of his Family, which had been forfeited by his Father's Attainder. This young Nobleman was married to a Daughter of the Earl of Suffolk the Great Chamberlain; but being not of Age any more than his Lady to conſummate the Marriage, he went to travel for a few Years in foreign Countries. During his Abſence, the young Counteſs fell in Love with the Viſcount of Rocheſter, the King's Favourite, but did not dare to let him know it. The Earl of Eſſex, when he return'd, found it very difficult to perſuade his Wife to come home to him. She continually ſtarted freſh Delays, and nothing prevail'd with her but the abſolute Authority of the Earl her Father. Yet the Earl of Eſſex was never the better for it, becauſe from his Wife's Reſiſtance, or ſome other Reaſon, it was impoſſible for him to conſummate his Marriage; for by the Advice of Madam Turner, a Confident, ſhe made Application to a Man who paſs'd for a Conjurer, and gave her certain Powders to render her Husband impotent. The Earl of Eſſex carry'd his Wife to a Country-Houſe remote from London, but it was to no purpoſe, and he ſtill found the ſame Contrariety. At length perceiving that there was ſomething extraordinary in his Wife's Conduct, his Affection for her was quite pall'd; ſo that he carry'd her back to London, and left her at Liberty to ſteer her own Courſe. Then it was ſhe found an Opportunity to let the Viſcount of Rocheſter know the Paſſion ſhe had for him, and then their Intrigue begun, tho' it was manag'd with ſo little Caution that the whole Court knew it.

Her Amour with the Viſcount of Rochester.

THE Counteſs of Eſſex not ſatisfy'd to have the Viſcount of Rocheſter for a Lover, wanted to make him her Husband, and was for concerting Meaſures with him to diſſolve her Marriage with the Earl of Eſſex. Rocheſter conſented to it, but had an intimate Friend, one Thomas Overbury, to whom he choſe to impart his Deſign. Overbury, far from approving it, did all he could to divert him from it, and even talk'd of the Counteſs of Eſſex to him in very offenſive Terms; of which the Counteſs being inform'd, was ſo far incens'd againſt Overbury, that ſhe reſolv'd to ruin him, and got her Gallant's Conſent to it, who could deny her nothing. In order to bring this Deſign to paſs, Rocheſter deſired the King to ſend Overbury on an Embaſſy, as ſome ſay, to France, and as others, to Muſcovy. At the ſame time he inform'd Overbury of the King's Deſign, and adviſ'd him to decline an Employment which would remove him to ſuch Diſtance, promiſing him to pacify the King if he was angry at his Denial. The King having ſent for Overbury to tell him what Poſt he deſign'd for him, Overbury moſt humbly beg'd to be excus'd. As ſoon as he was gone out of the Room, the Favourite aggravated his Inſolence, and repreſented to the King that it deſerv'd to be puniſh'd. Upon this the King ſent him to the Tower, where he was for ſeveral Months a Priſoner, without the permiſſion of ſeeing any of his Domeſticks or Friends, and at laſt was poiſon'd.

FOEDERA. Tom. XVI.

While Overbury was in the Tower, the Countess of Essex demanded the Dissolution of her Marriage with the Earl of Essex, by reason of Impotency, and prevailed with the King to appoint Commissioners to try the Cause. The Earl of Essex, who did not care now who had his Wife, being interrogated by the Judges, made Answer, that he did not think himself impotent towards any other Woman, but that he believed he should never be able to consummate his Marriage with his Wife. The Court nevertheless observed several Formalities, and order'd the Countess to be visited by Matrons, to know if she was a Virgin. 'Tis said, that the Countess having obtain'd leave to put on a Veil, caused a young Woman of her Stature to stand the Search in her place. Be this as it will, the Marriage was dissolv'd, and in a little time the Viscount of Rochester was created Earl of Somerset, and marry'd his Mistress.

Essex's Marriage dissolv'd.

It was already above three Years since the King had assembled his Parliament. But at length, not being able to support his Expences, and all the Methods of raising Money being exhausted, his Ministers advis'd him in 1615 to call a Parliament, and gave him hopes that by their Interest the Majority of the Members would be elected according to his Desire. This is very easy, as I have often observed, for a King who has not laid himself open to the Suspicions of the People. But the Case was otherwise with James I. The Parliament consisted of other Men than he expected. The King desir'd Money, with a Promise that when the Affair of the Subsidy was dispatch'd, he would suffer the Grievances to be enquir'd into. But the Commons acted the Reverse, and began with the Grievances; after which they resolv'd to present an Address to the King upon several Heads, and particularly upon the Prejudice which the English suffered from the Settlement of the Scots in the Kingdom. The King was so provoked at the Non-compliance of the Commons, that he dissolv'd the Parliament, and immediately after committed several Members of both Houses to Prison, and laid a Tax upon all the Subjects under the honourable Title of Benevolence. This Money serv'd him to entertain the King of Denmark, who came to make him a second Visit.

He desires Money, but they enter first upon Grievances.

Therefore he dissolves them, and imprisons some of the Members.

King of Denmark's second Visit.

In the Year 1615, the Face of the Court was chang'd by the Advancement of a new Favoutite, and by the Fall of the old one. The King being at Cambridge, while the Students entertained him with a Comedy, saw George Villers there, a handsome young Man, very well dress'd, who was newly come from France. He was charm'd at the Sight of him; and not to enter here into a superfluous Detail, it is sufficient to say that Villers soon had that place in the King's Affections which Somerset had held for several Years. It was unlucky for the latter, that the King was inform'd at the same time of the manner of his putting Overbury to Death. Nevertheless he kept the Secret for a while, and endeavour'd, tho' in vain, to reconcile his two Favourites, still pretending to love the Earl of Somerset. But not being able to succeed in this Project, he at length caus'd the Earl, his Wife, and all their Accomplices to be apprehended. They were all condemn'd to Death, and some executed; but the King contented himself with the Confinement of the Earl and Countess in Prison, and a few Years after set them at full Liberty; tho' he did not grant them an entire Pardon 'till a little before his Death.

ARABELLA Steuart, the King's Cousin, dy'd the same Year at the Tower, to which she had been committed some time, for having contracted Marriage, unknown to the King, with William Seymour, Grandson to the Earl of Hertford. The Enemies of King James have given dark Hints as if he got rid of this Kinswoman by some foul Play; but I own I don't see any Foundation for this Charge.

Arabella Steuart's Imprisonment and Death in the Tower.

The Disgrace of the Earl of Somerset compleatly establish'd the Fortune of George Villers, who, to say all in a Word, became a perfect Favourite, and commanded every thing at Court.

Villers's Sway at Court.

In 1616, the King had a great Dispute with the Judges, who call'd his Prerogative in question concerning a Bishoprick which he had granted in Commendam. The King took this Affair to heart. He was always so jealous of his Prerogative, that to do any thing tending to infringe it, was to touch him in the most sensible Part. Judge Cook was disgrac'd, and turn'd out of his Post, for maintaining with Obstinacy what the Judges had done.

King's Dispute with the Judges.

Cook's Disgrace.

Some time after this, the King made a long Speech in the Star-Chamber, in which he publickly declar'd his Sentiments with respect to the absolute Power of Kings. But his Eloquence did not produce all the Effect which he expected from it, the generality of the Subjects not being able to digest those Principles which he incessantly aim'd to establish.

King's Speech in the Star-Chamber for Arbitrary Power.

The Lord Ellesmere High-Chancellor falling sick, resign'd the Great Seal to the King, who committed it to the Custody of Francis Bacon. Not long after the Earl of Suffolk, who had been made High-Treasurer in the room of the Earl of Salisbury, that dy'd in 1613, was accused of a Misdeameanour, and condemn'd by the Star-Chamber to pay a great Fine.

The Great Seal given to Francis Bacon.

Earl of Suffolk fined for a Misdemeanor.

In the Month of August that same Year, the King created his Favourite, George Villers, Baron of Brandspech, and Viscount count of Waddon; and on the firſt of January following he made him Earl of Buckingham.

Prince Charles created Prince of Wales.

IN the Month of November, the King's only Son, Prince Charles, was created Prince of Wales. The King had a great Deſire to match him; but as there was then no Proteſtant Princeſs that was a King's Daughter, he could not reſolve with himſelf to give him to a Woman of inferior Extraction. Therefore he caſt his Eyes on two Popiſh Princeſſes, viz. Chriſtina of France, Siſter to Lewis XIII, and Mary Infanta of Spain, Daughter of Philip III. But having heard that the firſt was already promis'd to another, he apply'd in good earneſt to the Spaniſh Match, of which Negotiation I ſhall treat hereafter.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Releaſe from the Tower, and Commiſſion to ſail to the Weſt-Indies in queſt of a rich Gold Mine.

Sir Walter Raleigh, who received Sentance of Death 1603, and had been now 12 Years in Priſon, was ſet at Liberty, but without a Pardon. As his Eſtate had been forfeited, and he had not wherewithal to ſubſiſt, he deſir'd Leave of the King to carry ſome Ships to America, and gave him to underſtand that there was a Mine of Gold at Guiana, from whence he hop'd to draw an immenſe Quantity, if he had his Majeſty's Commiſſion. Upon this Repreſentation the King granted him a Patent, whereby he gave him the chief Command of all Ships and Adventurers that ſhould make the Voyage with him, without informing himſelf particularly either of the Place where the Mine was, or to whom it belong'd, or whoſe Country he muſt paſs through to go to it. I ſhall diſcourſe of this Gentleman's ſad Cataſtrophe hereafter.

ARTICLE II.

Affairs relating to Religion.

James's Conduct to the Papiſts and Puritans.

I have already ſufficiently demonſtrated how James I ſtood affected with regard to Religion. He made profeſſion of the Religion of the Church of England, protected the Papiſts, and mortally hated the Puritans. If he could have render'd himſelf abſolute, 'tis hardly to be doubted but he would have granted the Roman Catholicks an entire Toleration, the Jeſuits and thoſe excepted who held that the Pope had a Power to depoſe Kings. But he had a Notion, upon what Grounds I know not, that they who held this Opinion were very few in number. As for the Puritans, he did not think they ought to be ſuffer'd in a well regulated Government. From thence it may be conjectur'd how he would have treated them, if, as he intended, his bare Word had paſs'd for a Law. He never ſlipp'd an Opportunity of making them feel the Effects of his Hatred, as much as lay in his Power, not only by his Expreſſions, but by his Actions. He had been bred up among them in Scotland, which, as I have already ſaid, was the very Reaſon that made him hate them.

Puritans petition him to reform ſome Articles of the Church of England.

NOT long after the King's Arrival, the Presbyterians preſented a Petition to him to reform certain Articles in the Church of England, which they could not digeſt. The King made Anſwer to them, that he would examine their Complaints in a Conference between the two Parties, of which himſelf would be Mediator. A Conference was held accordingly at Hampton-Court, in the Month of January, 1604. The King officiated there, not as Preſident, but as Party and Judge together. He himſelf anſwer'd the Arguments of the Puritans, without giving Time to the Biſhops who were preſent to ſpeak. He reproach'd them with Obſtinacy, Inſincerity, Pride, Chicanery, and in fine, gave them to underſtand that his Intention was to force them to conform to the Church of England. Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was ſo charmed with what the King ſaid, that he could not forbear crying out, That his Majeſty was inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt. At laſt the King declar'd himſelf a ſtaunch Adverſary of the Puritans, and after that time never ſpoke of them without giving them Proofs of his Contempt and Hatred. As this Averſion was not a little fomented by the Biſhops, it quickly ſpread almoſt over all the Members of the Church of England, and continues even to this Day. Bancroft, Whitgift's Succeſſor, was an Enemy of the Puritans, and the ſtrongeſt Advocate for the Deſpotick Power of the King. To him ſucceeded George Abbot, who tho' join'd to the Church of England, was reckoned a Puritan, becauſe he would not perſecute that Sect, and moreover, becauſe he could not approve of the Deſpotick Power of the King. I ſhall ſay no more upon this Head, becauſe the Acts of theſe 14 Years, which relate to Religion, have no need of any further Explanation.

ARTICLE III.

Affairs of James I with France.

JAMES was no sooner arrived in England but he received Embassies from several Courts, to congratulate him on his Accession to the Crown. Henry IV, King of France, was one of the first to acquit himself of this kind of Duty, by sending to him the Marquis de Rosny, who was afterwards Duke of Sully. Henry's View was not only to congratulate the King, but also to hinder the said Prince from giving Ear to the Spaniards, for whom he had always manifested a very strong Inclinati- on. The Ambassador had Orders to ap- pear in Mourning with his Retinue, at his first Audience, because his Business was to make a Compliment of Condolance upon the Death of Elizabeth, as well as another of Congratulation; but he was given to understand that his Visit would not be well taken if he complied with that Order, be- cause the King himself not having gone into Mourning for the Death of Elizabeth, could not but look upon the Appearance of any other Person in such Habit, as a Design to reproach him. After the first Audience, the Ambassador had several Conferences with the King and his Ministers, about the renewing of the defensive Alli- ance betwixt France and England; and in this he succeeded according to his Ma- ster's Desire; for on the 30th of July that same Year, the said Alliance was renewed. A Treaty of Commerce had also been con- cluded at Paris the 24th of Febr. 1603, before the Death of Elizabeth; but by rea- son of some Difficulties, it was not ratify'd by the two Kings 'till the Year 1606.

James I.

Alliance with France.

HENRY IV being murder'd in 1610, the Alliance was renew'd between Lewis XIII and James I; but as the Court of France was afraid, lest during the King's Minority England should unite with Spain, they thought it proper to satisfy King James's Demand of the Sums which Eli- zabeth had lent to Henry IV, and to pay him 60,000 l. Sterling.

Renew'd.

In 1614, James sent a full Power to Edmonds, his Ambassador in France, to treat of the Marriage of Prince Charles with Christina, Daughter of Henry IV. But there is some Probability either that the Ambassador did not propose this Marriage at that time, or at least that the Negotiati- on was not push'd very far, because in 1616 the Earl of Carlisle had Orders to sift the Court of France on that Subject. Be this as it will, the Earl of Carlisle found that James and his Council were very ill in- form'd of the Transactions of foreign Courts; for Christina was already pro- mised to the Prince of Piedmont.

Marriage Treaty for Prince Charles.

These are all the Affairs which James was concern'd in with the Court of France, during the first fourteen Years of his Reign.

The Acts thereunto referring are chiefly these;

1. A Commission to Sir Thomas Parry to treat with the King of France concern- ing the Grievances of the English Mer- chants dwelling in France; dated June 20, 1605 [c].

Thomas Parry's Commission. 630.

"This in all Appearance was one of the "Reasons which occasion'd the Delay of "the Ratification of the Treaty conclu- "ded in 1603.

2. The Ratification of the Treaty con- cluded at Paris the 24th of Feb. 1603, between France and England. This Ra- tification is dated April 25, 1606 [d], as is that of Henry IV, on the 26th of May following [e].

Ratifications of the Treaty of Paris. 645. 653.

"This properly speaking is a Treaty "which relates solely to Commerce; only "the first Article confirms the ancient "Treaties between the two Kingdoms.

3. A Commission from Henry IV to re- new the Treaties of Peace and Alliance with England; dated Dec. 29, 1609 [f].

Treaties with France. 683.

"We find in this Commission that the "Term of the Treaties made betwixt Henry "and Elizabeth was expir'd, and that ano- "ther Treaty made with King James on "July 24, 1603, was only provisional. It "was this latter which the Marquis de Ros- "ny had negotiated. Henry IV having a "Design to make War upon Spain, was "willing to make sure of England.

ARTICLE IV.

The Affairs of James I. with Spain.

I have already given an account of the continual and reciprocal Enterpriſes of the King of Spain againſt Elizabeth, and of Elizabeth againſt Spain. 'Tis true, there had been no expreſs Declaration of War betwixt the two Crowns, nevertheleſs they were in actual War for near 20 Years. There needs no Proof of this. Mean time, James, who valued himſelf on being a pacifick King, pretended, I know not upon what foundation, that this War was perſonal betwixt Elizabeth and the King of Spain; and that by his Acceſſion to the Crown it was determin'd. Thus having a deſire to convince the King of Spain that he did not enter into Elizabeth's Quarrel, he had not been above three Months in England before he publiſh'd a Proclamation, whereby he call'd in all the Letters of Repriſal which that Queen had granted to ſeveral private Men, to authorize them to make War upon the Subjects of the King of Spain, and order'd that all the Prizes taken after the 24th of April 1603, ſhould be reſtor'd. 'Tis obſervable, that this Proclamation was dated the 23d of June, and that it order'd a Reſtitution of the Prizes taken from the Spaniards two Months before they, who had the Commiſſions from the Queen, could poſſibly know the new King's Intention. James having by this Step made the King of Spain his Friend, the two Kings entered ſoon after into a Treaty, and the Peace between the two Crowns was ſign'd on the 18th of Auguſt 1604. By this Treaty, James entirely abandon'd the Intereſts of the United Provinces of the Netherlands. He not only engag'd himſelf not to give them any Aſſiſtance, but even promis'd to compel them by ſome means or other to make Peace with Spain. 'Tis true, that ſome Hiſtorians, in the Account of this very Treaty, relate the Article concerning the United Provinces quite different from what it is in the Fœdera; from whence it may be ſuſpected, that there was a ſecret Article on this ſame Subject, contrary to that which was inſerted in the Treaty it ſelf. And indeed it does not appear, that James perform'd the Engagement he enter'd into by the publick Treaty.

James's Treaty with Spain.

NOTWITHSTANDING this Treaty, James made an Alliance with ſeveral Princes of Germany againſt the Houſe of Auſtria, for the Preſervation of the Succeſſion of the Duke of Cleves. By this Treaty which was ſign'd at Wezel the 8th of April 1612, N. S. James engag'd himſelf to furniſh thoſe Princes with 4000 Men to be taken from the Engliſh Troops that were in the Service of the States General, and to be commanded by Edward Cecil, Brother to the Earl of Salisbury.

With the German Princes.

James having attempted in 1616, as I ſhewed before, to make a Match betwixt Prince Charles his Son and Chriſtina of France; the King of Spain thought it his Intereſt to obſtruct that Marriage, and therefore the Duke of Lerma, Philip IIId's chief Miniſter, propos'd to Sir John Digby the Engliſh Ambaſſador, a Marriage between the ſaid Prince and the Infanta Maria, Philip's Daughter. Digby having informed the King of it, received an Order from him to negotiate the Marriage, and at the ſame time Philip ſent Count Gondamor to England for the ſame end. This Negotiation will be one of the principal Subjects of the Hiſtory of the remaining part of this Reign.

ARTICLE V.

Affairs of James I. with the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

James I. never loved the Inhabitants of the United Provinces for three Reaſons: In the firſt place, becauſe of his Inclination for Spain, which he could never ſhake off. Secondly, becauſe he look'd upon thoſe Inhabitants as Rebels, who had withdrawn their Obedience to their rightful Sovereign; for, according to his Principles, there was no Caſe in which it was lawful for the Subjects to reſiſt. Laſtly, thoſe rebellious Subjects had choſen a Republican Government, to which he had a very great Averſion. For this reaſon he ſcarce let any opportunity ſlip of giving them Proofs how little he valued their Friendſhip. Of this we have juſt ſeen a very manifeſt Proof, in the Treaty he made with Spain at the beginning of his Reign. JAMES I.

IN the Year 1607, he made an Overture of Peace between the United Provinces and the Archdukes; that is to ſay, the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta Iſabella his Conſort, who were Sovereigns of the Netherlands. Before they could enter into the Negotiation, it was abſolutely neceſſary to get over a Difficulty in which the eſſential part of the projected Treaty conſiſted; and that was the Refuſal of the States General to hear Talk either of a Peace or Truce, unleſs they were own'd to be Free States, by the Archdukes, and by the King of Spain. The Archdukes conſented to it at laſt, and promiſed to get their Conſent ratified by Philip III. Henry IV. being informed of this Overture, immediately ſent the Preſident Jeannin to the Hague, to aſſiſt in his Name at the ſaid Negotiation in quality of Mediator. But the States fearing to diſoblige the King of England if they treated with the Archdukes without his Participation, diſpatched an Ambaſſador to him, to deſire him to ſend ſome Perſon into Holland, as well to aſſiſt them with his Councils, as to perform the Office of Mediator. James appointed Sir Richard Spencer, and Sir Ralph Winwood his Ambaſſador at the Hague, to aſſiſt at the Treaty in his Name; but it was not till above two Months after he had been required. The Negotiation was defer'd nevertheleſs by reaſon of the ambiguous Terms which the King of Spain made uſe of in his Approbation of the Conſent of the Archdukes above-mentioned; for it was with much ado that Philip was perſuaded to admit of ſuch Terms in his Ratification, as the States could by any means put up with. Negotiation of the Peace of the Netherlands.

IN the mean time, there happened two occaſions of Quarrel between James and the States, the one upon account of the Cloth Trade of England, the other relating to the Fiſhery. But as theſe two Affairs were of no material Conſequence, and as the Acts of the Fœdera make no mention of them, I don't think it abſolutely neceſſary to treat of them more particularly.

THE Negotiation for the Peace being at laſt renew'd after a great many Difficulties, the Engliſh Mediators not only left all to be done by the Preſident Jeannin, but even did every every thing in their power to hinder the Succeſs of it, by giving publick Teſtimony that the King their Maſter look'd upon the States of the United Provinces as Rebels. The chief Obſtruction to the Peace was the Demand of the Netherlanders, to be acknowledg'd as a Free State; and yet Richardot, one of the Spaniſh Plenipotentiaries ſaid in one of his Letters to Jeannin, that Philip's Obſtinacy upon this Article was owing to the Promiſe he had from the King of England, that he would not ſuffer the Clauſe of the Freedom of the States to be inſerted in the Treaty. We may thereby judge what would have been the Conſequence of King James's Mediation. Nor did Jeannin make any ſcruple to ſay in a Letter to the King his Maſter, that he pretended a deſire to procure Peace, and yet thwarts it, by openly ſaying that the States are Rebels. Mean time James, in order to amuſe the States, made a defenſive Alliance with them to maintain the Peace, if a Peace could be made, by which he engaged to furniſh them with 6000 Men. As it was not poſſible to attain to this Peace, ſo deſired by the States, they were fain to accept of a Truce of twelve Years, which was concluded in 1609.

FOEDERA Tom. XVI.

James ſets himſelf againſt the Arminian Party in Holland.

TWO Years after this, James had a very extraordinary Quarrel with the States. The Church of Holland being unhappily in very great trouble on account of a Diſpute among the Divines about matters of Grace; James thought fit to meddle in the Diſpute under two qualities very different from each other, viz. as a Divine, and as a King. As a Divine, he read the Works of Conrade Vorſtius, and condemned them as heretical: He alſo cauſed them to be burnt by the common Hangman at London and at Cambridge. As a King, he thought to oblige the States of Holland, juſt as if they had been his own Subjects, not only to condemn the Sentiments and Works of Vorſtius, but alſo to puniſh that Profeſſor as a Heretick. His Ambaſſador Winwood preſented Memorials in his Name to the States on this Subject, which were drawn up in ſuch haughty menacing Terms, that it looked as if the King reckoned himſelf the Sovereign of Holland. The States behaved upon this occaſion with extraordinary Moderation. They had all the Complaiſance poſſible for the King, but without giving up every thing to his Paſſion, and without derogating from their own Sovereignty. 'Tis hardly conceivable that this Prince, who was for tolerating the Papiſts in England, provided they behaved as good Subjects, and who regarded the Doctrines which ſeparate the Proteſtants from the Papiſts, as no more than School-Queſtions, ſhould venture to tell the States of Holland, that Death was too ſlight a Puniſhment for the Errors which Vorſtius maintained about Grace. 'Tis ſtill more unaccountable from whence aroſe this great Zeal for preſerving the Purity of the Faith, in a Church that was both Foreign and Presbyterian. But he was not always ſo hot upon this Subject; for towards the Cloſe of his Life, the Engliſh Arminians had very great Credit with him.

His Negotiation with the States about the Ranſom of their cautionary Towns.

THE laſt Diſpute that James had with the States-General, was about the reſtoring of the Towns that were mortgaged to Queen Elizabeth. 'Tis certain that the States might a long time ago have redeem'd thoſe Towns, by paying the King what they owed him. But while the War laſted, it was their advantage to have them in his hands, in order by ſuch a Tie to ſecure him in their Intereſts. The Truce which was concluded for twelve Years, rendered the Aſſiſtance of England not ſo neceſſary to them now as formerly. Beſides, they imagined that the King would not have treated them with the Arrogance he did, in the Affair of Vorſtius, had it not been for thoſe important Towns of theirs, of which he had the keeping. Laſtly, the Marriage of Prince Charles, which was negotiating in Spain, gave them reaſon to apprehend that James might be prevailed on to deliver up thoſe Towns to the King of Spain, and that this would be one of the Articles of the ſaid Marriage, which was then thought to be very far advanc'd. All theſe reaſons made them reſolve to redeem their Towns. They thought they had the fairer opportunity to do it by reaſon of the King's extreme want of Money, for he had juſt diſſolved the Parliament without obtaining any Supply from them. But in order to reap all the Advantage poſſible from the King's Circumſtances, they thought it abſolutely neceſſary by ſome Artifice or other to engage him to offer the Reſtitution of their Places to them of his own accord. In the laſt Treaty they had made with him, they owned themſelves his Debtors in the Sum of 818,408 l. Sterling. This being a conſiderable Sum, they thought that with a little management, it would be poſſible for them to ſave a good part of it; and for this purpoſe they ſtop'd the Pay of the Gariſons of the cautionary Towns all on a ſudden. The Governours and the Officers complained, and the States, tho' they did not refuſe Payment, pretended Inſolvency, and deſired longer time. The delay of their Pay made the Engliſh Troops complain to the King, who not being in a condition to ſatisfy them, wrote ſharply about it to the States. But the States ſtill pleading Poverty, on account of the Expences of the late War, ſpun out the Affair to a great length. Caron, the States Envoy to the King, inſinuated, as of his own head, to the Miniſters, that if the King ſhould make an Offer to the States to give up their cautionary Towns, he did not doubt but they would make a hard ſhift to pay him the Principal, tho' they ſhould borrow the Money at high Intereſt. The King, who was without Cash at that juncture, approv'd of the Overture, and proposed the thing to the States, which was what they looked for with impatience. As soon as the King had thus declared himself, they sent Ambassadors to him, who found means to compound with him for two Million, 728,000 Florins; that is to say, for about one fourth of what they owed him; and the Towns were restored to them.

Anno MDCXVII.

Account of Mark Anthony de Dominis.

Mark Anthony de Dominis, Archbiſhop of *Spalato, in Dalmatia, a Man full of Years, but in good Plight of Body, came into England, on purpoſe to embrace the Proteſtant Religion. The King was very kind to him, but afterwards this ſame Prelate being prevailed on to go to Rome, in hopes of being made a Cardinal, he there abjured the Religion which he had embraced in England. But notwithſtanding this, he was put into the Dungeon of the Inquiſition, where he died; and after his Death, his Body was publickly burnt.

James's Attempt to oblige the Scots to conform to the Church of England.

JAMES not thinking it enough to keep the Presbyterians very low in England, took it into his head to oblige the Scots to conform to the Diſcipline of the Church of England. But knowing the Difficulties there would be in the obtaining of this all at once, he contented himſelf at firſt with ſending only four Articles into Scotland, of very ſmall Importance, to the end that they might be inſerted in the Canons of the Church. The general Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, perceiving the King's Intention, refuſed to inſert thoſe four Articles in the Canons. Not that they thought that thoſe Articles were a lawful ground of Separation between the Churches of Scotland and England, but becauſe they foreſaw the handle it would give the King for new Demands, or rather new Injunctions. This Refuſal obliged the King to make a Journey to Scotland, where he treated of this Affair in a very extraordinary manner, relying conſtantly upon his darling Maxim, that a King might do what he liſt. He obtained of the Parliament in the firſt place, that Commiſſioners ſhould be appointed to examine his Demands, and he himſelf immediately nominated three Perſons that were devoted to him, without giving the Parliament the liberty of interfering in that Nomination. Thoſe Commiſſioners decided in the firſt place, that the King, with the Advice of the Biſhops, might make what Alterations he thought fit in the Diſcipline of the Church. But the Proteſtant Miniſters proteſted againſt this Deciſion, and demanded a general Aſſembly. The King would not grant it, and actually committed ſome of the Miniſters to Priſon. But at laſt finding it was not in his power to make them obey him, if what he demanded was not authorized by a general Aſſembly; he granted it, and had the Mortification to ſee his Articles rejected. Being incenſed at this Refuſal, he cauſed the ordinary Salaries of the Miniſters to be ſtopp'd, and at laſt called another Aſſembly at Perth, which ſubmitted to his Will.

He authorizes Sports and Paſtimes on Sundays, and writes a Book to juſtify it.

WHEN the King was returned to England, and on his way to London, a Petition was preſented to him from Servants, labouring Men, Artificers, &c. that they might have leave to play, to go to Tippling-Houſes, in a word, to have Sports and Paſtimes upon Sundays after divine Service. It was ſignified to him, that the Puritans were againſt Diverſions of this kind, by reaſon of a ſuperſtitious Opinion they held concerning Sunday, which they always affected to call the Day of Sabbath. The King not only granted this Petition, but even wrote a Book to demonſtrate the Innocence of Diverſions of this ſort upon that day, and ordered it ſhould be read publickly in all the Churches of the Kingdom. The Miniſters who refuſed to read this Book, were looked upon as Puritans, and puniſh'd by the High Commiſſion.

Account of his Favourite the Earl of Buckingham.

THE Earl of Buckingham, the King's Favourite, was become Lord Paramount. It was he that governed the Kingdom. He diſpoſed of all Offices in favour of his own Friends and Creatures, and eſpecially his Kindred, who were very numerous. His Mother, who was married again to Sir Thomas Compton, being a Roman Catholick, obtained whatever ſhe wanted in favour of thoſe of her Religion, who expected mighty things from her Credit; and therefore great numbers of them flocked into the Kingdom from the time I am ſpeaking of, to the end of this Reign.

Sir Walter Raleigh's Misfortunes.

SIR Walter Raleigh, whom I formerly mentioned, having found means to fit out 12 Ships by virtue of the Patent which the King granted

* This was the Perſon, who being exaſperated by the Court of Rome, had the chief hand in publiſhing Father Paul's excellent Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, at London, which he inſcrib'd to King James in 1619. He alſo preach'd and wrote againſt the Romiſh Religion; and becauſe he was advanced in Years, it was ſuppos'd that nothing but a conſcientious Zeal for the Purity of Religion, had prevail'd with him to undertake ſo long a Journey, and quit his Archbiſhoprick.

FOEDERA Tom. XVII.

granted him, ſailed directly to Guiana, where he did not find the Mark which he had left on the Coaſt: Nevertheleſs he detach'd five Ships, which went up Oroonoko River. The Engliſh offering to go aſhore, the Spaniards of thoſe Parts oppoſed them, but were repulſed as far as St. Thomas's Town, which the Engliſh took poſſeſſion of, and put a Garriſon in it. The Engliſh advanced afterwards into the Country, in queſt of the Mine ſo much deſired; but not finding it, they went back to Sir Walter Raleigh, who was forced by thoſe that had accompanied him, and who were very much diſſatisfied with the Voyage, to ſail back again for England. He had no ſooner ſet his Foot aſhore, but the King cauſed him to be apprehended, and committed to the Tower, upon the Inſtances of the Count de Gondemar, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, who gave him to underſtand that the Marriage-Treaty would infallibly be broke off, if the King his Maſter had not ſuitable ſatisfaction for Sir Walter Raleigh's Enterprize. The King, in his own Vindication proteſted, that by his Patent he had expreſſly forbid Raleigh to attempt any thing againſt the Subjects of the King of Spain. However, in the Patent which is inſerted in the XVIth Volume of the Fœdera, there was not one word about the King of Spain, or his Subjects. Indeed, the King in that ſame Patent, taking it for granted that Sir Walter was going into a Country inhabited by Savages, there might be ſome reaſon for inferring ſuch a Prohibition. Be this as it will, Raleigh was ſacrificed to the Marriage, and had his Head cut off at the Age of 79, not for any Inſult that he committed upon the Spaniards, but in purſuance of the Sentence paſſed againſt him fourteen Years before.

Anno MDCXVIII.

Complaints of the People againſt the King's Government and Favourite.

THE People in general complained very much of the King's Government, and of the Conduct of his Favourite, who was this Year made Marquis of Buckingham; and upon the Reſignation of the Earl of Nottingham, advanced to the Poſt of Lord High-Admiral. Complaint was made that Offices were ſold to the higheſt Bidder; that nothing was heard at Court but horrid Oaths, and that the King himſelf was not exempt from this Crime; that Religion was only made to conſiſt in not being a Puritan, that is to ſay, in not oppoſing the King's abſolute Power; that they who could not approve of that Power, were perſecuted by the High Commiſſion as Puritans; that the Papiſts were not only tolerated, but even poſſeſſed the chief Poſts in the Court and Kingdom; and that the King was going to marry the Prince his Son to a Popiſh Princeſs. The King on his part was as much diſpleaſed to hear that the People dared to call his Conduct in queſtion, and eſpecially that part of it relating to the Marriage of the Prince his Son, which he had extremely at heart.

The King diſſatisfied with the People.

JAMES I.

The View of the Spaniſh Court in the Negotiation for his Son's Marriage.

YET 'tis certain, that at that time the Spaniſh Court had no mind to conclude that Marriage. Their only View was to hinder the King of England from interfering in the Affair of the Succeſſion of Cleves. For though James had made a Treaty with the German Princes concerned in that Succeſſion, to furniſh them with 6000 Men; yet this Treaty proved of no real advantage to them, becauſe thoſe 6000 Men were the ſame that were already in the Service of the States-General. The Negotiation of this Marriage had been ſpun out two Years, and no Progreſs made in it. But at laſt the Spaniſh Court fearing that James would be quite diſcouraged, ſeemed to enter into this Treaty more ſeriouſly. As the Prince and the Infanta were of two different Religions, it was agreed that the Affair of Religion ſhould be ſettled before any other. After a great many Difficulties, five Articles were at length agreed on, for ſecuring to the Infanta the Liberty of Conſcience, and the free Exerciſe of her Religion, in a manner ſuitable to her Dignity and Birth. I will only ſet down two of them, the other three having nothing in them extraordinary.

Convention for the Marriage.

THE firſt imported, "That before the "Celebration of the Marriage, a Diſpen- "ſation ſhould be obtained from the Pope, "at the ſingle Sollicitation of the King of "Spain." By means of this Article, the Negotiation was ſpun out five Years longer.

BY the ſecond it was agreed, "That if "the Children born of this Marriage choſe "to be Catholicks, it ſhould be no manner "of prejudice to their Succeſſion to the "Crown."

The King ſigns them.

THESE Articles being ſent to the King, he ſigned them, and returned them back to Spain, yet the Marriage was never the nearer. For new reaſons obliged the Spaniſh Court to drive it off.

The Troubles of Bohemia.

I have a mind juſt to mention the Troubles of Bohemia, the Origin of which is ſo well known, that I ſhall ſay the leſs of it. Matthias ſucceeding to the Empire, and to the Crown of Bohemia, after the Death of his Brother Rodolph II. adopted his Nephew Prince Ferdinand, and cauſed him to be elected King of Bohemia; having found the means to exclude from the number of Electors, not only the Proteſtants of the Kingdom, but alſo the States of Sileſia, Moravia, and upper and lower Luſatia, Countries incorporated with Bohemia. Under the Reign of Matthias, the Privileges of the Kingdom of Bohemia were ſo openly violated, that the States at length threw three of the Emperor's Officers out of the Windows of the Caſtle of Prague, which occaſioned a War betwixt the Emperor and the States. Cardinal Albert raiſed an Army in the Netherlands for the Emperor's Aſſiſtance, and gave the Command of it to the Count de Bucquoy; and the States on their part prepar'd for their Defence. The States of Bohemia, or at leaſt the greateſt part of the Deputies, being Proteſtants of the Communion, which is called in that Country ſub utraque[a], there was great probability that this particular War would turn at laſt into a general religious War. This was the reaſon that the Court of Spain, knowing of what advantage the Aſſiſtance of England might be to the Proteſtants, continually amuſed King James with the hopes of a ſpeedy Concluſion of the Marriage, in order to hinder him from meddling in the Affairs of Bohemia. James fell into this Snare, and contented himſelf with ſending the Earl of Carliſle Ambaſſador to the Emperor, to endeavour to aſſuage theſe Differences; but his Labour was in vain. Afterwards he would never take part heartily in the Affairs of Bohemia, no not even when the Elector Palatine his Son-in-Law was particularly concerned, as we ſhall ſee preſently. Mean time the People of England murmured ſadly againſt the King for his obſtinate Reſolution to marry the Prince with a Popiſh Princeſs, who was the Daughter of a mortal Enemy to the Proteſtant Religion. But the Catholicks triumphed, when they ſaw that they were going to have ſo powerful a Protector.

Anno MDCXIX.

THE Queen, who was Wife to King James, died in the Month of March this Year[b]; and not long after, the King himſelf was ſeized with a Diſtemper, which brought him almoſt to the Brink of the Grave[c].

His Queen's Death.

THE Emperor Matthias dying at the ſame time, the States of Bohemia refuſed to own Ferdinand for their King, and ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the Summons which the Archbiſhop of Mentz ſent to him to be preſent as King of Bohemia and Elector, at the Choice of a new Emperor. But notwithſtanding their Oppoſition, Ferdinand was not only owned by the Diet as King of Bohemia, but was alſo elected Emperor, on the 28th of Auguſt 1619, O. S. But the States, far from owning him as King of Bohemia, offer'd their Crown to the Elector Palatine, who accepted it without heſitation, and before he had ſent word of it to the King his Father-in-law. 'Tis true he diſpatched the Baron de Dhona[d] to him, to ask his Advice; but this was no more than a mere Compliment, becauſe he did not ſtay for his Anſwer. As ſoon as James had received the firſt News of this Election, he called an extraordinary Aſſembly of his Council, to conſider whether it was expedient that the Elector Palatine ſhould accept the Crown of Bohemia, which was offer'd to him. Abbot the Archbiſhop of Canterbury not being able to attend the Council, by reaſon of the Gout, wrote to one of the Secretaries of State, that his Opinion was for the Elector's accepting it; but the King and Council were of another Opinion, and determined that the Elector ought to refuſe the Crown. Not that they had examined this Affair with reſpect to the Elector himſelf, but their Deciſion was founded on the King's Humour, and on what he thought his Intereſt, as if the Elector had been obliged to make that the only Rule of his Conduct. The King without giving himſelf time to examine the Conſtitutions of the Government of Bohemia, or the Privileges of the States, a thing which was very odious to him, decided that the States of Bohemia were Rebels, and that by conſequence the Elector his Son-in-law could not lawfully accept the Crown, which they offer'd him. He was afterwards aware of the Objection that might be raiſed againſt his Opinion, from the want of ſuch Examination, and obviated it by ſaying that it was a Task too hard for him to perform; that he muſt have turned over a great many Volumes of the Hiſtory of Bohemia; and that as he was not conſtituted a Judge of the Cauſe, it was ſufficient for him to know that Ferdinand had been recogniz'd for preſumptive Succeſſor of Matthias, and crowned at Prague, in order to look upon all thoſe as Rebels who oppoſe his Authority. Thus he argued in the Diſpute betwixt the United Provinces of the Netherlands and Spain. But that was not the chief reaſon of his Deciſion, for he had another much ſtronger; viz. That as he was not ignorant of the ſtrict Union betwixt the two Branches of the Houſe of Auſtria, he was afraid that the Elector's Acceptance of the Crown of Bohemia, would prove an invincible Obſtacle to the Marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Infanta of Spain.

King James againſt his accepting of that Crown, and Archbiſhop Abbot for it.

WHILE this Affair was under Conſideration at the Court of England, the Elector Palatine accepted the Crown which was offer'd to him, and immediately diſpatched an Expreſs to the Baron of Dhona, which overtook him on the Road, to order him to excuſe him to the King his Father-in-law, for his having accepted the Crown without ſtaying for his Approbation. James was to the laſt degree enraged at the Elector, for having thus broke his Meaſures by this precipitant Step, and would never own him as King of Bohemia. Trys to perswade him to quit it.

On the contrary, he obſtinately perſiſted to treat the States as Rebels; and he thought to have perſuaded the Prince his Son-in-law to renounce the Dignity he had accepted, but he found himſelf miſtaken. His View in this was to ſatisfy the King of Spain that he had no hand in what the Elector had done, to the end that the Marriage Treaty might not be interrupted. The Spaniſh Court made an Advantage of the King's Diſpoſition, by continuing to amuſe him with the Hopes of a ſpeedy Concluſion of the Marriage. They even ſignify'd to Sir Francis Cottington the Engliſh Embaſſador, that if the Diſpenſation from Rome ſtaid too long, they would do without it. But Cottington was not to be entrapped by this Snare; for he wrote to the King, that the Spaniſh Court had only a deſign to amuſe him, and therefore he adviſed him to break off the Negotiation. But James, inſtead of following this Advice, ordered him to continue it, and to declare expreſſly to the King of Spain in his Name, that he diſapproved of what the Elector Palatine had done. Philip anſwered, that he was very glad to ſee the King his Brother ſo ſincere, and that nothing was more likely to haſten the Concluſion of the Marriage than ſuch a Diſpoſition.

Anno MDCXX.

ONE ſhall hardly hear of any thing more unaccountable than King James's Conduct in this Affair, which began to be the Concern of all Europe. Moſt of the Proteſtant Princes of Germany took part with Frederick, and the Catholicks join'd with the Emperor; ſo that in all appearance a religious War was ready to break out in Germany. James was the moſt powerful Prince, and the Father-in-law of Frederick, and yet he continued neuter; and not only ſo, but he even publickly blamed his Son-in-Law for having accepted the Crown of Bohemia; and moreover flatter'd himſelf, that he ſhould be choſe Arbitrator of the Quarrel, as if neither of the two Parties had the leaſt reaſon to ſuſpect him. No wonder therefore if he did not ſucceed in ſo chimerical a Project, which nevertheleſs coſt him very dear, on account of the frequent Embaſſies he ſent into Germany to bring it about. His ſecret Aim was to hinder this Affair from being an Impediment to the Marriage of the Prince his Son. With this View he left no Stone unturn'd to perſuade the Emperor and the King of Spain, that they had no room to ſuſpect him; for he diſown'd the Action of his Son-in-law, and even offered either to perſuade him to renounce the Crown of Bohemia, or in caſe of Refuſal, to make uſe of Force to compel him. On the other hand, he ſent Weſton and Conway to Prague, where Frederick had been already crowned, to perſuade that Prince to quit that Crown which he had juſt received.

He hopes to be Arbitrator of the Difference betwixt Ferdinand and Frederic.

The true Motive of all theſe Proceedings was his Fear that this Affair would prove an Obſtacle to the Marriage of the Prince his Son, and conſequently deprive him of a Portion of two Millions, which he had expected with the Spaniſh Match. But after all the Inquiry I have been able to make, I could never yet learn in what Species thoſe two Millions were to be paid. JAMES I.

Frederick being very much diſguſted with the King his Father-in-law, went on his way, and being ſenſible that he ſhould e'er long be attack'd, he put himſelf into a Condition, with the aſſiſtance of his Allies, to make his Defence. The Emperor made the like Preparation, without giving much heed to the Propoſals of the King of England, whom he only trifled with, inſtead of giving a poſitive Anſwer to his Demands. Philip III. on his part did the Emperor ſignal Service, by feeding King James with the Hopes that the Diſpenſation would quickly arrive from Rome. The Count de Gondomar, Philip's Ambaſſador at London, had given him to underſtand that James would never reſolve with himſelf to give the Elector any Aſſiſtance while he had the leaſt hopes of concluding the Marriage. This Ambaſſador held the King in ſuch ſtrong Chains by thoſe hopes, that he made him do whatever he pleas'd. He had nothing to do but to threaten him with a Rupture, to hinder him from taking any Step that might be diſagreeable to the King of Spain.

Philip raiſes an Army in the Netherlands.

BUT Philip was not content with doing the Emperor this ſecret piece of Service. He not only cauſed the Troops he had in Italy to march to his Aſſiſtance, but order'd an Army to be raiſed in the Netherlands to invade the Palatinate under the Command of Spinola. James was inform'd by the States General of the raiſing of thoſe Troops, and of their Deſign; but could not reſolve with himſelf to take Arms, in order to ſave his Son-in-law's Dominions upon meer Suſpicions, or rather he choſe to ſhut his Eyes, that he might not be oblig'd to enter into this War. Therefore he only gave Orders to Edmonds, his Envoy at Bruſſels, to demand of the Archduke the reaſon of this Armament. The Archduke anſwered, that the King of Spain having ſent his Orders to Spinola, he muſt apply to that General. Spinola ſaid, that his Orders were ſeal'd up, that he could not open them till he was on the March; and that if the Envoy would pleaſe to follow him, he might then be inform'd. One would think a Man muſt have been wilfully blind, who could not ſee that this Army was deſign'd againſt the Palatinate; and yet James ſtill rely'd upon the King of Spain's Bona fide, as if it had been impoſſible for that Prince to go about to deceive him, or rather it looks very much as if he had a mind to deceive himſelf. He had form'd two Deſigns, the firſt never to have War with any body, the ſecond to marry his Son to the Infanta of Spain; but the Elector Palatine, by accepting the Crown of Bohemia, defeated both theſe Deſigns as far as lay in his power. He thought it neither juſt nor reaſonable, that for the ſake of the Elector he ſhould engage in a War againſt the Emperor, who had done him no Harm, and againſt Spain, with which he was on the point of concluding an Alliance. He had rather ſee the Elector robb'd of the Bohemian Crown, than that he himſelf ſhould unravel his own Meaſures for the ſake of ſecuring a Dignity to his Son-in-law, which in his opinion he could not legally poſſeſs. That this was King James's ſecret Reaſoning in his own Breaſt, appear'd from his whole Conduct. But in order to attain to his own Ends, he took a courſe which kept him the wider from the Mark by a miſtaken Notion, in the firſt place, that the King of Bohemia would do every thing that was adviſed him by a Father-in-law, whom his Courtiers ſtil'd the Solomon of his Age; and ſecondly, that the Emperor and the King of Spain would repoſe an intire confidence in him.

FOEDERA Tom. XVII.

He is prevail'd on to ſend Men to the Palatinate.

MEAN time, Spinola being juſt ready to march in order to invade the Palatinate, the Clamours of the People and of the Courtiers, who did not penetrate into the King's ſecret Intentions, at length extorted his Conſent for the raiſing of 2500 Men, who had Orders to march towards the Palatinate, under the Command of Horatio de Vere. But notwithſtanding this, the King perſiſted in his Deſign to put an end to this Affair by amicable Meaſures, that is to ſay, by obliging Frederick to renounce the Crown of Bohemia; for that was the Plan he had form'd. For this purpoſe he had ſent Sir Edward Wotton into Germany to exhort all the Princes to Peace, and to offer the Emperor his Mediation. But this Embaſſy came to nothing, becauſe James did not ſeek to make himſelf formidable, and becauſe all his Efforts conſiſted only in Speeches, Arguments and Exhortations, which are things of little avail in Affairs of this nature.

Campaign in the Palatinate.

THERE was in the lower Palatinate an Army commanded by the Margrave of Anſpach, and compoſed of the Allies of the King of Bohemia, who had carried all his own Troops with him into Bohemia. The 2500 Engliſh join'd this Army, while Spinola enter'd the Palatinate on the other ſide, where he took a few ſmall places. The two Armies did nothing conſiderable in that Country during this firſt Campaign, which did not begin till the Month of September; but in Bohemia the Conteſt was ſharper.

Elector of Saxony reduces Luſatia.

Frederick being put under the Ban of the Empire, the Elector of Saxony, the Duke of Bavaria, and Spinola, were commiſſion'd to put it in execution. The Emperor, in order to engage the firſt in his Intereſts, had yielded upper Luſatia to him, provided he could conquer it. Therefore, in the Month of September, the Elector of Saxony enter'd that Province with an Army of 20000 Men, and in a very ſhort time reduced it. After this, the Duke of Bavaria and the Count de Bucquoy enter'd Bohemia, and drew near Prague, where Frederick lay with his Army; but at their approach he went out of the Town with his Troops, and a Battle was fought in the beginning of November, which was fatal to Frederick, whoſe Army was routed, and who was forced to abandon Prague, and to retire to Holland.

Battle of Prague.

Frederick flies to Holland.

THIS Battle having put an end to the Affair of Bohemia, the Buſineſs now was not to ſupport Frederick upon the Throne, but to ſave the Palatinate, which was threaten'd with a powerful Invaſion. It was natural to think that James would make ſome Efforts, to ſave at leaſt the Dominions of his Son-in-law and his Children. This was a Reſolution which every body endeavour'd to inſpire him with. But the Count de Gondomar, who had an abſolute Aſcendant over him, gave him to underſtand, that the Pope's Diſpenſation for the Marriage being juſt ready to be diſpatch'd, the making War upon the Emperor, who was the King of Spain's near Kinſman, would be the only way to retard it; that it was better to treat of this intricate Affair in a friendly manner; that the King of Spain being on the point of giving his Daughter to the Prince of Wales, would look upon the Intereſts of the Palatine Prince as his own, and not ſuffer him to loſe the Palatinate; that even tho' the Emperor ſhould be Maſter of that Country, there was a good way for both ſides to come off with Honour; for by favour of the Marriage, the Emperor might make a Preſent of the Palatinate to the Infanta, who would give it to the Prince her Husband, and then the Prince might reſtore it to his Brother-in law. James took all this to be Goſpel, as if indeed he had had a poſitive promiſe from the Emperor and the King of Spain, that every thing ſhould be done as the Ambaſſador had propos'd. This was the reaſon that he was more and more intoxicated with the notion that the beſt way to ſave the Palatinate, was to live in a good Underſtanding with the Courts of Vienna and Madrid. 'Tis a Weakneſs which all Hiſtorians lay to his charge. For my own part, I think there was ſomething more in it, and that he ſuffer'd himſelf to be thus amus'd, that he might not be obliged to enter into this War. He was by no means a Warrior, and on the other hand, he was afraid that his Deſign of calling no more Parliaments was not conſiſtent with the continual Neceſſities in a time of War. When he conſidered the loſs of his Son-in-Law's Dominions, which was ſtill uncertain, and which might, in his opinion, be repaired by his Son's Marriage; and when he weigh'd this in the Ballance with the Neceſſity of begging Money of the Houſe of Commons, he choſe rather to run the firſt Riſque than the ſecond.

MEAN time, as the King knew, that all England was aſtoniſhed and provoked at his Indolence, with reſpect to the Palatinate, he thought he might make uſe of this Pretext to get a round Sum of Money, of which he was in very great want. With this View he declared to the Council, that his Intention was to try gentle Methods to ſave his Son-in-Law's Dominions; but that if his Propoſals were rejected, he was reſolved to make uſe of Arms. And not long after this, the Council took ſome ſteps to ſhew that they were going to prepare for War, upon which the Count de Gondomar wrote to the Marquis of Buckingham, to deſire him to let him know what was the King's Intention. The Favourite's Anſwer was a long Apology for the King's Conduct, in which he demonſtrated, that he had acted with all manner of Candour, by diſowning his Son-in-Law's Act, with reſpect to the Crown of Bohemia. As to the Palatinate, he tells him, that the Winter, which was already begun, gave the King time to make Preparations of two ſorts, the one for the concluding a Peace before the Summer, the other for a War, in caſe there ſhould be no Peace. The Ambaſſador, who knew the King perfectly well, was not at all alarmed at theſe pretended Preparations of War, which in reality came to nothing: And the King only took an opportunity from thence to demand a Benevolence of his Subjects, to aſſiſt him in the Defence of the Palatinate. While the King ſeemed inclinable to prepare for War, he was govern'd, if we may ſo call it, by the Ambaſſador of Spain, who had ſo great an Intereſt at Court, that the moſt conſiderable Offices were taken away and diſpoſed of at his Recommendation.

THE Benevolence not producing what the King had expected from it, by reaſon of the People's diſcontent, he was at laſt obliged to call a Parliament, in order to furniſh him with Money, under the ſpecious pretext of defending the Palatinate. In order to make the Publick believe that he was going in good earneſt to prepare for War, he eſtabliſhed a Council of the moſt experienced Officers, to conſider of ways and means for aſſiſting the Elector. Mean time, as the People took the liberty to talk publickly of the Conduct of the King, the Favourite, the Mother of the Favourite, of the Protection granted to Popiſh Recuſants, of the Sale of Offices, and of the unhappy State of the King of Bohemia, and his Children; the King publiſh'd a Proclamation, forbidding his Subjects to talk of State-Affairs under ſevere Penalties. But this Proclamation had a quite contrary Effect.

A Proclamation againſt Talk about State-Affairs.

Anno MDCXXI.

The Parliament aſſembling on the 20th of January 1621, the King made a long Speech to them, as his manner was; from which I cannot help quoting ſome Paragraphs, becauſe they ſerve to prove what I ſaid before, when I have give an account of King James's Principles.

King's Speech to his Parliament.

"THE Government was firſt a Monarchy; "for before Parliaments there were Kings, "who after having eſtabliſhed a certain "Form of Government, and being deſirous "that the People ſhould be governed by "the Laws, called the Parliament, &c.

"WHY are you come together? 'Tis "to give your advice to the King, if he "thinks fit to ask it.

"THE King makes Laws, and you ought "to adviſe him to make good ones.

"THE Commons are called to the Par"liament, becauſe knowing the State and "Condition of the Country, if the King "thinks fit to ask their opinion, they may "acquaint him with the Peoples Grievances, "and humbly deſire him to redreſs them.

"THEY are alſo the Commons who "furniſh the King with Subſiſtence, and are "to offer Supply for his Neceſſity.

"THE Subjects are to grant the King "what they think neceſſary for him; and "the King is to diſtribute in recompence "thereof Juſtice and Mercy.

"AS to the Report of my tolerating "the Popiſh Religion, in conſideration of "my Son's Marriage, which is actually "negotiating; I proteſt I will do nothing "in it but what is for the Honour and Ad"vantage of the true Religion.

"I hope, that, after this, you will have "ſuch Confidence in the Wiſdom of your "King, as to be convinced, that I am not "able to do one thing in Publick, and "another in Private. But after this De"claration, if any one commits a Fault, "don't think it ſtrange if I puniſh him "ſeverely.

"IF you pretend to haſten after Grie"vances, and greedily hunt for them to "the prejudice of your King, and to your "own damage, I declare to you frankly, "that 'tis not for this that you are come "together *."

Remark on it.

ALL the driſt of this Speech was to beg Money, that in caſe he ſhould be forced to a War, he might be prepared for it. This being a ſpecious Requeſt, the Commons mons granted him two Subsidies. But all the Preparations he made, were the sending of Baron Digby to Vienna, from whence he did not return till November following, and then it was re infectâ.

Digby is sent to Vienna.

AFTER this, Petitions came in crouds to the Parliament, and especially against Monopolies. Among others there was a very odious one, which was establish'd by virtue of a Patent granted to Sir Francis Mitchel, and Sir Giles Mompesson, for the sole vending of Gold and Silver Lace, under colour of which they sold nothing but counterfeit Gold and Silver. The upper House having taken this Affair to heart, the King went thither to direct the Lords how they should proceed to judge of it; and gave them to understand, that tho' they condemn'd the Patentees, they should not enter into the Examination by what means they had obtain'd their Patent. The two Patentees were condemn'd in certain Penalties; but Mompesson was already fled, and he was no sooner out of the Kingdom, than the King published a Proclamation for apprehending him.

Complaints against Monopolies.

Judgment of Mompesson and Mitchel.

Francis Bacon, the Lord Chancellor, having been impeach'd of a Misdemeanor, was degraded from his Office by Parliament, and declared incapable of a Seat in the upper House. He was a Man of a vast deal of Wit, and Profound Knowledge, but of a mean Spirit, and a sordid Flatterer. Probably he compiled his History of Henry VII. with no other View but to make his Court to King James, who affected to copy after that Prince's Model. For this reason he gave Henry VII. the Character of the wisest of all Kings, and the Solomon of his Age, a Title which was also given to James I.

Disgrace of Lord Chancellor Bacon.

His Character

A Remark on his History of Henry VII.

THE House of Commons perceiving that no manner of Preparation was made to defend the Palatinate, and that the Money lately granted to the King had been applyed to another use, was not in haste to grant him a new Subsidy. They plainly saw that the King founded all his hopes upon the Marriage of his Son, and that by consequence he had no Intention to make War against Spain. The Credit which the Count de Gondomar had with the King, made the thing still more evident. For this reason, the King, who could no longer plead a necessity to make Preparations for War, because he had let the time slip, gave Orders to the Lord High Treasurer, to go in his Name and adjourn the Parliament. This was matter of Complaint for the House of Commons, who pleaded that tho' the King had the Power of proroguing and dissolving the Parliament, yet it did not belong to him to adjourn them, and that it was a peculiar Privilege of either House to adjourn themselves. But the King declared publickly that his Prerogative extended as well to Adjournment, as to Prorogation, and Dissolution; and the lower House was obliged to comply, because the Lords refused to join with it. Consequently the Parliament was adjourned to the 14th of November, and from thence to the 22d of February 1622; after which the King put forth a Proclamation to abolish certain Monopolies, and another prohibiting Discourse about Affairs of State.

WHILE these things pass'd in England, Frederick's Affairs grew worse and worse both in Bohemia and the Palatinate. All his Allies deserted him after the Battle of Prague. The Count de Mansfield was the only one that held out for him, and he fortified himself in Bohemia. But Frederick seeing that the Upper Palatinate was actually invaded by the Duke of Bavaria, engaged Mansfield to carry his little Army thither. That General, who had a good Notion of Military Affairs, posted himself in a Camp so advantageous, that it was in a manner impossible to dislodge him from it. While he thus disputed the Ground in that Country, the Lord Digby, who was returned from his Embassy at Vienna, being informed that the Lower Palatinate was on the Point of being lost, engaged Mansfield to carry his Army thither; and by that means the Upper Palatinate, which was not of so great consequence, was utterly lost. I have already given some Account of the first Campaign in the Lower Palatinate, during which there passed nothing of moment, but it proved otherwise in this. Frederick having lost the Assistance of his Allies, as I have observed, Spinola met with no Opposition in the Lower Palatinate, but from the English Troops brought thither by Vere, which had thrown themselves into the three principal Towns, viz. Manheim, Heidelberg, and Frankendal. Mean time, as James continually sollicited the Emperor and the King of Spain about the Affair of the Palatinate, the Court of Spain was inclined out of complaisance to him, to consent to a Truce of 5 Weeks, which began the 21st of August. James then thought himself above all the World, not doubting that his Menaces, weak as they were, had produced that favourable Turn. But he did not perceive that this Truce was only a Snare laid for him. As the Truce of 12 Years concluded in 1609, between Spain and the United Provinces was just expiring, the King of Spain wanted to employ those Troops in the Netherlands, which he had in the Palatinate; and this short Truce was for no other end but to give the Emperor time to supply their place. For soon after Spinola had quitted the Palatinate, Don Gonzales de Cordona, whom he had left there, was at the head of an Army of 18,000 Men, with which he made made himſelf Maſter of ſeveral Places, and at laſt laid ſiege to Frankendal. But the Count de Mansfield, who arrived at the ſame time, broke his Meaſures, and compel'd him to raiſe the Siege. Not long after this, the Duke of Bavaria's General, the Count de Tilly, repaired to the lower Palatinate with ſo ſtrong a Reinforcement of Troops, that the Count de Mansfield was obliged to retire to Alſace. After his Retreat, the two Generals, the Spaniard and Bavarian, made themſelves Maſters of all the Palatinate, except Manheim, Heidelberg and Frankendal, to which the Engliſh were retired.

Death of Philip III. of Spain.

Philip III. King of Spain, died in March this Year, and was ſucceeded by his Son Philip IV.

THE Truce of 12 Years betwixt Spain and the States General expiring this Year, the Archduke was afraid that James would ſend the States a powerful Supply, in order to enable the Elector Palatine to recover thoſe Dominions which had been taken from him. But to hinder James from acting, he gave him to underſtand, that the Peace between the Emperor and the Elector Palatine, was far from being impoſſible if it was carefully promoted. The Emperor and the King of Spain ſeconded the Archduke ſo well in his Project of amuſing the King, that he fell into this other Snare. He imagined that he ſhould ruin all if he prepared for War at a time when his Son-in-law's Enemies ſeem'd in ſuch a Diſpoſition for Peace. But the ill Succeſs of Digby's Embaſſys with the Emperor was enough to have convinced him, if he had not been wilfully blind, that they only aimed to amuſe him. The Archduke Albert dying in July this Year, his Widow the Infanta continued to feed the King of England with the Hopes of a ſpeedy Peace. The better to draw him into the Snare, the Emperor ſent the Count de Schwartzenberg to him, and gave him to underſtand that this Ambaſſador had full Power to adjuſt all things with him.

James is again amus'd by the Emperor and Spain.

Digby's Embaſſy.

Archduke Albert's Death.

Digby being returned from Vienna, the King re-aſſembled the Parliament in the Month of November, tho' the Adjournment thereof had been continued to the 22d of February following. The Lord High Treaſurer, the Keeper of the Great Seal, and Baron Digby, had a Commiſſion to ſignify the King's Mind to the Parliament. The Drift of their Speeches was to ſhew that the King wanted Money to ſave the Palatinate, and that there was at leaſt a Neceſſity of his preparing for War in caſe he ſhould be forced to it. He deſired that he might be ſupplyed with the Money, and that it might be left to his care to manage the Affair, without troubling themſelves with the Inquiry which way he would proceed.

James calls his Parliament to grant him a Supply.

THE Commons, after having heard the Speeches of the Commiſſioners, inſtead of proceeding immediately to the Affair of the Subſidy, voted a Remonſtrance to the King, concerning the Danger of the Kingdom from Papiſts. In this Remonſtrance they ſet forth their Terrors, and pointed the King to thoſe Remedies which they thought proper to be taken. With Expreſſions of great Submiſſion and Reſpect they plainly diſcovered their Sentiments of the King's Conduct, eſpecially with regard to the Marriage of the Prince his Son with a Popiſh Princeſs, and to his Neglect of the Intereſts of his Son-in-law. In fine, they intimated plainly enough, that they were far from being convinced that the King intended to employ the Money which he deſired of the Parliament, in a War againſt Spain. This was wounding the King in the moſt ſenſible part, becauſe he had ſo often ſignified to the Commons that he did not expect they ſhould pretend to give him Advice when he did not ask it of them, and much leſs in Affairs relating to his Family. Therefore knowing what the Remonſtrance contained before it was preſented to him, he wrote to the Speaker to acquaint him that he would not ſuffer the Commons to tranſgreſs the Bounds which he had preſcribed to them, and that he would not receive the Remonſtrance. The Commons after hearing this Letter read, reſolved to preſent a Petition to the King, in which they took care to juſtify their Proceeding. The King vouchſafed to receive the Petition, but not the Remonſtrance which was annexed to it: and ſome days after this, he ſent them a very ſharp Anſwer, wherein he told them, among other things, that their pretended Privileges were only Conceſſions from the Kings his Predeceſſors; and gave them to underſtand, that it was in his power to take them away, and that he would actually do it, if they provoked him to it. The King was ſo plain in this Anſwer, that the Commons fearing the Parliament would be immediately either diſſolved or prorogued, made haſte with a Proteſt, whereby they overturned all the King's Maxims with reſpect to the Privileges of their Houſe. The King being informed of it, met his Council, and having ordered the Regiſter of the Lower Houſe to be brought to him, he took out the Proteſt with his own hand, tore it in pieces, and ordered the Council to regiſter what he had done, verbally and authentically. Six days after this he diſſolved the Parliament by a Proclamation, and committed ſeveral of the Members of both Houſes to Priſon. He afterwards put forth another Proclamation, prohibiting all Diſcourſe about State-Affairs under ſevere Penalties. Hitherto it ſeems the King had only been skirmiſhing, and that now he was reſolved to come to a Battle. But the Occaſion he had for a Parliament afterward, prevented the entire Rupture Rupture in the Legiſlature, which did not happen till the following Reign.

Anno MDCXXII.

IN this Quarrel betwixt the King and Parliament, founded upon two contrary Principles, there were few People in the Kingdom but what were concerned. The Puritans, as may eaſily be imagined, adher'd to the Parliament, and the Clergy of the Church of England, ranked themſelves for the greateſt part on the King's ſide. But George Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, tho' he adhered to the Diſcipline of the Church of England, continued ſteddy in his Principles relating to the Government, for which reaſon he was all along conſidered as a Puritan. And indeed he was no leſs, according to the Notion of the Court, who continually affected to confound the Presbyterians under the Name of Puritans, with ſuch as refuſed to acknowledge the abſolute Power of the King. This Prelate had the Misfortune in 1621 to kill a Man, by diſcharging an Arrow at a Deer. The King granted him a Pardon for it, but after that time he never went more to Council.

The ſteddineſs of Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

His Pardon for killing a Man by ſhooting at a Deer.

THE Quarrel I have been ſpeaking of, loſt King James the little Eſteem he had before among Foreigners, when they ſaw he was not able to get a Supply from the Parliament, at a Juncture when he had moſt need of it. This appeared from ſeveral Paſquinades publiſhed againſt him at Bruſſels and elſewhere. In one place, the King of England was repreſented with ſeveral Perſons ſtriving in vain to draw his Sword out of his Scabbard. In a Comedy acted at Bruſſels, a Courier was introduced bringing the bad News that the Palatinate would infallibly be taken from the Emperor; becauſe the King of Denmark was preparing 100,000 Casks of Herrings, the States-General 100,000 Barrels of Butter, and the King of England 100,000 Ambaſſadors.

King James lampoon'd abroad.

WHILE the People of England were in a very great Ferment upon account of the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and the Impriſonment of the Members, the King was in want of Money, and no way was thought ſo proper to come at it as to demand a Benevolence of the Subjects. I ſay to demand it, becauſe the Order of Council upon this head expreſſly imported, that the King ſhould not put up with what was voluntarily offered, if ſuch Offers were not proportionable to every private Man's Abilities. The Money which was to ariſe from this Benevolence was abſolutely neceſſary for the King in order to ſend the Lord Digby to Spain, and Sir Richard Weſton to Bruſſels. Theſe two Ambaſſadors were to put the laſt hand to the Plan formed by the King, which, as appeared by his own Letters, was as follows, viz. To conclude the Prince's Marriage with the Infanta, and to receive her Portion of two Millions, before the determination of the Affair of the Elector his Son-in-law; and in the mean time to procure a Truce for the Palatinate: during which, after every thing relating to the Marriage ſhould be concluded, the King of Spain out of pure Friendſhip to him and to the Prince, was to oblige the Emperor not only to evacuate the Lower Palatinate, but alſo to compel the Duke of Bavaria to reſtore the Upper, of which he had taken poſſeſſion. Nothing was more ſpecious than this Plan, if it had been built upon a good Foundation. But as ill luck would have it, 'twas no more than an Invention of the Count de Gondomar to harraſs the King, and to hinder him from ſending Succours to the King of Bohemia and the United Provinces. The Emperor, the King of Spain, and the Infanta Iſabella, being fully informed of this Plan, contributed to keep the King as it were chained down to it by general or equivocal Promiſes, which contain'd nothing poſitive, at the ſame time that they fed him conſtantly with hopes of a happy Iſſue. The King was ſo fond of it, that nothing was capable to make him alter his Meaſures.

He demands a Benevolence of his Subjects.

His Projects.

I have already ſaid that the Emperor had ſent the Count de Schwartzembourgh to the King, to ſettle the Affair of the Palatinate with him. But when the Court was for commencing a Treaty with that Ambaſſador, it appear'd that he had no full Power, and that the Infanta Iſabella was the only Perſon authorized for the Negotiation. This made the King reſolve to ſend Sir Richard Weſton to Bruſſels to treat there with the Infanta. At the ſame time he ſent Digby to Spain, whom he had lately made Earl of Briſtol, to conclude the Marriage there, jointly with Sir Walter Aſton, who reſided there as Ambaſſador in Ordinary. It muſt be obſerved, that in the Inſtructions he gave to the Earl of Briſtol, he expreſſly forbad him to make the Reſtitution of the Palatinate one of the Marriage Articles. He was afraid leſt the Reſtitution of the Palatinate ſhould be look'd upon as a Compenſation for the Portion which had been promiſed him. Mean time as the Marriage could not be abſolutely concluded without a Diſpenſation from the Pope, as had been agreed on, the King ſent Gage to Rome to ſollicit it; and to the end that his Sollicitations might be the more effectual, he cauſed all the Popiſh Recuſants who were in Priſon to be ſet at liberty. This occaſioned ſuch great Murmurings among the People, that the Biſhop of Lincoln was charged to juſtify the King's Conduct by a publick Writing, which had not the Succeſs that was expected from it. As the King ſtood in need at that time of the Infanta Iſabella's Intereſt, he made no ſcruple to permit the Lord Vaux a Papiſt, to WHILE theſe things paſs'd, the King of Bohemia, who was ſtill in Holland, found means to engage in his Intereſts, the Prince of Baden Dourlach, and Prince Chriſtian of Brunſwick, Adminiſtrator of Halberſtadt. The firſt raiſed an Army in the Neighbourhood of the Palatinate, the ſecond in Weſtphalia; and moreover, the Count de Mansfeldt, who was retired into Alſace, was at hand to join the two Princes when they entered the Palatinate. The King of Bohemia hoping by this means to recover the Poſſeſſion of his Dominions, paſs'd thro' France incognito, and went to Mansfeldt's Army. It would be too tedious here to mention the Particulars of this Campaign; it ſhall ſuffice to ſay in a word, that the Prince of Baden was routed by the Bavarians, that the King of Bohemia having march'd with Mansfeldt to join the Prince of Brunſwick's Army was defeated, and that afterwards the Succours which were ſent to the Count de Tilly rendered him ſo ſuperior, that the King of Bohemia was obliged to abandon his Project, and to return to Holland. The Prince of Brunſwick, and the Count Mansfeldt, abandon'd the Palatinate likewiſe, in order to retire to the Netherlands. Tilly meeting with no farther oppoſition in the Lower Palatinate, took Heidelberg by ſtorm, made himſelf Maſter of Manheim by a Blockade, and afterwards laid Siege to Frankendal, the only Place which the King of Bohemia had left.

Negotiation at Bruſſels.

WHILE the King of Bohemia ſtaid in the Palatinate, Weſton was at Bruſſels to negotiate the Peace with the Infanta. But two Difficulties aroſe which protracted this Negotiation, and rendered it at laſt Abortive. The firſt was, that James had not taken the Precaution to get Weſton authorized by the King of Bohemia, who was the chief Perſon concerned: therefore he was under a neceſſity of deſiring a full Power from this Prince; who was far from giving it while he had any hopes of driving his Enemies out of the Palatinate, and did not ſend it till he was on the point of returning to Holland. This Difficulty being removed, another aroſe which was not inferior to the former, viz. That the Infanta's Power conſiſted only in a bare Letter from the Emperor, wherein he deſired her to concert Meaſures with the Ambaſſador of England for a Peace. This Power not being ſufficient, there was a neceſſity for deſiring another, but it was long before it came. During this, Tilly making great Progreſs in the Palatinate, it may be ſuppoſed that it was not the Emperor's Intereſt to haſten the Concluſion of the Treaty which was to be negotiated at Bruſſels. James had recourſe to the King of Spain, who on his part ſpun out the Affair till Manheim and Heidelberg were taken. Tilly might alſo have made himſelf Maſter of Frankendal, if the overflowing of the Rivers had not forced him to to raiſe the Siege. James perceived at laſt that he was trifled with, and ordered the Earl of Biſtol to complain of it to the King of Spain. But at the ſame time being given to underſtand that the Marriage was on the point of being concluded, and the Diſpenſation juſt ready to be diſpatched, this alone appeas'd his Wrath. He did not care to run the riſque of loſing the Marriage, by inſiſting too ſtrenuouſly on the Affair of the Palatinate. Nevertheleſs he owned that he had been impoſed upon, and he ſeemed inclinable to take Revenge; but he wanted the King of Spain either to join him, in order to reſcue the Lower Palatinate by Force of Arms out of the hands of the Imperialiſts, to whom that Prince had delivered it up, or at leaſt to give him Paſſage thro' his Dominions to carry the War into that Country. He could ſcarce have contrived a more chimerical Project.

JAMES I.

James finds he is impoſed on.

His falſe Step.

MEAN time, ſince they could not always expect to amuſe the King, as they had done for 6 Years, the Spaniſh Court thought it proper to make him believe that the Marriage was on the point of being concluded. The Pope before he granted the Diſpenſation, deſired to be informed more particularly of the Treaty that was to be made upon that head, the five Articles that were agreed on, appearing to him to be too looſe, and ſubject to too much Chicanery. Therefore they were obliged, in order to pleaſe the Pope, to explain and enlarge thoſe firſt Articles, and to make nineteen of them, which were ſent to Rome. At length after a great deal of Sollicitation, Gage returned from Rome with thoſe nineteen Articles, and the Pope's Notes upon them, as is uſual in the Capitulations of Places. Some were agreed to, others explained, and ſome enlarged and augmented. The King was very much puzzled when he received thoſe Articles ſo commented on by the Pope. If he agreed to them, he would give his Enemies reaſon to accuſe him of being too careleſs of the Intereſts of the Proteſtant Religion, of which he was already ſuſpected. If he refus'd them, he ſhou'd break off the Marriage, put himſelf under the neceſſity of making Efforts to wreſt the Palatinate from the Emperor by Force of Arms, and what was worſe for him, he wou'd be oblig'd to call a Parliament, which in all appearance wou'd not fail to improve the Opportunity to make ſome Breach in the Royal Prerogative. While he was in this Confuſion, he reſolv'd to ſacrifice the Proteſtant Religion, rather than break off the Marriage, and be depriv'd of the Portion of two Millions, which was what he had ſtill very much at heart. He determin'd therefore to make certain Offers to the Spaniſh Court with reſpect to Religion, beyond which he proteſted protested he could not go. We don't meet with these Offers in the History, but according to appearance they were so advantagious to the Catholick Religion, as may be guess'd by the Conventions which were made afterwards, that the Spanish Court, which till then had only aimed to amuse him, resolved at last to conclude the Marriage. As they saw him disposed to yield up every thing, they judged that they ought by no means to neglect this opportunity of promoting the Restoration of the Roman Catholick Religion in England. This Design had the greater appearance of Success, because considering the King's Disposition, they had reason to hope for yet farther Advantages. From that time, that is to say, from the end of the Year 1622, Philip IV. was as hot for concluding the Marriage, as he was before indifferent.

They resolve on the Marriage.

Anno MDCXXIII.

THE new Measures entered into by the Court of Spain, procured the Earl of Bristol a Letter from Philip to the Infanta Isabella, by which he desired her to renew at London the Negotiation touching the Palatinate, which had been broke off at Brussels. All the Difficulty was to save Frankendal, which was the only Place remaining in the hands of the King of Bohemia, and on the point of being lost. In this Negotiation James was bubbled as usual; for by granting him a Truce of 15 Months for the Palatinate, he was prevailed on to let the Infanta have the keeping of Frankendal, upon these Conditions: "That the Eng- "lish Garison which was there, should have "the Liberty to retire thro' the Dominions "of the Emperor and the King of Spain. "That at the Expiration of the Truce, the "Infanta should restore that place to the "King of England, who might put a Ga- "rison into it of 1500 Men, to whom the "King of Spain should give Passage thro' "his Dominions. And that the Prince Pa- "latine should renounce all his Alliances." Before this Truce was concluded, the Emperor had conferred the Electoral Dignity, which he had taken away from the King of Bohemia, upon the Duke of Bavaria.

Frankendal put into the hands of the Infanta Isabella.

Duke of Bavaria made Elector Palatine in the room of the King of Bohemia.

ALL the rest of the Year 1623 was employed in the Marriage-Treaty. The Spanish Court having at length determined to put an end to the Affair, provided they could obtain what they desired in favour of the Catholick Religion, gave the Earl of Bristol certain Articles ready drawn up, which were more explicit, and fuller than those agreed on before. But as the Ambassador could not accept them for want of a Power, he sent them to the King. These Articles were agreeable to the Pope's Comments; which shews that the two Courts of Rome and Spain acted in this Affair in concert. James having received those Articles, kept them a while, and at last signed them, such as they were, without making any Alteration in them, and caused the Prince of Wales to sign them; after which he sent them back to the Earl of Bristol. Every thing being thus settled to the Satisfaction of the two Kings, it was agreed betwixt the Earl of Bristol and the King of Spain's Ministers, that till the arrival of the Pope's Dispensation, which, as they judged, would come in the Month of April at furthest, they should go about drawing up the other Articles which did not relate to Religion; that four Days after the arrival of the Dispensation, the Nuptials should be celebrated by Proxy, and that the Infanta should set out for England 20 Days after. During this, they went upon those called the Temporal Articles, to distinguish them from the others of Religion, which were ready, and approved on both sides by the middle of March, so that they were only to have Patience 5 or 6 Weeks longer for the Celebration of the Marriage. It must be observed, that in the Temporal Articles there was not one word concerning the restitution of the Palatinate, because, as I have already said, the King had expressly forbid the Earl of Bristol to confound those two Affairs together.

Sequel of the Marriage-Treaty with the Infanta.

WHILE these things were transacting in Spain, the Marquis of Buckingham put it into the head of the Prince of Wales to go himself into Spain to carry off the Infanta, and thereby put an end to the Difficulties which might still remain about his Marriage. The King was so weak as to consent to this Romantick Journey, without considering that he was going to deliver up his only Son, his presumptive Heir, into the hands of the King of Spain, and without having taken any Security for his Return. This shews at least that he saw no farther Obstacle in the way of the Marriage, and that there was little Foundation for what the Marquis of Buckingham said afterwards, that this Prince, considering how long the Affair had been put off, was willing to see with his own Eyes where the Remora lay; for all the Difficulties were removed, when the Prince undertook his Voyage. Be this as it will, the Prince and Buckingham set out from Court upon the 27th of February. They travelled thro' France incognito, and arrived on the 17th of March at Madrid, where no body expected them. The Prince was received by the King of Spain with abundance of Honour, and a world of Caresses. But the Dispensation from Rome was much longer a coming than was believed, because probably the Pope entertained new hopes after the Prince's arrival at Madrid. It was believed in Spain, that the Prince was come thither to change his Religion, and no Pains were spared spared to convert him. The Pope was put upon writing a Letter to him, and he was even prevailed on to return him an Answer, in which he gave him the Title of your Holiness, and actually engaged in some measure to be the Protector of the Catholicks of England. At length the Dispensation arrived in the Month of May, but the Pope had annexed new Conditions to it, without which it could be of no effect. There was an absolute Necessity of informing King James of these new Conditions, the Prince not having it in his power to agree to them. The Pope likewise demanded Security for the performance of the Articles.

The Pope tacks new Conditions to the Dispensation.

Cottington was charged to carry into England those Articles modell'd, explain'd, and enlarg'd, as the Pope had thought fit, and which from no more than five at first, were swell'd at last to the number of twenty three. James was gone too far, to be able to make his Retreat. The Prince his Son being in the hands of the Spaniards, there was no way to break off a Treaty which had been 7 Years in hand, on account of any Favours more or less which were demanded in behalf of the Catholicks. Therefore he sign'd not only the 23 Articles, but also 40 other secret Articles, which were to be executed after the Consummation of the Marriage*, and sent them to Spain. 'Tis also said, that when the Prince himself sign'd them, he added much stronger Engagements to them in favour of the Catholick Religion. When the King sent these Articles sign'd into Spain, he tack'd a Patent to them, whereby he created his Favourite, Duke of Buckingham, in order to reward him for the great Service that he had lately done to the State.

The King signs the Articles.

Buckingham is created a Duke.

A new Difficulty arose after the Articles were arrived in Spain; for the Catholick King wanted Security for the Performance of the 4 secret Articles, before the Marriage was consummated; and his Ambassadors who were at London had Orders to demand it as a Preliminary. James was very much confounded at this Demand. These Articles were secret, and not to be executed before the Marriage, and yet the Spanish Court would have them made publick, and even put in execution, while his Son continued in Spain. Mean time, as he was bent on the Marriage, cost what it would, he chose to put into the Ambassador's hands a Declaration of the Council, attesting that it was the King's Intention to grant the Catholicks what was contained in the 4 secret Articles, and even more; with which Declaration the Ambassadors were satisfy'd.

A new Difficulty started in the Marriage-Treaty with the Infanta.

Declaration in favour of the Catholicks.

DURING this, Pope Gregory XV. died, before his Nuncio at Madrid had delivered the Dispensation, which by that means became of no effect, and there was an indispensable necessity of waiting for a new Pope and another Dispensation. Urban VIII. who succeeded, kept back the Dispensation longer than was expected, and during that time the Prince of Wales was teazed incessantly to change his Religion; but he still continued firm.

Death of Pope Gregory XV.

His Successor. The Prince is importun'd to change his Religion.

WHILE it seemed as if the Prince was waiting for the Dispensation with the greater Impatience, because he had been already six Months in Spain expecting it, he contrived a Method with the Duke of Buckingham entirely to break off his Marriage. 'Tis not easy to know what was the real motive of this Resolution. The reason they alledged for it was, that when they were in England they had found no Disposition in the King of Spain, for restoring the Palatinate, tho' the Marriage was only calculated for that end. All the Difficulty was, how they should get out of Spain without divulging their Design. In order to surmount this, the Duke wrote to the King, that Philip had not only no Design to cause the Palatinate to be restored, but that also he had never an Intention to conclude the Marriage. The Prince added in a Letter he wrote to the King his Father, that he never expected he should be able to get out of the hands of the King of Spain, and that hereafter the Electress his Sister ought to be looked upon as presumptive Heiress of the Crown of England. James being afflicted, as may well be supposed, at News so little expected, wrote to the Duke to bring back his Son to him, whatever it cost; and at the same time he sent over Vessels to fetch him home.

The breaking off of the Marriage.

The Prince gets the King's Consent for his leaving Spain.

As soon as the Duke had received this Order, he acquainted the King of Spain of it, and told him that the Prince's Absence was the occasion of Commotions in England, which made his Return absolutely necessary; the rather, because the Dispensation was a long time a coming, and that there could be no assurance when it would come: That as for the rest, the Prince's Departure would be no hindrance to the Marriage, because he would leave a Proxy in the hands of any Person that his Majesty himself should make choice of, for marrying the Infanta in his Name. This had so specious an Appearance of Reason, that Philip did not oppose the Prince's Departure, and offered himself to be his Proxy. Consequently the Prince set out for St. Andero, where the Fleet waited for him, after having solemny sworn a 2d time to the Articles that were agreed on, and left a Proxy with the Earl of Bristol, which was to be delivered to the King of Spain 10 Days after the Arrival of the Dispensation. While he was on the Road for St. Andero, he sent Clarke, the Duke of Buckingham's Domestick, to the Earl of Bristol, to order him not not to part with the Proxy out of his hands, till the Court of Spain had given him ſufficient Security that the Infanta ſhould not turn Nun after the Eſpouſals: and to let him know what ſort of Security they ſhould think fit to offer. This abſolute Order was a Precaution taken by the Prince, in caſe the Diſpenſation arrived too ſoon, in order to hinder the Marriage from being celebrated, before he had convinced the King his Father of the neceſſity of breaking it off. The Prince and the Duke arriving at Portſmouth on the 15th of October N. S. went to wait on the King, who was overjoyed to ſee them again; but they did not inform him immediately of the Project they had contrived to break off the Marriage. Twelve Days after this, the King and the Prince received Letters from the Earl of Briſtol, which informed them of the King of Spain's Anſwer on account of the Prince's Scruples, with which they both ſeemed ſatisfied.

His Arrival in England.

THE Prince and the Duke being loth to open their Deſign to the King all at once, began to inſtil Doubts into his Mind with regard to the Reſtitution of the Palatinate, which he had all along expected to be the Effect of the Marriage, tho' he was not willing to permit it to be one of the Conditions of it. This was the reaſon that in the Letter he wrote to the Earl of Briſtol, dated the 28th of October, to acquaint him that he was ſatisfied with the King of Spain's Anſwer, he added that before Chriſtmas, he hoped to receive two agreeable Articles of News, viz. the Advice of his Son's Marriage, and of the Reſtoration of his Son-in-Law. Tho' the Affair of the Reſtitution of the Palatinate had been neglected to the laſt degree while the Prince was in Spain, the Earl of Briſtol got a Promiſe from the Conde d'Olivarez, that the Proxy ſhould not be demanded of him, before a Writing ſign'd by the King of Spain was put into his hands, whereby he ſhould engage for the reſtitution of the Palatinate.

His Cauſineſs in diſcovering his Mind to the King all at once.

King's Letter to the Earl of Briſtol.

Reſtitution of the Palatinate promis'd by the Court of Madrid.

ALL this was a mighty Obſtacle to the Prince's Deſign, who propoſed to make the Refuſal of the Spaniſh Court upon this Article the Foundation of his Deſign to break off the Match. Nevertheleſs with a View to gain time he had taken a Precaution which the King of Spain's Miniſters did not perceive; and that was his ſlipping a Clauſe into the Proxy that it ſhould not be valid till Chriſtmas, ſo that if the Diſpenſation did not arrive above 10 Days before Chriſtmas, the Proxy would be of no force. But on the other hand, it might arrive before that time; and if ſo, nothing could hinder the Celebration of the Marriage. This Reaſon at length obliged the Prince and the Duke to declare their Thoughts to the King without reſerve. 'Tis not certain whether he was convinced by their Arguments, or whether he ſuffered himſelf to be prevailed on from his own weakneſs and an exceſs of Complaiſance. Be this as it will, he ſent a very expreſs Order to the Earl of Briſtol, not to part with the Proxy till after Chriſtmas; that is to ſay, when it would be no longer of any Value, by virtue of the Clauſe which the Prince had inſerted in it. The King's Order was dated the 23d of November, N. S. and the Diſpenſation arrived at Madrid in the beginning of December; ſo that the King's Letter came to the Earl of Briſtol, in the critical Minute. When the Earl acquainted the King of Spain with the Order he had received from the King his Maſter, that Monarch eaſily underſtood the meaning of it; and from that day a Stop was put to all the Preparations that were making for the Marriage; the Infanta quitted the Title of Princeſs of Wales, which ſhe had already begun to take, and the Ambaſſador of England had Orders to demand no more Audiences of the King. No body was ever let into the true Secret why this Negotiation was broke off. The Earl of Clarendon aſcribes it to ſome ſecret Deſign of the Duke of Buckingham. For my part, I gueſs that a Gentleman whom the Queen of Bohemia had ſent to the Duke in Spain, made the firſt Overture to him of Prince Charles's Marriage to the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, Siſter to the King of France; and that this Match, which was concluded not long after, was the true Cauſe why the former was broke off.

The Prince of Wales's Artifice.

JAMES I. The King's Conſent to the breaking off the Match, and his Order to the Earl of Briſtol not to part with the Proxy.

Anno MDCXXIV.

AS ſoon as the King had reſolved to break off the Match, the Prince and the Duke perſuaded him to recall the Earl of Briſtol, that there might be no poſſibility of reviving it. We may be ſure that from the Moment the King had diſcovered ſo much Complaiſance for the Prince and the Duke, or rather ſo much Weakneſs, as for the ſake of doing them a pleaſure, to break off a Marriage he had been ſo earneſtly ſoliciting for ſeven Years together, he ſubmitted himſelf entirely to their Management, ſo that it was not poſſible for him to ſhake off the Yoke. They had contracted ſuch a ſtrict Union together during their ſtay in Spain, that the Duke was more the Prince's Favourite than he was the King's; and unhappily for the King, they only caballed together to keep him in Slavery. Therefore it may be ſaid that the remainder of this Reign, which did not laſt above a Year longer, was rather the beginning of the Reign of Charles I. than the end of that of James I. for James to his dying Day acted only by the Direction of the Prince and his Favourite; who not content with having forced him to break off a Match he had ſo earneſtly deſired, made him alſo take a Reſolution to make War upon Spain, tho' nothing was more contrary to his Inclination.

IN order to go to War with Spain, he must have Money; and the first method they contrived, was to raise a Benevolence upon the Subjects. But afterwards the Prince and Duke considered that the Parliamentary Way was the most proper, as well for raising the necessary Subsidies, as for approving the Breach of the Marriage Treaty, and the War against Spain. The King was therefore obliged by their Sollicitations, tho' it was against his Will, to call a Parliament. In the Interval betwixt the Summons of it and the Session, the Prince and the Duke proposed to the King to marry the Prince to the Princess Henrietta Maria, Sister to the King of France. James having given his Consent to the Project, found a Pretence for sending the Earl of Holland into France, in order to see how the Court stood affected to this Marriage. I will treat of this Negotiation presently, but must first take notice of what pass'd in the Parliament which met upon the 19th of February 1624.

A Parliament called.

Proposal of the Prince's Marriage with Henrietta Maria of France.

James, who now acted only by the Direction of the Prince and the Duke, who were in great need of a Parliament, made a Speech at the Opening of it so different from those he had us'd to make there, that one would have almost said that another King had made it. He endeavoured to gain the Love and Good Will of both Houses by tender and affectionate Expressions, without sounding the Royal Prerogative in so high a Note as he had done in former Speeches. He let fall two things in his Speech which rendered his Bona fide suspicious in the opinion of those who were informed of the Secret of the Negotiation he had carried on in Spain. In the first place he affirmed, that when the Prince arrived in Spain, the Negotiation was as fresh as if it had never been in Treaty before; and yet he himself had sign'd the Articles of it at least with respect to the Marriage. As to the Restitution of the Palatinate, it was he himself who had given Orders it should not be made one of the Marriage-Articles. Secondly, he took God to witness, that he had not so much as a Thought of granting a Toleration to the Papists; and yet the Secret Articles which he had signed, and the Declaration of the Council, which I mentioned above, manifestly evince the contrary to any Man, tho' ignorant of the Secret. The Earl of Bristol was afterwards obliged to divulge it for his own Justification. The principal Aim of this Speech, was to desire the advice of Parliament concerning the Affair of the Marriage, and that of the Palatinate. But for the Parliament's instruction in these matters, the King left it to the Prince and the Duke to acquaint them with the Particulars of what pass'd in this Negotiation.

Remarks on his Speech to the Parliament.

JAMES I.

THE Prince and the Duke of Buckingham repairing some days after to a Conference of the two Houses, the Duke gave them such a Report of what had pass'd in Spain as he thought proper: a Report, which, as the Earl of Bristol proved afterwards, had not one Word of Truth in it; and yet the Prince attested the Truth of it from time to time, by certain Words and Signs. The Earl of Bristol being absent, no body knew the truth of the Fact but the King, who had no Interest to discover it. In this long Speech the Duke took the Earl of Bristol to task, and blamed him for all the Delays that happened in the Negotiation, charging him with having had the Interests of the House of Austria more at heart than those of the King his Master; and publickly affirming that the King of Spain never had an Intention either to procure the Restitution of the Palatinate, or to conclude the Marriage. The Prince and the Duke had already secured an Interest in both Houses. It being moreover impossible that the Parliament could be informed of the Truth, they could not imagine that the King and the Prince would offer to give an authentick Testimony to what the Duke had said, if his Relation had been false. In fine, the People were so pleas'd to see the Prince come home, and the King resolved to break off the Marriage with Spain, that the Duke's Speech was universally applauded.

The Duke of Buckingham gives them a false account of the Business of the Spanish Match.

His Speech applauded.

WE have seen already that the Marriage was actually broke off in Spain, and that Philip was very well assured of it. But as James had not directly recalled his Promise, having only ordered the Earl of Bristol not to deliver the Proxy till it was more valid, he pretended when he asked the advice of the Parliament, that the Affair was still in statu quo; and that he was perfectly at liberty, either to continue the Negotiation or to break it off. The Parliament not b ing duly informed, but taking what the King said for granted, advised him to break off the two Treaties about the Palatinate and the Marriage, and gave him many reasons for it. Upon this the King went to Parliament, to tell them that the Breach of the Negotiation could not but produce a War with Spain, and that by consequence he should want Money to carry it on. The Commons engaged some days after to grant him three entire Subsidies, and three Fifteenths, as soon as he made a solemn Declaration that the two Treaties were broke off. Upon this Engagement the King dispatch'd a Courier to carry his Declaration upon this head to Spain; but when he heard that the two Houses intended to present a joint Address to him against the Papists, he he ſtopp'd the Courier; tho' when he was told the Contents of it, he ſuffer'd him to proceed. All England was overjoyed at the Breach of the Spaniſh Match, the People not knowing at the ſame time that there was another negotiating in France, which was equally dangerous to the Proteſtant Religion.

People's Joy for breaking off of the Match.

THE Parliament's Addreſs conſiſted of theſe ſeven Articles. 1. That it would pleaſe the King to expel all the Jeſuits and Prieſts come over from the foreign Seminaries. 2. To ſeize the Arms of Papiſts. 3. To remove all Popiſh Recuſants from Court, and to call in the Licences granted upon that Head. 4. To ſtop the Concourſe of Papiſts to the Houſes of the Ambaſſadors. 5. To remove Papiſts from the publick Offices which they exerciſed, and which gave them too much Power. 6. To order the Magiſtrates to ſee to the Execution of the Laws againſt Recuſants. 7. To engage his Royal Word that for the future he would not ſuſpend the Execution of the Laws on account of ſuch Treaties as had lately been negotiated in Spain. The King returned a very gracious Anſwer to this Addreſs. He took God to Witneſs, that he had never diſpens'd with the Laws made againſt the Papiſts, and that he had not entertained ſo much as a thought of it; which he could not have ſaid without ſome Equivocation or mental Reſervation, becauſe all the World knew the contrary. He poſitively promis'd to execute the laſt Article of the Addreſs punctually. But when he told the two Houſes that he granted them more than they deſir'd, he avoided any Anſwer to the 3d and 5th Articles, in which they deſir'd he wou'd remove the Papiſts from Court, and take away their Offices. The Parliament, to ſhew that they were in earneſt, preſented him a Liſt ſome Days after of 57 Popiſh Lords and Gentlemen, who held publick Offices at Court, and in the Country. But as the Duke of Buckingham's Mother and Wife were Roman Catholicks, the Parliament did not think it proper to inſiſt longer upon that matter, out of pure regard for a Nobleman who had ſo much Intereſt with the King, and much more with the Prince.

The Parliament's Addreſs againſt Papiſts, &c.

Parliament give in a Liſt of Popiſh Officers.

AT the ſame time a Storm was gathering againſt the Duke of Buckingham. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador, being inraged with him for what he ſaid againſt the King his Maſter in the Conference betwixt the two Houſes, found means to inform the King ſecretly of a Conſpiracy, which perhaps was but too true, form'd between the Prince and the Duke, to keep him in Bondage. He even gave him ſome Proofs of it; which made the more Impreſſion upon him, becauſe after the Prince's return, he began to feel the Miſeries of that Slavery. It looked at firſt as if he had form'd a Reſolution to diſmiſs the Duke; but he was ſo afraid of his entire Union with the Prince, that he durſt not execute it. For when they had as it were made ſure of the Parliament, and had ſo order'd matters, that the King had not one Domeſtick but what was devoted to them, they began to treat him with leſs Decorum than before. The State of Slavery in which the King found himſelf, appeared chiefly upon two occaſions, in which he could not be miſtaken. The firſt was the Fall of the Lord Treaſurer, who for having refuſed the Prince and the Duke, while they were in Spain, all the Money they had call'd for, was impeached in Parliament of a Miſdemeanor, condemned to pay a Fine of 50,000*l. Sterling*, and declared unworthy of a Seat in the upper Houſe, notwithſtanding the Intreaty and Sollicitation which the King made to the Prince and the Duke, not to puſh that Nobleman to extremity. He knew that they were his Adverſaries, and he could not prevail on them to let him alone. The ſecond Proof of the King's Bondage was the Diſgrace of the Earl of Briſtol, to which he was obliged to conſent whether he would or not. He could not be ignorant that this Nobleman was innocent, and he was the only Peer at Court that he could truſt. Yet he could not help ſending an Order to him at Dover, not to come to Court, but to ſtay at his own Houſe. Some time after this, the Favourite ſent a Paper to the Earl to ſign, whereby he was to own himſelf guilty of a Miſdemeanor; telling him at the ſame time that he had no other way to come off. The Earl refuſed to ſign this Paper, and the King ſaid to Buckingham, that it was a horrid Act of Tyranny to go about to force an innocent Man to declare himſelf guilty. But it was not in his power to protect that Nobleman.

King's Suſpicion and Fears of the Duke.

AS ſoon as the Parliament was broke up, the King ſent over 6000 Men to ſerve in Holland, under the Prince of Orange. At the ſame time the Court form'd a Project to employ the Count de Mansfeldt, and to give him the Command of a Body of 12,000 Men, which were actually raiſing, with a deſign to enter the Lower Palatinate during the Winter.

King ſends Men to Holland.

MEAN time the Earl of Holland having acquainted the King that the Court of France was diſpoſed to enter into a Treaty for the Marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, the King joined the Earl of Carliſle to him in the Negotiation of that Treaty. The Conferences upon this Affair began not many Days before the Parliament was prorogued, and at a time when the King, in order to ſatisfy the two Houſes, cauſed the Laws againſt Popiſh Recuſants to be put in execution. Theſe People had expected quite different Treatment a few Months before, therefore the Severity with which they were us'd, ſeemed to to them the greater. Some of them wrote word into France, that the Negotiation of the Prince's Marriage with a Spaniſh Princeſs adminiſtered ſome Comfort to them, whereas that which was begun in France upon the like account only increaſed their Miſeries. Theſe Complaints being often repeated, obliged Lewis XIII. at laſt to ſend the Archbiſhop of Ambrun to the King, to deſire ſome Favours of him for the Roman Catholicks. I don't propoſe to enter into the Particulars of this Negotiation. I ſhall only ſay in a word, that if any Credit may be given to that Archbiſhop's Account, which is at the end of Deageant's Memoirs, James had an extraordinary Biaſs to the Roman Catholick Religion: Perhaps too he had form'd a chimerical Project to eſtabliſh a Toleration of the two Religions in all the Dominions of Europe. But Deageant ſays more than this; for he affirms, that James had made a poſitive Promiſe to the Archbiſhop of Ambrun, to embrace the Roman Catholick Religion, and that he even wrote to the Pope to aſſure him of it. But this is not a proper place to examine how much there is of Truth in thoſe Memoirs.

They complain to the Court of France.

King James's Engagement according to Deageant.

THE firſt thing concluded in France relating to the Prince's Marriage, tho' the Engliſh Ambaſſadors made ſome ſcruple of it, was, that the Articles of Religion agreed to in Spain ſhould be laid down for the Foundation of the Treaty. The only Difference was, that France could not obtain that the Roman Catholicks ſhould have a publick Church in London. Nor did ſhe inſiſt much upon this Article, becauſe ſhe knew the Inconveniences, or rather the Impoſſibility of making it go down with the People and the Parliament: She procured herſelf amends in ſome meaſure, by cauſing an Addition to be made to the Number of Eccleſiaſticks in the Princeſs's Service, and by obtaining that the Children which ſhould be born of that Marriage ſhould be educated by their Mother, till they were 13. Years of Age, whereas only ten had been granted to Spain. The Treaty being ſigned at Paris in the Month of November, all Proſecutions againſt Popiſh Recuſants ceas'd immediately in England; and the King poſitively promiſed to ſet all thoſe at liberty that were actually in Priſon, immediately after the Conſummation of the Marriage.

Negotiation of the Prince's Marriage in France.

Stop put to the Proſecution of Popiſh Recuſants.

THE great Aim of the Prince and the Favourite was, that this Match would procure them an Opportunity of making an offenſive and defenſive Alliance with France, for the Recovery of the Palatinate. And this was alſo what the Earl of Carliſle had Orders to propoſe immediately. Lewis XIII. ſeemed to turn a willing Ear to the Propoſal, and even gave hopes that ſuch a League might be concluded after the Affair of the Marriage was diſpatch'd. Mean time the 12,000 Men that Mansfeldt was to carry into the Palatinate were got ready in England. When theſe Troops were in a readineſs, James cauſed preſſing Inſtances to be made again to the Court of France concerning the League; and the Anſwer was, that this Affair ſhould be treated of when the Marriage was conſummated. Therefore the Court of England could do no more at preſent, than demand Paſſage thro' France for the Troops which the Count de Mansfeldt was to command. Lewis made anſwer, that he would not only grant the Paſſage deſired of him, but that he would even join the Engliſh Troops with a Body of his own; but the Event ſhew'd, that he meant it ſhould be after the concluſion of the Alliance. Mean time the Court of England fancy'd that 'twas an Engagement without a Condition, and neglected to make the French Court explain it ſelf. But at that time there was hardly a ſillier Court under the Sun than that of England, of which here are two very convincing Proofs.

THE Truce of 15 Months made for the Palatinate being expired, James cauſed a Memorial to be preſented to the Infanta Iſabella, to deſire her that ſhe would reſtore Frankendal to him, and that ſhe would grant him Paſſage for 1500 Men thro' the Lands of the King of Spain and the Empire. The Infanta made Anſwer, That ſhe was ready to execute the Treaty, and to grant Paſſage to the Engliſh thro' the Countries in the Dominion of the King of Spain; but that ſhe had not power to grant it thro' the Territories of the Empire, and that ſhe was not engaged to it by the Treaty; which, as I mentioned before, was very true. Mean time, tho' the Treaty was concluded at London, none of the King's Miniſters perceived that the granting a Paſſage for the Garriſon of Frankendal for retiring was one thing, and that the allowing ſuch Paſſage for a new Supply of 1500 Men was another. Thus the King was obliged to leave that Place in the hands of the Infanta, becauſe he was afraid to venture the Paſſage of thoſe few Troops through the Territories of the Empire.

James demands Frankendal of the Infanta, and Paſſage for the Troops, which ſhe cannot grant.

THE following Inſtance is another Proof of the Simplicity of the Court of England. Without any other Security than what I juſt now mentioned for Count Mansfeldt's Paſſage thro' France, 12,000 Men were put on board with him, heaped, as it were, one upon another in the midſt of Winter. But when they came to ſet foot upon the French Shore, they were not ſuffer'd to land; Lewis not thinking himſelf bound to give them Paſſage. The Engliſh Writers call this Treachery on the part of France; but I know not whether they ought not to call it extreme Negligence on the part of England. Theſe Troops not having leave to land in France, went away to the Coaſts of Zealand, where they found the ſame Obſtruction. In ſhort, this Army, what with Sickneſs and Deſertion, dwindled almoſt to nothing; nothing; and the greateſt part of the Soldiers that remained, went to ſerve as Recruits to the 6000 Men of their Nation, who were in the Service of the States-General.

Mansfeldt denyed paſſage thro' France.

Anno MDCXXV.

Difficulties concerning the Diſpenſation.

Urban VIII. who was not eaſily perſuaded to grant a Diſpenſation for the Marriage, and did not promiſe it till he had been threatned by the Cardinal de Richelieu that the Court would do without it if he refuſed it, kept them in ſuſpence for it till the Month of February 1625. When it came to Paris, it appeared that the Pope had annexed two Conditions to it which were not in the Treaty, and which he required the King of England and the Prince his Son to ſwear to the Execution of, without which the Diſpenſation was not valid. Theſe two Conditions were, that the Domeſticks of the Children who ſhould be born of this Marriage ſhould be Catholicks, and that the Princeſs ſhould chuſe them. James agreed to theſe two Articles without much Intreaty, but he refuſed to take a new Oath, ſaying, that his own and his Son's Promiſe were ſufficient. Nevertheleſs the Marriage could not be celebrated without this Oath, becauſe the Pope had made it a neceſſary Condition of the Diſpenſation. The only Expedient thought of was that the King of France himſelf ſhould offer to be Security for the Performance of the two Articles. But there was a neceſſity of waiting for a new Diſpenſation, and James died before it arrived.

James's Sickneſs and Death.

IN the Month of March this Prince was ſeized with a Tertian Ague, which carried him off upon the 8th of April, N. S. The Duke of Buckingham was ſuſpected to have haſtened his Death by a Potion which he made him take twice, without the Advice of Phyſicians, and by a certain Plaiſter which he caus'd to be applied to his Belly. In the following Reign he was impeached by the Houſe of Commons, not indeed of having poiſon'd the King, but of having had the Preſumption to give him Remedies, without conſulting his Phyſicians.

JAMES I.

IN this Tome of the Fœdera, we find a great number of Acts relating to private Perſons, ſuch as Pardons, Penſions, Benefices, Conge d'Elires for Biſhopricks, &c. as may be ſeen in the Collection.

THE ſecond Part of this XVIIth Tome has a General Alphabetical Index of the Names of Perſons contained in all the Tomes.

THE third contains Alphabetical Indexes of the Places and Things mention'd in each Tome.

AND the fourth Part concludes the whole with an Index of Manuſcript Acts collected by Mr. Rymer in 59 Tomes, (beſides the Collection in the 17 printed Tomes,) from the Reign of Henry I. to the end of the Reign of Elizabeth. Among theſe Acts there's a great number which deſerve to be printed, as being of very great ſervice for illuſtrating the Hiſtory of England, were it only for the Dates.

THE Eighteenth Tome of the Fœdera was firſt publiſhed in the year 1726, by Order of the late King, and dedicated to his Majeſty by Mr. Robert Sanderſon, who, as was formerly obſerv'd, aſſiſted the deceaſed Mr. Rymer in compiling the other Tomes; and who in his Dedication of this, applauds his Felicity in having had the Honour of ſerving three Crown'd Heads (viz. King William, Queen Anne, and King George I.) for more than thirty Years, in a Work declared by the three greateſt Potentates in the World, as a Work highly conducing to their Service, and the Honour of their Crowns.

'THIS, ſays he, is the Eighteenth Tome 'of that Work, wherein your Majeſty may 'pleaſe to obſerve a certain Prophetic Care 'and Regard by your Royal Predeceſſor 'King Charles I. for that ILLUSTRIOUS 'FAMILY, from which hath been derived 'to us the choiceſt Bleſſing that Heaven 'cou'd beſtow upon a Loyal People, the 'GREATEST KING and BEST OF MEN, &c.'

The Reign of King CHARLES I.

ANNO 1625.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

The Rule obſerved by Rapin in writing this Reign.

MR. Rapin being aware of the great Difficulties which an Hiſtorian, who has no other View than to ſpeak truth, muſt encounter with in writing this Reign, and how impoſſible 'tis for him to avoid the Imputation of Partiality, or to keep a juſt Medium between two Parties, whoſe Principles are diametrically oppoſite, and to whom perhaps the ſiding with neither, is equally odious; has laid it down for a Rule, 1. To reject alike all extravagant Encomia's and immoderate Invectives. 2. To compare the Facts related by the ſeveral Hiſtorians; to receive as true, ſuch as they agree in, and admit none wherein they differ, but what are found to be ſupported by ſtrong Proofs. And as one and the ſame Action is good or bad, according as the Principle is from whence it flows, he has taken care to explain the Principles of the two Parties, and to ſupport them with the ſtrongeſt Arguments they are capable of. After that, he leaves the Readers to judge of the particular Actions, according to the Principles they are pleaſed to adopt. If he has any where deviated from this Rule, 'tis only where one of the Principles appears manifeſtly to be falſe. However, tho' he has a Reſpect for both Parties, yet as he was unwilling to be a Slave to either, he has not pretended to make his court to both, by forbearing to ſhew upon occaſion, the Faults of one or the other. Of this we have a Proof in his Syſtem with regard to the Reign of Charles I. which 'tis neceſſary juſt to mention in this Place, as Mr Rapin has laid it down himſelf in the Plan of his Hiſtory.

CHARLES I.

Our

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. His Opinion of King Charles and of the Presbyterians, &c.

OUR Author was perſuaded that King Charles I. made a very ill uſe of his Power in the firſt fifteen Years of his Reign, and that he deſign'd to eſtabliſh in England ſomething very like a deſpotic Government. That in 1640 and afterwards, when he found it impracticable, he would willingly have been ſatisfied with the Power allotted him by the Laws, and that he was ſincere in his Promiſes to keep within thoſe Bounds; the rather, becauſe it was not likely that he would have again attempted what had ſucceeded ſo ill.

PROBABLY, ſays he, Expedients would have been found to remove the Parliament's Diſtruſt of the King's Promiſes, had not the Presbyterians us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to inflame that Diſtruſt, under pretence of ſeeking Means to cure the People of their Fears. The Severity that had been exerciſed againſt them during the firſt fifteen Years of this Reign, and the King's invincible Averſion to their Sect, were the Cauſe, that they thought there was no Safety for them, but in an entire Breach between the King and Parliament; and this was the thing that occaſioned the Civil Wars. Mr. Rapin was far from approving their principal Deſign of deſtroying the Church of England, or the Means they employed to that end; as, on the other hand, he could not approve of the Animoſity expreſs'd againſt them by the King, Council, Biſhops, Star-Chamber, and the High Commiſſion-Court, during the firſt fifteen Years of this Reign. Such were our Author's Principles, that he thought the Presbyterians were no leſs in the wrong to endeavour the ſetting up of their Eccleſiaſtical Government upon the Ruins of the Church of England, than the Engliſh Epiſcopalians had been in ſtriving to force the Scots to conform to their Church. He was of opinion, that if King Charles could have been a little more indulgent to the Presbyterians, he might have prevented the fatal Effects of this Rupture; and that if the Presbyterians, when they were grown powerful, had kept themſelves within the Bounds of Reaſon and Equity, and been contented with a moderate Liberty, they wou'd have avoided the Blame juſtly caſt upon their Conduct. He adds, in fine, that the Independents, who had conceal'd themſelves among the Presbyterians 'till the Concluſion of the War, and under the Name of Preſbyterians had help'd to puſh things to Extremities, made the Wound incurable, by making uſe of the Army entirely to deſtroy the Monarchy, the Church of England and Presbyterianiſm; and that to theſe alone ought to be imputed the Tragical Death of King Charles, and all the Alterations afterwards in Church and State. Thus have we given Mr. Rapin's Syſtem, which ſurely no Man can tax with Partiality, who is not acted by Paſſion and a Spirit of Party.

WE proceed now to the Hiſtory, which we ſhall divide into Annals in the ſame manner as Mr. Rapin treated that of King James; and the Reader will obſerve that the Acts in this and the XIXth Tome of the Fœdera, on which it is chiefly founded, form the firſt DECADE of King Charles's Reign.

Proclamation of King Charles.

THIS Prince, who was at the Manor of Theobalds in Hertfordſhire, on the 27th of March, when his Father died, was that very Afternoon, by an Order of the Privy Council, proclaimed King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, both at Theobalds and London, with the general Acclamations of the People, as he was in all other Places, as ſoon as the News came, being then in the 26th year of his Age, and admired for his Endowments both of Mind and Body. On the 28th of March he came to St. James's, and next Day iſſued an Order for continuing all the Privy-Counſellors, that had ſerved his Father in their reſpective * Places; for which ſpecial Favour, in a Council that was held, on the Day following, the Lord Keeper Coventry, in the name of all the reſt, gave his Majeſty their humble Thanks for his good Opinion of them, and adviſed his Majeſty to ſolemnize his Father's Funeral, and his own Nuptials before the Sitting of the Parliament. Accordingly on the 23d of April, the Body of King James was brought from Theobalds to Denmark-Houſe † by the Nobility and Principal Officers of the Crown, and there lay in ſtate till the 7th of May, when it was ſolemnly interred in Henry VII's Chapel at Weſtminſter, where the King was chief Mourner, ſupported by the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke, and his Train was borne by twelve Peers, and Biſhop Williams preached his Funeral Sermon.

Interment of King James.

THE King, that he might be early in his Preparations for the War for recovery of the Palatinate, without ſtaying for the Advice of Parliament, cauſed general Muſters to be made in ſeveral Counties, and 12000 Men were raiſed; Coat and Conduct-Money were ordered to be paid by by the County, and they to be reimburs'd at the King's Exchequer. And on complaint of the Forces being diſorderly in their March, a Proclamation was firſt iſſued for their good Behaviour, and then a commiſſion to execute a ſtrict Diſcipline by Martial-Law: Which Methods gave occaſion to ſome Debates among the Judges, and Diſcontents among the Populace.

King Charles's Marriage celebrated at Paris.

THE King's Marriage with Henrietta Maria, Daughter of France, which had been concluded in his Father's Life-time, was ſolemnized at Paris with great Magnificence, on the 11th of May, by Cardinal Richelieu, on a Theatre erected for that purpoſe before the Church of Notre Dame, the Duke of Chevreuſe officiating as Proxy for the King of England. And now George Villiers, the Duke of Buckingham, was ſent to France to conduct the Queen hither; to whom, by the French King's Order, all Honours were paid in all Places through which ſhe paſſed. The Royal Navy of England attended her at Boulogne, and in 24 Hours landed her at Dover, which was on the 12th of June †. The King met her there next day, and conducted her to Canterbury, where in the Evening the Marriage was conſummated.

And conſummated at Canterbury.

ON the 16th the King and Queen came to London, where great Preparations were made for their Reception, but much of the Pomp was omitted, becauſe of the Plague, which at that time was increaſing both in the City and Suburbs, as will appear from ſeveral Acts of this Tome of the Fœdera hereafter mentioned.

IMMEDIATELY upon their Arrival, all the Judges were ſent for by Lord-Keeper Williams, who told them, that the King deſired to change his Stile, and to uſe the Title of King of Great-Britain, in all Acts both of Law and State; but all the Judges anſwered unanimouſly, that it could not be done, and their Opinion was afterwards confirmed by that of the Lords and Commons.

THE King in the mean while had called a Parliament, which met on the 18th ††, at the Opening of which he made the following Speech to both Houſes.

The King's Speech to his firſt Parliament.

My LORDS and Gentlemen,

'I thank God, that the Buſineſs to be 'treated on at this time is of ſuch a nature, 'that it needs no Eloquence to ſet it forth; 'for I am neither able to do it, neither 'doth it ſtand with my nature to ſpend 'much Time in Words. It is no new Bu'ſineſs, being already happily begun by 'my Father of bleſſed Memory, who is 'with God; therefore it needeth no Nar'rative; I hope in God you will go on to 'maintain it, as freely as you adviſed my 'Father to do it. It is true, he may ſeem 'to ſome to have been ſlack to begin ſo 'juſt and ſo glorious a Work; but it was 'his Wiſdom that made him loth to begin 'a Work, until he might find a Means to 'maintain it: But after that he ſaw how 'much he was abuſed in the Confidence he 'had with other States, and was confirmed 'by your Advice to run the Courſe we are 'in, with your Engagement to maintain it, 'I need not preſs to prove how willingly 'he took your Advice; for the Prepara'tions that are made, are better able to 'declare it, than I to ſpeak it. The Aſ'ſiſtance of thoſe in Germany, the Fleet 'that is ready for Action, with the reſt of 'the Preparations, which I have only fol'lowed my Father in, do ſufficiently prove 'that he entered into this Action.

'My LORDS and Gentlemen, I hope 'that you do remember, that you were 'pleaſed to employ me to adviſe my Fa'ther to break off thoſe two Treaties that 'were on foot; ſo that I cannot ſay that I 'came hither a free, unengaged Man. It 'is true, I came into this Buſineſs willing'ly and freely, like a young Man, and 'conſequently raſhly; but it was by your 'Intereſt, your Engagement: So that tho' 'it was done like a young Man, yet I can'not repent me of it, and I think none can 'blame me for it, knowing the Love and 'Fidelity you have borne to your King, 'having myſelf likewiſe ſome little Expe'rience of your Affections. I pray you re'member, that this being my firſt Action, 'and begun by your Advice and Intreaty, 'what a great Diſhonour it were to you 'and me, if this Action, ſo begun, ſhould 'fail for that Aſſiſtance you are able to give 'me. Yet knowing the Conſtancy of your 'Love, both to me and this Buſineſs, I 'needed not to have ſaid this, but only to 'ſhew what Care and Senſe I have of your 'Honours and my own. I muſt entreat 'you likewiſe to conſider of the Times we 'are in, how that I muſt adventure your 'Lives *, (which I ſhould be loth to 'do) ſhould I continue you here long; and 'you muſt venture the Buſineſs, if you be 'ſlow in your Reſolutions. Wherefore I 'hope you will take ſuch grave Counſel, 'as you will expedite what you have in 'hand to do; which will do me and your 'ſelves an infinite deal of Honour; you, 'in ſhewing your Love to me; and me, 'that I may perfect that Work which my

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'LAST of all, becauſe ſome malicious 'Men may, and, as I hear, have given 'out, that I am not ſo true a Keeper and 'Maintainer of the true Religion that I 'profeſs; I aſſure you that I may with 'St. Paul ſay, that I have been trained 'up at Gamaliel's Feet: And although I 'ſhall never be ſo arrogant as to aſſume 'unto myſelf the reſt, I ſhall ſo far ſhew 'the end of it, that all the World may ſee, 'that none hath been, nor ever ſhall be 'more deſirous to maintain the Religion I 'profeſs, than I ſhall be.

'NOW becauſe I am unfit for much 'ſpeaking, I mean to bring up the Faſhion 'of my Predeceſſors, to have my Lord-'Keeper ſpeak for me in moſt things: 'Therefore I have commanded him to 'ſpeak ſomething unto you at this time, 'which is more for Formality, than any 'great matter he hath to ſay unto you.

The Speech of the Lord-Keeper Coventry.

My LORDS and Gentlemen,

'THE King's main reaſon of calling this 'Parliament, beſides the beholding of his 'Subjects Faces, is to mind you of the 'great Engagements for the Recovery of 'the Palatinate, impoſed on his Majeſty 'by the late King his Father, and by your-'ſelves, who broke off the two Treaties 'with Spain. Alſo to let you underſtand, 'That the ſucceeding Treaties and Allian-'ces, the Armies ſent into the Low-Coun-'tries, the Repairing of the Forts, and 'the Fortifying of Ireland, do all meet in 'one Centre, the Palatinate; and that 'the Subſidies granted in the laſt Parlia-'ment are herein already ſpent, whereof 'the Account is ready, together with as 'much more of the King's own Revenue.

'I muſt alſo commend to you three Cir-'cumſtances:

'FIRST, the Time; all Europe being at 'this Day as the Pool of Bethesda, the firſt 'ſtirring of the Waters muſt be laid hold 'on: Wherefore his Majeſty deſires you 'to beſtow this Meeting on him, or rather 'on your Actions; and the next ſhall be 'yours, as ſoon, and as long as you pleaſe, 'for domeſtick Buſineſs.

'SECONDLY, Supply; if Subſidies be 'thought too long and backward, his Ma-'jeſty deſires to hear, and not to propound 'the way.

'THIRDLY, The Iſſue of Action; 'which being the firſt, doth highly con-'cern his Majeſty's Honour and Reputa-'tion, for which he relies upon your Loves, 'with the greateſt Confidence that ever 'King had in his Subjects; witneſs his roy-'al Poeſy, Amor Civium Regis Muni-'mentum: And he doubts not, but as 'ſoon as he ſhall be known in Europe to 'be your King, ſo ſoon ſhall you be 'known to be a loving and loyal Nation 'to him.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1625.

Petition preſented againſt Recuſants.

BOTH Houſes joined immediately in preſenting a Petition to the King againſt Recuſants, to which the King returned anſwer, that he was very glad to ſee their Zeal for Religion, and was ready to concur with them in whatever they ſhould propoſe on that ſcore, but he deferred anſwering every particular Article of the Petition till he had examined it.

Supply granted.

THE Commons however gave two Subſidies, the Act for which was no ſooner paſſed, but by reaſon of the Plague which raged very much in London, the King adjourned the Parliament to Oxford, where it met on the firſt of Auguſt.

Parliament adjourned to Oxford.

Our Ships employed againſt Rochel.

DURING this, Lewis XIII. of France, who had a little before the Death of King James borrowed ſome of our Ships, on pretence of employing them againſt the Genoeſe, wanted them for the Siege of Rochel, and by means of the Duke of Bucks prevailed with King Charles that he might employ them where he pleaſed; and accordingly, ſays Ruſhworth, the Vantguard, a large Man of War, with ſeven ſtout Merchant Ships, were ſent to Diep, under Command of Vice-Admiral Pennington, who by expreſs Orders both from the Duke and the King himſelf, put them into the hands of the French, to be employed againſt Rochel, contrary to the Sollicitation of the Proteſtants of France; but the Maſters and Mariners all deſerted, utterly refuſing to ſerve againſt Rochel.

Engliſh Seamen deſert rather than ſerve againſt Rochel.

THIS Affair made a great noiſe at Oxford, where the Duke of Buckingham's ill Conduct, in this and other reſpects, was hardly complained of by the Commons.

The King's Application to the Parliament for more Money.

THE King on the fourth of Auguſt ſent for both Houſes to Chriſt-church-Hall, and acquainted them with his Wants for ſetting out a Fleet; with the many Debts his Father had contracted on the Public Account, and likewiſe what he himſelf had contracted and expended on the ſame.

Seconded by one of his Secretaries.

WHEN the King had done ſpeaking, the Lord Conway and Secretary Cook, by his Majeſty's Command, demonſtrated the 'abſolute neceſſity the Commons were under to grant his Majeſty a large Sum for 'the War in which he was engaged; a War, 'which, they added, was entered into by 'his late Majeſty, at the ſuit of both Houſes 'of Parliament'*. The King thought this was an unanſwerable reaſon; but as the Parliament began now to be better informed how the King and Duke got the former Parliament to give that Advice, theſe two Speeches had no great effect. The Commons being returned to their Houſe, had ſeveral Debates upon the Subſtance of the King's Speech, and the State of the Nation, all tending to the Arraignment of the Government, and in particular of the Duke of Buckingham. Some urged that our Neceſſities aroſe from Improvidence, that the King was guided by evil Counſellors, and that though the former Parliament engaged the King in a War, yet if things were managed with contrary Views, and the Money miſapplied, this Parliament was not obliged to ſupport the Court's Extravagancies, nor grant Subſidies upon Subſidies, before their Grievances were removed. It was complained alſo, that great Sums of Money were given for Places; and that it was too late in the Year for the Navy to go out, and that Popery was not only tolerated, but even countenanced, contrary to the King's expreſs Promiſe; and Pardons granted to Recuſants, ſigned by the Lord Conway, Secretary of State, who pretended to be authorized by the King; and that theſe Pardons ſtopped the Courſe of Juſtice, and the Execution of the Laws: Whereupon the King thought himſelf obliged to return poſitive Anſwers to the Petition preſented to him at London by the two Houſes; to which, as was juſt now obſerved, he had only reply'd before in general.

Complaints and Murmurs in the Houſe of Commons.

The Parliament's Petition againſt Recuſants, and the King's Anſwers to each Article.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'It being infallibly true, that nothing 'can more eſtabliſh the Throne, and aſ'ſure the Peace and Proſperity of the Peo'ple, than the Unity and Sincerity of Re'ligion; we your moſt humble and loyal 'Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Tempo'ral, and Commons in this preſent Parlia'ment aſſembled, hold ourſelves bound 'in Conſcience and Duty, to repreſent the 'ſame to your ſacred Majeſty, together 'with the dangerous Conſequences of the 'increaſe of Popery in this Land, and what 'we conceive to be the principal Cauſes 'thereof, and what may be the Remedies.

'The Dangers appear in theſe Parti'culars.

'I. In their deſperate Ends, being both 'the Subverſion of Church and State; and 'the Reſtleſſneſs of their Spirits to attain 'their Ends; the Doctrine of their Teach'ers and Leaders, perſuading them, that 'herein they do God good Service.

'II. THEIR evident and ſtrict Depen'dency upon ſuch Foreign Princes, as no 'way affect the Good of your Majeſty and 'this State.

'III. THE opening a way of Popula'rity to the Ambition of any who ſhall 'adventure to make himſelf Head of ſo 'great a Party.

'The principal Cauſe of the Increaſe of Papiſts.

'I. THE want of the due Execution of 'the Laws againſt Jeſuits, Seminary-Prieſts, 'and Popiſh Recuſants; occaſioned partly 'by the Connivance of the State, partly by 'Defects in the Laws themſelves, and part'ly by the manifold Abuſe of Officers.

'II. THE interpoſing of Foreign Princes 'by their Ambaſſadors and Agents in fa'vour of them.

'III. THEIR great Concourſe to the 'City, and frequent Conferences and Con'venticles there.

'IV. THE open and uſual Reſort to the 'Houſes and Chapels of Foreign Ambaſ'ſadors.

V.

* It appears from Ruſhworth, that Lord Conway and Sir John Cook, who by the King's Command gave a particular Deduction to the Houſes, of the State of Affairs in Germany, France, the Low-Countries, Sweden, and other Kingdoms, computed the Charge of the War at 700,000 l. a year, beſides the Navy and Ireland. The Treaſurer alſo acquainted them, that the late King when he died owed the City of London 120,000 l. beſides Intereſt; that he was indebted for Denmark and the Palatinate, 150,000 l. and for his Wardrobe 40,000 l. That theſe Debts lay upon his preſent Majeſty, who was indebted alſo to London 70,000 l. that he had laid out for his Navy 20,000 l. and 20,000 l. for Count Mansfield; 42,000 l. for his Father's Funeral, and 40,000 l. for his own Marriage; and that no leſs than 300,000 l. would be requiſite for the Navy.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. A°. 1625.

'V. THE Education of their Children in 'Seminaries, and Houſes of their Religion 'in Foreign Parts, which of late have been 'greatly multiplied and enlarg'd for the 'Entertainment of the Engliſh.

'VI. THAT in ſome Places of your 'Realm, your People be not ſufficiently in-'ſtructed in the Knowledge of true Religion.

'VII. THE licentious Printing and diſ-'perſing of Popiſh and Seditious Books.

'VIII. THE Employment of Men ill-'affected to Religion in Places of Govern-'ment, who do, ſhall, or may countenance 'the Popiſh Party.

The Remedies againſt this outrageous and dangerous Diſeaſe, we conceive to be theſe enſuing;

'I. THAT the Youth of this Realm be 'carefully educated by able and religious 'Schoolmaſters, and they to be enjoined 'to catechiſe and inſtruct their Scholars 'in the Grounds and Principles of true Re-'ligion. And whereas by many Complaints 'from divers Parts of the Kingdom it doth 'plainly appear, that ſundry Popiſh Scho-'lars, diſſembling their Religion, have craf-'tily crept in, and obtained the Places of 'Teaching in divers Counties, and thereby 'infected and perverted their Scholars, and 'ſo fitted them to be tranſported to the Po-'piſh Seminaries beyond Sea: That there-'fore there be great Care in the Choice and 'admitting of Schoolmaſters, and that the 'Ordinaries make diligent Enquiries of their 'Demeanours, and proceed to the removing 'of ſuch, as ſhall be faulty or juſtly 'ſuſpected.

His Majeſty's ANSWER.

'THIS is well allowed of; and for the 'better Performance of what is deſired, 'Letters ſhall be written to the two Arch-'biſhops, and from them Letters to go to 'all the Ordinaries of their ſeveral Provinces 'to ſee this done; the ſeveral Ordinaries to 'give an account of their Doings herein to 'the Archbiſhops reſpectively, and they 'to give an account to his Majeſty of their 'Proceedings herein.

II. 'THAT the ancient Diſcipline of the 'Univerſities be reſtor'd, being the famous 'Nurſeries of Literature and Virtue.

ANSWER.

'THIS is approv'd by his Majeſty, and 'the Chancellor of each Univerſity ſhall be 'required to cauſe due Execution of it.

III. 'THAT ſpecial Care be taken to 'enlarge the Word of God throughout all 'the Parts of your Majeſty's Dominions, as 'being the moſt powerful Means for plant-'ing of true Religion, and rooting out of 'the contrary: To which end, among other 'things, let it pleaſe your Majeſty to adviſe 'your Biſhops, by Fatherly Intreaty and 'tender Uſage, to reduce to the peaceable 'and ordinary Service of the Church ſuch 'able Miniſters as have been formerly ſilen-'ced, that there may be a profitable Uſe 'of their Miniſtry in theſe needful and dan-'gerous Times; and that Non-Reſidency, 'Pluralities, and Commendams may be mo-'derated. Where we cannot forbear moſt 'humbly to thank your Majeſty for dimi-'niſhing the Number of your own Chap-'lains; not doubting of the like Princely 'Care for the well-beſtowing of the reſt of 'your Benefices, both to the Comfort of 'the People, and the Encouragement of 'the Univerſities, being full of grave and 'able Miniſters unfurniſh'd of Livings.

ANSWER.

'THIS his Majeſty likes well, ſo as it 'be applied to ſuch Miniſters as are peace-'able, orderly, and conformable to the 'Church Government. For Pluralities and 'Non-Reſidencies, they are now ſo mode-'rated, that the Archbiſhops affirm there 'be now no Diſpenſations for Pluralities 'granted; nor no Man now is allowed 'above two Benefices, and thoſe not above 'thirty Miles diſtant: And for avoiding 'Non-Reſidence; the Canon in that Caſe 'provided ſhall be duly put in execution. 'For Commendams, they ſhall be ſparingly 'granted, only in ſuch Caſe where the 'Exility and Smallneſs of the Biſhoprick 'requireth: Alſo his Majeſty will cauſe 'that the Benefices belonging to him ſhall 'be well-beſtowed. And for the better 'propagating of Religion, his Majeſty re-'commendeth to the Houſe of Parliament, 'that Care may be taken, and Proviſion 'made, that every Pariſh ſhall allow a 'competent Maintenance for an able Mi-'niſter; and that the Owners of Parſonages 'impropriate wou'd allow to the Vicars, 'Curates, and Miniſters in Villages and 'Places belonging to their Parſonage, ſuf-'ficient Stipend and Allowance for preach-'ing Miniſters.

IV. 'THAT there may be ſtrict Proviſion 'againſt tranſporting of Engliſh Children 'to the Seminaries beyond the Seas, and 'for

'for the recalling of them who are already 'there placed, and for the Puniſhment of 'ſuch of your Subjects as are Maintainers 'of thoſe Seminaries, or of the Scholars; 'conſidering that, beſides the ſeducing of 'your People, great Sums of Money are 'yearly expended upon them, to the impo-'veriſhing of this Kingdom.

ANSWER.

'THE Law in this Caſe ſhall be put in 'execution: And further, there ſhall be Let-'ters written to the Lord-Treaſurer, and 'alſo to the Lord-Admiral, that all the Ports 'of this Realm, and the Creeks and Mem-'bers thereof, be ſtrictly kept, and ſtrait 'Searches made to this end: A Proclamation 'ſhall be to recall both the Children of No-'blemen, and the Children of any other 'Men, and they to return by a Day; alſo 'Maintainers of Seminaries of Scholars 'there, ſhall be puniſhed according to 'Law.

V. 'THAT no Popiſh Recuſant be per-'mitted to come within the Court, unleſs 'your Majeſty be pleaſed to call him upon 'ſpecial Occaſion, agreeable to the Statute 'of 3 Jac. And whereas your Majeſty, for 'the preventing of apparent Miſchiefs both 'to your Majeſty and the State, hath in your 'Princely Wiſdom taken order, that none of 'your natural-born Subjects not profeſſing 'the true Religion, as by Law eſtabliſhed, 'be admitted into the Service of your Royal 'Conſort the Queen; we give your Majeſty 'moſt humble Thanks, and deſire that your 'Order herein may be obſerv'd.

ANSWER.

'IF his Majeſty ſhall find, or be inform'd 'of any Concourſe of Recuſants to the 'Court, the Law ſhall be ſtrictly follow'd: 'And his Majeſty is pleaſed that by Pro-'clamation the Britiſh and Iriſh Subjects 'ſhall be put in the ſame Caſe. And as 'his Majeſty hath provided in his Treaty 'with France, ſo his Purpoſe is to keep it, 'that none of his Subjects ſhall be admit-'ted into his Service, or into the Service of 'his Royal Conſort the Queen, that are Po-'piſh Recuſants.

VI. 'THAT all the Laws now ſtanding 'in force againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, 'and others, having taken Orders by Au-'thority derived from the See of Rome, be 'put in execution. And to the intent they 'may not pretend to be ſurpriſed, that a 'ſpeedy and certain day be prefix'd by your 'Majeſty's Proclamation for their Departure 'out of this Realm, and all other your Do-'minions, and not to return upon the ſe-'vereſt Penalties of the Law now in force 'againſt them; and that all your Majeſty's 'Subjects may be thereby admoniſh'd not 'to receive, comfort, entertain, or conceal 'any of them upon the Penalties which may 'be lawfully inflicted: And that all ſuch 'Papiſts, Jeſuits, and Recuſants, who are, 'and ſhall be impriſoned for Recuſancy, 'or any other Cauſe, may be ſo ſtrictly re-'ſtrain'd, as that none ſhall have Confe-'rence with them, thereby to avoid the 'Contagion of their corrupt Religion. And 'that no Man who ſhall be ſuſpected of 'Popery, be ſuffered to be a Keeper of any 'of your Majeſty's Priſons.

ANSWER.

'THE Law in this Caſe ſhall be put in 'execution, and a Proclamation ſhall be to 'the Effect deſired; and ſuch Reſtraint ſhall 'be made as is deſired; and no Man that 'is juſtly ſuſpected of Popery, ſhall be ſuf-'fer'd to be a Keeper of any of his Ma-'jeſty's Priſons.

VII. 'THAT your Majeſty be pleaſed 'to take ſuch Order as to your Princely 'Wiſdom ſhall be expedient, That no na-'tural-born Subject, or ſtrange Biſhops, 'nor any other by Authority from the See 'of Rome confer any Eccleſiaſtical Orders 'to exerciſe any Eccleſiaſtical Function 'whatſoever, toward, or upon your Ma-'jeſty's natural Subjects within your Do-'minions.

ANSWER.

'THIS is fit to be order'd, according 'as is provided, and it ſhall be ſo publiſhed 'by Proclamation.

VIII. 'THAT your Majeſty's learned 'Council may receive Order and Com-'mandment to conſider of all former Grants 'of Recuſants Lands, that ſuch of them 'may be avoided as are made to the Re-'cuſant's Uſe or Intereſt, out of which the 'Recuſant receiveth any Benefit, which 'are either void, or voidable by the Law.

ANSWER.

'THE King will give order to his learned 'Counſel to conſider of the Grants, and 'will do according as is deſired.

IX. 'THAT your Majeſty will be like-'wiſe pleaſed ſtrictly to command all your 'Judges and Miniſters of Juſtice, Eccleſi-'aſtical

'astical and Temporal, to see the Laws 'of this Realm against Popish Recu-'sants be duly executed; and namely, 'that the Censure of Excommunication 'be declared and certified against them; 'and that they be not absolv'd but upon 'publick Satisfaction, by yielding to 'Conformity.

ANSWER.

'HIS Majesty leaves the Laws to 'their Course, and will order in the point 'of Excommunication as is desired.

X. 'THAT your Majesty will be 'pleased to remove from Places of Au-'thority and Government, all such Per-'sons as are either Popish Recusants, 'or, according to Direction of former Acts 'of State, to be justly suspected.

ANSWER.

'THIS his Majesty thinks fit, and 'will give Order for it.

XI. 'THAT present Order be taken 'for disarming all Popish Recusants le-'gally convicted, or justly suspected, ac-'cording to the Laws in that Behalf, and 'the Orders taken by his late Majesty's 'Privy-Council upon Reason of State.

ANSWER.

'THE Laws and Acts in this Case 'shall be followed, and put in due Exe-'cution.

XII. 'THAT your Majesty be also 'pleased, in respect to the great Resort 'of Recusants to and about London, to 'command forthwith, upon pain of your 'Indignation and severe Execution of the 'Laws, that they retire themselves to 'their several Countries, there to remain 'confin'd within five Miles of their Places.

ANSWER.

'FOR this the Laws in Force shall be 'forthwith executed.

XIII. 'AND whereas your Majesty 'hath strictly commanded and taken or-'der, that none of the natural-born Sub-'jects repair to the hearing of Masses, or 'other superstitious Service at the Cha-'pels or Houses of Foreign Ambassadors, 'or in any other Places whatever; we 'give your Majesty most humble Thanks, 'and desire that your Order and Com-'mandment therein may be continued 'and observed, and that the Offenders 'herein may be punished according to 'the Laws.

ANSWER.

'THE King gives Assent thereto, and 'will see that observ'd, which herein 'hath been commanded by him.

XIV. 'THAT all such Insolencies as 'any that are Popishly affected have 'lately committed, or shall hereafter 'commit, to the Dishonour of our Re-'ligion, or to the Wrong of the true 'Professors thereof, be exemplarily pu-'nished.

ANSWER.

'THIS shall be done as desired.

XV. 'That the Statute of 1 Eliz. for 'the Payment of 12*d.* every Sunday by 'such as shall be absent from Divine Ser-'vice in the Church, without a lawful 'Excuse, may be put in due Execution; 'the rather, for that the Penalty by Law 'is given to the Poor, and therefore not 'to be dispensed withal.

ANSWER.

'IT is fit that this Statute be executed, 'and the Penalties shall not be dispensed 'withal.

XVI. 'LASTLY, That your Majesty 'would be pleased to extend your Princely 'Care also over the Kingdom of Ireland, 'that the like Courses may be there taken, 'for the restoring and establishing of true 'Religion.

ANSWER.

'HIS Majesty's Cares are, and shall be 'extended over the Kingdom of Ireland; 'and he will do all that a Religious King 'should do for the restoring and esta-'blishing true Religion there.

'AND thus (most Gracious Sovereign) 'according to our Duty and Zeal to God 'and Religion, to your Majesty and your 'Safety, to the Church and Common-'wealth, and their Peace and Prosperity, 'we have made a faithful Declaration of 'the present Estate, the Causes and Re-'medies of this increasing Disease of Po-'pery; humbly offering the same to your 'Princely Care and Wisdom. The An-'swer of your Majesty's Father, our late 'Sovereign of famous Memory upon the 'like Petition, did give us great Comfort 'of Reformation; but your Majesty's most 'gracious Promises made in that kind do 'give us Confidence and Assurance of 'the continual Performance thereof. In 'which Comfort and Confidence reposing 'ourselves, we most humbly pray for

CHARLES I.

'your Majesty's long Continuance in all 'Princely Felicity.'

THE Answers, however satisfactory, did not produce suitable Effects, the Promises they contained were not perform'd, and when the Supply was again debated in the House, the Commons aimed to excuse themselves from granting the King fresh Supplies for a War rashly undertaken without any Likelihood of Success: At least if they should be forc'd to give any more Sums, rather than enter into a Debate concerning the Causes of the Kingdom's being engag'd in this War, they intended the King should purchase them in some measure with the Redress of the Grievances, which the Nation groan'd under; wherefore instead of beginning with the Money-Bill, as the King desired, they fell to examining, and even inquiring into the Grievances of the People, and the State of Religion. In this Debate the Ministry, and especially the Duke of Bucks were not spar'd. The Duke in particular was charg'd as the Author of all Miscarriages; the Duke, whom the very Parliament before in King James's Reign extoll'd as the Honour of the English Nation, and sole Preserver of his Country, and whose Merits no Honour was thought great enough to requite. They also drew up a Remonstrance on purpose to discredit him, and to remove him from the King's Councils and Favour, the Expressions of which were very sharp, and Style unusual from Subjects to their Sovereign: They mov'd, that it might be enquir'd whether the Duke had not broke the Match with Spain out of Spleen to Olivarez, and whether he had not made the Match with France upon harder Terms. The Duke return'd a plausible Answer to these and many other things; but the King, seeing how Matters were like to go in the House of Commons, was extremely offended: First, Because by their Slowness, they had broke all the Measures he had taken for the present Campaign. Secondly, He reckoned it an Affront and a manifest Contempt of his Person, to presume openly to attack his Favourite and Ministers, or rather himself in their Names: So perceiving no Likelihood of speedily obtaining the Money he demanded, which was his sole end of calling the Parliament, he dissolv'd it on the 12th of August, when it had not sate to do Business above three Weeks both at Westminster and Oxford: The King pretended to dissolve it, on account of the spreading of the Plague; but the true Reason was, because he did not find a Compliance and Disposition in the Houses fit for his Purpose. The Commons having some previous notice of it, made haste and drew up the following Declaration, in order to cast the Odium of the Dissolution upon the King, for fear he himself shou'd lay the blame of it upon them, under colour that they were not very ready to keep their Word.

Their Enquiry into the Nation's Grievances.

Their Remonstrance against the Duke of Bucks.

The King so disgusted that he dissolves them.

A°. 1625. The Commons draw up a Declaration in order to throw the blame of it from themselves.

The COMMONS DECLARATION.

'WE the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the Commons House of 'Parliament, being the Representative 'Body of the whole Commons of this 'Realm, abundantly comforted in his 'Majesty's late gracious Answer touching 'Religion, and his Message for the Care 'of our Health, do solemnly protest and 'vow before God and the World, with 'one Heart and Voice, that we are all 'resolv'd, and do hereby declare, that 'we will ever continue most loyal and 'obedient Subjects to our most Gracious 'Sovereign Lord King Charles; and 'that we will be ready in convenient 'Time, and in a Parliamentary Way, 'freely and dutifully to do our utmost 'Endeavours to discover and reform the 'Abuses and Grievances of the Realm 'and State, and in like sort to afford all 'necessary Supply to his most excellent 'Majesty, upon his present, and all other 'his just Occasions and Designs; most 'humbly beseeching our said Dear and 'Dread Sovereign, in his Princely Wisdom and Goodness, to rest assured of 'the true and hearty Affections of his 'poor Commons, and to esteem the same 'to be (as we conceive it is indeed) the 'greatest worldly Reputation and Security, that a just King can have; and 'to account all such as Slanderers of the 'People's Affections, and Enemies to the 'Commonwealth, that shall dare say to 'the contrary.'

FROM this Declaration 'tis very visible, that the Aim of the Commons was to let the People see that it was not their Intent to deny the King Money for his just Wants, but that they thought they had a Right to demand the Redress of Grievances as a Preliminary; tho' they avoided calling it so.

Remark upon it.

NOTWITHSTANDING the Dissolution, the King was now determin'd to push on the War with Spain for the Recovery of the Palatinate; which, tho' it was resolv'd on in the last Year of his Father's Reign, yet there had been no Action since the Breach of the Treaty; the sending of Count Mansfield into the Palatinate being almost the only thing that could be deem'd as a sort of Declaration against Spain, tho' the Project miscarried.

carried. King Charles therefore ſent the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland Ambaſſadors to the United Provinces *, where they met thoſe of France, Holland and Denmark, and concluded a League againſt the Emperor and the King of Spain for reſtoring the Palatinate, and the Liberties of Germany. Hereupon the King of Denmark took up Arms, but was unſucceſsful, which he imputed to the King's not performing of what he promis'd; and that was occaſioned by the Parliament's failing to ſupply him with Money, which was the Reaſon alſo that the Fleet, which was fitting out in England, and ſhould have put to Sea in the Beginning of Summer, to attempt ſomething on the Coaſts of Spain, could not ſet out 'till October following; nor cou'd it have gone then, if the King had not levied Monies on his Subjects by way of Loan, of which the Reader will find a particular Account in the enſuing Extract of this Tome.

King Charles's League for reſtoring the Palatinate, &c.

The King of Denmark unſucceſsful, and why?

MEAN time, to ſoften People's Minds, and move them to part freely with their Money, a Proclamation was iſſued out to put the Laws in Execution againſt Popiſh Recuſants, and to call home all ſuch Children as were ſent to be educated in Popiſh Schools and Seminaries beyond Sea, as well as all the Engliſh, Scotch, and Iriſh in the Service of the Houſe of Auſtria; and forbidding any Popiſh Biſhop or Prieſt to confer Orders, or exerciſe his Function here. On the other hand, the Privy-Council iſſued out Warrants to diſarm the Recuſants; which ſeem not to have been very ſtrictly executed, becauſe it was a Thing which the Houſe of Commons frequently required afterwards.

Engliſh, Scotch and Iriſh under Foreign Education and Service recall'd.

ABOUT the Beginning of October, the Fleet abovementioned, which, with the addition of ſome Dutch Veſſels, conſiſted of 80 Sail of ſtout Ships, with 10 Regiments on board, put to Sea under the Command of Sir Edward Cecil (third Son to the Earl of Exeter) lately created Viſcount Wimbleton, who had for Vice-Admiral the Earl of Eſſex, Son to that Earl who was beheaded in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.

A°. 1625. Expedition of the Earl of Eſſex to Spain.

THE Intent of this Expedition was to go and wait in ſome convenient Place for the Spaniſh Plate-Fleet, which was to come from the Indies in November. The Earl of Eſſex, out of a ſtrong Ambition to equal the Glory which his Father gain'd at Cadiz, propos'd attacking a good Number of Spaniſh Ships which lay in that Harbour; but there were ſo many Difficulties in the Enterprize, and ſo long a time was ſpent in the Debate, that the Spaniſh Coaſt was alarm'd, and prepar'd for their Defence: So that when they ſail'd to Cadiz, they landed their Men there with great Danger and Oppoſition. The firſt Place they attempted was the Puntal Caſtle, under whoſe Shelter and Protection the Spaniſh Ships rode. Twenty Engliſh and five Dutch were order'd to attack it; but after they had ſpent 2000 Shot againſt it to little or no purpoſe, they were forced to give it over. Thereupon, Lord Wimbleton ſent Sir John Burroughs with a choice Regiment of Foot to attack the Fort on the Land-ſide; who defeating a great Body of Spaniards in ſight of the Caſtle, the Governor reſigned it, with fifteen Barrels of Powder, and eight Pieces of Ordnance. But his Men, after plundering ſome Villages, and glutting themſelves with Wine, which did them more hurt than they did the Enemy, were forced to be embarked again with all ſpeed. At the ſame time the Spaniards had hauled moſt of their beſt Ships under Port-Royal, to the Diſappointment of Sir Samuel Argale, who was ſent to burn them.

FROM hence the Engliſh ſailed to the Southward Cape, where they waited twenty Days in expectation of the Plate-Fleet; but by the Inclemency of the Air, and the Intemperance of the Soldiers and Seamen, ſo great a Contagion happened in the Fleet, that they had ſcarce Men enough to hand their Sails,

* Sir Henry Wotton in his Life of the Duke of Buckingham tells us, that theſe two Noblemen, after a dangerous Paſſage from Harwich, wherein three of their Ships were founder'd, arriv'd on the fifth Day at the Hague, and that the Negociation took up a Month before the Duke's Return to England. He mentions a Noble Act of the Duke during his Employment here, which deſerves to be recorded.

There was a Collection of rare Manuſcripts, exquiſitely written in Arabic, which that eminent Linguiſt Erpenius had pick'd up in remote Parts, after the moſt diligent Enquiry, and which, after his Death, the Jeſuits (at Antwerp) who are liquoriſh Chapmen of ſuch Ware, were treating with his Widow for. The Duke being inform'd of it by his worthy and learned Secretary Dr. Maſon, interverted the Bargain, and gave the poor Widow 500 l. for them, a Sum above their Weight in Silver, and a mix'd Act both of Bounty and Charity, the more laudable, becauſe it was out of his natural Element. Theſe were the MSS. which after the Duke's Death were as nobly preſented, as they had been bought, to the Univerſity of Cambridge by the Dutcheſs Dowager, as ſoon as ſhe underſtood, by the aforeſaid Dr. Maſon, her Husband's Intention, who purpos'd alſo (as I am well inform'd) to raiſe in the ſaid Univerſity (of which he was Chancellor) a fair Caſe for ſuch Monuments, and to furniſh it with other choice Collections from all Parts, at his own Charge.

His ill Success, and Return.

Sails, which forced the Admiral to go away four Days before the Plate Fleet came in. Accordingly the Squadron returned to England in November, but the Officers were very unwelcome to the King, and the Duke of Bucks, who was looked on as the Contriver and Director of the Court-Projects. Nevertheless, though many were blamed, and some little Inquiries made into their Mismanagement, none were punished for their ill Conduct.

Anno 1626.

THE King opened this Year with an Injunction to the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, to proceed against Popish Recusants by Excommunication, and other Censures of the Church, and not to omit any lawful means of bringing them to publick Justice: He recommended it to them in a special manner to unmask and suppress those who, tho' not professed Papists, yet were disaffected to the true Religion, and concealed their wicked and dangerous Principles, and by secret Arts encouraged the growth of Popery.

THIS Command was seconded by a Proclamation, requiring that all convicted Papists should, according to the Laws of this Realm, remain confined to their dwelling Places, or within five Miles thereof, without special License obtained in Cases of necessity.

P. 275. ABOUT the same time the King, by a Proclamation dated Jan. 17 at Whitehall, declared his purpose to celebrate the Coronation of himself and his Queen, on Candlemas-Day, at the Palace of Westminster; as also a Procession to be made from the Tower through the City on the first of March; and required all Persons, who by reason of their Offices and Tenures were bound to perform any Duties at the Solemnity, to give their Attendance, and to be furnished in all respects answerable to an Action of such high State, according to their Places and Dignities. Wherefore by a Commission P. 276. under the great Seal of England, dated Jan. 24. Sir Thomas Coventry, Lord-Keeper of the great Seal; James Lord Say, High-Treasurer of England; Edward Earl of Worcester, Keeper of the Privy-Seal; Thomas Earl of Arundel and Surry, Earl Marshal of England; William Earl of Pembroke, Lord-High-Chamberlain; Edward Earl of Dorset; and Sir Randal Crew, Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas, were authorised to receive and determine the Claims exhibited by any Person, concerning Services to be performed at the approaching Coronation. And the more to credit the Solemnity, the King resolving to make certain of his Servants and other Subjects, in regard of their Birth, good Service, and other Qualities, Knights of the Bath, authorised the Earl-Marshal of England, and the Lord-High-Chamberlain, to perform in his Majesty's Name and behalf, all the Rites and Ceremonies belonging thereto.

AT the same time Writs were directed to all the Sheriffs in England and Wales, commanding them to make Proclamation, ordering all such Gentlemen as had 40 l. a year, or upwards, and were not yet Knights, to come and receive the Order of Knighthood, previous to his Coronation, which was celebrated on the second of February, by Dr. Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by Laud, Bishop of Bath and *Wells: But the intended Pomp and triumphant Cavalcade through the City was omitted, because of the Plague. The King's Coronation.

WE shall only mention some Particulars of the Ceremony, which gave Offence, occasion'd Exceptions, and were afterwards severely charg'd upon Bishop Laud as his arbitrary Innovations.

1. HE found an old Crucifix among the Regalia, and took care to place it upon the Altar.

2. HE restor'd a Clause in one of the Prayers, not us'd since Henry VII's Coronation, and now put in these Words, 'Let him obtain Favour for this People, 'like Aaron in the Tabernacle, Elisha 'in the Waters, Zacharias in the Temple, 'and give him Peter's Key of Discipline, 'and Paul's Doctrine.'

3. WHEN the King was seated on his Throne, after the Coronation was over, to receive the Homage of the Nobility, Laud came up, and read the following extraordinary Exhortation to him, the like of which is not to be found in any former Coronations, viz.

'STAND and hold fast from hence-'forth the Place to which you have been 'Heir by the Succession of your Fore-'fathers, being now deliver'd to you by 'the Authority of Almighty God, and by 'the Hands of us, and all the Bishops 'and Servants of God. And as you see 'the

* There is an apparent Mistake of Mr. Rapin, where he says, the King was crowned by his Favourite, William Laud, Bishop of Bath and Wells; and that Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, was then in Disgrace. For the Truth is, that the King was anointed and crowned by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and that Laud officiated only as Dean of Westminster, in the room of Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, who was at that time out of Favour; whereas the Archbishop had obtained a Pardon, and a Dispensation from all Canonical Pains and Censures which he had incurred by accidentally killing a Man in the late Reign, and was therefore now Rectus in Curia, 'till he was suspended some Months after this, for refusing to license Dr. Sibthorp's Sermon. A Book was printed of the Form and Ceremonies to be used at the Coronation, which was drawn up by Laud and other Bishops that met at Whitehall the 4th of January: And there's a Letter of Symonds d'Ewes to Sir Martin Stuteville, Knt. dated the 4th of February at the Middle-Temple, and to be found in Harley's MSS. 38. c. 8. giving a full Account of what he had seen at the Coronation.

'the Clergy come nearer to the Altar than others, ſo remember that in all Places convenient you give them greater Honour, that the Mediator of God and Man may eſtabliſh you in the Kingly Throne, to be a Mediator betwixt the Clergy and the Laity, and that you may reign for ever with Jeſus Chriſt, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.'

MR. Echard aſſerted that the Oath this King took at his Coronation was the ſame that had been taken by his Predeceſſors, but the Author of the Hiſtory of the Stuarts quotes Lord Chief-Juſtice Atkins, Cook, Dr. Fuller, Lilly, and other Writers, to prove that Laud emaſculated the Coronation-Oath, by leaving out the moſt eſſential Clauſe of it, viz. That the King ſhall conſent to ſuch Laws as the People ſhou'd chuſe, and inſerting theſe Words, Saving the King's Royal Prerogative, which was become the only Topic, ſays our Author, for Court-Preachers, Cathedral-Preachers, and all the Preachers in England, who courted Laud for Preferment.

He calls his ſecond Parliament.

THE King finding himſelf unable to carry on the War for want of Money, reſolved to try, or rather tempt his Fortune, in another Parliament, which was ſummoned to meet on the 6th of February. And in order to keep ſuch Perſons out of the Houſe as had oppoſed the King moſt, and exclaimed the loudeſt againſt the Duke in the laſt Parliament, the Court contrived to make them Sheriffs, ſo that they could not be choſe Members of Parliament. The Perſons ſuppoſed to be chiefly aimed at, were Sir Edward Coke, Sir Robert Philips, and Sir Thomas Wentworth, who were made Sheriffs of Bucks, Somerſet, and Yorkſhire. Sir Edward Coke excepting againſt the following Clauſe in the Sheriffs Oath, it was ever after left out. 'Tis thus recited by Ruſhworth, 'You 'ſhall do all your Pain and Diligence 'to deſtroy and make to ceaſe, all manner of Hereſies and Errors, commonly 'called Lollardies, within your Bailywic from time to time; and aſſiſt all 'Ordinaries and Commiſſioners of the 'holy Church, and favour and maintain them as often as you ſhall be required.'

His Stratagem for keeping ſome Perſons out of it.

A Clauſe turned out of the Sheriff's Oath for ever.

THE Parliament being aſſembled, as aforeſaid, the Lord-Keeper Coventry ſpoke thus to both Houſes in the King's Name.

Lord-Keeper's Speech to Parliament.

My LORDS, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of COMMONS;

'YOU are here aſſembled by his 'Majeſty's Writs and royal Authority, 'to hold a new Parliament, the general, ancient, and powerful Council of 'this renowned Kingdom; whereof if 'we conſider aright, and think of that 'incomparable diſtance between the 'ſupreme Height and Majeſty of a 'mighty Monarch, and the ſubmiſſive 'Awe and Lowlineſs of a loyal Subject, 'we cannot but receive exceeding Comfort and Contentment in the Frame 'and Conſtitution of this higheſt Court, 'wherein not only the Prelates, Nobles, 'and Grandees, but the Commons of all 'Degrees, have their Part, and wherein 'that high Majeſty doth deſcend to admit, or rather to invite the humbleſt 'of his Subjects to Conference and Council with him, of the great, weighty, 'and difficult Affairs of the King and 'Kingdom; a Benefit and Favour 'whereof we cannot be too ſenſible 'and thankful; for ſure I am, that all 'good Hearts would be both ſenſible 'and ſorrowful, if we did want it; and 'therefore it behoveth all with united 'Hearts and Minds, free from Diſtraction and Diverſion, to fix their Thoughts 'upon Counſels and Conſultations worthy of ſuch an Aſſembly, remembring, 'That in it is preſented the Majeſty and 'Greatneſs, the Authority and Power, 'the Wiſdom and Knowledge of this 'great and famous Nation; and it behoveth us to magnify and bleſs God, 'that hath put the Power of aſſembling 'Parliaments in the hands of him, the 'virtue of whoſe Perſon doth ſhine with 'the Greatneſs of his Princely Lineage 'and Deſcent, whether he ſhould be accounted Major or Melior, a greater 'King, or a better Man; and of whom 'you have had ſo much Tryal and Experience, that he doth as affectionately 'love, as he doth exactly know and 'underſtand the true Uſe of Parliaments; 'witneſs his daily and unwearied Acceſs 'to this Houſe, before his Acceſs to the 'Crown; his gracious Readineſs to all 'Conferences of importance; his frequent and effectual Interceſſion to his 'bleſſed Father, of never-dying Memory, for the Good of the Kingdom, with 'ſo happy Succeſs, that both this and 'future Generations ſhall feel it, and 'have cauſe to rejoice at the Succeſs 'of his Majeſty's Interceſſion: And 'when the royal Diadem deſcended upon himſelf, preſently, in the midſt of 'his Tears and Sighs for the Departure 'of his moſt dear and royal Father, in 'the very firſt Conſultation with his 'Privy-Council, was reſolved to meet 'his People in Parliament: And no 'ſooner did the heavy hand of that deſtroying Angel forbear thoſe deadly 'Strokes, which for ſome time did make

'this Place inacceſſible, but his Majeſty 'preſently reſolved to recall it, and hath 'now brought you together, and in a 'happy time, I truſt, to treat and con'ſult with uniform Deſires and united 'Affections, of thoſe things that con'cern the general Good.

'AND now being thus aſſembled, 'his Majeſty hath commanded me to 'let you know, that his Love and Af'fection to the Public moved him to call 'this Parliament; and looking into the 'Danger, and the ſpreading of that late 'Mortality, and weighing the multitude 'of his Majeſty's preſſing Occaſions, and 'urging Affairs of State, both at home 'and abroad, much importing the Safe'ty and State of this Kingdom; the ſame 'Affection that moved him to call it, 'doth forbid him to prolong the ſitting 'of this Parliament: And therefore his 'Majeſty reſolving to confine this Meet'ing to a ſhort time, hath confined me 'to a ſhort Errand; and that is, That 'as a thing moſt agreeable to the King'ly Office, to the Example of the beſt 'Times, and to the Frame of modern 'Affairs, his Majeſty hath called you 'together to conſult and to adviſe of 'provident and good Laws, profitable 'for the Public, and fitted for the pre'ſent Times and Actions; for upon ſuch 'depends the Aſſurance of Religion 'and of Juſtice, which are the ſureſt Pil'lars and Buttreſſes of good Govern'ment in a Kingdom: For his Majeſty 'doth conſider, that the royal Throne, 'on which God out of his Mercy to us 'hath ſet him, is the Fountain of all 'Juſtice, and that good Laws are the 'Streams and Quits by which the Bene'fit and Uſe of this Fountain is diſpers'd 'to his People; and it is his Majeſty's 'Care and Study, that his People may 'ſee with Comfort and Joy of heart, 'that this Fountain is not dry, but they 'and their Poſterity may reſt aſſured 'and confident in his Time, to receive 'ample Benefit from this Fountain, by 'his Majeſty's Mercy and Juſtice, as e'ver Subjects did in the time of the moſt 'eminent Princes amongſt his noble Pro'genitors; wherein as his Majeſty ſhews 'himſelf moſt ſenſible of the Good of 'the Public, ſo were it an Injury to this 'great and honourable Aſſembly, if it 'ſhould be but doubted that they ſhall 'not be as ſenſible of any thing that may 'add to his Majeſty's Honour, which 'cannot but receive a high degree of 'Love and Affection, if his Majeſty, 'ſucceeding ſo many religious, wiſe, and 'renowned Princes, ſhould begin his 'Reign with ſome Additions to thoſe 'good Laws which their happy and 'glorious Times have afforded. And 'this his Majeſty hath cauſed me to de'ſire at this time eſpecially above o'thers; for his Majeſty having at his 'royal Coronation, lately ſolemnized 'the ſacred Rites of that bleſſed Mar'riage between his People and him, 'and therein by a moſt holy Oath vow'd 'the Protection of the Laws, and Main'tenance of Peace, both to Church and 'People, no Time can be ſo fit for his 'Majeſty to adviſe and conſult at large 'with his People, as at this preſent 'Time, wherein ſo lately his Majeſty 'hath vowed Protection to his People, 'and they have proteſted their Allegi'ance and Service to him.

'THIS is the Sum of that Charge which 'I have received from his Majeſty to de'liver unto you; wherein you ſee his 'Majeſty's Intent to the Public: And 'therefore his Deſire is, that according 'to that Conveniency of Time which 'his Affairs may afford, you may apply 'yourſelves to diſpatch the Buſineſs of 'this Parliament.'

The King is thanked for his Anſwer to the Petition againſt Recuſants.

THE Commons, after chuſing Sir Heneage Finch, Recorder of London, for their Speaker, and thanking his Majeſty for his gracious Anſwer to the Petition againſt Recuſants, began where they left off at Oxford, with the Examination of Matters of Religion, and publick Grievances, particularly the Miſcarriage of the Fleet to Cadiz, evil Counſellors about the King, the Miſ-employment of the three Subſidies and three Fifteenths granted to the late King for the Recovery of the Palatinate, and certain precipitant Repriſals made upon France, to the great Damage of the Engliſh Merchants. They alſo voted two Books, compoſed by the King's Chaplain, Dr. Richard Mountague, viz. An Anſwer to the late Gagg of Proteſtants, and An Appeal to Cæſar, to contain falſe, erroneous, Papiſtical, and Arminian Opinions, repugnant to the Articles of the Church of England. It appears from Ruſhworth, &c. that in thoſe Tracts he had aſſerted, 'That the Church of Rome hath ever 'remained firm upon the ſame Founda'tion of Sacraments and Doctrines inſti'tuted by God: That the controverted 'Points (between the Churches of Eng'land* and Rome) are of ſuch an infe'rior nature, that a Man may be igno'rant of 'em without any Danger of his 'Soul at all: That Images may be u'ſed for the Inſtruction of the Ignorant, 'and Excitation of Devotion: That Men 'juſtified may fall away, and depart 'from the State of Grace.' And alſo it appears from the ſame Hiſtorian, that in another Book of his, concerning the Parliament's farther Enquiry into Grievances.

Their Cenſure of Mountague's Books.

THE King being informed that there was a great Reſort of People to Maſs at a Foreign Ambaſſador's Lodgings at Durham-Houſe, required the Biſhop of Durham to apprehend and impriſon all his Subjects that went to Maſs; and ordered his Attorney to acquaint his Judges (on the Circuits) that it was his Pleaſure they ſhould proceed with rigour againſt the Recuſants. Then his Majeſty preſſed the Commons to conſider of the Supply, and the Lords alſo uſed ſome Endeavours to perſuade them to it, in a Conference which they deſired on this Occaſion; and they adviſed one Fleet to be fitted out forthwith againſt the King of Spain, and another to guard the Coaſts and Merchants; but it was to no purpoſe. On the contrary, they received the Report of the Committee concerning the Nation's Grievances, and Reſolved, 1. That the Diminution of the Kingdom in it's Strength and Honour; 2. the Increaſe and Countenancing of Papiſts; 3. the not Guarding of the Narrow Seas; 4. Pluralities of Offices in one hand; 5. Sales of Honours and Places of Judicature; 6. Delivery up of Ships to the French; 7. Miſ-employment of three Subſidies and three Fifteenths, are preſent Grievances; and that the Duke, on whom theſe Miſdemeanors chiefly reflected, ſhould have notice of the Articles on which the Complaints againſt him were grounded, and of the Intention of the Houſe of Commons to reſume the Debate of theſe things very ſoon.

National Grievances.

AN Author of good Credit, ſpeaking of theſe times, laments to ſee how ſtrangely they were degenerated from the Peaceableneſs of the former; inſomuch that the People, under pretences of Reformation, with ſome petulant Diſcourſes of Liberty, extended their Enquiries even into the Chamber and private Actions of the King. Committees, ſays he, were actually ſent from the Houſe to the Signet-Office to ſearch for Originals of his Letters for reprieving ſome Prieſts condemn'd at York: And when the King ſent a Letter to the Speaker, with a Meſſage to the Houſe, by Sir Richard Weſton Chancellor of the Exchequer, acquainting them, that the Fleet was return'd, Victuals ſpent, the Men in great Neceſſity ready to mutiny for want of Pay, and that the Ships and Land-Forces, which were to guard the Coaſts, were in want of Men, Victuals and Clothes, yet they could not be prevail'd upon, to go upon the Supply; but one Clement Coke, among many other Invectives, ſaid, It was better to die by a Foreign Enemy, than to be deſtroy'd at home.

TRUSTY and WELL-BELOVED, &c.

The King's Letter to the Speaker.

'HAVING aſſembled the Parliament 'early in the Beginning of the Year, for 'the more timely Help and Advice of 'our People in our great and important 'Affairs; and having of late, not only 'by Meſſage, but alſo of Ourſelf, put 'our Houſe of Commons in mind of our 'preſſing Occaſions, and of the preſent 'Eſtate of Chriſtendom, wherein they 'have equal Intereſt with us, as well in 'reſpect of their own former Engage-'ments, as of the common Cauſe; we 'ſhall not need to tell them with what 'Care and Patience we have in the midſt 'of our Neceſſities attended their Reſo-'lutions; but becauſe their unſeaſonable 'Slowneſs may produce at home as ill 'Effects as a Denial, and hazard the 'whole Eſtate of Things abroad, we 'have thought fit by you the Speaker, 'to let them know, that without more 'loſs of time, we look for a full and 'perfect Anſwer of what they will give 'for our Supply, according to our Ex-'pectation, and their Promiſes; wherein, 'as we preſs for nothing beyond the 'preſent State and Condition of our Sub-'jects, ſo we accept no leſs than is pro-'portionable to the Greatneſs and Good-'neſs of the Cauſe: Neither do we preſs 'them to a preſent Reſolution in this, 'with a purpoſe to precipitate their 'Counſels, much leſs to enter upon their 'Privileges, but to ſhew that it is unfit 'to depend any longer upon Uncertain-'ties, whereby the whole Weight of 'the Affairs of Chriſtendom may break 'in upon us on the ſudden, to our Diſ-'honour and the Shame of this Nation. 'And for the Buſineſs at home, we com-'mand you to promiſe them in our Name, 'that after they have ſatisfied us in this 'our reaſonable Demand, we ſhall not 'only continue them together at this 'time, ſo long as the Seaſon will per-'mit, but call them ſhortly again to per-'fect thoſe neceſſary Buſineſſes which 'ſhall be now left undone; and 'now we ſhall willingly apply fit 'and ſeaſonable Remedies to ſuch juſt 'Grievances, which they ſhall preſent 'unto us in a dutiful and mannerly way, 'without throwing an ill Odour upon 'our preſent Government, or upon the 'Government of our late bleſſed Father. 'And if there be yet any who deſire to 'find fault, we ſhall think him the wiſeſt 'Reprehender of Errors paſt, who with-'out reflecting backward, can give 'us counſel how to ſettle the preſent 'Eſtate of Things, and to provide for 'the future Safety and Honour of the 'Kingdom.'

Reaſons of the Commons Diſguſt.

THE Commons were the more diſguſted with this Letter for theſe Reaſons, 1. The Supply was demanded more like an Obligation upon them than a free Gift. 2. The King ſet them a time, by ordering it ſhou'd be done out of hand, and all other Matters poſtpon'd to it. 3. His ſpecifying to them, as it were, the very Sum that they were to give. 4. The Money was demanded with a Haughtineſs never practis'd by any King before. 5. The King founded his Demand upon a Promiſe fraudulently obtained of King James's laſt Parliament by the Duke of Buckingham's falſe Narrative. 6. The War for which ſo much Money was to be given had been raſhly undertaken at a Juncture when there was no Proſpect of Succeſs; and every one knew the King and the Duke of Bucks to be the Authors of it, tho' the King perpetually charg'd it upon the Parliament's Advice to the King his Father. However the Commons reſolv'd to ſend a reſpectful and ſubmiſſive Anſwer to the King's Letter, containing Expreſſions of their Zeal for his Service, and general Promiſes of helping him in his Wants; but they artfully intimated to him, that they expected Redreſs of Grievances before they ſhou'd vote him a Supply; for as the King himſelf had hinted that the Aid of Money he now demanded, wou'd not be the laſt; they cou'd not be ſure, but that in the next Seſſion, the King wou'd again expect that the Money-Bill ſhou'd come before the Grievances, and ſo there would never be an end.

The Anſwer which the Commons ſent to the KING was as follows.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

The Commons Anſwer.

'YOUR Majeſty's Dutiful and Loyal 'Subjects, the Commons now aſſembled 'in Parliament, in all Humility, preſent 'unto your Royal Wiſdom, this their 'Loyal Anſwer to the Meſſage, which 'your Majeſty was pleas'd, by the Chan-'cellor of your Exchequer, to ſend unto 'them, deſiring to know, without any 'further deferring of Time, what Sup-'ply they would give to your Majeſty, 'for your preſent and extraordinary Oc-'caſions, that you might accordingly 'frame your Counſels.

'FIRST of all, they moſt humbly 'beſeech your Majeſty to know and reſt 'aſſured, that no King was ever dearer 'to his People than your Majeſty, no 'People more zealous to maintain and 'advance the Honour and Greatneſs of 'their King than they; which, as upon 'all Occaſions they ſhall be ready to 'expreſs, ſo eſpecially in the Support 'of that Cauſe, wherein your Majeſty 'and your Allies are now juſtly engag'd. 'And becauſe they cannot doubt, but 'your Majeſty in your great Wiſdom, 'even out of Juſtice, and according to 'the Example of your moſt famous Pre-'deceſſors, will be pleaſed graciouſly 'to accept the faithful and neceſſary In-'formation and Advice of your Parlia-'ment, which can have no end but the 'Service of your Majeſty, and Safety 'of your Realm, in diſcovering the 'Cauſes, and propoſing the Remedies 'of theſe great Evils, which have oc-'caſioned your Majeſty's Wants, and 'your People's Grief:

'THEY therefore in Confidence and 'full Aſſurance of Redreſs therein, do 'with one Conſent propoſe (though in 'former time ſuch Courſe hath been un-'uſed) that they really intend to aſſiſt 'and ſupply your Majeſty in ſuch a way, 'and in ſo ample a meaſure, as may 'make you ſafe at home, and feared 'abroad; for the Diſpatch whereof they 'will uſe ſuch Diligence, as your Ma-'jeſty's preſent and preſſing Occaſions 'ſhall require.

THE King replied to the Commons in Terms, which ſhewed that he was not ſo much upon the Reſerve as they were; and indeed it was his Intereſt to ſpeak his Mind freely, for fear that by concealing his Principles and Pretenſions he ſhould encourage the Commons to fall on the Duke of Buckingham, who was counted the Prime Author of the Grievances. His Majeſty's Reply was as follows.

Mr. Speaker,

The King's Reply.

'THE Anſwer of the Commons de-'livered by you, I like well of, and 'do take it for a full and ſatisfactory 'Anſwer, and I thank them for it, 'and I hope you will with all Ex-'pedition take a Courſe for performance 'thereof, the which will turn to your 'own Good as well as mine; but for 'your Clauſe therein, of preſenting of 'Grievances, I take that but for a Pa-'rentheſis in your Speech, and not a 'Condition; and yet for Anſwer to that 'Part

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'part, I will tell you, I will be as willing 'to hear your Grievances as my Predeceſſors have been, ſo that you will apply your ſelves to redreſs Grievances, 'and not to enquire after Grievances. I 'muſt let you know, that I will not allow any of my Servants to be queſtioned amongſt you, much leſs ſuch as 'are of eminent Place, and near unto me. 'The old Queſtion was, What ſhall be done to the Man whom the King delighteth to honour? But now it has been 'the Labour of ſome, to ſeek what may 'be done againſt him whom the King 'thinks fit to honour. I ſee you ſpecially 'aim at the Duke of Buckingham: I wonder what hath ſo altered your Affections 'towards him! I do well remember that 'in the laſt Parliament in my Father's time, 'when he was the Inſtrument to break the 'Treaties, all of you (and yet I cannot 'ſay all, for I know ſome of you are changed, but yet the Houſe of Commons is 'always the ſame) did ſo much honour 'and reſpect him, that all the Honour 'conferred on him was too little, and what 'he hath done ſince to alter and change 'your Minds, I wot not; but can aſſure 'you, he hath not meddled or done any 'thing concerning the Public or Commonwealth, but by ſpecial Directions and Appointment, and as my Servant, and is ſo 'far from gaining or improving his Eſtate 'thereby, that I verily think he hath rather impaired the ſame. I wiſh you would 'haſten for my Supply, or elſe it will be 'worſe for your ſelves; for if any Ill 'happen, I think I ſhall be the laſt ſhall 'feel it.'

THIS Reply did not diſcourage the Commons from proceeding in the Examination of the Duke of Buckingham's Conduct, whom they were reſolv'd to impeach in Form. Dr. Turner, a Phyſician, Member for Shaftesbury, mov'd a Queſtion, Whether Common Fame be a good Ground of proceeding for the Houſe? Which after conſulting ſome eminent Lawyers, viz. Sir Thomas Wentworth, Mr. Noy, and others, was carry'd in the Affirmative.

Dr. Turner's Motion for impeaching the Duke of Buckingham.

HIS Majeſty was extremely offended at theſe Proceedings, and expreſs'd his Diſpleaſure to the Commons in an angry Meſſage, which he ſent next Day by Sir Richard Weſton, wherein he alſo demanded Juſtice againſt the abovemention'd Coke and Turner, that he be not conſtrain'd to uſe his Royal Power againſt the Delinquents.

The King's Demand of Juſtice againſt Coke and Turner.

Dr. Turner immediately ſtood up and explain'd himſelf, ſaying, That to accuſe upon Common Fame was warranted by the Imperial Laws, and by the Canons of the Church; That this Houſe, in the Time of Henry VI, did, upon Common Fame, accuſe the Duke of Suffolk; and that Sir Richard Weſton himſelf did preſent the common Undertakers upon particular Fame. And the next Day, when the Meſſage was to be again debated, the Doctor wrote a Letter to the Speaker, to excuſe his not attending the Houſe, by reaſon of Sickneſs, and ſubmitting to their Judgments, but not acknowledging any Fault. Mean time this Reſentment of the King only increaſed the Ferment againſt the Duke. Sir John Elliot made a bold and ſharp Speech againſt the Duke, and Grievances; and Sir William Walter told the Houſe, that the Cauſe of all the Grievances was that which happen'd in the Court of King Lewis XI of France, when all the King's Council rode upon one Horſe; all which Council was only Oliver the Barber, who govern'd Lewis, as much as Villiers govern'd Charles. However, to qualify theſe Heats with all reſpect to the King, and with a Deference to the neceſſity of Publick Affairs, the Commons, on the 27th of March, unanimouſly voted his Majeſty three Subſidies and three Fifteens, to be paid the laſt Day of June, and the laſt Day of October following; to which a fourth Subſidy was added a Month afterwards; but withal they reſerved to themſelves the Liberty of paſſing this Vote into an Act, without which it would be of no effect to the King, when they ſhould think fit. Now according to their Intent, this Act was not to paſs 'till after they had receiv'd Satisfaction on the point of Grievances. Thus they deprived the King of any Pretence to complain of Delays, while what they did for him could be of no Advantage to him, but in Suppoſition that he would regard their Deſires. This very much pinch'd the King, who plainly perceiving that the Proceedings of the Commons were aim'd at the Duke of Buckingham, or rather at his own Royal Perſon, tho' he had before declar'd publickly that the Duke had done nothing but by his Orders, he reſolv'd to let them know how much he was diſpleaſed at their Proceedings; and that he might frighten them into other Meaſures, he ſent for the two Houſes to Whitehall, where, on the 29th of March, he made the following Speech to them.

The Commons grant him a Supply, with a Reſtriction for the redreſs of Grievances.

The KING's Speech.

My LORDS and GENTLEMEN,

'I HAVE called you hither to Day, I mean 'both Houſes of Parliament; but 'tis for 'ſeveral and diſtinct Reaſons: My Lords, 'You of the Upper-Houſe, to give you 'Thanks for the Care of the State of the 'Kingdom now; and not only for the 'Care of your own Proceedings, but ex-

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'citing your Fellow-Houſe of the Commons to take that into their Conſideration: Therefore, my Lords, I muſt not only give you Thanks, but I muſt alſo avow, That if this Parliament do not redound to the Good of the Kingdom (which I pray God it may) it is not your Faults. And you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I am ſorry that I may not juſtly give the ſame Thanks to you; but I muſt tell you, that I am come here to ſhew you your Errors, and, as I may call it, unparliamentary Proceedings in this Parliament. But I do not deſpair, becauſe you ſhall ſee your Faults ſo clearly by the Lord Keeper, that you may ſo amend your Proceedding that this Parliament ſhall end comfortably and happily, though in the beginning it hath had ſome Rubs.'

Then the Lord Keeper, by the King's Command, ſpoke next.

My LORDS, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commmons,

'YOU are here aſſembled by his Majeſty's Commandment to receive a Declaration of his Royal Pleaſure; which although it be intended only to the Houſe of Commons, yet his Majeſty hath thought meet, the Matter being of great Weight and Importance, it ſhould be deliver'd in the Preſence of both Houſes, and both Houſes make one General Council: And his Majeſty is willing that the Lords ſhould be Witneſſes of the Honour and Juſtice of his Reſolutions. And ſince the Errand, which by his Majeſty's Direction I muſt deliver, hath relation to the Houſe of Commons, I muſt addreſs myſelf therefore to you, Mr. Speaker, and the reſt of that Houſe.

'AND firſt his Majeſty would have you to underſtand, that there was never any King more loving to his People, or better affection'd to the right uſe of Parliaments, than his Majeſty has approved himſelf to be, not only by his long Patience ſince the ſitting down of this Parliament, but by thoſe mild and calm Directions which from time to time that Houſe hath received both by Meſſage and Letter, and from his Royal Mouth; when the irregular Humours of ſome particular Perſons wrought Diverſions and Diſtractions there, to the Diſturbance of thoſe great and weighty Affairs which the Neceſſity of the Times, the Honour and Safety of the King and Kingdom, called upon. And therefore his Majeſty doth aſſure you, that when theſe great Affairs are ſettled, and that his Majeſty hath received Satisfaction of his reaſonable Demands, he will, as a juſt King, hear and anſwer your juſt Grievances, which in a dutiful way ſhall be preſented unto him; and this his Majeſty doth avow.

'NEXT his Majeſty would have you know of a ſurety, That as never any King was more loving to his People, nor better affectioned to the right uſe of Parliament, ſo never King more jealous of his Honour, nor more ſenſible of the Neglect and Contempt of his Royal Rights, which his Majeſty will by no means ſuffer to be violated by any pretended Colour of Parliamentary Liberty; wherein his Majeſty doth not forget, that the Parliament is his Council, and therefore ought to have the Liberty of a Council; but his Majeſty underſtands the Difference betwixt Council and Comptrolling, and between Liberty and the Abuſe of Liberty.

'THIS being ſet down in general, his Majeſty hath commanded me to relate ſome particular Paſſages, and Proceedings, whereat he finds himſelf aggrieved.

'Firſt, Whereas a ſeditious Speech was uttered amongſt you by Mr. Cook, the Houſe did not, as they ought to do, cenſure and correct him. And when his Majeſty underſtanding it, did by a Meſſage of Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer deliver'd to the Houſe, require Juſtice of you, his Majeſty hath ſince found nothing but Protracting and Delays. This his Majeſty holds not agreeable to the Wiſdom and the Duty which he expected from the Houſe of Commons.

'Secondly, Whereas Dr. Turner, in a ſtrange unparliamentary Way, without any Ground of Knowledge in himſelf, or offering any particular Proof of the Houſe, did take upon him to adviſe the Houſe to enquire upon ſundry Articles concerning the Duke of Buckingham, as he pretended, but in truth he wounds the Honour and Government of his Majeſty, and of his renowned Father; and his Majeſty, firſt, by a Meſſage, and after by his own Royal Mouth, did declare, That that Courſe of an Enquiry was an Example which by no way he could ſuffer, though it were againſt his meaneſt Servant, much leſs againſt one ſo near him; and that his Majeſty did much wonder at the fooliſh Inſolency of any Man that can think that his Majeſty ſhould be drawn out of any End to offer ſuch a Sacrifice ſo unworthy of a King, or a good Maſter; yet for all this you have been ſo far from correcting the Inſolency of Turner, that ever ſince that time, your Committees have walk'd in the Steps of Turner, and proceeded in 'an

'an unparliamentary Inquiſition, running 'upon Generals, and repeating that 'whereof you have made Fame the 'Ground-Work. Here his Majeſty hath 'Cauſe to be exceeding ſenſible, that up-'on every Particular he finds the Honour 'of his Father ſtain'd and blemiſh'd, and 'his own no leſs; and withal you have 'manifeſted a great Forwardneſs rather 'to pluck out of his Boſom thoſe who 'are near about him, and whom his Ma-'jeſty hath cauſe to affect, than to truſt 'his Majeſty with the future Reformation 'of theſe things which you ſeem to aim 'at; and yet you cannot deny that his 'Majeſty hath wrought a greater Refor-'mation in Matters of Religion, Execu-'tion of the Laws, and concerning Things 'of great Importance, than the Short-'neſs of his Reign (in which he hath 'been hindred partly through Sickneſs, 'and the Diſtraction of things, which 'we could have wiſh'd had been other-'wiſe) could produce.

'CONCERNING the Duke of Buckingham, 'his Majeſty hath commanded me to tell 'you, that himſelf does better know than 'any Man living, the Sincerity of the 'Duke's Proceedings; with what Cautions 'of Weight and Diſcretion he hath been 'guided in his publick Employments 'from his Majeſty and his bleſſed Father; 'what Enemies he hath procur'd at home 'and abroad; what Peril of Perſon, and 'Hazard of his Eſtate he ran into, for 'the Service of his Majeſty, and his ever 'bleſſed Father; and how forward he 'hath been in the Service of this Houſe 'many times ſince his return from Spain. 'And therefore his Majeſty cannot believe 'that the Aim is at the Duke of Bucking-'ham, but findeth that theſe Proceedings 'do directly wound the Honour and Juſ-'tice of himſelf, and of his Father. It 'is therefore his Majeſty's expreſs and 'final Commandment, That you yield 'Obedience unto thoſe Directions which 'you have formerly receiv'd, and ceaſe 'this unparliamentary Inquiſition, and 'commit unto his Majeſty's Care, and 'Wiſdom, and Juſtice, the future Re-'formation of the Things which you 'ſuppoſe to be otherwiſe than they ſhould 'be: And his Majeſty is reſolv'd, that 'before the End of this Seſſion he will 'ſet ſuch a Courſe, both for the amend-'ing of any thing that may be found a-'miſs, and for the ſettling of his own 'Eſtate, as he doubteth not but will give 'you ample Satisfaction and Comfort.

'NEXT to this, his Majeſty takes notice, 'that you have ſuffer'd the greateſt Coun-'cil to be cenſured and traduced in the 'Houſe, by Men whoſe Years and Edu-'cation cannot attain to that Depth: That 'foreign Buſineſſes have been entertain'd 'in the Houſe, to the Hindrance and 'Diſadvantage of his Majeſty's Negotia-'tions. That the ſame Year, yea, the firſt 'Day of his Majeſty's Inauguration, you 'ſuffered his Council, Government, and 'Servants to be parallelled with the Times 'of moſt Exception: That your Commit-'tees have preſum'd to examine Letters 'of Secretaries of State, nay, his own; 'and ſent a general Warrant to his Sig-'net-Office, and commanded his Officers 'not only to produce and ſhew the Re-'cords, but their Books and private Notes 'which they made for his Majeſty's Ser-'vice. This his Majeſty holds as unſuf-'ferable, and it was in former Times un-'uſual.

'NEXT I am to ſpeak concerning your 'Supply of three Subſidies and three 'Fifteenths, which you have agreed to 'tender to his Majeſty. You have been 'made acquainted with the Greatneſs of 'his Affairs, both at Home and Abroad, 'with the ſtrong Preparation of the Ene-'my, with the Importance of upholding 'his Allies, ſtrengthening and ſecuring 'both England and Ireland; beſides the 'encountring and annoying the Enemy by 'a powerful Fleet at Sea, and the Charge 'of all. This having been calculated un-'to you, you have proteſted unto his 'Majeſty, by the Mouth of your Speaker, 'your Carefulneſs to ſupport the Cauſe 'wherein his Majeſty and his Allies are 'juſtly engag'd; your unanimous Conſent 'and real Intention to ſupply his Majeſty 'in ſuch a Meaſure as ſhould make him 'ſafe at Home, and fear'd Abroad; and 'that in the Diſpatch hereof, you would 'uſe ſuch Diligence as his Majeſty's preſ-'ſing and preſent Occaſions did re-'quire.

'AND now his Majeſty having erected 'a Proceeding ſuitable to this Engagement, 'he doth obſerve, that in two Days only 'of twelve this Buſineſs was thought of, 'and not begun, 'till his Majeſty by a Mes-'ſage put you in mind of it, whilſt your 'Inquiſition againſt his Majeſty's Direction 'proceeded Day by Day.

'AND for the Meaſure of this Supply, 'his Majeſty findeth it ſo far from making 'himſelf ſafe at Home and feared Abroad, 'as contrariwiſe it expoſes him both to 'Danger and Diſeſteem; for his Majeſty 'cannot expect without better help, but 'that his Allies muſt preſently disband, 'and leave him alone to bear the Fury 'of a provoked and powerful Enemy: 'So as both he and you ſhall be unſafe 'at Home, and aſhamed and deſpiſed A-'broad. And for the Manner of the Sup-'ply, it is in itſelf very diſhonourable, 'and full of Diſtruſt; for although you 'have

'have avoided the literal Word of a 'Condition, whereof his Majeſty himſelf 'did warn you, when he told you of 'your Parentheſis, yet you have put to 'it the Effect of a Condition, ſince the 'Bill is not to come into your Houſe, un-'til your Grievances be both preferred 'and anſwer'd. No high thing was in 'that Expreſſion and Engagement deli-'vered by your Speaker, from which his 'Majeſty holdeth that you have receded 'both in Matter and Manner, to his great 'Diſadvantage and Diſhonour. And 'therefore his Majeſty commandeth, that 'you go together, and by Saturday next 'return your final Anſwer, what further 'Supply you will add to this you have 'already agreed on, and that to be with-'out Condition, either directly or indi-'rectly, for the Supply of theſe great 'and important Affairs of his Majeſty; 'which for the Reaſons formerly made 'known unto you, can endure no longer 'Delay; and if you ſhall not by that time 'reſolve on a more ample Supply, his 'Majeſty cannot expect a Supply this way, 'nor promiſe you to ſit longer together; 'otherwiſe, if you do it, his Majeſty is 'well content that you ſhall ſit ſo long as 'the Seaſon of the Year will permit; and 'doth aſſure you, that the preſent Ad-'dition to the Supply to ſet forward the 'Work, ſhall be no Hindrance to your 'ſpeedy Acceſs again.

'HIS Majeſty hath commanded me to 'add this, That therein he doth expect 'your chearful Obedience, which will 'put a happy Iſſue to this Meeting, and 'will enable his Majeſty, not only to a 'defenſive War, but to employ his Sub-'jects in foreign Actions, whereby will 'be added to them both Experience, Safe-'ty, and Honour.

'LAST of all, his Majeſty hath com-'manded me, in Explanation of the 'gracious Goodneſs of his Royal Intenti-'on, to ſay unto you, that he doth well 'know that there are among you many 'wiſe and well-temper'd Men, well af-'fected to the Public, and to his Majeſty's 'Service; and that thoſe that are willing-'ly faulty are not many: And for the 'reſt his Majeſty doubteth not, but after 'his gracious Admonition, they will, in 'due time, obſerve and follow the better 'Sort; which if they ſhall do, his Ma-'jeſty is moſt ready to forget whatſoever 'is paſt.'

Then his Majeſty ſpoke again.

'I MUST withal put you in mind a little 'of Times paſt: You may remember, 'that in the Time of my bleſſed Father, 'you did with your Council and Perſua-'ſion perſuade both my Father and Me 'to break off the Treaties. I confeſs I 'was your Inſtrument, for two Reaſons; 'one was, the Fitneſs of the Time; the 'other, becauſe I was ſeconded by ſo 'great and worthy a Body, as the whole 'Body of Parliament: Then there was 'no body in ſo great Favour with you as 'this Man, whom you ſeem now to touch, 'but indeed my Father's Government and 'mine. Now that you have all things 'according to your Wiſhes, and that I am 'ſo far engag'd that you think there is no 'Retreat; now you begin to ſet the Dice, 'and make your own Game: But I pray 'you be not deceived, it is not a Parlia-'mentary Way, nor it is not a Way to 'deal with a King.

'Mr Cook told you, It was better to 'be eaten up by a foreign Enemy, than to 'be deſtroyed at Home. Indeed I think 'it more Honour for a King to be invaded, 'and almoſt deſtroyed by a foreign Ene-'my, than to be deſpis'd by his own Sub-'jects.

'REMEMBER that Parliaments are alto-'gether in my Power for their Calling, 'Sitting and Diſſolution; therefore as I 'find the Fruits of them good or evil, 'they are to continue, or not to be: 'And remember, that if in this Time, in-'ſtead of mending your Errors, by Delay 'you perſiſt in your Errors, you make 'them greater and irreconcilable: Where-'as, on the other ſide, if you do go on 'chearfully to mend them, and look to 'the Diſtreſſed State of Chriſtendom, and 'the Affairs of the Kingdom, as it lieth 'now by this great Engagement; you 'will do your ſelves Honour, you ſhall 'encourage me to go on with Parliaments, 'and, I hope, all Chriſtendom ſhall feel 'the Good of it.'

As ſoon as the Commons were return-ed to their own Houſe, they went into a Grand Commitee, order'd the Doors to be lock'd, and the Keys to be laid on the Table; which his Majeſty having notice of, order'd a Conference immedi-ately between the two Houſes, and com-manded the Duke of Buckingham to ex-plain his Intentions, which he did, in the Painted Chamber, in a Style and Senſe not ſo offenſive as what had been delivered from the Throne, and by the Lord Keeper.

The Duke's Speech was as follows;

'WHEREAS it is objected by ſome, who 'wiſh good Correſpondency betwixt the 'King and People, that to prefix a Day 'to give or to break, was an unuſual thing, 'and might expreſs an Inclination in the 'King to break: To remove this, as his 'Majeſty was free from ſuch Thoughts, 'he hath deſcended to make this Expla-'nation.

'THAT

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'THAT as his Majeſty would not have you condition with him directly or indirectly, ſo he will not lie to a Day, for giving farther Supply; but it was the preſſing Occaſion of Chriſtendom that made him pitch upon a Day.

'HIS Majeſty hath here a Servant of the King of Denmark, and another from the Duke of Weymer, and Yeſterday received a Letter from his Siſter the Queen of Bohemia; who ſignify'd that the King of Denmark hath ſent an Ambaſſador, with Power to perfect the Contract which was made at the Hague; ſo it was not the King, but Time, and the Things themſelves that preſſed a Time.

'THEREFORE his Majeſty is pleaſed to give longer, hoping you will not give him cauſe to put you in Mind of it again; ſo that you have a greater Latitude, if the Buſineſs require to think farther of it.

'I am commanded farther to tell you, that if his Majeſty ſhould accept of a leſs Sum than will ſuffice, it will deceive your Expectations, diſappoint his Allies, and conſume the Treaſure of the Kingdom: Whereas, if you give largely now, the Buſineſs being at the Criſis, it comes ſo ſeaſonably, it may give a Turn to the Affairs of Chriſtendom.

'But while we delay and ſuffer the Time to paſs, others abroad will take Advantage of it, as the King of Spain hath done, by concluding a Peace, as it is thought, in Italy, for the Valteline, whereby our Work is become the greater, becauſe there can be no Diverſion that way.

'As it was a good Rule to fear all Things and Nothing, and to be liberal was ſome times to be thrifty; ſo in this particular, if you give largely, you ſhall carry the War to the Enemy's Door, and keep that Peace at Home that hath been: Whereas, on the contrary, if you draw the War Home, it brings with it nothing but Diſturbance and Fear, all Courſes of Juſtice ſtopt, and each Man's Revenue leſſen'd, and nothing that can be profitable.

'ANOTHER Explanation I am commanded to make, touching the Grievances; wherein his Majeſty means no way to interrupt your Proceedings, but hopes you will proceed in the ancient ways of your Predeceſſors; and not ſo much ſeek Faults, as the Means to redreſs them.

'I am farther commanded to tell you, That his Majeſty intends to elect a Committee of both Houſes, whom he will truſt to take the View of his Eſtate, the Defects of which are not ſo fit for the Eyes of a Multitude; and this Committee will be for your Eaſe, and may ſatisfy you, without caſting any ill Odour on his Government, or laying open any Weakneſs that may bring Shame upon us Abroad. That which is propoſed is ſo little, that when the Payment comes, it will bring him to a worſe Eſtate than now he is in; therefore wiſhes you to inlarge it, but leaves the Augmentation to your ſelves; but is ſorry and touch'd in Conſcience, that the Burden ſhould lie on the pooreſt, who want too much already; yet he will not preſcribe, but wiſh that you, who were the Abettors and Counſellors of this War, would take a greater Part of the Burden to your ſelves; and any Man that can find out that way ſhall ſhew himſelf beſt affected, and do the beſt Service to the King and State.

AFTER the Duke had thus ſpoke for the King, he made his Addreſs to them in his own behalf. The Lord Conway, Secretary of State, who ſpoke next, undertook alſo in Vindication of the Duke, among other Things, to ſhew that the three Subſidies and the three Fifteenths granted to the late King had been imploy'd according to the Intent of the Parliament, becauſe nothing was diſburſed but by the King's expreſs Orders; a Reaſon which doubtleſs the Houſe of Commons thought very frivolous.

THE Explanation of the King's Intentions however ſeem'd to pacify them a little: and how much ſoever they had been diſguſted at what the King ſaid about Parliaments, they contented themſelves with preſenting an Addreſs to the King with the following Remonſtrance.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'WHEREAS Your Majeſty hath been pleaſed of late, at ſundry Times, and by ſeveral Means, to impart unto us your Royal Pleaſure touching ſome Paſſages and Proceedings in this preſent Parliament; We do firſt, with unſpeakable Joy and Comfort acknowledge your Majeſty's Grace and Favour, in that it hath pleaſed you to cauſe it to be deliver'd unto us by the Lord Keeper of your Great Seal, in your own Royal Preſence, and before both Houſes of Parliament, that never King was more loving to his People, nor better affected to the right uſe of Parliaments; withal, profeſſing your moſt gracious Reſolution to hear and redreſs our juſt Grievances. And with like Comfort we acknowledge your Majeſty's Goodneſs ſhining at the very Entrance of your Glorious Reign, in commanding the Execution of the Laws eſtabliſh'd to preſerve the True Religion of Almighty God, in whoſe Service conſiſteth the Happineſs of all Kings and Kingdoms.

'Yet

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'YET let it not displease your Majesty, 'that we also express some Sense of just 'Grief, intermixed with that great Joy, 'to see the careful Proceedings of our 'sincere Intentions so misreported, as to 'have wrought Effects unexpected, and, 'we hope, undeserved.

'First, Touching the Charge against 'us in the Matter concerning Mr. Cook, 'We all sincerely protest, That neither 'the Words mentioned in your Majesty's 'Message, nor any other of seditious Ef-'fect, were spoken by him, as hath been 'resolved by the House, without one ne-'gative Voice. Howsoever, in a Speech 'occasionally uttered, he let fall some 'few Words, which might admit an ill 'Construction; whereat the House being 'displeased at the delivery of them, as 'was expressed by a general and instant 'Check, he forthwith so explained Him-'self and his Intention, that, for the pre-'sent, we did forbear to take them into 'Consideration; which since we have 'done: And the Effect thereof had be-'fore this appeared, if by importunate 'Businesses of your Majesty's Service we 'had not been interrupted.

'THE like Interruption did also befal 'us in the Case of Dr. Turner; wherein 'the Question being formerly stated, a 'Resolution was ordered to be taken that 'very Day, on which we received your 'Majesty's Command to attend you.

'But for our own Proceedings, we hum-'bly beseech your Majesty to be truly 'informed, That before that Overture 'from Dr. Turner (out of our great 'and necessary Care for your Honour and 'Welfare of your Realm) we had taken 'into serious Consideration the Evils 'which now afflict your People, and the 'Causes of them, that we might apply 'ourselves unto the fittest Remedies. In 'the pursuit whereof, our Committees '(whatsoever they might have done) have 'in no Particular proceeded otherwise, 'than either upon Ground of Knowledge 'in themselves, or Proof by Examination 'of Witnesses, or other Evidence. In 'which Course of Service for the publick 'Good, as we have not swerved from the 'Parliamentary Ways of our Predeces-'sors, so we conceive, that the discovery 'and reforming of Errors is so far from 'laying an Aspersion upon the present 'Time and Government, that it is rather 'a great Honour and Happiness to both, 'yielding Matter to great Princes, where-'in to exercise and illustrate their noblest 'Virtues.

'AND although the grievous Complaints 'of the Merchants from all Parts, together 'with the common Service of the Sub-'jects, well affected to those who profess 'our Religion, gave us occasion to de-'bate some Businesses that were partly 'foreign, and had relation to Affairs of 'State; yet we beseech your Majesty to 'rest assured, it was exceeding far from 'our Intention, either to traduce your 'Counsellors, or disadvantage your Ne-'gociations. And though some Exam-'ples of great and potent Ministers of 'Princes, heretofore questioned in Parlia-'ment, have been alledged, yet was it 'without paralleling your Majesty's Go-'vernment or Councils to any Times at 'all, much less to Times of Exception.

'TOUCHING the Letter of your Ma-'jesty's Secretary, it was first alledged by 'your Advocate for his own Justification, 'and after by Direction of the Committee 'produced to make good his Allegation.

'AND for the Search at the Signet-Of-'fice, the Copy of a Letter being di-'vulged as in your Majesty's Name, with 'pregnant Cause of Suspicion, both in the 'Body and Direction thereof to be sup-'posititious, the Committee, out of desire 'to be cleared therein, did, by their Order, 'send some of themselves to the Signet-'Office to search whether there were any 'Records of Letters of that Nature, with-'out Warrant to the Officer for any, 'much less for a general Search.

'BUT touching publick Records, we 'have not forborn, as often as our Busi-'nesses have required, to make search in-'to them, wherein we have done nothing 'unwarrantable by the Laws of your 'Realm, and the constant Usage of Par-'liaments. And if for the Ease of their 'Labours any of our Committees have 'desired the help of the Officers, Reper-'tories or Breviates of Direction, we con-'ceive it is no more than any Subject in 'his own Affairs might have obtained for 'ordinary Fees.

'Now concerning your Majesty's Ser-'vants, and namely, the Duke of Buck-'ingham, we humbly beseech your Ma-'jesty to be informed by us your faithful 'Commons, who can have no private 'End but your Majesty's Service, and the 'Good of our Country, That it hath 'been the ancient, constant, and undoubt-'ed Right and Usage of Parliaments, to 'question and complain of all Persons of 'what Degree soever, found grievous 'to the Commonwealth, in abusing the 'Power and Trust committed to them by 'their Sovereign. A Course approved not 'only by the Examples in your Father's 'Days, of famous Memory, but by fre-'quent Precedents in the best and most 'glorious Reigns of your noble Progeni-'tors, appearing both in Records and Hi-'stories: Without which Liberty in Par-'liament, no private Man, no Servant to 'a King, perhaps no Counsellor, without 'exposing himself to the Hazard of great

'Enmity

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'Enmity and Prejudice, can be a Means 'to call great Officers in Queſtion for 'their Miſdemeanors, but the Common-'wealth might languiſh under their Preſ-'ſures without Redreſs: And whatſo-'ever we ſhall do accordingly in this 'Parliament, we doubt not but it ſhall 'redound to the Honour of the Crown, 'and Welfare of your Subjects.

'Laſtly, We moſt humbly beſeech 'your Majeſty graciouſly to conceive, 'that tho' it hath been the long Cuſtom 'of Parliaments to handle the Matter of 'Supply with the laſt of their Buſineſſes, 'yet at this Time, out of the extraordi-'nary Reſpect to your Perſon, and Care 'of your Affairs, we have taken the ſame 'into more ſpeedy Conſideration, and moſt 'happily on the very Day of your Ma-'jeſty's Inauguration, with great Alacrity 'and unanimous Conſent, after a ſhort 'Debate, we grew to the Reſolution for a 'preſent Supply, well known to your Ma-'jeſty.

'To which, if Addition may be made 'of other great Things for your Service, 'yet in Conſultation amongſt us, we doubt 'not but it will appear that we have not 'receded from the Truth of our firſt In-'tention, ſo to ſupply you, as may make 'you ſafe at Home, and feared Abroad, 'eſpecially if your Majeſty ſhall be plea-'ſed to look upon the Way intended in 'our Promiſe, as well as to the Meaſure 'of the Gift agreed.

'WITH like Humility we beſeech your 'Majeſty not to give Ear to the officious 'Reports of private Perſons for their own 'Ends, which hath occaſioned ſo much 'loſs of Time, nor to judge our Proceed-'ings whilſt they are in Agitation, but 'to be pleaſed to expect the Iſſue and 'Concluſion of our Labours, which we 'are confident will manifeſt and juſtify 'to your Majeſty the Sincerity and 'Loyalty of our Hearts, who ſhall ever 'place in a high Degree of Happineſs, the 'performing of that Duty and Service in 'Parliament, which may moſt tend to 'your Majeſty's Honour, and the Good 'of your Kingdom.'

THE King deſired Time to prepare an Anſwer to this Remonſtrance, and prevail-ed with the Commons to adjourn for a Week, as the Lords had done. Mean time being in great Perplexity for want of Money, and convinced that the Com-mons would not paſs the Subſidy Bill 'till they had done with the Duke of Buck-ingham, he conſented, at length, that the Houſe ſhould proceed in the Examination of his Favourite's Conduct; but the Sequel ſhews that he intended to ſtop Proceed-ings, in caſe Matters were puſhed too far. For while the Commons were paſſing Ar-ticles of Accuſation againſt the Duke, of which they allowed him to take a Copy from the Clerk's Book, an unexpected In-terruption was given to the Impeachment, and conſequently to the Subſidy Bill, by the King's Charge of High-Treaſon a-gainſt the Earl of Briſtol, which it will be neceſſary briefly to mention in this Place.

The Earl of BRISTOL's Affair.

THE Reader will remember that in the laſt Reign, we gave an Account of the Earl's Embaſſy to Spain about the Mar-riage of Prince Charles with the Infanta; and that tho' he brought it to a Conclu-ſion, according to King James's Deſire, he had the Misfortune however to diſ-pleaſe both the Prince and the Duke of Buckingham, whoſe Aim being to hinder the Earl from giving the Parliament an exact Account of what paſſed in Spain, they managed it ſo that at his Return he was confined to his Houſe, and afterwards ſent to the Tower, where he remained without being Tried or Charged 'till this ſecond Parliament, that is about two Years; for King James, tho' fully ſatiſ-fied of the Earl's Innocence, durſt not protect him, as obſerved in his Reign, but was conſtrained by the Prince and the Duke, on various Pretences, to keep him in Priſon, that he might have no Opportu-nity of ſpeaking with him: And after King James's Death the Earl's Caſe be-came ſo much the worſe, becauſe the new King and Favourite, his profeſſed Enemies, were no longer obliged to keep any Mea-ſures with him. But the Earl finding at laſt how the Commons ſtood affected to the Duke, reſolved to lay hold of this Op-portunity to attempt the Recovery of his Liberty and the Vindication of his Con-duct from the Aſperſions of the Duke: He therefore preſented a Petition to the Houſe of Lords, ſetting forth that tho' he was a Peer of the Realm he had received no Summons to the Parliament, and deſiring their Interceſſion for him, that he might enjoy his Privilege. Upon this the Lords prayed his Majeſty to ſend a Writ of Sum-mons to the Earl, and the other Peers, who had not received theirs, which the King granted, and a Writ was accordingly ſent to the Earl; but withal he received a Letter under the Great Seal, acquainting him that his Majeſty would rather have him make Excuſe for his Abſence than come in Perſon to the Houſe. Upon this the Earl addreſſed himſelf a ſecond Time to the Houſe of Lords, to whom he alſo ſent the Letter he received, and told them it was done by the Credit of the Duke of Bucks, whoſe Aim was to prevent him from making his Miſdemeanor known.

Moreover,

Moreover, he prayed the Lords to permit him to bring an Accuſation againſt the Duke, wherein he would demonſtrate how much the Duke had deceiv'd the late King, his preſent Majeſty, the State, and the Parliament. The King was ſo offended at the Earl of Briſtol's Boldneſs, that he ſent a Meſſage to the Lords, declaring that he was determin'd to charge the Earl of Briſtol with High-Treaſon; upon which the Lords could not help committing the Earl to the Cuſtody of the Black-Rod.

His Accuſation of the Duke of Buckingham.

Some Days after (viz. May 1.) the Earl being brought to the Bar of the Houſe, the Attorney General read a Charge of eleven Articles againſt him in the King's Name, who had corrected it in ſeveral Places with his own Hand. Nevertheleſs before it was read, the Lords alſo received the Accuſation enter'd by the Earl of Briſtol againſt the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Conway, Secretary of State, which conſiſted of twelve Articles. The Houſe cauſed the Articles to be read, remitted the Earl to the Black-Rod, and order'd that the King's Charge againſt him ſhould be proceeded upon before that of the Earl againſt the Duke, which the King took very well, and that his Teſtimony againſt the Duke ſhould not be prejudiced. The Articles on both ſides laboured with one Deſign, which was to render each other ſuſpected in their Loyalty and Religion, and was Matter of Sport for their Enemies, and Concern for their Friends. The Earl made ſuch a Defence, however, as confounded his Accuſers, and he ſhew'd how much the Duke had impoſed upon the Parliament in his Narrative of what paſſed in Spain; which the King taking as a Reflection on himſelf, who had not only atteſted the Relation, but ſtill perſiſted to atteſt it as true, he did not think fit to proſecute the Earl to the utmoſt.

As the Charge againſt the Earl, his Defence, and his Accuſation of the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Conway relate rather to the former Reign than to this, and would moreover exceed the Bounds of this Extract, we chooſe to refer the curious Reader to Ruſhworth and Mr Rapin's larger Hiſtory, where he will find ſeveral Papers upon this Progreſs which are worthy of his Peruſal.

Commons Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham.

On the 8th of May, which was ſome Days after the Earl of Briſtol had given in his Anſwer and preſented his Charge againſt the Duke and the Lord Conway, the Commons ſent up ſome of their Members to the Houſe of Lords with their Declaration and Impeachment againſt the Duke of Buckingham, conſiſting of thirteen Articles of Impeachment manag'd by eight Members and ſixteen more as Aſſiſtants. The eight chief Managers were Sir Dudley Diggs, Sir John Elliot, Mr. Selden, Mr. Glanville, Mr. Pym, Mr. Sherland, Mr. Wandesford, and Mr. Herbert.

Sir Dudley Diggs, who was appointed to explain and ſupport the beginning of the Charge, read the Preamble to the Bill drawn up in the uſual Form, in which the Duke's Titles and Offices were enumerated in the Manner following:

George, Duke, Marquis, and Earl of Buckingham, Earl of Coventry, Viſcount Villers, Baron of Whaddon, Great Admiral of the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, and of the Principality of Wales, and of the Dominions and Iſlands of the ſame, of the Town of Calais, and of the Marches of the ſame, and of Normandy, Gaſcoigne, and Guienne, General Governour of the Seas and Ships of the ſaid Kingdom, Lieutenant-General, Admiral, Captain-General and Governour of his Majeſty's Royal Fleet and Army lately ſet forth, Maſter of the Horſe of our Sovereign Lord the King, Lord Warden, Chancellor and Admiral of the Cinque-Ports, and of the Members thereof, Conſtable of Dover Caſtle, Juſtice in Eyre of all the Foreſts and Chaces on this Side the River Trent, Conſtable of the Caſtle of Windſor, Gentleman of his Majeſty's Bed-Chamber, One of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council in his Realms, both in England, Scotland and Ireland, and Knight of the moſt noble Order of the Garter.

When Sir Dudley had read the Preamble, he reduced the Charge to four principal Heads. In the Firſt he ſhew'd the Abuſes which followed from ſo many Offices conferr'd on a ſingle Perſon, and maintain'd it to be one of the chief Cauſes of the Calamities which afflicted England, as Decay of Trade, Loſſes at Sea, and the Contempt the Nation was fallen into. In the Second he ſpoke in general of Honours being ſold or procured by the Duke to undeſerving Perſons. In the Third he ſaid, as the Duke had raiſed all his poor Kindred to Honours, ſo he had exhauſted and miſemploy'd his Majeſty's Lands and Revenues. In the Fourth he ſpoke of the Remedies apply'd and given to the late King in his laſt Sickneſs; but he only juſt mention'd them, becauſe that Article was to be enlarged upon by another Manager.

As this Charge never came to any Judgment, 'tis unneceſſary to relate Particulars: But that the Reader may ſee in general what the Duke was accuſed of, the following Abſtract is inſerted of each of the Articles: Of which I, II, III, were enlarged upon by Mr. Herbert; IV, V, by Mr. Selden; VI, VII, VIII, by Mr. Glanville; IX, X, XI, by Pym; XII, by Mr. Sherland, &c.

I. He was accuſed of engroſſing into his own Hands a great Number of Offices, ſome of which could hardly be executed by a ſingle Perſon; and of procuring them by ill Means.

II. Of

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

II. Of purchaſing the Office of High-Admiral of the Earl of Nottingham, in the 16th of the late King.

III. Of buying the Office of Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports of the late Lord Zouch, in the 22d of the late Reign.

IV. Of having neglected to guard the Seas and protect the Merchants.

V. Of confiſcating a French Ship call'd the St. Peter of Newhaven, worth 40,000*l.* Of detaining the ſaid Ship after the King's Order of the 28th of December laſt to reſtore her to the Owner, and of taking out ſeveral Things for his own uſe.

VI. Of oppreſſing the Eaſt-India Company, in the 21ſt of King James, by detaining under falſe Pretences their Ships which were ready to ſail, and of compelling them to give him 10,000*l.* that they might not loſe their Voyage.

VII, and VIII. Of delivering ſeveral Merchant Ships and a Man of War into the Hands of the French King, againſt the Will of the Owners, in July laſt, to ſerve at the Siege of Rochel.

IX. Of conſtraining ſeveral Perſons to purchaſe Titles of Honour.

X. Of ſelling the Office of High-Treaſurer for 20,000 l. and the Office of Maſter of the Wards and Liveries for 6000 l.

XI. Of procuring to his Kindred and Allies Titles of Peerage, without their having done the State any Service.

XII. Of embezling and engroſſing the King's Money and Lands.

XIII. Of applying a Plaiſter to the late King's Side in his laſt Sickneſs, and of giving him a Potion with his own Hand at ſeveral Times, in the Abſence, and without the Order of the Phyſicians.

Sir John Elliot was appointed to make a ſort of Epilogue to the Impeachment, in which he ſumm'd up what had been ſaid againſt the Duke, and ſpoke of him in very ſevere Terms, but ſaid not a Word of the Plaiſter or Potion.

Ruſhworth mentions a very remarkable Paper which was privately convey'd to the King upon his Impeachment, importing, 'That this great Oppoſition a-'gainſt the Duke was ſtirred up and main-'tain'd by ſuch as ſeek the Deſtruction of 'this free Monarchy; That ſince the 'Time of Henry VI theſe Parliamentary 'Diſcourſings were never ſuffer'd, as be-'ing Symptoms of Rebellions and the de-'throning of our King; That his Majeſty 'therefore ever ſtrengthen'd himſelf with 'ſome Favourite, as whom he might 'better truſt then many of the Nobility 'fond of this Oligarchy; That it be-'hoved his Majeſty to uphold the Duke, 'who if he be decourted, the Demoliti-'tion of his Monarchy will ſoon follow; 'and that if they prevail in this, they 'will pull the other Feathers of Royalty, 'and appoint him Counſellors, Servants, 'Sc. That the King and his Father are 'both concern'd in the Duke's Accuſati-'on; and that if he ſuffer for obeying 'his Sovereign, the next Attempt will 'be to call the King to an Account, Sc.

The ſame or the next Day Diggs and Elliot were by the King's Command ſent to the Tower; and on May 11th the King went to the Houſe of Lords, and made the following ſhort Speech to them.

Diggs and Elliot committed to the Tower.

My Lords,

'The Cauſe, and only Cauſe, of 'my coming to you this Day, is to ex-'preſs the Senſe I have of all your Ho-'nours; for he that toucheth any of you 'toucheth me in a very great Meaſure. 'I have thought fit to take Order for 'the Puniſhing ſome inſolent Speeches 'lately ſpoken. I have been too remiſs 'heretofore in puniſhing ſuch Speeches 'as concern my ſelf; not that I was gree-'dy of their Monies, but that Buckingham, 'through his Importunity, would not ſuf-'fer me to take notice of them, leſt he 'might be thought to have ſet me on, and 'that he might come the forwarder to his 'Tryal. And to approve his Innocency 'as touching the Matters againſt him, I 'my ſelf can be a Witneſs to clear him in 'every one of them.

King's Speech to the Lords concerning the Duke.

'I Speak not this to take any thing out 'of your Hands; but to ſhew the Reaſon 'why I have not hitherto puniſhed thoſe 'inſolent Speeches againſt my ſelf. And 'now I hope you will be as tender of my 'Honour, when Time ſhall ſerve, as I 'have been ſenſible of yours.

The King's aim in this Speech was undoubtedly, Firſt, to perſuade the Lords that they were all ſtruck at by the diſreſpectful Things ſpoke by the Managers, Sc. againſt the Duke of Buckingham, and that he had committed Diggs and Elliot to the Tower, on purpoſe to vindicate their injur'd Honour; Secondly, to reduce the Lords to a kind of Dilemma, which he thought they would not be able to get clear of, becauſe he offered to be a Witneſs for the Duke of Buckingham, and to clear his Innocence in every Article of his Impeachment. In which caſe they muſt either declare the Duke innocent upon the King's Evidence, or by condemning him openly, reject his Royal Teſtimony; which he imagin'd they would not eaſily be brought to do. But they were not impoſed upon by this Artifice, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

The King was no ſooner departed from the Houſe, but the Commons ſent a Meſſage to the Lords, by Sir Nathaniel Rich, to deſire that the Duke of Buckingham might be taken into Custody; which the Lords durst not comply with, for fear of offending the King.

Resentment of the Commons at the Imprisonment of their Members.

MEAN time the House of Commons look'd upon the Imprisonment of Diggs and Elliot as an express Breach of their Privileges. Sir Dudley Carleton, one of the Court Party, observing the unusual and (as he term'd it) sullen Silence of the House, stood up and justify'd the King for committing those Members, who, he pretended, went beyond their Commission, in speaking of the Plaister and Potion given to the late King; mean time there was not a Word of Truth in what was ascribed to those two Members, except the little Respect they had shewn to the Duke of Buckingham; for Elliot had not mention'd the Plaister or Potion; and the Commons sign'd a Protest, importing that Diggs had said nothing like what he was accused of. Besides this, 36 Lords, who were present at the Conference where the Duke's Impeachment was brought in, attested under their Hands that they did not hear Sir Dudley Diggs speak any such Words. It followed therefore from the Testimony of the Lords, and the Protest of the Commons, either that the King was falsly and maliciously inform'd, or that the Charge against Diggs was invented, in order to have an Opportunity of punishing him for speaking of the Duke in so disrespectful a Manner.

Protest both of Commons and Lords in their Favour.

THE King seeing no way to support what he had done, caused the two imprisoned Members to be released. And on a Complaint and repeated Petitions of the House of Lords, insisting on their Privilege, the Earl of Arundel, whom the King had committed to the Tower, in Breach of it, about the beginning of March last, while the Parliament was sitting, was released June 8, much against his Majesty's Will, when he found that the Lords, to whom he had sent several Messages, were resolv'd to take no other Business into Consideration 'till they had received Satisfaction. The King pretended that the Lords ought not to take Exceptions at his Commitment of this Earl, because he might possibly be guilty of Felony or Treason; and, consequently, the House ought to wait 'till it should please the King to declare the Cause of his Imprisonment; but the Lords plainly saw that the Possibility alledg'd by the King was but an Artifice to elude their most undoubted Privileges; and they argued, that if on Pretence of such Cases, which were very rare, the King could imprison a Peer without the consent of the House, and without declaring the Cause, it would follow, that in all sorts of Cases he might detain the Peer in Custody as long as he pleased, and thereby abridge the Lords of their Privileges.

Their Release.

The Enlargement of the Earl of Arundel committed to the Tower.

Mr. Rapin says, this Earl was committed for speaking too freely in the House; but this does not appear from any other good History, and 'tis conjectur'd, with much more Probability, that it was for his Son's marrying the Duke of Lenox's Sister, whom the King design'd for the Lord Lorn; which is confirm'd by Rushworth and Whitlock, who says, the King signify'd in his Message to the House of Lords upon this Occasion, that he was committed for Personal Misdeameanours against the King, and not for any Matters of Parliament. The Earl we are speaking of had five Proxies, which were lost by his Imprisonment, and no Precedent was found of any Peer's being committed in a Session without the Sentence of Parliament.

BEFORE the Duke of Buckingham had given in his Answer to the Commons Impeachment, he was on the 11th of June, by the King's Interest, elected Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, in the room of the deceas'd Lord Howard, Earl of Suffolk. The House of Commons thought it an Insult on their Proceedings, to choose the Duke whilst under an Impeachment, and when one of the Articles against him was the Plurality of Offices. Besides they argued, that there was a sort of Contradiction in this Election, because the University themselves, by their Representatives in Parliament, had given their consent to the said Impeachment: But the King stifly supported the Election in Spight of the Commons.

The Commons disgusted at the Duke of Buckingham's being chose Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

AT length, on the eighth of June, the Duke gave in his Answer to the Impeachment, which was in such modest humble Terms, that many who expected a more proud and disdainful Defence, were changed into a good Opinion of him: For at the same time that he justify'd himself, he courted them saying, 'That his Accuser, 'Common Fame, was too subtil a Body 'for him to contest with; and he doubted 'not but in Time it would be found that 'Common Fame had abused both Them 'and Him.' As to his particular Answer to the several Articles, which the Reader may see at large in Rushworth, it was distinct and plausible, and seem'd to lay the greatest Stress upon the Knowledge of the King and his Father, and their Direction of the particular Passages; with his Obedience thereto, and to the Advice of the Council. He deny'd 'that he had 20,000*l.* 'of the Earl of Manchester, or 6000 l. 'of the Earl of Middlesex, or 10,000 l. 'of the East-India Company; but said 'the King had those Sums; that the Earl 'of Manchester had Satisfaction by the 'King's Lands for the 20,000*l.* and that 'the 6000 l. was given by the King to Sir 'Henry Mildmay. He absolutely de- 'nied that he apply'd the Plaister, or

'gave the Potion to King James in his 'Sickneſs; but the King knowing that he '(the Duke) had been cur'd of an Ague 'by a Plaiſter and a Drink, the King 'would have them, and took them, ſome 'of his Phyſicians being then preſent, 'and allowing them, and taſting the 'Drink.

UPON the whole, as there was little in the Impeachment beſides what was tranſacted in the Reign of the late King, and ſo not legally cognizable in this, he claimed the Benefit of the General Pardon in the 21ſt of King James, and of this King's Pardon iſſued on his Coronation.

THE Commons having deſir'd a Copy of the Duke's Anſwer, the King wrote the following Letter next Day to the Speaker, to quicken the Houſe about the Supplies.

TRUSTY and WELL-BELOVED, &c.

The King's Letter to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons on the 9th of June, for a ſpeedy Supply.

'OUR Houſe of Commons cannot forget 'how often and how earneſtly we have 'called upon them for the ſpeeding of 'that Aid which they intended us for our 'great and weighty Affairs, concerning 'the Safety and Honour of us and our 'Kingdoms: And now the Time being 'ſo far ſpent, that unleſs it be preſently 'concluded, it can neither bring us 'Money nor Credit by the Time which 'themſelves have prefix'd, which is the 'laſt of this Month, and being farther de'ferr'd, would be of little uſe, we being 'daily advertiſed from all Parts of the 'great Preparations of the Enemy ready 'to aſſail us; We hold it neceſſary by theſe 'our Letters to give them our laſt and fi'nal Admonition, and to let them know, 'that we ſhall account all farther Delays 'and Excuſes to be expreſs Denials. And 'therefore we will and require you to 'ſignify unto them, that we do expect 'they forthwith bring in their Bill of 'Subſidy to be paſſed without Delay or 'Condition, ſo as it may fully paſs the 'the Houſe by the end of the next Week 'at fartheſt; which if they do not, it 'will force us to take other Reſolutions. 'But let them know, if they finiſh this 'according to our Deſire, that we are 'reſolved to let them ſit together for the 'Diſpatch of their other Affairs ſo long 'as the Seaſon will permit, and after their 'Receſs to bring them together again the 'next Winter. And if, by their Denial 'or Delay, any thing of ill Conſequence 'ſhall fall out either at Home or Abroad, 'we call God and Man to witneſs that 'we have done our Part to prevent it, 'by calling our People together to adviſe 'with us, by opening the Weight of our 'Occaſions unto them, and by requiring 'their timely Help and Aſſiſtance in theſe 'Actions, wherein we ſtand engag'd by 'their own Counſels. And we will and 'command you that this Letter be read 'publickly in the Houſe.'

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'Tis manifeſt, ſays Rapin, 'that this 'Letter, written at the Time that the 'Duke of Buckingham's Trial was coming 'on, was a meer Artifice to evade it.' The Commons not thinking fit to comply with the King's Will, and to ſhew the Publick that his Anſwer to the Petition of the Oxford Parliament contain'd only empty Promiſes without Effect, and that the Male-Adminiſtration of the Duke of Buckingham was not the only Grievance which they wanted to be redreſs'd, preſented a freſh Petition to him againſt Popiſh Recuſants, which was as follows:

Rapin's Remark on it.

To the KING's moſt excellent Majeſty,

Commons Petition to the King againſt Recuſants.

'YOUR Majeſty's moſt obedient and 'loyal Subjects the Commons in this pre'ſent Parliament aſſembled, do with great 'Comfort remember the many Teſtimonies 'which your Majeſty hath given of your 'Sincerity and Zeal for the True 'Religion eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom, 'and in particular your Gracious Anſwer 'to both Houſes of Parliament at Ox'ford, upon their Petition concerning the 'Cauſes and Remedies of the Increaſe of 'Popery; that your Majeſty thought fit, 'and would give order to remove from 'all Places of Authority and Government, 'all ſuch Perſons as are either Popiſh Re'cuſants, or, according to Direction of for'mer Acts of State, juſtly to be ſuſpected; 'which was then preſented as a great and 'principal Cauſe of that Miſchief. But 'not having received ſo full Redreſs here'in, as may conduce to the Peace of this 'Church and Safety of this Regal State, 'they hold it their Duty once more to re'ſort to your Sacred Majeſty, humbly to 'inform you, that upon Examination, 'they find the Perſons under-written to 'be either Recuſants, Papiſts, or juſtly 'ſuſpected according to the former Acts 'of State, who now do, or ſince the firſt 'ſitting of the Parliament, did remain in 'Places of Government, and Authority, 'and Truſt, in your ſeveral Counties of 'this your Realm of England and Do'minion of Wales.'

THEN followed a Liſt of fifty-nine Recuſants and ſuſpected Papiſts, who were in Places of Truſt and Authority in ſeveral Counties; among whom were the Earl of Rutland, the Viſcounts Montagu and Dunbar, the Lords Evry, Abergavenny, Tenham, Wotton, Morley, Mordaunt, St. John of Baſing, and Scroop. The reſt were Commoners.

WHEREFORE

'WHEREFORE they humbly beſeech your Majeſty not to ſuffer your loving Subjects to continue any longer diſcouraged by the apparent Senſe of that Increaſe both in Number and Power, which by the Favour and Countenance of ſuch like ill-affected Governours accrueth to the Popiſh Party; but that, according to your own Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Piety, (whereof they reſt aſſured) you will be graciouſly pleaſed to command that Anſwer of your Majeſty's to be effectually obſerved, and the Parties above-named, and all ſuch others, to be put out of ſuch Commiſſions and Places of Authority wherein they now are in your Majeſty's Realm of England, contrary to the Acts and Laws of States in that behalf.'

Rapin's Apology for King Charles's Delay of this Affair.

OUR Author makes ſome Apology for the King in ſuffering his Honour to be ſo often preſs'd to perform what he had ſo poſitively promis'd, becauſe of the Difficulty his Majeſty was under to withſtand the Sollicitations and Intrigues of the Queen, of the D. of Buckingham, whoſe Mother was a profeſs'd Papiſt, of Sir Richard Weſton his chief Counſellor, and of the Lord Conway, Secretary of State, both Papiſts; ſince theſe were the Men by whom he was in a manner always beſet.

A FEW Days after, the Commons reſolved to wait in a Body upon the King, and to preſent to him, by their Speaker, a Declaration of their Conduct, by way of Anſwer to his Letter; as alſo, a Petition to remove the D. of Buckingham from his Perſon. Having leave to attend the King, the Speaker, beforehe preſented thoſe two Papers, made the following Speech to him.

Commons Anſwer to the King's Letter by their Speaker.

Moſt Gracious and Dread Sovereign,

'ACCORDING to that Liberty of Acceſs and Liberty of Speech which your Majeſty and your Royal Progenitors have ever vouchſafed to your Houſe of Commons, your Majeſty's moſt humble and loyal Subjects, the Commons, now aſſembled in Parliament, have been Suitors for this Acceſs to your Royal Throne.

'AND out of their Conſideration of the Nature, and of the Weight and Importance of the Buſineſs, they have thought the Attendance of the whole Houſe, with their Speaker, not too ſolemn; and yet they have not thought fit barely to commit thoſe Words which expreſs their Thoughts, to the Truſt of any Man's Speech, but are bold to preſent them in Writing to your gracious Hands, that they may not vaniſh, but be more laſting than the moſt powerful Words of a more able Speaker are like to be.

'I HAVE much to read, and ſhall therefore as little as I can, weary your Majeſty with Speeches.

'THIS Parchment contains two Things, the one by way of Declaration, to give your Majeſty an Account and humble Satisfaction of their clear and ſincere Endeavours and Intentions in your Majeſty's Service; and the other, an humble Petition to your Majeſty, for the Removal of that great Perſon, the Duke of Buckingham, from Acceſs to your Royal Preſence.

'FOR the firſt, they beſeech your moſt Excellent Majeſty to believe that no earthly Thing is ſo dear and precious to them, as that your Majeſty ſhould retain them in your Grace and good Opinion; and it is Grief to them, beyond my Expreſſion, that any Miſinformation or Miſinterpretation, ſhould at any time render their Words or Proceedings offenſive to your Majeſty.

'IT is not proper for any one to hear the Eccho of a Voice, that hears not the Voice; and if Ecchos be ſometimes heard to double and redouble, the Eccho of the Eccho is ſtill fainter, and ſounds not louder.

'I NEED not make the Application. Words miſreported, though by an Eccho, or but an Eccho of an Eccho, at a third or fourth Hand, have oft a louder Sound than the Voice itſelf, and may ſound Diſloyalty, though the Voice had nothing undutiful or diſloyal in it. Such Miſinformations, they fear, have begot thoſe Interruptions and Diverſions which have delay'd the ripening and expediting of thoſe great Councils which concern your Majeſty's important Service, and have inforced this Declaration.

'I PASS from that to the Petition, in which my Purpoſe is not to urge thoſe Reaſons which your Majeſty may hear expreſſed in their own Words in the Language of the People.

'I AM only directed to offer to your great Wiſdom and deep Judgment, that this Petition of theirs is ſuch as may ſtand with your Majeſty's Honour and Juſtice to grant.

'YOUR Majeſty hath been pleaſed to give many Royal Teſtimonies and Arguments to the World, how good and gracious a Maſter you are; and that which the Queen of Sheba once ſaid to the wiſeſt King, may, without Flattery, be ſaid to your Majeſty, Happy are thoſe Servants which ſtand continually before you.

'BUT the Relations by which your Majeſty ſtands in a gracious Aſpect towards your People, do far tranſcend, and are more prevalent and binding than any Relation of a Maſter towards a Servant; and to hear and ſatisfy the juſt and neceſſary Deſires of your People, is more honourable than any Expreſſion of Grace to a Servant.

To

'To be a Master of a Servant, is communicable to many of your Subjects; 'to be a King of People, is Regal, and incommnicable to Subjects.

'YOUR Majesty is truly stiled with that 'Name which the greatest Emperors, 'though they borrowed Names and Titles 'from those Countries which they gained 'by Conquest, most delighted in, Pater 'Patriæ. And Desires of Children are 'preferred before those of Servants, and 'the Servant abideth not in the House 'for ever, but the Son abidethever.

'THE Government of a King was truly 'termed by your Royal Father, A politick Marriage between him and his People; and I may safely say, there was 'never a better Union between a married 'Pair, than is between your Majesty and 'your People.'

THE King was so displeased, however, both with the Declaration and Petition, that he came to a Resolution to dissolve the Parliament; which was so contraryto the Expectation of the Commons, that as soon as they had intimation of it, they determined to present a Remonstrance to him, of the same Complexion with the Impeachment against the Duke, and concerning the King's taking of Tonnage and Poundage, though not granted him by Parliament. Whilst it was preparing, the Lords being inform'd by the King himself of his Resolution, presented a Petition to him to divert him from his Purpose: But the King would hearken to nothing, and directed a Commission under the Great Seal, by which the Parliament was dissolved on the 15th of June.

Their Resolution to present a Remonstrance.

Parliament dissolv'd.

Cause and Effect of it.

No Body doubted but the Duke of Buckingham's Interest was the sole Cause of this Dissolution; and the Commons were so persuaded of it, that since they were thereby hinder'd from presenting their Remonstrance to the King, they dispers'd Copies of it abroad.

WHAT follows is a genuine Copy of it.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

Commons Remonstrance.

'WE Your loyal and faithful Subjects, 'the Commons, assembled by your Majesty's most Royal Authority in this 'present Parliament, having, with all 'dutiful Affection from the time of our 'first Meeting, earnestly endeavour'd to 'proceed speedily in those Affairs that 'might best and soonest conduce to our 'dispatch of the intended Supply of 'your Majesty's great Designs, to the Enlargement of your Support, and to the 'enabling of ourselves and them whom 'were present, to the full and timely Performance of the same, have, notwithstanding, by reason of diverse Informations, Interruptions, and other Preventions, been hitherto so retarded in the Prosecution of these Affairs, that we now 'thought it a necessary Part of our most 'humble Duties thus to declare both those 'Interruptions, and Preventions, with the 'true original and continual Cause of them; 'as also, our most earnest Devotion of the 'Parliamentary Service of your most excellent Majesty, and of the careful Safety and 'Defence of your Dominions, Crown, and 'Dignity: And we most humbly, therefore, 'beseech your most excellent Majesty, to be 'graciously pleased to cast your Eye on 'some Particulars, that have Relation as 'well to your first Parliament as to this; 'out of which we cannot doubt but that 'your great Goodness may receive most 'ample Satisfaction, touching our most 'loyal and faithful Intentions.

'IN the first Parliament of the first Year 'of your Majesty's most happy Reign 'over us, the Commons then assembled, after they had chearfully presented 'to your Majesty, as the first Fruits of 'their Affections, two entire Subsidies, 'were exceedingly pressed by the Means 'of the Duke of Buckingham, and for 'his own Ends, as we conceive, to enlarge that Supply; which when he conceived would not be there effected, 'he procured, for the same Ends, from 'your Majesty, an Adjourment of the 'Parliament to the City of Oxford; 'where the Commons taking into just Consideration the greatest Mischiefs which 'this Kingdom variously hath suffered, and 'that chiefly by reason of the exorbitant 'Power and frequent Misdoings of the 'said Duke, were entering into a Parliamentary Course of Examination of those 'Mischiefs, Power, and Misdoings: But no 'sooner was there any mention made of his 'Name to this Purpose, but that he, fearing lest his Actions might so have been 'too much laid open to the View of your 'most excellent Majesty, and to the just 'Censure that might then have followed, 'presently, through his Misinformations to 'your Majesty, of the Intentions of your 'said Commons (as we have just Cause 'to believe) procured a Dissolution of 'the said Parliament: and afterwards 'also in the same Year, through diverse 'Misreports made to your Majesty in his 'behalf, touching some Members of the 'said Commons, who had more particularly drawn his Name into just question, and justly professed themselves 'averse to his Ends there, procured (as 'we cannot but conceive) the said Members to be made the Sheriffs of several 'Counties for this Year, that followed, 'to the End that they might have all 'been precluded from being chosen Members of this present Parliament lest they 'should again have therein questioned him; 'and by the like Practice also (as we are 'persuaded) he procured, soon after the 'said

'ſaid Diſſolution, another Member* of 'the ſaid Houſe, becauſe he had juſtly 'profeſſed himſelf againſt his Ends, to be 'ſent as Secretary of your Majeſty's laſt 'Fleet, hereby indeed to puniſh him, by 'ſuch drawing him from his Practice of 'the Law, which was his Profeſſion, un-'der colour of an honourable Employ-'ment.

'IT pleaſed your Majeſty afterwards, 'in February laſt, to call this preſent 'Parliament, wherein, tho' none of thoſe 'whom the ſaid Duke had ſo procured to 'be made High-Sheriffs, have ſat as Mem-'bers, yet we finding in our ſelves the 'like Affection, firſt to the Service of 'your Majeſty, and next to the Good of 'the Commonwealth, we took into ſeri-'ous Conſideration ſeveral Propoſitions, 'how for the Safety and Happineſs of 'your Majeſty's Kingdoms and Allies, 'we might enlarge your Support, add 'to the military Strength without Charge 'to the poorer ſort of your Subjects, and 'give a larger Supply to your Ma-'jeſty, for your inſtant and preſſing Oc-'caſions, than hath ever yet but once 'been given in Parliament: Whereupon, 'for the enabling of ourſelves, and thoſe 'whom we repreſent, we conceive it firſt 'neceſſary to ſearch into the Cauſes of this 'Miſchief which your Kingdom ſuffereth, 'and diverſe of the Grievances which over-'burden your Subjects; without doing of 'which, we could neither be faithful to 'your Majeſty, nor to the Country that 'doth truſt and employ us, as your Roy-'al Father alſo, of bleſſed Memory, ad-'moniſhed the Houſe of Commons in the 'fourth Seſſion of his firſt Parliament. 'In this Conſideration we found that the 'moſt preſſing and comprehenſive Miſ-'chief and Grievance that he ſuffered 'was fundamentally ſettled in the vaſt 'Power and enormous Actions of the ſaid 'Duke, being ſuch, that by reaſon of his 'Plurality of Offices, all gotten by Am-'bition, and ſome for Money, expreſly 'againſt the Laws of your Realm; his 'Breach of Truſt in not guarding the 'Seas; his high Injuſtice in the Admi-'ralty; his Extortion; his delivering 'over the Ships of this Kingdom into the 'Hands of a foreign Prince; his procuring 'the compulſory buying of Honour for 'his own Gain; his unexampled exhauſt-'ing of the Treaſures and Revenues of 'the Kingdom; his tranſcendent Pre-'ſumption of that unhappy applying of 'Phyſick to your Royal Father of bleſſed 'Memory, few Days before his Death, 'and ſome other of his Offences carefully 'and maturely examined by us, we made 'a Parliamentary Charge of the ſame 'Matters and Offences againſt him, to 'the Lords by your Majeſty aſſembled 'in Parliament, there expecting ſome Re-'medy by a ſpeedy Proceeding againſt 'him: But, may it pleaſe your moſt ex-'cellent Majeſty, not only during the 'Time of our Examination of the Mat-'ters and Offences of the ſame Charge, 'we were diverſly interrupted and di-'verted by Meſſages procured, through 'Miſinformation from your Majeſty, which 'with moſt humble Duty and Reverence 'we did ever receive; whence it firſt fell 'out, that ſo not only much Time was 'ſpent amongſt us before the ſame Charge 'was perfected, but alſo within two 'Days next after the ſame Charge was 'tranſmitted by us to the Lords, upon 'untrue and malicious Miſinformations 'privately, and againſt the Priviledge of 'Parliaments, given to your Majeſty of 'certain Words ſuppoſed to have been 'ſpoken by Sir Dudley Diggs and Sir 'John Elliot, Knts. two of the Members 'of our Houſe, in their Service of the 'tranſmitting of the ſaid Charge, both of 'them having been eſpecially employed 'in the Chairs of Committees with us, 'about the Examination of the ſaid Mat-'ters and Offences, they were both by 'your Majeſty's Command committed to 'cloſe Impriſonment in the Tower of Lon-'don, and their Lodgings preſently ſearch-'ed, and their Papers there found pre-'ſently taken away; by reaſon whereof 'not only our known Priviledges of Par-'liament were infringed, but we ourſelves, 'that upon full Hope of ſpeedy Courſe 'of Juſtice againſt the ſaid Duke, were 'preparing with all dutiful Affection to 'proceed to the Diſpatch of the Supply, 'and other Services to your Majeſty, were 'wholly, as the Courſe and Priviledge of 'Parliament binds us, diverted for diverſe 'Days, to the taking only into Conſi-'deration ſome Courſes for the ratifying 'and Preſervation of the Priviledges ſo 'infringed; and we think it our Duties, 'moſt gracious Sovereign, moſt rightly to 'inform hereby your moſt excellent Ma-'jeſty of the Courſe held in the Commit-'ment of the two Members: For where-'as by your Majeſty's Warrant to your 'Meſſengers for the arreſting of them, 'you were pleaſed to command that they 'ſhould repair to their Lodgings, and 'there take them, your Majeſty's Prin-'cipal Secretary, the Lord Conway, gave 'the ſaid Meſſengers (as they affirmed) 'an expreſs Command, contrary to the 'ſaid Warrants, that they ſhould not go 'to their Lodgings, but to the Houſe of 'Commons, and there take them; and if 'they found them not there, they ſhould

'ſtay until they were come into the Houſe, 'and apprehend them whereſoever elſe 'they ſhould find them. Which, beſides 'that, is contrary to your Majeſty's Com-'mand, is an apparent Teſtimony of ſome 'miſchievous Intention there had againſt 'the whole Houſe of Commons, and a-'gainſt the Service intended to your Ma-'jeſty. All which, with the ſeveral In-'terruptions that preceded it, and the 'Miſinformation that hath cauſed all of 'them, we cannot doubt but they were 'wrought, and procured by the Duke, 'to his own Behoof, and for his Advan-'tage, eſpecially becauſe the ſaid Inter-'ruptions have, through Miſinformation, 'come amongſt us only at ſuch Times 'wherein we have had the Matters and 'Offences charged againſt him in Agita-'tion; but your Majeſty, out of your 'great Goodneſs and Juſtice, being after-'wards informed truly of our Priviledge, 'and the Demerit of the Cauſe that con-'cerned our ſaid two Members, graci-'ouſly commanded the Delivery of them 'out of the Tower, for which we render 'unto your Majeſty moſt humble Thanks, 'and were then again, by reaſon of our 'Hopes of the Diſpatch of Proceedings 'with the Lords, upon our Charge againſt 'him the ſaid Duke, in a chearful Pur-'poſe to go on with the Matter of Sup-'ply, and other Services to your Ma-'jeſty, when again theſe Hopes failed in 'us, by reaſon of ſome new Exorbitan-'cies now lately ſhewed in the Exerciſe 'of his ſo great Power and Ambition; 'for by ſuch his Power and Ambition, 'notwithſtanding our Declaration againſt 'him for his ſo great Plurality of Offi-'ces, he alſo procured to himſelf, by the 'Sollicitation of his Agents, and of ſuch 'as depended upon him, the Office of 'Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cam-'bridge; whereas the ſame Univerſity 'having two Burgeſſes in Parliament, did, 'by the ſame Burgeſſes, a few Weeks be-'fore, conſent with us in the Charge 'againſt him for his Ambition, for pro-'curing ſuch a Plurality of Offices; ſuch 'was his Ambition to ſue for it, ſuch was 'his Power to make them give it him, 'contrary to what themſelves had agreed 'in Parliament with all the Commons of 'England. And he procured alſo the 'ſame Office by the ſpecial Labours and 'Endeavours (as we are informed) of a 'factious Party who adhered to that dan-'gerous Innovation of Religion publiſh-'ed the ſeditious Words of one Richard 'Montague, Clerk, of whom it is thence 'alſo, and heretofore upon other Reaſons 'it hath been conceived, that the ſaid 'Duke is, and long hath been an Abettor 'and Protector.

'THESE Actions of the ſaid Duke have 'thus, among us, hindered the Service of 'your Majeſty, by reaſon both of the 'Interruptions that have ſo neceſſarily 'accompanied them, and of the Preven-'tion of our Chearfulneſs, which other-'wiſe had long ſince been moſt effectual-'ly ſhewed in us, that having nothing 'elſe in our Cares, next to our Duty to 'God, but the loyal Service of your Ma-'jeſty, the Safety of your Kingdom, and 'the Subſiſtence of our ſelves, and thoſe 'whom we repreſent, for the Continu-'ance of that Service and Safety: Which 'we cannot hope for, and we beſeech 'your moſt Excellent Majeſty graciouſly 'to receive this our humble and free Pro-'teſtation, that we cannot hope for it 'ſo long as we thus ſuffer under the 'Preſſures of the Power and Ambition 'of the ſaid Duke, and the diverſe and 'falſe Informations ſo given to your Ma-'jeſty on his Behalf, and for his Advan-'tage; eſpecially when we obſerve alſo 'that in ſuch his Greatneſs he preventeth 'the giving of true Information to your 'Majeſty in all things that may any ways 'reflect on his own Miſdoings, to ſhew 'unto your Majeſty the true State of your 'Subjects and Kingdoms, otherwiſe than 'as it may be repreſented for his own 'Ends. And to that Purpoſe alſo hath 'he procured ſo many Perſons depending 'on him, either by Alliance or Advance-'ment to Places of Eminency near your 'ſacred Perſon. Through his Miſinforma-'tions of that kind alſo, and Power, we 'have ſeen, to our great Grief, both in 'the Time of your Majeſty's Royal Fa-'ther, of bleſſed Memory, and of your 'Majeſty, diverſe Officers of the King-'dom ſo often by him diſplaced and al-'tered, that within theſe few Years paſt, 'ſince the Beginning of his Greatneſs, 'more ſuch Diſplacings and Alterations 'have, by his means happened, than in 'many Years before them: Neither was 'there in the Time of your Royal Father, 'of bleſſed Memory, any ſuch Courſe 'held, before it was by the Practice of 'the ſaid Duke thus induced. And ſince 'that Time diverſe Officers of the Crown 'not only in this your Kingdom of Eng-'land, but alſo in Ireland, as they 'have been made Friends, or adverſe to 'the ſaid Duke, have been either ſo com-'mended, or miſrepreſented by him to 'his Sovereign, and by his Procurement 'ſo placed or diſplaced, that he hath al-'ways herein, as much as in him lay, 'made his own Ends and Advantage the 'Meaſure of the Good or Ill of your 'Majeſty's Kingdoms.

'BUT now at length, may it pleaſe your 'moſt Excellent Majeſty, we have re-'ceived from the Lords a Copy of the

'ſaid Duke's Anſwer to our Charge tranſ-
'mitted againſt him; whereunto we ſhall
'preſently in ſuch ſort reply, according 'to the Laws of Parliament, that unleſs
'his Power and Practice again undermine
'our Proceedings, we do not doubt but
'we ſhall upon the ſame have Judgment
'againſt him.

'IN the Times alſo, moſt Gracious So'vereign, of theſe Interruptions which 'came amongſt us, by reaſon of the Pro-
'curement of two of our Members com'mitted, a gracious Meſſage was former'ly received from your Majeſty, wherein
'you had been pleaſed to let us know, that 'if you had not a timely Supply, your 'Majeſty would betake yourſelf to new
'Counſels; which we cannot doubt were 'intended by your moſt Excellent Ma-
'jeſty to be ſuch as ſtood with Juſtice
'and the Laws of this Realm. But theſe
'Words New Counſels, were remembred
'in a Speech made amongſt us by one of 'your Majeſty's Privy Council, and late-
'ly a Member of us, who in the ſame
'Speech told us, he had often thought of 'thoſe Words New Counſels; that 'in his Conſideration of them, he remem-
'bred that there were ſuch kinds of Par-
'liaments anciently among other Nations
'as are now in England: That in En-
'gland he ſaw the Country People live
'in Happineſs and Plenty, but in theſe
'other Nations he ſaw them poor, both
'in Perſons and Habit, or to that 'Effect; which State and Condition hap'pened, as he ſaid, to them where ſuch
'New Counſels were taken, as that the
'Uſe of their Parliaments ended.

'THIS Intimation, may it pleaſe your
'Majeſty, was ſuch as alſo gave juſt Cauſe
'to fear there were ſome ill Miniſters near
'your Majeſty, that in Behalf of the ſaid
'Duke, and together with him who is ſo
'ſtrangely powerful, were ſo much againſt
'the Parliamentary Courſe of this King'dom, as they might perhaps adviſe your
'moſt Excellent Majeſty ſuch New Coun-
'ſels as theſe, that fell under the Memory
'and Conſideration of that Privy Coun-
'ſellor. And one eſpecial Reaſon among 'others hath encreaſed that Fear amongſt
'us; for that whereas the Subſidies of 'Tonnage and Poundage, which deter'mined upon the Death of your moſt
'Royal Father, our late Sovereign, and 'were never payable to any of your 'Majeſty's Anceſtors, but only by a
'ſpecial Act of Parliament, and ought 'not to be levied without ſuch an Act;
'yet ever ſince the Beginning of your
'Majeſty's happy Reign over us, the ſaid
'Subſidies have been levied by ſome of 'your Majeſty's Miniſters, as if they 'were ſtill due; although alſo one Par'liament hath been ſince then begun,
'and diſſolved by Procurement of the 'ſaid Duke, as is before ſhewed, wherein
'no Act paſſed for the ſame Subſidies.
'Which Example is ſo much againſt the 'conſtant Uſe of former Times, and the 'known Right and Liberty of your Sub'jects, that it is an apparent Effect of 'ſome New Counſels given againſt the 'ancient ſettled Courſe of Government
'of this your Majeſty's Kingdom, and
'chiefly againſt the Right of your Com-
'mons, as if there might be any Subſidy,
'Tax, or Aid levied upon them without 'their Conſent in Parliament, or contrary
'to the ſettled Laws of this Kingdom.
'But if any ſuch do ſo ill an Office, as by 'the Miſrepreſentation of the State and
'Right of your Majeſty's loyal Subjects,
'adviſe any ſuch New Counſels as the 'levying any Aid, Tax, or Subſidy,
'among your People, contrary to the ſet-
'tled Laws of your Kingdom, we can'not, moſt Gracious Sovereign, but 'eſteem them that ſhall ſo adviſe, not 'only as Vipers, but Peſts to their King
'and Commonwealth (as all ſuch were to
'both Houſes of Parliament expreſly
'ſtiled by your moſt Royal Father)
'but alſo capital Enemies, as well to 'your Crown and Dignity, as to the 'Commonwealth. And we ſhall for our 'Parts in Parliament ſhew, as Occaſion
'ſhall require, and be ready to declare
'their Offences of this kind, ſuch as that 'may be rewarded with the higheſt Pu-
'niſhment as your Laws inflict on any 'Offenders.

'THESE, and ſome of theſe Things,
'amongſt many other, moſt Gracious So-
'vereign, are thoſe which have ſo much
'prevented a right Underſtanding between 'your Majeſty and us, and which have
'poſſeſſed the Hearts of your People and 'loyal Commons with unſpeakable Sor-
'row and Grief, finding apparently all
'humble and hearty Endeavours miſin-
'terpreted, hindered, and now at laſt
'almoſt fruſtrated utterly, by the Inter-
'poſition of the exceſſive and abuſive Pow'er of one Man; againſt whom we have
'juſt Cauſe to proteſt, not only in regard
'of the Particulars wherewith he hath been 'charged, which in a Parliamentary Way
'we are forc'd to inſiſt upon, as Matters
'which lie in our Notice and Proof, but
'alſo becauſe we apprehend him of ſo
'unbridled Ambition, and ſo averſe
'to the Good and Tranquillity of the 'Church and State, that we verily be'lieve him to be an Enemy to both. And 'therefore unleſs we would betray our 'own Duties to your Majeſty and thoſe
'from whom we are truſted, we cannot 'but expreſs our infinite Grief, that he
'ſhould have ſo great Power and Intereſt
'in your Princely Affections, and under

'your Majeſty wholly in a manner to engroſs to himſelf the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of your Kingdom.

'GIVE us then leave, moſt Dear Sovereign, in the Name of all your Commons of this your Kingdom, proſtrate at the Feet of your moſt Sacred Majeſty, moſt humbly to beſeech you, even for the Honour of Almighty God, whoſe Religion is directly undermined by the Practice of that Party whom this Duke ſupports; for your Honour, which will be much advanced in the relieving of your People in this their great and general Grievance; for the Honour, Safety and Welfare of your Kingdom, which by this Means is threaten'd with almoſt unavoidable Dangers; and for the Love which your Majeſty, as a good and loving Father, bears unto your good People, by whom we profeſs, in the Preſence of Almighty God, the Searcher of all Hearts, you are as highly eſteem'd and belov'd as ever any of your Predeceſſors were, that you would be graciouſly pleaſed to remove this Perſon from Acceſs to your Sacred Preſence, and that you would not balance this one Man with all theſe Things, and with the Affairs of the Chriſtian World, which do all ſuffer as far as they have relation to this Kingdom, chiefly by his Means. For we proteſt to your Majeſty, and to the whole World, that until this great Perſon be removed from intermedling with the great Affairs of State, we are out of hope of any good Succeſs; and do fear that any Money we ſhall or can give, will, through his Miſemployment, be turned rather to the Hurt and Prejudice of this your Kingdom, than otherwiſe, as by lamentable Experience we have found, in thoſe large Supplies we have formerly and lately given.

'BUT no ſooner ſhall we receive Redreſs and Relief in this (which of all others is our moſt inſupportable Grievance) but we ſhall forthwith proceed to accompliſh your Majeſty's own Deſire, for Supply, and likewiſe with all Chearfulneſs apply ourſelves to the perfecting of diverſe other great Things, ſuch as we think no one Parliament in one Age can parallel, tending to the Stability, Wealth, and Strength, and Honour of this your Kingdom, and the Support of your Friends and Allies abroad: And we doubt not but, through God's Bleſſing, as you are the beſt, ſo ſhall you ever be the beſt beloved, and greateſt Monarch that ever ſat on the Royal Throne of this famous Kingdom.'

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

In order to enable the impartial Reader to form a clearer Notion of the Springs and Cauſes of the Diviſions between the King and the Parliament through the whole Courſe of this Reign, as we have inſerted the Remonſtrance of the Commons, 'tis neceſſary that he ſhould likewiſe ſee the following Paper, which was publiſhed by his Majeſty's Order, bearing Date at Whitehall the 30th of June †, to take off the Diſcontents and Murmurs of the People.

The King's Declaration. Of the Cauſes of aſſembling and diſſolving the two laſt Parliaments.

'THE King's moſt excellent Majeſty, 'ſince his happy Acceſs to the Imperial 'Crown of this Realm, having by his 'Royal Authority, ſummon'd and aſſem-'bled two ſeveral Parliaments; the Firſt 'whereof was in Auguſt laſt by Ad-'journment held at Oxford, and there 'diſſolved; and the other begun in Fe-'bruary laſt, and continued 'till the 15th 'Day of this preſent Month of June, 'and then, to the unſpeakable Grief of 'himſelf and (as he believeth) of all his 'good and well affected Subjects, diſſol-'ved alſo: Although he well knoweth 'that the Calling, Adjourning, Proro-'guing, and Diſſolving of Parliaments, be-'ing his Great Council of the Kingdom, 'do peculiarly belong unto himſelf by 'an undoubted Prerogative inſeparably 'united to his Imperial Crown; of which, 'as of his other Royal Actions, he is not 'bound to give an Account to any but 'God only, whoſe immediate Lieutenant 'and Vicegerent he is in theſe Realms 'and Dominions by the Divine Providence 'committed to his Charge and Govern-'ment: Yet foraſmuch as by the Aſſiſ-'tance of the Almighty, his Purpoſe is 'ſo to order himſelf and all his Actions, 'eſpecially in the great and publick Acti-'ons of State concerning the Weal of 'his Kingdoms, as may juſtify themſelves 'not only to his own Conſcience, and to 'his own People, but to the whole World; 'his Majeſty hath thought it fit and ne-'ceſſary, as the Affairs now ſtand both at 'Home and Abroad, to make a true, 'plain, and clear Declaration of the 'Cauſes which moved his Majeſty to aſ-'ſemble, and after enforced him to diſſolve 'theſe Parliaments, that ſo the Mouth of 'Malice itſelf may be ſtopped, and the 'Doubts and Fears of his own good Sub-'jects at home, and of his Friends and 'Allies abroad, may be ſatisfy'd, and the 'deſerved Blame of ſo unhappy Accidents 'may juſtly light upon the Authors there-'of.

'WHEN his Majeſty, by the Death of his Dear and Royal Father, of ever

† Mr. Rapin, or his Printer, has, by Inadvertence, dated this Piece the 13th of June, both at the Beginning and the End of it, and his Copy of it is very imperfect.

Fœdera Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'Blessed Memory, first came to the Crown, he found himself engaged in a War with a potent Enemy not undertaken rashly, nor without just and honourable Grounds, but enforced for the necessary Defence of himself and his Dominions, for the Support of his Friends and Allies, for the redeeming of the ancient Honour of this Nation, for the recovering of the Patrimony of his Dear Sister, her Consort and their Children, injuriously and under Colour of Treaties and Friendship taken from them, and for the Maintenance of the true Religion, and invited thereunto, and encouraged therein by the humble Advice of both the Houses of Parliament, and by their large Promises and Protestations to his late Majesty, to give him full and real Assistance in those Enterprises which were of so great Importance to this Realm, and to the General Peace and Safety of all his Friends and Allies: But when his Majesty enter'd into a View of his Treasure, he found how ill provided he was to proceed effectually with so great an Action, unless he might be assured to receive such Supplies from his loving Subjects as might enable him to manage the same.

'Hereupon his Majesty being willing to tread in the Steps of his Royal Progenitors, for the making of good and wholesome Laws for the better Government of his People, for the right understanding their true Grievances, and for the Supply of Monies to be employ'd for those publick Services, he did resolve to summon a Parliament with all convenient Speed he might; and finding a former Parliament already called in the Life of his Father, he was desirous, for the speedier Dispatch of his weighty Affairs, and gaining of Time, to have continued the same without any Alteration of the Members thereof, had he not been advised to the contrary by his Judges and Council at Law; for that it had been subject to Question in Law, which he desired to avoid. But as soon as possibly he could, he summoned a new Parliament, which he did with much Confidence and Assurance of the Love of his People, that those (who not long before had with some Importunity won his Father to break off his former Treaties with Spain, and to effect it, had used the Mediation of his now Majesty, being then Prince, and a Member of the Parliament, and had promised in Parliament their uttermost Assistance for the enabling his late Majesty to undergo the War which they then foresaw might follow) would assuredly have performed it to his now Majesty, and would not have suffer'd him in his first Enterprize of so great an Expectation to have run the least Hazard through their Defaults.

'This Parliament (after some Adjournment, by reason of his Majesty's unavoidable Occasions interposing) being assembled on the 18th Day of June, it is true that his Commons in Parliament taking into their due and serious Consideration the manifold Occasions which at his first Entry did press his Majesty, and his most important Affairs which both at Home and Abroad were then in Action, did, with great Readiness and Alacrity, as a Pledge of their most bounden Duty and Thankfulness, and as the First-Fruits of the most dutiful Affections of his Loving and Loyal Subjects, devoted to his Service, present his Majesty with the free and chearful Gift of two entire Subsidies; which their Gift, and much more the Freeness and Heartiness expressed in the giving thereof, his Majesty did thankfully and lovingly accept. But when he had more narrowly enter'd into the Consideration of his great Affairs, wherein he was embarked, and from which he could not, without much Dishonour and Disadvantage, withdraw his Hand, he found that this Sum of Money was much short of that which must of Necessity be presently expended, for the setting forward of those great Actions which, by Advice of his Council, he had undertaken, and were that Summer to be pursued. This his Majesty imparted to his Commons House of Parliament; but before the same could receive that Debate and due Consideration which was fit, the fearful Visitation of the Plague in and about the Cities of London and Westminster, where the Lords and the principal Gentlemen of Quality of his whole Kingdom were, for the Time of this their Service, lodged and abiding, did so much encrease, that his Majesty, without extreme Peril to the Lives of his good Subjects, which were dear unto him, could not continue the Parliament any longer in that Place.

'His Majesty therefore, on the 11th Day of July then following, adjourned the Parliament from Westminster until the first Day of August then following, at the City of Oxford. And his Highness was so careful to accommodate his Lords and Commons there, that as he made choice of that Place, being then the freest of all others from the Danger of that grievous Sickness, so he there fitted the Parliament Men with all Things convenient for their Entertainment: And his Majesty himself being in his own Heart sincere and free from all Ends upon his People, which the Searcher of Hearts best knoweth, he

'little

'little expected that any Misconstruction 'of his Actions would have been made, 'as he there found. But when the Parliament had been a while assembled, and 'his Majesty's Affairs open'd unto them, 'and a farther Supply desired, as Necessity requir'd, he found them so slow, and 'so full of Delays and Diversions in their 'Resolutions, that before any thing could 'be determined, the fearful Contagion 'daily encreased, and was dispersed into 'all Parts of this Kingdom, and came 'Home even to their Doors where they 'assembled. His Majesty therefore rather 'preferred the Safety of his People from 'that present and visible Danger, than the 'providing for that which was more remote, but no less dangerous to the State 'of this Kingdom, and of the Affairs of 'that Part of Christendom which then 'were, and yet are, in Friendship and Alliance with his Majesty. And thereupon 'his Majesty, not being then able to discern 'when it might please God to stay his 'Hand of Visitation, nor what Place might 'be more secure than other, at a time convenient for their reassembling, his Majesty dissolv'd that Parliament.

'THAT Parliament being now ended, his 'Majesty did not therewith cast off his 'Royal Care of his great and important 'Affairs; but, by the Advice of his Privy-Council, and of his Council of War, 'he continued his Preparations and former 'Resolutions; and therein not only expended those Monies which by the two 'Subsidies aforesaid were given unto him 'for his own private Use, whereof he had 'too much Occasion, as he found the State 'of his Exchequer at his first Entrance, 'but added much more of his own, as 'by his Credit and the Credit of some of 'his Servants, he was able to compass the 'same. At last by much Disadvantage, 'by the retarding of Provisions and Uncertainty of the Means, his Navy was 'prepared and set to Sea, and the Designs 'unto which they were sent, and especially directed, were so probable, and so 'well advised, that had they not miscarried in the Execution, his Majesty is well 'assured they would have given good 'Satisfaction, not only to his own People, 'but to all the World, that they were not 'lightly and unadvisedly undertaken and 'pursued. But it pleased God, who is 'the Lord of Hosts, and unto whose Providence and good Pleasure his Majesty 'doth, and shall submit himself and all 'his Endeavours, not to give that Success 'which was desired: And yet were those 'Attempts not altogether so fruitless as the 'Envy of the Times hath apprehended, 'the Enemy receiving thereby no small 'Loss, nor our Party no little Advantage.

'And it would much avail to further his 'Majesty's great Affairs, and the Peace 'of Christendom, which ought to be the 'true End of all Hostility, were these 'first Beginnings, which are most subject 'to miscarry, well seconded and pursued, 'as his Majesty intended, and as in the 'Judgment of all Men, conversant in 'Actions of this Nature, were fit not to 'have been neglected.

'THESE things being thus acted, and 'God of his infinite Goodness, beyond 'Expectation, asswaging the Rage of the 'Pestilence, and, in a manner, of a sudden 'restoring Health and Safety to the Citizens of London and Westminster, which 'are the fittest Places for the Resort of his 'Majesty, his Lords and Commons to 'meet in Parliament; his Majesty, in the 'Depth of Winter, no sooner descried 'the Probability of a safe assembling of 'his People, and in his Princely Wisdom 'and Providence foresaw, that if the Opportunity of Seasons should be omitted, 'Preparations both offensive and defensive 'could not be made in such sort as was 'requisite for their common Safety, but 'he advised and resolved on the Summoning of a new Parliament, where he 'might freely communicate the Necessities of the State, and by the Counsel and 'Advice of the Lords and Commons 'in Parliament, who were the representative Body of the whole Kingdom, 'and the great Council of the Realm, 'might proceed in these Enterprises, and 'be enabled thereunto, which concern the 'common Good, Safety and Honour both 'of Prince and People; and accordingly, on the 6th of February last, a new 'Parliament was begun. At the first 'Meeting, his Majesty did forbear to press 'them with any thing which might have 'the least appearance of his own Interest, 'but recommended unto them the Care of 'making good Laws, which are the ordinary Subject for a Parliament.

'HIS Majesty believing that they could 'not have suffer'd many Days, much less 'many Weeks, to have passed by, before 'the Apprehension and Care of the common Safety of this Kingdom, and the 'true Religion professed and maintained 'therein, and of our Friends and Allies, 'who must prosper or suffer with us, 'would have led them to a due and timely Consideration of all the Means which 'might best conduce to those Ends; which 'the Lords of the Higher House, by a 'Committee of that House, did timely and 'seasonably consider of, and invited the 'Commons to a Conference concerning 'that great Business: At which Conference there were open'd unto them the 'great Occasions that pressed his Majesty;

'which making no Impreſſion with them, 'his Majeſty did firſt by Meſſage, and 'after by Letters, put the Houſe of Commons in mind of that which was moſt 'neceſſary, the Defence of the Kingdom, 'and due and timely Preparations for the 'ſame.

'THE Commons Houſe after this, upon 'the 27th of March laſt, with one unanimous Conſent, at firſt agreed to give unto 'his Majeſty three entire Subſidies, and 'three Fifteens for a preſent Supply 'unto him; and upon the 26th of April 'after, upon ſecond Cogitations, they 'added a fourth Subſidy, and ordered 'the Days of Payment for them all, where-'of the firſt ſhould have been on the laſt 'Day of this preſent June. Upon this 'the King of Denmark and other Princes and States being engaged with his 'Majeſty in this common Cauſe, his 'Majeſty fitted his Occaſions according to 'the Times which were appointed for the 'Payment of thoſe Subſidies and Fifteens, 'and haſten'd on the Lords Committees 'and his Council of War, to perfect their 'Reſolutions for the ordering and ſettling 'of his Deſigns; which they accordingly 'did, and brought them to that Maturity, 'that they found no Impediment to a final Concluſion of their Councils, but 'want of Money to put Things into Action. His Majeſty hereupon, who had 'with much Patience expected the real 'Performance of that which the Commons had promiſed, finding the Time 'of the Year poſting away, and having 'Intelligence not only from his own Miniſters and Subjects in Foreign Parts, but 'from all Parts of Chriſtendom, of 'the great and powerful Preparations of 'the King of Spain, and that his Deſign 'was upon this Kingdom, or the Kingdom 'of Ireland, or both (and it is hard to determine which of them would be of worſe 'Conſequence) he acquainted the Houſe 'of Commons therewith, and laid open 'unto them truly and clearly how the 'State of Things then ſtood, and yet ſtand, 'and at ſeveral Times, and upon ſeveral 'Occaſions reiterated the ſame. But that 'Houſe being abuſed by the violent and ill adviſed Paſſions of a few 'Members of the Houſe, for private 'and perſonal Ends, ill beſeeming publick Perſons, truſted by their Country, 'as then they were, not only neglected, 'but wilfully refuſed to hearken to all 'the gentle Admonitions which his Majeſty could give them, and neither did, nor 'would intend any thing but the Proſecution of one of the Peers of this Realm, 'and that in ſuch a diſorder'd Manner, as 'being ſet at their own Inſtance into a 'legal Way, wherein the Proofs on either 'Part would have ruled the Cauſe, which 'his Majeſty allowed, they were not therewith content, but in their intemperate 'Paſſions and Deſires to ſeek for Errors 'in another, fell into a greater Error themſelves, and not only neglected to give 'juſt Satisfaction to his Majeſty in ſeveral 'Caſes which happen'd concerning his 'Regality, but wholly forgot their Engagements to his Majeſty for the publick 'Defence of the Realm: Whereupon his 'Majeſty wrote the ('foremention'd) 'Letter to the Speaker, dated the 9th Day 'of June, 1626.

'NOTWITHSTANDING which Letter read 'in the Houſe, being a clear and gracious 'Manifeſt of his Majeſty's Reſolutions, they 'never ſo much as admitted one Reading 'to the Bill of Subſidies, but inſtead 'thereof they prepared and voted a Remonſtrance or Declaration, which they 'intended to prefer to his Majeſty, containing, though palliated with gloſſing 'Terms, as well many diſhonourable Aſperſions upon his Majeſty, and upon the 'ſacred Memory of his deceaſed Father, 'as alſo dilatory Excuſes for their not proceeding with the Subſidies, adding thereto alſo coloured Conditions, croſſing 'thereby his Majeſtys Direction; which 'his Majeſty underſtanding, and eſteeming (as he had Cauſe) to be a Denial of 'the promiſed Supply, and finding that 'no Admonitions could move, no Reaſons 'or Perſuaſions could prevail, when the 'Time was ſo far ſpent that they had put 'an Impoſſibility upon themſelves to perform their Promiſes, when they eſteemed all gracious Meſſages to them to be 'but Interruptions; his Majeſty upon 'mature Adviſement, diſcerning that all 'farther Patience would prove fruitleſs, 'on the 15th Day of this preſent Month 'he hath diſſolved this unhappy Parliament; the acting whereof, as it was to 'his Majeſty an unexpreſſible Grief, ſo 'the Memory thereof doth renew the 'hearty Sorrow which all his good and 'well affected Subjects will compaſſionate 'with him.

'THESE Paſſages his Majeſty hath at the 'more Length, and with the true Circumſtances thereof, expreſſed and publiſhed to the 'World, leſt that which has been unfortunate in itſelf, through the Malice of 'the Author of ſo great a Miſchief, and 'the malevolent Report of ſuch as are 'ill-affected to this State, or the true Religion here profeſſed, or the Fears or Jealouſies of Friends and Dutiful Subjects, 'might be made more unfortunate in the 'Conſeqences of it, which may be of worſe 'Effect than at the firſt can be well apprehended; and his Majeſty being beſt 'privy to the Integrity of his own Heart 'for the conſtant maintaining of the Sincerity and Unity of the true Religion

CHARLES I. Anno 1626.

'professed in the Church of England, and to free it from the open Contagion of Popery and secret Infection of Schism, of both which, by his publick Acts and Actions he hath given good Testimony, and with a single Heart, as in the Presence of God, who can best judge thereof, purposeth resolutely and constantly to proceed in the due Execution of either; and observing the Subtilty of the adverse Party, he cannot but believe that the Hand of Joab hath been in this Disaster, that the common Incendiaries of Christendom have subtilly and secretly insinuated those things, which unhappily, and, as his Majesty hopeth, beyond the Intentions of the Actors, have caused these Diversions and Distractions: And yet notwithstanding his most excellent Majesty, for the Comfort of his good and well-affected Subjects, in whose Loves he doth repose himself with Confidence, and esteemeth it as his greatest Riches; for the assuring of his Friends and Allies, with whom, by God's Assistance he will not break in the Substance of what he hath undertaken; for the discovering of his Adversaries, and the Adversaries of his Cause, and of his Dominions, and Religion, hath put on this Resolution, which he doth hereby publish to all the World, That as God hath made him King of this Great People and large Dominions, famous in former Ages both by Land and Sea, and trusted him to be a Father and Protector both of their Persons and Fortunes, and a Defender of the Faith, and true Religion, so he will go on chearfully and constantly in the Defence thereof, and notwithstanding so many Difficulties and Discouragements, will take his Sceptre and Sword into his Hands, and not expose the Persons of the People committed to his Charge, to the unsatiable Desires of the King of Spain, who hath long thirsted after an universal Monarchy, nor their Consciences to the Yoke of the Pope of Rome; and that at home he will take that Care to redress the Grievances of his good Subjects, as shall be every way fit for a good King.

'And in the mean time his Majesty doth publish this to all his loving Subjects, that they may know what to think with Truth, and speak with Duty of his Majesty's Actions and Proceedings in these two last dissolved Parliaments.

Proclamations against the Remonstrance and Arminianism.

A few Days after the publishing of the Declaration two Proclamations were published, one for burning all Copies of the Remonstrance that could be found, and another against disputing or preaching on the controverted Points of Arminianism: Mean while an Information in the Star-Chamber was preferred by the King's special Command against the Duke of Buckingham, for the Matters contained in the Articles of Impeachment; to which the Duke put in his Answer, and Witnesses were examined, but the Cause came not to a Hearing.

The King's Shifts to raise Money.

The King being at this time in great straits for Money, had recourse to several Expedients to raise it, of which we shall just mention these Three:

1. A Loan from every Peer. The Reader will meet with an ample Account of this Article, when we come to the several Acts of this Tome which relate to the History.

2. An Imposition upon the several Ports and maritime Counties, to furnish and set out a certain Number of Ships to protect the Trade. The City of London having refused to lend the King Money, was appointed to equip twenty Ships, or at least to procure a sufficient Sum for it. As this was a Tax peculiar to the Sea-Coast Towns, many of the Inhabitants withdrew elsewhere, but they were commanded by Proclamation to return to their respective Towns.

3. The Council strictly ordered the Payment of Tonage and Poundage to be continued, though the King had yet no Grant of it from the Parliament, though he had never desired it of them, and tho' the Commons in their Remonstrance had complained of it as a Grievance.

Proclamation for a Fast.

And to make the People believe that it was pure Necessity which put the King upon those extraordinary Methods to raise Money, his Majesty order'd a Fast in London, &c. on the 5th of July, and another throughout the Kingdom, on the 2d of August, to divert the Judgments of God ready to fall on the Kingdom by the threatned Invasion. This also afforded him a Pretence to require the Lords Lieutenants of the several Counties to muster and arm the Militia, and put them in a Condition to withstand the Invasion of Enemies from abroad, and quell the Rebellions of the Subjects at home, if any should happen; for the Court was under some Fears of Commotions.

Anno 1627.

As we enter this Year it will not be amiss to take notice of the present State of the King's Affairs at home and abroad.

State of Affairs.

The ill Success of the War which the King had undertaken for the Recovery of the Palatinate, and of the Expedition against Cadiz and the Spanish Plate-Fleet, Count Tilly's Defeat of the King of Denmark, who had taken up Arms in behalf of the Elector Palatine and the Protestant Princes of Germany, notwithstanding the Aid of six thousand Men sent from England; the weak Condition of the united Provinces of the Low Countries that were in Alliance with England, and the Backwardness of Lewis XIII of France, after he had made a Peace with the Spaniards ards in Italy, to join in a League with England for the Recovery of the Palatinate, are mentioned by Rapin as ſome of the Obſtructions to the Project which the King and his Miniſters had formed for eſtabliſhing Arbitrary Power; and to theſe he adds the Contempt that he had incurred from his Neighbours, as well as the Hatred of his People, by his Diſſolution of his two firſt Parliaments without obtaining the Aids he expected; and the Difficulty he was under with reſpect to the Loan-money, which came in ſo ſlowly that there was a Neceſſity of uſing Violence to raiſe it, and withal to temper that Violence in ſuch a manner that it might not cauſe a general Rebellion. 'At 'the ſame time, ſays another Author, 'the Sound was in danger of being loſt 'by the Defeat of Count Tilly, the En- 'gliſh Garriſon at *Stroade, or Stoadt, 'about twenty Miles from Hamburgh, 'on the other Side the Elbe, was ſtraitly 'beſieged, and our Eaſt-Land Trade and 'Staple at Hamburgh were almoſt given 'up for gone.

NEVERTHELESS, it appears from Whitlock that about this time the Earl of Denbigh had one hundred Sail of Ships under his Command in our Seas, but had no Commiſſion to fight, and ſuffered diverſe Engliſh Veſſels to be taken away by our Enemies in his View, without Reſcue by their Countrymen; and ſeveral Ships taken for Prize being brought before him as Admiral, almoſt all of them were by him adjudged to be no Prize, and ſo releaſed.

IT being the Intereſt of the King's Favourite and Miniſters to keep him at Variance with his People, to whom they were all very odious, they could not do it better than by putting him under an indiſpenſible Neceſſity of raiſing Money upon the Subject without Conſent of Parliament. Conſequently, inſtead of perſwading the King to make Peace with Spain, they engaged him in a War againſt France, at a Juncture when he knew not how to continue that which he had begun with the Houſe of Auſtria.

War entered into with France.

Cauſes of it.

VARIOUS were the Cauſes or Pretences alledged for this War, which it will not be amiſs to mention.

DISTASTES and Jealouſies were raiſed about the Government of the Queen's Family; wherein the King held himſelf traduced by ſome of the French Servants, who ſaid, That the King being a Heretick had nothing to do with them. The Queen inſiſted upon it as part of the Articles of Marriage, That ſhe ſhould name all her Servants, and ſome Unkindneſs aroſe upon it. The King was alſo offended, that her Prieſts made the Queen walk to Tyburn on Penance. Upon theſe Paſſages the King diſmiſſed and ſent back to France all her Chaplains and Domeſticks, to the Number of one hundred and twenty, having firſt paid them their Wages or Salaries: And though he made an Apology for it to the King of France (by Lord Carlton, whom he diſpatched thither for that Purpoſe) the latter highly reſented it, as a manifeſt Breach of the Marriage-Treaty; but, however, he did nothing that might make it be thought he intended to be revenged by way of Arms. At the ſame time there was an Abbot here in Diſfavour with Cardinal Richlieu, who, to put an Affront upon the Cardinal, fomented a War; and Mr. Walter Montagu is ſaid to have furthered it, on pretence of ſupporting the Hugonots in France, who were then oppreſſed and threatened with utter Deſtruction.

ANOTHER Cauſe which is aſſigned by Lord Clarendon, was the Pride of the Duke of Buckingham, who being ſent to Paris to conduct the Queen to England, fell in Love with Anne of Auſtria, Wife to Lewis XIII, and had the Confidence to let her know his Paſſion. It is ſaid the Court of France threatened him with a Puniſhment adequate to his Preſumption, and refuſed to let him ſee the Queen any more, but that he ſwore he would ſee her in ſpite of them; to which Oath is aſcribed the Reſolution he made the King his Maſter take to enter into a War againſt France, in hopes it would give him an Opportunity to perform what he had ſworn.

A MORE modern Author tells us, that the Duke of Buckingham having a paſſionate Deſire to renew his Viſit to Q. Anne of Auſtria, got the Queen of England to write to the French Court, that as he had obtained Leave for her to return to France, he might alſo have Leave to accompany her thither, on pretence of compoſing the Difference between the two Crowns by Treaty; and that being denied this Requeſt, he, in Revenge, put King Charles upon this War.

THE Grounds of the War, as they were declared by the King to his Council, after it was reſolved upon, were theſe, viz. The King's Declaration thereof to his Council.

I. That the Houſe of Auſtria had ſuch an Influence upon the Council of France, as to prevail with them to obſtruct the Landing of Count Mansfeld's Army, contrary to Promiſe, with whom the French ſhould have joined Forces for the Relief of the Palatinate; which Failure of Performance in them proved the Ruin of their Army.

II. THAT having by his Mediation prevailed for a Peace between the French King and his Proteſtant Subjects, and engaged his Word that the Proteſtants ſhould obſerve the Articles of Agreement; ne-

* In the Month of May Sir Charles Morgan, who had defended this Place with the utmoſt Bravery and Reſolution, ſurrendered it to the Imperialiſts upon honourable Terms.

vertheleſs

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. vertheleſs the King of France, contrary to the ſaid Articles, blocked up their Towns, Garriſons, and Forts, and had committed many Spoils upon them, whereas they had done nothing on their Part in Violation of the Edict of Peace.

III. THAT the King of France had committed an Example of great Injuſtice in full Peace, to ſeize upon 120 Engliſh Ships, with all their Merchandize and Artillery.

Remarks on it. MR. Rapin has made ſome curſory Obſervations upon each of theſe, which are worth attending to.

As to the Firſt, having ſhewn in the Reign of King James that the Council of England was to blame for depending on a general Promiſe, as much as on a Treaty, he obſerves it was ſomewhat of the lateſt for the King to think of revenging this pretended Affront, after he had ſo long put it up by marrying the French King's Siſter.

As to the Second Cauſe, though he owns it was the Intereſt of England to ſupport the Hugonots in France, who were unjuſtly oppreſſed, he queſtions, By what Law is a Prince, who makes a Peace between two Enemies, but is not Guarantee for Performance of Articles on both ſides, empowered to go to War with either of the Parties that breaks it?

AND as to the Third he obſerves, that the King does not take the leaſt Notice that the French acted only by way of Repriſal, and that the Engliſh were the Aggreſſors, as the Parliament had complained to the King himſelf.

Duke of Buckingham's Expedition to Rochel. WHATEVER were the real, or pretended Cauſes of the War, a Fleet conſiſting of above an hundred Ships (whereof only ten were Men of War) which had been equipping ever ſince April for ſome very ſecret Expedition, ſailed from Portſmouth the 27th of June with ſeven thouſand Soldiers on Board, and on the 20th of July appeared before Rochel, under the Conduct of the Duke of Buckingham, who was appointed Admiral and Commander in Chief. At his Approach, the Rochellers having no Notice before-hand of the coming of an Engliſh Fleet, ſhut their Gates for fear of a Surprize. Upon this the Duke ſent Sir William Beecher on Shore, accompanied by the Duke of Soubize, and furniſhed with Credentials from his Majeſty of Great-Britain: With ſome Difficulty they were admitted into the Town, and the Magiſtrates, for their more ſolemn Reception, called an Aſſembly, in which Sir William Beecher ſpoke to this Effect; 'That the Duke of 'Buckingham was come with a great 'Fleet and Army to their Aſſiſtance, 'which his Royal Maſter had ſent out of 'a fellow-feeling of their Sufferings, to 'require from the King of France a Per- 'formance of the late Articles of Peace 'made by the King of England's Medi- 'ation, on Behalf of the Proteſtants in 'France; and that if they ſhould now 'refuſe to accept the Deliverance offered 'to them, he muſt proteſt before God and 'Man, in the Name of the King his Maſ- 'ter, that his ſaid Maſter was fully clear- 'ed of his Engagements upon Honour 'and Conſcience for their Relief.

Rochellers fearful to admit the Engliſh;

yet call an Aſſembly to hear Sir William Beecher's Meſſage.

THIS Declaration was ſeconded by the earneſt Sollicitations of their Friend and Countryman the Duke of Soubize: But the Magiſtrates and chief Inhabitants were poſſeſſed with ſuch a Fear of the King of France, whoſe Army was then upon a March againſt them, and were many of them ſo influenced by a Court-Party in the Town, that they dared to give no better Anſwer than this of Sufferance and Forbearance. The Mayor, who ſpoke in the Name of the Inhabitants, ſaid, 'That 'they rendered all humble and hearty 'Thanks to his Majeſty of Great-Britain 'for the Care he had of them, and to the 'Duke for his Forwardneſs and Readineſs 'to do his beſt Service for their Good. 'But they were bound by Oath of Union 'to do nothing without the common Con- 'ſent of the reſt of their Proteſtant Bre- 'thren in France: And therefore they 'muſt pray the King of Great-Britain 'to excuſe them in deferring the Con- 'junction of their Forces 'till they had 'ſent to the reſt of the Proteſtant Towns 'who were of the Union with them. 'And in the mean time their Prayers and 'Vows ſhould be for the happy Pro- 'greſs of ſuch Actions as the Fleet and 'Army ſhould undertake.'

The Rochellers ſtill timorous.

The Mayor's Speech.

BEFORE the Duke of Soubize went from the Engliſh Fleet to the Town, the Duke of Buckingham acquainted him, that as he thought it would be no eaſy matter to get his Forces into Rochel, he intended to make a Deſcent at the Iſle of Oleron, which Soubize approved of, the French Forces in that Iſland being few, and the Forts weakly mann'd and victualled, diſſwading him at the ſame time from any Thoughts of landing upon the Iſle of Rhee, becauſe it was farther diſtant from Rochel, and furniſhed with a conſiderable Force of Horſe and Foot, with a Citadel well fortified, and other Advantages for Offence and Defence.

BUT the Admiral not ſtaying for the Return of Soubize from Rochel, alter'd his Reſolution, and directed his Courſe to the Iſle of Rhee, where, on the 30th of July, he made near the Shore, and next Day order'd a Squadron of twelve Ships to lie before the Mouth of Port Brelen, falling down with the beſt of the Fleet to the Fort de la Prié, which they cannonaded, ſtill making their Approaches nearer to the Land.

Duke of Buckingham's Deſcent on the Iſle of Rhee.

Toiras,

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Toiras, Governor of the Iſle, being ſufficiently alarmed, marched out from the Citadel of St. Martin with all the Strength he could draw together to prevent the Engliſh from Landing. But under the Cover of their own Cannon, the braveſt of the Engliſh Officers, Sir John Boroughs, Sir Alexander Bret, Sir Charles Rich (with the French Proteſtant M. St. Blanchard) went firſt aſhore on the 1ſt of Auguſt, being ſoon followed and ſupported by twelve hundred Men. The Enemy being one thouſand Horſe and Foot, beſides about two hundred Voluntiers, immediately advanced up to the Engliſh, and a very warm Encounter enſued, wherein were ſlain Sir William Heyden, and ſeveral hundred Engliſh, with the aforeſaid M. St. Blanchard, who was Agent from the Duke of Roan. On the French ſide the Governor's Brother, the Baron of Chantal, and ſome few others fell. But by Degrees the Engliſh forced their Way, made the Enemy retreat, and gained Room for their whole Army to land. The Governor retired with his wounded Men to the Citadel of St. Martin's, which tho' in a good State of Defence, 'twas believed that if the Engliſh had immediately purſued, while the French were in a Conſternation, they might eaſily have been Maſters both of that and the whole Iſland. The Fort la Prié, near the Landing-place, which was meanly provided with Men and Victuals, was alſo ſlighted, whereas the eaſy Conqueſt of it would have beſt prevented the landing of French Recruits, and was moſt proper to ſecure a Retreat for the Engliſh. But the Engliſh Army having ſpent five Days in a manner, which proved that the Duke of Buckingham did not underſtand the Art of War, gave Toiras an Opportunity to throw in new Forces and Proviſions, and to fortify the Citadel of St. Martin's, and to ſend to Court for freſh Supplies. 'Tis certain that the French Court was not a little aſtoniſhed at this Invaſion by the Engliſh, and that the King, who had a Tertian Ague upon him at that Time, ſent his Reſolution to give the Proteſtants honourable Terms, if they would not join with the Engliſh; inviting the Duke of Roan, who was Head of the Proteſtant Party, with great Offers of Money and Honour to ſecure him from falling in with this great Juncture of Deliverance for his oppreſſed Brethren. After an ill-timed Delay the Duke of Buckingham put all his Forces aſhore, and ſent back the Duke of Soubize and Sir William Beecher to Rochel, to ſollicit for ſome Recruits, who by their Intereſt ſoon returned with five hundred Foot. Upon this the Duke, in two Days March, came with his Army before St. Martin's, and publiſhed a Manifeſto, 'declaring his Royal Maſter's Care and Zeal 'for the reformed Churches of France, to reſtore them to their ancient Liberty and Splendor; though indeed his laudable Deſigns for their Good had been well nigh perverted to their Ruin, by a Breach of Promiſe in the French King, who had employed thoſe Ships againſt Rochel, which were lent him upon a ſolemn Aſſurance of being otherwiſe employed, &c.

UPON the Duke's Approach, the French quitted the Town of St. Martin's, and retired to the Citadel, which the Duke preſently blocked up; and raiſing Intrenchments and Batteries, he fired upon the Fort for two Months together, when he might have ſtarved it in leſs Time, if he had taken Care to ſtop up a Well within his Trenches, from which the Enemy had their ſecret Draught of Water during the whole Time of the Siege. But he had to do with one that was more expert than himſelf, and who found Means to keep him employed in the Siege 'till November, tho' he had at firſt ſent the King Word, that he ſhould be Maſter of the Place in about a Week.

THE Beſiegers in the mean Time, endured much Fatigue and Loſs, and ſuffered in a more eſpecial Manner by the Death of that excellent Soldier Sir John Boroughs, who was killed the 20th of September by a Musket-ſhot from the Citadel, while he was viewing the Works. His Body was brought over, and honourably interred at Weſtminſter.

Diſcontents and Clamours about it in England.

THIS Expedition proving ſo tedious and ineffectual, raiſed many Diſcontents in England. Some murmured that the Admiral had broke his Word with the Duke de Soubize, and landed in a wrong Place: Others ſaid his landing was rather a Feint than a ſincere Attempt, becauſe he did not march quick enough after Landing, nor did he take the Fort la Prié: Nor did he now beſiege St. Martin's in earneſt; for many Preſents and Compliments continually paſſed between him and the Governor: And, in ſhort, the Generality of the People of England diſliked a War not ſupported by a Parliament, and ſpoke freely for a new Parliament to be called, and for ſome Miniſters to be queſtioned in it.

A Supply preparing for Rhee.

THE King under theſe Perplexities reſolved to ſend a Squadron with Recruits of Men, Ammunition, and Proviſions, to the Army at Rhee. For this end he commanded certain Companies of impreſſed Men to rendezvous at Plymouth, and there to be embarked. But many of them ran away, which the Judges declared to be Felony, by the Statutes of 7 H. VII. cap. 1. and 3 Hen. VIII. cap. 5. Charles Lord Viſcount Wilmot was at firſt appointed to command them, but ſoon after the Commiſſion was given to the Earl of Holland, to conduct them to the Iſle of Rhee, and there to deliver them to the Duke of Buckingham, ingham, but they never went, as will be seen presently. About one thousand six hundred English and Irish Recruits under Sir Pierce Crosby, &c. arrived at Rhee towards the close of September; before which Time the French had got into the Harbour, and relieved the Citadel with Provisions in Sight of our Navy and Army. The Governor Toiras alarmed, however, at the Arrival of the fresh Recruits from England, was in great Trouble how to send Intelligence to the French Court. At last one Sandgrein ventured out, and escaping the Guards got safe to the King, while, for fear of his Miscarriage, Toiras prevailed with three of his Garrison to swim ashore to the main Continent.

Succours sent to the Isle of Rhee.

King of France comes in Person to Rochel.

At this Alarm, the King of France order'd his Troops to march with all speed to the Sea-side, and came in Person to hasten the Succours for the Isle of Rhee. He formed a Blockade, as it were, of Rochel, as if he designed the taking of that Town, whereas his real Intention was by that means to land Forces upon the Island of Rhee, and to throw Provisions into the besieged Citadel; and accordingly when every thing was ready, Count Schomberg and Marshal Marillas passed over into the Isle on the 5th and 6th of November at Night, without any Opposition from the English Fleet, in several little Vessels, with six or seven thousand Men, and a Supply of Provisions sufficient to support the Garrison, and to encourage them to a longer Defence.

Rochellers declare for England.

At this Juncture the Rochellers put forth a Manifesto, and declared for England; and the Duke of Roan gave out Commissions to raise Forces to assist the English in Preservation of the Edict of Peace lately granted, and since violated by the King of France. On the other hand, the latter made publick Declaration that he would on his Part observe the said Edict of Peace; proclaim'd the Dukes of Roan and Soubize Traitors, and offer'd a Reward for killing them. The Reformed were thought very unfortunate, if not unjust, in these Measures: For if they had heartily receiv'd the English at their first Arrival, or had continued their Refusal to join with them, they might either way have averted their impending Ruin.

But by this time the French had obtained a great Supply of Shipping from the Spaniard, which with their own made up above one hundred Sail, a Force superior to the English Navy, with which however they declined engaging, and proposed nothing more than to get suitable Provisions into the Citadel, and to tire out the Besieged. To carry on the same Design, Toiras pretended to enter into a Treaty of Capitulation, and desired the Duke of Buckingham to grant him a safe Conduct for a Messenger to be sent to the King of France for Leave to come off with Honour. The Duke consented, on condition that an English Gentleman should go along with Toiras's Messenger, and be suffer'd to pass through France to England: And so they went together to the French Court; but there, in open Breach of Faith, the English Gentleman was secured, while the Agent of Toiras did his Business effectually.

Toiras carried on the Sham Treaty, and spun out the Time so long that he gained his Point of receiving a considerable Relief of Men, Victuals, and Ammunition, and then broke off the Treaty in Derision, ordering his Men upon the Walls to advance their Pikes with Mutton and Fowls upon the Heads of them, to reproach the English with their newly arrived Plenty. And they were further animated with News that the French had landed more Forces near the Meadow Castle (a Place also fatally neglected by the English) against whom the Duke sent out a strong Detachment, leaving his Trenches unguarded; upon which the Enemy sallied out of the Citadel, and got Possession of the deserted Trenches; so that when the English, after some tolerable Success, had forced the new Recruits to take Refuge under the Canon of the Citadel, and were returning to their own Camp, they were obliged to dispute the Recovery of their Trenches, and lost many Lives before they could regain them. Under these Discouragements, about the Middle of October, the Duke held a Council of War, and thought of decamping and re-imbarking for England, and communicated his Reasons to Soubize; namely, that the Season was declining, his Army diminished, his Provisions spent, and his Officers impatient to go home. But Soubize earnestly dissuaded him, telling him that the Relief which the Besieged had received was inconsiderable, that the Earl of Holland's Fleet was coming with Supplies, that his Retreat would occasion the Loss of Rochel, and cast an irreparable Slur upon the Honour of the King of England, for making so great an Enterprize to so little Purpose.

Upon this the Duke continued the Siege, and soon after resolved to storm the Citadel and Works. Accordingly, on the 6th of November, a general Assault was made; but after the Loss of many Men the Fort was found to be inaccessible. This Repulse, with the News that the French continually poured more Forces into the Island, inclined the Duke to raise the Siege, and return home. Consequently on the 8th of November, early in the Morning, the Drums beat, and the Army prepared for a March. Upon their Motions for a Retreat the Enemy appeared equal equal in Foot, and far ſtronger in Horſe, ready to fall upon the Engliſh Rear. The Duke drew up the Army ſeveral times in their March, and made a Stand to offer Battle; but the French warily declin'd an Engagement, having projected a greater Advantage with leſs Hazard: For when the Engliſh, in their Retreat, were entering a narrow Cauſey, having on each Hand Salt-Pits and deep Ditches (wherein the Engliſh had neglected to raiſe a Fort at the Entry, and another at the End of it, near the Bridge, which if done might have ſecured their Retreat) the French upon this Advantage furiouſly attacked the Engliſh Horſe, who preſſed their Foot into great Diſorder, and made the Crowd ſo tumultuous on the Bridge, that many of the Engliſh were drowned in the River, beſides a great Number that fell into the Salt-Pits, or that periſhed by the Sword. Yet the Engliſh that had paſſed the Bridge rallied again with their true native Courage to fight their purſuing Enemy, who, perceiving they were reſolved to ſell their Lives dearly, repaſſed the Bridge which the Engliſh guarded with a ſelect Party all Day, and burnt down at Night; and the Duke carried the Remains of his Army aboard next Day, without any farther Diſturbance from the French. The Engliſh loſt about fifty Officers, near two thouſand five hundred common Soldiers, and thirty-five Priſoners of Note, beſides forty-four Colours which were hung up at Nôtre Dame Church in Paris. The King of France in Bravery diſmiſſed the Priſoners, as a kind Token to his Siſter the Queen of England: And when the Lord Montjoy offered a round Sum for his Ranſom, the King told him, 'his Redemption ſhould 'be only two Couple of Engliſh Hounds.' If my Lord took this as an Act of Generoſity in the King, it is certain that others interpreted it as a Slight upon his Lordſhip, who had gained more Diſhonour in the Retreat than any other Commander: For, having his Troops in the Rear charged by the French, he turned and broke in upon the Engliſh Foot, and made ſo much Confuſion that Sir Charles Rich is reported to have cried out, *Kill him, kill him, though he be my Brother.

The French attack his Rear.

Loſs of the Engliſh.

WHEN the Duke had thus ſhipped his Army on the 9th of November, he ſent in a civil Promiſe to the Rochellers, that he would come again to their Relief, and preſently after ſet Sail for England. When he came into the Channel he met the Earl of Holland as he was ſetting out from Plymouth, who pretended, in Excuſe for his Delay, that when he was firſt ready to go on Board at Plymouth, the Ships with Proviſions were not come out of Chatham; that when they came they took up Time in rendezvouſing, and that when all things were fixed for Sailing, the Winds proved contrary. The Duke of Buckingham himſelf had the greater need of Apologies, who returned as unfortunate a General as he went out a hated Favourite. All he had to plead was his acting by Advice of a Council of War, and his want of timely Supply. The Duke of Roan obſerves in his Memoirs, that the Iſſue of this Expedition was, that the Duke of Buckingham wreck'd both his own and his Country's Honour, conſumed much of the Rochellers Proviſions, and ruined the Party he came to relieve. It is ſaid that of the ſeven thouſand Men he carried from England near five thouſand were killed, though it was reported in England before he came home, that not above fifteen hundred were loſt, and ſome even ſay, that the King was made to believe it. His Majeſty, however, received him with full Grace and Affection, and only told him, he was glad not to find the Loſs ſo great as Sir Sackvil Crow had repreſented in a Letter; but the King's Indulgence made the popular Reſentments greater; Tongues and Pens were ſharpened upon this inglorious Expedition, and the Pulpit it ſelf could not be reſtrained from ſome Reflections on it.

The Clamour raiſed upon the Miſcarriage.

BEFORE we quit this Subject, Sir Henry Wotton's Account of the Duke's Deportment in this Expedition ſeems to deſerve ſome Attention. 'The Duke's Carriage, ſays Sir Henry, 'was purely noble through-'out; reſpectful to the Gentleman, boun-'tiful to the Soldier, if he noted any ſpe-'cial Value in him, tender and careful of 'thoſe that were hurt, of unqueſtionable 'Courage in himſelf, and rather fearful 'of Fame than Danger. In his Counte-'nance, which is the Part that all Eyes 'interpret, there was no viſible Altera-'tion, even after the Succours he expected 'failed him; but the leſs he ſhewed with-Secret Memoirs of the Duke's Conduct in this Expedition.

* There is another Account of this Matter in a contemporary Hiſtory, which is this; 'The Night be-'fore, the Duke called a Council of War, in which he ſhewed them the Neceſſity of a Retreat; but 'himſelf being wholly unexperienced in martial Diſcipline, left the managing of the next Day's Action to 'them, offering the Service of his Perſon to any Hazard whatever as far as any private Soldier. The Council 'unanimouſly choſe Sir William Courtney to manage the Retreat, a heavy, dull, covetous old Man, who 'having been twenty or thirty Years a private Captain in Holland, was made Colonel in this Expedition by 'means of Sir John Burroughs, who being dead, the Command for that Day was given to old Courtney; but 'he either through want of Judgment, or Forgetfulneſs, having not made due Proviſion for the Security of 'the Engliſh Rear, many of them were cut to Pieces; and had not Sir Pierce Crosby with eight hundred Iriſh 'made good their Retreat, the whole Army had been loſt. Courtney himſelf fell into a Salt-Pan, and eſcaped 'by his Man Anthony's crying out, Oh! ſave my Captain! But the poor Fellow loſt his own Life in attempt-'ing it.

'out

'out, the more it worked intrinſically, 'according to the Nature of ſuppreſſed 'Paſſions: For it is certain, that to his 'Secretary Dr. Maſon, whom he laid in 'a Pallet near him, for the freer Commu-'nication of his Thoughts, he broke out 'into bitter and paſſionate Exclamations 'in the Abſence of all other Ears and 'Eyes, proteſting, that never his Diſ-'patches to diverſe Princes, nor the great 'Buſineſs of a Fleet, of an Army, of a 'Siege, of a Treaty, of War, of Peace, 'both on foot together, and all of 'them in his Head at one Time, did not 'ſo much break his Repoſe as a Conceit 'that ſome at home under his Majeſty, of 'whom he had well deſerved, were now 'content to forget him.

'Of their two Forts, ſays Sir Henry, he 'could not take the one, nor would he 'take the other; but in the general Town 'he maintained a Seizure and Poſſeſſion 'of the whole full three Months and 'eighteen Days; and at the firſt Deſcent 'on Shore he was not immured in a 'Wooden Veſſel, but countenanced the 'Landing in his Long-Boat, where ſuc-'ceeded ſuch a Defeat of near two hun-'dred gallant Horſe, ſeconded with two 'thouſand Foot, that, all Circumſtances 'conſidered, the Action may be ſet in 'Compariſon with any of the braveſt in 'ancient Time. But in the Iſſue of the 'whole, the Duke is generally thought 'to have carried to the Camp, perhaps, 'too much of that Self-Applauſe from a 'Court, where Fortune had never de-'ceived him.

Sir Henry concludes witha Relation of a ſtrange Accident that befel him at his Return from Plymouth, which he took to be an ominous kind of Prelude to his final Period.

How he rode in danger of his Life.

'The Lord Goring, who was the 'Duke's affectionate Friend, diſpatched an 'Expreſs to him, to caution him to take 'care of his own Perſon, by declining 'the ordinary Road to London; for that 'he had credible Intelligence of a Plot 'againſt his Life, that was to be put in 'Execution as he travelled towards the 'Court. The Duke met the Meſſenger 'on the Road, but after reading the Let-'ter, put it in his Pocket without the leaſt 'Apprehenſion, and rode forward with 'no more than ſeven or eight Perſons in 'Company at that Time, and thoſe no 'otherwiſe provided for their Defence 'than with ſmall Swords. The Duke 'had not advanced above three Miles 'before an old Woman in the Road un-'derſtanding that he was in Company, 'and expreſſing an extraordinary Occaſion 'to ſpeak with him, was led to his 'Horſe's Side, where ſhe told him, that 'in the very next Town he was to come 'to ſhe had heard ſome Deſperados vow 'his Death; And thereupon ſhe would 'have directed him to take a ſurer Way. 'The Duke upon comparing this News 'with the Intelligence he had received 'before from his noble Friend, commu-'nicated the Tenour of the ſaid Letter and 'all the Circumſtances to the Company, 'who were jointly of Opinion that the 'old Woman had given him good Ad-'vice, and importuned him to take it. 'Nevertheleſs, he reſolved not to go out 'of the Way, ſaying, that if he ſhould 'once by ſuch a Step make his Enemy 'believe that he was afraid of Danger, 'he ſhould never live without. Upon this 'his young Nephew the Lord Viſcount 'Fielding, begged him that he would at 'leaſt honour him with his Coat and blue 'Ribbon through the Town, pretending 'that his Uncle's Life, on which the 'Fortune of his whole Family depended, 'was of all things under Heaven the moſt 'precious to him, and propoſing ſo to 'muffle up himſelf in his Hood as the 'Duke's Manner was to ride in cold Wea-'ther, that none ſhould know the Duke 'from him, and by that means he ſhould 'be the more at Liberty to defend him-'ſelf. At this ſweet Propoſal the Duke 'caught him in his Arms and kiſſed him, 'but ſaid he would not accept of ſuch 'an Offer from a Nephew whoſe Life he 'tendered as much as his own.

'After rewarding the poor Woman for 'her good Will, and giving ſome ſhort 'Directions to the Company for their Be-'haviour, he rode on without any Con-'cern, but was no ſooner entered the 'Town when a ſcambling Soldier clapp'd 'hold of his Bridle in ſuch a manner that 'the Duke took him to be a Beggar, or 'drunk; but a Gentleman of his Re-'tinue, who was riding at ſome Diſtance 'behind, imagining it to be the Begin-'ing of ſome intended Miſchief, ſpurred 'up his Horſe, puſhed him with Violence 'from his Hold of the Duke's Bridle, and 'then away they all galloped through the 'Town. Our Author adds, that he ne-'ver heard of any Enquiry made into 'this Buſineſs, and that peradventure the 'Duke thought it adviſeable not to re-'ſent Diſcontentments too deep.'

Petition of Sir John Elliot impriſoned for the Loan.

We return now to Court, where we find that during the late Expedition Sir John Elliot, who was impriſoned in the Gate-houſe for refuſing to lend the King Money, preſented a Petition to his Majeſty for his Liberty, which he did not ask as a Favour, but as an Act of Juſtice. He grounded his Petition upon ſeveral Statutes which he therein quoted, and from which he argued the Illegality of the Loan, or of any Tax on the Subject without Conſent of Parliament, and that for his own Part, he could not in Conſcience ſubmit to it, but his Petition was rejected. In the Month of November following these five Gentlemen, who were also in Prison for the same Reason, brought their Habeas Corpus; viz. Sir Thomas Darnell, Sir John Corbet, Sir Walter Earl, Sir John Heveningham, and Sir Edward Hampden.

to

IN Michaelmas Term a Return was made of their several Commitments. To instance only in one (all the rest being in the same Form) the Warden of the Fleet made this Return.

Process against other Gentlemen imprisoned for the same.

'THAT Sir Walter Earl, Kt. named 'in the Writ, is detained in the Prison of 'the Fleet in his Custody, by special 'Command of the King to him signified 'by Warrant of several of the Privy-'Council in these Words;

WHEREAS Sir Walter Earl, Kt. was 'heretofore committed to your Custody, 'These are to will and require you still to 'detain him, letting you know that both 'his first Commitment, and Direction 'for the continuance of him in Prison, 'were, and are by his Majesty's special 'Commandment.

From Whitehall, Nov. 7, 1627. Thomas Coventry, &c.

SIR Thomas Darnell was the first that was brought to the Bar upon that Writ; where Sir Robert Heath, the King's Attorney-General, informed the Court that his Majesty told him, He had heard that some of the Gentlemen imprisoned for the Loan had reported that the King deny'd them the Course of Justice; and therefore his Majesty commanded him to renew the Writ of Habeas Corpus, lest they should not move for another themselves, by reason the Warden of the Fleet had not returned the first, according to his Duty

Sir Thomas Darnell's Defence.

SIR Thomas Darnell reply'd, 'That 'such Words never came into his Thoughts, 'and humbly prayed they might make no 'Impression upon the Court to the Dis-'paragement of his Cause; for he was 'accused of that of which he was in no 'manner guilty.

SIR Nicholas Hide, Chief-Justice, said, 'That he had made a fair and temperate 'Answer. You may perceive, said he, 'the upright and sincere Proceedings 'which have been in this Business. You 'no sooner moved for a Habeas Corpus, 'but it was granted to you; you no sooner 'desired Council, but they were assigned 'you, tho' any Council might move for 'you without being assigned, and should 'have had no Blame for it: The King's 'Pleasure is, his Law should take Place 'and be executed, and for that we do sit 'here: And whether the Commitment be 'by the King or others, this Court is the 'Place where the King doth sit in Person 'to do Right, if Injury be done. And 'we have Power to examine it; and if 'it appear that any Man hath Wrong 'done him by his Imprisonment, we have 'Power to deliver and discharge him; if 'otherwise, he is to be remanded by us to 'Prison again.

AFTER this the Attorney-General said, 'Though this be a Case which concerns 'the King in a high Degree, yet he hath 'been so gracious and so just as not to re-'fuse the Examination and Determination 'of it according to the Laws of the King-'dom.

THEN the Court proceeded to hear the Arguments for the Prisoners by the Council, who on their Petition were assigned them by the Court of King's Bench. Mr. Noy was Council for Sir Walter Earl, Serjeant Bramstone, for Sir John Heveningham, Mr. Selden for Sir Edward Hampden, and Mr. Calthrop for Sir John Corbet.

AFTER they had pleaded, Mr. Attorney had a Day appointed to argue for the King. Not to repeat the Pleadings on both sides at large, which would be too tedious, it is sufficient to mention some Generals, especially concerning the Form of the Return of the Writ.

Exceptions made by the Prisoners Council to the Writ for their Imprisonment,

THE first General Exception made to it by the Council for the Prisoners, was,

1. FOR that the Return is not positive, but referred to the Signification made by another, the Lords of the Council,

2. THE Keepers of the Prisons have not returned the Cause of the Commitment, but the Cause of the Cause; which they held not to be good.

3. THAT the Return of the Commitment is imperfect, for that it sheweth only the Cause of the detaining in Prison, and not the Cause of the first Commitment.

Lastly, That the Return is contradictory in itself: For that in the first Part thereof it is certify'd that the detaining of those Gentlemen in Prison is per speciale mandatum Domini Regis: And when the Warrant of the Lords of the Council is shewn, it appeareth that the Commitment is by the Command of the King signified by the Lords of the Council.

and the Return.

THE Second general Exception was to the Matter of the Return; and that was touching the Imprisonment per speciale mandatum Domini Regis, by the Lords of the Council, without any Cause expressed. Wherefore, said Mr. Selden, 'by the con-'stant and settled Laws of this Kingdom '(without which we have nothing) no Man 'can be justly imprisoned either by the 'King or Council, without a Cause of 'the Commitment; and that ought to be 'expressed in the Return. The Law saith 'expresly, no Freeman shall be impri-'soned without due Process of the Law;

Nullus

Fœdera Tom. XVIII.

'Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, nisi per legem terræ, &c. And in the Charter of King John there are these Words, Nec eum in carcerem mittemus. We will not commit him to Prison: That is, the King himself will not.

'This Right, said Serjeant Bramston, is the only Means a Subject hath whereby to obtain his Liberty; and the End of it is to return the Cause of the Imprisonment, that it may be examined in this Court, whether the Parties ought to be discharged or not: Which cannot be done upon this Return: For, the Cause of the Imprisonment is so far from appearing particularly by it, that there is no Cause at all expressed. And the Writ requires that the Cause of the Imprisonment should be returned, and the Cause ought to be expressed so far as that it ought to be none of those Causes for which by the Laws of the Kingdom the Subject ought not to be imprisoned; and it ought to be expressed that it was by Presentment or Indictment, or upon Petition, or Suggestion made unto the King. For, said he, observe but the Consequence: If those Gentlemen who are committed without any Cause shewn, should not be bailed, but remanded, the Subjects of the Kingdom may be restrained of their Liberty for ever, and by Law there can be no Remedy. We shall not reflect upon the present Time and Government, but we are to look what may betide us in Time to come hereafter. The Laws are called the great Inheritance of every Subject, and the Inheritance of Inheritances, without which we have nothing that deserves the Name of Inheritance.

Mr. Noy said, 'If upon a Habeas Corpus a Cause of Commitment be certified, then the Cause is to be tried before your Lordships; but if no Cause is shewn, the Court must do that which standeth with Law and Justice, and that is to deliver the Party. The Commons did complain in Edward IIId's Time that the great Charter and other Statutes were broken. They desired that for the Good of himself and his People they might be kept and put in Execution, and not infringed, by making any Arrest by special Command or otherwise. And the Answer which was given them was this, That the said great Charter and other Statutes should be put in Execution according to the Petition, without Disturbance of Arrests by special Command; and the King granteth the Commons Desire in the same Words as they were expressed in their Petition. And afterwards complaining again, that notwithstanding this Answer of the King they were imprisoned by special Command, without Indictment, or other legal Course of Law: The King's Answer was, upon another Petition to him, That he was therewith well pleased. And for the future he added further, If any Man be grieved let him complain, and Right shall be done. And forasmuch as it doth not appear to the Court that there was any Cause of the Commitment of these Members, no Charge against them, no Indictment or Process according to the Laws; therefore Mr. Noy prayed they might no longer be detained in Prison, but bailed or discharged.

Charles I. Anno 1627.

'Admit, said Mr. Calthrop, that the Commitment by Command of the King was lawful, yet when a Man had continued in Prison a reasonable Time, he ought to be brought to answer, and not to continue still in Prison without being brought to answer; for that it appeareth by the Books of our Laws, that Liberty is a Thing so favoured of the Law, that the Law will not suffer the Continuance of a Man in Prison for any longer Time than of Necessity it must: And therefore the Law will neither suffer the Party, Sheriffs or Judges, to continue a Man in Prison by their Power and Pleasure. It doth speak of the Delivery of a Man out of Prison with as reasonable Expedition as may be: And upon this Reason it hath been resolved, that howsoever the Law alloweth that there may be a Term between the Teste of an original Writ and the Return of the same, where there is only a Summons and no Imprisonment of the Body; yet the Law will not allow that there shall be a Term between the Teste of a Writ of Capias and the Return of the same, where the Body of a Man is to be imprisoned; insomuch that it will give no way that the Party shall have Power to continue the Body of a Man longer Time in Prison than needs must, so tender is the Law of the Subject's Liberty.'

On the 27th of November the Attorney-General argued for the King, 'That this was a very great Cause, and hath raised great Expectation; and he was afraid that those Gentlemen whom it concerns, have rather advised their Councils than their Councils them.

'As to the first Exception, That the Return is not positive, but hath relation to some others; he did conceive it was positive enough: For, said he, the Words are, Quod detentus est sub custodiâ meâ per speciale mandatum Domini Regis. The other Words, mihi significatum, they follow after, but are not part of the Affirmation made before it. And if they will have it as they seem to understand it, then they must return the Words thus, Quod significatum est mihi

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1627.

'per Dominos Privati Conſilij, quod detentus eſt per ſpeciale mandatum Domini Regis: And then it had not been 'their own proper Return, but the Signification of another, the Lords of the 'Council. The turning of the Sentence 'would reſolve this Point; the thing it 'ſelf muſt ſpeak for it ſelf: It is clear, 'it is a poſitive Return, that the Detaining is by the Command of the King; 'and the reſt of the Return is rather Satisfaction to the Court than any part of 'the Return.'

AND for the other Exception, That the Cauſe of the Cauſe is returned, and not the Cauſe it ſelf, he ſaid, 'Among the 'Logicians there are two Cauſes; there 'is Cauſa cauſans, and Cauſa cauſata. 'The Cauſa cauſans here in this Caſe is 'not the Warrant from the Lords of the 'Council, for that is Cauſa cauſata; but 'the primary and original Cauſe, which 'is Cauſa cauſans, is ſpeciale mandatum 'Domini Regis; the other is but the 'Council's Signification, or Teſtification, 'or Warrant for him that made the Return.

'AND for the other Exception, the Cauſe 'is imperfect, becauſe it ſhews only the 'Cauſe of detaining in Priſon, and not the 'Cauſe of the firſt Commitment: He conceives it is ſufficient for an Officer of the 'Law to anſwer, That the Writ is a Command to make a Return of the detaining 'of the Priſoner, and he accordingly 'makes a Return of the Detention: And 'if the Keeper of the Priſon had only 'ſaid they were detained by ſpeciale mandatum, &c. it had been good.'

THEN he proceeded to the Matter of the Return, and to anſwer the Book Caſes and Records that had been cited by the Council for the Priſoners, and to produce Precedents on the King's Behalf, which being extant in Print, the Reader whom it may concern is referred to them.

AFTERWARDS Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Juſtice, Judge Dodderidge, Juſtice Jones, and Juſtice Whitlock being upon the Bench, and Sir John Heveningham and the 'foremention'd Priſoners being brought to the Bar, Sir Nicholas Hyde, Lord Chief Juſtice, by the Conſent and Direction of the Judges, ſpoke to this Purpoſe.

'THAT the Court hath ſeriouſly conſidered what hath been ſpoken by either 'ſide, and are grown to a Reſolution, and 'that his Brothers have enjoined him to 'deliver unto you the Reſolution of the 'whole Court; and therefore, ſaid he, 'though it be delivered by my Mouth, it 'is the Reſolution of us all. I am ſure 'you expect Juſtice from hence; and God 'forbid we ſhould ſit here but to do Juſtice to all Men, according to our beſt 'Skill and Knowledge, as by our Duty 'and Oaths we are bound to do. But this 'is a Caſe of very great Weight, and 'great Expectation, and requires more 'ſolemn Argument than the Time will 'now permit. The Exceptions which 'have been taken to this Return are two; 'the one for the Form, the other for the 'Subſtance.

'FIRST, for the Form, becauſe it is not 'returned, as they ſay poſitively and abſolutely, but with reference to a Warrant of the Lords of the Council: Now the 'Court is of Opinion, that this is a poſitive and abſolute Return, upon this Reaſon, that the Keeper of the Priſon firſt 'returns, that they are detained by ſpecial Command of the King; and if they 'had ceaſed there it had been poſitive.

'AND for that which follows, that it 'was ſignified to him by the Lords of the 'Council, this is only to certify the Court 'that he returned the Cauſe truly, and 'not to ſhew us that he had no Knowledge of the Cauſe but by the Signification of the Lords of the Council. 'There is not one Word in the Writ that 'demands the Cauſe why they were taken, 'but why they are detained. So that that 'Point in the Writ is ſufficiently anſwered, which was only to certify the Cauſe 'of Detention: And therefore we reſolve, that the Form of this Return is 'good.

'THE next Thing is the main Point in 'Law, Whether the Subſtance or Matter 'of the Return be good or no? Wherein 'the Subſtance is this: He doth certify 'that they are detained in Priſon by the 'ſpecial Command of the King: And 'whether this be good in Law or no is 'the Queſtion.

'HERE the Lord Chief Juſtice did mention the ſeveral Precedents and Book 'Caſes cited by each Side, too long to 'be here related, and concluded, that 'that which is now to be judged by us 'is this, whether one that is committed 'by the King's Authority, and no Cauſe 'ſhewn of his Commitment, according as 'here it is upon this Return, whether we 'ought to deliver him by Bail, or to remand him back again? Where by the 'way you muſt know, that we can take 'Notice only of this Return: That 'when the Caſe appears to us no otherwiſe than by the Return, we are not 'bound to examine the Truth thereof, 'but the Sufficiency of the Return. We 'cannot judge upon Rumours or Reports, 'but upon that which is before us 'on Record, which is examinable by us 'whether it be ſufficient or not.

'MR. Attorney hath told you, that 'the King hath done it; and we 'truſt him in great Matters: And we 'make no Doubt but the King, if you 'ſeek to him, knowing the Cauſe why you 'are

'are impriſoned, will have Mercy; but we leave that, we muſt not counſel you: If in Juſtice we ought to deliver you, we would do it; but upon theſe Grounds, Records, Precedents and Reſolutions cited and produced, the Court is of Opinion they cannot deliver you, but you muſt be remanded.'

The French King ordered the Siege of Rochel in Form.

AFTER the Engliſh had ſo ingloriouſly left France, the French King ordered the Siege of Rochel in Form, on Pretence that the Rochellers had invited the Engliſh to enter France, and give them Aſſiſtance; whereas we have ſeen that 'till the Duke of Buckingham made the Rupture, to ſatisfy his own private Reſentment, King Charles was ſo far from aſſiſting the Rochellers that he lent the French King Ships to reduce them, and that when the Duke came firſt before the City, the Jealouſy which they had conceived of his Inſincerity hindered their joining heartily with him. The French King having now determined to reduce the Town by Famine, an entire Circumvallation was drawn towards the Continent with three Forts and many Redoubts, to ſhut out all Relief by Land; and Cardinal Richlieu, who out of his great Zeal for extirpating the Proteſtants, undertook the Siege in Perſon, projected a vaſt Mole croſs the Channel about 1400 Yards long, with a ſmall Space only in the Middle for the Tide, in order to cut off all Conveyance of Succours by Sea.

The Duke of Soubize and other Deputies ſent over to lay before the King and Council their Petition and Remonſtrance.

UNDER this ſad Proſpect the Rochellers ſent over the Duke of Soubize and other Deputies, to lay before the King and Council their Petition and Remonſtrance to this Effect: 'They firſt 'thank his Majeſty for the great Aſſiſtance and 'Comfort they had received by the Fleet ſent 'in July laſt. Then they take Notice of Application made to the King of Denmark to 'propoſe a Peace between the Crowns of 'France and England: And if ſuch a Treaty 'do proceed, they humbly pray that his Majeſty would inſiſt upon the Capitulation made 'between the French King and the Reformed 'Churches; which they on their Part had kept 'inviolable, 'till they ſaw the Conditions on 'the other Side entirely broke. They repreſent that they are now to be ſhut up by Land 'and Sea, and muſt fall into inevitable Ruin 'without ſpeedy Succour: They therefore beſeech his Majeſty with all poſſible Diligence 'to ſend them Supplies, and once more to 'protect them with his Royal Navy, to prevent the blocking up of their Harbour. 'They laſtly, entreat his Majeſty and the Lords 'of the Council to have ſo much Pity on their 'indigent Condition, as to permit a general Collection to be made for them through England 'and Ireland; concluding with their Reſolutions to hold out a Siege, depending on a 'ſeaſonable Relief from England, being aſſured by the Duke of Buckingham, at his 'Departure that he would once more come 'in Perſon to their Aſſiſtance.

WHAT was the Succeſs of this Petition we ſhall ſee in the Hiſtory of the next Year; but at preſent the Anſwer could be only good Words, by reaſon of the many Complaints and Murmurs againſt the Duke of Buckingham, who was ſuppoſed to be the Projector as well as Conductor of the Expedition thither, and to whoſe Inability the ill Succeſs of it was wholly imputed, foraſmuch as he had never been in the Wars, and knew nothing of the Sea-Service, though the King made him both Admiral and Captain-General. At the ſame time the Mariners came in Shoals to Whitehall, complaining they had received no Wages for three Years paſt, and deſerted in great Numbers. The Merchants alſo made bitter Complaints that the Seas were neglected, that within three Years they had loſt a vaſt Number of Ships, and that the Fiſhermen were taken almoſt in the very Harbours. In ſhort, no body ventured to build any more new Ships, becauſe as ſoon as they were ready the King ſeized them for his Service, againſt the Will of the Owners. And the Land-Forces were kept in Pay without their former Wages. In ſhort, Ruſhworth makes it appear that the Nation was in Debt for the Freight of Ships, Sea-mens Wages, and Materials for Shipping, in the Years 1625, 1626, and 1627, very near the Sum of 200,000 l.

Sir Robert Cotton's Advice.

IN the preſent unhappy State of Affairs Sir Robert Cotton, the Learned Antiquary, being called before the King and Council to deliver his Opinion upon it in point of Hiſtory and Law, preſented his Advice in Manner following.

'As ſoon as the Houſe of Auſtria had incorporated itſelf with Spain, and by their 'new Diſcoveries gotten to themſelves the 'Wealth of the Indies, they began to effect, 'and have ever ſince purſued a Fifth Monarchy. 'The Emperor Charles would lay the firſt 'Foundation in Italy by ſurpriſing Rome. 'From this he was thruſt by Force and Reſpect 'of Religion, Henry VIII being made Caput Fœderis againſt him. He then attempted High-Germany, practiſing by Faction and Force to 'reduce them firſt to Petty States, and ſo to his 'abſolute Power: In this Hen. VIII again prevented him, by laying the Lutheran Princes 'under his Confederacy and Aſſiſtance. His 'Son, the ſecond Philip, purſued the ſame Ambition in the Netherlands of Germany, by 'Reduction whereof he intended to make his 'Way farther into the others. This the late 'Queen of England interrupted, by ſiding with 'the afflicted People on the one Part, and making herſelf the Head of the Proteſtant League 'with the Princes on the other Part, drawing 'in Secret of State the Countenance of France, 'to give the more Reputation of Aſſiſtance to 'them, and Security to itſelf.

'SPAIN ſeeing his Hopes thus fruitleſs by 'theſe Unions and Straights, began firſt to 'break, if he might, the Amity of France and 'England: But finding the common Danger 'to be a faſt Tie, he raiſeth up a Party in that 'Kingdom of his own, by which the French 'King was ſo diſtreſſed, that had not the Engliſh Council aſſiſted and relieved him, Spain 'had there removed that next and greateſt Oracle of his Ambition.

His

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1629

'HIS Council now tells him from theſe 'Examples, that the Way to his great Work is 'impoſſible, ſo long as England lay a Let in 'his way; and adviſeth him that the Remove 'of that Obſtacle be the firſt of his Intents. 'This drew on thoſe often ſecret Practices againſt 'the Perſon of the Queen, and his open Fury 'in 88 againſt the Body of the State; which 'ſhe perceiving, following the Advice of a 'free Council, would never after admit of Peace; 'winning thereby the Hearts of a loving Peo-'ple, who ever found Hands and Money for 'all Occaſions at home, and keeping ſacredly 'all her Alliances abroad, ſecuring to her Con-'federates, all her Time, Freedom from Fear of 'Spaniſh Slavery, and ſo ended her old and 'happy Days in Glory.

'Spain then, by the Wiſdom and Power of 'that great Lady, deſpoiled ſo of his Means 'to hurt, though not of his Deſires, makes up 'with her peaceful Succeſſor, of happy Memo-'ry, that Golden League, which diſarming us 'at home by the Opinion of Security, and gi-'ving them a Power in our Councils, by belie-'ving their Friendſhips and pretended Mar-'riage, gave them way to cheriſh among us a 'Party of their own, and Benefit of Power 'abroad, to lead in Jealouſy and ſome Diviſion 'between us and our Confederates: By which 'we ſee they have ſwallowed up the Fortune 'of your Majeſty's Brother's Eſtate, with the 'reſt of the Imperial States, diſtreſſed the King 'of Denmark by that Quarrel, diverted Swe-'den's Aſſiſtance by the Wars with the Pole, 'and moving them now with offer of the Da-'niſh Crown; and now (whether from the 'Plot of our Fatality) hath caſt ſuch a Bone 'between France and us, as hath made them-'ſelves, by our Quarrel of Religion, a faſt Con-'federate, and a dangerous Enemy; ſo as we 'are left no other Aſſurance againſt their Malice 'and Ambition, but the Netherlands, where 'the Tie of mutual Safety is weakned by daily 'Diſcontents, bred and fed between us by ſome 'ill-affected to both our Securities, that from 'the Doubtfulneſs of Friendſhip, as we now 'ſtand, we may rather ſuſpect from our own 'domeſtick Faction, if they grow too furious, 'they rather follow the Example of Rome in 'her growing (which held that equal Safety 'honourable and more eaſy dare regnum, than 'ſubjugare Provinciam) conſidering the Pow-'er they have in their Hands, than to give any 'friendly Aſſiſtance to ſave the preſent Condi-'tion of a State. You may therefore ſee in what 'Terms we ſtand abroad, and I fear we are at 'home for Reſiſtance in no better State. There 'muſt be to withſtand a foreign Invaſion a Pro-'portion both of Sea and Land-Forces: For to 'give an Enemy an eaſy Paſſage, and a Port 'to relieve him in, is no leſs than to hazard all 'at one Stake.

'AND it is to be conſidered that no March by 'Land can be of that Speed to make Head a-'gainſt the Landing of an Enemy. Then that 'follows, that there is no ſuch Prevention as to 'be Maſter of the Sea. To this Point of ne-'ceſſary Defence there can be no leſs than '240,000 l.

FOR the Land-Forces, if it were for an Of-'fenſive War, the Men of leſs Livelihood 'were the beſt ſpared, and were uſed formerly 'to make ſuch Wars Purgamenta Reipublicæ, 'if we made no farther Purchaſe by it, but for 'the Safety of a Common-wealth, the Wiſdom of 'all Times did never intruſt the publick Cauſe to 'any other than to ſuch as had a Portion in the 'publick Adventure: And that we ſaw in 'Eighty-Eight, when the Care of the Queen 'and of the Council did make that Body of the 'large Army no other than of the Trained Bands, 'which, with the Auxiliaries of the whole Realm, 'amounted to no leſs than 24,000 Men. Nei-'ther were any of theſe drawn forth from their 'Country and proper Habitations before the 'End of May, that they might be no long 'Grievance to the Publick; ſuch Diſcontentments 'being to us a more fatal Enemy than any for-'reign Forces.

'THE careful diſtributing and directing of 'their Sea and Land-Forces being more fitting 'for a Council of War, than a private Man to 'adviſe of, I paſs over; yet ſhall ever be wil-'ling and ready, when I ſhall be called, hum-'bly to offer up ſuch Obſervations as I have ga-'thered by the former like Occaſion in this 'Realm.

'To make up this Preparation, there are re-'quiſite two things, Money and Affections; for 'they cannot be properly ſevered. It was well 'and wiſely ſaid of that great and grave Coun-'ſellor the Lord Burleigh in the like Caſe to the 'late Queen; Win Hearts, and you have their 'Hands and Purſes. And I find that of late, 'Diffidence hath been in the one, and hath un-'happily prevented the other.

'IN gathering then of Money for this preſent 'Need, there are three things requiſite, Speed, 'Aſſurance, and Satisfaction. And the Way 'to gather (as in other like Caſes hath been done) 'muſt be by the Path-way formerly called 'Via regia, being more ſecure and ſpeedy: For 'by unknown and untrodden Ways, it is both 'rough and tedious, and never ſucceedeth 'well. This laſt Way, altho' it took place as 'it were by a Supply at firſt, and received no 'general Denial, yet ſince it hath drawn ma-'ny to conſult with themſelves and others in 'the Conſequence, as it is now conceived a Preſ-'ſure on their Liberties and againſt Law. I 'much fear, if that now again it be offered, 'either in the ſame Face, or by Privy-Seal, it 'will be refuſed wholly. Neither find I that 'the Reſtraint of the Recuſants hath produced 'any other Effect, than a ſtiff Reſolution in 'themſelves and others to forbear. Beſides, 'although it were at the firſt with ſome Aſſu-'rance, yet when we conſider the Commiſſions 'and other Forms made out to ſuch like Ser-'vices, as that how long it hangs in hand, and 'the many Delays there are, we may eaſily 'ſee that ſuch a Sum granted by the Parliament 'is far ſooner and eaſier levied.

'IF any will make the ſucceſſion of 'Times to produce an inevitable Neceſſity 'to enforce it if denied, whether in general 'by Exciſe or Impoſition, or in particular 'on ſome ſelect Perſons, which is the Cuſtom 'of ſome Countries, and ſo conclude it as 'there, for the Public State Suprema Lege; 'he muſt look for this to be told him, That 'ſeeing Neceſſity muſt conclude always to 'gather Money, 'tis leſs ſpeedy or aſſured, 'than that by a Parliament. The ſucceſs 'attendeth the humour of the heedleſs Mul-'titude, that are full of jealouſy and diſtruſt, 'and ſo unlike to comply to any unuſual 'courſe of Levy but by force; which, if 'uſed, the Effect is fearful, and hath been 'fatal to the State. Whereas that by Par-'liament reſteth principally on the Regal 'Perſon, who may with eaſe and ſafety 'mould them to his fit Deſigns, by a gra-'cious yielding to their juſt Deſires and 'Petitions.

'IF a Parliament then be the moſt ſpeedy 'Aſſurance and ſafe Way, it is fit to con-'ceive what is the ſureſt way to act and 'work that to the preſent need.

'FIRST, for the time of uſual Summons, 'forty Days, reputed to be too large for this 'preſent neceſſity, it may be by dating the 'Writs leſſen'd, ſince it is no poſitive Law; 'ſo that a care be had, that there may be a 'County-day after the Sheriff hath receiv'd 'the Writ, before the time of ſitting. If 'then the Sum to be levied be once granted 'and agreed of the time, there may be in 'the body of the Grant an Aſſignment made 'to the Knights of every County reſpectively, 'who under ſuch aſſurance may ſafely give 'ſecurity proportionable to the Receipts, to 'ſuch as ſhall adventure in preſent for the 'Public Service, any ſums of Money.

THE laſt and weightieſt Conſideration, 'if a Parliament be thought fit, is, How to 'remove or compoſe the Differences be-'tween the King and the Subjects in their 'mutual Demands. And what I have 'learned amongſt the better ſort of the 'Multitude, I will freely declare, that your 'Lordſhips may be the more enabled to 'remove, and anſwer thoſe diſtruſts that 'either concern Religion, public Safety of 'the King and State, or the juſt Liberty 'of the Commonwealth.

'Religion is a Matter that they lay neareſt 'to their Conſciences, and they are led by 'this ground of Jealouſy, to doubt ſome 'practices againſt it. Firſt, for that tho' the 'Spaniſh Match was broken by the careful 'induſtry of my Lord of Buckingham, 'out of his religious care, (as he then de-'clared) that the Articles there demanded 'might lead to ſome ſuch ſufferance as 'might endanger the Quiet, if not the State 'of the reformed Religion here; yet there 'have (when he was an Actor principal in 'the Conditions of France) as hard, if not 'worſe to the preſervation of our Reli-'gion, paſſed, than thoſe with Spain. And 'the Suſpect is ſtrengthened by the cloſe 'keeping of this Agreement, and doubt in 'them of his Affection, in that his Mother 'and others, many his Miniſters of near 'Employment about him, are ſo affected.

'THEY talk much of his advancing 'Men, popiſhly devoted, to places in the 'Camp of neareſt Service and chief Com-'mand; and that the Recuſants have got 'theſe late Years, by his power, more Cou-'rage and Aſſurance than before.

'IF to clear theſe Doubts, (which 'perhaps are worſe in Fancy than in 'Truth) he take a courſe, it might much 'advance the public Service againſt the 'ſqueamiſh Humours, that have more of vio-'lent Paſſion than of ſettled Judgement, 'and are not the leaſt of the oppoſite num-'ber in the Commonwealth.

'THE next is the late Misfortunes and 'Loſſes of Men, Munition, and Honour in 'the late Undertakings abroad; which the 'more temperate Spirits impute to want of 'Counſel, and the more ſublime Wits, to 'Practice.

'THEY begin with the Palatinate, 'and lay the fault of the loſs thereof on 'the imputed Credit of Gondomar, diſ-'truſting him for the ſtaying of ſupply to 'Sir Horatio Vere, when Colonel Cecil was 'caſt on that Employment; by which the 'King of Spain became Maſter of the King's 'Childrens Inheritance. And when Count 'Mansfield had a Royal Supply of Forces, 'to aſſiſt the Princes of our Party for the 'Recovery thereof, either Plot or Error 'defeated the Enterprize for us, to Spain's 'advantage. That Sir Robert Mansfield's 'Expedition to Algiers ſhould purchaſe 'only the Security and Guard of the Spaniſh 'Coaſts.

'TO ſpend many Hundred Thouſand 'Pounds in the Cadiz Voyage, againſt the 'Advice in Parliament, only to warn the 'King of Spain to be in a readineſs, and ſo 'ourſelves weaken'd, is taken for a ſign of 'an ill-affection, among the Multitude.

'THE ſpending of much Munition, Victu-'als, and Money, in my Lord Willoughby's 'Journey, is counted an unthrifty Error 'in the Director of it. To diſarm ourſelves 'in fruitleſs Voyages, may ſeem a Plot of 'Danger.

'IT was held not long ago, a fundamen-'tal Rule of our Neighbours, and our Se-'curity, by the old Lord Burleigh, That 'nothing can prevent the Spaniſh Monarchy, 'but a Faſtneſs of thoſe two Princes whoſe 'Amity gave Countenance and Courage to 'the Netherlands and German Princes, to 'make head againſt his Ambition. And 'we ſee by this Diſunion, a fearful Defeat

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'hath happened to the King of Denmark 'and that Party, to the advantage of the 'Auſtrian Family.

'AND this waſte of public Treaſure in 'fruitleſs Expeditions, will be an important 'Cauſe to hinder any new Supply in Par-'ment.

'ANOTHER fear that may diſturb the 'ſmooth and ſpeedy paſſage of the King's De-'ſires in Parliament, is the vaſt waſte of the 'King's Livelihood; whereby is like, as in 'former times, to ariſe this jealouſy and fear, 'That when he hath not of his own to 'ſupport his ordinary Charge, for which 'the Lands of the Crown were ſettled un-'alterable, and called Sacrum Patrimo-'nium Principis, that then he muſt needs 'of neceſſity reſt upon thoſe Aſſiſtances of 'the People, which ever were only col-'lected and conſigned for the Common-'wealth; from whence it is like there will 'be no great labour and ſtiffneſs to induce 'his Majeſty to an Act of Reſumption: 'ſince ſuch Deſires of the State have found 'an eaſy way in the Will of all Princes, 'from the Third Henry unto the laſt.

'BUT that which is like to paſs the 'deepeſt into their Diſputes and Care, is 'the late Preſſures they ſuppoſed to have 'been made upon the Public Liberty and 'Freedom of the Subject, in commanding 'their Goods without aſſent of Parliament, 'impriſoning and confining their Perſons 'without ſpecial Cauſe declared, and that 'made good againſt them by the Judges 'lately; and pretending a Writ to com-'mand their attendances in foreign War: All 'which they are like to enforce as repug-'nant to any poſitive Laws, Inſtitutions, and 'cuſtomary Immunities of this Common-'wealth.

AND theſe dangerous Diſtreſſes to the 'People are not a little improved by the 'unexampled Courſe, as they conceive, of 'retaining an inland Army in Winter Seaſon, 'when former Times of general fear, as in 'Eighty-eight, produced none ſuch; and 'makes them in their diſtracted fears, to 'conjecture idly, it was raiſed wholly to 'ſubject their Fortunes to the Will of Power 'rather than of Law; and to make good 'ſome farther Breach upon their Liberties 'and Freedom at home, rather than defend 'us from any Force abroad. How far ſuch 'Jealouſies, if they meet with any unuſual 'Diſorder of lawleſs Soldiers, are an apt 'Diſtemper of the looſe and needy Multi-'tude, which will eaſily turn away upon 'any occaſion in the State that they can ſide 'withall, as a glorious pretence of Religion 'and publick Safety, when their true End 'will be only Rapine and Ruin of all, is 'worthy a prudent and preventing Care.

'I have thus far delivered with that free-CHARLES I. 'dom you pleaſed to admit, ſuch Difficul-A°. 1628. 'ties as I have taken up amongſt the Mul-'titude, as may arreſt, if not remove Im-'pediments to any Supply in Parliament; 'which, how to facilitate, may better be-'come the care of your Judgements than 'my Ignorance.

'ONLY I could wiſh to remove away a 'perſonal Diſtaſte of my Lord Duke of 'Buckingham amongſt the People: He 'might be pleaſed, if there be a neceſſity of 'Parliament, to appear firſt Adviſer there-'unto, and of the ſatisfaction it ſhall pleaſe 'his Majeſty of Grace to give at ſuch time 'to his People, which I would wiſh to be 'grounded by Precedent of his beſt and 'fortunate Progenitors; and which I con-'ceive will ſatisfy the Deſires and Hopes of 'all, if it may appear in ſome ſort to be 'drawn down from him to the People by 'the zealous Care and Induſtry that my 'Lord Duke of Buckingham hath of the 'public Unity and Content. By which 'there is no doubt but he may remain not 'only ſecure from any further Quarrel with 'them, but merit a happy Memory amongſt 'them of a zealous Patriot. For, to ex-'piate the Paſſion of the People at ſuch 'times, with ſacrifice of any of his Ma-'jeſty's Servants, I have found it, as in 'Edward II. Richard II. Henry VI. no 'leſs fatal to the Maſter, than to the Mi-'niſters in the end.'

'TIS plain from the laſt Clauſe of this Speech, that Sir Robert foreſaw the next Houſe of Commons would fall upon the Duke of Buckingham; and therefore he adviſed the King ſo to order it, that the Duke might be the firſt who in full Council ſhould move for the calling of a Parliament.

THESE and the like Conſiderations being repreſented to the King, and the Duke having acted his part dextrouſly, a Reſolution was formed unanimouſly at the Council-Table, on the 29th of January, for a Parliament to meet on the 17th of March following. And to prepare the way, Warrants were ſent according to a precedent Order made in this Month, to releaſe the Gentry who were confined for the Loan-Money. And as faſt as Writs came down to the Counties and Boroughs for choice of the Members, thoſe Gentlemen who had ſuffered for the Loan, were by the People thought the fitteſt to ſerve in the enſuing Parliament, in order to preſent their Grievances, and aſſert their Liberties. And accordingly 27 of them were choſe.

ORDERS were iſſued alſo from the Council to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to uſe moderation in demanding the Loan from the Citizens, who deferred payment; which is an indication that ſome People ſtill ſtood out, and that violence had been hitherto uſed to compel them. And among other mollifying Arts, Abbot, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who had been confined to one of his Houſes, for refuſing to licenſe Sibthorp's Sermon; Williams, Biſhop of Lincoln, who was priſoner in the Tower, for oppoſing the Loan; and John Digby Earl of Briſtol, who, as is before obſerved, had been committed to the Cuſtody of the Black Rod; had Writs ſent to them by Order of the King and Council, to ſit this enſuing Parliament in the Houſe of Peers. The Biſhop indeed received a Letter from the Lord-Keeper Coventry a Month before the Parliament met, to diſſuade him from appearing; but he reſolved to ſtand upon his Privilege, and wrote thus to the Lord-Keeper: I muſt crave ſome time to reſolve by the beſt Counſels which God ſhall give me, whether I ſhall obey your Lordſhip's Letter, tho' mentioning his Majeſty's Pleaſure, before my own Right, which by the Law of God and Man I may in all humility maintain. This he did accordingly, and his Writ was not deny'd.

But notwithſtanding theſe conciliating ways of Wiſdom and Juſtice, ſome unhappy meaſures were taken at this time, which only ſerved to renew the late Fears and Jea-

Jealouſies. For on the 30th of January, the Day after the Writs were teſted, the King gave direction for a Commiſſion to 23 Lords, of whom Archbiſhop Laud was one, to paſs the Seals, to raiſe Money through the Nation by Impoſitions, in the nature of an Exciſe; and at the ſame time ordered the Lord-Treaſurer to pay 30000 l. to Philip Burlemac, a Dutch Merchant in London, to be by him remitted to the Low-Countries by Bill of Exchange to Sir William Balfour and John Dalbier, for the raiſing of 1000 Horſe, with Arms both for Horſe and Foot; the intent of which German Horſe was, as it was then apprehended, to inforce the ſaid Exciſe. The Council alſo had under conſideration the levying of Ship-Money upon the Counties for the King's Uſe; but now a Parliament was called, they did not think fit to debate theſe matters any longer.

A little before the Parliament met, a Society of Recuſants, of whom ſeveral were found to be Jeſuits, were taken at a Houſe in Clerkenwell, which was intended to be a College of that Order. Among their Papers was found the following Copy of a Letter written to their Father Rector at Bruſſels, which diſcovered the Deſigns they had upon this State, the Judgement they had formed of it, and the Hopes they had conceived of the enſuing Parliament.

Father Rector,

'LET not the damp of Aſtoniſhment 'ſeize upon your ardent and zealous 'Soul, in apprehending the ſudden and unexpected calling of a Parliament. We 'have not oppoſed, but rather furthered it: 'ſo that we hope as much in this Parliament, as ever we feared any in Queen 'Elizabeth's Days.

'YOU muſt know, the Council is engaged 'to aſſiſt the King by way of Prerogative, 'in caſe the Parliamentary way ſhould fail. 'You ſhall ſee this Parliament will reſemble 'the Pelican, which takes a pleaſure to 'dig out her own Bowels with her Beak.

'THE Election of Knights and Burgeſſes 'hath been in ſuch confuſion of apparent 'Faction, as that which we were wont to 'procure heretofore with much Art and Induſtry (when the Spaniſh Match was in 'treaty) now breaks out naturally as Botch 'or Boil, and ſpits and ſpues out its own 'Rancour and Venom.

'YOU remember how that famous and 'immortal Stateſman the Count of Gondomar, fed King James's Fancy, and rock'd 'him aſleep with the ſoft and ſweet ſound 'of Peace, to keep up the Spaniſh Treaty. 'Likewiſe we were much bound to ſome 'Stateſmen of our own Country, for gaining time by procuring thoſe moſt advantageous Ceſſations of Arms in the Palatinate, and advancing the Honour and Integrity of the Spaniſh Nation, and vilifying the Hollanders; remonſtrating to King James, That that State was moſt ungrateful both to his Predeceſſor Queen Elizabeth, and his ſacred Majeſty: that the States were more obnoxious than the Turk, and perpetually injured his Majeſty's loving Subjects in the Eaſt-Indies; and likewiſe they have uſurped from his Majeſty the Regality and unvaluable Profit of the narrow Seas, in fiſhing upon the Engliſh Coaſt, &c.

'THIS great Stateſman had but one principal means to further their great and good Deſigns, which was to ſet on King James, that none but the Puritan Faction, which plotted nothing but Anarchy, and his Confuſion, were averſe to this moſt happy Union. We ſteered on the ſame Courſe, and have made great uſe of this Anarchical Election, and have prejudicated and anticipated the Great one, that none but the King's Enemies, and his are choſen of this Parliament, &c.

'WE have now many ſtrings to our Bow, and have ſtrongly fortified our Faction, and have added two Bulwarks more: For when King James lived (you know) he was very violent againſt Arminianiſm, and interrupted (with his peſtilent Wit and deep Learning) our ſtrong Deſigns in Holland, and was a great Friend to that old Rebel and Heretic the Prince of Orange.

'NOW we have planted that ſovereign Drug Arminianiſm, which we hope will purge the Proteſtants from their Hereſy, and it flouriſheth and bears Fruit in due ſeaſon.

'THE Materials which build up our Bulwark, are the Projectors and Beggars of all Ranks and Qualities: Howſoever, both theſe Factions co-operate to deſtroy the Parliament, and to introduce a new Species and Form of Government, which is Oligarchy.

'THOSE ſerve as decent Mediums and Inſtruments to our end, which is the univerſal Catholic Monarchy. Our Foundation muſt be Mutation, and Mutation will cauſe a Relaxation, which will ſerve as ſo many violent Diſeaſes, as the Stone, Gout, &c. to the ſpeedy diſtraction of our perpetual and inſufferable anguiſh of Body, which is worſe than Death itſelf.

'WE proceed now by Counſel and mature Deliberation how and when to work upon the Duke's Jealouſy and Revenge. And in this we give the Honour to thoſe which merit it, which are the Church Catholicks.

'THERE is another matter of conſequence, which we take much into our Con-

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'Conſideration and tender Care, which is 'to ſtave off the Puritans, that they hang 'not in the Duke's Ears: They are impu-'dent ſubtile People; and it is to be feared 'leſt they ſhould negociate a Reconciliation 'between the Duke and the Parliament. 'Tis certain, the Duke would gladly have 'reconciled himſelf to the Parliament at 'Oxford and Weſtminſter; but now we 'aſſure ourſelves, we have ſo handled the 'matter, that both Duke and Parliament 'are irreconcileable.

'FOR the better prevention of the Pu-'ritans, the Arminians have already loc-'ked up the Duke's Ears; and we have 'thoſe of our own Religion, which ſtand 'continually at the Duke's Chamber, to 'ſee who goes in and out: We cannot be 'too circumſpect and careful in this regard.

'I cannot chuſe but laugh to ſee how 'ſome of our own Coat have accoutred 'themſelves; you would ſcarce know them 'if you ſaw them: And 'tis admirable, how 'in Speech and Geſture they act the Puri-'tans. The Cambridge Scholars, to their 'woful Experience, ſhall ſee we can act 'the Puritans a little better than they have 'done the Jeſuits: They have abuſed our 'ſacred Patron St. Ignatius in jeſt, but we 'will make them ſmart for it in earneſt. 'I hope you will excuſe my merry Di-'greſſion: For I confeſs unto you, I am 'at this time tranſported with Joy, to ſee 'how happily all Inſtruments and Means, 'as well great as leſs, co-operate unto our 'purpoſes.

'BUT to return unto the main Fabric: 'Our Foundation is Arminianiſm. The 'Arminians and Projectors, as appears in 'the premiſſes, affect mutation; this we 'ſecond and inforce by probable Arguments. 'In the firſt place, we take into conſidera-'tion the King's Honour and preſent Ne-'ceſſity; and we ſhew how the King may 'free himſelf of his Ward, as Lewis XI.

The Jeſuits Hopes from an Exciſe.

'did. And for his great Splendor and 'Luſtre, he may raiſe a vaſt Revenue, and 'not be beholden to his Subjects; which is 'by way of Impoſition of Exciſe. Then 'our Church Catholicks proceed to ſhew 'the means how to ſettle this Exciſe, which 'muſt be by a mercenary Army of Horſe 'and Foot. For the Horſe, we have made 'that ſure; they ſhall be Foreigners and 'Germans who will eat up the King's Re-'venues, and ſpoil the Country whereſo-'ever they come, though they ſhould be 'well paid: What Havock will they make 'there, when they get no pay, or are not 'duly paid? They will do more miſchief 'than we hope the Army will do.

'WE are provident and careful, that 'this mercenary Army of 2000 Horſe and '20000 Foot ſhall be taken on and in pay 'before the Exciſe be ſettled. In forming 'the Exciſe, the Country is moſt likely to 'riſe: If the mercenary Army ſubjugate 'the Country, then the Soldiers and Pro-'jectors ſhall be paid out of the Confiſca-'tions; if the Country be too hard for 'the Soldiers, then they muſt conſequently 'mutiny, which is equally advantageous unto 'us. Our ſuperlative Deſign is, to work 'the Proteſtants as well as the Catholics 'to welcome in a Conqueror, and that is by 'this means: We hope inſtantly to diſſolve 'Trades, and hinder the building of Ship-'ping, in deviſing probable Deſigns, and 'putting on the State upon Expeditions, as 'that of Cadiz was, in taking away the 'Merchants Ships, ſo that they may not 'eaſily catch and light upon the Weſt-'India Fleet, &c.'

THIS third Parliament met on the Day aforeſaid at Weſtminſter, when Biſhop Laud preached the Sermon, and the King made the following Speech to both Houſes.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech at the opening of the third Parliament.

'THESE Times are for Action: Where-'fore, for Example ſake, I mean not 'to ſpend much time in words; expecting 'accordingly that your (as I hope) good 'Reſolutions will be ſpeedy, not ſpending 'time unneceſſarily, or (that I may better 'ſay) dangerouſly. For tedious Conſulta-'tions, at this Conjuncture of Time, are as 'hurtful as ill Reſolutions.

'I am ſure you now expect from me, 'both to know the Cauſe of your Meeting, 'and what to reſolve: Yet I think there is 'none here but knows that common Dan-'ger is the Cauſe of this Parliament, and 'that Supply at this time is the chief End 'of it: So that I need but point to you 'what to do. I will uſe but few perſua-'ſions: For if to maintain your own Ad-'vices, and as now the caſe ſtands for the 'following thereof, the true Religion, Laws 'and Liberties of this State, and the juſt 'Defence of our true Friends and Allies, 'be not ſufficient, then no Eloquence of 'Men or Angels will prevail.

'ONLY let me remember you, That my 'Duty moſt of all, and every one of yours 'according to his degree, is to ſeek the 'maintenance of the Church and Common-'wealth: And certainly there never was a 'time in which this Duty was more ne-'ceſſarily required than now.

'I therefore judging a Parliament to be 'the ancient, ſpeedieſt, and beſt way in 'this time of common Danger, to give ſuch 'Supply as to ſecure ourſelves, and to ſave 'our Friends from imminent Ruin, have 'called you together. Every Man now 'muſt do according to his Conſcience: 'Wherefore if you (which God forbid) 'ſhould not do your Duties, in contributing 'what the State at this time needs, I muſt, 'in diſcharge of my Conſcience, uſe thoſe 'other Means which God hath put into 'my hands, to ſave that which the Follies

'of particular Men may otherwiſe hazard 'to loſe.

'TAKE not this as a Threatning, for I 'ſcorn to threaten any but my Equals; but 'an admonition from him, that both out 'of Nature and Duty, hath moſt care of 'your Preſervations and Proſperities. And '(though I thus ſpeak) I hope that your 'Demeanours at this time will be ſuch, as 'ſhall not only make me approve your 'former Counſels, but lay on me ſuch Ob-'ligations, as ſhall tie me by way of Thank-'fulneſs, to meet often with you: For be 'aſſured, that nothing can be more pleaſing 'unto me, than to keep a good Correſpon-'dence with you.

'I will only add one thing more, and 'then leave my Lord-Keeper to make a 'ſhort Paraphraſe upon the Text I have 'delivered you; which is, To remember a 'Thing, to the end we may forget it. You 'may imagine that I came here with a 'doubt of Succeſs in what I deſire, remem-'bring the Diſtractions of the laſt Meeting: 'But I aſſure you, that I ſhall very eaſily 'and gladly forget and forgive what is paſt, 'ſo that you will at this preſent time leave 'the former ways of Diſtractions, and fol-'low the Counſel late given you, To main-'tain the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond 'of Peace.'

THE Lord-Keeper ſeconded his Ma-jeſty in this manner:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Lord Keeper's Speech on the preſent State of Affairs in Europe.

'YE are here in Parliament by his 'Majeſty's Writ and Royal Com-'mandment, to conſult and conclude of 'the weighty and urgent Buſineſs of this 'Kingdom; weighty it is, and great; as 'great as the Honour, Safety, and Pro-'tection of Religion, King, and Country: 'And what can be greater? Urgent it is; 'it is little pleaſure to tell or think how 'urgent: And to tell it with Circumſtan-'ces, were a long work. I will but touch 'the ſum of it in few words.

'THE Pope and Houſe of Auſtria have 'long affected, the one a Spiritual, the o-'ther a Temporal Monarchy: And to effect 'their Ends, to ſerve each other's turn, the 'Houſe of Auſtria, beſides the rich and 'vaſt Territories of both the Indies, and 'in Africa, joined together, are become 'Maſters of Spain and Italy, and the great 'Country of Germany. And altho' France 'be not under their Subjection, yet they 'have environed all about it; the very 'Bowels of the Kingdom are ſway'd by the 'Popiſh Faction: They have gotten ſuch 'a part, and ſuch interceſſion in the Go-'vernment, that under pretence of Reli-'gion, to root out the Proteſtants and our 'Religion, they have drawn the King to 'their adherence ſo far, that albeit upon 'his Majeſty's interpoſition by his Ambaſſa-'dors, and his engagement of his Royal 'Word, there were between the King and 'his Subjects Articles of Agreement, and 'the Subjects were quiet; whereof his Ma-'jeſty intereſted in that great Treaty, was 'bound to ſee a true accompliſhment: yet 'againſt that ſtrict Alliance, that Treaty 'hath been broken, and thoſe of the Re-'ligion have been put to all Extremity, 'and undoubtedly will be ruined without 'preſent help. So as that King is not only 'diverted from aſſiſting the common Cauſe, 'but hath been miſled to engage himſelf 'in hoſtile Acts againſt our King and other 'Princes, making way thereby for the 'Houſe of Auſtria, to the Ruin of his own 'and other Kingdoms.

'OTHER Potentates, that in former 'times did balance and interrupt the grow-'ing Greatneſs of the Houſe of Auſtria, 'are now removed and diverted. The 'Turk hath made Peace with the Emperor, 'and turned himſelf wholly into Wars 'with Aſia. The King of Sweden is em-'broiled in a War with Poland, which is 'invented by Spaniſh practices, to keep 'that King from ſuccouring our part: 'The King of Denmark is chaſed out of 'his Kingdom on this and on that ſide the 'Sound; ſo as the Houſe of Auſtria is on 'the point to command all the Sea-Coaſts, 'from Dantzic to Embden, and all the Ri-'vers falling into the Sea in that great extent: 'So as beſides their power by Land, they 'begin to threaten our part by Sea, to the 'ſubverſion of all our State.

'IN the Baltic Sea, they are providing 'and arming all the Ships they can build or 'hire; and have at this time their Am-'baſſadors treating at Lubeck, to draw 'into their Service the Hanſe-Towns; 'whereby taking from us and our Neigh-'bours the Eaſtland Trade, by which our 'ſhipping is ſupplied, they expect without 'any Blow given, to make themſelves Ma-'ſters of that Sea. In theſe Weſtern parts, 'by the Dunkirkers, and by the now 'French and Spaniſh Admiral, to the ruin 'of Fiſhing (of infinite conſequence both 'to us and the Low-Countries) they in-'feſt all our Coaſt, ſo as we paſs not ſafely 'from Port to Port. And that Fleet which 'lately aſſiſted the French at the Iſle of 'Rhee, is now preparing at St. Andrews, 'with other Ships built on the Coaſt of 'Biſcay to reinforce it; and a great Fleet 'is making ready in Liſbon, where, be-'ſides their own, they do ſerve themſelves 'upon all Strangers Bottoms coming to that 'Coaſt for Trade: And theſe great Prepa-'rations are, no doubt, to aſſault us in Eng-'land or Ireland, as they ſhall find advan-'tage, and a Place fit for their Turn.

'OUR Friends of the Netherlands, be-'ſides the Fear that juſtly troubles them, 'leſt the whole Force of the Emperor may 'fall down upon them, are diſtracted by their

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'Voyages into the East, which hath carried both Men and Money into another World, and much weaken'd them at home.

'THUS are we even ready on all sides to be swallow'd up; the Emperor, France and Spain being in open War against us; Germany over-run, the King of Denmark distressed, the King of Sweden diverted, and the Low-Country Men disabled to give us Assistance.

'I speak not this to increase Fear, unworthy of English Courages, but to press to Provision worthy the Wisdom of a Parliament: And for that cause his Majesty hath called you hither, that by a timely Provision against those great imminent Dangers, ourselves may be strengthened at home, our Friends and Allies encouraged abroad, and those great Causes of Fear scatter'd and dispell'd.

'AND because in all warlike Preparations, Treasure bears the Name, and holds the Semblance of the Nerves and Sinews; and if a Sinew be too short or too weak; if it lie either shrunk or strained, the Part becomes unuseful: It is needful that you make a good and timely Supply of Treasure, without which, all Counsels will prove fruitless. I might press many Reasons to this end; but I will but name few.

'FIRST, For his Majesty's sake, who requires it. Great is the Duty which we owe him by the Law of God; great by the Law of Nature, and our own Allegiance; great for his own Merit, and the Memory of his ever-blessed Father. I do but point at them: but methinks our Thoughts cannot but recoil on one Consideration touched by his Majesty, which to me seems to sound like a Parliamentary Pact or Covenant.

'A War was advised here, Assistance professed, yea, and protested here: I do but touch it, I know you will deeply think on it; and the more, for the Example the King hath set you; his Lands, his Plate, his Jewels he hath not spared to supply the War: What the People hath protested, the King, for his part, hath willingly performed.

'SECONDLY, For the Cause sake. It concerns us in Christian Charity to tender the Distresses of our Friends abroad; it concerns us in Honour not to abandon them, who have stood for us. And if this comes not close enough, you shall find our Interest so woven and involved with theirs, that the Cause is more ours than theirs. If Religion be in peril, we have the most flourishing and orthodox Church: If Honour be in question, the Stories and Monuments in former Ages will shew, that our Ancestors have left us as much as any Nation: If Trade and Commerce be in danger, we are Islanders, it is our Life. All these at once lie at stake, and so doth our Safety and Being.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'LASTLY, in respect of the manner of his Majesty's Demand, which is in Parliament, the way that hath ever best pleased the Subjects of England. And good Cause for it: For, Aids granted in Parliament work good Effects for the People; they be commonly accompanied with wholesome Laws, gracious Pardons, and the like. Besides, just and good Kings finding the Love of their People, and the Readiness of their Supplies, may the better forbear the Use of their Prerogatives, and moderate the Rigour of their Laws towards their Subjects.

'THIS way, as his Majesty hath told you, he hath chosen, not as the only way, but as the fittest; not as destitute of others, but as most agreeable to the Goodness of his own most gracious Disposition, and to the Desire and Weal of his People. If this be deferred, Necessity and the Sword of the Enemy make way to the others. Remember his Majesty's Admonition, I say, remember it.

'LET me but add, and observe God's Mercy towards this Land above all others. The Torrent of War hath overwhelmed other Churches and Countries; but God hath hitherto restrained it from us, and still gives us warning of every approaching Danger, to save us from Surprize. And our gracious Sovereign, in a true sense of it, calls together his High-Court of Parliament, the lively Representation of the Wisdom, Wealth and Power of the whole Kingdom, to join together to repel those hostile Attempts, which distressed our Friends and Allies, and threatned ourselves.

'AND therefore it behoves all to apply their Thoughts unto Counsel and Consultations, worthy the Greatness and Wisdom of this Assembly; to avoid Discontents and Divisions, which may either distemper or delay; and to attend that Unum Necessarium, the common Cause; propounding for the Scope and Work of all the Debates, the general Good of the King and Kingdom, whom God hath joined together with an indissoluble Knot, which none must attempt to cut or unty. And let all, by Unity and good Accord, endeavour to pattern this Parliament by the best that have been, that it may be a Pattern to future Parliaments, and may infuse into Parliaments a kind of multiplying Power and Faculty, whereby they may be more frequent, and the King our Sovereign may delight to sit on his Throne, and from thence to distribute his Graces and Favours amongst his People.

'HIS Majesty hath given you Cause to be confident of this you have heard from his Royal Mouth; which nevertheless he 'hath

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'hath given me expreſs command to re-
'double: If this Parliament by their dutiful
'and wiſe Proceedings, ſhall but give this
'Occaſion, his Majeſty will be ready, not 'only to manifeſt his gracious Acceptation,
'but to put out all Memory of thoſe
'Diſtaſtes that have troubled former Par-
'liaments.

'I have but one thing more to add, and 'that is, As your Conſultations be ſerious,
'ſo let them be ſpeedy. The Enemy is 'beforehand with us, and flies on the 'Wings of Succeſs. We may dally and 'play with the Hour-glaſs that is in our 'power, but the Hour will not ſtay for 'us; and an Opportunity once loſt cannot 'be regained.

'AND therefore reſolve of your Sup'plies, that they may be timely and ſuf-
'ficient, ſerving the Occaſion: Your Coun-
'ſel, your Aid, all is but loſt, if your Aid
'be either too little or too late: And his 'Majeſty is reſolved, that his Affairs can'not permit him to expect it over-long.'

Remarks on both Speeches.

THESE two Speeches plainly enough demonſtrated the King's Principles concerning the Uſe of Parliaments, and what his Intentions were, in caſe he received not the expected Satisfaction from the preſent. Inſtead of being ſo complaiſant as to court his Parliament, he thought it a wonderful piece of Condeſcenſion to declare, That altho' he had other ways of raiſing Money, he was very willing to follow the old Method of demanding a Supply from the Parliament; but for fear the Commons ſhould think he was drove to it by a kind of Neceſſity, he took care to let them know, that if the Money he wanted was not granted, he had it in his power to raiſe it other ways.

As to the Arguments alledged by the Lord-Keeper, to ſtir up the Commons to give the King a plentiful Supply, they were too much exaggerated to have any great Effect. The pretended Preparations of the Spaniards to invade England, were a mere Chimæra; for during the whole War, the Spaniards made no Attempt upon Great Britain or Ireland: Nay, it was in the King's power to make Peace with the Spaniard, who had no demands upon him, and yet he would fain make it believed, that England was in imminent Danger. As to the Argument ſo often repeated, that the Parliament had adviſed the War, it was ſo worn out, that it could not make the leaſt impreſſion. There was not a Man in England at that time but what was very ſenſible, that the King and the Duke of Buckingham were the real Authors of the Spaniſh War, and that it was by mere Fraud and Artifice that they got the Parliament to give the Advice, which the King always inſiſted on.

As a Proof that the Commons were then not ill-diſpoſed towards the Court, if the Court had ſhewn the leaſt Readineſs to give them Satisfaction about Grievances; the Houſe choſe Sir John Finch for their Speaker, who being preſented to the King on the 19th of March, made a Speech, as uſual, to be excuſed from that Office; but his Choice was approved by the King. It appears by a Copy of Sir John's Speech upon this Occaſion, which is preſerved among the MSS. of Bibliotheque Harley, that he excited his Majeſty to a Zeal againſt Popery by commending him for it. 'By your Royal Edict, ſaid he, you have 'baniſhed thoſe Incendiaries of Rome, the 'Prieſts and Jeſuits, Enemies to your Church 'and State. You have given Life to the 'Law againſt Recuſants, and by your own 'exemplary Piety, have drawn more than 'you have compell'd to come to Church.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

Sir John Finch choſe Speaker.

His Addreſs to the King.

BEFORE the Commons enter'd into any Debates, there was a long and bold Letter dropp'd on their Table, containing the particulars of the Nation's Grievances, and an earneſt Exhortation to the Commons to remember there could be no Safety but in the lawful Power of the Prince, and the Freedom of Parliament. 'How long, ſaid 'the Writer, are we to be treated like 'Children, and diverted in our purſuit? 'We are bugbear'd with Enemies abroad, 'to prevent our ſeeing thoſe at home. If 'the firſt are ſo much to be feared, why 'were they made ſo? The late King left 'us in Peace with all the World, what ne-'ceſſity was there that his Succeſſor ſhould 'declare War againſt Spain and France? 'Did he conſult his Parliament, and muſt 'we pay for the Follies of a Favourite, who 'has engaged him therein without Reaſon? 'We are apprehenſive of greater Evils from 'the Ambition of this Man, than from that 'of the Houſe of Auſtria: And the Armi-'nian Biſhops, Neale, Laud and Mounta-'gue, whoſe Protector he is, are no leſs for-'midable than the Jeſuits.'

This Letter was directed, To my noble Friends of the Lower Houſe of Parliament, and was induſtriouſly diſperſed abroad under the Title of A Speech without Doors. As it made a very great noiſe at that time, and as the Author was ſuppoſed to have been formerly a Member of that Houſe, it may be expected that we ſhould give ſome farther account of the Contents of it.

The Speech without Doors.

The Author ſays, 'That although his 'Country had not held him worthy to 'ſerve in this Parliament, as he had in 'many others, yet he would ſhew his 'Thankfulneſs to her, and communicate 'what he had obſerved in that grave and 'wiſe Aſſembly: That there was great 'Cauſe to look into the late Elections,

'Cor-

'Corporations being grown ſo baſe and 'timorous, that they would not hazard 'the Indignation of a Lord-Lieutenant, 'who underhand threaten'd them with a 'Muſket or a Horſe at the Muſter, if he had 'not the Election of their Burgeſſes; who 'are commonly ſuch as deſire it for Pro-'tection, or are ſo ignorant of the Place 'they ſerve for, that they have been obli-'ged to ask the next Man to them, whe-'ther it were a Sea or a Land-Town.

'Freedom of Speech hath been ancient, 'by the Teſtimony of Philip de Comines, 'who, in that reſpect, prefers our Parlia-'ments before other Aſſemblies; and if 'it ſhould be prohibited there when the 'People's Grievances are to be open'd, a 'Parliament would have no more Privilege 'than a Quarter-Seſſions. And what Re-'medy could the Subject have without it, 'againſt the Abuſes of thoſe in Authority, 'and of ſuch Servants where the Affections 'of Princes ſo far tranſport them, as to make 'them the only Perſons to whom they give 'Truſt and Credit? For in that caſe, what 'Subject dares complain or queſtion the 'Actions of ſuch a Servant, unleſs warran-'ted by his Freedom in Parliament? The 'ſureſt way is to examine the Grievances 'of the Kingdom, without touching upon 'the Perſon of any Man, farther than there 'is juſt occaſion; for otherwiſe you will 'conteſt with him who hath the Prince's 'Ears open, and will impute your En-'mity to him, to the Contempt of the King, 'and your ſeeking to leſſen his Authority. 'And no Prince could be ſo affectionate to 'a Servant, or ſuch an Enemy to himſelf, 'as not to admit of this indifferent proceed-'ing. One of Quality in the Iſle of Rhee 'endeavoured to conceal the number of 'Men loſt there, and confidently affirmed 'they were but 3 or 400 Men. But a 'Doctor of Phyſic, out of Conſcience and 'Duty, acquainted his Majeſty with the 'Truth, that there were 2000 loſt; which 'was ſo contrary to the Informer and his 'Deſigns, that the Phyſician was baniſhed 'the King's Preſence, and ſo continues. 'Which of theſe Reports is true, may be 'eaſily determined by the Clerks of the 'Bands of each Company, and is worth 'the diſcovery; for by that ſmall inſtance, 'his Majeſty might ſee how he was abuſed: 'And they that ſtick not thus to wrong a 'King, may as well caſt Aſperſions upon 'a Parliament. And for theſe Miſreports 'there is no Remedy but Freedom of 'Speech in Parliament; for while Subjects 'Tongues are tied for fear they ſhould 'touch him whoſe Conſcience cries guilty, 'the King and People are kept from a 'right Underſtanding; and all for one, who 'is like a Dragon that bites the Ear of 'the Elephant, becauſe he knoweth the 'Elephant cannot reach him with his 'Trunk.

'For Grievances, they are ſome gene-'ral, ſome particular; the general Grie-'vances are ſo many as will ſerve for 'every Member to preſent two a-piece to 'the view of the Houſe: And tho' I am, 'ſaid he, no Member now, yet in regard I 'have been one, I will preſent my two.

'1. TITLES of Honour, both in reſpect 'of the Parties themſelves, their Eſtates and 'Parentage, and of the manner of attaining 'thereto, which was mercenary, baſe and 'corrupt. Plutarch taught, that Men 'ſhould labour to deſerve Honour, but avoid 'the getting of it baſely; for it was much 'more honourable to deſerve and not to 'have it, than to have it and not to deſerve 'it. Honour gotten by Favour, was but 'blind Fortune; an Ounce of which at 'Court, was better than a Pound of Wiſ-'dom: And that which was compaſſed by 'Power, is plain Force. Examine the Con-'dition of Men raiſed to Honour within 'theſe 25 Years, whether it were Deſert, 'Favour, or Power that had preferred them; 'and how many hungry Courtiers have 'been raiſed to the higheſt Pitch of Honour. 'Enquire into their prince-like Expences in 'theſe 25 Years, their Eſtates at preſent, 'and what would maintain them and their 'Poſterity in their Honours: And it would 'be found how the annual Revenue of the 'Crown had been conſumed upon theſe 'unworthy Perſons. Such Advancements 'brought with them a Contempt of Great-'neſs, and an Emulation in Gentlemen, 'whoſe Families, Eſtates, and Deſerts 'might better challenge it. When Philip 'the Second of Spain enter'd Sword in 'hand upon his Kingdom of Portugal, 'the Portugueſe beſought him to grant 'them ſome few Privileges; one whereof 'was, that he would make no unworthy 'Perſons Noble, or without their Appro-'bation: Which was granted them; and 'he keeps that Kingdom in its ancient State, 'viz. two Dukes, one Marquis, and eigh-'teen Earls.

'2. THE other Grievance he recommen-'ded to their view, was, that of our Wars, 'the exceſſive Charges, vainly ſpent in it; 'the Unworthineſs of the People employ'd; 'the neglect of experienced Perſons; the 'Deſigns not warranted by Reaſon or Diſ-'cretion, and the Execution worſe per-'formed: For there were Abuſers of Prin-'ces, who perſuade them to War when 'they might live in Peace.

'HE ſaid, The Parliament (of which 'he was a Member) had an Aſperſion caſt 'upon it, That they drew his Majeſty 'into a War, and then failed to contri-'bute to it. Then in the Parliament at 'Oxford, Money being required of them 'towards furniſhing out the Fleet, it was 'for ſeveral Reaſons unanimouſly refuſed. 'Whereupon there was an offer made by 'him, who, next to the King, ſeem'd to 'have

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'have best Authority, That if they would 'contribute but 40000 l. they should 'chuse their Enemy; whereby it appears, 'that before that Proposition there was no 'Enemy, and therefore no War. And the 'Parliament instantly breaking up without 'any Enemy named, or Money consented 'to, how can the Parliament be taxed for 'Peace-breakers? In October following, 'the Fleet sailed to Cadiz; another Voy-'age followed the next Summer under the 'Earl of Lindsey. The last and most la-'mentable was that of the Isle of Rhee: 'he wished these Voyages, with that to 'Algier, might be referred to the Exami-'nation of experienced Officers by Land 'and Sea; and that after it had passed the 'Parliament's Approbation, it might be 'imparted to his Majesty, who would then 'see the difference between Actions well 'managed, and rash and heady Enter-'prizes; for the Probability of a Business 'was to be considered, as well as the Ne-'cessity, Profit and Honour of it. He 'said, it was observable in the Voyage of 'Cadiz, that a Land-Soldier commanded 'at Sea, who knew not what belong'd to 'it: And in that of Rhee, one commanded 'who was neither Soldier by Land nor Sea; 'and the Success proved accordingly in 'both; and yet neither questioned, but 'both highly advanced.

'THE Evils that followed upon these 'two Voyages, had been the Billeting of 'Soldiers on the Country, and bringing 'our Ships into Harbour, while the Pay of 'the one, and the Wages of the other, run 'on; and yet our Coasts so infested, that 'we durst not peep out of Harbour, But 'as for an Invasion, there could be no 'great fear of it, when our Ships were 'divided into so many Harbours, and our 'Soldiers in such a readiness: Besides, the 'Season of the Year was too late. Here's 'a Mass of Wealth consumed, and none 'the better for it but Soldiers; while the 'Poor were robb'd and spoil'd by those 'Fellows, and the Rich forced to stand 'upon their Guard, lest their Houses should 'be surprized and rifled. The first Di-'minution of the Greatness of the Roman 'Empire was by the insolence of Soldiers: 'And the first raising of the Ottoman Fa-'mily was by their connivance at their 'Army. Who ever saw, or thought to 'have seen Scots and Irish garrison'd in 'England, and no Enemy appear? Or 'our own People tyranniz'd over in our 'own Kingdom, and not dare to complain? 'Would our Fore-fathers have thought it 'policy to draw 2000 Scotch and Irish 'into the Isle of Wight for their Defence 'against France? Or that 2000 Mouths 'besides the Inhabitants, should live on 'the Food of that Island, to bring them 'into want of Victuals, in case they should 'be attempted in earnest, and in the mean 'time to suffer all Injuries from the hands 'of Strangers? They would have thought 'it fitter to have sent the English Soldiers 'to the Place where they were pressed, 'till there was further Occasion for them: 'To have supplied the Isle of Wight with '2000 Men from the main Land, when 'they thought it in any danger, rather 'than to have sent for them out of Ireland, 'and keep them in continual pay; and to 'have returned the barbarous Irish into 'their own Country, rather than to make 'them a vexation to the places where they 'were, and to have continued that need-'less and expensive course, wherein 2 or '300000 l. have been wastefully spent: 'for England wanted no Men, but could 'suddenly raise what Men his Majesty 'pleased, and could discharge them again 'without Trouble or Charge; and yet all 'the Song now was, To raise Money and 'exact it of the Subject. But if a Man 'complained of the evil Management, he 'was either imprisoned, banished the Court, 'or censured for a Male-content.

'He added, That one of the first Pro-'posals to the House would be for Money 'to support his Majesty's vast Expence at 'this time when the Enemy threatned the 'Kingdom; and their frequent Alarms 'might make them too secure: for in the 'last Parliament, Books were published of 'invincible Preparations, and nothing came 'of it; and yet they might be deceived 'by that old Saying, That a Lyar is not 'to be trusted when he speaks Truth. 'That they must give for their own sakes, 'their Sovereign's sake, and their Country's 'sake; but then they ought to declare the 'condition of the Kingdom, and that they 'were not of Ability to give as they would. 'As when Themistocles demanded Tribute 'of the Athenians, and told them he 'brought two Gods with him, Persuasion 'and Violence; they answered him, They 'had two other Gods in their Country, 'Poverty and Impossibility. And at this 'time, the Speech-maker's Advice was, 'That they present unto his Majesty 'their willing Hearts and Minds to repair 'and put to Sea his Navy; but they to 'have the power of making them able and 'serviceable, by the Advice of experienced 'Men that they might call unto them. 'This was a matter of great importance; 'for the Safety of the Kingdom, said he, 'depended upon this Bulwark: Hereby 'that matter might be managed without 'any trouble to his Majesty, who might 'dispose of the rest of his Revenue at his 'pleasure: And it would then appear that 'they were not against giving, but against 'the misemployment of it when given. And 'if any should inform his Majesty 'twas a 'derogation to his Honour to yield to his 'Subjects upon Conditions, how could it 'lessen the Reputation of a Prince to 'follow

Foedera Tom. XVIII.

'follow the Advice of his higheſt Counſellors? What Diſhonour rather were it, to 'be ruled by one Counſellor alone, to 'whom the whole Commonwealth had 'taken juſt Exception?' Thus far the Speech without doors.

On the 20th of March, the Houſe ſettled their Grand Committees for Religion, Grievances, Courts of Juſtice, and Trade; and drew up a Petition to the King for a publick Faſt: to which the Lords conſented. The Petition was as follows.

Petition for a Faſt day.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'WE your moſt humble and loyal 'Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and 'Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, upon a tender 'and compaſſionate Senſe of the extreme 'Calamities of the Reformed Churches 'abroad, and with much Sorrow apprehending the Diſpleaſure of Almighty 'God declared againſt ourſelves, the manifold Evils already fallen upon us, and 'thoſe which are further threatned, as by 'your Sacred Majeſty was intimated unto 'us, even to the utter Deſtruction and Subverſion of this Church and State, and 'which our Sins have juſtly deſerved; and 'being now by your Majeſty's gracious 'Favour aſſembled in Parliament as the 'great Council of this your Kingdom, to 'conſult of ſuch Means as we think fitteſt 'to redreſs the preſent and prevent the 'future Evils; wherein we, thro' God's 'Bleſſing, intend to employ our utmoſt 'Endeavours, humbly beſeech your Majeſty, That by your ſpecial Command, 'one or more Days may be forthwith ſolemnly ſet apart, wherein both ourſelves 'and the whole Kingdom may by Faſting 'and Prayers ſeek Reconciliation at the 'hands of Almighty God; and with 'humble and penitent Hearts beſeech him 'to remove thoſe Miſeries that lie upon 'us and our neighbour Churches; to avert 'thoſe which are threatned, to continue 'the Favours we yet enjoy, and particularly to beſtow his abundant Bleſſing upon 'your Majeſty and this preſent Parliament; 'ſo that all our Counſels and Reſolutions 'being bleſſed by his Divine Aſſiſtance, 'may produce much Honour and Safety to 'your Majeſty, your People and Allies.'

On the 22d, the Grievances were opened and warmly debated; as Billeting of Soldiers, Loans, Benevolences, Privy-Seals, Impriſonment of Subjects refuſing to lend, denial of Bail upon Habeas Corpus; and they ſeem'd determined to grant no Supply till the ſaid Grievances were redreſſed.

What was ſaid by the Chief Speakers on this Head, is ſo material, that we cannot think it will ſeem tedious to the Reader.

Sir Francis Seymour began thus:

Charles I.

A°. 1628. Debates touching Grievances. Sir Francis Seymour's Speech.

'THIS is the great Council of the 'Kingdom, and here (if not here 'alone) his Majeſty may ſee, as in a true 'Glaſs, the State of the Kingdom: We are 'called hither by his Majeſty's Writs to 'give him faithful Counſel, ſuch as may 'ſtand with his Honour: But this we muſt 'do without Flattery. We are ſent hither 'by the Commons to diſcharge that Truſt 'repoſed in us, by delivering up their juſt 'Grievances; and this we muſt do without 'Fear. Let us not therefore be like Cambyſes's Judges, who being demanded of 'their King, whether it were not lawful 'for him to do what in itſelf was unlawful, 'They (rather to pleaſe the King, than 'to diſcharge their own Conſciences) anſwered, that the Perſian Kings might 'do what they liſted. This baſe Flattery 'tends to Miſchief, being fitter for Reproof 'than Imitation; and as Flattery like Fear 'taketh away the Judgement, let us not 'then be poſſeſſed with Fear or Flattery, 'of Corruptions the baſeſt. For my own 'part, I ſhall ſhun both theſe, and ſpeak 'my Conſcience with as much Duty to his 'Majeſty, as any Man; yet not neglecting 'the Publick, in which his Majeſty and 'the Commonwealth have an Intereſt: But 'how can we ſhew our Affections whilſt 'we retain our Fears? or how can we think 'of giving Subſidies till we know whether 'we have any thing to give or no? for if 'his Majeſty be perſuaded by any to take 'from his Subjects what he will, and where 'it pleaſeth him, I would gladly know 'what we have to give? 'Tis true, it is 'ill with thoſe Subjects that ſhall give Laws 'to their Princes, and as ill with thoſe 'Princes which ſhall uſe force with thoſe 'Laws: that this hath been done, appeareth by the billeting of Soldiers, a 'thing no way advantageous to his Majeſty's ſervice, but a Burden to the Commonwealth; this alſo appeareth by the 'laſt Levy of Money againſt an Act of 'Parliament. Again, Mr. Speaker, what 'greater Proof can there be of this, than 'the impriſonment of divers Gentlemen for 'the Loan, who if they had done the contrary for fear, their Fault had been as 'great as theirs that were the Projectors of 'it; and to countenance theſe proceedings, 'hath it not been preached (or rather prated) in our Pulpits, that all we have is 'the King's, Jure Divino? Thus ſay theſe 'Time-ſervers, who forſake their Function, 'and turn ignorant Stateſmen. We ſee 'how willing they would be to change a 'good Conſcience for a Biſhopric: And, '(Mr. Speaker) we ſee how eaſy it is for a 'Prince, how juſt and good ſoever, to be 'abuſed; in regard he muſt ſee with other

'Men's Eyes, and hear with other Men's 'Ears. Let us not flatter his Majeſty; it 'is too apparent to all the World, the King 'and People ſuffer more now than ever; his 'Majeſty in his Affairs abroad, and his 'People in their Eſtates at home. But 'will you know the reaſon of all this; let 'us look back to the Actions of former 'Princes, and we ſhall find that thoſe Princes 'have been in greateſt Want and Extre-'mity that exacted moſt of their Subjects, 'and moſt unfortunate in the Choice of 'their Miniſters, and to have failed moſt 'in their Undertakings: Happy is that 'Prince who hath thoſe that are faithful 'of his Council. That which his Majeſty 'wanted in the Management of his Affairs 'concerning France and Spain, I am clear 'was his want of faithful Counſel to adviſe. 'The Reaſon is plain; a Prince is ſtrongeſt 'by faithful and wiſe Counſel: I would I 'could truly ſay, ſuch have been em-'ploy'd abroad. I will confeſs, and ſtill 'ſhall from my Heart, he is no good Sub-'ject, nor well-affected to his Majeſty and 'the State, that will not willingly and 'freely lay down his Life, when the End 'may be the Service of his Majeſty, and the 'Good of the Commonweal: But on the 'contrary, when againſt a Parliament-Law, 'the Subject ſhall have taken from him, his 'Goods againſt his Will, and his Liberty 'againſt the Laws of the Land, ſhall it be 'accounted want of Duty in us to ſtand 'upon our Privileges, hereditary to us, and 'confirmed by ſo many Acts of Parliament.

'IN doing this, we ſhall but tread the 'Steps of our Forefathers, who ever pre-'ferred the Publick Intereſt before their 'Right; nay, before their own Lives; nor 'can it be any wrong to his Majeſty, to 'ſtand upon them, ſo as that we may there-'by be the better enabled to do his Majeſty 'ſervice; but it will be a Wrong to us and 'our Poſterity, and our Conſciences, if we 'willingly forego that which belongs unto 'us by the Law of God, and of the Land; 'and this we ſhall do well to preſent unto 'his Majeſty; we have no cauſe to doubt 'of his Majeſty's gracious Acceptation.'

Sir Thomas Wentworth's Speech.

'THIS Debate (ſaid Sir Thomas Went-worth) carries a double Aſpect to-'wards the Sovereign and the Subject; 'tho' both be innocent, both are injured, 'and both to be cured. Surely, in the 'greateſt Humility I ſpeak it, theſe ille-'gal ways are Puniſhment and Marks of 'Indignation; the raiſing of Loans ſtreng-'thened by Commiſſion, with unheard-of 'Inſtructions and Oaths; the billeting of 'Soldiers by the Lieutenants and Deputy-'Lieutenants, have been, as if they would 'have perſuaded Chriſtian Princes, yea 'Worlds, that the Right of Empires had 'been to take away by ſtrong Hands; and 'they have endeavoured as far as poſſible 'for them, to do it. This hath not been 'done by the King (under the pleaſing 'Shade of whoſe Crown I hope we ſhall 'ever gather the fruits of Juſtice) but by 'Projectors, who have extended the Pre-'rogative of the King, beyond the juſt 'Symmetry which maketh a ſweet Har-'mony of the whole. They have brought 'the Crown into greater want than ever, by 'anticipating the Revenues: And can the 'Shepherd be thus ſmitten, and the Sheep 'not ſcattered? They have introduced a 'Privy-Council raviſhing at once the Spheres 'of all ancient Government; impriſoning 'us without either Bail or Bond; they have 'taken from us, what ſhall I ſay, indeed 'what have they left us? All means 'of ſupplying the King, and ingratiating 'ourſelves with him; taking up the Root 'of all Propriety, which if it be not ſea-'ſonably ſet again into the Ground by his 'Majeſty's own Hands, we ſhall have in-'ſtead of Beauty, Baldneſs. To the ma-'king of thoſe whole; I ſhall apply myſelf, 'and propound a Remedy to all theſe 'Diſeaſes. By one and the ſame thing 'have King and People been hurt, and by 'the ſame muſt they be cured; to vindi-'cate, what, new things? no, our ancient 'vital Liberties, by reinforcing the ancient 'Laws made by our Anceſtors, by ſetting 'forth ſuch a Character of them, as no li-'centious Spirit ſhall dare to enter upon 'them; and ſhall we think this is a way to 'break a Parliament? No, our Deſires are 'modeſt and juſt, I ſpeak truly, both for 'the Intereſt of King and People; if we 'enjoy not theſe, it will be impoſſible to 'relieve him.

'THERFORE let us never fear they 'ſhall not be accepted by his Goodneſs: 'Wherefore I ſhall ſhortly deſcend to my 'Motions, conſiſting of four parts; two of 'which have relation to our Perſons; two 'to the Propriety of Goods. For our Perſons; 'firſt, the freedom of them from Impri-'ſonment; ſecondly, from Employment 'abroad, contrary to the ancient Cuſtoms. 'For our Goods, that no Levies be made, 'but by Parliament; ſecondly, no billeting 'of Soldiers. It is moſt neceſſary that 'theſe be reſolved, that the Subject may 'be ſecured in both.'

Sir Benjamin Rudyard ſtood up as a Moderator, and ſpoke thus:

Sir Benjamin Rudyard acted as Moderator.

'THIS is the Criſis of Parliaments; 'we ſhall know by this, if Parlia-'ments live or die; the King will be valued 'by the Succeſs of us; the Counſels of this 'Houſe will have Operations in all; 'tis fit 'we be wiſe. His Majeſty begins to us 'with Affection, proclaiming that he will 'rely on his People's Love. Preſervation

'is natural; we are not now on the bene 'esse, but on the esse: be sure England is 'ours, and then prune it. Is it no small 'matter that we have provoked two most 'potent Kings? We have united them, and 'have betray'd ourselves more than our 'Enemies could. Men and Brethren, what 'shall we do? Is there no Balm in Gilead? 'If the King draw one way, and the Par-'liament another, we must all sink. I re-'spect no particular; I am not so wise to 'contemn what is determined by the major 'part; one Day tells another, and one Par-'liament instructs another. I desire this 'House to avoid all contestations; the Hearts 'of Kings are great: 'tis comely that Kings 'have the better of their Subjects; give 'the King leave to come off. I believe his 'Majesty expects but the Occasion: 'tis 'lawful and our Duty to advise his Ma-'jesty; but the way is to take a right 'Course to attain the right End; which I 'think may be thus, by trusting the King, 'and to breed a Trust in him, by giving 'him a large Supply according to his Wants, 'by prostrating our Grievances humbly at 'his Feet; from thence they will have the 'best way to his Heart, that is done in Duty 'to his Majesty. And to say all at once, 'let us all labour to get the King on our 'side; and this may be no hard matter, con-'sidering the near subsistence between the 'King and People.'

Sir Edward Coke spake next.

Sir Edward Coke's Speech.

'DUM tempus habemus, bonum ope- 'remur. I am absolutely for giving 'Supply to his Majesty, yet with some 'caution. To tell you of foreign Danger 'and inbred Evils I will not do it; the State 'is inclining to a Consumption, yet not in-'curable. I fear not foreign Enemies; 'God send us Peace at home. For this 'Disease I will propound Remedies; I 'will seek nothing out of my own Head, 'but from my Heart, and out of Acts of 'Parliament; I am not able to fly at all 'Grievances, but only at Loans: let us not 'flatter ourselves; who will give Subsidies, 'if the King may impose what he will? 'and if, after Parliament, the King may 'inhance what he pleaseth? I know the 'King will not do it; I know he is a reli-'gious King, free from personal Vices, but 'he deals with other Men's Hands, and 'sees with other Men's Eyes; will any 'give a Subsidy, that will be taxed after 'Parliament at pleasure? The King can-'not tax any by way of Loans. I differ 'from them who would have this of Loans 'go amongst Grievances; but I would have 'it go alone.

'I'll begin with a noble Record, it chears 'me to think of it; 25 Edw. III. It is 'worthy to be written in Letters of Gold; 'Loans against the Will of the Subject, are 'against Reason and the Franchises of the 'Land, and they desire Restitution: What 'a word is that Franchise? The Lord 'may tax his Villain high or low; but it 'is against the Franchises of the Land for 'Freemen to be taxed but by their consent 'in Parliament. Franchise is a French 'word, and in Latin is Libertas. In 'Magna Charta it is provided that Nul-'lus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur 'aut disseisietur de libero tenemento suo, '&c. nisi per legale judicium parium suo-'rum, vel per legem terræ; i. e. No Free-'man shall be arrested, or imprisoned, or 'turned out of his Freehold, &c. but by 'a legal Trial before his Peers, or by the 'Law of the Land. Which Charter hath 'been confirmed by good Kings above 'thirty times.'

When these Gentlemen had spoke, Sir John Cook, Secretary of State, took up the Matter for the King, and concluded for redress of Grievances, so that Supplies take the precedency; saying,

Mr. Secretary Cook's Speech.

'I Had rather you would hear any than 'me; I will not answer what hath been 'already spoken; my desire is not to stir, 'but to quiet; not to provoke, but to ap-'pease; my desire is, that every one resort 'to his own Heart, to reunite the King and 'the State, and to take away the Scandal 'from us Every one speaks from the abun-'dance of his Heart: I do conclude out of 'every one's Conclusion, to give to the 'King, to redress Grievances; all the dif-'ference is about the Manner; we are all 'Inhabitants in one House, the Common-'wealth; let every one in somewhat amend 'his House; somewhat is amiss: But if all 'the House be on fire, will we then think 'of amending what is amiss? Will you not 'rather quench the Fire? The Danger all 'apprehend. The way that is propounded, 'I seek not to decline; illegal Courses have 'been taken, it must be confessed; the 'Redress must be by Laws and Punish-'ment; but withal, add the Law of Ne-'cessity: Necessity hath no Law; you must 'abilitate the State to do what you do by Pe-'tition require. It is wished we begin with 'Grievances; I deny not that we prepare 'them; but shall we offer them first? Will 'not this seem a Condition with his Ma-'jesty? Do we not deal with a wise King, 'jealous of his Honour? All Subsidies can-'not advantage his Majesty so much, as 'that his Subjects do agree to supply him. 'This will amaze the Enemy more than 'ten Subsidies: Begin therefore with the 'King, and not with ourselves.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Speech of Sir Robert Philips.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'THIS Day's Debate (ſaid Sir Robert Philips) makes me call to 'mind the Cuſtom of the Romans, who 'had a ſolemn Feaſt once a Year for their 'Slaves, at which time they had Liberty '(without exception) to ſpeak what they 'would, whereby to eaſe their afflicted 'Minds; which being finiſhed, they ſeve-'rally returned to their former Servitude. 'This may with ſome reſemblance and 'diſtinction well ſet forth our preſent State, 'where now, after the revolution of ſome 'time, and grievous Sufferings of many 'violent Oppreſſions, we have (as thoſe 'Slaves had) a Day of liberty of Speech; 'but ſhall not, I truſt, be herein Slaves; 'for we are free: We are not Bondmen, 'but Subjects. Theſe, after their Feaſt, 'were Slaves again; but 'tis our hope to 'return Freemen. I am glad to ſee this 'Morning's Work, to ſee ſuch a ſenſe of 'the Grievances under which we groan. 'I ſee a concurrence of Grief from all 'parts, to ſee the Subject wronged, and a 'fit way to ſee the Subject righted. I ex-'pected to ſee a Diviſion, but I ſee honou-'rable Conjunction, and I take it for a good 'Omen. It was wiſhed by one, that there 'were a forgetfulneſs of all; let him not 'proſper that wiſheth it not. No, there 'is no ſuch way to perfect Remedy as to 'forget Injuries; but not ſo to forget, as 'not to recover them. It was uſual in 'Rome to bury all Injuries, on purpoſe 'to recover them. It was ſaid by a Gentle-'man that ever ſpeaks freely, We muſt 'ſo govern ourſelves, as if this Parlia-'ment muſt be the Criſis of all Parlia-'ments, and this is the laſt. I hope well, 'and there will be no cauſe for the King, 'our Head, to except againſt us, or we 'againſt him. The Dangers abroad are 'preſented to us; he is no Engliſhman 'that is not apprehenſive of them.

'WE have provoked two potent Kings, '(the one too near) who are too ſtrongly 'joined together; the Dangers are not chi-'merical, but real, I acknowledge it; but 'it muſt be done in proportion of our 'Dangers at home. I more fear the vio-'lation of public Rights at home, than a 'foreign Enemy. Muſt it be our Duties 'and Direction to defend foreign Dangers, 'and eſtabliſh Security againſt them; and 'ſhall we not look at that which ſhall 'make us able and willing thereunto? 'We ſhall not omit to confide and truſt 'his Majeſty, otherwiſe our Counſels will 'be with Fears; and that becomes not 'Engliſhmen. The unaccuſtomed Vio-'lences (I have nothing but a good mean-'ing) trench into all we have. To the four 'particulars already mentioned, wherein 'we ſuffer, one more may be added, leſt 'God forbear to hear me in the Day of my 'Trouble; our Religion is made vendible 'by Commiſſions. Alas! now a Tolera-'tion is granted, (little leſs) and Men for 'pecuniary annual Rates diſpenſed withal, 'whereby Papiſts without fear of Law, 'practiſe Idolatry, and ſcoff at Parliaments, 'at Laws, and all; it is well known the 'People of this State are under no o-'ther Subjection than what they did vo-'luntarily conſent to by the original Con-'tract between King and People; and as 'there are many Prerogatives and Privileges 'conferred on the King, ſo there are left to 'the Subject many neceſſary Liberties and 'Privileges, as appears by the Common 'Laws and Acts of Parliament; notwith-'ſtanding what thoſe two * Sycophants 'have prated in the Pulpit to the contrary. 'Was there ever yet King of England 'that directly violated the Subjects Liberty 'and Property, but their Actions were ever 'complained of in Parliament; and no 'ſooner complained of, than redreſſed? In 'the 21 Edw. III. there went out a Com-'miſſion to raiſe Money in a ſtrange man-'ner; the ſucceeding Parliament pray'd re-'dreſs; and till Henry VIII. we never 'heard of the ſaid Commiſſions again.

* Sibthorpe and Manwaring.

'ANOTHER way was by Loan, a Worm 'that cankered the Law; the Parliament 'did redreſs it, and that Money was paid 'again. The next little Engine was Be-'nevolence; what the Force of that was, 'look into the Statute of Richard III. which 'damned that particular way, and all other 'indirect ways.

'SINCE the Right of the Subject is thus 'bulwark'd by the Law of the Kingdom, 'and Princes upon complaint have redreſſed 'them, I am confident we ſhall have the 'like cauſe of Joy from his Majeſty.

'I will here make a little Digreſſion: 'The † County I ſerve for, were pleaſed 'to command me to ſeek the Removal 'from them of the greateſt Burden that ever 'People ſuffered. It was excellently ſaid, 'Commiſſionary Lieutenants do deprive us 'of all Liberty; if ever the like was ſeen 'of the Lieutenancy that now is, I will 'never be believed more: They tell the 'People they muſt pay ſo much upon 'Warrant from a Deputy-Lieutenant, or 'be bound to the good Behaviour, and ſent 'up to the Lords of the Council: It is the 'ſtrangeſt Engine to rend the Liberty of 'the Subject that ever was; there is now 'a Decemviri in every County, and amongſt 'that Decemviri there is ſome Appius 'Claudius that ſeek their own Revenges. 'We complain of Loans and Impoſitions, 'but when Deputy-Lieutenants may ſend 'Warrants to impriſon our Perſons at plea-'ſure, if we pay not what they ſent for, 'it concerns us to preſerve the Country in 'Freedom, and to conſider of this kind of 'People. There is now Neceſſity brought 'in for an Argument; all know that Ne-'ceſſity is an armed Man, and that Neceſſity 'is an evil Counſellor. I would we had 'never

'never known that Council: We are almoſt grown like the Turks, who ſend their Janizaries, who place the Halbert at the Door, and there he is Maſter of the Houſe. We have Soldiers billeted, and Warrants to collect Money, which if they do not, the Soldiers muſt come and rifle. The Romans ſending one into Spain, found no greater Complaint than the Diſcontent that did ariſe from Soldiers placed amongſt them. I would you would look into Forteſcue, where he puts the Prince in mind, what Miſery he ſaw where Soldiers were put upon the People: But, ſaith he, no Man is forced to take Soldiers but Inns, and they to be paid by them. I deſire we reſort to his Majeſty for Redreſs, and to reduce all into bounds.

'THE other way of Grievance is a Judgment in a legal courſe of Proceeding; we have had three Judgments of late times, all exceeding one another in prejudice of the Subject. The firſt was, That that was judged in all formality, the Poſtnati * Caſe, which People I honour; for we find many of them love us more than we do ourſelves. I do not complain of it, but only mention it.

* Scots.

'THE other Judgment was for Impoſitions, which was given in the Exchequer, and this Houſe two times after damned that Judgment; how remiſs our Eyes are upon that, I grieve to ſee.

'THERE is a Judgment, if I may ſo call it, a fatal Judgment againſt the Liberty of the Subject, Mich. 3 Car. in Sir John Heveningham's Caſe argued at the Bar, and pronounced but by one alone; I can live, altho' another without Title be put to live with me; nay I can live, altho' I pay Exciſes and Impoſitions for more than I do: but to have my Liberty, which is the Soul of my Life, taken from me by power, and to be pent up in a Jail without Remedy by Law, and this to be ſo adjudged to periſh in Jail, O improvident Anceſtors! O unwiſe Forefathers! to be ſo curious in providing for the quiet poſſeſſion of our Lands and Liberties of Parliament, and to neglect our Perſons and Bodies, and to let them die in Priſon, and that durante bene placito, remedileſs! If this be Law, what do we talk of our Liberties? Why do we trouble ourſelves with the Diſputes of Law, Franchiſes, Propriety of Goods? It is the Summa totalis of all Miſeries. I will not ſay it was erroneous, but I hope we ſhall ſpeak our Minds when that Judgment comes here to be debated.

'WHAT can a Man call his, if not Liberty? Having paſſed in ſome confuſion in the faſhion of my Delivery, I conclude: We will conſider two particulars, his Majeſty and his People: His Majeſty calls to us, and craves our Aſſiſtance to revive his Honour, and the Honour of the Nation. The People ſend us, as we hope, with that Direction, that we ſhall return to them with that Olive-Branch, that aſſurance of living free from thoſe Calamities under which they can hardly breathe. Our Sins have brought on us thoſe Miſeries; let us all bring our Portion to make up the Wall: we come with loyal Hearts; his Majeſty ſhall find that it is we that are his faithful Counſellors: Let all Sycophants be far removed from his Majeſty. Since we cannot help his Majeſty without opening our Grievances, let us diſcharge our Duties therein; yet while we ſeek Liberty, we will not forget Subjection. All things a State can be capable of, either Bleſſings or Puniſhments, depend on this Meeting. If any think the King may be ſupply'd, and the Commonwealth preſerved without redreſs of Grievances, he is deceived. The Kings of England were never more glorious than when they truſted their Subjects; let us make all haſte to do the Errand for which we came; let the Houſe conſider to prepare our Grievances fit for his Majeſty's view; not to make a Law to give us new Liberties, but declaratory with reſpective Penalties; ſo that thoſe which violate them, if they would be vile, they ſhould fear Infamy with Men; and then we ſhall think of ſuch a Supply as never a Prince received; and with our Moneys we ſhall give him our Hearts, and give him a new People raiſed from the Dead. Then I hope this Parliament will be intitled, The Parliament of Wonders, and God's Judgements diverted; and theſe Beams of Goodneſs ſhall give us Life, and we ſhall go home to our Countries, and leave our Poſterity as free as our Anceſtors left us.'

But neither this, nor the two next Days Debates produced any Reſolutions, the time being ſpent in a general opening of Grievances from all parts of the Kingdom.

On the 24th of March, Secretary Cook renewed the Motion of Supplies, as preparatory to the Conſideration of Grievances.

Secretary Cook's Motion for a Supply

'WE all think fit, ſaid he, that both theſe go hand in hand together; but let me put you in mind of that which concerns the King; let him have the precedency of Honour, if not of Time; let the Heads of the King's Supply firſt be propounded; this will be an Honour to the King, and will do Service to the Houſe; the End of this Parliament is the Subſiſtence of the King, as he himſelf hath declared, and ſuch a Command is not to be ſlighted; the King himſelf propounded it, and then he will agree with us in other Requeſts that are fit for a King to grant. We that have

'the

CHARLES I. 1628.

'the happineſs to attend his Majeſty, can 'tell you, that no King is more ready to 'hear the Complaints of his Subjects; and 'withal you know no King is more ſen-'ſible of all Reproaches which touch his 'Honour.

'WILL it not be fit to grant him this 'Honour to have the Precedency? It was 'the Speech of an ancient Parliament-Man, 'Let us deal gently with our King. By 'thoſe Laws that we make, we do bind 'ourſelves; and it is an addition of his 'Power. None that dies, but leaves his 'Heir to the Favour of the King; none 'that lives, but needs the Favour of the 'King. We having made our firſt Union 'with God, it is next intended that we be 'at one with our King: Is it not fit we 'be at peace with our Head? His Majeſty 'deſires it, and expects it. After this Unity 'with our Head, there is conſideration to 'be had of Unity with ourſelves; after 'this, we ſhall be all knit in one Body, we 'ſhall all clearly pronounce Shiboleth, and 'we ſhall conſider of the Grievances and 'Irregularities of the Times, which none 'deſires to be reformed more than his Ma-'jeſty, and thoſe whom you think moſt 'averſe. Let us take the beſt way for 'Reformation. And will not this be a 'happy Union, if the whole Body concur 'to reduce all into regularity? If Laws be 'our Birthrights, we ſhall hereby recover 'them and their Splendor; this will have 'good Aſpect abroad, and it will give 'Courage to our Men that have been de-'ſpiſed, and will prevent practices to con-'tinue Diviſions amongſt us both at home 'and abroad. The firſt Sower of Seeds 'of Diſtractions amongſt us, was an Agent 'of Spain, Gondomar, that did his Maſter 'great Service here and at home.

'SINCE that we have had other Mini-'ſters that have blown the Fire. The 'Ambaſſador of France told his Maſter at 'home, what he had wrought here the 'laſt Parliament, namely, Diviſions be-'tween King and People; and he was re-'warded for it. Whilſt we ſit here in Par-'liament, there was another intended Par-'liament of Jeſuits at Clerkenwell, and other 'Well-willers, within a mile of this Place; 'that this is true, was diſcovered by Letters 'ſent to Rome; the place of their Meeting is 'changed, and ſome of them are there 'where they ought to be. If you look in 'your Calendar, there is a Day of St. Jo-'ſeph; it was called in the Letter the Ori-'ental Day, and that was the Day intended 'for their Meeting. I ſpeak this to ſee 'God's hand to work our Union in their 'Diviſion; they are not more rent from us, 'than they are from themſelves. I deſire 'the meaneſt Judgement to conſider what 'may follow by giving precedency to his 'Majeſty; and by ſo doing, we ſhall put 'from ourſelves many imputations. If we 'give any occaſion of Breach, it is a great 'Diſadvantage; if otherwiſe, it is an Ob-'ligation to his Majeſty, which his Majeſty 'will not forget.'

OTHERS of the Members preferr'd the Conſideration of Grievances as a particular Root that invades the main Liberty of the Subject. It is the Law, ſaid they, that glorious fundamental Right whereby we have power to give; we deſire but that his Majeſty may ſee us have that Right therein, which next to God we all deſire; and then we doubt not but we ſhall give his Majeſty all Supply we can. The time was, when it was uſual to deſire Favours for ſowing Diſcords, as Gondomar did for Raleigh's Head. But the Debates of this Day came to no Reſolution.

Mr. Secretary Cook tenders Propoſitions touching Supply.

THE Day following, viz. March 25, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered certain Propoſitions to the Houſe from the King touching Supply, and told them, 'That his 'Majeſty finding time precious, expects that 'they ſhould begin ſpeedily, leſt they ſpend 'that time in Deliberation, which ſhould 'be ſpent in Action: That he eſteems the 'Grievances of the Houſe his own, and 'ſtands not on precedence in point of Ho-'nour. Therefore to ſatisfy his Majeſty, 'let the ſame Committee take his Majeſty's 'Propoſitions into Conſideration, and let 'both concur, whether to ſit on one in the 'Forenoon, and the other in the Afternoon; 'tis all one to his Majeſty.'

The Houſe form'd into a Committee.

UPON this the Houſe form'd themſelves into a Committee, Edward Littleton, Eſq; in the Chair, and order'd the Committee to take into Conſideration the Liberty of the Subject, in his Perſon and his Goods, and alſo to take into Conſideration his Majeſty's Supply. In this Debate, the Grievances were reduc'd to ſix Heads, as to our Perſons; 1. Attendance at the Council-Board. 2. Impriſonment. 3. Confinement. 4. Deſignation for Foreign Employment. 5. Martial Law. 6. Undue Proceedings in Matter of Judicature.

Habeas Corpus and the Liberty of the Subject debated.

THE firſt Matter debated was the Subject's Liberty in his Perſon; the particular Inſtance was in the Caſe of Sir John Heveningham and thoſe other Gentlemen, who were impriſon'd about Loan-Money, and brought their Habeas Corpus; but after their Caſe was argued, were nevertheleſs remanded to Priſon, and a Judgment, as it was then ſaid, was enter'd.

WHEREUPON Mr. Creſwel of Lincoln's-Inn ſpoke to this purpoſe.

Mr. Creſwel's Speech.

'JUSTICE, ſaid he, is the Life and the 'Heart-Blood of the Commonwealth; and 'if

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'if the Commonwealth bleed in the Master-Vein, all the Balm in Gilead is but in vain 'to preserve this our Body of Policy from 'Ruin and Destruction; Justice is both Columna & Corona Reipublicæ; she is both 'the Column and the Pillar, the Crown and 'the Glory of the Commonwealth: This is 'made good in Scripture by the Judgment 'of Solomon, the wisest King that ever 'reign'd upon Earth. For first she is the 'Pillar, for he saith, By Justice shall the 'Throne be established; secondly, she is the 'Crown, for he saith that by Justice a 'Nation shall be exalted.

'OUR Laws, which are the Rules of this 'Justice, they are the Ne plus ultra to 'both the King and the Subject; and as 'they are the Hercules Pillar, so they are 'the Pillar to every Hercules, to every 'Prince, which he must not pass.

'GIVE me leave to resemble her to Nebuchadnezzar's Tree; for she is so great, 'that she doth shade not only the Palace 'of the King, and the House of Nobles, 'but doth also shelter the Cottage of the 'poorest Beggar.

'WHEREFORE, if either now the Blasts 'of Indignation, or the unresistible Violator 'of Laws, Necessity, hath so bruised any 'of the Branches of this Tree, that either 'our Persons, or Goods, or Possessions have 'not the same Shelter as before, yet let us 'not therefore neglect the Root of this great 'Tree, but water it with our Tears, that 'so these bruised Branches may be recovered, and the whole Tree again prosper 'and flourish. I know well that Cor regis 'inscrutabile; and that Kings, although 'they are but Men before God, yet they 'are Gods before Men. And therefore to 'my gracious and dread Sovereign (whose 'Virtues are true Qualities, ingenerate both 'in his Judgment and Nature) let my Arm 'be cut off; nay, let my Soul not live that 'Day that I shall dare to lift up my Arm 'to touch that forbidden Fruit, those Flowers of his Princely Crown and Diadem.

'BUT, yet in our Eden, in this Garden 'of the Commonwealth, as there are the 'Flowers of the Sun, which are so glorious 'that they are to be handled only by Royal 'Majesty: So, are there also some Daisies 'and wholesome Herbs, which every common Hand that lives and labours in this 'Garden, may pick and gather up, and 'take Comfort and Repose in them: Amongst all which this Oculus Dei, this bona Libertas is one and the chief one. 'I will now descend to the Question, 'wherein I hold with all dutiful Submission to better Judgments, that these Acts 'of Power in imprisoning and confining of 'his Majesty's Subjects in such manner, 'without any Declaration of the Cause, are 'against the Fundamental Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

1. 'FROM the great Favour which the 'Law doth give unto, and the great Care 'which it hath ever taken of the Liberty 'and Safety of this Kingdom.

'TO proceed therefore in maintenance 'of my first Reasons, I find our Law doth 'so much favour the Subject's Liberty of 'his Person, that the Body of a Man was 'not liable to be arrested or imprisoned for 'any other Cause at the Common Law, but 'for Force and Things done against the 'Peace. For the Common Law (being the 'Preserver of the Land) so abhorreth Force, 'that those who commit it she accounteth 'her capital Enemies, and therefore did 'subject their Bodies to Imprisonment. But 'by the Statute of Marlebridge, cap. 24. 'which was made 35 Henry III. because 'Bailiffs wou'd not render Accompts to 'their Lords, it was enacted, that their 'Bodies shou'd be attach'd. And after, by 'the Statute 23 Edw. III. 17. because Men 'made no Conscience to pay their Debts, 'it was enacted, that their Bodies should 'likewise be attach'd. But before those 'Statutes, no Man's Body was subject to be 'taken or imprisoned, otherwise than as 'aforesaid; whereby it is evident how 'much the Common Law favoured the Liberty of the Subject, and protected his 'Body from Imprisonment.'

HERE he inforced the Reason by a Rule in Law, mentioned some Law-Cases upon that Rule, and then proceeded to a second Reason drawn by an Argument à majore ad minus.

'I frame it thus, said he; if the King 'have no absolute Power over our Lands 'or Goods, then à fortiori not over our Persons, to imprison them, without declaring 'the Cause, for our Persons are much 'more worth than either Lands or Goods, 'which is proved by what I have said already; and Christ himself makes it clear, 'where he saith, An non est corpus supra 'vestimentum? Is not the Body of more 'worth than the Raiment? Nay, I may well 'say, that almost every Leaf and Page of 'all the Volumes of our Common Law 'prove this Right of Propriety, this Distinction of meum and tuum, as well between King and Subject, as one Subject 'and another: And therefore my Conclusion follows, that if the Prerogative extend not neither to Lands nor to Goods, 'then à fortiori not to the Person, which 'is more worth than either Lands or Goods, 'as I said. And yet I agree, that by the 'very Law of Nature, Service of the Person of the Subject is due to his Sovereign, 'but this must be in such things which are 'not against the Law of Nature; but to 'have the Body imprisoned without any 'Cause declared, and so to become in Bondage, is, I am sure, against the Law of Nature,

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'Nature, and therefore not to be inforced 'by the Sovereign upon his Subjects.

3. 'My next Reason is drawn ab inutili '& incommodo; for the Statute de fran- 'gentibus Priſonam made 1 Edw. II. is 'Quod nullus qui priſonam fregerit, ſub- 'eat judicium vitæ vel membrorum pro 'fractione priſonæ tantum, niſi cauſa pro 'qua captus impriſonetur tale judicium re- 'quirat. Whence this Concluſion is clearly 'gather'd, that if a Man be commited to 'Priſon without declaring what Cauſe, and 'then if either Malefactor do break the 'Priſon, or the Goaler ſuffer him to eſcape, 'albeit the Priſoner ſo eſcaping had com-'mitted Crimen Læſæ Majeſtatis, yet nei-'ther the Goaler, nor any other that pro-'cured his Eſcape, may by the Law ſuffer 'any corporal Puniſhment for ſetting him 'at large; which if admitted, might prove 'in conſequence, a matter of great Danger 'to the Commonwealth.

4. 'My next Reaſon is drawn ab Regis 'honore, from that great Honour the Law 'doth attribute unto Sovereign Majeſty; 'and therefore the Rule of Law is, that 'Solum Rex hoc non poteſt facere, quod 'non poteſt juſte agere. And Huſſey, Chief-'Juſtice, 1 Hen. VII. ſaith, that Sir John 'Markham told King Edward IV. he could 'not arreſt a Man either for Treaſon or 'Felony, as a Subject might, becauſe that 'if the King did wrong, the Party could 'not have an Action againſt him; and if 'the King's Writ under his Great Seal can-'not impriſon the Subject unleſs it contains 'the Cauſe, ſhall then the King's Warrant 'otherwiſe do it without containing the 'Cauſe?

'But I will conclude with that, which 'I find reported of Sir John Davis, who 'was the King's Serjeant, and ſo by the 'Duty of his Place would, no doubt, main-'tain to his uttermoſt the Prerogatives of 'the King his Royal Maſter: And yet it 'was by him thus ſaid in thoſe Reports of 'his upon the Caſe of Taviſtry Cuſtoms, 'That the Kings of England always have 'had a Monarchy Royal, and not a Mo-'narchy Seignoral; where under the firſt, 'ſaith he, the Subjects are Freemen, and 'have Propriety in their Goods and Free-'hold, and Inheritance in their Lands: But 'under the latter, they are as Villains and 'Slaves, and have Propriety in nothing. 'And therefore, ſaid he, when a Royal 'Monarch makes a new Congreſs, yet if 'he receives any of the Nation's ancient In-'habitants into his Protection, they and 'their Heirs after them ſhall enjoy their 'Lands and Liberties according to the Law.'

Upon theſe Arguments the Houſe refer'd it to a Committee to examine Proceedings: And Mr. Selden afterwards made a Report to the Houſe, that Mr. Waterhouſe a Clerk in the Crown-Office, being examined before the Committee, did confeſs that by Direction from Sir Robert Heath, the King's Attorney-General, he wrote the Draught of a Judgment in the abovementioned Caſe of Habeas Corpus, which was delivered to Mr. Attorney. And Mr. Keeling being examin'd before the Committee, confeſs'd, that after Michaelmas Term laſt the Attorney-General wiſh'd him to make a ſpecial Entry of the Habeas Corpus: To which he anſwered, he knew no ſpecial Entry in thoſe Caſes, except only a remittitur; but ſaid to Mr. Attorney, that if he pleaſed to draw one, and the Court afterwards aſſent to it, he wou'd then enter it. The Attorney did accordingly make a Draught, the Copy of which Mr. Keeling produced to the Committee, and ſaid withal, that he carried the ſaid Draught to the Judges, but they wou'd not aſſent to a ſpecial Entry: Nevertheleſs, the Attorney-General ſent to him ſeveral times, and told him there was no Remedy but he muſt enter it; yet a Week before the Meeting of the Parliament, the Attorney-General called for the Draught again, which he accordingly gave to him, and he never heard of it more.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

Upon this Report, Sir Robert Philips gave his Opinion, 'That this intended 'Judgment in the Habeas Corpus was a 'Draught made by ſome Man that deſired 'to ſtrike us all from our Liberties, but 'the Judges juſtly refuſ'd it; whereas if 'the Judges did intend it, we ſit not here, 'ſaid he, to anſwer the Truſt we are ſent 'for, if we preſent not this Matter to his 'Majeſty. Let this Buſineſs be further 'ſearch'd into, and ſee how this Judgment 'lies againſt us, and what the Judges do 'ſay concerning the ſame.' Sir Robert Philips.

Sir Edward Coke ſaid, 'This Draught 'of the Judgment will ſting us, quia nulla 'cauſa fuit oſtenta. If a Man muſt not 'be bailed becauſe he is committed by Com-'mand of the King, what is this but to 'declare upon Record, that any Subject 'committed by ſuch an abſolute Com-'mand, may be detain'd in Priſon for ever? 'What doth this tend to, but the utter 'Subverſion of the choice Liberty and Right 'belonging to every free-born Subject of 'this Kingdom? I fear, were it not for this 'Parliament which follow'd ſo cloſe after 'that Form of Judgment was drawn up, 'there would have been hard putting to 'have had it enter'd: But a Parliament 'brings Judges, Officers, and all Men in 'good Order.' Sir Edward Coke.

The Commons afterwards, upon farther Debates of this Matter, deſired that the Judges of the King's Bench might declare themſelves concerning this Buſineſs; which was done accordingly as follows.

JUDGE

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Judge Whitelocke's Juſtification of the Proceedings upon the Habeas Corpus.

JUDGE Whitelocke ſpoke thus: 'My Lords, we are by your Appointment here ready to clear any Aſperſion of the Houſe of Commons in their late Preſentment upon the King's Bench, that the Subject was wounded in the Judgment there lately given. If ſuch a thing were, my Lords, your Lordſhips, not they, have the Power to queſtion and judge the ſame. But, my Lords, I ſay there was no Judgment given, whereby either the Prerogative might be inlarged, or the Right of the Subject infringed. It is true, my Lords, in Michaelmas Term laſt, four Gentlemen petitioned for a Habeas Corpus, which they obtained, and were allow'd Counſel: The Return was per ſpeciale Mandatum Domini Regis; which likewiſe was made known to us under the Hands of eighteen Privy Counſellors. Now, my Lords, if we had delivered them preſently upon this, it muſt have been becauſe the King did not ſhew cauſe; wherein we ſhould have judged the King had done wrong; and this is beyond our Knowledge, for he might have committed them for other matters than we could have imagined. But they might ſay thus, they might have been kept in priſon all their days: I anſwer, no, but we did remit them, that we might better adviſe of the Matter; and they, the next day, might have had a new Writ, if they had pleaſed. But they ſay, we ought not to have deny'd Bail. I anſwer, if we had done ſo, it muſt needs have reflected upon the King, that he had unjuſtly impriſoned them. And it appears in Dyer, 2 Eliz. that divers Gentlemen being committed, and requiring Habeas Corpus, ſome were bailed, others remitted; whereby it appears, much is left to the Diſcretion of the Judges.

'FOR that which troubleth ſo much, remittitur quouſque; this, my Lords, was only (as I ſaid before) to take time what to do; and whereas they will have a difference between remittitur, and remittitur quouſque, my Lords, I confeſs I can find none; but theſe are new Inventions to trouble old Records. And herein, my Lords, we have dealt with Knowledge and Underſtanding; for had we given a Judgment, the Party muſt thereupon have reſted; every Judgment muſt come to an Iſſue in Matter, in Fact, or Demur in point of Law; here is neither, therefore no Judgment.

'FOR endeavouring to have a Judgment enter'd (it is true) Mr. Attorney, preſſed the ſame for his Majeſty's Service: But we having ſworn to do Right between his Majeſty and his Subjects, commanded the Clerk to make no Entry, but according to the old Form; and the Rule was given by the Chief Juſtice alone. I have ſpent my time in this Court, and I ſpeak confidently, I did never ſee nor know by any Record that upon ſuch a Return as this a Man was bailed, the King not firſt conſulted with, in ſuch a caſe as this.

'THE Commons Houſe do not know what Letters and Commands we receive; for theſe remain in our Court, and are not view'd by them. For the reſt of the Matters preſented by the Houſe of Commons, they were not in agitation before us, whether the King may commit; and how long he may detain a Man committed. Therefore having anſwered ſo much as concerneth us, I deſire your Lordſhips good Conſtruction of what hath been ſaid.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

JUDGE Doderidge concerning the ſame Subject ſaid, 'It is no more fit for a Judge to decline to give an account of his doings, than for a Chriſtian of his Faith. God knoweth, I have endeavoured always to keep a good Conſcience, for a troubled one who can bear? The Kingdom holds of none but God; and Judgements do not paſs privately in Chambers, but publickly in Courts, (where every one may hear) which cauſeth Judgment to be given with maturity. Your Lordſhips have heard the particulars given by my Brother, how that Counſel being aſſigned to thoſe four Gentlemen in the latter end of Michaelmas-Term, their Cauſe receiv'd hearing; and upon conſideration of the Statutes and Records, we found ſome of them to be according to the good old Law of Magna Charta; but we thought they did not come ſo cloſe to this Caſe, as that Bail ſhould be thereupon preſently granted. My Lords, the Habeas Corpus conſiſteth of three parts; the Writ, the Return upon the Writ or Schedule, and the Entry or Rule reciting the Habeas Corpus and the Return, together with the Opinion of the Court, either a Remittitur, or a Traditur in Ballium. In this caſe, a Remittitur was granted, which we did, that we might take better adviſement upon the Caſe, and upon the Remittitur. My Lords, they might have had a new Writ the next day, and I wiſh they had, becauſe it may be they had ſeen more, and we had been eaſed of a great labour. And, my Lords, when the Attorney, upon the Remittitur, preſſed an Entry, we all ſtraitly charged the Clerk that he ſhould make no other Entry than ſuch as our Predeceſſors

Judge Doderidge.

'ceſſors had uſually made in like caſes. 'For the difference between Remittitur 'and Remittitur quouſque, I could nevet 'yet find any. I have now ſate in this 'Court fifteen Years, and I ſhould know 'ſomething; ſurely if I had gone in a 'Mill ſo long, Duſt would cleave to my 'Clothes. I am old, and have one Foot 'in the Grave, therefore I will look to 'the better part as near as I can. But 'Omnia habere in memoria & in nullo 'errare, Divinum potius eſt quam humanum.'

THE Lord Chief-Juſtice Hyde and Juſtice Jones delivered their Opinions much to the ſame purpoſe.

THE Houſe proceeded in farther Debate of the Liberty of the Subject; when Mr. Hackwel reſumed the Debate of the matter concerning the Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Hackwel reſumed the Debate of the Habeas Corpus.

'THE late Judgment, ſaid he, which 'lies in Bar, is only an Award, and no 'Judgment; and in the Lord Chief-'Juſtice's Argument there was no word 'ſpoken that the King might commit or 'detain without Cauſe.

'FOR the King to commit a Man, 'is indignum Regi: Mercy and Honour 'flow immediately from the King; Judg-'ment and Juſtice are his too, but they 'flow from his Miniſters: The Sword 'is carried before him, but the Scepter 'in his Hands. Theſe are true Em-'blems of a good King.

'THE Law admits not the King a 'power of detaining in Priſon at plea-'ſure: In ancient times, Priſons were 'but pro cuſtodia, carceres non ad pœnam, 'ſed ad cuſtodiam. Admit the King 'may commit a Man, yet to detain him 'as long as he pleaſeth is dangerous, and 'then a Man ſhall be puniſh'd before his 'Offence: Impriſonment is a maceration 'of the Body, and horror to the Mind; 'it is vita pejor morte.'

Mr. Selden.

MR. Selden laſt of all produced the Statutes, Precedents and Book Caſes which were expreſſed in point to the Queſtion in hand; and, by Order of the Houſe, the Caſe in the Lord Chief-Juſtice Anderſon's Reports was read openly.

AFTER which, Sir Edward Coke ſaid,

Sir Edward Coke.

'OF my own Knowledge, this Book 'was written with my Lord Anderſon's 'own Hand; it is no flying Report of a 'young Student, I was Sollicitor then, 'and Treaſurer Burleigh was as much 'againſt Commitment, as any of this 'Kingdom: it was the White-Staves 'that made this Stir. Let us draw to-'wards a Concluſion: The Queſtion is, 'whether a Freeman can be impriſoned 'by the King, without ſetting down the 'Cauſe? I leave it as bare as Æſop's 'Crow; they that argue againſt it, Ho-'nores moti, & non remoti, corpus de-'ſtruunt. It is a Maxim, the Common-'Law hath ſo admeaſured the King's 'Prerogative, that in no Caſe it can pre-'judice the Inheritance of the Subjects: 'Had the Law given the Prerogative to 'that which is taken, it would have ſet 'ſome Time to it, elſe mark what would 'follow. I ſhall have an Eſtate of In-'heritance for Life, or for Years in my 'Land, or Propriety in my Goods, and 'I ſhall be a Tenant at Will for my Li-'berty: I ſhall have Propriety in my 'own Houſe, and not Liberty in my 'Perſon, Perſpicue vera, non ſunt pro-'banda. The King hath diſtributed his 'judicial Power to Courts of Juſtice, and 'to Miniſters of Juſtice; it is too low 'for ſo great a Monarch as the King is, 'to commit Men to Priſon: and it is a-'gainſt Law that Men ſhould be com-'mitted, and no Cauſe ſhew'd. I would 'not ſpeak this, but that I hope my 'Gracious King will hear of it; yet it is 'not I Edward Coke that ſpeak it, but 'the Records that ſpeak it: we have a 'national appropriate Law to this Na-'tion, diverſis ab orbe Britannis: I will 'conclude with the Acts of the Apoſtles, 'cap. 25. It is againſt Reaſon to ſend a 'Man to Priſon, and not to ſhew the 'Cauſe. It is now time to go to the 'Queſtion.'

IT was thereupon reſolved, nemine contradicente,

Reſolves touching the Subject's Liberty in his Perſon and Goods.

1. THAT no Freeman ought to be detained or kept in Priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrained by Command of the King or Privy-Council, or any other, unleſs ſome Cauſe of the Commitment, Detainer or Reſtraint be expreſſed, for which by Law he ought to be committed, detained, or reſtrained.

2. THAT the Writ of Habeas Corpus may not be deny'd, but ought to be granted to every Man that is committed or detain'd in Perſon, or otherwiſe reſtrain'd, tho' it be by Command of the King, the Privy-Council, or any other, he praying the ſame.

3. THAT if a Freeman be committed or detain'd in Priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrained by the Command of the King, the the Privy-Council, or any other, no Cauſe of ſuch Commitment, Detainer or Reſtraint being expreſſed, for which by Law he ought to be committed, detain'd or reſtrained, and the ſame be returned upon a Habeas Corpus granted for the ſaid Party,) then he ought to be delivered or bailed.

Commons Reſolution on the Subject's Property.

THEN they came to an unanimous Reſolution, concerning the Property of the Subject in his Goods; which was this, viz.

'THAT it is the ancient and undoubted Right of every Freeman, that he hath a full and abſolute Property in his Goods and Eſtate, and that no Tax, Taillage, Loan, Benevolence, or other like Charge ought to be commanded or levied by the King, or any of his Miniſters, without common Conſent by Act of Parliament.'

ON the 26th of March, the Propoſitions tender'd the Day before from his Majeſty, by Mr. Secretary Cook; were receiv'd and read, as follow:

King's Propoſals to the Commons, touching Supply.

1. TO furniſh with Men and Victuals 30 Ships, to guard the narrow Seas, and along the Coaſts.

2. TO ſet out ten other Ships, for the Relief of the Town of Rochel.

3. TO ſet out 10 other Ships, for the Preſervation of the Elbe, the Sound and the Baltic Sea.

4. TO levy, arm, cloath, victual, pay and tranſport an Army of 1000 Horſe, and 10000 Foot, for foreign Service.

5. TO pay and ſupply 6000 more, for the Service of Denmark.

6. TO ſupply the Forts of the Office of Ordnance.

7. TO ſupply the Stores of the Navy.

8. TO build 20 Ships yearly, for the Increaſe of the Navy.

9. TO repair the Forts within the Land.

10. TO pay the Arrears of the Office of Ordnance.

11. TO pay the Arrears of the Victualler's Office.

12. TO pay the Arrears of the Treaſure of the Navy.

13. TO pay the Arrears due for the Freight of divers Merchant-Ships imployed in his Majeſty's Service.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

14. TO provide a Magazine for Victuals for Land and Sea-Service.

THE Houſe eaſily perceived by the reading of theſe Articles, that it would be a Work of infinite Labour, to examine the Juſtice and Neceſſity of every one; and as there were no Eſtimates made, they plainly ſaw that if they ſhould take the Particulars into Conſideration, the Court would mount the Expence very high: they therefore refer'd the Debate thereof to another Day, and enter'd into a Conference with the Lords about a Petition againſt the Recuſants, prepared by the Upper-Houſe. The Perſon appointed to manage the Conference on the Part of the Commons, was Secretary Cook, of whoſe Speech upon this Occaſion, which is preſerved intire in that noble Collection of MSS. in the Harleyan Library, the following is an Extract.

His Speech.

'IN the firſt place, (he ſaid) we acknowledge with all due Honour, both unto the Reverend Fathers of the Church, and to our noble Lords, in that ye have ſhined before us, as worthy Lights in the Encouragement and Maintenance of true Religion, being the true Support of all Dignities and Honours. And this Forwardneſs of you, is the more remarkable, when that viperous Generation, as your Lordſhips juſtly ſtiled them, do at eaſe with Tooth and Nail, eſſay to rend the Bowels of their Mother. Give me leave to tell you what I know, that theſe now both vaunt at home, and write to their Friends abroad, they hope all will be well, and doubt not to prevail, and to win Ground upon us.

'AND a little to awake the Zeal and Care of our Learned and Grave Fathers, it is fit that they take notice of that Hierarchy, which is already eſtabliſhed in Compoſition with their Lordſhips; for they have a Biſhop conſecrated by the Pope. This Biſhop hath his ſubalternate Officers of all Kinds, as Vicars-General, Archdeacons, Rural-Deans, Apparitors, and ſuch like: neither are theſe nominal or titular Officers alone; but they all execute their Juriſdictions, and make their ordinary Viſitations through the Kingdom, keep Courts, and determine Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. And which is an Argument of more conſequence, they keep or'dinary Intelligence by their Agents in 'Rome, and hold Correſpondence with 'the Nuncio's and Cardinals, both at 'Bruſſels and in France.

'NEITHER are the Seculars alone 'grown to this Height, but the Regu-'lars are more active and dangerous, and 'have taken deep Root; they have al-'ready planted their Societies and Col-'leges of both Sexes, they have ſettled 'Revenues, Houſes, Libraries, Veſt-'ments, and all other neceſſary Provi-'ſions, to travel or ſtay at home; nay, 'even at this time, they intend to hold 'a concurrent Aſſembly with this Par-'liament.

'BUT now ſince his ſacred Majeſty 'hath extended his Royal Arm, and 'ſince the Lords of his Council have by 'their Authority cauſed this Neſt of 'Waſps to be digged out of the Earth, 'and their Convocations to be ſcattered; 'and ſince your Lordſhips join in Cou-'rage and Reſolution, at leaſt to reduce 'this People to their lawful Reſtraint, 'that they may do no more hurt; we 'conceive great Hope and Comfort, that 'the Almighty God will from hence-'forth proſper our Endeavours both at 'Home and Abroad.

'BUT now, my Lords, to come to 'the chief Errand of this our Meeting, 'which is to make known to you the 'Approbation of our Houſe of that Pe-'tition to his Majeſty, wherein you are 'pleaſed to requeſt our Concurrence: 'The Houſe hath taken it into ſerious 'Conſideration, and from the Beginning 'to the End approve of every Word, 'and much commend your happy Pen; 'only we are required to preſent to you 'a few Additions, whereby we conceive 'the Petition may be made more agree-'able to the Statutes which are deſired 'to be put in execution, and to a for-'mer Petition granted by his Majeſty, 'recorded in both Houſes, confirmed 'under the Broad-Seal of England, and 'publiſhed in all our Courts of ordinary 'Juſtice.

'BUT theſe things we propound, not 'as our Reſolutions, or as Matters to 'raiſe Debate or Diſpute, but commend 'them only as our Advice and Deſire, 'being ready notwithſtanding to join 'with your Lordſhips in the Petition, as 'now it is, if your Lordſhips ſhall not 'find this Reaſon to be of Weight.'

THE ſame being agreed to, the afore-ſaid Petition was preſented to his Majeſty by both Houſes on the 31ſt of March; at the Delivery of which, the Lord-Keeper ſpoke as follows.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

Lord-Keeper's Speech at the preſenting of the Petition to the King againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

'THE Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'and Commons in this preſent Par-'liament aſſembled, out of due Care of 'the Glory of Almighty God, and of 'the Honour and Safety of your Majeſty, 'do with all Humbleneſs, and with one 'unanimous Conſent, preſent to your 'Royal Hands, the moſt loyal Deſires of 'all their Hearts, which is ſet down in 'a dutiful Petition, which is to quicken 'the Laws againſt the Perturbers of the 'Peace of all States: We cannot, nor do 'not forget your Majeſty's moſt gracious 'Acts and Anſwers on the like Petition; 'they are viſible to the World, to your 'Majeſty's Honour and Comfort: We 'bend our Knees and Hearts, bleſſing 'God and your Majeſty therefore; yet 'let it not ſeem needleſs that we repair 'again to your Majeſty: The Husband-'man knows that Weeds are not de-'ſtroyed at one Weeding. Theſe are 'growing Evils, they are Weeds of a 'ſpreading Nature: And we that come 'from all Parts do think it our Duty to 'tell your Majeſty, that God's Vineyard 'is not yet cleanſed. And God himſelf 'requires, that we pray to him often, 'even for what he means and promiſeth 'to beſtow on us. But my Meſſage 'comes from the Pen of both Houſes: 'And therefore I humbly beſeech your 'Majeſty to lend a gracious Ear to hear 'me read the Petition.'

AFTER the Reading thereof, his Majeſty made this ſhort Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Anſwer to the Petition.

'I DO very well approve the Method 'of your Proceedings in this Parlia-'ment, à Jove principium; hoping that 'the reſt of your Conſultations will ſuc-'ceed the happier. And I like the Pre-'amble of my Lord-Keeper, otherwiſe 'I ſhould have a little ſuſpected that 'you had thought me not ſo careful of 'Religion as I have, and ever ſhall be, 'wherein I am as forward as you can 'deſire. And for the Petition, I anſwer 'firſt in general, that I like it well, and 'will uſe theſe as well as other Means 'for the Maintenance and Propagation of 'that Religion, wherein I have lived, 'and do reſolve to die. But for the Par-'ticulars, you ſhall receive a more full 'Anſwer hereafter. And now I will 'only add this, that as we pray to God 'to help us, ſo we muſt help ourſelves: 'For we can have no Aſſurance of his

'Aſ-

'Aſſiſtance, if we do lie in Bed, and 'only pray, without uſing other means. 'And therefore I muſt remember you, 'that if we do not make Proviſion ſpee-'dily, we ſhall not be able to put one 'Ship to Sea this Year, Verbum ſapienti 'ſat eſt.'

AFTERWARDS the Lord-Keeper ſignified to the Houſe, that his Majeſty had now given his Anſwer to the Petition exhibited by both Houſes againſt Recuſants, and had commanded his Lordſhip to read the ſame Anſwer in this Houſe, and Mr. Secretary to read it in the Houſe of Commons. Whereupon the Clerk read the firſt Article of the ſaid Petition, and the Lord-Keeper read his Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſame, and ſo through the whole Eight Articles.

WHICH Petitions and Anſwers follow in hæc verba.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'WE your moſt loyal and obedient, 'Subjects, the Lords Spiritual 'and Temporal, and Commons in Par-'liament aſſembled, having to our ſin-'gular Comfort obtained your Majeſty's 'pious and gracious Aſſent for a publick 'Faſt, to appeaſe the Wrath of Almighty 'God kindled againſt us, and to prevent 'thoſe grievous Judgments which do ap-'parently preſs upon us; do in all Hu-'mility preſent unto your ſacred Majeſty 'all poſſible Thanks for the ſame. And 'becauſe the public and viſible Sins of 'the Kingdom, are the undoubted Cauſes 'of thoſe viſible Evils that are fallen 'upon us, amongſt which Sins, (as is 'apparent by the Word of God) Idolatry 'and Superſtition are the moſt heinous 'and crying Sins, to the end that we 'may conſtantly hope for the Bleſſing 'of God to deſcend upon this our pub-'lic Humiliation, by abandoning thoſe 'Sins, which do make a Wall of Sepa-'ration betwixt God and us;

ARTICLE I.

'WE moſt humbly and ardently beg 'at the hands of your moſt ſacred Ma-'jeſty, that your Majeſty will be pleaſed 'to give continual Life and Motion to 'all thoſe Laws that ſtand in force againſt 'Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and all that 'have taken Orders by Authority of the 'See of Rome, by exacting a more due 'and ſerious Execution of the ſame: 'Amongſt which Number thoſe that 'have highly abuſed your Majeſty's Cle-'mency, by returning into the Kingdom 'after their Baniſhment, contrary to your 'Highneſs's expreſs Proclamation, we 'humbly deſire may be left to the Se-'verity of your Laws, without admit-'ting of any Mediation or Interceſſion 'for them. And that ſuch of your Ma-'jeſty's unſound and ill-affected Sub-'jects, as do receive, harbour, or con-'ceal any of their viperous Generation, 'may without ſuffer delay ſuch Penalties 'and Puniſhments as the Laws moſt 'juſtly impoſe upon them.

His Majeſty's Anſwer to the firſt Article.

HIS Majeſty anſwereth, That he will, according to your Deſire, give both Life and Motion to the Laws that ſtand in force againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and all that have taken Orders by Authority of the See of Rome; and to that end his Majeſty will give ſtrict Order to all his Miniſters for the Diſcovery and Apprehending of them, and ſo leave them being apprehended to the Tryal of the Law. And in caſe, after Tryal, there ſhall be cauſe to reſpite execution of any of them, yet they ſhall be committed (according to the example of the beſt times) to the Caſtle of Wisbich, and there be ſafely kept from exerciſing their Functions, or ſpreading their ſuperſtitious and dangerous Doctrine, and the Receivers and Abettors ſhall be left to the Law.

ARTICLE II.

'THAT your Majeſty would be 'pleaſed to command a ſure and ſtrait 'Watch to be kept in and over your 'Majeſty's Ports and Havens, and to 'commit the Care and Charge of ſearch-'ing of Ships, for the Diſcovery and Ap-'prehenſion as well of Jeſuits and Se-'minary Prieſts brought in, as of Chil-'dren and young Students ſent over be-'yond the Seas, to ſuck in the Poiſon 'of Rebellion and Superſtition, unto 'Men of approved Fidelity and Re-'ligion: And ſuch as ſhall be convicted 'to have connived or combined in the 'bringing in of the one, or conveying 'of the other, that the Laws may paſs 'upon them with ſpeedy Execution.

His Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſecond Article.

HIS Majeſty granteth all that is in this Article; and to this end will give order to the Lord-Treaſurer, Lord-Admiral, and Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports,

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Ports, that in their ſeveral places they be careful to ſee this Article fully executed, giving ſtrict Charge to all ſuch as have Place and Authority under them, to uſe all Diligence therein. And his Majeſty requireth them, and all other his Officers and Miniſters, to have a vigilant Eye upon ſuch as dwell in dangerous places of Advantage or Opportunity for receiving or tranſporting of any ſuch as are here mentioned. And his Majeſty will take it for good Service, if any will give knowledge of any ſuch as have connived or combined, or ſhall connive or combine, as is mentioned in this Article, that Juſtice may be ſtrictly done upon them.

ARTICLE III.

'THAT conſidering thoſe dreadful Dangers (never to be forgotten) which did involve your Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, and the whole Repreſentative Body of your Majeſty's Kingdom, plotted and framed by the free and common acceſs of Popiſh Recuſants to the City of London, and to your Majeſty's Court, your Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed to give ſpeedy Command for the preſent putting in practice thoſe Laws that prohibit all Popiſh Recuſants to come to the Court, or within ten Miles of the City of London; as alſo thoſe Laws that confine them to the diſtance of five Miles from their Dwelling-Houſes; and that ſuch by-paſt Licences not warranted by Law, as have been granted to them for their repair to the City of London, may be diſcharged and annulled.'

His Majeſty's Anſwer to the third Article.

His Majeſty will take Order to reſtrain the Recourſe of Recuſants to the Court; and alſo for the other points in this Article, his Majeſty is well pleaſed that the Laws be duly executed, and that all unlawful Licences be annulled and diſcharged.

ARTICLE IV.

'THAT whereas it is more than probably conceived, that infinite Sums of Moneys have within theſe two or three Years laſt paſt been extracted out of the Recuſants within the Kingdom, by colour of Compoſition, and a ſmall proportion of the ſame returned into your Majeſty's Coffers, not only to the ſudden enriching of private Perſons, but to the emboldening of Romiſh Recuſants to entertain Maſſing Prieſts into their private Houſes, and to exerciſe all their mimick Rites of their groſs Superſtition without fear of controul; amounting (as by their daily practice and oſtentation we may conceive) to the nature of a concealed Toleration; your Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed to entertain this particular more nearly into your princely Wiſdom and Conſideration, and to diſſolve this Myſtery of Iniquity patched up of colourable Leaſes, Contracts and Reconveyances, being but Masks on the one part, of Fraud to deceive your Majeſty and States, on the other part for private Men to accompliſh their corrupt Ends.

His Majeſty's Anſwer to the fourth Article.

His Majeſty is moſt willing to puniſh for the time paſt, and to prevent for the future, any of the Deceits and Abuſes mentioned in this Article; and will account it a good Service in any that will inform himſelf, his Privy-Council, Officers of his Revenues, Judges, or learned Council, of any thing that may reveal this Myſtery of Iniquity. And his Majeſty doth ſtrictly command every of them, to whom ſuch Information ſhall be brought, that they ſuffer not the ſame to die, but do their uttermoſt endeavour to effect a clear diſcovery, and bring the Offenders to puniſhment. And to the intent no concealed Toleration may be effected, his Majeſty leaves the Laws to their Courſe.

ARTICLE V.

'THAT as the Perſons of Ambaſſadors from foreign Princes, and their Houſes be free for the Exerciſe of their own Religion, ſo their Houſes may not be made free Chapels and Sanctuaries unto your Majeſty's Subjects popiſhly affected, to hear Maſs, and to participate in all other Rites and Ceremonies of that Superſtition, to the great offence of Almighty God, and ſcandal of your Majeſty's People loyally and religiouſly affected: That either the Concourſe of Recuſants to ſuch places may be reſtrained, or at leaſt ſuch a vigilant Watch ſet upon them, at their Return from thoſe places, as they may be apprehended, and ſeverely proceeded withal; ut qui palam

'palam in luce peccant in luce puniantur.'

CHARLES I. 1628.

His Majesty's Answer to the fifth Article.

HIS Majesty is well pleased to prohibit and restrain their coming and resort to the Houses of Ambassadors, and will command a vigilant Watch to be set for their taking and punishing, as is desired.

ARTICLE VI.

'THAT no place of Authority and 'Command, within any of the Counties 'of this your Majesty's Kingdom, or 'any Ships of your Majesty's, or which 'shall be employ'd in your Majesty's 'Service, be committed to Popish Recusants, or to Non-Communicants by 'the space of a year past, or to any such 'Persons as according to direction of 'former Acts of State, are justly to be 'suspected; as the Place and Authority 'of Lords-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Justices of Peace, or Captains, 'or other Officers or Ministers mentioned in the Statute made in the third 'Year of the Reign of your Father of 'blessed Memory: And that such as by 'connivance have crept into such places, 'may by your Majesty's Royal Command be discharged of the same.'

His Majesty's Answer to the sixth Article.

HIS Majesty is persuaded that this Article is already observed with good care; nevertheless, for the avoiding (as much as may be) all Errors and Escapes in that kind, his Majesty will give Charge to the Lord-Keeper, that at the next Term he call unto him all the Judges, and take Information from them of the State of their several Circuits, if any such (as are mentioned in this Article) be in the Commission of the Peace, that due Reformation may be made thereof; and will likewise give Order to the Lord-Admiral, and such others to whom it shall appertain, to make diligent Inquiry and Certificate to his Majesty, if any such be in place of Authority and Command in his Ships or Service.

ARTICLE VII.

'THAT all your Majesty's Judges, 'Justices, and Ministers of Justice, unto 'whose Care and Trust, Execution (which 'is the Life of your Majesty's Laws) is 'committed, may by your Majesty's 'Proclamation, not only be commanded 'to put in speedy Execution those Laws 'which stand in force against Jesuits, 'Seminary Priests, and Popish Recusants, 'but that your Majesty would be further pleased to command the said 'Judges and Justices of Assize to give 'a true and strict Account of their Proceedings, at their Returns out of their 'Circuits, unto the Lord-Keeper, and 'by the Lord-Keeper to be presented 'to your Majesty.

His Majesty's Answer to the seventh Article.

His Majesty doth fully grant this Article.

ARTICLE VIII.

'AND for a fair and clear Eradication of all Popery for the future, and 'for the breeding and nursing up of 'a holy Generation, and a peculiar 'People sanctified unto the true Worship 'of Almighty God, that until a provisional Law may be made for the training and educating of the Children of 'Popish Recusants, in the Grounds and 'Principles of our holy Religion, which 'we conceive will be of more Power and 'Force to unite your People to you in 'Fastness of Love, Religion, and loyal 'Obedience, than all pecuniary Mulcts 'and Penalties, which can possibly be 'devised, your Majesty would be pleased to take it into your own Princely 'Care.'

THESE our humble Petitions, proceeding from Hearts and Affections, loyally and religiously devoted to God and your Majesty's Service, and to the Safety of your Majesty's sacred Person, we most zealously present to your Princely Wisdom, craving your Majesty's cheerful and gracious Approbation.

His Majesty's Answer to the eighth Article.

HIS Majesty doth well approve it, as a Matter of necessary Consideration; and the Parliament now sitting, he re-commendeth to both Houſes the Preparation of a fitting Law to that Effect. And his Majeſty doth further declare, that the Mildneſs that hath been uſed towards thoſe of the Popiſh Religion hath been upon hope that foreign Princes might thereby be induced to uſe Moderation towards their Subjects of the reformed Religion; but not finding that good Effect which was expected, His Majeſty reſolveth, unleſs he ſhall very ſpeedily ſee better Fruits, to add a further Degree of Severity, to that which in this Petition is deſired.

Speeches on his Majeſty's Propoſitions, by

ON the 2d of April, the Propoſitions ſent from the King to the Commons, on the 26th of March, were debated for ſome time, in which ſeveral Gentlemen expreſſed themſelves on the Subject as follows.

Sir Francis Seymour.

'IT is ſaid that the greateſt Grievance 'is want of Supply; but I hold it a 'greater Grievance, that his Majeſty is 'brought into thoſe Neceſſities, eſpe-'cially conſidering the Supplies that of 'late have been given to the King, two 'Subſidies of Parliament, beſides Privy-'Seals, the late Loan, whereby five 'Subſidies were forcibly and unadvi-'ſedly taken, and we have yet pur-'chaſed to ourſelves nothing by all theſe 'but our own Diſhonour; we have 'drawn and provoked two powerful 'Enemies upon us. 'Tis not then what 'the Subjects do give, unleſs his Majeſty 'employ Men of Integrity and Expe-'rience; otherwiſe all that we give 'will be as caſt into a bottomleſs 'Bag.

Sir Nath. Rich.

'SOME Propoſitions we ſhall not 'meddle with, as a ſovereign Army to 'be tranſported; we are not fit for that 'yet, but we will not reject it; for 'great Princes who give out Rumour of 'raiſing great Armies, do put their 'Enemies to great Fears. Than the 'Defence of our Coaſts, nothing is more 'neceſſary; but the Bill of Poundage 'is for that particular Supply, and how 'far it may prejudice us for a future Pre-'cedent, to give other ſupply, let us be 'adviſed.

'AS to the omitting of any of the 'Propoſitions, I know you will do it 'upon Deliberation; ſome there are, not 'poſſible to be omitted, as the guarding 'of the Seas, Defence of the Elbe, 'Rochel, and thoſe draw on all the reſt. 'Ships muſt have Men and Ammunition, 'and we cannot divide any of theſe. 'This Houſe is tender of the Country. 'The King will not lay a Burden that 'cannot be born. We may ſupply his 'Majeſty without this; give we now 'what we pleaſe; the King may make 'uſe of it, before the People are able 'to pay; and we ſhall not only make 'his Majeſty ſubſiſt, but advance his 'Reputation in the World, by the U-'nity of his People, more than by any 'Treaſure.

CHARLES I. Ao 1628. Secretary Cook.

Sir John Elliot.

'INDEED there may be ſome Ne-'ceſſity for a War offenſive; but looking 'on one late Diſaſter, I tremble to 'think of ſending more abroad.

'LET us conſider thoſe two great 'Undertakings at Cadiz and Rhee: At 'Cadiz that was ſo glorioufly preten-'ded, where our Men arrived and found 'a Conqueſt ready; namely, the Spaniſh 'Ships, a Satisfaction ſufficient and fit 'for us, and this confeſſed by ſome then 'imployed, and never but granted by 'all, that it was feaſible and eaſy, why 'came this to nothing? After that Op-'portunity loſt, when the whole Army 'was landed with Deſtruction of ſome 'of our Men, why was nothing done? 'If nothing was intended, why were 'they landed, and why were they ſhip'd 'again? As for the Voyage to Rhee, 'was not the whole Action carry'd 'againſt the Judgment of the beſt Com-'manders, was not the Army landed? 'Not to mention the leaving of the 'Wines, nor touch the Wonder that 'Cæſar never knew, the enriching the 'Enemy by Courteſies: conſider what 'a Caſe we now are in, if on the like 'occaſion, or with the like Inſtruments, 'we ſhall again adventure another Ex-'pedition. It was ever the Wiſdom of 'our Anceſtors here, to leave foreign 'Wars wholly to the State, and not to 'meddle with them.

WHEN

Foedera Tom. XVIII. Sir Edward Cook.

'When poor England ſtood alone, and had not the Acceſs of another Kingdom, and yet had more, and as potent Enemies as now it hath, yet the King of England prevailed.

'In the Parliament Roll, in the 42d Year of Edward III, the King and the Parliament gave God Thanks for his Victory againſt the Kings of Scotland and France: He had them both in Windſor-Caſtle as Priſoners. What was the Reaſon of that Conqueſt? Four Reaſons were given. 1. The King was aſſiſted by good Council. 2. There were valiant Men. 3. They were timely ſupplied. 4. Good Employment.

'In the 3d of Richard II the King was environed with Flemings, Scots, and French, and the King of England prevailed.

'In the 13th of Richard II the King was environed with Spaniards, Scots, and French, and the King of England prevailed.

'In the 17th of Richard II, Wars were proclaimed in Ireland and Scotland, and yet the King of England prevailed, and Thanks were given to God here; and I hope I ſhall live to give God Thanks for our King's Victories.

'In the 7th of Henry IV, one or two Great Men about the King ſo mewed him up, that he took no other Advice but from them; whereupon the Chancellor took this Text and Theme in his Speech at the Parliament, Multorum conſilia requiruntur in magnis, in bello qui maximè timent ſunt in maximis periculis. Let us give, and not be afraid of our Enemies; let us ſupply bountifully, cheerfully, and ſpeedily, but enter not into Particulars: Solomon's Rule is, Qui repetit ſeparat; nay, ſeparat Fœderatos. We are united in Duty, &c. to the King; the King hath fourſcore thouſand Pounds a Year for the Navy, and to ſcowre the narrow Seas; it hath been taken, and we are now to give it, and ſhall we now give more to guard the Seas? Beſides, when that is taken of our Gift, it may be diverted another way.

'It ſhall never be ſaid, we deny all Supply; I think my ſelf bound, where there is commune periculum there muſt be commune auxilium.

Sir Thomas Wentworth.

'I CANNOT forget that Duty I owe to my Country, and unleſs we be ſecured in our Liberties we cannot give; I ſpeak not this to make Diverſions, but to the end that giving, I may give cheerfully. As for the Propoſitions to be conſidered of, I incline to decline them, and to look upon the State of our Country, whether it be fit to give or no: Are we come to an End for our Country's Liberties? Have we trenched on the Rates of the Deputy Lieutenants? Are we ſecured for Time future?

Sir Henry Martin.

'WE all deſire Remedies for our Grievances, and without them we ſhall neither be willing nor able to give: For my Part, I heartily deſire Remedy, but which is the beſt and wiſeſt Way, that is the Queſtion. As we have made ſome Progreſs in our Grievances, ſo let us now go on to Supply: There is a Proverb, Non bis ad idem, daſh not the Commonwealth twice againſt one Rock. We have Grievances, we muſt be eaſed of them; who ſhall eaſe us? No Nation hath a People more loving to the King than we; but let the King think it, and believe it, there is a Diſtance betwixt him and us; before we can have his Heart we muſt remove it: Our Diſeaſe is not ſo great but that it may be cured; it is the King's Evil which muſt be cured with Gold: Let us imitate Jacob, who wreſtled with the Angel, and would not let him go: I would we could wreſtle with the King in Duty and Love, and not to let him go in this Parliament, 'till he comply with us. We muſt take heed of too much Repetition and over-beating of Grievances; it is dangerous, and it may make a farther Separation. He that talks too much of his Grievances makes the Party that is the Cauſe of it make an Apology, and to juſtify it, and that is dangerous: Let us do as Poets in a Tragedy, that ſometimes have comical Paſſages, and ſo a generous Mind will ſink preſently. Sure a due Preſentation of ſuch Grievances to ſuch a King with Moderation will take Place with him. In all Deliberations go the ſafeſt Way: The old Way I have heard is firſt to remove Grievances: We muſt not tie and bind ourſelves by all that was done before. I have gone over the Thames in former Times on Foot, when it was all an Ice, but that is no Argument to perſwade me to do the like now, becauſe I did ſo once.'

Debates on the Liberty of the Subject in his Perſon.

THE Houſe waving the Debate of the Propoſitions, took into Conſideration two other Heads of the Liberty of the Subject in his Perſon; viz. Confinement and Deſignation to foreign Employment. The King's Council, by their bare Authority, had not only confined to their Houſes ſome of thoſe that refuſed to lend Money, but had ſent away ſome to diſtant Places from their Homes, and conſtrained others, on the ſame Account, to go and ſerve the King in foreign Countries. As to thoſe Points, ſeveral Gentlemen delivered their Opinion as follows;

Mr. Selden.

'CONFINEMENT is different from Impriſonment, and it is againſt the Law that any

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'any should be confined either to his 'House, or elsewhere. I know not what 'you can call a Punishment, but there is 'some Ground of it, or Mention thereof 'in Acts of Parliament, Law-Books or 'Records; but for this of Confinement 'I find none. Indeed Jews have been 'confined in former Times to certain 'Places, as here in London, to the Old 'Jewry. The Civilians have perpetu-'al Prisons and coercive Prisons, upon 'Judgments in Court: Carcer domesticus 'is a Confinement for Madmen.

Sir T. Hobby.

'I was employed in 88 in that Service; 'it was then thought fit that Recusants 'should be confined in strong Places, but 'it was not held legal, and when the 'Navy was dispersed they were set at 'Liberty; and the Parliament petitioned 'the Queen for a Law to warrant the 'Confinement. Hereupon it was resolved, 'That no Freeman ought to be confined 'by any Command of the King or Privy 'Council, or any other, unless it be by 'Act of Parliament, or by other due 'Course or Warrant of Law.

THEN the House proceeded to debate concerning Designation to foreign Employment, which Sir Peter Hayman opened with his own Case.

Sir Peter Hayman, about foreign Employment.

'I HAVE, says he, forgot my Employ-'ment unto the Palatinate; I was called 'before the Lords of the Council, for 'what I know not: I heard it was for 'not lending on a Privy-Seal; I told 'them, if they will take my Estate let 'them; I will give it up, lend I will 'not. When I was before the Lords of 'the Council, they laid to my Charge 'my Unwillingness to serve the King; I 'said, I had my Life and Estate to serve 'my Country and my Religion: They 'put upon me, if I did not pay, I should 'be put upon an Employment of Ser-'vice: I was willing: After ten Weeks 'waiting, they told me I was to go with 'a Lord into the Palatinate, and that I 'should have Employment there, and 'Means befitting: I told them I was a 'Subject, and desired Means. Some put 'on very eagerly, some dealt nobly: 'They said I must go on my own Purse; 'I told them, Nemo militat suis expen-'sis. Some told me I must go; I began 'to think, what must I? None were ever 'sent out in that kind. Lawyers told me 'I could not be so sent. Having that 'Assurance, I demanded Means, and was 'resolved not to stir upon those Terms, 'and in Silence and Duty I denied. Upon 'this, they having given me a Command 'to go, after some twelve Days they told 'me they would not send me as a Sol-'dier, but to attend on an Ambassador: 'I knew that Stone would hit me; I set-'led my troubled Estate, and addressed 'myself to that Service.

Mr. Hackwell.

'THIS is a great Point that much con-'cerns the Common-wealth, if the King 'cannot command a Subject to his ne-'cessary Service; and on the other Side, 'it will be little less than an honourable 'Banishment to the Subject, if he may. 'Our Books say the King cannot compel 'any to go out of the Realm; and upon 'an Action brought against him he can-'not plead in Bar, that he is by Com-'mand from the King in foreign Service; 'but the King may give him his Protecti-'on. In the Parliament Roll, 5 Ed-'ward III, N. 9, there was an Ordinance 'whereby the King had Power to send 'some to Ireland, and it is ordained that 'such Sages of the Law and Soldiers, 'where Need shall be, though they re-'fuse to go and excuse themselves, if 'their Excuses be not reasonable, the 'King may do to them according to 'Right and Reason. If the King by Law 'could do this of himself, and send them 'to Ireland, his own Dominion, he would 'never have taken Power from his Parlia-'ment; and if Men do not according to 'that Law, there is no Imprisonment pre-'scribed.

Sir E. Cook.

'No Restraint, be it never so little, 'but is Imprisonment, and foreign Em-'ployment is a kind of honourable Ba-'nishment. I myself was designed to go 'to Ireland; I was willing to go, and 'hoped, if I had gone, to have found 'some Mompessons there: There is a 'Difference when the Party is the King's 'Servant, and when not. The 46th of 'Edward III was the Time when the 'Law was in its Height; Sir Richard 'Pembridge was a Baron, and the King's 'Servant, and Warden of the Cinque 'Ports: He was commanded to go to 'Ireland, and serve as Deputy there, 'which he refused: He was not com-'mitted, but the King was highly of-'fended, and having Offices, and Fees, 'and Lands pro servitio suo impenso, the 'King seized his Lands and Offices: I 'went to the Parliament Roll, 47 Eliz. 'where I found another Precedent for fo-'reign Employment: They that have 'Offices pro consilio, or servitio impen-'so, if they refuse, those Lands and 'Offices so given are seized, but no Com-'mitment.

Sir Thomas Wentworth.

'IF any Man owes a Man a Displea-'sure, and shall procure him to be put 'into foreign Employment, it will be a 'Matter of high Concernment to the Sub-'ject: We know the Honour and Justice 'of the King; but we know not what 'his Ministers, or the Mediation of Am-'bassadors may do to work their own 'Wrath upon any Man.

'IF

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. Sir John Elliot.

'If you grant this Liberty, what are 'you the better by other Privileges? 'What Difference is there between Im-'priſonment at home, and conſtrained 'Employment abroad? It is no leſs than 'a temporary Baniſhment, neither is it 'for his Majeſty's Service to conſtrain his 'Subjects to Employment abroad: Ho-'nour and Reward invite them rather to 'ſeek it; but to be compelled ſtands not 'with our Liberty.

THESE Debates produced this Reſolution, 'That no Freeman ought to be con-'fined by any Command from the King, 'or Privy-Council, or any other, unleſs 'it be by Act of Parliament, or by other 'due Courſe or Warrant of Law.

As to the Matter of Supply, the Debate was put off 'till the Friday following.

Meſſage from the King to the Commons about the Duke of Bucks.

THE King being afraid that the Houſe of Commons would fall again upon the Duke of Bucks, upon a Rumour that he had ſpoke ill of the Parliament at the Council-Board, ſent a Meſſage to confute that Report by Mr. Secretary Cook, on Thurſday the 3d of April, who delivered it as follows:

'His Majeſty having underſtood that 'ſome Rumours were ſpread abroad of a 'ſharp Meſſage delivered by me Yeſter-'day, and of ſome malicious Words that 'the Duke ſhould ſpeak Yeſterday at the 'Council-Board, he commanded me to 'tell you of the Malice of thoſe falſe 'Reports; for that nothing fell from the 'Duke, or that Board, but what was 'for the Good of this Aſſembly. He 'would have you obſerve the Malice of 'thoſe Spirits that thus put in theſe Jea-'louſies: Had the Duke ſo ſpoken, he 'ſhould have contradicted himſelf; for 'all of us of the Council can tell he was 'the firſt Mover and Perſwader of this 'Aſſembly of Parliament to the King*. 'Eſteem of the King according to his 'Actions, and not theſe Tales. His Ma-'jeſty takes Notice of our Purpoſe, that 'on Friday we will reſolve upon Sup-'ply, which his Majeſty graciouſly ac-'cepts of, and that our free Gift, with-'out any Condition, ſhould teſtify to the 'World that we will be as far from en-'croaching upon his Prerogative, as he 'will be to encroach upon our Liberties: 'And this ſhall well appear when we 'preſent our Grievances to him, and then 'we ſhall know that he hath no Intenti-'on to violate our Liberties, only let us 'not preſent them with any Aſperity of 'Words: He counts it his greateſt Glory 'to be a King of Freemen, not of Vil-'lains. He thought to have delivered 'this Meſſage himſelf, but that he feared 'it would take us too much Time.

Then he added a Word of his own; 'Yeſterday after Dinner we attended his 'Majeſty, and he asked us what we had 'done? We ſaid, we had entered into 'the Conſideration of Supply, and that 'the final Reſolution was deferred 'till 'Friday; and that this was done for juſt 'Reaſons, to join the Buſineſs of his 'Majeſty's and our Country's together; 'and this would further his Majeſty, and 'it would give Content to the Country, 'and that this Union here might be ſpread 'abroad in the World. His Majeſty an-'ſwered, For God's ſake why ſhould any 'hinder them in their Liberties? If they 'did it not, I ſhould think they dealt 'not faithfully with me. You may ſee a 'true Character of his Majeſty's Diſpoſi-'tion. Let us proceed with Courage, and 'reſt aſſured his Majeſty will give great 'Ear unto us, and let us all join to make 'a perfect Union to win the King's Heart; 'we ſhall find a gracious Anſwer from 'the King, and a hearty Cooperation 'from thoſe that you think to be averſe 'to us.

AFTER ſome Debates upon this Meſſage, they acknowledged that his Majeſty had put a threefold Obligation upon them; 1. In giving them Satisfaction. 2. In giving them Aſſurance (which is a great Law) that he will protect and relieve them. 3. In giving them Advice as may befit the Gravity of that Aſſembly, and his own Honour: So they concluded to carry themſelves as their Progenitors had done before, who never were marked for ſtepping too far on the King's Prerogative; and then they returned his Majeſty their humble Thanks†.

Another Meſſage from the King.

April 4, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered another Meſſage from the King, to aſſure them of the Enjoyment of their Rights and Liberties with as much Freedom and Security in his Time, as in any Age heretofore under the beſt of our Kings, and that whether

* It is obſervable, that the Secretary took Care not to tell them that it was meerly out of Policy, to create a better Opinion of the Duke, purſuant to the Hint given by Sir Robert Cotton.

† The good Diſpoſition of the Commons at the Beginning of this Parliament was well obſerved in a Letter of Mr. William Bedell to Biſhop Uſher, dated at London, April 11, 1628.---- 'In Parliament Affairs the Be-'ginnings yet go marvellouſly well, the lower Houſe excellently temper'd: Nothing has been yet put to the 'Queſtion. The upper Houſe joined with them; inſomuch that when they received a Motion for a publick 'Faſt, they added another for putting in Execution all Laws and Acts of State againſt Recuſants. The Pe-'tition againſt Recuſants was penn'd by the Biſhops of Norwich and Lithfield. The Author of a mo-dern Hiſtory juſtly laments, that ſo happy a Juncture as this ſeemed to be for eſtabliſhing a good Underſtanding between the King and his People, had ſlipped. 'Had Buckingham, ſays he, now retired 'to the Enjoyment of his immenſe Riches; had the Biſhop of Canterbury been reſtored to the Exercise of 'his ſacred Function, of which he had been unjuſtly deprived; had Montagu been puniſhed, Laud decourted; 'had whether they thought fit to ſecure themſelves by Bill or otherwiſe, if it was done with due reſpect of his Honour, and the Publick Good, of which he did not doubt, he would certainly give Way to it; adding, that the more Confidence the Houſe ſhew'd in his Majeſty's Grace and Goodneſs, the more they ſhould prevail to obtain their own Deſire.

Five Subſidies voted.

AFTER ſome Debate, in which Mr. Pym took notice of the great Neceſſity for haſtening the Reſolutions to ſupply his Majeſty, they voted him five Subſidies.

April 7, Mr. Secretary Cook reported to the Houſe what the King ſaid, when he acquainted his Majeſty of their Reſolution; viz. 'He was pleaſed to ask by 'how many Voices they were granted? 'I ſaid, but by one. His Majeſty ask'd, 'how many were againſt him? I ſaid 'none; for they were voted by one Voice, 'and one general Conſent. His Majeſty 'was much affected therewith, and called the Lords in Council, and there I 'gave them an Account of what had paſſed; beſides, it gave his Majeſty no 'ſmall content, that altho' five Subſidies 'be inferior to his Wants, yet it is the 'greateſt Gift that ever was given in 'Parliament; and now he ſees with this 'he ſhall have the Affections of his People, which will be greater to him than 'all Value. He ſaid, he lik'd Parliaments 'at the firſt, but ſince (he knew not 'how) he was grown to a Diſtaſte of them; 'but was now where he was before, he 'loves them and ſhall rejoice to meet with 'his People often.'

The King's Acceptance reported.

MR. Secretary farther acquainted the Houſe of a Speech of the Duke of Buckingham's upon the ſame Occaſion at the Council-Table; which was very ſweet and popular, had it come from any other Perſon. The Speech was this;

Duke of Buckingham's Speech upon it at the Council-Table.

'SIR, methink, I behold you a great 'King, for Love is greater than Majeſty. 'An Opinion that the People loved you 'not, had almoſt loſt you in the Opinion 'of the World; but this Day makes you 'appear as you are, a glorious King, loved 'at Home, and now to be feared Abroad: 'This falling out ſo happily, give me leave, 'I beſeech you, to be an humble Suitor 'to your Majeſty, 1. For myſelf, that I 'who have had the Honour to be your 'Favourite, may now give up that Title unto them; they to be your Favourites, and 'I to be your Servant. My 2d Suit is, 'that they having done alſo well, you 'will account of them as one; a Body of 'many Members, but all of one Heart. 'Opinion might have made them differ, 'but Affection moved them all to join with 'like Love in this great Gift: For Proportion, tho' it be leſs than your Occaſions may ask, yet it is more than ever Subjects gave in ſo ſhort a time; nor am I 'perſuaded it will reſt there, for this is but 'as an Earneſt of their Affections, to let 'you ſee, and the World know, what Subjects you have, that when the Honour 'and Good of the State is engaged, and 'Aid asked in the ordinary way of Parliament, you cannot want. This is not 'the Gift of five Subſidies alone, but the 'opening of a Mine of Subſidies that lieth in their Hearts. This good Beginning hath wrought already theſe Effects, 'they have taken your Heart, drawn from 'you a Declaration that you will love 'Parliaments. And again, this will meet (I make no Queſtion) with ſuch Reſpect, 'that their Demands will be juſt, dutiful, 'and moderate; for they that know thus to 'give, know well what is fit to ask. Then 'cannot your Majeſty do leſs than outgo their Demands, or elſe you do leſs 'than your ſelf or them; for your Meſſage begot Truſt, their Truth and your 'Promiſes muſt then beget Performances. 'This being done, then ſhall I with a glad 'Heart behold this Work as well ended 'as now begun, and then ſhall I hope that 'Parliaments ſhall be made hereafter ſo 'frequent, by the Effects and good Uſe of 'them, as they ſhall have this farther 'Benefit, to deter from approaching your 'Ears thoſe Projectors and Inducers of 'Innovation, as Diſturbers both of Church 'and Common-wealth. Now, Sir, to open 'my Heart, and to eaſe my Grief, pleaſe 'you to pardon me a Word more; I muſt 'confeſs I have long lived in Pain. Sleep 'hath given me no Reſt, Favours and 'Fortunes no Content; ſuch have been my 'ſecret Sorrows, to be thought the Man 'of Separation, and that divided the King 'from his People, and them from him; but 'I hope it ſhall appear they were ſome 'miſtaken Minds that would have made 'me the evil Spirit that walketh between 'a good Maſter and loyal People by ill 'Offices; whereas, by your Majeſty's 'Favour, I ſhall endeavour to approve

'had the Papiſts been delivered over to the Law, as Echard ſays, the pious King had promiſed; had Neale, Wren, 'and other ſuch Prelates, fallen under the Weight of Parliamentary Diſpleaſure, and the general Hatred of the 'People; had the Petition of Right, which was then on foot in the Houſe of Commons, and ſoon after confirmed by the King, been duly obſerved; all which was moſt Juſt, Reaſonable and Eaſy; there is no room to doubt 'but this Prince might have Reigned as happily and glorioufly as ever did any one of his Predeceſſors; he being 'as obſtinate in his good Meaſures as his bad, and influenced in both rather by his Miniſters than his own Will. 'But inſtead of ſuch prudent and ſafe Meaſures of Government, it was his Majeſty's Unhappineſs to hear no 'Council but what came from Villiers, Laud, and ſuch like Counſellors, for whom there was no Safety, but in 'the abſolute Power of the Prince; which they therefore endeavoured to raiſe as high as he would have it; and 'that they ſucceeded but too well, the Sequel fully made appear.

'my

'my self a good Spirit, breathing nothing 'but the best of Services to them all. 'Therefore this Day I account more bleſ- 'ſed to me than my Birth, to ſee my ſelf 'able to ſerve them, to ſee you brought 'in Love with Parliaments, to ſee a Par- 'liament expreſs ſuch Love to you, and 'God ſo love me and mine, as I joy to ſee 'this Day.'

SIR John Elliot expreſſed his Diſlike that the Duke's Name ſhould be intermingled with the King's, contrary to the Cuſtom of our Fathers, and to the Honour of our Times, and deſired it might not be ſuffered hereafter.

Conference between the Lords and Commons on Liberty and Property managed by Sir Dudley Diggs, &c.

SEVERAL Members were now appointed to manage a Conference with the Lords upon the Reſolutions of the Commons relating to the Liberties and Properties of the Subject.

SIR Dudley Diggs opened the Conference by way of Introduction concerning the Foundation and Antiquity of our Laws and Cuſtoms. Sir Edward Littleton of the Inner-Temple, afterwards Lord Keeper, ſpoke at large upon the Subject of Perſonal Liberty. Mr. Selden, of the Inner-Temple, inſiſted upon the Precedents in that Matter, and ſhew'd that the late Impriſonment of Gentlemen for the receiving the Loan, was without Precedent. Sir Edward Cook maintained the Argument as to the rational Part of the Law. The Managers, in ſhort, proved, that the forementioned Reſolutions of the Commons were part of Magna Charta, ſix Acts of Parliament, 12 Precedents in Terms, and 31 more.

April 8 and 9 were ſpent in the Debate about Billeting of Soldiers upon the Subject contrary to Law, and on the 10th Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd this Meſſage from the King; viz. 'That his Majeſty 'deſireth this Houſe not to make any Re- 'ceſs theſe Eaſter Holidays, that the 'World may take notice how earneſt 'his Majeſty and we are for the public 'Affairs in Chriſtendom, which by ſuch 'a Receſs would receive Interruption.

King's Meſſage to the Commons for Non Receſs at Eaſter excepted to.

THIS Meſſage was far from being ſatisfactory to the Houſe, and was particularly reſented firſt by Sir Robert Phillips, who ſaid 'That in the 12 and 18 of the 'late King, upon the like Intimation, the 'Houſe reſolv'd it was in their own Pow- 'er to adjourn or ſit; hereafter, ſaid he, 'this may be put upon us by Princes of 'leſs Piety; let a Committee conſider of 'it, and of our Right herein, and make a 'Declaration.'

By Sir Robert Phillips.

Sir Edward Cook.

SIR Edward Cook ſpoke to the ſame purpoſe, and ſaid, 'I am as tender of the 'Privileges of this Houſe, as of my Life, 'and they are the Heart-ſtrings of the 'Common-wealth. The King makes a 'Prorogation, but the Houſe adjourns 'itſelf. If the King write to an Abbot 'for a Corody, for a Valet, if it be ex 'rogatu, tho' the Abbot yield to it, yet 'it binds not: Therefore I deſire that it 'be enter'd, that this is done ex rogatu 'Regis.'

THE matter in ſhort was referred to a Committee to conſider of the Power of the Houſe to adjourn itſelf, to the end that if it were now yielded to in Obedience to his Majeſty, it might not turn to Prejudice in time to come.

Commons Anſwer.

HEREUPON a Meſſage was ſent to acquaint the King, that the Houſe would give all Expedition to his Majeſty's Service, notwithſtanding their purpoſe of Receſs. To which his Majeſty returned Anſwer, 'That the Motion proceeded 'from himſelf, in regard of his Engage- 'ment in the Affairs of Chriſtendom, that 'he wiſhed them all Alacrity in their 'Proceedings, and that there might be 'no Receſs at all.'

King's Reply.

ON the 11th of April Secretary Cook moved to expedite the Vote of Subſidies, and to have it immediately turned into an Act. 'We have many Petitions, ſaid he, 'to the King, and they are Petitions of 'Right; we have freely and bountifully 'given five Subſidies, but no Time is ap- 'pointed, and Subſidy without Time is no 'Subſidy; let us appoint a Time.

Secretary Cook's Speech for Subſidies.

SIR Dudley Diggs ſeconded the Motion. 'We have, ſaid he, freely conclu- 'ded our Liberties, we have offered five 'Subſidies; his Majeſty hath given us 'graciousAnſwers; we have Good by our 'Beginnings, what have we had hitherto 'done for the King? Nothing is done 'that the King can take notice of. The 'World thinks that this Parliament hath 'not expreſſed that Reſolution that it did 'at the firſt; how much does it concern 'the King that the World be ſatisfy'd with 'his Honour? Our Succeſs and Honour 'is the King's; Princes want not thoſe 'that may ingratiate themſelves with them 'by doing ill Offices. There is a Stop, 'and never did a Parliament propound any 'thing but it hath been perfected ſooner 'than this is: May not the King ſay, what 'have I done? They grow cold; have I 'not told them I will proceed with as 'much Grace as ever King did? He will 'ſettle our Proprieties and Goods: Have 'we not had a gracious Anſwer? Are we 'Hand in Hand for his Supply? Shall it be 'ſaid that this Day it was moved, but de- 'nied? It may put our whole Buſineſs 'back; wherein can this diſadvantage us? 'This binds us not; I dare ſay confident- 'ly, we ſhall have as much as ever any 'Subjects had from their King.

Sir Dudley Diggs.

SIR Thomas Wentworth propoſed a middle Way, which paſſed into a Reſolution of the Houſe; viz. That Grievances and Supply go Hand in Hand.

April 12, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered another Meſſage from the King to haſten the Supply; which, becauſe it gave Offence, we give the Reader at Length.

King's threatning Meſſage about Supply.

'HIS Majeſty having given timely Notice to this Houſe, as well of the Preſſure of the Time, as of the Neceſſity of Supply, hath long ſince expected ſome Fruit of that which was ſo happily begun; but finding a Stop beyond all Expectation, after ſo good Beginning, he hath commanded me to tell you, that without any farther, or unneceſſary Delay, he would have you to proceed in this Buſineſs; for however he hath been willing and conſenting his Affairs and ours ſhould concur and proceed together, yet his Meaning was not that the one ſhould give Interruption to the other, nor the Time to be ſpun out upon any Pretence, upon which the common Cauſe of Chriſtendom doth ſo much depend. He bids us therefore take heed that we force not him to make an unpleaſing End of that which was ſo well begun.

'I WILL diſcharge my Duty, I ſhall humbly deſire this honourable Houſe not to undervalue or overſtrain this Meſſage. If we conceive any thing in it to tend as if his Majeſty threatened to diſſolve this Parliament, we are deceived. His Majeſty intends the contrary, and to put us in ſuch a Way that our Buſineſs may have ſpeedy Succeſs. His Majeſty takes Notice of a peremptory Order, whereby he conceived that his Buſineſs was excluded at leaſt for a Time: That which doth moſt preſs his Majeſty is Time. Believe that the Affairs now in Hand preſs his Majeſty's Heart more than us: Let us remove Delays that are more than neceſſary; let us awaken ourſelves, he intends a ſpeedy Diſpatch.

'I MUST with ſome Grief tell you, that Notice is taken, as if this Houſe preſſed not upon the Abuſes of Power only, but upon Power itſelf. This toucheth the King and us, who are ſupported by that Power. Let the King hear of any Abuſes of Power, he will willingly hear us; and let us not bend ourſelves againſt the Extention of his Royal Power, but contain ourſelves within thoſe Bounds, that we meddle only with Preſſures and Abuſes of Power, and we ſhall have the beſt Satisfaction that ever King gave. I beſeech you all concur this Way, and uſe that Moderation we have had the Honour yet to gain.

THE Secretary being called upon to explain what he meant by the Word Power, he anſwered, I cannot deſcend to Particulars, or go from that his Majeſty gave me Warrant or Power to deliver.

THIS threatening Meſſage, which did the King great Injury, the rather becauſe it ſhewed a Backwardneſs in the King to redreſs the Grievances, occaſioned many Debates, in which Sir Robert Phillips ſaid, he hoped their Moderation would have given his Majeſty a right Underſtanding of their Loyalty. Others propoſed 'to find out a Way, by God's Providence, to make this Meſſage happy to King and People, it concerning the King's Honour abroad, and our Safety at home, that this Parliament be happy. Let us prevent, ſay they, theſe Miſchiefs which by frequent Meſſages thus obſtruct us. Let thoſe Gentlemen near the Chair ſee that we have endeavoured to apply ourſelves to his Majeſty's Service, notwithſtanding this Meſſage. In 12 Jac. a Meſſage of this Nature produced no Good: Nothing ſo endangers us with his Majeſty as that Opinion that we are antimonarchically affected; whereas ſuch is, and ever hath been our Loyalty, if we were to chooſe a Government, we would chooſe this Monarchy of England above all Governments in the World.

Debates on it.

ABOUT two Days after, Mr. Secretary Cook did again preſs the Affair of the Supply, alledging, 'that all Negotiations of Ambaſſadors are at a Stop while the Houſe ſits, and that this Stop is as a Froſt upon the Earth, which hinders the ſweet Vapours between his Majeſty and his Subjects; and that as Matters ſtand, the Soldiers can neither be diſbanded, nor put in Service.

Secretary Cook preſſes again for Supply.

'THIS Motion, ſaid Mr. Wandesford, comes unexpectedly, but it is fit to receive ſome Satisfaction: The proceeding now with our Grievances ſhall open the Stop that hinders his Majeſty's Affairs.' Sir Humphry May added, 'that Sweetneſs, Truſt, and Confidence, are the only Weapons for us to deal with our King, and that Coldneſs, Inforcement, and Conſtraint, will never work our Ends. If, ſaid he, we compaſs all we deſire, and have not his Majeſty's Heart, what will a Law, or any thing elſe do us good?

More Debates on it.

IN ſhort, theſe Meſſages one upon the Neck of another, gave frequent Occaſions to the Court-Party to preſs the Houſe to content his Majeſty; and the general Strain of all their Speeches was to inſpire the Members with the Dread of the fatal Conſequences of a Quarrel betwixt the King and his Parliaments. As his Majeſty also, and the Lord-Keeper, by his Order, had often made use of the same Means to frighten the Commons, it cannot be doubted, says Rapin, that these Men spoke pursuant to the Intentions, and perhaps by Order of the Court. But this Threat so often hinted by the King himself, and by the Lord-Keeper, and now again by Members of the House known to be devoted to the Court, sometimes in obscure, and at other times in plain Terms, produced an Effect quite contrary to what the Court expected; and, instead of terrifying the Commons, only made them the more watchful of the King's Proceedings.

UPON the whole, it was ordered that a special Committee of eight Persons shall presently withdraw themselves, and consult together upon some Heads, and upon the Substance of a fair Representation to his Majesty, by way of Answer to all his Messages, which the Speaker shall deliver in his Speech to his Majesty upon Easter-Monday (if the King please to give Access) and at the same time to deliver the Petition against billeting of Soldiers, the Unlawfulness and insupportable Miseries of which were fully and pathetically opened in the said Petition, which was delivered accordingly upon Easter-Monday, the 21st of April, when the Commons being admitted to the King's Presence, the Speaker accompany'd it with the following Speech.

Most Gracious and Dread Sovereign,

Speaker's Speech to the King when he presented the Petition against Billeting of Soldiers.

'YOUR dutiful and loyal Commons 'here assembled, were lately humble Suitors to your Majesty for Access to your 'Royal Presence: The Occasion that 'moved their Desires herein, was a Particular of Importance worthy your 'Princely Consideration; which, as it 'well deserves, should have been the 'only Subject of my Speech at this Time.

'BUT since your gracious Answer for 'this Access, obtained by a Message from 'your Majesty, they have had some 'Cause to doubt, that your Majesty is 'not so well satisfied with the Manner of 'their Proceedings as their hearty Desire 'is you should be; especially in that 'Part which concerns your Majesty's present Supply, as if in the Prosecution 'thereof they of late used some Slackness 'or Delay.

'AND because no Unhappiness of theirs 'can parallel with that which may proceed from a Misunderstanding in your 'Majesty of their clear and loyal Intentions, they have commanded me to attend your Majesty with an humble and 'summary Declaration of their Proceedings since this short Time of their Sitting, which they hope will give your 'Majesty abundant Satisfaction, that never People did more truly desire to be 'embraced in the Favour and gracious 'Opinion of their Sovereign; and withal 'to let you see, that as you can have 'no where more faithful Counsel, so your 'great Designs and Occasions can no where 'be so speedily or heartily supported, as 'in this old and ancient Way of Parliament.

'FOR this Purpose they humbly beseech 'your Majesty to take into your Royal 'Consideration, that although by ancient Right of Parliament the Matters 'there debated are to be disposed in their 'true Method and Order, and that their 'ancient Custom hath been to take into 'their Considerations the common Grievances of the Kingdom, before they 'enter upon the Matter of Supply; yet 'to make a full Expression of that Zeal 'and Affection which they bear to your 'Royal Majesty, equally at least, if not 'exceeding the best Affections of their 'Predecessors to the best of your Progenitors; they have in this Assembly, 'contrary to the ordinary Proceedings of 'Parliament, given your Majesty's Supply Precedence before the common Grievance of the Subject, how pressing soever, joining with it only those fundamental and vital Liberties of the Kingdom which give Subsistence and Ability 'to your Subjects.

'THIS was their original Order and Resolution, and was grounded upon a true 'Discerning that these two Considerations 'could not be secured, but did both of 'them entirely concern your Majesty's 'Service, consisting no less in enabling 'and encouraging the Subject, than in 'proportioning a Present suiting to your 'Majesty's Occasions and their Abilities; 'nay, so far have they been from using 'any unnecessary Delays, as though of 'the Two, that of Supply were the latter 'Proposition amongst them, that the Grand 'Committee to which both were referred, 'hath made that of your Majesty's Supply first ready for Conclusion.

'AND to be sure your Majesty's Supply might receive no Interruption by 'the other, differing from Usage and 'Custom, in Cases of this Nature, sent 'up of those that concern the Subjects 'by Parcels, some to your Majesty, and 'some to the Lords, to the End your Majesty might receive such speedy Content 'as suited with the largest and best Extent of their first Order.

'SIR, You are the Breath of our Nostrils, and the Light of our Eyes; and 'besides those many Comforts which under you and your Royal Progenitors, in 'this Frame of Government, this Nation 'hath 'hath enjoyed, the Religion we profeſs 'hath taught us whoſe Image you are; 'and we do all moſt humbly beſeech 'your Majeſty to believe that nothing is, 'or can be more dear to us than the ſa-'cred Rights and Prerogatives of your 'Crown; no Perſon or Council can be 'greater Lovers of you, nor be more 'careful to maintain them; and the pre-'ſerving of thoſe fundamental Liberties 'which concern the Freedom of our Per-'ſons, and Property of Goods and Eſtates, 'is an eſſential Means to eſtabliſh the true 'Glory of a Monarchy.

'For rich and free Subjects, as they are 'beſt governed, ſo they are moſt able to 'do your Majeſty Service either in Peace 'or War, which next under God hath 'been the Cauſe of the happy and fa-'mous Victories of this Nation, beyond 'other Kingdoms of larger Territories 'and greater Number of People.

'What Information ſoever contrary to 'this ſhall be brought unto your Majeſty, 'can come from no other than ſuch as for 'their own Ends, under Colour of ad-'vancing the Prerogative, do indeed un-'dermine and weaken Royal Power by 'impoveriſhing the Subjects, render this 'Monarchy leſs glorious, and the People 'leſs able to ſerve your Majeſty.

'Having (by this that hath been ſaid) 'cleared our Hearts and Proceedings to 'your Majeſty, our Truſt is, that in your 'Royal Judgment we ſhall be free from 'the leaſt Opinion of giving any neceſſa-'ry Stop to our Proceedings in the Matter 'of your Supply, and that your Majeſty 'will be pleaſed to entertain Belief of 'our Alacrity, and Cheerfulneſs in your 'Service, and that hereafter no ſuch Miſ-'fortune ſhall befal us, to be miſunder-'ſtood of your Majeſty in any thing.

'We all moſt humbly beſeech your 'Majeſty to receive no Information in 'this, or any other Buſineſs, from pri-'vate Relations, but to weigh and judge 'of our Proceedings from thoſe Reſolu-'tions of the Houſe that ſhall be repre-'ſented from our ſelves.

'This rightly and graciouſly under-'ſtood, we are confident, from the Know-'ledge of your Goodneſs and our own 'Hearts, that the ending of this Parlia-'ment ſhall be much more happy than 'the Beginning, and be to all Ages The 'bleſſed Parliament, for making perfect 'Union between the beſt King and the 'beſt People, that your Majeſty may ever 'delight in calling us together, and we 'in the Comforts of your gracious Favour 'towards us.

'In this Hope I return to my firſt Er-'rand, which will beſt appear by that 'which I ſhall humbly deſire you to hear, 'it being an humble Petition of the Houſe 'of Commons, for the redreſſing of thoſe 'many Inconveniencies and Di-'ſtractions that have befallen your Sub-'jects by the billeting of Soldiers in 'private Mens Houſes, againſt their Wills.

'Your Royal Progenitors have ever 'held their Subjects Hearts the beſt Gar-'riſon of this Kingdom; and our hum-'ble Suit to your Majeſty is, that our 'Faith and Loyalty may have ſuch Place 'in your Royal Thoughts, as to reſt aſ-'ſured that all your Subjects will be rea-'dy to lay down their Lives for the De-'fence of your ſacred Perſon, and this 'Kingdom.

'Not going ourſelves into our Coun-'tries this Eaſter, we ſhould think it a 'great Happineſs to us, as we know it 'would be a ſingular Comfort and En-'couragement to them that ſent us hi-'ther, if we might but ſend them the 'News of a gracious Anſwer from your 'Majeſty in this Particular, which the 'Reaſons of the Petition we hope will 'move your moſt Excellent Majeſty gra-'ciouſly to vouchſafe.

The Petition concerning the Billeting of Soldiers, preſented to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty,

'In all Humility complaining, ſhew-'eth unto your moſt Excellent Majeſty 'the Commons now in Parliament aſſem-'bled, That whereas by the fundamental 'Laws of this Realm every Freeman 'hath, and of Right ought to have, a 'full and abſolute Propriety in his Goods 'and Eſtate, and that theſe for the bil-'leting and placing of Soldiers in the 'Houſe of any ſuch Freeman, againſt 'his Will, is directly contrary to the ſaid 'Laws, under which we and our Anceſ-'tors have been ſo long and happily go-'verned; yet in apparent Violation of 'the ſaid ancient and undoubted Right 'of all your Majeſty's loyal Subjects of 'this your Kingdom in general, and to 'the grievous and inſupportable Vexation 'and Detriment of many Countries and 'Perſons in particular, a new and almoſt 'unheard of Way hath been invented 'and put in Practice, to lay Soldiers up-'on them, ſcattered in Companies here 'and there, even in the Hearts and Bow-'els of this Kingdom, and to compel 'many of your Majeſty's Subjects to re-'ceive and lodge them in their own Hou-'ſes, and both themſelves and others to 'contribute towards the Maintenance of 'them, to the exceeding great Diſturbance 'of your Majeſty, the general Terror of 'all, and utter Undoing of many of your 'People; inſomuch as we cannot ſuffici-'ently recount, nor in any way propor-'tionable to the lively Senſe that we have 'of our Miſeries herein, are we able to 'repreſent unto your Majeſty the innu-

'merable

'merable Miſchiefs and moſt grievous 'Vexations, that by this Means alone we 'do now ſuffer, whereof we will not pre-'ſume to trouble your ſacred Ears with 'particular Inſtances; only, moſt Graci-'ous Sovereign, we beg Leave to offer to 'your moſt gracious View, a compaſſion-'ate Conſideration of a View of them in 'particular.

1. 'THE Service of Almighty God is 'hereby greatly hindered, the People in 'many Places not daring to repair to the 'Church, leſt in the mean time the Sol-'diers ſhould rifle their Houſes.

2. 'THE ancient and good Government 'of the Country is hereby neglected, and 'almoſt contemned.

3. 'YOUR Officers of Juſtice, in Per-'formance of their Duties, have been re-'ſiſted and endangered.

4. 'THE Rents and Revenues of your 'Gentry greatly and generally diminiſhed; 'Farmers, to ſecure themſelves from the 'Soldiers Inſolence, being by the Clamour 'and Sollicitation of their fearful and in-'jured Wives and Children, enforced to 'give up their wonted Dwellings, and to 'retire themſelves into Places of more ſe-'cure Habitation.

5. 'HUSBANDMEN, that are as it were 'the Heads of the Country, corrupted by 'ill Example of the Soldiers, and encou-'raged to idle Life, give over Work, 'and rather ſeek to live idly, at another 'Man's Charges, than by their own La-'bours.

6. 'TRADESMEN and Artificers, almoſt 'diſcouraged, and being enforced to leave 'their Trades, and to employ their Time 'in preſerving themſelves and their Fa-'milies from Cruelty.

7. 'MARKETS unfrequented, and our Ways 'grown ſo dangerous, that the People 'dare not paſs to and fro upon their 'uſual Occaſions.

8. 'FREQUENT Robberies, Aſſaults, Bat-'teries, Burglaries, Rapes, Rapines, Mur-'ders, barbarous Cruelties, and other moſt 'abominable Vices and Outrages are ge-'nerally complained of from all Parts 'where theſe Companies have been, and 'had their Abode, few of which Inſo-'lences have been ſo much as queſtion-'ed, and fewer, according to their Deme-'rit, puniſhed.

'THESE, and many other lamentable 'Effects, moſt Dread and Dear Sovereign, 'have, by the billeting of Soldiers, al-'ready fallen upon us your loyal Sub-'jects, tending no leſs to the Diſſervice 'of your Majeſty than to their Impover-'iſhing and Deſtruction; ſo that thereby 'they are exceedingly diſabled to yield 'your Majeſty thoſe Supplies for your 'urgent Occaſions which they heartily 'deſire; and yet they are further per-'plexed with Apprehenſion of more ap-'proaching Danger; one in regard of 'your Subjects at home, the other of 'Enemies from abroad; in both which 'Reſpects it ſeems to threaten no ſmall 'Calamity to the meaner ſort of your 'People, being exceeding poor, where-'of in many Places are great Multitudes, 'and therefore in Times of more ſettled, 'and more conſtant Adminiſtration of 'Juſtice, not eaſily ruled, are moſt apt 'upon this Occaſion to caſt off the Reins 'of Government, and by joining them-'ſelves with thoſe diſordered Soldiers, 'are very like to fall into Mutiny and 'Rebellion; which, in faithful Diſcharge 'of our Duties, we cannot forbear moſt 'humbly to preſent to your high and ex-'cellent Wiſdom, being preſſed with pro-'probable Fears that ſome ſuch Miſchief 'will ſhortly enſue, if an effectual and 'ſpeedy Courſe be not taken to remove 'out of the Land, or otherwiſe to disband 'thoſe unruly Companies.

'FOR the Second, we do moſt hum-'bly beſeech your Majeſty to take into 'your Princely Conſideration, that many 'of thoſe Companies, beſides their diſſo-'lute Diſpoſitions and Carriages, are ſuch 'as do openly profeſs themſelves Papiſts, 'and therefore to be ſuſpected, that if 'Occaſion ſerve, they will rather adhere 'to a foreign Enemy of that Religion, 'than to your Majeſty, their Liege Lord 'and Sovereign, eſpecially ſome of their 'Captains and Commanders, being as Po-'piſhly affected as themſelves, and having 'ſerved in the Wars on the Part of the 'King of Spain, and Arch-Dutcheſs, 'againſt your Majeſty's Allies; which of 'what pernicious Conſequence it may 'prove, and how prejudicial to the Safe-'ty of your Kingdom, we leave to your 'Majeſty's High and Princely Wiſdom.

'AND now upon theſe, and many more 'which might be alledged, moſt weigh-'ty and important Reaſons, grounded on 'the Maintenance of the Worſhip and 'Service of Almighty God, the Conti-'nuance and Advancement of your Ma-'jeſty's high Honour and Profit, the Pre-'ſervation of the ancient and undoubted 'Liberties of your People, and therein 'of Juſtice, Induſtry, and Valour, which 'nearly concern the Glory and Happineſs 'of your Majeſty and all your Subjects, 'and the preventing of Calamity and 'Ruin of both Church and Common-'wealth,

'WE your Majeſty's moſt humble and 'loyal Subjects the Knights, Citi-'zens and Burgeſſes of your Houſe 'of Commons, in the Name of all 'the Commonalty of your King-'dom, who are upon this Occaſion 'moſt miſerably diſconſolate and af-'flicted,

'flicted, proſtrate at the Throne of 'your Grace and Juſtice, do moſt 'ardently beg a preſent Remove of 'this inſupportable Burden, and that 'your Majeſty would be graciouſly 'pleaſed to ſecure us from the like 'Preſſure in the Time to come.'

To the Speech and Petition his Majeſty reply'd, 'That they ſhould go on ſpeedi-'ly with their Buſineſſes without any 'more Apology; that it was their Duty 'to give Credit to what he ſaid, as to 'Him that ſat at the Helm; and that as 'to their Petition, he would make An-'ſwer in convenient Time.'

Remark on the Behaviour of the King, and of the Commons.

'IT is merry enough, ſays our Author, 'to ſee how the King and Commons play'd 'upon each other. They expreſſed not 'their real Thoughts when they ſpoke to 'each other, and yet they underſtood one 'another perfectly, though they feigned 'they did not. The Commons knew very 'well that the Reaſons to juſtify the De-'lay of the Supply alledged in their Re-'preſentation were not good, and that 'the King was ſenſible of the ſame thing; 'but they thought he would ſeem to be 'ſatisfied that he might not oblige them 'to tell him to his Face that they could 'not truſt to his Promiſes, and that they 'looked upon this Delay as the only Means 'to have their Grievances redreſſed. The 'King feigned to be ignorant of this Rea-'ſon, and took Advantage of the Com-'mons uſing dark Hints, and going about 'the Buſh inſtead of ſpeaking their Minds 'plainly. On the other Hand, though 'the King had no Deſign to redreſs Grie-'vances, he would fain, however, have it 'thought that he intended it as ſoon as 'the Buſineſs of Supply was diſpatched. 'The Commons, on their Part, pretend-'ing to be ignorant of his Thoughts, had 'a Mind to make believe that the Delay 'of Supply came from quite another 'Cauſe, though they were ſure that the 'King could not be deceived. But the 'King not thinking himſelf obliged to uſe 'the ſame Ceremony with the Commons 'as he expected from them, talked to 'them in a higher Strain, well knowing 'that unleſs Things ſhould come to an 'Extremity, they would not think fit to 'ſpeak more plainly.'

Proceedings upon the Petition of Right.

THE Commons, whoſe View, as has been already ſaid, was to reap ſome Advantage by the five Subſidies which they propoſed to grant to the King, had prepared that called The Petition of Right, to be preſented to his Majeſty in the Name of both Houſes, to which they deſired the Concurrence of the Lords; with whom the Commons alſo debated the Legality of trying Soldiers billeted in private Houſes, by martial Law. The King's Serjeant, Aſhley, argued, that the Propoſitions made by the Commons tended rather to Anarchy than Monarchy, and that they muſt allow the King to govern by Acts of State; for which the Lords committed him, and he recanted. Another of his Majeſty's Serjeants, Sir ..... Davids, talked much more like an Engliſhman; for notwithſtanding the Obligations of his Poſt, he defended the Rights of the Subjects as well as of the Sovereign, aſſerting the Engliſh Monarchy to be truly Regal, but not Tyrannical; and that the Government was over Freemen, and not Slaves.

MEAN time the King was not a little alarmed for fear of having ſuch a Petition preſented to him, which too plainly eſtabliſhed the Rights of the People, becauſe he ſaw that if he rejected it he ſhould loſe the five Subſidies, the Bill not being yet paſſed. On the other Hand, if he granted the Contents of the Petition, he was ſenſible that he ſhould tie up his own Hands for the future, and that it would be a plain Confeſſion that the Acts of Authority which he had 'till then exerciſed were contrary to Law. Into this very Straight alſo the Commons wanted to draw him by the Petition of Right: Wherefore he omitted nothing that was in his Power to ward off the Blow. As he had a great Party in the Houſe of Lords, he managed it ſo that they, by pretending to agree with the Commons in the Subſtance of the Petition, drew up a Plan of Propoſals to be made to the King touching the Liberty and Property of the Subject, with which the Commons, after a Conference thereupon with the Lords, were not ſatisfied, and ſaw they were only contrived to choak, or elude the Petition of Right, which would in a great Meaſure become needleſs if thoſe Propoſals were received. The Truth is, there was a great deal of Difference, as we ſhall ſee by and by, between theſe Declarations and what was required in the Petition. The Declarations or Propoſals were all expreſſed in general Terms, which might give the King room to cavil upon the Performance of each Article, as he had been ſeen to do in the Buſineſs of Loans, and the Impriſonment of thoſe that refuſed to comply. The King therein did not pretend to act contrary to the Laws: He rather thought himſelf authorized by the Law, and the Judges of the Realm had countenanced his Pretenſions. But the Petition of Right was more full and particular, and left but little room for Cavils. On the other Hand, the Difference was not ſmall between the direct and Parliamentary Reply which the Commons required, and bare and general Declarations which were not capable of contenting the People; ſo that the Commons entirely rejected them. The ſaid Propoſals, which were more reſpectful and ſubmiſſive to the King than the Petition, and which the Biſhop of Canterbury introduced with a ſmooth ſoftening Speech, were read firſt by the Biſhop of Norwich, and then by the Clerk of the Upper-Houſe, as follow:

Propoſitions tendered by the Lords to the Commons touching the Petition of Right.

THAT his Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed to declare, 1. 'That the good old 'Law, called Magna Charta, and the ſix 'Statutes conceived to be Declarations and 'Explanations of it, do ſtill ſtand in Force 'to all Intents and Purpoſes.

2. 'THAT according to Magna Charta 'and the Statutes aforeſaid, as alſo ac- 'cording to the moſt ancient Cuſtoms and 'Laws of this Land, every free Sub- 'ject of this Realm hath a fundamental 'Propriety in his Goods, and a funda- 'mental Liberty of his Perſon.

3. 'THAT it is his Royal Pleaſure, to ra- 'tify and confirm to all his loyal Subjects 'all their ancient juſt Liberties, Privileges, 'and Rights, in as ample and beneficial 'manner, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as 'their Anceſtors enjoyed the ſame under 'the beſt of his moſt noble Progenitors.

4. 'THAT for the Satisfaction and Secu- 'rity of his loyal Subjects, his Majeſty 'will proceed in all Caſes within the Cog- 'nizance of the Common Law, concerning 'the Liberty of the Subject, according 'to the Common Law of this Land, and 'according to the Laws eſtabliſhed in this 'Kingdom, and in no other Manner.

5. 'As touching his Majeſty's Royal 'Prerogative, intrinſical to his Sovereign- 'ty, and intruſted him by God, ad commu- 'nem totius populi ſalutem, & non ad 'deſtructionem, that his Majeſty would 'reſolve not to uſe or divert the ſame to 'the Prejudice of any of his loyal People 'in their Propriety of their Goods, or 'Liberty of their Perſons: And in caſe, 'for the Security of his Majeſty's Royal 'Perſon, the common Safety of his Peo- 'ple, or the peaceable Government of this 'Kingdom, his Majeſty ſhall find juſt 'Cauſe, for reaſon of State, to impriſon or 'reſtrain any Man's Perſon, his Majeſty 'would graciouſly declare, That within a 'convenient Time he ſhall and will ex- 'preſs the Cauſe of the Commitment or 'Reſtraint either General or Special; and 'upon a Cauſe ſo expreſſed, will leave 'him immediately to be try'd according to 'the Common Juſtice of the Kingdom.

THE King not being able to ſucceed in his Deſign by Means of the Upper-Houſe, try'd to ſatisfy the Commons by making them the ſame Offers of his own Accord, which the Lords had only ſeemed to deſire of him. And to this Purpoſe having ſent for both Houſes to Whitehall, on the 28th of April, the Lord-Keeper, in his Name, and Preſence, made a Speech to urge the Diſpatch of the Supply without longer Debate upon the Liberty of the Subject. 'His Majeſty, ſays he, has com- 'manded me to let you know, that he 'holdeth the Statute of Magna Charta 'and the other ſix Statutes inſiſted on for 'the Subjects Liberty, to be all in Force, 'and aſſures you that he will maintain all 'his Subjects in the juſt Freedom of their 'Perſons and Safety of their Eſtates; 'and that he will govern according to the 'Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and 'that ye ſhall find as much Security in his 'Majeſty's Royal Word and Promiſe 'as in the Strength of any Law ye 'can make; ſo that hereafter ye ſhall ne- 'ver have Cauſe to complain.'

CHARLES I. Anno 1628.

Lord-Keeper's Speech preſſing for the Supply.

THUS, as Dr. Kennet very well obſerved, the only Queſtion here betwixt the King and Parliament was this; Whether his Majeſty's Royal Word and Promiſe delivered by the Speaker in the King's Name and Preſence, was a ſufficient Security for redreſs of Grievances, and future Maintenance of Rights and Liberties; or whether this verbal Promiſe ought not rather to be put into a written Law, as a more ſolemn Aſſurance to the People: The firſt was thought moſt conducing to the King's Honour; the ſecond more agreeable to the Conſtitution of Parliaments.

Mr. Secretary Cook for Reliance on the King's Promiſe, and his Definition of Government and Law.

WHEN the Commons were returned from the Lords Houſe, Mr. Secretary Cook, who was Member for the Univerſity of Cambridge, made a Speech for Reliance on the King's Word; 'It is to be preſumed, ſaid 'he, that his Government will be accor- 'ding to the Law. We cannot but re- 'member what his Father ſaid, He is 'no King, but a Tyrant, that governs not 'by Law. But this Kingdom is to be 'governed by the Common Law, and his 'Majeſty aſſures us as much: The Inter- 'pretation is left to the Judges, and to his 'Great Council, and all is to be regula- 'ted by the Common Law; I mean not 'Magna Charta only, for that Magna 'Charta was part of the Common Law, 'and the Ancient Law of this Kingdom; 'all our Difference is in the Application 'of this Law, and how this Law with 'Difference is derived into every Court. 'I conceive there are two Rules, the one 'of Braſs that is rigid and will not bend, 'and that is the Law of the King's Bench; 'and there comes in the Law of the Chan- 'cery and of Equity: This is Application 'of Law in private Mens Cauſes, when 'it comes to Meum and Tuum. And thus 'the general Government of Caſes with 'relation to the Common State of the 'Kingdom is from the Council-Board, and 'there

'there they are to vary from the Law of the Kingdom. Suppoſe it be in Time of Dearth, Propriety of Goods may in that Time be forced and be brought to the Market: We ſaw the Experience of it in Coals in London, and the Council-Board cauſed them to be brought forth and ſold. In a Time of Peſtilence Men may be reſtrained. If a Schiſm be like to grow in a Church, the State will enquire after the Favourers of it. If there be Fear of Invaſion, and it be encouraged by Hope of a Party among us, it is in the Power of Government to reſtrain Men to their Houſes. Whatſoever Law we make, it muſt come to his Majeſty's Allowance; and if his Majeſty find Cauſe in his Government, he may not put Life to it. We daily ſee all Laws are broken, and all Laws will be broke for the Publick Good, and the King may pardon all Offences. The King's Heart is the beſt Guarder of all his Promiſes; his Promiſe is bound with his Heart. The wrath of a king is like the roaring of a lion; and all Laws with his Wrath are to no Effect; but the King's Favour is like the dew of the graſs. As his Majeſty hath now ſhewed himſelf the beſt of Kings, let us acknowledge his Majeſty's Goodneſs, and Return to that Union which we all deſire.'

BUT this Motion was not received with general Acceptation; and Sir Benjamin Rudyard moved that the Effect of the King's Promiſe might be put into a Bill. His Speech is too remarkable to be paſſed over.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard's Speech.

'WE are now, ſaid he, upon a great Buſineſs, and the manner of handling it may be as great as the Buſineſs itſelf. Liberty is a precious Thing, for every Man may ſet his own Price upon it, and he that doth not value it deſerves to be valued accordingly: For my own part I am clear without Scruple, that what we have reſolved is according to the Law; and if any Judge in England were of a contrary Opinion, I am ſure we ſhould have heard of him e'er now. Out of all queſtion, the very Scope and Driſt of Magna Charta was to reduce the regal to a legal Power in matter of Impriſonment, or elſe it had not been worthy ſo much contending for.

'IT is true, that the King ought to have a Truſt repoſed in him; God forbid but he ſhould, and I hope it is impoſſible to take it from him; for it lies not in the Wit of Man to deviſe ſuch a Law as ſhall comprehend all Particulars, all Accidents, but extraordinary Caſes may happen, which when they come, if they be diſpoſed of for the common Good, there will be no Law againſt them; yet muſt the Law be general, for otherwiſe Admiſſions and Exceptions will fret and eat out the Law to nothing. God himſelf hath conſtituted a general Law of Nature to govern the ordinary Courſe of things; he hath made no Law for Miracles; yet there is this Obſervation of them, that they are rather præter naturam, than contra naturam, and always propter bonos fines: So the King's Prerogatives are rather beſides the Law than againſt it; and when they are directly to their Ends for the Publick Good, they are not only concurring Laws, but even Laws in Singularity and Excellency.'

'BUT to come nearer, let us conſider where we now are, what Steps we have gone and gained: The King's learned Council have acknowledged all the Laws to be ſtill in Force; the Judges have not allowed any Judgment againſt theſe Laws; the Lords alſo have confeſſed that the Laws are in full Strength; they have farther retained our Reſolutions entire and without Prejudice.

'ALL this hitherto is for our Advantage; but above all, his Majeſty hath this Day (himſelf being publickly preſent) declared by the Mouth of the Lord-Keeper, before both the Houſes, that Magna Charta and the other ſix Statutes are in Force; That he will maintain his Subjects in the Liberties of their Perſons and Proprieties of their Goods; That he will govern them according to the Laws of the Kingdom, &c. The King is a good Man, and it is no Diminution to a King to be called ſo; for whoſoever is a good Man ſhall be greater than a King that is not ſo. The King certainly is very tender of his preſent Honour, and of his Fame hereafter. He will think it hard to have a worſe Mark ſet upon him than upon any of his Anceſtors, by extraordinary Reſtraints: His Majeſty hath already intimated unto us, by a Meſſage, that he doth willingly give way to have the Abuſe of Power reformed; by which I do verily believe he doth very well underſtand what a miſerable Power it is which hath produced ſo much Weakneſs to himſelf and to the Kingdom; and it is one Happineſs that he is ſo ready to redreſs it.

'FOR mine own Part, I ſhall be very glad to ſee that old decrepit Law, Magna Charta, which hath been ſo long kept and lain Bed-ridden, as it were; I ſhall be glad to ſee it walk abroad again with new Vigour and Luſtre, attended and followed with the other ſix Statutes; queſtionleſs it will be a great heartning to the People. I doubt not but upon a debating Conference with the Lords we may happily fall upon a fair and fit Accommodation concerning the Li'berty of our Perſons and Propriety of 'our Goods. I hope we may have a Bill 'to agree in the Point againſt Impriſon-'ment for Loans or Privy-Seals. As for 'intrinſical Power, and Reaſon of State, 'they are Matters in the Clouds, where 'I deſire we may leave them, and not 'meddle with them at all, leſt by the 'way of Admittance we may loſe ſome-'what of that which is our own already: 'Yet this, by the Way, I will ſay of 'Reaſon of State, That in the Latitude 'by which it is uſed, it hath eaten out 'almoſt not only the Laws, but all the 'Religion of Chriſtendom.

'Now I will only remember you of 'one Precept, and that of the wiſeſt Man. 'Be not over wiſe; be not over juſt: 'And he gives his Reaſon; for why wilt 'thou be deſolate? If Juſtice and Wiſ-'dom may be ſtretched to Deſolation, let 'us thereby learn that Moderation is the 'Virtue of Virtues, and Wiſdom of Wiſ-'doms. Let it be our Maſter-piece ſo 'to carry the Buſineſs that we may keep 'Parliaments on Foot: For as long as 'they be frequent, there will be no irre-'gular Power, which though it cannot be 'broken at once, yet in ſhort Time it 'will be made and mouldered away; 'there can be no total or final Loſs of 'Liberties as long as they laſt; what we 'cannot get at one Time we ſhall have at 'another.'

UPON this Debate it was ordered, that a Committee of Lawyers prepare a Bill, containing the Subſtance of Magna Charta and the other Statutes that concern the Liberty of the Subjects, which Affair took up two Days *.

ON the 1ſt of May Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Meſſage from his Majeſty, viz. to know whether the Houſe will reſt on his Royal Word declared to them by the Lord-Keeper; which if they do, he again aſſures them, it ſhall be Royally performed.

UPON this there was a great Silence in the Houſe for ſome Space, when Mr. Secretary proceeded and ſaid, 'That he 'knew his Majeſty was reſolved to do as 'much as ever King did for his Subjects. 'When Means were denied, his Majeſty 'being a young King, and newly come 'to his Crown, which he found engaged 'in a War, what could we expect in ſuch 'Neceſſities? His Majeſty called this 'Parliament to make up the Breach: His 'Majeſty aſſures us, we ſhall not have 'the like Cauſe to complain: He aſſures 'us the Laws ſhall be eſtabliſhed, what 'can we deſire more? All is that we pro-'vide for Poſterity, and prevent the like 'Suffering for the future. Can we do 'more? We are come to the Liberty of 'the Subjects and the Prerogative of the 'King. I hope we ſhall not add any 'thing to ourſelves to depreſs him. I 'will not divine, I think we ſhall find 'Difficulty with the King, or with the 'Lords: I ſhall not deliver my Opinion 'as Counſellor to his Majeſty, which I 'will not juſtify and ſay here, or at the 'Council-Board. Will we in this Ne-'ceſſity ſtrive to bring ourſelves into a 'better Condition and greater Liberty than 'our Fathers had, and the Crown into a 'worſe than ever? I dare not adviſe his 'Majeſty to admit of that. If this that 'we now deſire be no Innovation, it is 'all contained in thoſe Acts and Statutes, 'and whatſoever elſe we would add more 'is a Diminution to the King's Power, 'and an Addition to our own. We 'deal with a wiſe and prudent Prince that 'hath a Sword in his Hand for our Good, 'and this Good is ſupported by Power. 'Do not think that by Caſes of Law and 'Debate we can make that not to be Law 'which by Experience we every Day 'find neceſſary. Make what Law you 'will, if I do diſcharge the Place I bear, 'I muſt commit Men, and muſt not diſ-'cover the Cauſe to any Jailor or Judge: 'If I by this Power commit one without 'juſt Cauſe, the Burden falls heavy on 'me by his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, and 'he will remove me from my Place. Go-'vernment is a ſolid Thing, and muſt be 'ſupported for our Good.'

SIR Robert Phillips ſaid, 'We are 'now come to the End of our Journey, 'and the well diſpoſing of an Anſwer to 'this Meſſage will give Happineſs or Mi-'ſery to this Kingdom.'

IN ſhort, it was plain from the Debate, that no poſitive Anſwer could be given to ſuch a Meſſage. Open Denial had ſeemed a rude Affront, and expreſs Aſſent had been (in the Apprehenſion of moſt) a giving up the Cauſe of Engliſh Parliaments.

NEXT Day the Houſe entered into a Grand Committee to debate of this Matter. Mr. Herbert being in the Chair, ſome few who were for laying aſide the Petition of Right, argued for reſting on his Majeſty's Promiſe; but the Majority ſaid, that the Subject had ſuffered more in the Violation of ancient Liberties within theſe

* ON the ſame Day, viz. April 28, there were Debates in the Houſe of Commons upon the Augmentation of poor Livings, and there are two very good Speeches preſerved on that Subject; one printed in Oxford, 4to, entituled, Sir Benjamin Rudyard's Speech in a Committee of the Houſe of Commons, in Behalf of the Clergy, and of Pariſhes miſerably deſtitute of Inſtruction, through want of Maintenance; the other a Speech in the Houſe of Commons touching the Augmentation of poor Benefices. Printed in Dr. Kennet's Caſe of Impropriat. Append. 8vo.

few Years, than in three hundred Years before; and therefore Care ought to be taken to eſtabliſh the legal Security by ſome ſolemn Act for the Time to come. Sir Edward Coke propoſed, that to pay all poſſible Deference to his Majeſty's Honour, the Bill ſhould not come from the Houſe, but from the King. Others deſired the Houſe to conſider when and where the late Promiſe was made: Was it not in the Face of both Houſes? Cruel Kings have been careful to perform their Promiſes, yea, though they have been unlawful, as Herod. Therefore, ſay they, if we reſt upon his Majeſty's Promiſe, we may aſſure ourſelves of the Performance of it. Beſides, we bind his Majeſty by relying on his Word: We have Laws enough; it is the Execution of them that is our Life, and it is the King that gives Life and Execution.

SIR Thomas Wentworth concluded the Debate, ſaying, 'That never did a Parliament truſt more in the Goodneſs of their King for their own private Safety than the preſent; but we are ambitious that his Majeſty's Goodneſs may remain to Poſterity, and we are accountable to a publick Truſt: And therefore ſeeing there hath been a publick Violation of the Laws by his Miniſters, nothing will ſatisfy him but a publick Amends.'

THIS ſo well agreed with the Senſe of the Houſe, that they made it the Subject of a Meſſage to be delivered by the Speaker to his Majeſty.

Another Meſſage from his Majeſty by Secretary Cook.

DURING theſe Deliberations another Meſſage was delivered to the Houſe from his Majeſty by Secretary Cook, acquainting them, in order to haſten the Supply, 'that publick Affairs would admit of no 'longer Delay, and that his Majeſty intended to put an End to this Seſſion in 'a Week's Time; but that upon Diſpatch 'and good Correſpondence, there ſhould 'be another Seſſion at Michaelmas next, 'for the perfecting of ſuch things as cannot now be done.' However, this did not divert the Commons from their Purpoſe of turning the Petition of Right into an Act of Parliament. They were not to be frightened with the Menace of putting an End to the Seſſion, the King having gone too far to draw back. The only Point was to know whether he would be pleaſed to grant by Bill what he was willing to grant any other Way, and he could not break with the Parliament on that Account, without entirely forfeiting the Love of the People, and without loſing the five Subſidies: So that the Commons were reſolved not to let ſlip this Opportunity of firmly eſtabliſhing the Rights of the Subjects. The aforeſaid Meſſage was taken into Conſideration next Day, when Sir John Elliot ſpoke to this Effect: 'The 'King will rank himſelf with the beſt of 'Kings, and therefore he would have us to 'rank ourſelves with the beſt of Subjects. 'We will not encroach upon that Sove'reignty which God hath put into his 'Hands. This makes me fear that his 'Majeſty is miſinformed in what we go 'about: As for the Time of this Seſſion 'it is but ſhort, and look how many Meſ'ſages we have, ſo many Interruptions, 'and Miſreports, and Miſrepreſentations 'to his Majeſty produce thoſe Meſſages.'

Sir Miles Fleetwood ſaid, 'The Breach 'of this Parliament will be the greateſt 'Miſery that ever befel us: The Eyes 'of Chriſtendom are upon this Parlia'ment: The States of all our Proteſtant 'Friends are ready to be ſwallowed up by 'the Emperor's Forces, and our own King'dom is in a miſerable Straight: Our 'Religion is invaded by the Roman Ca'tholicks, under Colour of a Commiſſion 'that is intolerable: The Defence of our 'Realm by Shipping is decayed: The 'King's Revenue is ſold and gone; where 'ſhall the Relief be obtained, but in 'Parliament?'

IN Concluſion the Commons agreed upon an Anſwer to all the preceding Meſſages, and preſented it to his Majeſty by their Speaker, who having firſt thanked him in their Name for his gracious Aſſurance that he would govern according to the Laws, and told him, that the Commons greateſt Confidence was in his Goodneſs, deſired that by a Bill they might ſatisfy the People of their Rights; and added, That it was not their Intention to encroach upon the Royal Prerogative.

The Speaker's Speech to the King.

HIS Majeſty's Anſwer was delivered by the Lord-Keeper as follows:

Mr. Speaker, and you Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

The King's Meſſage by the Lord-Keeper.

'HIS Majeſty hath commanded me to 'tell you, that he expected an Anſwer 'by your Actions, and not Delay by 'Diſcourſe. Ye acknowledge his Truſt 'and Confidence in your Proceedings, but 'his Majeſty ſees not how you requite 'him by your Confidence of his Word 'and Actions: For what need Explana'tions, if ye doubted not the Perform'ance of the true Meaning? For Expla'nations will hazard an Encroachment up'on his Prerogative: And it may well be 'ſaid, What need a new Law to confirm 'an old, if you repoſe Confidence in 'the Declaration his Majeſty made by me 'to both Houſes; and yourſelves ac'knowledge that your greateſt Truſt and 'Confidence muſt be in his Majeſty's 'Grace and Goodneſs, without which no'thing ye can frame will be of Safety 'or Avail to you. Yet to ſhew clearly

'the

'the Sincerity of his Majesty's Intentions, 'he is content that a Bill be drawn for 'a Confirmation of Magna Charta, and 'the other six Statutes insisted upon for 'the Subjects Liberties, if ye shall choose 'that as the best Way, but so as it may 'be without Additions, Paraphrases, or 'Explanations.

'THUS, if you please, you may be se-'cured from your needless Fears, and this 'Parliament may have a happy wish'd 'for End: Whereas by the contrary, if 'ye seek to tie your King by new, and 'indeed impossible Bonds, ye must be 'accountable to God and your Country 'for the ill Success of this Meeting. His 'Majesty hath given his Royal Word that 'ye shall have no Cause to complain here-'after; less than which hath been enough 'to reconcile Great Princes, and therefore 'ought much more to prevail between a 'King and his Subjects.

'LASTLY, I am commanded to tell 'you, that his Majesty's Pleasure is, that 'without farther Replies, or Messages, or 'other unnecessary Delays, ye do what 'ye mean to do speedily, remembering 'the last Message that Secretary Cook 'brought you in point of Time; his 'Majesty always intending to perform his 'Promise to his Power.'

Another of his Messages.

AFTER this, viz. on the 6th of May, another Message was brought from the King by Secretary Cook to press the House to rely on the King's Word, notwithstanding the Intimation of his Majesty's Approbation of a Bill.

HE further added, this Debate was fitter to be done before the whole House, and not before the Committee, and that it was a new Course to go to a Committee of the whole House.

Remark on it.

BOTH the Answer and Message shewed how much the King dreaded the Petition of Right, which he justly apprehended would contain not only the Substance of Magna Charta, and of the six Statutes, but such Explanations as would prevent all future Cavils concerning the true Intent of those Laws. No Wonder therefore that he avoided the giving of this Sanction to the said Charter and Statutes, when he was conscious that though they had been long in Force, he had in Violation thereof exacted Money from his Subjects by way of Loan, and imprisoned such as refused to comply. But nothing could more tend to convince the Commons of the Necessity of such Explanations, than the King's Endeavours to avoid them. And the extreme Desire he shewed that they should rest on his Word, was a very strong Reason for securing the Liberty of the Subject by something more binding than they took his Word to be.

MR. Rapin, to whom we are obliged for these Remarks, thinks it also very strange that the Lord-Keeper, in the Close of his Speech last mentioned, should dictate to the House to debate the Matter, not in a Committee, but in a whole House. For the better understanding both of the Fact, and of the Remark, our Author acquaints such of his Readers as are Strangers to the Method of Parliaments, that in a full House a Member is allowed to speak but once to the same Point without the Liberty of answering or replying. But when the House is formed into a Committee, every one may argue; answer, or reply by which Means the Points in Hand are so fully canvassed and cleared, that it is easy for every one present to frame his Opinion upon the Arguments, Answers, and Replies which he has heard. It seems therefore by what the Lord-Keeper insinuated to the Commons, that the King was apprehensive of the Consequences of this Way of debating; but they did not think proper to receive his Instructions, or to alter their usual Method.

SIR John Elliot replied to the Secretary, that the Proceeding in a Committee is more honourable and advantagious to the King and the House, for that Way leads most to Truth, and it is a more open Way, and where every Man may add his Reason, and make Answer upon the hearing of other Mens Reasons and Arguments. The House therefore entered into a Committee to take into Consideration all that could be said for or against what the King desired; and having caused the Door to be shut, and the Key to be laid on the Table, the general Sense of the Majority was thus expressed by Sir Edward Coke, which being but short, we give it as it is taken from Rushworth.

Sir Edward Coke's Speech for the Petition of Right.

'WAS it ever known, said he, that 'general Words were a sufficient Satisfacti-'on to particular Grievances? Was ever a 'verbal Declaration of the King Verbum 'Regni? When there are Grievances, the 'Parliament is to redress them. Did ever 'Parliament rely on Messages? They put 'up Petitions of their Grievances, and the 'King never answered them: The King's 'Answer is very gracious, but what is 'the Law of the Realm? that is the 'Question. I put no Diffidence in his 'Majesty; the King must speak by a 'Record, and in Particulars, and not in 'General. Did you ever know the King's 'Message come into a Bill of Subsidies? 'All succeeding Kings will say, Ye must 'trust me as well as ye did my Pre-'decessors, and trust my Messages; but 'Messages of Love never came into a Par-'liament.

'liament. Let us put up a Petition of Right: Not that I diſtruſt the King, but 'becauſe I cannot take his Truſt except 'in a Parliamentary Way.'

As the Commons had reſolved that Supply and Grievances ſhould go pari paſſu, the Petition of Right was no ſooner ready with the Addition of the Clauſe of Martial Law, and preſented to the Lords for their Concurrence *, at a Conference which was on the 8th of May, but they made one Step farther in the Buſineſs of the Five Subſidies, ordering that the two firſt ſhould be paid the 10th of July, one more the 12th of October, another the 20th of December, and the laſt on the 1ſt of March enſuing; which tho' it was done to take from the King all Pretence of complaining that the Buſineſs of the Supply was neglected, yet it did not ſatisfy him. He wanted to have the Subſidy-Bill drawn up and paſſed before the Petition of Right was preſented to him, which the Commons were fully reſolved not to do, being perſwaded that as ſoon as the Subſidy-Bill ſhould be paſſed, the Parliament would either be prorogued or diſſolved.

Commons fix a Time for Payment of the Subſidies before the Bill is paſſed.

Sir Edward Coke, who was the Manager of the Conference for the Commons, thus expreſſed himſelf: 'My Lords, it is 'evident what Neceſſity there is, both in 'reſpect of yourſelves and your Poſteri-'ties, to have good Succeſs of this Buſi-'neſs. We have a Maxim in the Houſe 'of Commons, and written on the Walls 'of it, That old Ways are the ſafeſt 'and ſureſt Ways: And at laſt we have 'fallen upon that which we thought (if 'your Lordſhips approve of it) to be the 'moſt ancient Way of all, and that is my 'Lords, via fauſta, both to his Majeſty, to 'your Lordſhips, and ourſelves. We have 'therefore drawn up a Form of a Petiti-'on, deſiring your Lordſhips, who are 'involved in the ſame Danger, to concur 'with us herein.' Then the Petition was 'read.

May 12, The Lords, of whom there was a very ſtrong Party for the Court, had another Conference with the Commons, wherein the Lord-Keeper declared the Reſult of the Debates in the Upper-Houſe upon the Petition of Right, viz. That upon a Motion of his they had agreed to alter ſome Words, and put in others, to make it more ſweet and palatable to the King: And then he communicated the following Letter, which they received from his Majeſty while they were debating the Articles of Commitments.

To the Right Truſty and Right Well-beloved the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the higher Houſe of Parliament.

CAROLUS REX.

'We being deſirous of nothing more than 'the Advancement of the Peace and Proſ-'perity of our People, have given Leave 'for free Debate upon the higheſt Points 'of our Prerogative Royal, which in the 'Time of our Predeceſſors, Kings and 'Queens of this Realm, were ever re-'ſtrained, as Matters that they would not 'have diſcuſſed; and in other things we 'have been willing ſo far to deſcend to 'the Deſires of our good Subjects, as might 'fully ſatisfy all moderate Minds, and 'free them from all juſt Fears and Jea-'louſies, which thoſe Meſſages which we 'have heretofore ſent into the Commons 'Houſe will well demonſtrate unto the 'World; yet we find it ſtill inſiſted up-'on, that in no Caſe whatſoever, ſhould 'it never ſo nearly concern Matters of State 'or Government, we or our Privy-Council 'have Power to commit any Man with-'out the Cauſe ſhewed; whereas it often 'happens, that ſhould the Cauſe be ſhew-'ed, the Service itſelf would thereby be 'deſtroyed and defeated, and the Cauſe 'alledged muſt be ſuch as may be deter-'mined by our Judges of our Courts of 'Weſtminſter, in a legal and ordinary 'way of Juſtice; whereas the Cauſes 'may be ſuch as thoſe Judges have not 'Capacity of Judicature, nor Rules of 'Law to direct and guide their Judgment 'in Caſes of that tranſcendent nature; 'which happening ſo often, the very 'encroaching on that conſtant Rule of 'Government for ſo many Ages within 'this Kingdom practiſed, would ſoon 'diſſolve the very Foundation and Frame 'of our Monarchy. Wherefore as to our 'Commons, we made fair Propoſitions, 'which might equally preſerve the juſt 'Liberty of the Subject; ſo, my Lords, 'we have thought good to let you know, 'that without the Overthrow of Sove-'reignty we cannot ſuffer this Power to 'be impeached: Notwithſtanding, to clear 'our Conſcience and juſt Intentions, this 'we publiſh, that it is not in our Heart, 'nor will we ever extend our Royal Pow-'er lent unto us from God, beyond the 'juſt Rule of Moderation, in any thing 'which ſhall be contrary to our Laws and 'Cuſtoms,

He may alſo conſult another of the ſame Size and Date, written by Sir Walter Raleigh, and dedicated to the King and Parliament, entituled, The Prerogative of Parliaments in England, proved in a Dialogue between a Counſellor of State and a Juſtice of Peace.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1628.

'Customs, wherein the Safety of our People ſhall be our only Aim. And we do hereby declare our Royal Pleaſure and Reſolution to be, which, God willing, we ſhall ever conſtantly continue and maintain, that neither We, nor our Privy-Council, ſhall, or will, at any time hereafter, commit, or command to Priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrain the Perſons of any for not lending Money to us, nor for any Cauſe which in our Conſcience doth not concern the publick Good and Safety of Us, and our People, we will not be drawn to pretend any Cauſe wherein our Judgment and Conſcience is not ſatisfy'd with: Baſe Thoughts we hope no Man can imagine will fall into our Royal Breaſt; and that in all Caſes of this Nature which ſhall hereafter happen, we ſhall, upon the humble Petition of the Party, or Addreſs of our Judges unto us, readily and really expreſs the true Cauſe of their Commitment, or Reſtraint, ſo ſoon as with Convenience and Safety the ſame is fit to be diſcloſed and expreſſed; and that in all Cauſes criminal, of ordinary Juriſdiction, our Judges ſhall proceed to the Deliverance or Bailment of the Priſoner, according to the known and ordinary Rules of the Laws of this Land, and according to the Statutes of Magna Charta, and thoſe other ſix Statutes inſiſted upon, which we do take Knowledge ſtand in full Force, and which we intend not to abrogate and weaken, againſt the true Intention thereof. This we have thought fit to ſignify, the rather to ſhorten any long Debate upon this great Queſtion, the Seaſon of the Year being ſo far advanced, and our great Occaſions of State not lending many more Days for longer Continuance of this Seſſion of Parliament.'

Given under our Signet, at our Palace at Weſtminſter, the 10*th of* May*, in the fourth Year of our Reign.

UPON the Communication of this Letter Sir Thomas Wentworth ſaid, it was a Letter of Grace, but that the People will only like of that which is done in a Parliamentary Way; that the Debate of it would ſpend much Time, neither was it directed to the Houſe of Commons.

Inflexibility of the Commons.

IN ſhort, the Commons took no farther Notice of this Letter, which they looked upon as another Artifice of the King, by ſuch obſcure and ambiguous Expreſſions and Reſtrictions to elude his Promiſes at the very Time that he would have them be received as ſolemn, authentick, and ſatisfactory, and by ſo far evading the Petition of Right that he might be at Liberty to uſe his Prerogative as he had done hitherto. But the Commons had another Attack to ſuſtain from the Lords, who, at a Conference held on the 17th, upon a Motion made by Biſhop Williams, who nevertheleſs ſpoke learnedly for the Petition, propoſed an additional Clauſe†, which would have rendered it of no Effect; as was at leaſt the Intention of the Court, by whom the Houſe of Lords was probably guided in this Matter. It ran thus: 'We 'preſent this our humble Petition to your 'Majeſty, with the Care not only of preſerving our own Liberties, but with due 'Regard to leave entire that Sovereign 'Power wherewith your Majeſty is truſted, 'for the Protection, Safety, and Happineſs 'of the People.'

A Saving Clauſe propounded by the Lords, rejected.

THIS Saving Clauſe was nicely debated in the Houſe of Commons, and rejected eſpecially for theſe three Reaſons:

The Reaſons for rejecting it.

1. BECAUSE of the Ambiguity of the Words Sovereign Power, which the Parliaments had never uſed in ſpeaking of the King's Prerogatives.

2. BECAUSE this Addition was in the Nature of a Saving of the King's Sovereignty, which rendered the Petition of no Force. And it was alledged, that in the Reign of Edward I, the Parliament having preſented the like Petition to the King, he would have added theſe Words, Saving the King's Right and Sovereignty; but the Parliament would not conſent to it, becauſe ſuch ſort of Savings invalidate whatever they are annexed to. It was ſaid likewiſe, that for the ſame Reaſon the Kings of old would never ſuffer the Clergy to inſert in any of their Acts, Saving the Honour of God and the Church.

3. BECAUSE if this Addition was general, and had no Reference to the Petition, there was no need of admitting it; but if on the contrary it did refer to the Petition, it was evident it rendered the Petition of no Effect.

THERE were ſeveral remarkable Speeches in both Houſes on this Occaſion, recorded by Ruſhworth and others, which are as entertaining and inſtructive as the Subject is important.

COKE ſays, that Sir Robert Heath, Attorney-General, pleaded againſt this Petition eagerly and impertinently, and that in the Houſe of Lords the Duke of Buckingham, Laud, Neale, and ſuch like Prelates, did what they could to cruſh it. But the Repreſentation of Grievances was ſo lively in the Speeches of the beſt Members of that illuſtrious Aſſembly, that the Court Lords, and Prelates, could not hinder their Fellow-Subjects of this Happineſs as earneſtly as they endeavoured it.

* THIS Letter is dated in Ruſhworth the 20th, which is ſo palpable a Miſtake, that it is ſtrange it ſhould have been overlooked by Mr. Rapin's Tranſlator or Printer.

Archbiſhop Abbot's Caſe.

ARCHBISHOP Abbot urged his own Caſe, how he was ſhut out of his Houſes at Lambeth and Croydon by Laud and other Biſhops: How he had been confined at Ford, a mooriſh Place, on purpoſe, as Coke ſays, to kill him; and debarred from the Management of his Juriſdiction, which Laud aſſumed in Defiance of Law or Conſcience. The Houſe of Lords being entered into a Committee, the Lord Say moved that thoſe Peers who ſtood for the Liberty of the Nation ſhould be recorded, and that the oppoſite Party ſhould, with the Subſcription of their Names, enter their Reaſons, which ſhould be alſo recorded, that Poſterity might not be at a Loſs to find who they were that ſo ignobly betrayed the Freedom of their Country. The Houſe of Peers were ſurprized at the Lord Say's Motion, and to the great Terror of the Betrayers, who dreaded the Mark that would in ſuch Caſe be put upon them, Larrey aſſures us, that Lord deſired they might be diſtinguiſhed from the other Lords, by ſitting by themſelves on the other ſide of the Houſe. A noted Hiſtorian has given a Liſt of them as follows:

THE Peers, as aforeſaid, having paſſed the Petition with a Salvo to the Right of the Sovereign, the Commons, in their Debate on the ſaid Amendment, juſtified their legal Rights with Reaſons worthy a Roman Senate. The ſaving Clauſe in particular produced ſeveral Speeches.

Mr. Alford.

'LET us look, ſaid he, into the Records, and ſee what they are; what is ſovereign Power? Bodin ſaith, that it is free from any Condition; by this we ſhall acknowledge a Regal, as well as a Legal Power: Let us give that to the King that the Law gives him, and no more.'

Mr. Pimm.

'I AM not able to ſpeak to this Queſtion, I know not what it is. All our Petition is for the Laws of England, and this Power ſeems to be another diſtinct Power from the Power of the Law. I know how to add Sovereign to his Perſon, but not to his Power: Alſo we cannot leave to him Sovereign Power. We never were poſſeſſed of it.'

Mr. Hackwell.

'WE cannot admit of thoſe Words with Safety, they are applicable to all the Parts of our Petition: It is in the Nature of a Saving, and by it we ſhall imply as if we had encroached on his Prerogative; all the Laws we cite are without a Saving; and yet now after the Violation of them we muſt add a Saving: Alſo I have ſeen diverſe Petitions, and where the Subject claimed a Right, there I never ſaw a Saving of this Nature.'

Sir Edward Coke.

'THIS is magnum in parvo; this is propounded to be a Concluſion of our Petition. It is a Matter of great Weight, and to ſpeak plainly, it will overthrow all our Petition; it trenches to all Parts of it: It flies at Loans, and at the Oath, and at Impriſonment, and Billeting of Soldiers: This turns all about again. Look into all the Petitions of former Times, they never petitioned wherein there was a Saving of the King's Sovereignty. I know that Prerogative is part of the Law, but Sovereign Power is no Parliamentary

'mentary Word! In my Opinion it weakens Magna Charta and all our Statutes; 'for they are abſolute without any ſaving 'of ſovereign Power; and ſhould we now 'add it, we ſhall weaken the Foundation 'of Law, and then the Building muſt 'needs fall: Take we heed what we yield 'unto, Magna Charta is ſuch a Fellow 'that he will have no Sovereign: I wonder this Sovereign was not in Magna Charta, or in the Confirmations of it: 'If we grant this by Implication, we give 'a ſovereign Power above all theſe Laws. 'Power in Law is taken for a Power with 'Force: The Sheriff ſhall take the Power of the County, what it means here 'God only knows: It is repugnant to our 'Petition, that is a Petition of Right 'grounded on Acts of Parliament. Our 'Predeceſſors could never endure a ſalvo jure ſuo, no more than the Kings of 'old could endure for the Church, ſalvo honore Dei & Eccleſiæ. We muſt not 'admit of it, and to qualify it is impoſſible: Let us hold our Privileges according to the Law; that Power that is above this, it is not fit for the King and 'People to have it diſputed farther. I 'had rather for my Part have the Prerogative acted, and I myſelf to lie under 'it, than to have it diſputed.'

Sir Thomas Wentworth. 'IF we do admit of this Addition, we 'ſhall leave the Subject worſe than we 'found him, and we ſhall have little 'Thanks for our Labour when we come 'home. Let us leave all Power to his 'Majeſty to puniſh Malefactors. But 'theſe Laws are not acquainted with Sovereign Power: We deſire no new 'Thing, nor do we offer to trench on his 'Majeſty's Prerogative: We may not recede from this Petition either in part or 'in whole.'

Mr. Noy. 'To add a Saving is not ſafe: Doubtful Words may beget an ill Conſtruction, and the Words are not only doubtful 'Words, but Words unknown to us, and 'never uſed in any Act or Petition before *.'

Mr. Selden. 'IF the Salvo has no Reference to our 'Petition, what does it here? I am ſure 'all others will ſay it hath Reference, and 'ſo muſt we. How far it doth exceed all 'Examples of former Times no Man can 'ſhew me the like.'

UPON the whole this learned Antiquary, the greateſt in the World, whom Foreigners ſtiled the great Dictator of Learning in England, and who was ſo well acquainted with the Rolls and Journals of Parliaments, declared, That never was the like Attempt as this to eſtabliſh Tyranny upon the Ruins of Liberty: For what elſe can we call the ſetting up the Sovereign Power above the Law?

THE Lords, afterwards, at a Conference, offered their Reaſons in ſupport of the Addition. The Lord-Keeper Coventry, who reported them, was anſwered by Mr. Maſon.

THE 23d of May, both Houſes being in a full Committee, in the Painted Chamber at Weſtminſter, there was another Conference, at which Serjeant Glanvile and Sir Henry Martin were appointed Managers on the Part of the Commons. The Serjeant made a remarkable Speech as to the Law Part, and Sir Henry Martin as to the rational Part of not admitting the Acknowledgment of Sovereign Power in the Perſon of the King.

THE Stile and Matter of both their Speeches lay us under the ſtrongeſt Temptation to inſert them at Length, but they are ſo long that we are obliged to courtail them for want of Room, as well as for fear of putting the Reader to Pennance by the Repetition of what may have been ſaid before by the other Members.

Mr. Glanvile's Speech concerning Sovereign Power. 'YOUR Lordſhips may be pleaſed to remember how that the Commons in this 'Parliament have framed a Petition to be 'preſented to his Majeſty, a Petition of Right rightly compoſed, relating nothing but Truth, deſiring nothing but 'Juſtice: A Petition juſtly occaſioned; 'a Petition neceſſary and fit for theſe 'Times; a Petition founded upon ſolid 'and ſubſtantial Grounds, the Laws and 'Statutes of this Realm, ſure Rocks to 'build upon; a Petition bounded within 'due Limits, and directed upon right 'Ends, to vindicate ſome lawful and juſt 'Liberties of the free Subjects of this 'Kingdom from the Prejudice of Violations paſt, and to ſecure them from future Innovations.

'I CRAVE Leave to open to your Lordſhips the diſtinct Parts whereof it conſiſts, which are theſe Four:

'1. THE Firſt concerns Levies of Money by way of Loans, or otherwiſe, for 'his Majeſty's Supply, declaring that no 'Man ought, and praying that no Man 'hereafter be compelled to make or yield 'any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or 'ſuch like Charge, without common Conſent by Act of Parliament.

ARCHBISHOP Abbot urged his own Caſe, how he was ſhut out of his Houſes at Lambeth and Croydon by Laud and other Biſhops: How he had been confined at Ford, a mooriſh Place, on purpoſe, as Coke ſays, to kill him; and debarred from the Management of his Juriſdiction, which Laud aſſumed in Defiance of Law or Conſcience. The Houſe of Lords being entered into a Committee, the Lord Say moved that thoſe Peers who ſtood for the Liberty of the Nation ſhould be recorded, and that the oppoſite Party ſhould, with the Subſcription of their Names, enter their Reaſons, which ſhould be alſo recorded, that Poſterity might not be at a Loſs to find who they were that ſo ignobly betrayed the Freedom of their Country. Mr. Glanvile's Speech concerning Sovereign Power.

'Your Lordſhips may be pleaſed to remember how that the Commons in this 'Parliament have framed a Petition to be 'preſented to his Majeſty, a Petition of Right rightly compoſed, relating nothing but Truth, deſiring nothing but 'Juſtice: A Petition juſtly occaſioned; 'a Petition neceſſary and fit for theſe 'Times; a Petition founded upon ſolid 'and ſubſtantial Grounds, the Laws and 'Statutes of this Realm, ſure Rocks to 'build upon; a Petition bounded within 'due Limits, and directed upon right 'Ends, to vindicate ſome lawful and juſt 'Liberties of the free Subjects of this 'Kingdom from the Prejudice of Violations paſt, and to ſecure them from future Innovations.

'I crave Leave to open to your Lordſhips the diſtinct Parts whereof it conſiſts, which are theſe Four:

'1. The Firſt concerns Levies of Money by way of Loans, or otherwiſe, for 'his Majeſty's Supply, declaring that no 'Man ought, and praying that no Man 'hereafter be compelled to make or yield 'any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or 'ſuch like Charge, without common Conſent by Act of Parliament.

'2. The Second is concerning that Liberty of Perſon which rightfully belongs to the free Subjects of this Realm,

* An eminent Hiſtorian, after reciting theſe two Speeches of Wentworth and Noy, as remarkable Inſtances of the true Spirit of Engliſhmen, takes Occaſion to bewail the Frailty and Corruption of human Nature; becauſe, ſays he, thoſe two Gentlemen, now ſo good Patriots, became in a Year or two the Inſtruments not only of Sovereign, but Arbitrary Power; and Wentworth eſpecially apoſtatized in the moſt ſhameful manner, by adding to Abitrary, Military Power.

'expreſſing it to be againſt the Tenure 'of the Laws and Statutes of the Land, 'that any Freeman ſhould be impriſoned 'without Cauſe ſhewed.

3. 'THE Third declareth the Unlawfulneſs of billeting or placing Soldiers or 'Mariners to ſojourn in Free Subjects 'Houſes againſt their Wills, and prayeth for Remedy againſt that Grievance.

4. 'THE Fourth and laſt aimeth at Redreſs touching Commiſſions for proceeding to the Trial and Condemnation of 'Offenders, and cauſing them to be executed by Martial Law, in Times and 'Places when, and where, if by the 'Laws and Statutes of the Land they 'had deſerved Death, by the ſame Laws 'and Statutes alſo they might, and by 'none other ought to be try'd and executed.'

'THIS Petition the Houſe of Commons heretofore offered to your Lordſhips Conſideration, accompanied with 'an humble Deſire that in your Nobleneſs and Juſtice you would be pleaſed 'to join with them in preſenting it to his 'Majeſty, that ſo coming from the whole 'Body of the Realm, the Peers and People, to him that is the Head of both, 'our Gracious Sovereign, who muſt crown 'the Work, or elſe all our Labour is in vain, 'it might, by your Lordſhips Concurrence 'and Aſſiſtance, find the more eaſy Paſſage, 'and obtain the better Anſwer.'

'THE Saving Clauſe propounded 'by your Lordſhips to be added to the 'Petition is a Clauſe ſpecious in Shew, 'and ſmooth in Words, but in Conſequence moſt dangerous, as I hope to 'make moſt evident; however, coming 'from your Lordſhips, the Houſe of Commons took it into Conſideration, as became 'them, and apprehending upon the firſt 'Debate that it threatened Ruin to the 'whole Petition, they did heretofore deliver ſome Reaſons to your Lordſhips 'for which they then deſired to be ſpared 'from admitting it.

To theſe Reaſons your Lordſhips offered ſome Anſwers at the laſt Meeting, 'which having been faithfully reported 'to our Houſe, and there debated, as was 'requiſite for a Buſineſs of ſuch Weight 'and Importance, I muſt ſay truly to 'your Lordſhips, yet with due Reverence 'to your Opinions, the Commons are not 'ſatisfy'd with your Arguments, and 'therefore they have commanded me to 'recollect your Lordſhips Reaſons for this 'Clauſe, and in a fair Reply to let you ſee 'the Cauſes why they differ from you in 'Opinion.

'MY Lords, the Heads of thoſe particular Reaſons which you inſiſted on the 'laſt Day were only theſe:

1. 'Firſt, you told us that the Word '(Leave) was of ſuch Nature that it would 'give no new thing to his Majeſty.

2. 'THAT no juſt Exception could be 'taken to the Words (Sovereign Power) 'for that as his Majeſty is a King, ſo he 'is a Sovereign, and as he is a Sovereign, 'ſo he hath Power.

3. 'THAT the Sovereign Power mentioned in this Clauſe is not abſolute, or 'indefinite, but limited and regulated by 'the Particle (That) and the Word ſubſequent, which reſtrains it to be apply'd 'only for Protection, Safety, and Happineſs of the People, whereby ye inferred there could be no Danger in the 'Allowance of ſuch Power.

4. 'THAT this Clauſe contained no more 'in Subſtance but the like Expreſſions of 'our Meanings in this Petition, which 'we had formerly ſignify'd to his Majeſty by the Mouth of Mr. Speaker, that 'we no way intended to encroach upon 'his Majeſty's Sovereign Power or Prerogative.

5. 'THAT in our Petition we have uſed 'other Words, and of larger Extent touching our Liberties than are contained in 'the Statutes whereon it is grounded: In 'reſpect of which Enlargement it was fit 'to have ſome expreſs or imply'd Saving 'or Narrative declaratory for the King's 'Sovereign Power, of which Narrative 'ye alledge this Clauſe to be.

6. LASTLY, whereas the Commons, as 'a main Argument againſt the Clauſe, 'had much inſiſted upon this, that it was 'unprecedented and unparliamentary in 'a Petition from the Subjects to inſert 'a Saving for the Crown. Your Lordſhips 'brought, for Inſtance, to the contrary the 'two Statutes of 25 Edward I, commonly called Confirmatio Chartarum, and '28 Edward I, known by the Name of 'Articuli ſuper Chartas: In both which 'Statutes there are Savings for the Kings.

'I WILL now, with your Lordſhips 'Favour, come to the Points of our Reply, 'wherein, I moſt humbly beſeech your 'Lordſhips to weigh the Reaſons which 'I ſhall preſent, not as the Senſe of my 'ſelf, the weakeſt Member of our Houſe, 'but as the genuine and true Senſe of 'the whole Houſe of Commons concerned in a Buſineſs there debated with the 'greateſt Gravity and Solemnity, with 'the greateſt Concurrence of Opinions 'and Unanimity that ever was in any 'Buſineſs maturely agitated in that 'Houſe.'

'ADMIT

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1628.

'ADMIT this Clauſe to be annexed with reference to the Petition, and it muſt neceſſarily conclude, and have this Expoſition, That Loans and the like Charges are againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, unleſs they be warranted by Sovereign Power, and that they cannot be commanded or raiſed without Aſſent of Parliament, unleſs it be by Sovereign Power. What were this but to admit a Sovereign Power in the King above the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom?

'ANOTHER Part of this Petition is, That the free Subjects of this Realm ought not to be impriſoned by Law without Cauſe ſhewed. But by this Clauſe a Sovereign Power will be admitted and left entire to his Majeſty, ſufficient to controul the Force of Law, and to bring in this new and dangerous Interpretation, That the free Subjects of this Realm ought not by Law to live impriſoned without Cauſe ſhewed, unleſs it be by Sovereign Power.

'IN a Word, this Clauſe, if it ſhould be admitted, would take away the Effect of every Part of the Petition, and become deſtructive to the whole; for thence will be the Expoſition touching the Billeting of Soldiers and Mariners in Freemens Houſes againſt their Wills; and thence will be the Expoſition touching the Times and Places for Execution of the Law-marſhal, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm.

'THE Scope of this Petition, as I have before obſerved, is not to amend our Caſe, but to reſtore us to the ſame State we were in before; whereas if this Clauſe be received, inſtead of mending the Condition of the poor Subjects, whoſe Liberties of late have been miſerably violated by ſome Miniſters, we ſhall leave them worſe than we found them; inſtead of curing their Wounds we ſhall make them deeper. We have ſet Bounds to our Deſires in this great Buſineſs, whereof one is not to diminiſh the Prerogative of the King by mounting too high; and if we bound ourſelves on the other ſide with this Limit, not to abridge the lawful Privileges of the Subject, by deſcending beneath that which is meet, no Man we hope can blame us.

'MY Lords, Mention is made in the additional Clauſe, not only of Sovereign Power, but likewiſe of a Truſt repoſed in his Majeſty touching the Uſe of Sovereign Power.

'THE Word Truſt is of great Latitude, and ought to be well and warily applied and reſtrained, eſpecially in the Caſe of a King: There is a Truſt inſeparably repoſed in the Perſons of the Kings of England, but that Truſt is regulated by Law: For Example; when Statutes are made to prohibit Things not mala in ſe, but only mala quia prohibita, under certain Forfeitures and Penalties to accrue to the King and to the Informers that ſhall ſue for the Breach of them. The Commons muſt, and ever will acknowledge a Regal and Sovereign Prerogative in the King touching ſuch Statutes, that it is his Majeſty's abſolute and undoubted Power to grant Diſpenſations to particular Perſons, with the Clauſes of non obſtante, to do as they might have done before thoſe Statutes, wherein his Majeſty conferring Grace and Favour upon ſome, doth not do Wrong to others: but there is a Difference between thoſe Statutes and the Laws and Statutes whereon the Petition is grounded. By thoſe Statutes the Subject hath no Intereſt in the Penalties, which are all the Fruit ſuch Statutes can produce, until by Suit or Information commenced he become entituled to the particular Forfeitures; whereas the Laws and Statutes mentioned in our Petition are of another Nature: There ſhall your Lordſhips find us to rely upon the good old Statute called Magna Charta, which declareth and confirmeth the ancient common Laws of the Liberties of England. There ſhall your Lordſhips alſo find us to inſiſt upon diverſe other moſt material Statutes made in the Reigns of ſeveral Kings for Explanation and Ratification of the lawful Rights and Privileges belonging to the Subjects of this Realm: Laws not inflicting Penalties upon Offenders in malis prohibitis; but Laws declarative or poſitive, conferring or confirming ipſo facto an inherent Right and Intereſt of Liberty and Freedom in the Subjects of this Realm, as their Birth-rights and Inheritance deſcendable to their Heirs and Poſterity: Statutes incorporate into the Body of the Common Law, over which (with Reverence be it ſpoken) there is no Truſt repoſed in the King's Sovereign Power, or Prerogative Royal, to enable him to diſpenſe with them, or to take from his Subjects that Birth-right and Inheritance which they have in their Liberties by vertue of Common Law, and of theſe Statutes.

'BUT if this Clauſe be added to our Petition, we ſhall then make a danger-

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Anno 1628

'ous Overture to confound this good Deſtination touching what Statutes the King is truſted to controul by Diſpenſations, and what not, and ſhall give an Intimation to Poſterity, as if it were the Opinion both of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, that there is a Truſt repoſed in the King to lay aſide his Sovereign Power in ſome emergent Caſes, as well of the Common Law, and ſuch Statutes as declare and ratify the Subjects Liberty, or confer Intereſt upon their Perſons, as thoſe other penal Statutes of ſuch Nature as I have mentioned before; which as we can by no means admit, ſo we believe aſſuredly that it is far from the Deſire of our moſt gracious Sovereign to affect ſo vaſt a Truſt, which being tranſmitted to a Succeſſor of a different Temper, might enable him to alter the whole Frame and Fabrick of the Commonwealth, and to diſſolve that Government whereby his Kingdom hath flouriſhed for ſo many Ages under his Majeſty's moſt Royal Anceſtors and Predeceſſors.

'OUR next Reaſon is, that we hold it contrary to all Courſe of Parliament, and abſolutely repugnant to the very Nature of a Petition of Right, conſiſting of Particulars, as ours doth, to clog it with a general Saving, or Declaration, to the weakening of the Right demanded; and we are bold to renew with ſome Confidence our Allegation, that there can be no Precedent ſhewed of any ſuch Clauſe in any ſuch Petitions in Times paſt. — If any general Saving, or Words amounting to one, ſhould be annexed to our Petition, it cannot work to confirm things not excepted, which are none; but to confound things included, which are all the Parts of the Petition; and it muſt needs beget this dangerous Expoſition, that the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, declared and demanded by this Petition, are not theirs abſolutely, but ſub modo; not to continue always, but only to take Place when the King is pleaſed not to exerciſe that Sovereign Power wherewith this Clauſe admitted he is truſted for the Protection, Safety, and Happineſs of his People. And thus that Birth-right and Inheritance which we have in our Liberties, ſhall, by our own Aſſents, be turned into a meer Tenancy at Will and Sufferance.

'I BESEECH your Lordſhips to obſerve the Circumſtance of Time wherein we offer this Petition to be preſented to your Lordſhips, and by us unto his Majeſty: Do we offer it when Magna Charta ſtands clogged with Saving? No, my Lords, but at this Day, when later and better Confirmations have vindicated and ſet free that Law from all Exceptions; and ſhall we now annex another and worſe Saving to it, by an unneceſſary Clauſe in that Petition which we expect ſhould have the Fruits and Effects of a Law? Shall we ourſelves relinquiſh or adulterate that which coſt our Anceſtors ſuch Care and Labour to purchaſe and refine? No, my Lords, but as we ſhould hold ourſelves unhappy, if we ſhould not amend the wretched Eſtate of the poor Subject, ſo let us hold it a Wickedneſs to impair it.

'I HAVE formerly opened my Reaſons, proving the Danger of this Clauſe, and am commanded to illuſtrate the Impertinency of adding it to the Petition by a familiar Caſe which was put in our Houſe by a learned Gentleman, and of my own Robe: The Caſe is this; Two Manors or Lordſhips lie adjoining together, and perchance intermixed ſo as there is ſome Difficulty to diſcern the true Bounds of either; as there may be touching the Confines where the Liberty of the Subject and the Prerogative of the Crown do border each upon the other: To the one of the Manors the King hath clear Right, and is in actual Poſſeſſion of it; but the other is the Subject's. The King being miſinformed that the Subject hath intruded upon his Majeſty's Manor, asketh his Subject whether he doth enter upon his Majeſty's Manor, or pretendeth any Title to it, or any part of it? The Subject being now juſtly occaſioned, maketh Anſwer truly to the King, that he hath not intruded, nor will intrude upon his Majeſty's Manor, nor doth make any Claim or Title to it, or any part of it. This Anſwer is proper and fair; nay, it were unmannerly and ill done of the Subject not ſo to anſwer upon this Occaſion: Afterwards the King, upon colour of ſome double or ſingle matter of Record, ſeizeth into his Highneſs's Hands, upon a pretended Title, the Subject's Manor. The Subject then exhibiteth his Petition of Right to his Majeſty, to attain Reſtitution of his own Manor, and therein layeth down Title to his own Manor only: Were it not improper and abſurd in this Caſe for him to tell the King that he did not intend to make any Claim or Title to his Majeſty's Manors, which is not queſtioned? Doubtleſs it were. This 'Case rightly applied will fit our Purpose well, and notably explain the Nature of our Petition.

'WHY should we speak of leaving entire the King's Sovereign Power whereon we encroach not, while we only seek to recover our own Liberties and Privileges which have been seized upon by some of the King's Ministers? If our Petition did trench actually upon his Majesty's Prerogative, would our saying that we intended it, not make the thing otherwise than the Truth?

'MY Lords, there needeth no Protestation or Declaration to the contrary of that which we have not done; and to put in such a Clause, cannot argue less than a Fear in us, as if we had invaded it; which we hold sacred, and are assured that we have not touched, either in our Words or in our Intentions. And touching your Lordships Observation upon the Word (Leave) if it be not a proper Word to give any new thing to the King, sure we are it is a Word as dangerous in another Sense; for it may amount, without all question, to acknowledge an old Right of Sovereign Power in his Majesty above these Laws and Statutes whereon only our Liberties are founded; a Doctrine which we most humbly crave your Lordships Leaves freely to protest against. And for your Lordships proffering that some Saving should be requisite for Preservation of his Majesty's Sovereign Power, in respect our Petition runneth in larger Words than our Laws and Statutes whereon we ground it, what is this but a clear Confession by your Lordships that this Clause was intended by you to be that Saving? for other Saving than this we find not tendered by you: And if it be such a Saving, how can it stand with your Lordships other Arguments, that it should be of no other Effect than our former Expression to his Majesty by the Mouth of our Speaker?

'IT hath not been yet shewn unto us from your Lordships that we have in any of our Expressions, or Applications, strained or misapplied any of the Laws or Statutes whereon we do insist; and we are very confident, and well assured, that no such Mistaking can be assigned in any Point of our Petition now under Question: If therefore it do not exceed the true Sense and Construction of Magna Charta, which hath been so often vouched this Parliament, in the subsequent Laws of Explanation whereon it is grounded, what Reason is there to add a Saving to this Petition more than to those Laws? since we desire to transmit the Fruits of these our Labours to Posterity, not only for the Justification of ourselves in Right of our present, and their future Liberties, but also for a brave Expression and perpetual Testimony of that Grace and Justice which we assure ourselves we shall receive in his Majesty's speedy and clear Answer. This is the Thing we seek for, and this the Thing we hoped for, and this the only thing that will settle such an Unity and Confidence betwixt his Majesty and us, and raise such a Chearfulness in the Hearts of all his loving Subjects, as will make us proceed unanimously, and with all Expedition to supply him for his great Occasions in such Measure, and in such Way as may make him safe at home, and feared abroad.'

SIR Henry Martin took up the Argument next, and entered into the rational Part of it, as follows:

Sir Henry Martin's Speech as to the rational Part of the Matter of the Conference.

'IF your Lordships will be pleased to remember that strict Oath every Member of our House hath taken this very Session in these Words; I (A. B.) do utterly testify, and declare in my Conscience, that the King's Highness is the supreme, or sovereign Governor of this Realm in all Causes, &c. and to my utmost Power will assist and defend all Jurisdictions, Privileges, Preheminences, and Authorities granted, or belonging to the King's Highness, or united or annexed to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, &c. your Lordships need not to borrow from our Protestations any Exhortations to us to entertain a Writing in Assistance of the King's Sovereign Power, since we stand obliged, by the most sacred Bond of a solemn Oath, to assist and defend the same, if Cause and Occasion so required: So that the only Question between your Lordships and us is, whether this Clause should be added to our Petition, and received into it as part thereof; which to do, your Lordships Reasons have not perswaded us, because so to admit it were to overthrow the Fabrick and Substance of our Petition of Right, and to annihilate the Right pretended by us; and the Petition itself in Effect: For these Words being added to our Petition, viz. We humbly present this Petition, &c. with due Regard to leave entire your Sovereign Power, &c. do manifestly include an Ex-

'ception to our Petition; and an Exception being of the Nature of the Thing whereunto it is an Exception, Exceptio eſt de regulâ, muſt of Neceſſity deſtroy the Rule, or Petition, ſo far as to the Caſe excepted: Exceptio firmat regulam in caſibus non exceptis, in caſibus exceptis deſtruit regulam. Then this Conſtruction followeth upon our Petition thus enlarged: That after we have petitioned that no Freeman ſhould be compelled by Impriſonment to lend or contribute Money to his Majeſty without his Aſſent in Parliament, nor receive againſt his Will Soldiers into his Houſe, or undergo a Commiſſion of Martial Law for Life or Member in Time of Peace, we ſhould add, except his Majeſty be pleaſed to require our Monies, and impriſon us for not lending, and ſend Soldiers into our Houſes, and execute us by Martial Law in time of Peace, by vertue of his Sovereign Power; which Conſtruction, as it followeth neceſſarily upon this Enlargement, ſo it concludeth againſt our Rights in the Premiſſes, and utterly fruſtrateth all our Petition; neither may it ſeem ſtrange if this Clauſe additional (which of itſelf, in quality of a Propoſition, we confeſs) being added to our Petition, which alſo is true, ſhould overthrow the very Frame and Fabrick of it, ſeeing the Logicians take Knowledge of ſuch a Fallacy, by them called Fallacia à benè diviſis ad mala conjuncta. Horace the Poet giveth an Inſtance to this Purpoſe of a Painter, who when he had painted the Head of a Man according to Art, would then join to it the Neck of a Horſe, and ſo mar the one and the other; whereas each by itſelf might have been a Piece of right good Workmanſhip.

'THE ſecond Branch of my Lord-Keeper's rational Part was enforced out of the laſt Words of this Addition, by which his Lordſhip ſaid, that they did not leave entire all Sovereign Power, but that wherewith his Majeſty is truſted for the Protection, Safety, and Happineſs of the People; as if his Lordſhip would infer that Sovereign Power wherewith, &c. in this Place to be Terminum diminuentem, a Term of Diminution or Qualification, and in that Conſideration might induce us to accept it. But, under his Lordſhip's Correction, we cannot ſo interpret it. For, firſt, we are aſſured that there is no Sovereign Power wherewith his Majeſty is truſted, either by God or Man, but only that which is for the Protection, Safety, and Happineſs of his People; and therefore that Limitation can make no Impreſſion upon us. But we conceive it rather in this Place to have the Force Termini ad augentis, to be a Term of important Advantage againſt our Petition, a Term of Reſtriction, and that whereſoever his Majeſty's Sovereign Power ſhould be exerciſed upon us in all and every the Particulars mentioned in the Petition, we ſhould without farther Enquiry ſubmit thereunto, as aſſuming and taking it pro conceſſo, that it induced to our Happineſs, &c.

'SINCE therefore (as the Petition is now conceived) it carrieth the Form and Face of a Picture, which repreſenteth to the Life the Preſſures and Grievances of the People, with the eaſy Remedies; therefore we hope that his Majeſty, caſting upon it a gracious Eye, will compaſſionate his poor loyal Subjects, and afford a comfortable Anſwer. I do humbly pray your Lordſhips not to mar or blemiſh the Grace and Face of this Picture with this unneceſſary Addition; and unneceſſary I prove it to be according to that Rule, expreſſio ejus quod tacitè in eſt nihil operatur. And Sovereign Power, in Caſes where it hath Place, and ought to be uſed, is alway neceſſarily underſtood, and though not expreſſed, yet ſupply'd by reaſonable Intendment, or by the Opinion of all learned Men: And therefore it neither is, nor can be by us expreſly included, eſpecially in this Petition, where the Addition thereof would make ſuch a Confuſion of the whole Senſe and Subſtance.

'THE King's Sovereign Power and Prerogative is always able to ſave itſelf; and if it were not, we muſt without this Addition ſave it to our utmoſt Powers, if we will ſave our Oath, and ſave ourſelves. The true State of the Caſe thus ſtanding between your Lordſhips and us, the Houſe of Commons doth not a little marvel upon what Grounds your Lordſhips are ſo earneſt to urge upon them this Addition, to be inſerted into their Petition. They nothing doubt but that the ſame proceeded out of a Sollicitude and Fear which your Lordſhips have, leſt otherwiſe the ſimple and abſolute Paſſage of this Petition might be conſtrued hereafter in Prejudice of his, Majeſty's ſovereign Power: And this your Lordſhips Sollicitude and Fear proceedeth from your Love, as the Poet ſaith, Res eſt ſolliciti plena timoris amor.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'BUT I humbly pray your Lordſhips to examine with us the Grounds of this your Sollicitude and Fear, which Grounds needs muſt be laid either upon the Words of the Petition, or the Intention of the Petitioners.

'UPON the Words there is no Poſſibility to lay them, for therein is no mention made of the Sovereign Power; and were the Words doubtful, as thus, We pray the like things be not done hereafter under pretext of your Majeſty's Sovereign Power: Yet in reſpect of the Proteſtations preceding, concomitant and ſubſequent to the Petition, ſuch doubtful Words ought reaſonably to be interpreted only of ſuch Sovereign Power as was not applicable to the Caſes wherein it was exercis'd, and of ſuch Sovereign Power as ſhould be juſtly practis'd: But there are no ſuch doubtful Words, and therefore it followeth, that your Lordſhips Fear and Sollicitude muſt be grounded upon the Intention of the Petitioners. Now your Lordſhips well know that the Houſe of Commons is not ignorant, that in a Seſſion of Parliament, though it continue as many Weeks as this hath done Days, yet there is nothing prius & poſterius, but all things are held and taken as done at one time; if ſo, what a ſtrange Collection was this! that at the ſame time the Houſe of Commons ſhould oblige themſelves by a fearful Adjuration to aſſiſt and defend all Privileges and Prerogatives belonging to the King, and at the ſame time by a Petition (cautiouſly convey'd) endeavour, or intend to diveſt and deprive the King of ſome Prerogatives belonging to his Crown. If therefore ſuch Fear and Sollicitude can neither be grounded upon the Words of the Petition, nor Intention of the Petitioners, I humbly pray your Lordſhips to lay them aſide, as we do believe that the Propoſition of this Addition from your Lordſhips was not only excuſable, but commendable, as proceeding from your Love.

'I now offer certain Reaſons to your Lordſhips, which it has pleaſed the Houſe of Commons to inſtruct and furniſh me with, to procure your abſolute Conjunction with us in preſenting this Petition.

'THE firſt Argument, wherewith I was commanded to move your Lordſhips, was drawn à Perſonis, from the Conſideration of the Perſons who are Petitioners, the Houſe of Commons, a Houſe whoſe Temper, Mildneſs and Moderation in this Parliament, hath been ſuch, as we ſhould be unthankful and injurious to Almighty God, if we ſhould not acknowledge his good Hand upon us, upon our Tongues, upon our Hearts, procured, no doubt, by our late ſolemn and publick Humiliation and Prayers.

'THIS Moderation will the better appear, if in the firſt place it be remember'd in what Paſſion and Diſtemper many Members of this Houſe arriv'd thither, what Boſoms, what Pockets full of Complaints and lamentable Grievances, the moſt part brought thither, and thoſe every Day renew'd by Letters and Packets from all Parts and Quarters: You know the old Proverb, Ubi dolor ibi digitus, ubi amor ibi oculus; it is hard to keep our Fingers from often handling the Parts ill-affected, but yet our Moderation overcame our Paſſion, our Diſcretion overcame our Affection.

'THIS Moderation alſo will the better appear, if in the ſecond place it be not forgotten, how our Anceſtors and Predeceſſors carried themſelves in Parliaments, when upon lighter Provocations, leſs wou'd not ſerve their Turns than new ſevere Commiſſions to hear and determine Offences againſt their Liberties, publick Eccleſiaſtical Curſes or Excommunications againſt the Authors or Actors of ſuch Violations, Accuſations, Condemnations, Executions and Baniſhments. But what have we ſaid all this Parliament? We only look forward, not backward; we deſire Amendment hereafter, no Man's Puniſhment for ought done heretofore, nothing written by us in Blood, nay not one Word ſpoken againſt any Man's Perſon in Diſpleaſure. The Concluſion of our Petition is, that we may be better intreated in time to come: And doth not this moderate Petition deſerve your Lordſhip's chearful Conjunction ex congruo & condigno? If a Worm being trodden upon could ſpeak, a Worm would ſay, tread upon me no more I pray you. Higher we riſe not, lower we cannot deſcend, and thus much we think in Modeſty may well be ſpoken in our own Commendation, thence to move your Lordſhips to vouchſafe us your noble Company in this Petition, without ſurcharging it with this Addition.

'OUR next Argument is drawn à tempore, from the Unſeaſonableneſs of the Time; the wiſe Man ſaith there is a time for all things under the Sun tempus ſuum; and if in the wiſe Man's Judgment a Word ſpoken in its due time be precious as Gold and Silver, then an unſeaſonable time detracts as much from the Thing or Word done or ſpoken: We hold (under your Favours) that the time is not ſeaſonable now for this Addition; it is true, that of itſelf Sovereign Power is a thing always ſo Sacred, that to handle it otherwiſe than tenderly is a kind of Sacrilege, and to ſpeak of it otherwiſe than reverently is a kind of Blaſphemy; but every vulgar Capacity is not ſo affected; the moſt part of Men, nay almoſt all Men judge and eſteem

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'esteem all things not according to their own 'intrinsic Virtue and Quality, but according 'to their immediate Effects and Operations 'which the same things have upon them: 'Hence it is, that Religion itself receiveth 'more or less Credit or Approbation, as 'the Teachers or Professors are worse or 'better; yea, if God himself send a very 'wet Harvest or Seed-time, Men are apt 'enough to censure divine Power. The So-'vereign Power hath not now, for the pre-'sent, the ancient amiable Aspect in respect 'of some late sad Influences, but by God's 'Grace it will soon recover.

'To intermix with this Petition any 'mention of Sovereign Power, rebus sic stan-'tibus, when angry Men say Sovereign 'Power hath been abus'd, and the most 'moderate wish it had not been so us'd, we 'hold it not seasonable under your Lord-'ships Correction.

'OUR next Argument is drawn à loco. 'We think the Place where your Lordships 'would have this Addition inserted, viz. 'in the Petition, no convenient or seaso-'nable Place. Your Lordships will easily 'believe that this Petition will run through 'many hands; every Man will be desirous 'to see and to read what their Knights and 'their Burgesses have done in Parliament 'upon their Complaints, what they have 'brought home upon their five Subsidies. 'If in perusing this Petition they fall upon 'the mention of Sovereign Power, they pre-'sently fall to arguing and reasoning, and 'descanting what Sovereign Power is, what 'is the Latitude, whence the Original, and 'where the Bounds? with many such cu-'rious and captious Questions; by which 'course Sovereign Power is little advanced 'or advantaged: for I have ever been of 'opinion, that it is then best with Sove-'reign Power, when it is had in tacit ve-'neration, not when 'tis prophaned by pub-'lic Hearings or Examinations.

'OUR last Argument is drawn from our 'Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty; in con-'sideration whereof, we are fearful at this 'time to take this Addition into our Pe-'tition, lest we should do his Majesty herein 'some Disservice. With your Lordships we 'make the Great Council of the King and 'Kingdom; and though your Lordships 'having the Happiness to be near his Ma-'jesty, know other things better, yet cer-'tainly the State and Condition of the se-'veral Parts for which we serve, their Dis-'positions and Inclinations, their Appre-'hensions, their Fears and Jealousies, are 'best known to us; and here I pray your 'Lordships to give me leave to use the 'Figure called Reticentia, that is, to in-'sinuate and intimate more than I mean 'to speak. Our chief and principal end in 'this Parliament is to make up all Rents 'and Breaches between the King and his 'Subjects, to draw and knit them together 'from that distance, whereof the World 'abroad takes too much notice, to work 'a perfect Union and Reconciliation: How 'improperly and unapt at this time this 'Addition will be, in respect of this end, 'we cannot but foresee, and therefore shun 'it, and do resolve that it is neither agree-'able to the Persons of such Counsellors, 'of whom we are; nor answerable to that 'Love and Duty which we owe to his Ma-'jesty, to hazard an End of such unspeak-'able Consequence, upon the admittance 'of this Addition into our Petition, whereof '(as we have shew'd) the Omission at this 'time can by no means harm the King's 'Prerogative, the Expression may produce 'manifold Inconveniencies: And therefore, 'since the Admittance of your Lordships 'Addition unto our Petition is incoherent 'and incompatible with the Body of the 'same; since there is no necessary use of 'it for the saving of the King's Prerogative; 'since the Moderation of our Petition de-'serveth your Lordships cheerful Conjunc-'tion with us; since this Addition is unsea-'sonable for the time, and inconvenient in 'respect of the place where your Lordships 'would have it inserted; and lastly, may 'prove a Disservice to his Majesty: I con-'clude with a most affectionate Prayer to 'your Lordships, to conclude with the 'House of Commons in presenting this Pe-'tition to his Sacred Majesty as it is, without 'this Addition.'

THE Lords were afraid to throw out the Petition, on account of this Addition, which in truth was not absolutely neces-sary; and being satisfied with having given the King this Testimony of their Affection for his Service, they insisted no longer upon it. And upon the 26th of May, at another Conference, the Lords agreed with the Commons in the Petition of Right with these small Amendments, Means to be in-serted instead of Pretext, and instead of unlawful to put in not warrantable by the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; to which Amendments the Commons readily agreed: So that this Petition, which had been ten Weeks in Debate, was read, en-grossed, and passed by both Houses with the greatest Unanimity and Dispatch, and order'd to be presented to the King. Ac-cordingly on the 28th of May there was a Conference between the Lords and Com-mons about the manner of delivering the Petition, when upon a Report of the Lords Opinion to the Lower House by Sir Ed-ward Coke, it was agreed, That no Ad-dition or Preface be used to the King, but that the Petition be presented to his Ma-jesty by Command of the Lords and Com-mons, and that his Majesty be desired that to the Content of his People he would be pleaſed to give his gracious Anſwer in full Parliament, that it might be inrolled, and ſerve hereafter for a Rule to the Courts of Juſtice as an Act of Parliament.

to

THE King went to the Houſe of Peers on the 2d of June, and made this ſhort Speech to both Houſes.

King's Speech to them on that Occaſion.

'GENTLEMEN, I am come hither to 'perform my Duty; I think no Man can 'think it long, ſince I have not taken ſo 'many Days in anſwering your Petition, as 'you have ſpent Weeks in framing it: And 'I am come hither to ſhew you, that as well 'in formal things as in eſſential, I deſire 'to give you as much content as in me lies.'

THEN the Lord-Keeper, after commending the King's Favour to them, deſired them to hear their own Petition read, and his Majeſty's gracious Anſwer; and the ſame were read accordingly as follows.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty,

Petition of Right.

'HUmbly ſhew unto our Sovereign 'Lord the King, the Lords Spiritual 'and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, that whereas it is declared and enacted by a Statute made in Edw. I. 'the Reign of King Edward I. commonly 'call'd Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, that no Tallage or Aid ſhall be laid 'or levied by the King or his Heirs in this 'Realm, without the Good will and Aſſent 'of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgeſſes, and other the 'Freemen of the Commonalty of this Realm: 'And by Authority of Parliament holden 'in the 25th Year of the Reign of King 'Edward III. it is declared and enacted, 25 Edw. III. 'That from thenceforth no Perſon ſhould 'be compelled to make any Loans to the 'King againſt his Will, becauſe ſuch Loans 'were againſt Reaſon and the Franchiſe of 'the Land; and by other Laws of this 'Realm it is provided, That none ſhould 'be charged by any Charge or Impoſition, 'call'd a Benevolence, nor by ſuch like 'Charge, by which the Statutes beforemen'tioned, and other the good Laws and 'Statutes of this Realm, your Subjects have 'inherited this Freedom, that they ſhould 'not be compelled to contribute to any Tax, 'Tallage, Aid, or other like Charge not 'ſet by common Conſent in Parliament.

'And divers other Charges have been laid 'and levied upon your People in ſeveral 'Counties by Lords Lieutenants, Deputy 'Lieutenants, Commiſſioners for Muſters, 'Juſtices of Peace, and others by Command 'or Direction from your Majeſty or your 'Privy Council, againſt the Laws and free 'Cuſtoms of the Realm.

'And where alſo by the Statute call'd 'The Great Charter of the Liberties of 'England, it is declared and enacted, 9 Hen. III. 29. CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

'no Man ought to be adjudg'd to death, 'but by the Laws eſtabliſhed in this your 'Realm, either by the Cuſtoms of the 'ſame Realm, or by Acts of Parliament: 'And whereas no Offender of what kind 'ſoever is exempted from the Proceedings to 'be uſed, and Puniſhments to be inflicted by 'the Laws and Statutes of this your Realm; 'nevertheleſs of late divers Commiſſions, 'under your Majeſty's Great Seal, have iſ-'ſued forth, by which certain Perſons have 'been aſſigned and appointed Commiſſioners, 'with Power and Authority to proceed 'within the Land, according to the Juſtice 'of the Martial Law, againſt ſuch Soldiers 'and Mariners, or other diſſolute Perſons 'joining with them, as ſhould commit any 'Murder, Robbery, Felony, Mutiny, or 'other Outrage or Miſdemeanor whatſoever; 'and by ſuch ſummary Courſe and Order, as 'is agreeable to Martial Law, and is uſed in 'Armies in time of War, to proceed to the 'Tryal and Condemnation of ſuch Offenders, 'and them to cauſe to be executed and put 'to death according to the Law-Martial.

'BY pretext whereof, ſome of your Ma-'jeſty's Subjects have been by ſome of the 'ſaid Commiſſioners put to death, when 'and where, if by the Laws and Statutes 'of the Land they had deſerved death, 'by the ſame Laws and Statutes alſo they 'might, and by no other ought to have 'been adjudged and executed.

'AND alſo ſundry grievous Offenders by 'colour thereof, claiming an Exemption, have 'eſcap'd the Puniſhment due to them by the 'Laws and Statutes of this your Realm.

'THEY do therefore humbly pray your 'moſt excellent Majeſty, that no Man here-'after be compell'd to make or yield any 'Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or ſuch 'like Charge, without common Conſent by 'Act of Parliament, and that none be called 'to make anſwer, or take ſuch Oath, or to 'give Attendance, or be confined, or other-'wiſe moleſted or diſquieted, concerning 'the ſame, or for Refuſal thereof: And 'that no Freeman, in any ſuch manner as 'is before mentioned, be impriſoned or 'detained: And that your Majeſty will 'be pleaſed to remove the ſaid Soldiers 'and Mariners, that your People may not 'be ſo burthened in time to come: And 'that the aforeſaid Commiſſions for pro-'ceeding by Martial Law may be revoked 'and annulled; and that hereafter no Com-'miſſions of the like nature may iſſue forth to 'any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, to be 'executed as aforeſaid, leſt by colour of 'them any of your Majeſty's Subjects be 'deſtroyed or put to death, contrary to the 'Laws and Franchiſe of the Land.

'ALL which they moſt humbly pray 'of your moſt excellent Majeſty, as their 'Rights and Liberties according to the Laws 'and Statutes of this Realm: And that 'your Majeſty would alſo vouchſafe to de-'clare, that the Awards, Doings, and Pro-'ceedings to the prejudice of your People 'in any of the Premiſes, ſhall not be drawn 'hereafter into Conſequence or Example: 'And that your Majeſty would be alſo gra-'ciouſly pleaſed, for the further Comfort 'and Safety of your People, to declare your 'Royal Will and Pleaſure, that in the things 'aforeſaid all your Officers and Miniſters 'ſhall ſerve you, according to the Laws 'and Statutes of this Realm, as they ren-'der the Honour of your Majeſty and the 'Proſperity of this Kingdom.'

IT has already been obſerved, that the King had uſed all poſſible Endeavours to hinder this Petition from being preſented to him, and to ſatisfy the Commons with general Promiſes, which properly bound him to nothing, and which did not deſtroy his Scheme of Government. So, though he made as if he were come to the Parliament on purpoſe to paſs the Petition of Right, and to give a ſatisfactory Anſwer to it, yet he purſued his own Plan, and ſhewed how much he dreaded to tie himſelf up, by the following Anſwer, in which one eaſily perceives the ſame general Promiſes, and the ſame Reſtrictions, as in what he had offered already, without touching upon any of the particular Caſes ſpecified in the Petition.

THE King's Anſwer was at the ſame time delivered in theſe Words;

The King's Anſwer.

The King willeth that Right be done according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Realm; and that the Statutes be put in due Execution, that his Subjects may have no Cauſe to complain of any Wrong or Oppreſſions contrary to their juſt Rights and Liberties, to the Preſervation whereof he holds himſelf in Conſcience as well obliged, as of his Prerogative.

ON the 3d of June this Anſwer was read in the Houſe of Commons, where it was thought ſo inſufficient, that Sir John Elliot ſtood up, and made a long Speech, wherein he gave ſo full and pathetic a Repreſentation of all Grievances, both general and particular, as if they had never before been mentioned.

Sir John Elliot's Speech in laying open the Grievances.

HE reduced the Cauſe of all our Evils to five Heads:

1. OUR Inſincerity and Doubting in Religion, which he exemplified by the Freedom and Increaſe of Papiſts; by the Compoſition with them in the North, the Slightneſs of thoſe Payments, and the Eaſineſs in them; by the Hopes, Preſumptions, and Reports of all the Papiſts in general; by the Diſpoſition of Commanders, the Truſt of Officers, the Confidence of Secrecies of Employments in this Kingdom, in Ireland, and elſewhere.

2.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I. Aº 1628.

2. OUR Want of Counſel, which ſacrificed our Honour and our Men ſent to the Palatinate, ſtopping thoſe greater Supplies appointed for that Service, by which it might have been made defenſible; this, ſaid he, gave direction to that late Expedition to Rhée, whoſe Wounds are yet bleeding, by means whereof the Proteſtants of France, and their King, by a neceſſary Conſequence, are divided, and that Country ſo prepared againſt us, that we have nothing to promiſe our Neighbours, hardly for ourſelves; inſomuch as by the Iſſue and Succeſs it may rather be thought a Conception of Spain, than begotten here by us.

3. THE Inſufficiency and Unfaithfulneſs of our Generals: Witneſs firſt the Expedition to Cales, where we arrived, and found a Conqueſt ready, (viz.) the Spaniſh Ships fit for the Satisfaction of a Voyage, either in point of Honour, or in point of Profit: Why was it neglected? Why was it not atchieved, it being granted on all hands feaſible? When the whole Army landed, why was there nothing attempted? if nothing were intended, wherefore did they land? If there were a Service, why were they ſhipped again? Witneſs, ſecondly, that to Rhée, where the whole Action was carried againſt the Judgment and Opinion of the Officers, (viz.) thoſe that were of the Council. Was not the firſt, was not the laſt, was not all, at Land, in the Intrenching, in the Continuance there, in the Aſſault, in the Retreat, without their Aſſent? To ſay nothing of leaving the Wines and the Salt, which were in our poſſeſſion, and of a Value, as they ſay, to anſwer much of our Expence; nor of that Wonder, which no Alexander or Cæſar ever knew, the enriching of an Enemy by Courteſies, when the Soldiers want help, nor of the private Intercourſes and Parleys with the Fort, which continually were held; what they intended, may be read in the Succeſs. And thirdly, Witneſs the laſt Voyage to Rochel, which needs no Obſervation, and is freſh in Memory.

4. THE fourth Head is the Ignorance and Corruption of our Miniſters. Survey the Court; ſurvey the Country, the Church, the City, the Bar, the Bench, the Courts, the Shipping, the Land, the Seas, all will yield variety of Proofs. The Exchequer is empty, the Reputation thereof gone, the ancient Lands are ſold, the Jewels pawn'd, the Plate engag'd, the Debt ſtill great, almoſt all Charges both extraordinary and ordinary by Projects.

5. THE Oppreſſion of the Subject. It needs no Demonſtration; the whole Kingdom is a Proof, and that Oppreſſion ſpeaks the exhauſting of our Treaſures. What waſte of our Proviſions, what Conſumption of our Ships, what Deſtruction of our Men have been? Witneſs the Voyage to Algier; witneſs that of Mansfield, witneſs that of Cales, witneſs the next, witneſs that to Rhée, witneſs the laſt, witneſs the Palatinate, witneſs the Turks, witneſs the Dunkirks, witneſs all; we were never ſo much weaken'd, nor had leſs hopes how to be reſtored.

THESE, Mr. Speaker, are our Dangers, theſe are they do threaten us, and thoſe are like that Trojan Horſe brought in cunningly to ſurpriſe us; in theſe do lurk the ſtrongeſt of our Enemies, ready to iſſue on us; and if we do not now the more ſpeedily expel them, theſe are the Signs, the Invitations to others.

THESE will prepare their Entrance, that we ſhall have no Means left of Refuge or Defence; for if we have theſe Enemies at home, how can we ſtrive with thoſe that are abroad? If we be free from theſe, no other can impeach us: Our ancient Engliſh Virtue, that old Spartan Valour clear'd from theſe Diſorders, being in Sincerity of Religion once made Friends with Heaven, having Maturity of Counſels, Sufficiency of Generals, Incorruption of Officers, Opulency in the King, Liberty in the People, Repletion in Treaſures, Reſtitution of Proviſions, Reparation of Ships, Preſervation of Men: Our ancient Engliſh Virtue, I ſay, thus rectified, will ſecure us; and unleſs there be a ſpeedy Reformation in theſe, I know not what Hopes or Expectations we may have.

THESE things, Sir, I ſhall deſire to have taken into Conſideration, that as we are the Great Council of the Kingdom, and have the Apprehenſion of theſe Dangers, we may truly repreſent them unto the King; wherein I conceive we are bound by a treble Obligation of Duty unto God, of Duty to his Majeſty, and of Duty to our Country.

AND therefore I wiſh it may ſo ſtand with the Wiſdom and Judgment of the Houſe, that they may be drawn into the Body of a Remonſtrance, and therein all humbly expreſſed with a Prayer unto his Majeſty, for the Safety of himſelf, and for the Safety of the Kingdom, and for the Safety of Religion: That he will be pleaſed to give us Time to make perfect Inquiſition thereof, or to take them into his own Wiſdom, and there give them ſuch timely Reformation, as the Neceſſity of the Cauſe, and his Juſtice doth import.

AND thus, Sir, with a large Affection and Loyalty to his Majeſty, and with a firm Duty and Service to my Country, I have ſuddenly, and it may be with ſome Diſorder, expreſs'd the weak Apprehenſion I have; wherein if I have erred, I humbly crave your Pardon, and ſo ſubmit to the Cenſure of the Houſe. So far Sir John Elliot.

SOME of the Members, who nevertheleſs were for petitioning his Majeſty for a fuller

More Debates on the Subject.

Answer, thought it not consistent with the Wisdom of the House at that Conjuncture to begin with a Recapitulation of Misfortunes, which were now obvious to all, and judg'd it more adviseable not to look back, but forward. It was intimated by Sir Henry Martin, that Sir John Elliot's Speech was suggested from Disaffection to his Majesty; and others said it proceeded from some Distrust of his Majesty's Answer to the Petition; but Sir John professed the contrary, and that himself and others had form'd a previous Resolution to open these last mentioned Grievances to satisfy his Majesty, only they waited for an Opportunity; which Averment of Sir John's was attested by Sir Thomas Wentworth and Sir Robert Philips. Whilst Sir John was speaking, an Interruption was made by Sir Humphry May, Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, expressing a Dislike; but he was commanded by the Commons to go on: and being afterwards questioned for the Passage in that Speech, viz. That some Actions seemed to be but Conceptions of Spain; he explained himself, that in respect of the Affairs of Denmark, he thought the Engagement of that unfortunate Accident of Rhee to be a Conception of Spain, rather than to have any Motion from our Council here.

Sir Henry Martin.

Sir Humphry May.

Sir Edward Coke.

In this Debate Sir Edward Coke moved for the presenting an humble Remonstrance to his Majesty, touching the Dangers of the King and Kingdom, and the Means of preserving both; whereupon the House went into a Grand Committee, and the Remonstrance was ordered to be dispatched by the Committee for the Bill of Subsidies. Mean time came a Message from the King by the Speaker, giving notice, that his Majesty resolved to abide by his former Answer without any Alteration, that he would put an end to the Session the 11th of this Month, and that therefore he wish'd the House would so husband their time, that his Majesty may with the more Comfort bring them speedily together again; at which time, if there be any farther Grievances not contained or expressed in the Petition, they may be more maturely considered than the Time will now permit.

The Commons, who were then proceeding against Dr. Manwaring, demanded and obtained Judgment upon him from the Lords; which Censure immediately succeeding Sir John Elliot's Representation of Grievances, startled Laud as much as Sir John's Representation did the Duke of Buckingham: And the King, that he might not hear any more Business of this kind, sent another * Message to the House on the 5th of June by the Speaker, to acquaint them that he will certainly hold to the Day prefixed for ending the Session, and that therefore he requires them not to enter into, or proceed with any new Business, which may spend greater time, or lay any Scandal or Aspersion upon the State-Government or its Ministers.

Another Message from the King.

Sir Robert Philips upon this occasion express'd himself thus; 'I perceive that towards God and towards Man, there is little 'hope after our humble and careful Endeavours, seeing our Sins are so many, and 'so great. I consider my own Infirmities, 'and if ever my Passions were wrought upon, 'they are now; this Message stirs me up 'especially: When I remember with what 'Moderation we have proceeded, I cannot 'but wonder to see the miserable Strait we 'are now in. Former Times have given 'Wounds enough to the Peoples Liberties, 'We came hither full of Wounds, and we 'have cured what we could, and what is 'the Return of all but Misery and Desolation? What did we aim at but to have 'served his Majesty, and to have done that 'that would have made him great and glorious? If this be a Fault, then we are all 'criminous: What shall we do, since our 'humble Purposes are thus prevented, which 'were not to have laid any Aspersion on 'the Government, since it tended to no 'other end but to give his Majesty true Information of his and our Danger? And to 'this we are enforced out of a Necessity of 'Duty to the King, our Country, and to 'Posterity; but we being stopped, and stopped in such manner as we are injoined, so 'we must now leave to be a Council. I hear 'this, with that Grief, as the saddest Message of the greatest Loss in the World. 'But let us still be wise, be humble, let us 'make a fair Declaration to the King.

Sir Robert Philips.

'Our Sins are so exceeding great (said 'Sir John Elliot) that unless we speedily 'return to God, God will remove himself 'farther from us. Ye know with what Affection and Integrity we have proceeded 'hitherto to have gained his Majesty's Heart, 'and out of a Necessity of our Duty were 'brought to that Course we were in: I doubt 'a Misrepresentation to his Majesty hath 'drawn this Mark of his Displeasure upon 'us. I observe in the Message, amongst 'other sad Particulars, it is conceived, that 'we were about to lay some Aspersions on 'the Government. Give me leave to protest, 'that so clear were our Intentions, that we 'desire only to vindicate those Dishonours 'to our King and Country, &c. It is said 'also as if we cast some Aspersions on his 'Majesty's Ministers, I am confident no Minister, how dear soever, can—

Sir John Elliot.

Here the Speaker started out of his Chair, and apprehending that Sir John was going

* This last was the Message that improv'd the Fears and Jealousies of the Commons, and made them believe that the Duke of Buckingham had done them ill Offices with the King; tho' Mr. Rapin has, for want of due Attention to Rushworth, &c. left it quite out of his History.

going to fall upon the Duke and some of the Ministers of State, said, There's a Command laid upon me to order you not to proceed. Whereupon Sir John sate down, and Sir Dudley Diggs in great Concern said, Must we not proceed? Let us sit in silence, we are miserable: We know not what we do. Accordingly there was a profound Silence in the House for a while, 'till Sir Nathaniel Rich broke it, by saying, 'We must now speak, or for ever after hold 'our peace; for us to be silent when King 'and Kingdom are in this Calamity, is not fit. 'The Question is, Whether we shall secure 'ourselves by Silence, yea or no? I know 'it is more for our own Security, but it is 'not for the Security of those whom we 'serve; let us think on them: Some In-'struments desire a change, we fear his Ma-'jesty's Safety, and the Safety of the King-'dom. I do not say we now see it; and 'shall we now sit still and do nothing, and 'so be scattered? Let us go together to 'the Lords, and shew our Dangers, that 'we may then go to the King together.'

Sir Dudley Diggs.

Sir Nathaniel Rich.

SOME of the Court-Party saying, that Sir John Elliot's Speech, which he made concerning Grievances (after the reading of the King's Answer to the Grievances) had given Offence to his Majesty, the House declared, 'That every Member of the 'House is free from any Imputation of Un-'dutifulness for any Expressions in the 'House, from the Beginning of the Par-'liament to that day; and order'd, that the 'House be turned into a Committee, to 'consider what is fit to be done for the 'Safety of the Kingdom, and that no Man 'go out of the House on pain of being 'sent to the Tower.' But Sir John Finch the Speaker desiring leave to go out, he had it, and immediately went and inform'd the King of what was doing in the House; which being now turned into a Grand Committee, Mr. Whitby in the Chair, Mr. Wandesford stood up and said, 'I am as full 'of Grief as others: Let us recollect our 'English Hearts, and not sit still but do 'our Duties. Two ways are propounded; 'to go to the Lords, or to the King; I 'think it is fit we go to the King, for 'this doth concern our Liberties, and let 'us not fear to make a Remonstrance of our 'Rights; we are his Counsellors: There 'are some Men which call Evil Good, and 'Good Evil, and Bitter Sweet. Justice is 'now called Popularity and Faction.'

Mr. Wandesford.

Then Sir Edward Coke spoke his Mind freely as follows; 'We have dealt with 'that Duty and Moderation that never was 'the like, Rebus sic stantibus, after such 'a Violation of the Liberties of the Subject; 'let us take this to heart. In 30 Ed. III. 'were they then in doubt in Parliament to 'name Men that misled the King? they ac-'cused John of Gaunt the King's Son, and 'Lord Latimer, and Lord Nevil, for mis-'advising the King, and they went to the 'Tower for it: Now when there is such 'a Downfal of the State, shall we hold 'our tongues? How shall we answer our 'Duties to God and Men? 7 Hen. IV. Parl. 'Rot. Num. 31, and 32. 11 H. IV. Num. 13, 'there the Council are complained of, and 'are removed from the King; they mewed 'up the King, and dissuaded him from the 'Common Good; and why are we now re-'tired from that way we were in? Why 'may we not name those that are the Cause 'of all our Evils? In 4 Hen. III. and 27 'Edw. III. and 13 Ric. II. the Parliament 'moderateth the King's Prerogative, and 'nothing grows to abuse, but this House 'hath power to treat of it: What shall we 'do? Let us palliate no longer; if we do, 'God will not prosper us. I think the 'Duke of Buckingham is the Cause of all 'our Miseries; and 'till the King be in-'formed thereof, we shall never go out with 'Honour, or sit with Honour here; that 'Man is the Grievance of Grievances: Let 'us set down the Causes of all our Disasters, 'and all will reflect upon him. As for 'going to the Lords, that is not Via Regia; 'our Liberties are now impeached, we are 'concerned; it is not Via Regia, the Lords 'are not participant with our Liberties.'

Sir Edward Coke.

Duke of Bucks the Grievance of Grievances.

MR. Selden advised, that a Declaration be drawn, to express the dutiful Carriage of the House towards his Majesty, and set forth the Violation of their Liberties; and to shew how that great Person, the Duke, had raised Distractions, for fear of being questioned. All this time, said that illustrious Senator, we have cast a Mantle on what was done last Parliament; but now being driven again to look on that Man, let us proceed with that which was then so well begun, and let the Charge be renewed that was last Parliament against him; to which he made an Answer, the Particulars whereof were sufficient that we might demand Judgment on that Answer only. In conclusion, the House agreed upon several Heads concerning Innovation in Religion, the Safety of the King and Kingdom, Misgovernment, Misfortune of our late Designs, with the Causes of them; and when the Question was going to be put, that it should be instanced that the Duke was the principal Cause of all those Evils, the Speaker came in with a Message from the King, requiring the House to adjourn 'till next Day, and that all Committees in the mean time cease; which was accordingly complied with, as was the like Order to the House of Lords, delivered by the Lord-Keeper.

learnt from a Letter that Colonel Alured, one of the Members, wrote next day to old Mr. Chamberlain of the Court of Wards; which we the rather inſert, becauſe 'tis a concurrent Proof of the abovementioned Paſſages.

SIR,

Col. Alured's Letter.

'YEſterday was a Day of Deſolation among us in Parliament, and this Day, we fear, will be the Day of our Diſſolution. Upon Tueſday Sir John Elliot moved, that as we intended to furniſh his Majeſty with Money, we ſhould alſo ſupply him with Counſel, which was one part of the Occaſion why we were ſent by the Country, and called for by his Majeſty: And ſince that Houſe was the greateſt Council of the Kingdom, where, or when ſhould his Majeſty have better Counſel than from thence? So he deſired there might be a Declaration made to the King of the Danger wherein the Kingdom ſtood, by the Decay and Contempt of Religion, the Inſufficiency of his Generals, the Unfaithfulneſs of his Officers, the Weakneſs of his Counſels, the exhauſting of his Treaſure, the Death of his Men, the Decay of Trade, the Loſs of Shipping, the many and powerful Enemies, the few and the poor Friends we had abroad.

'IN the enumerating of which, the Chancellor of the Dutchy ſaid, it was a ſtrange Language; yet the Houſe commanded Sir John Elliot to go on. Then the Chancellor deſired that if he went on, himſelf might go out; whereupon they all bade him be gone, yet he ſtaid and heard him out: And the Houſe generally inclined to ſuch a Declaration, to be preſented in a humble and modeſt Manner, not preſcribing the King the way, but leaving it to his Judgment for Reformation. So the next Day we had a Meſſage from his Majeſty by Mr. Speaker, that the Seſſion ſhould end that Day ſevennight, and that therefore we ſhould husband the time, and diſpatch the old Buſineſs, without entertaining new: Intending to purſue their Declaration, they had another Meſſage brought them yeſterday Morning, which requiring not to caſt or lay any Aſperſion upon any Miniſter of his Majeſty, the Houſe was much affected to be ſo reſtrained, ſince the Houſe in former times had proceeded by fining and committing John of Gaunt the King's Son, and others; and of late have meddled with, and ſentenced the Lord-Chancellor Bacon, and the Lord-Treaſurer Cranfield. Then Sir Robert Philips ſpoke, and mingled his Words with Weeping. Mr. Prynne did the like, and Sir Edward Coke, overcome with Paſſion, ſeeing the Deſolation likely to enſue, was forced to ſit down, when he began to ſpeak, through the Abundance of Tears; yea, the Speaker in his Speech could not refrain from weeping and ſhedding of Tears; beſides a great many, whoſe great Griefs made them dumb and ſilent; yet ſome bore up in that Storm, and encouraged others: In the end, they deſired the Speaker to leave the Chair, and Mr. Whitby was to come into it, that they might ſpeak the freer and the frequenter, and commanded that no Man go out of the Houſe upon pain of being ſent to the Tower. Then the Speaker humbly and earneſtly beſought the Houſe to give him leave to abſent himſelf for half an Hour, preſuming they did not think he did it for any ill Intention; which was inſtantly granted him. Then upon many Debates about their Liberties hereby infringed, and the imminent Danger wherein the Kingdom ſtood, Sir Edward Coke told them, he now ſaw God had not accepted of their humble and moderate Carriages and fair Proceedings; and the rather, becauſe he thought they dealt not ſincerely with the King, and with the Country, in making a true Repreſentation of the Cauſes of all theſe Miſeries, which now he repented himſelf, ſince Things were come to this paſs, that he did it not ſooner; and therefore, he not knowing whether ever he ſhould ſpeak in this Houſe again, would now do it freely, and there profeſſed that the Author and Cauſe of all thoſe Miſeries was the Duke of Buckingham, which was entertained and anſwered with a chearful Acclamation of the Houſe, as when one good Hound recovers the Scent, the reſt come in with a full Cry: So they purſued it, and every one came on home, and laid the Blame where they thought the Fault was. And as they were voting it to the Queſtion, whether they ſhould name him in their intended Remonſtrance, the ſole or the principal Cauſe of all their Miſeries at Home and Abroad; the Speaker having been three Hours abſent, and with the King, returned with this Meſſage, that the Houſe ſhould then riſe (being about 11 a-Clock, and no Committees ſhould ſit in the Afternoon) 'till to-morrow Morning: What we ſhall expect this Morning, God of Heaven knows. We ſhall meet timely this Morning, partly for the Buſineſs ſake, and partly becauſe two Days ſince we made an Order, that whoſoever comes in after Prayers, pays 12 d. to the Poor. Sir, excuſe my Haſte, and let us have your Prayers, whereof both you and we have here need. So, in ſcribling Haſte, I reſt,

Affectionately at your Service,

Another Meſſage from the King to the Commons.

ON the 6th of June the Speaker came with another (healing) Meſſage to qualify the Reſtraint which the laſt Meſſage was ſuppoſed to lay the Commons under, with reſpect to the King's Miniſters. His Majeſty ſent them word, that he did not mean to bar them from their juſt Privileges to complain of any of his Miniſters, but he would not have them caſt any Blame on their Counſels to his Majeſty; i. e. properly ſpeaking, he would not have them attacked, or at moſt he would only ſuffer them to be proſecuted for private Offences, which they might happen to be guilty of as private Men; but not for State-Affairs, as Miniſters and Privy-Counſellors.

Remarks on it.

THIS, ſays Rapin, was another Proof of what he had obſerv'd in King Charles's whole Conduct, that he was ſo firm in his Principles concerning Government, that he could not think of yielding any thing; or if he ſeemed to give any thing with one hand, he immediately took it away with the other, by ſome Reſtriction which rendered it of no effect.

Sir Robert Philips's Speech.

UPON this Sir Robert Philips ſaid, 'I 'riſe up with a Diſpoſition ſomewhat in 'more Hope of Comfort than yeſterday; 'yet in regard of the Uncertainty of Coun-'ſels I ſhall not change much: In the firſt 'place I muſt be bold without flattering, 'a thing not incident to me, to tell you, 'Mr. Speaker, you have not only at all 'times diſcharged the Duty of a good 'Speaker, but of a good Man, for which 'I render you many Thanks. As to his 'Majeſty's Anſwer to our Petition, if it fall 'out to be ſhort, I free his Majeſty, and I 'believe his Reſolution was to give that 'that we all expected; but in that, as in 'others, we have ſuffer'd by reaſon of in-'terpoſed Perſons between his Majeſty and 'us; but this Day is by intervenient Ac-'cidents diverted from that, but ſo as in 'time we go to his Majeſty: Therefore let 'us remove thoſe Jealouſies in his Majeſty 'of our Proceedings, which by ſome Men 'overgrown have been miſrepreſented. We 'have proceeded with Temper, in confi-'dence of his Majeſty's Goodneſs to us, and 'of our Fidelity to him; and if any have 'conſtrued that what we have done, hath 'been out of fear, let him know we came 'hither Freemen, and will ever reſolve to 'endure the worſt; and they are poor Men 'that make ſuch Interpretations of Parlia-'ments. In this way and method we pro-'ceeded; and if any thing fall out unhap-'pily, it is not King Charles that adviſed 'himſelf, but King Charles miſadviſed by 'others, and miſled by miſordered Counſel. 'It becomes us to conſider what we were 'doing, and now to adviſe what is fit to 'be done. We were taking conſideration 'of the State of the Kingdom, and to pre-'ſent to his Majeſty the Danger he and 'we were in. If ſince that, any Man hath 'been named in particular (though I love 'to ſpeak of my Betters with Humility) 'let him thank himſelf and his Counſels; 'but thoſe neceſſary Jealouſies give us oc-'caſion to name him. I aſſure myſelf we 'ſhall proceed with Temper, and give his 'Majeſty ſatisfaction if we proceed in that 'way. His Majeſty's Meſſage is now ex-'planatory in point of our Liberties, that 'he intends not to bar us of our Rights, and 'that he would not have any Aſperſion caſt 'on the Counſels paſt: Let us preſent to 'his Majeſty, ſhortly and faithfully, and 'declare our Intentions that we intend not 'to lay any Aſperſion upon him, but out 'of a Neceſſity to prevent the imminent 'Dangers we are ſurrounded with, and to 'preſent to him the Affairs at home and 'abroad, and to deſire his Majeſty, that no 'Interpoſition or Miſinformation of Men in 'fault may prevail, but to expect the Iſſue 'that ſhall be full of Duty and Loyalty.'

Commons Meſſage to the Lords.

BUT the Commons being ſatisfied with neither of theſe Meſſages, ſent one to the Lords to deſire they would join in an humble Requeſt to the King, to give a clear and ſatisfactory Anſwer in full Parliament to the Petition of Right; whereunto the Lords agreed.

AFTERWARDS the Houſe was turned again into a Committee, and conſidered of ſome more Heads to be inſerted in the Declaration or Remonſtrance, particularly the Deſign to bring Foreign Forces into the Nation under the command of Dalbier: And Burlemack was called into the Houſe, who confeſſed he received 30,000 l. by a Privy-Seal, dated the 30th of January laſt, for the buying and bringing over of Horſes, Arms, &c. that 1000 of them were actually levied, which were to come over with their Riders, and that Arms were provided for them in Holland, but that he heard a Countermand was gone to ſtop them.

Burlemack called in.

THE King finding that it was not poſſible for him to avoid giving ſuch an Anſwer as the Parliament deſired, reſolved at laſt to do it with a good Grace, otherwiſe he plainly ſaw that the Buſineſs of the Supply would be delayed for ever. Therefore on the 7th of June, the King came to the Houſe of Lords, and the Commons being ſent for, the Lord-Keeper preſented the humble Petition of both Houſes, and ſaid,

May it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty,

Petition of both Houſes to the King for a further Anſwer to the Petition of Right.

'THE Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'and Commons in Parliament aſſem-'bled, taking into Conſideration, that the 'good Intelligence between your Majeſty 'and your People doth much depend upon 'your Majeſty's Anſwer unto their Petition 'of Right formerly preſented, with unani-'mous

FOEDERA Tom XVIII.

'mous Conſent do now become moſt humble Suitors unto your Majeſty, that you would be pleaſed to give a clear and ſatisfactory Anſwer thereunto in full Parliament.'

To which the King reply'd;

His Majeſty's Anſwer.

'THE Anſwer I have already given you was made with ſo good Deliberation, and approved by the Judgments of ſo many wiſe Men, that I could not have imagined but it ſhould have given you full Satisfaction: But to avoid all ambiguous Interpretations, and to ſhew you there is no Doubleneſs in my Meaning, I am willing to pleaſure you as well in Words as in Subſtance; read your Petition, and you ſhall have an Anſwer that I am ſure will pleaſe you.'

THE Petition was read, and this Anſwer was returned, Soit droit fait come il eſt deſire. Upon which there was a general Shout of both Lords and Commons.

THEN ſaid his Majeſty, 'This I am ſure is full, yet no more than I granted you in my firſt Anſwer; for the Meaning of that was to confirm your Liberties, knowing, according to your own Proteſtations, that ye neither mean nor can hurt my Prerogative. And I aſſure you my Maxim is, that the People's Liberties ſtrengthen the King's Prerogative, and the King's Prerogative is to defend the People's Liberties.

'YOU ſee how ready I have ſhewed myſelf to ſatisfy your Demands, ſo that I have done my part; wherefore if this Parliament have not a happy Concluſion, the Sin is yours, I am free from it.'

UPON this the Commons returned to their own Houſe with unſpeakable Joy; and in order to expreſs their Gratitude, tho' they were very ſenſible that as ſoon as the Money-Bill was paſſed, the King would put an end to their Seſſion, frequent mention was made of proceeding with the Subſidy-Bill, of ſending the Bills (which were ready) to the Lords, of perfecting the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; and Sir John Strangeways alſo expreſſed his Joy at the Anſwer, and further added, let us perfect our Remonſtrance: King James was wont to ſay, He knew that by Parliaments, which otherwiſe he could never have known.

THE Joy for the paſſing of this Petition was as great without doors as within; there was Ringing of Bells, and Bonfires thro' the whole City of London, and all True Hearts had a ſhare in the publick Satisfaction. This was obſerv'd as a happy Juncture for a laſting Reconciliation between the King and Parliament, if Buckingham's Fate (as is ſaid by an eminent Author) had not followed his Majeſty like an evil Genius, who had he had Capacity enough to have known the Danger he was in, by defying the Legiſlature, would ſurely have ſecured himſelf by withdrawing from Court, and have ſaved his Maſter the Odium of ſtanding out againſt the Cry of his People; but Laud was his moſt intimate Friend and Counſellor, and as there was hardly one Act of Diſcretion and Moderation in that haughty Prelate's whole Life, ſo 'tis no wonder he ſhould inſpire the Duke with the moſt revengeful and reſolute Sentiments. It was the Opinion of another Writer of this Reign (which is ſubmitted with the former to the Reader's Judgment) that if the Commons could at this Juncture have withdrawn their intended Remonſtrance, or if the King could have looked upon it as no Diminution of his Honour, the Accommodation had been perfect and laſting. But the Commons not thinking their Rights and Liberties ſufficiently aſſerted, without complaining of the ſeveral Inſtances wherein they were manifeſtly broke and violated, proceeded immediately to the Conſideration of the moſt material Grievances; and firſt they fell upon the Commiſſion of Exciſe, which was a Commiſſion granted the laſt Day of February, betwixt the Summons and the Meeting of this Parliament, to 23 Lords (Spiritual and Temporal) of whom Laud was one *, and to ſuch other Gentlemen as were thought well-affected to the Miniſtry, to conſider of the beſt and ſpeedieſt Means for raiſing Money upon the People, by way of Impoſition, or otherwiſe; an arbitrary Commiſſion, not of the nature of the preſent Commiſſion of Exciſe, nor ſtated and eſtabliſhed as that Duty is now. The Commons ſending to the Lord-Keeper for this Commiſſion, he returned anſwer, that he received a Warrant at the Council-Table for the ſealing of it, and that when he had ſealed it, he carried it back to the Council-Table. However Commiſſion of Exciſe inquired into.

* Ruſhworth has given the following Liſt of the Commiſſioners, viz. Sir Thomas Coventry, Knt. Lord-Keeper; James Earl of Malburg, Lord High-Treaſurer; Henry Earl of Mancheſter, Lord-Preſident of the Council; Edward Earl of Worceſter, Lord Privy-Seal; George Duke of Buckingham, Lord High-Admiral; William Earl of Pembroke, Lord-Steward of the Houſhold; Philip Earl of Montgomery, Lord-Chamberlain of the Houſhold; Theophilus Earl of Suffolk, Edward Earl of Dorſet, William Earl of Salisbury, Thomas Earl of Exeter, John Earl of Bridgwater, James Earl of Carliſle, Henry Earl of Holland, William Earl of Denbigh, George Earl of Totneſs, Sir George Hay Lord-Chancellor of Scotland, William Earl of Morton, Thomas Earl of Kelley, Thomas Earl of Mellers, Edward Viſcount Conway Secretary of State, Edward Viſcount Wimbleton, Oliver Viſcount Grandiſon, Henry Falkland Lord-Deputy of Ireland, the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Bath and Wells, Fulk Lord Brook, Dudley Aſh Lord Carleton, Vice-Chamberlain of the Houſhold, Sir Thomas Edmonds Treaſurer of the Houſhold, Sir John Savile Comptroller of the Houſhold, Sir Robert Nanton Maſter of the Court of Wards, Sir John Cook Secretary of State, Sir Richard Weſton Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer; Julius Cæſar Maſter of the Rolls, and Sir Humphry May, Knt. Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter.

ever it was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, and read, in which Sir Edward Coke obſerved theſe remarkable Circumſtances:

Sir Edward Coke's Obſervation upon it.

1. IT was after the Summons to the Parliament; ſure, ſaid he, ſome thought there was to be no Parliament. 2. There is a Pudor in it, 'twas kept ſecret; ſome great Lords never knew it. 3. The End of it was Exciſes, for they are Impoſitions; wherefore his Advice was to go up to the Lords, and deſire a Conference, to complain of the Commiſſion, and deſire both that and the Inrolment, if there be any, to be cancell'd, and that the Projector may be found out and puniſhed.

His Management of a Conference upon it with the Houſe of Lords.

A Conference was held accordingly, which was alſo managed by Sir Edward Coke.

AFTER the Commiſſion was read, and he had made his Remark on the Perſons to whom it was directed, and the Authority committed to them, he proceeded thus: 'We don't find any thing raiſed (that is 'left to your Lordſhips) but a Commiſſion 'to levy Money by Impoſition or otherwiſe; give us leave to fear that Exciſe, 'and whatever is comprehended in it, was 'intended. Sure I am, it is againſt the 'Law, it is a very high Breach of your 'Lordſhips, and our the poor Commons 'Liberties; and yet this being ill in itſelf, 'may produce a happy Effect: The King 'and both Houſes have given a Judgment, 'the greateſt that ever was againſt this in 'the Petition of Right; and when this 'Judgment is given, ſee how God's Goodneſs hath brought it to paſs, that this Patent ſhall be part of the Execution of that 'Judgment to damn it for the Puniſhment.

'I utterly diſlike and wonder, that the 'Clauſe, as you tender the King's Honour, ſhould come into a thing of this 'nature. Then as for the time, it came 'out ſeven Days after the Summons of Parliament, and all knew that the Parliament 'would deſcry it; but I hope it will now 'turn to Good.

'THAT which I am to demand of your 'Lordſhips is, 1. That as we upon Conſideration of this Commiſſion found it ex diametro againſt the late Judgment in the 'Petition of Right, and condemned it, ſo 'your Lordſhips would concur with us, as 'hitherto ye have done. 2. That this 'Commiſſion, as a thing againſt Law, may 'be cancelled. 3. That if it be inrolled, 'a Vote may be made of it; and if not, 'that Order be taken that it be not inrolled. 4. That the Warrant may be 'damned and deſtroyed. 5. That it would 'pleaſe your Lordſhips, in your Wiſdoms, 'to take into conſideration who is the Projector of this Device, and if he could be 'found out, that ſome exemplary Puniſhment may be according to Juſtice inflicted 'on him.'

THE Lords accepted the Motion, and promiſed to preſent the ſame to his Majeſty. This done, the Commons voted that the Commiſſion, the not guarding the narrow Seas, the Decay of Trade, and other particulars, be inſerted in the Remonſtrance; and upon their reſuming the former Motion to declare who was the Cauſe of all thoſe Evils, the Debate was as hot as ever, and the Crimes ſo frequently objected againſt the Duke of Buckingham were brought in afreſh. One Member made a Diſtinction that the Duke was the Cauſe of ſome, and a Cauſe of other Grievances: for the firſt he inſtanced in the Diſaſter of the Armies, the Decay of Ports, Trade, Ships, and Mariners. For the ſecond, he inſtanced in Religion; 1. His Mother was a Recuſant, and a Foſterer of Recuſants; 2. Papiſts have honour in his Employments, and Popiſh Captains are placed by him. And as for Arminians, York-Houſe is a Place of Conſultation for Dr. Mountague and others, from whence is like to follow Innovation in Government.

Freſh Debates againſt the Duke of Buckingham.

ANOTHER, in ſupport of the Argument that Papiſts were employed by the Duke, named Dalbier as the Man who betrayed our Forces at the Iſle of Rhee, where all was carried by the Advice of private Men, and ſome ill-affected in Religion, contrary to the Advice of the reſt of the Commanders.

SIR Robert Philips was for having the Declaration to run thus, We conceive the Greatneſs and Power of the Duke of Buckingham is the chief Cauſe of all theſe Evils. We are not in a way of Charge, but of a Remonſtrance.

SIR John Elliot, Sir Edward Coke, and Mr. Selden were poſitively for naming the Duke as the Cauſe of all our Evils; for ſo, ſaid they, he had been already declared in the laſt Parliament, ſince when the Cauſes are multiplied, and he hath deſerved nothing better of the Commonwealth.

IN this Debate there wanted not Mediators, who deſired the Houſe for their own Ends and Happineſs, to be ſparing in that kind. Sir Humphrey May put them again in mind of the King's Deſire that all perſonal Aſperſions might be forborn, which his Majeſty will take as an Argument of their Moderation and Judgment.

SIR Henry Martin adviſed that the Remonſtrance be ſo framed, as to make it paſſable to his Majeſty's Judgment and Affection, that he may be perſuaded it comes from a publick Senſe, and not from private Ends; and he vindicated the Duke in point of of Religion. 'Tis true, said he, his Mother is a Recusant, but never any thing more grieved him, and never did a Son use more Means than he to convert her, but he hath no Power over her; and for his own Lady, whom he found not firm in his Religion, he hath used Means to confirm her. As for Arminians, I have often heard him vow and protest against these Opinions. It is true, many that have Skill therein, may have some Credit with him, and make use of his noble Nature for their own Ends. One particular I know well, that some Gentlemen and Preachers of great Esteem, were questioned for a Matter, wherein there was some Error in the manner for which they were presented; I told him of them, and that they were questioned, and he answered me he would do the best he could to countenance them.'

SIR Benjamin Rudyard gave his Opinion, 'That if the Matter be urged home, it will proclaim the Man louder than we can in Words. If we name Excess of Power and Abuse of Power, it will reach to the Duke and all others in future Times: And to a Gentleman of Honour nothing is so dear as Sense of Honour. I am witness, and do know, that he did many great and good Offices to this House. If the Forfeiture of my Life could breed an Opinion that ye should have no occasion to complain at your next Meeting, I would pawn it to you: Nor let any Man say, it is Fear makes us desist; we have shewed already what we dare do.'

BECAUSE the Employment of Dalbier had given much Offence, Sir Thomas Jermin stood up in his Defence, and said he had given great Evidence of his Trust and Fidelity. When the Count Palatine retired himself, and the Council agreed to send a Party under Count Mansfield to make a head, and the King sent word to the Palatine to be present in Person; Dalbier and one more went along with him, and being in a Village in Germany, a Troop of 50 Horse met them, to whose Captain Dalbeer went and said, We are in a Service, I'll give you so many Crowns to conduct us; which was done, and Dalbier went along with him.

IN conclusion, upon the 13th of June, it was resolved upon the Question, That the excessive Power of the Duke of Buckingham is the Cause of the Evils and Dangers to the King and Kingdom; and that this be added to the Remonstrance.

Dr. Lamb mobbed and murdered.

AT this very time, one Lamb a Quack-Doctor, and a Creature of the Duke of Buckingham, having been at a Playhouse, and passing thro' the Streets of London, was set upon by the Rabble, pelted from one Street to another, and forced to take sanctuary in the Windmill Tavern at the lower End of the Old Jewry, where the Mob pressed so hard to get in, that the Vintner, for fear his House would be pulled down, and his Wines destroyed, thought fit to thrust him out; whereupon the inraged Multitude, that was now gathered together, shouted and hooted at him, calling him Witch, Devil, the Duke's Conjurer, &c. and some were heard to say in their Fury, that were his Master the Duke there, they would give him as much. And upon the Approach of a Guard sent by the Lord-Mayor to rescue him, they beat and bruised him so roughly, without a Man to assist or pity him, that they left him for dead. With much ado the Officers that rescued him got him alive to the Compter, where he lived a few Hours; but being above fourscore Years of Age, by much too old to survive such barbarous Treatment, he died before the Morning. This Affair made the Duke more apprehensive of the popular Rage against himself; for so incensed were the People, that these bold Rhimes were then almost in every body's mouth;

Let Charles and George do what they can,
The Duke shall die like Dr. Lamb.

NEVERTHELESS 'tis observed, that if Lamb had stood in no relation at all to the Duke, he was of himself odious enough to the Populace; for he had got the common Character of a Conjurer, and had been publickly arraigned for practising Sorcery and other hellish Arts upon the Body of the Lord Windsor. He was moreover infamous for Lewdness, having been tried for a Rape at the King's-Bench Bar, where he insisted upon his Innocence in such an impudent manner, that his very Language implied the Fact, tho' he was found Not Guilty; and it appeared, says Whitelocke, upon the Trial, that he was neither a Doctor nor a Man of Letters. 'Tis affirmed, that he got his Living by selling Nostrums, and sometimes Poison, and he was talked of as being concerned in poisoning King James. Larrey the French Historian says, Buckingkam employed him to execute his private Intrigues and most odious Designs. This riotous Murder however was the Cause of a wider Breach betwixt the Court and City; for as soon as the Court had News of it, a Council was called, and Sir Richard Dean the Lord-Mayor, and the Aldermen were sent for, and examined at the Council-Table, and threatned with the loss of their Charter, if they did not discover and deliver up the chief Rioters; but they could not find any that were able or willing to be a witness against any Person in the Business:

Business, for which the City was fined some Years after, as we shall observe in its due place; and shall here only insert the Letter, which the Privy-Council wrote two Days after the Fact, to the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London.

A Letter from the Court to the City about Dr. Lamb's Death.

'WHereas we are given to understand, that by the Fury and Outrage of divers dissolute and disorderly Persons assembled together in great numbers, without any Resistance made, or Course taken to suppress them (by the Magistrates to whom it appertained) one Lamb was in a barbarous manner slain and murdered, wherewith his Majesty having been likewise made acquainted, as he is very sensible of the Scandal that may hereby be cast upon the Peace and Government of the Realm in general, when the chief City thereof, and where his own Person is resident, should by the Remissness and Neglect of Magistrates, in the Execution of his Laws, suffer a Fact and Misdemeanour of so high a nature to be committed, and to pass unpunished: So he is very highly displeased thereat, and hath therefore commanded us in his Name hereby strictly to charge and require your Lordship, &c. that with all Care and Diligence you do forthwith inquire out the principal Actors and Abettors therein, and to cause them to be apprehended and committed to Prison, and to be proceeded with, and punished in the severest manner, that by the Laws of the Realm is provided against Offenders in so high a nature.' And so, &c.'

Dr. Neal and Dr. Laud censur'd.

WE return to the Parliament. The Commons at this time voted, That Dr. Neal Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Laud Bishop of Bath and Wells, be named in the Remonstrance to be those near about the King, who are suspected to be Arminians. And upon a Motion of Mr. Selden in the Committee, it was likewise ordered, that to the Excessive Power of the Duke should be added the Abuse of that Power; and since that Abuse is the Cause of these Evils, that it be presented to his Majesty to consider, whether it be safe for the King and Commonwealth, that a Man of his Power should be so near his Majesty. All the parts of the Remonstrance which had been preparing ten Days, being agreed unto and perfected, it was presented to his Majesty on the 17th of June by the Speaker, attended by the whole House.

As this Remonstrance shews in a clear and exact manner the Occasions of Complaint which the Commons had against the Government, it has been thought necessary to give it here at length.

Commons Remonstrance against the Duke of Buckingham.

Most Dread Sovereign,

'AS with humble Thankfulness we your dutiful Commons, now assembled in Parliament, do acknowledge the great Comfort which we have in your Majesty's pious and gracious Disposition; so we think it a meet and most necessary Duty, being called by your Majesty to consult and advise of the great and urgent Affairs of this Church and Commonwealth, finding them at this time in apparent Danger of Ruin and Destruction, faithfully and dutifully to inform your Majesty thereof, and with bleeding Hearts and bended Knees to crave your speedy Redress therein, as to your own Wisdom (unto which we most humbly submit ourselves and our Desires) shall seem most meet and convenient. What the Multitude and Potency of your Majesty's Enemies are abroad; what be their malicious and ambitious Ends; and how vigilant and constantly industrious they are in pursuing the same, is well known to your Majesty, together with the Dangers threatned thereby to your sacred Person, and your Kingdoms, and the Calamities which have already fallen, and do daily increase upon your Friends and Allies, of which we are well assured your Majesty is most sensible, and will accordingly in your great Wisdom, and with the gravest and most mature Counsel, according to the Exigency of the Times and Occasions, provide to prevent and help the same.

'To which End we most humbly intreat your Majesty, first, and especially, to cast your Eyes upon the miserable Condition of this your own Kingdom, of late so strangely weakened and dejected, that unless, through your Majesty's most gracious Wisdom, Goodness and Justice, it be speedily raised to a better Condition, it is in no little Danger to become a sudden Prey to the Enemies thereof; and of the most happy and flourishing, to be the most miserable and contemptible Nation in the World. In the Discoveries of which Dangers, Mischiefs, and Inconveniencies lying upon us, we do freely protest, that it is far from our Thoughts to lay the least Aspersion upon your sacred Person, or the least Scandal upon your Government; for we do in all Sincerity of our Hearts, not only for ourselves, but in the Name of all the Commons of the Realm, (whom we represent) ascribe as much Duty, as a most loyal and affectionate People can do unto the best King, (for so you are, and so have been pleased abundantly to express yourself this present Parliament by your Majesty's clear and satisfactory Answer to our Petition of Right, for which both ourselves and our Posterity, shall bless God for you, and ever preserve a thankful Memory of your great Goodness and Justice therein.) And we do verily believe, that all, or most of these things, which we shall now present unto your Majesty, are either unknown to you, or 'else by some of your Majesty's Ministers 'offered under such specious Pretences, as 'may hide their own ill Intentions, and 'ill Consequences of them from your 'Majesty. But we assure ourselves, ac-'cording to the good Example of your 'Majesty's Predecessors, nothing can make 'your Majesty (being a wise and judicious 'Prince, and above all things desirous 'of the Welfare of your People) more 'in love with Parliaments than this, which 'is one of the principal Ends of calling 'them, that therein your Majesty may be 'truly informed of the State of all the 'several Parts of your Kingdom, and how 'your Officers and Ministers do behave 'themselves in the Trust reposed in them 'by your Majesty, which is scarce able to 'be made known unto you, but in Parlia-'ment, as was declared by your blessed 'Father, when he was pleased to put the 'Commons, in Parliament assembled, in 'mind, That it would be the greatest Un-'faithfulness, and Breach of Duty to his 'Majesty, and of the Trust committed to 'them by the Country, that could be, if in 'setting forth the Grievances of the Peo-'ple, and the Condition of all the Parts 'of this Kingdom from whence they come, 'they did not deal clearly with him, with-'out sparing any, how near and dear soever 'they were unto him, if they were hurtful 'or dangerous to the Common-wealth.

'IN confidence therefore of your Ma-'jesty's gracious Acceptation, in a matter 'of so high Importance, and in faithful Dis-'charge of our Duties, we do first of all 'most humbly beseech your Majesty to 'take notice, that howsoever we know 'your Majesty doth with your Soul abhor 'that any such thing should be imagined 'or attempted, yet there is a general Fear 'conceived in your People of secret Work-'ing and Combination to introduce into this 'Kingdom Innovation and Change of our 'holy Religion, more precious unto us 'than our Lives, and whatever this World 'can afford. And our Fears and Jealousies 'herein are not meerly conjectural, but ari-'sing out of such certain and visible Effects, 'as may demonstrate a true and real Cause. 'For notwithstanding the many good and 'wholesome Laws, and Provisions made 'to prevent the Increase of Popery with-'in this Kingdom; and notwithstanding 'your Majesty's most gracious and satis-'factory Answer to the Petition of both 'Houses in that Behalf, presented to your 'Majesty at Oxford, we find there hath 'followed no good Execution nor Effect, 'but on the contrary (at which your Ma-'jesty, out of the quick Sense of your own 'religious Heart, cannot but be in the 'highest measure displeased) those of that 'Religion do find extraordinary Favours 'and Respect at Court, from Persons of 'great Quality and Power, whom they 'continually resort unto; and in particular 'to the Countess of Buckingham, who her-'self openly professing that Religion, is a 'known Favourer and Supporter of them 'that do the same; which we well hoped, 'upon your Majesty's Answer to the afore-'said Petition at Oxford, should not have 'been permitted, nor that any of your 'Majesty's Subjects of that Religion justly 'to be suspected, should be entertained in 'the Service of your Majesty, or your 'Royal Consort the Queen. Some like-'wise of that Religion have had Honours, 'Offices, and Places of Command and Au-'thority lately conferred upon them. But 'that which striketh the greatest Terror 'into the Hearts of your loyal Subjects 'concerning this, is, that Letters of Stay 'of legal Proceedings against them have 'been procured by your Majesty (by what 'indirect Means we know not) and Com-'missions under the Great Seal granted and 'executed for Composition to be made with 'Popish Recusants, with Inhibitions and 'Restraints both to the Ecclesiastical and 'Temporal Courts and Officers to inter-'meddle with them; which is conceived 'to amount to no less than a Toleration, 'odious to God, full of Dishonour and ex-'treme Disprofit to your Majesty, of great 'Scandal and Grief to your good People, 'and of apparent Danger to the present 'State of your Majesty, and of this King-'dom; their Numbers, Power and Inso-'lence daily increasing in all Parts of your 'Kingdom, and especially about London, 'and the Suburbs thereof; where exceed-'ing many Families do make their Abode 'publickly, frequent Mass at Denmark-'House and other places, and by their of-'ten Meetings and Conferences, have Op-'portunities of combining their Counsels, 'and Strength together, to the Hazard of 'your Majesty's Safety, and the State, and 'most especially in these doubtful and ca-'lamitous Times. And as our Fear con-'cerning Change or Subversion of Religion 'is grounded upon the daily Increase of 'Papists, the open and professed Enemies 'thereof, for the Reasons formerly men-'tioned; so are the Hearts of your good Sub-'jects no less perplexed, when with Sorrow 'they behold a daily Growth and Spread-'ing of the Faction of the Arminians, that 'being, as your Majesty well knows, but 'a cunning way to bring in Popery; and 'the Professors of those Opinions, the com-'mon Disturbers of the Protestant Churches, 'and Incendiaries in those States wherein 'they have gotten any Head, being Pro-'testants in Shew, but Jesuits in Opinion; 'which caused your Royal Father with so 'much pious Wisdom, and ardent Zeal, to 'endeavour the suppressing of them, as well 'at home, as in the neighbour Countries. 'And your gracious Majesty imitating his 'most worthy Example, hath openly, and

'by your Proclamation declared your Mislike of those Persons, and of their Opinions, who notwithstanding are much favoured and advanced, not wanting Friends even of the Clergy, near to your Majesty; namely, Dr. Neale Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Laud Bishop of Bath and Wells, who are justly suspected to be unsound in their Opinions that way. And it being now generally held the way to Preferment, and Promotion in the Church, many Scholars do bend the Course of their Studies to maintain those Errors; their Books and Opinions are suffered to be printed and published, and on the other side, the imprinting of such as are written against them, and in Defence of the Orthodox Church, is hindered and prohibited, and, (which is a Boldness almost incredible) this Restraint of Orthodox Books, is made under colour of your Majesty's formerly mention'd Proclamation, the Intent and Meaning whereof we know was quite contrary. And further to increase our Fears concerning Innovation of Religion, we find there hath been no small labouring to remove that which is the most powerful Means to strengthen and increase our own Religion, and to oppose both those, which is the diligent Teaching and Instruction of the People in the true Knowledge and Worship of Almighty God. And therefore Means have been sought out to depress and discountenance pious, and painful, and orthodox Preachers; and how conformable soever, and peaceable in their Disposition and Carriage they be, yet the Preferment of such is opposed, and instead of being incourag'd, they are molested with vexatious Courses and Pursuits, and hardly permitted to Lecture. And in those Places, where are no constant Preaching Ministers, whereby many of your good People (whose Souls in this Case we beseech your Majesty to commiserate) are kept in Ignorance, and are apt to be easily seduced to Error and Superstition; it doth not a little also increase our Dangers and Fears this way, to understand the miserable Condition of your Kingdom of Ireland; where without Controul, the Popish Religion is openly professed, and practised in every Part thereof, Popish Jurisdiction being there generally exercised and avowed, Monasteries, Nunneries, and other superstitious Houses newly erected, re-edified and replenished with Men and Women of several Orders, and in a plentiful manner maintained at Dublin, and most of the great Towns, and divers other Places of the Kingdom; which, of what ill Consequence it may prove, if not seasonably repressed, we leave to your Majesty's Wisdom to judge; but most humbly beseech you (as we assure ourselves you will) to lay the serious Consideration thereof to your Royal and Pious Heart, and that some speedy Course may be taken for Redress therein.

'AND if now to all these your Majesty will be pleased to add the Consideration of the Circumstances of Time, wherein these Courses tending to the Destruction of true Religion, within these your Kingdoms, have been taken here, even then when the same is with open Force and Violence prosecuted in other Countries, and all the reformed Churches in Christendom, either depressed or miserably distressed; we do humbly appeal unto your Majesty's Princely Judgment, whether there be not just ground to fear that there is some secret and strong cooperating here, with the Enemies of our Religion abroad, for the utter Extirpation thereof; and whether if those Courses be not speedily redressed, and the Profession of true Religion more encouraged, we can expect any other but Misery and Ruin speedily to fall upon us; especially if besides the visible and apparent Dangers wherewith we are compassed about, you would be pleased to remember the Displeasure of Almighty God, always bent against the Neglect of his holy Religion, the Strokes of whose Divine Justice we have already felt, and do still feel with Smart and Sorrow in great measure.

'AND besides this Fear of Innovation in Religion, we do in like faithful Discharge of our Duties, most humbly declare to your Majesty, that the Hearts of your People are full of Fear of Innovation and Change of Government, and accordingly possessed with extreme Grief and Sorrow; yet in this Point by your Majesty's late Answer to our Petition of Right, touching our Liberties, much comforted and raised again out of that Sadness and Discontent, which they generally had conceived throughout the whole Kingdom, for the undue Courses which were the last Year taken for raising of Moneys by Loans, than which (whatever your Majesty hath been informed to the contrary) there were never any Moneys demanded, nor paid with greater Grief and general Dislike of all your faithful Subjects; though many, partly out of Fear, and partly out of other Respects, (yet most unwillingly) were drawn to yield to what was required.

'THE Billeting of Soldiers did much augment both their Fears and Grief, wherein likewise they find much Comfort upon your gracious Answer to our Petition of Right, and to that we presented to your Majesty concerning this Particular. Yet we most humbly beseech your Majesty, that we may inform you, that the still continuance, and late reinforcing of those Soldiers, the Conditions of their Persons, (many of them not being Natives of this Kingdom, nor of the same, but of an opposite Religion) the placing of them upon the Sea-Coast, where making head

'amongst

'amongſt themſelves, they may unite with 'the Popiſh Party at home, if occaſion ſerve, 'and join with an invading Enemy to do 'extreme Miſchief, and their being not yet 'diſmiſſed, doth ſtill miniſter Cauſe of Jea-'louſy in your loving Subjects; for that 'the Soldiers cannot be continued without 'exceeding great Danger of the Peace and 'Safety of your Kingdom.

'THE Report of the ſtrange and dange-'rous Purpoſe of bringing in German Horſe 'and Riders, would have turned our Doubts 'into Deſpair, and our Fears into a Certainty 'of Confuſion, had not your Majeſty's gra-'cious Meſſage (for which we humbly give 'you Thanks) comforted us, by the Aſſu-'rance of your Royal Word, that they nei-'ther are, nor were intended by your Ma-'jeſty, for any Service in England; but that 'they were deſigned for ſome other foreign 'Employment. Yet the Sight of the Privy-'Seal, by which it ſeemeth they were to be 'levy'd, the great Sum of Money, which 'upon Examinations we found to be paid for 'that Purpoſe, gave us juſt Cauſe of Fear, 'that much about the ſame time there was a 'Commiſſion under the Great-Seal, granted 'unto the Lords, and others of the Privy-'Council, to conſider of other Ways for 'raiſing of Moneys, ſo particularly by Im-'poſitions, gave us juſt Cauſe to ſuſpect, 'that whatſoever was your Majeſty's gra-'cious Intention, yet there wanted not 'thoſe, that under ſome colourable Pre-'tence, might ſecretly by this, as by other 'Ways, contrive to change the Frame both 'of Religion and Government, and thereby 'undermine the Safety of your Majeſty, and 'your Kingdoms.

'THESE Men could not be ignorant that 'the bringing in of Strangers for Aid, hath 'been pernicious to moſt States where they 'have been admitted, but to England fatal. 'We do bleſs God that hath given your Ma-'jeſty a wiſe underſtanding Heart to diſcern 'of thoſe Courſes, and that ſuch a Power 'produceth nothing but Weakneſs and Cala-'mity. And we beſeech your Majeſty to 'pardon the Vehemence of our Expreſſion, 'if in the Loyal and Zealous Affections we 'bear to your Majeſty and your Service, we 'are bold to declare to your Majeſty, and to 'the whole World, that we hold it far be-'neath the Heart of any free Engliſhman to 'think that this victorious Nation ſhould 'now ſtand in need of German Soldiers to 'defend their own King and Kingdom.

'BUT when we conſider the Courſe for-'merly mentioned, and theſe Things tending 'to an apparent Change of Government, the 'often Breaches of Parliament, whereby your 'Majeſty hath been deprived of the faithful 'Counſel, and free Aids of your People, by 'taking off Tonnage and Poundage, without 'Grant thereof by Act of Parliament, ever 'ſince the beginning of your Majeſty's 'Reign, to this preſent; the ſtanding Com-'miſſion granted to the Duke of Bucking-'ham, to be General of an Army in the 'Land, in time of Peace; the diſcharging 'of faithful and ſufficient Officers and Mi-'niſters, ſome from judicial Places, and 'others from the Offices and Authorities 'which they formerly held in the Common-'wealth: we cannot but at the ſight of 'ſuch an apparent Deſolation, as muſt ne-'ceſſarily follow theſe Courſes, out of the 'Depth of Sorrow lift up our Cries to Hea-'ven for Help, and next under God, ap-'ply ourſelves unto your ſacred Majeſty, 'who if you could hear ſo many thouſands 'ſpeaking together, do jointly implore 'ſpeedy Help and Reformation.

'AND if your Majeſty would be pleaſed 'to take a further View of the preſent State 'of your Realm, we do humbly pray you 'to conſider, whether the miſerable Diſaſ-'ters and ill Succeſs that have accompanied 'all your late Deſigns and Actions, particu-'larly thoſe of Cales and the Iſle of Rhee, 'and the laſt Expedition to Rochel, have 'not extremely waſted that Stock of Ho-'nour that was left unto this Kingdom, 'ſometimes terrible to all other Nations, 'and now declining to Contempt beneath 'the meaneſt.

'TOGETHER with our Honour, we 'there loſt thoſe (and that not a few) who 'had they lived, we might have ſome bet-'ter hope of recovering it again, our vali-'ant and expert Colonels, Captains, and 'Commanders, and many thouſand common 'Soldiers and Mariners, though we have 'ſome cauſe to think that your Majeſty is 'not as yet rightly informed thereof; and 'that of Six or Seven Thouſand of your 'Subjects loſt at the Iſle of Rhee, your Ma-'jeſty received Information but of a few 'Hundreds. And this Diſhonour and Loſs 'hath been purchaſed with a Conſumption 'of a Million of Treaſure.

'MANY of the Forts are exceeding weak, 'and decayed, and want both Men and Mu-'nition. And here we cannot but with 'Grief conſider and complain of a ſtrange 'Improvidence (we think your Majeſty will 'rather call it Treachery) that your Store 'of Powder, which by Order of your Privy-'Council, dated the 10th of December, '1626, ſhould be conſtantly 300 Laſts, be-'ſides a continual Supply of 20 Laſts a 'Month for ordinary Expences, and were 'now fit (as we conceive) to be double the 'Proportion, is at this time in the Tower '(the preſent Warrants being ſerved) but 'nine Laſts, and Forty-eight Pounds in all, 'which we tremble to think of. And that 'notwithſtanding this extreme Scarcity of 'Powder, great Quantities have been per-'mitted to be ſold out of your Majeſty's 'Store to particular Perſons for private Gain: 'Whereof we have ſeen a Certificate of ſix 'Laſts ſold ſince the 14th of January 'laſt; and your Majeſty's Store being un-

furniſhed

Foedera Tom. XVIII.

'furniſhed of Powder, which by a Contract 'made with Mr. Evelyn, by Advice of your 'Lords in Parliament, ought to be ſupplied 'Monthly with twenty Laſts, at the rate of '3 l. 10 s. 10 d. a Barrel, your Majeſty 'hath been forced to pay above 7 l. a Barrel for Powder to be brought in from be'yond Seas, for which purpoſe 12,400 l. 'was impreſſed to Mr. Burlemack the laſt 'Year, and that Powder not ſo good as that 'by Contract your Majeſty ſhould have, by 'one third part; all which are moſt fearful 'and dangerous Abuſes. But what the Po'verty, Weakneſs, and Miſery your King'dom is now grown unto by Decay of 'Trade, and Deſtruction and Loſs of Ships 'and Mariners, within theſe three Years, 'we are almoſt afraid to declare: And could 'we by any other means have been ſure, 'that your Majeſty ſhould any other way 'have had a true Information thereof, we 'ſhould have been doubtful to have made 'our Weakneſs and Extremity of Misfortune 'in this kind, to appear; but the importu'nate and moſt pitiful Complaints from all 'the Parts of the Kingdom near adjoining 'to the Sea in this kind, would rend, as we 'think, the ſtonieſt Heart in the World with 'Sorrow; and the Senſe we have of the mi'ſerable Condition your Kingdom is in by 'reaſon thereof, eſpecially, for that we ſee 'no poſſible means (being now ſhortly to 'end this Seſſion) how to help the ſame, 'adds ſuch a Weight of Grief unto our ſad 'Thoughts, as we have not words to ex'preſs it; but for your Majeſty's more exact 'Information therein, we beſeech you to 'peruſe the Calendar of Particulars, which 'with the Remonſtrance, we moſt humbly 'preſent unto your Majeſty.

'One Reaſon, amongſt many, of 'this Decay of Trade, and Loſs of Ships 'and Mariners, is the not guarding of the 'narrow Seas, the Regality whereof your 'Majeſty hath now in a manner wholly 'loſt, being that wherein a principal part 'of the Honour and Safety of this Kingdom 'heretofore conſiſted. And now having 'abſolutely neglected it, the Town of Dun'kirk doth ſo continually rob and ſpoil your 'Subjects, that we can aſſure your Majeſty '(if ſome preſent and effectual Remedy be 'not forthwith provided) the whole Trade 'of this Kingdom, the Shipping, Mariners, 'and all belonging thereunto, will be ut'terly loſt and conſumed. The principal 'Cauſe of which Evils and Dangers, we 'conceive to be the exceſſive Power of the 'Duke of Buckingham, and the Abuſe of 'that Power. And we humbly ſubmit unto 'your Majeſty's excellent Wiſdom, whether 'it be ſafe for yourſelf, or your Kingdoms, 'that ſo great Power as reſts in him by Sea 'and Land, ſhould be in the hands of any 'one Subject whatſoever.

'And as it is not ſafe, ſo ſure we are 'it cannot be for your Service, it being im'poſſible for one Man to manage ſo many 'and weighty Affairs of the Kingdom as 'he hath undertaken, beſides the ordinary 'Duties of thoſe Offices which he holds; 'ſome of which well performed, would re'quire the Time and Induſtry of the ableſt 'Men both for Counſel and Action, that 'your whole Kingdom will afford, eſpeci'ally in theſe times of common Danger.

'And our humble Deſire is further, that 'your moſt excellent Majeſty will be pleaſed 'to take into your Princely Conſideration, 'whether in reſpect the ſaid Duke hath ſo 'abuſed his Power, it be ſafe for your Ma'jeſty and your Kingdom, to continue him 'either in his great Offices, or in his Place 'of Nearneſs and Counſels about your ſa'cred Perſon.

'And thus in all Humility, aiming at 'nothing but the Honour of Almighty God, 'and the Maintenance of his true Religion, 'the Safety and Happineſs of your moſt ex'cellent Majeſty, and the Preſervation and 'Proſperity of this Church and Common'wealth, we have endeavoured with faith'ful Hearts and Intentions, and in Diſcharge 'of the Duty we owe to your Majeſty and 'our Country, to give your Majeſty a true 'Repreſentation of our preſent Danger and 'preſſing Calamities, which we humbly be'ſeech your Majeſty graciouſly to accept, 'and take the ſame to heart, accounting the 'Safety and Proſperity of your People your 'greateſt Happineſs, and their Love your 'richeſt Treaſure. A rueful and lamentable 'Spectacle we confeſs it muſt needs be, to 'behold thoſe Ruins in ſo fair a Houſe; ſo 'many Diſeaſes, and almoſt every one of 'them deadly, in ſo ſtrong and well-tem'pered a Body as this Kingdom lately was. 'But yet we will not doubt, but that God 'hath reſerved this Honour for your Ma'jeſty, to reſtore the Safety and Happineſs 'thereof, as a Work worthy ſo excellent a 'Prince, for whoſe long Life and true Fe'licity, we daily pray, and that your Fame 'and never-dying Glory may be continued 'to all Generations.'

Charles I. An°. 1628.

The King having heard out the Remonſtrance with ſome Indignation, told the Commons, *That he little expected ſuch a Remonſtrance * after he had paſſed the Petition of Right; however, as for their Grievances he would conſider of them as they ſhould deſerve.* And 'tis ſaid, that ſoon after he ordered a formal Anſwer to be drawn up in writing to the ſaid Remonſtrance, denying or excuſing the ſeveral Charges in it. King's Anſwer.

It appeared in the Sequel that this Remonſtrance, which Finch the Speaker would fain have been excuſed from delivering, he being characteriſed in Hiſtory as an Incendiary betwixt the King and Parliament, by conſtantly diſcloſing to the King whatever paſſed in the Houſe, and giving the worſt turn to every thing there ſaid; this Remonſtrance, I ſay, made no advantagious Impreſſion upon the King; but however it wrought very much upon the Minds of the People. All the Facts therein alledged were known Truths, and no body attempted to ſay any thing againſt them. The People could not be made to believe that the Parliament had formed a Scheme on purpoſe to rob the King of his Prerogative; but they readily believed that the King and his Miniſters had a mind to eſtabliſh a deſpotic Power, becauſe all their Proceedings plainly ſhewed it. They were the more confirmed in that Opinion, becauſe after the Diſſolution of this very Parliament, the King, in the Reaſons he gave for that Diſſolution, ſaid not a Word againſt the Remonſtrance.

Effects of the Remonſtrance.

THE ſame day that the Remonſtrance was preſented, the Commons ſent up the Subſidy-Bill to the Lords for their Concurrence. Soon after this the King ſent a Meſſage by Sir Humphry May, to acquaint them that he intended to put an end to the Seſſion on the 26th of June; whereupon the Commons fell upon the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage.

King's Meſſage to the Commons.

'TIS obſervable how much the King at this time was bent to croſs the Commons; for in the laſt Parliament, when the Commons impeached the Duke, and the Earl of Briſtol exhibited Articles againſt him, the King ordered the Attorney-General to file an Information againſt the Duke in the Star-Chamber for the great Offences and Miſdemeanors complained of againſt him by the Commons and the Earl, thereby to have ſtopped their Proceedings againſt the Duke in Parliament, as he would have taken the Earl's Cauſe out of Parliament, and proceeded againſt him by Indictment. But the King hearing of the Commons Remonſtrance the very Day before it was preſented, viz. the 16th of June, ordered the Attorney-General to take the ſaid Information, and all the Proceedings off of the File, for that his Majeſty was fully ſatisfied of the Duke's Innocency in all the Articles of the Information, as well by his own certain Knowledge, as by the Proofs taken in the Cauſe. This Mr. Coke obſerves was the firſt Fruit, which the Parliament and Nation reaped from the Petition of Right.

Clamors againſt the Commiſſion of Exciſe.

HIS Majeſty was ſo tired with Complaints againſt the Commiſſion of Exciſe, that about this time the Lord-Keeper reported to the Houſe of Lords what his Majeſty ſaid touching that Commiſſion, viz. 'That their Lordſhips had reaſon to be ſatisfied with what 'was truly and rightly told them by the 'Lords of the Council, that this Commiſſion 'was no more than a Warrant of Advice, 'which his Majeſty knew to be agreeable to 'the time, and the manifold Occaſions then 'in hand; but now having a Supply from 'the Loves of his People, he eſteems the 'Commiſſion uſeleſs; and therefore though 'he knows no Cauſe why any Jealouſy 'ſhould have riſen thereby, yet, at their 'Deſires, he is content it be cancelled; and 'he hath commanded me to bring both 'the Commiſſion and Warrant to him, and 'it ſhall be cancelled in his own Preſence.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

THE next Day the Lord-Keeper reported that his Majeſty had cancelled the Commiſſion and the Warrant for the putting the Seal to it, and did there openly ſhew it; and a Meſſage was ſent to the Commons to ſhew them the ſaid cancelled Commiſſion and Warrant.

The Commiſſion cancelled.

THE Commons having now reſumed the Debate upon Tonnage and Poundage, Mr. Selden ſaid, 'Whereas the King's Council 'objected, that 1 Eliz. ſaith, It was granted 'time out of mind to the King, I fear his 'Majeſty is told ſo, and ſome body doth 'aſcertain him ſo: But we may clear that, 'for not only 1 Eliz. but alſo in the Sta-'tute of 1 James, the Word Time out of 'mind is, That whereas Hen. VII. and other 'his Majeſty's Progenitors have had ſome 'Subſidy for guarding of the Seas, and there 'never was a King but had ſome Subſidy; 'in that Senſe indeed it is Time out of mind, 'yet it is a matter of Free Gift: For pub-'lick Bills the King ſaith Le Roy veult; 'for Petitions of Right Soit droit fait come 'eſt deſire. For the Bill of Subſidies it is 'thus, The King heartily thanking the Sub-'jects for their Good-will: In all the Bills 'of Tonnage and Poundage is the very ſame 'Anſwer ſave one, which was 1 Eliz. and 'but for that only Miſtake of the Clerk, it 'hath ever the ſame Aſſent as the Bill of 'Subſidy.' But the intended Bill would require ſo much time, and ſo many Conferences with the Merchants, that they contented themſelves with appointing a Committee to draw up a Remonſtrance to his Majeſty of the People's Rights, and of the undue taking of Tonnage and Poundage, and of Impoſitions without Act of Parliament; and to ſhew the Reaſons why the Houſe cannot in ſo ſhort a time prepare that Bill. This Affair making a great noiſe, 'tis neceſſary to inſert the whole Remonſtrance, after giving a brief Account of the Subject.

Debates on Tonnage and Poundage.

TONNAGE and Poundage was an ancient Impoſt upon Merchants Goods exported and imported, which the Parliament uſually granted to the Kings of England, to enable them to guard the Seas, and protect the Trade. This Impoſt had for a long while been granted to every King, and ſometimes it happened that after the Death of the King, his Succeſſor had continued to levy it, 'till ſuch time as the Parliament had granted it by

by an Act. As in the Reign of Charles I. the Court was much ſwayed by Precedents favourable to the Royal Prerogative, and as they took advantage of ſuch Precedents, as if they had been ſo many Laws, it happened that ſince King James's Death, Charles had levied Tonnage and Poundage without vouchſafing to deſire an Act of Parliament for it, under colour that ſome of his Predeceſſors had done the like for ſome time 'till an Act was paſſed. This the Commons found fault with, maintaining that it was a pure Grant of the People, and conſequently that the King had not power to levy it without the Conſent of Parliament, and the rather that the Seas had never been well guarded, nor the Trade leſs protected, than in the firſt Years of this Reign. To maintain the People's Rights therefore, and to hinder the Crown from uſurping by degrees the Impoſt of Tonnage and Poundage, independent of the Parliament, the Houſe of Commons now drew up the following Remonſtrance againſt it to the King.

Commons Remonſtrance againſt it.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

'YOUR Majeſty's moſt Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, being in nothing more careful, than of the Honour and Proſperity of your Majeſty, and the Kingdom, which they know do much depend on that happy Union and Relation betwixt your Majeſty and your People; do, with much Sorrow, apprehend, that by reaſon of the Uncertainty of their Continuance together, the unexpected Interruptions which have been caſt upon them, and the Shortneſs of Time in which your Majeſty hath determined to end this Seſſion, they cannot bring to Maturity and Perfection, divers Buſineſſes of Weight, which they have taken into their Conſideration and Reſolution, as moſt important for the common Good: Amongſt other Things, they have taken into eſpecial Care the preparing of a Bill, for the granting of your Majeſty ſuch a Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage, as might uphold your Profit and Revenue in as ample a manner, as their juſt Care, and Reſpect of Trade, (wherein not only the Proſperity, but even the Life of the Kingdom doth conſiſt) would permit: but being a Work which will require much Time, and Preparation by Conference with your Majeſty's Officers, and with the Merchants, not only of London, but of other remote Parts, they find it not poſſible to be accompliſhed at this Time: wherefore conſidering it will be much more prejudicial to the Right of the Subject, if your Majeſty ſhould continue to receive the ſame, without Authority of Law after the Determination of a Seſſion, than if there had been a Receſs by Adjournment only, in which caſe, that intended Grant would have related to the firſt Day of the Parliament; and aſſuring themſelves, that your Majeſty is reſolved to obſerve that your Royal Anſwer, which you have lately made to the Petition of Right of both Houſes of Parliament; yet doubting leſt your Majeſty may be miſinformed concerning this particular Caſe, as if you might continue to take thoſe Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, and other Impoſitions upon Merchants, without breaking that Anſwer, they are forced by that Duty which they owe to your Majeſty, and to thoſe whom they repreſent, to declare, That there ought not any Impoſition to be laid on the Goods of Merchants, exported or imported, without common Conſent by Act of Parliament, which is the Right and Inheritance of your Subjects, founded not only upon the moſt ancient and original Conſtitution of this Kingdom, but often confirmed and declared in divers Statute Laws.

'AND for the better Manifeſtation thereof, may it pleaſe your Majeſty to underſtand, that altho' your Royal Predeceſſors, the Kings of this Realm, have often had ſuch Subſidies and Impoſitions granted unto them, upon divers Occaſions, eſpecially for the guarding of the Seas, and Safeguard of Merchants,: yet the Subjects have been ever careful to uſe ſuch Cautions and Limitations in thoſe Grants, as might prevent any Claim to be made, that ſuch Subſidies do proceed from Duty, and not from the free Gift of the Subjects. And that they have heretofore uſed, to limit a Time in ſuch Grants, and for the moſt part but ſhort, as for a Year or two; and if it were continued longer, they have ſometimes directed a certain Space of Ceſſation, or Intermiſſion, that ſo the Right of the Subject might be more evident. At other times it hath been granted upon occaſion of War, for a certain Number of Years, with Proviſo, That if the War were ended in the mean time, then the Grant ſhould ceaſe: and of courſe it hath been ſequeſter'd into the hands of ſome Subjects, to be employed for the guarding of the Seas. And it is acknowledged by the ordinary Anſwers of your Majeſty's Predeceſſors, in their Aſſent to the Bills of Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, that it is of the nature of other Subſidies, proceeding from the Good-Will of the Subject: Very few of your Predeceſſors had it for Life, until the Reign of Henry VII. who was ſo far from conceiving he had any Right thereto, that altho' he granted Commiſſions for collecting certain Duties and Cuſtoms due by Law, yet he made no Commiſſions for receiving the Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage, until the ſame

'was

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'was granted unto him in Parliament. Since 'his Time, all the Kings and Queens of this 'Realm have had the like Grants for Life, 'by the free Love and Good-Will of the 'Subjects. And whenſoever the People 'have been grieved, by laying any Impo'ſitions or other Charges upon their Goods 'and Merchandiſes, without Authority of 'Law (which hath been very ſeldom) yet 'upon Complaint in Parliament, they have 'been forthwith relieved; ſaving in the time 'of your Royal Father, who having through 'ill Counſel, raiſed the Rates and Charges 'upon Merchandiſes, to that Height at 'which they now are; yet he was pleas'd ſo 'far forth to yield to the Complaint of the 'People, as to offer, that if the Value of 'thoſe Impoſitions which he had ſet might 'be made good unto him, he would bind 'himſelf and his Heirs, by Act of Parlia'ment, never to lay any other. Which 'Offer, the Commons at that time, in re'gard of the great Burden, did not think 'fit to yield unto. Nevertheleſs, your Loyal 'Commons in this Parliament, out of their 'eſpecial Zeal unto your Service, and e'ſpecial Regard of your preſſing Occaſions, 'have taken into their Conſideration, ſo to 'frame a Grant of Subſidy of Tonnage and 'Poundage to your Majeſty, that both you 'might have been the better enabled for the 'Defence of your Realm, and your Sub'jects, by being ſecure from all undue 'Charges, be the more encouraged cheer'fully to proceed in their Courſe of Trade; 'by the Increaſe whereof, your Majeſty's 'Profit, and likewiſe the Strength of the 'Kingdom would be very much augmen'ted.

'BUT not being now able to accompliſh 'this their Deſire, there is no Courſe left unto 'them, without manifeſt Breach of their 'Duty, both to your Majeſty and their 'Country, ſave only to make this humble 'Declaration, That the receiving of Ton'nage and Poundage, and other Impoſi'tions, not granted by Parliament, is a 'Breach of the Fundamental Liberties of 'this Kingdom, and contrary to your Ma'jeſty's Royal Anſwer to the ſaid Petition 'of Right. And therefore they do moſt 'humbly beſeech your Majeſty, to forbear 'any further receiving of the ſame; and 'not to take it in ill part from thoſe of your 'Majeſty's loving Subjects, who ſhall re'fuſe to make Payment of any ſuch Charges, 'without Warrant of Law demanded.

'AND as by this Forbearance, your moſt 'excellent Majeſty ſhall manifeſt to the 'World your Royal Juſtice, in the Obſer'vation of your Laws; ſo they doubt not, 'but hereafter, at the Time appointed for 'their coming again, they ſhall have oc'caſion to expreſs their great Deſire to 'advance your Majeſty's Honour and Pro'fit.'

WHEN the King heard of this ſecond Remonſtrance, and had ſent for the Speaker, who told him it was engroſs'd, he reſolv'd to prevent the Delivery of it, and therefore on the 26th of June, when it was actually reading in the Commons Houſe, his Majeſty on a ſudden went to the Houſe of Lords, and having ſent for the Speaker, (who had been with him but juſt before) and the whole Houſe of Commons, ſhew'd his Reſentment in the following Speech.

CHARLES I. A°. 1628.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech on Tonnage and Poundage.

'IT may ſeem ſtrange that I came ſo ſud'denly to end this Seſſion, before I give 'my Aſſent to the Bills: I will tell you the 'Cauſe, though I muſt avow that I owe the 'Account of my Actions to God alone. It 'is known to every one, that a while ago, 'the Houſe of Commons gave me a Remon'ſtrance, how acceptable every Man may 'judge; and for the Merit of it, I will not 'call that in queſtion, for I am ſure no wiſe 'Man can juſtify it.

'NOW ſince I am truly informed, that a 'ſecond Remonſtrance is preparing for me 'to take away the Profit of my Tonnage 'and Poundage, one of the chief Mainte'nances of my Crown, by alledging, I have 'given away my Right thereto, by my An'ſwer to your Petition:

'THIS is ſo prejudicial unto me, that 'I am forced to end this Seſſion, ſome few 'Hours before I meant, being not willing 'to receive any more Remonſtrances, to 'which I muſt give a harſh Anſwer. And 'ſince I ſee, that even the Houſe of Com'mons begins already to make falſe Con'ſtructions of what I granted in your Peti'tion, leſt it be worſe interpreted in the 'Country, I will now make a Declaration 'concerning the true Intent thereof.

'THE Profeſſion of both Houſes in the 'time of hammering this Petition, was no 'way to trench upon my Prerogative, ſaying, 'they had neither Intention nor Power to 'hurt it. Therefore it muſt needs be con'ceived, that I have granted no new, but 'only confirmed the ancient Liberties of 'my Subjects. Yet to ſhew the Clearneſs of 'my Intentions, that I neither repent, nor 'mean to recede from any thing I have pro'mis'd you, I do here declare myſelf, that 'thoſe Things which have been done, 'whereby many have had ſome Cauſe to 'ſuſpect the Liberties of the Subjects to be 'trenched upon, which indeed was the firſt 'and true Ground of the Petition, ſhall not 'hereafter be drawn into Example for your 'Prejudice, and from time to time, in the 'Word of a King, ye ſhall not have the 'like Cauſe to complain. But as for Ton'nage and Poundage, it is a Thing I can'not want, and was never intended by you 'to ask, nor meant by me, I am ſure, to 'grant.

'TO

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. c

'To conclude, I command you all that are here to take notice of what I 'have ſpoken at this Time, to be the true 'Intent and Meaning of what I granted 'you in your Petition; but eſpecially you, 'my Lords, the Judges, for to you only, 'under me, belongs the Interpretation of 'Laws, for none of the Houſes of Parlia-'ment, either joint or ſeparate, (what new 'Doctrine ſoever may be raiſed) have any 'Power either to make or declare a Law 'without my Conſent.'

THE King's coming to the Parliament was ſo unexpected that the Lords were not in their Robes, and the Commons had given no order for the Speaker to deliver the Bill of Subſidies, which tho' paſſed by the Upper-Houſe had not yet been brought back as uſual. However the Bill was delivered to the Speaker ſtanding at the Lords Bar, who in a ſhort Speech declared it to be the greateſt Gift that ever was given to any Prince in ſo ſhort a Time. And then the Bill with the others that were ready for it, had the Royal Aſſent; after which the Lord-Keeper declared the King's Pleaſure to Prorogue the Parliament, and the ſame was accordingly prorogued to the 20th of October next.

Parliament prorogued.

Mr. Rapin's Remarks on his Majeſty's Speech.

HIS Majeſty's Speech was ſo dark, that 'tis hard to conceive what Grounds he had to complain of the Commons Remonſtrance. He ſeems at firſt to have conſidered Tonnage and Poundage as a Right annexed to his Prerogative Royal. Otherwiſe there was no need to obſerve, that both Houſes when they were preparing the Petition of Right, declared they meant not to encroach upon his Prerogative. This Argument would have been invincible, ſuppoſing ſuch a Principle, and the reſt would have been very ſuperfluous. But as the King was ſenſible he could never make appear, that the Right belong'd to him independently of the Parliament, he proceeded to other Arguments, the Weakneſs whereof is evident. He ſaid, the two Houſes did not intend to take from him Tonnage and Poundage; from whence he inferred that ſince they had no ſuch Deſign in particular, they could not with Juſtice ask him to give it up. But, Firſt, though the Petition of Right contained ſome particular Articles, theſe Articles did not exclude whatever was contained in the general Article built upon the old Statutes, That no Tax, Tallage, Loan, Benevolence, or other Charge ought to be levied by the King, without the Conſent of Parliament. Now Tonnage and Poundage being of this Nature, it neceſſarily followed that it was included in the general Article, or elſe, it muſt have been proved to belong to the Crown, independently of the common Conſent of the People. Secondly, the two Houſes had no Deſign to debar him of Tonnage and Poundage in particular, becauſe they intended to grant it by an Act; therefore he could not conclude from thence that he had a Right to levy it without their Conſent. He alledged, as another Argument, that he never meant to grant them this Article, making his Anſwer to depend upon his Intention. But his Anſwer Soit droit fait comme il eſt deſiré, manifeſtly referred to the Contents of the Petition, and not to the King's Intention in granting it. His Third Argument was taken from Tonnage and Poundage being one of the beſt Revenues of the Crown and his chief Support. This Argument was very good to demonſtrate to the Parliament the Neceſſity of granting him this Right, and to induce him to continue the Seſſion 'till the Act was paſſed: But he could not infer from thence that he had Power to go on to levy it in ſpite of the Parliament, eſpecially when he might, if he pleaſed, have it in a legal Way. Moreover he continually repeated that his Anſwer depended upon his Intention, directly contrary to the clear and plain Terms of the Act itſelf, which could have reference only to the Petition. In fine, in taking from the Houſes, either joint or ſeparate, the Power of declaring what was, or, what was not Law, he aſcribed it wholly to the Judges under him; that is to ſay, by being able to make or unmake the Judges as he pleaſed, he was properly in Poſſeſſion of this ſame Power, independently of the two Houſes. This Meaning of his appear'd but too plainly afterwards.

MR. Rapin farther obſerves, that this Seſſion was worth to the King, five Subſidies; by means whereof the Parliament purchaſed the King's Anſwer to the Petition of Right, i. e. the Confirmation of the Laws which 'till then had paſſed inconteſtable. On the other hand, the King thought he had bought the Five Subſidies at no leſs dear a Rate, by his Condeſcention to tie up his Hands, in giving his Conſent to the Petition of Right, contrary to his own Principles, and to the Projects he had formed with reſpect to Government. But he ſhewed afterwards, that in granting the Petition of Right he had done nothing but amuſed the Parliament, ſince he never regulated his Conduct by what was contained in the Petition.

Dr. Kennet's.

To theſe we ſhall ſubjoin the following Reflection by Dr. Kennet: 'Thus, ſays he, 'broke up that Parliament, wherein were 'ſome of the greateſt mutual Obligations 'between King and People, and yet unhappily no Satisfaction on either ſide. The 'King had yielded to the largeſt Petition 'of Rights and Liberties, and yet left the

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'People jealous. The People had granted 'a Supply beyond Example, and yet left 'the King uneasy. In short, the Generality went home in Discontent; some at 'the being interrupted in the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; some at the King's 'Omission of Thanks for the Bill of Subsidy; others at the Severity of the 'Speech, and many at the Prorogation itself, at a Time when they rather desired 'a Recess by joint Adjournment, that the 'Matters depending might be kept in the 'same Condition to another Meeting.'

HAVING thus finished the History of this Session of Parliament without Interruption, we are next to revisit Rochel, which we left besieged by the French King in Person, attended by Cardinal Richlieu. His Majesty, however, being weary of staying 7 Months in the Camp, went for Paris; having appointed the Cardinal Lieutenant-General of his Armies; but upon News that Succours were coming from England, the King returned to the Siege on the 24th of April.

Continuation of the Siege of Rochel.

THE Duke of Buckingham upon his Retreat from the Isle of Rhee, having, as was before observ'd, promised to send the Rochellers speedy Relief, for which, however, they were forced to make very earnest Application to the King and Council, by sending Deputies after Deputies, for nine Months together; a Fleet was accordingly fitted out of 50 English Men of War, and 40 Victuallers, under the Command of the Duke's Brother-in-Law the Earl of Denbigh, who for want of Mariners for the Service of a Descent, took in 2200 able Land-Men. He sailed from Plymouth the 17th of April, and upon the 1st of May arrived with the Fleet at Charleboy in Rochel Road, where he found 20 Sail of the French King's Ships riding before the Harbour, which upon his Arrival went in nearer to the Fortifications, and Anchored within two Cannon shot of his Fleet. There was but one Piece of Ordnance shot off from the English Fleet, for which the French, as they retired, shot off several. The Earl being much superior both in Number and Strength, sent Advice into the Town, that he would sink the French Ships as soon as the Wind came West, and made a higher Flood; it being then Neap-Tides; and in about two Days the Wind and Tide served accordingly, when the Rochellers expected and solicited for that Season of Deliverance. But the Earl without attempting the Opportunity, weighed Anchor on the 8th of May, upon which 4 of the French great Ships weighed Anchor also, pursued them at a Distance, and shot several times at the English Fleet, and the Fleet shot at them again, but without doing any thing more, pursued their Voyage and arrived at Plymouth the 26th of May.

* THIS second inglorious Expedition was even a greater Discouragement than the former to the poor Rochellers, who were extremely enraged against the Earl of Denbigh, tho' he promised they should suddenly have a more powerful Assistance. At the same time it increased the Fears and Jealousies of a Popish Interest at home. Many concluded the whole Design was but a Feint, and meant by the Court Party rather to reduce Rochel than to relieve it. Some clamour'd against the Earl of Denbigh, and said nothing better could be expected from his Conduct, who was so nearly related to the Duke of Buckingham. Others charged it as a Plot on one Clark a Bed-Chamber Man, who had been a chief Commissioner in both the Expeditions; and being a reputed Papist, was supposed to be imployed for an Instrument of Miscarriage.

BE this as it will, one Le Brun a French Man, Captain of the Mary of Rochel, which set out with the English Fleet, and returned with it as far as Bell Isle, where he parted from it on the 10th of May, gave in Depositions before the Mayor of Plymouth on the 16th, which argued either Treachery or Cowardice in the Management of this Expedition. The Account he gave being certify'd by the Mayor to the Burgesses of that Town, in Parliament, it was by them communicated to the Council-Table, from whence a Letter was directed to the Duke of Buckingham, as Lord High-Admiral, dated May 30, 1628. To signify his Majesty's Pleasure, that the Earl of Denbigh should return back to relieve the Town of Rochel, with the Fleet under his Charge; which was to be joined by other Ships making ready at Plymouth and Portsmouth. And the Rochellers having upon the Retreat of the said Fleet, sent 4 several Messengers to England, with Instructions all to the same Effect, as appears by the Memoirs of the Duke of Rohan, the King dispatch'd the following Letters to them. The first he wrote on the 19th of May, the second was sent by a Soldier, sealed with the Arms of England.

To the Mayor, Sheriffs, Peers, Burghers, and Inhabitants of the City of Rochel.

GENTLEMEN,

King's Letters to the Rochellers.

'Be not discomforted tho' my Fleet 'be returned; hold out to the last, for 'I am resolved that all my Fleet shall 'perish rather than you shall not be relieved;

* I have been the more particular, with respect to this Expedition, because Mr. Rapin says nothing of it.

'lieved; and to this end I have counter-manded it, and have ſent Ships to make them change their Deſign that they had taken to come back. I ſhall ſhortly ſend you ſome Number of Ships to reinforce it, and with the help of God, the Succeſs will be happy for your Deliverance.

Your Good Friend,

CHARLES R.

GENTLEMEN,

'I have been troubled to hear that my Fleet was upon the point of returning without anſwering my Commands, which were to force the Entry of the Proviſions, what ever came of it, and have given it new Orders to return into your Road, and not ſtir 'till it hath relieved you with Victuals, or that I have ſent them an additional Strength; for which I have cauſed Men to work with all Diligence. Be aſſured that I will never abandon you, and that I will employ all the Force of my Kingdom for your Deliverance, until it pleaſe God to bleſs me with giving you an aſſured Peace.'

Your Good Friend,

CHARLES R.

Given at our Palace at Weſtminſter, May 27, 1628.

THE Thoughts of good People upon this Caſe of Rochel, are beſt diſcovered in a Letter of Dr. John King to Biſhop Uſher, dated at Layfield, June 30, 1628, and printed in Biſhop Uſher's Letters. 'Rochel (ſays the Dr.) it is much doubted 'cannot hold out long; and then there is 'little hope of any Mercy from the King 'of France; which would be a woful 'Caſe to have ſo many poor Souls put to 'the Sword. It is thought his Majeſty 'would relieve them, if theſe Subſidies 'could come in Time: And it is to be 'wiſhed now that his Majeſty had never 'meddled with them; for in the Beginning 'they were well provided to have made 'their own Peace.'

A third Fleet preparing for the Relief of Rochel, to be commanded by the Duke of Buckingham, who is aſſaſſinated.

A third Fleet was now preparing for the Relief of Rochel, which by a cloſe Siege was reduced to the greateſt Extremity. The Duke of Buckingham choſe to command in Perſon as he had done before at Rhee, as Admiral and General of the Land-Forces; and for that end he went to Portſmouth, where, on the 23d of Auguſt, he was aſſaſſinated in the following Manner.

THE Duke of Sobize going to viſit him in the Forenoon, to preſs the Departure of the Fleet for Rochel, the Duke of Buckingham acquainted him that he had juſt received Advice of the Revictualling of Rochel, and that he was going with the News to the King. The Duke de Soubize, with other French Gentlemen then preſent, inſiſting ſtrenuouſly upon the Impoſſibility that the Intelligence could be true, and ſaying, that it was contrived by their Enemies, to abate that Zeal us'd for their Relief, diſcovered ſo much Paſſion in their Diſcourſe, that the Standers by, who underſtood not French, thought they were angry, and that they uſed the Duke rudely; who being informed that his Breakfaſt was ready, drew near the Door; but as he was liſting up the Hangings to go forth of the Room along with Sir Thomas Frier, one of his Colonels, to whom he inclined his Ear in the Poſture of Attention, John Felton, a diſbanded Officer (late Lieutenant in a Regiment of Foot under Sir John Ramſay) having placed himſelf in the Paſſage, ſtabbed him with a Back-Blow over the Shoulder, in the great Artery of his Heart, with a long Knife that he left in his Body; which the Duke immediately plucked out with his own Hands, and then fell down without ſpeaking a Word, tho' ſome ſay he cry'd the Villain hath kill'd me. Felton ſlip'd away with the loſs of his Hat, and might have gone off undiſcovered, but that either his Conſcience or Inſolence betray'd him: For while the general Rumor was, that the Murderer muſt certainly be a French Man, and ſome began to ſuſpect the Duke of Soubize as a Party in it, Felton, to excuſe the French, who were like to be maſſacred, ſtep'd out and ſaid, 'I am the Man that did the Deed: Let 'no Man ſuffer that is innocent. Upon this he was apprehended, hurry'd into a private Room, and being with much ado preſerved a live from the Fury of the People, was preſently ſent a Priſoner to London, where being examined before the Privy-Council, to know who had ſet him on, he was ſo obſtinately ſilent, that he was by Laud threatened with the Rack; upon which, according to Whitlock and Ruſhworth, Felton reply'd, I know not whom I may accuſe; perhaps Biſhop Laud, or any other, in that Torture. But the Queſtion being put by the King to the Judges, they declared it to be illegal. By a written Paper which was found ſtitch'd in the Lining of his Hat, containing ſome Lines of the Commons Remonſtrance, and ſome ſhort Ejaculations towards a Prayer, and which he ſaid he put there becauſe he expected to periſh in the Attempt: He declared 'That his only Motive was 'the ſaid Remonſtrance of the Commons 'againſt the Duke, which rendered him 'ſo odious, that he thought he could not 'ſacrifice his Life in a nobler Cauſe, than 'by delivering his Country from ſo great 'an Enemy.' Yet others believed it was rather from private Pique, and perſonal Revenge,

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Revenge, becauſe he had been twice repulſed upon his Application for a Captain's Commiſſion, and had long waited for his Arrears of Pay: And ſome ſay, he confeſſed, 'That if he had miſſed the 'Opportunity on Shore, he reſolved to 'go a Voluntier, and to do it in his Voyage; 'that he came to Portſmouth but that very Morning; and that no Soul living was 'acceſſory to the bloody Fact but himſelf.

THE King, who being diſſatisfied (as we read in the Duke of Rohan's Memoirs) with the ſlow Progreſs of the Naval Preparations, went himſelf in July towards Portſmouth to haſten them, was at this time at Sir Daniel Norton's* Seat at Southwick, within four Miles of the Town, where he received the News while he was at Divine Service in the Preſence-Chamber; and after Prayers were over he commanded that the Murderer ſhould be ſecured; and to ſhew his Affection to the Duke's Memory, he gave Orders for a magnificent Funeral, 'till Sir Richard Weſton, lately made Lord-Treaſurer in the room of the Earl of Marlborough, who was removed as a Man too cautious in advancing the King's Revenue, diverted the Project, by telling his Majeſty, Such Pomp would prove but an Hour's Shew; and it would be more for his Glory to erect him a ſtately Monument, that might be done for half the Coſt. Upon which his Body was privately interred, on the 25th of September, by his Siſter the Counteſs of Denbigh. And when the King afterwards talked of a coſtly Monument, the Treaſurer is ſaid to have uſed this other Evaſion. Sir, I am loth to tell your Majeſty what the World will ſay both here and abroad, if you ſhould raiſe a Monument for the Duke, before you erect one for your Father.

HOWEVER, though his Bowels were interred at Portſmouth, his Body being afterwards brought to York-Houſe, was from thence carried to Weſtminſter, and interred in King Edward's Chapel; where a ſtately Monument was erected over his Grace by his Executors.

Duke's Character.

DR. Kennet, from whom we have the chief Part of this Account, concludes it with this ſhort Character of him.

'THUS fell the Duke in the Age of 'Perfection, thirty-ſix; a Gentleman born, 'and built for a Courtier; of an Air and 'Port great and ſweet, with all the Nature, and all the Art of Addreſs: Of 'Parts ſufficient to cover the want of 'Learning, and of a Seriouſneſs that ſerved 'much to diſguiſe his Neglect of Religion.

THE Duke, according to Lord Clarendon, was a Man of a noble, generous Nature, well verſed in all the Arts of a Court; of a Courage not to be daunted, as all his Actions and Conteſts with particular Perſons of the higheſt Reputation ſufficiently manifeſt. As he was vehement in his Kindneſs and Affection to his Friends, ſo was he in his Rigour and Animoſity towards his Enemies: And when he was in his higheſt Paſſion, he was ſo far from attaining his Revenge by Diſſimulation (the low Method of Courts) that he never attempted to do any Man an ill Office before he firſt aſſured him what he was to expect from him. His ſingle Misfortune was, he never made choice of a noble generous Friend ſo much his Equal that he could frankly adviſe him, to his Honour and true Intereſt, againſt the Torrent of his impetuous Paſſions. Then his Aſcent was ſo quick, that it appeared rather a Flight than a Growth: So that he ſtood in need of Dependants before he thought he could want Conductors: Nor was he very lucky in the Choice of thoſe Dependants, who were only intent upon growing rich themſelves, not upon adviſing their Maſter to grow Good as well as Great: So that, ſays my Lord, through the whole Courſe of his Fortune he was a much wiſer Man than any Friend or Servant he had.

THERE were two Particulars, continues his Lordſhip, that lay heavieſt upon his Memory. The firſt, his forcing his old Maſter againſt his Will upon a War with Spain at a Time when the Crown was poor, and when the Nation was more inclined to a ſecure Enquiry how it came to be ſo, than to make any Proviſion for its Supply: And this only upon ſome perſonal Animoſities (flowing from no other Fountain than that frolick Humour to which the Prince's Court was addicted, and which ſuited ill with the Nature and Education of Spain) between him and the Spaniſh Favourite, the Duke of Olivarez; and not from thoſe pretended Amours which were afterwards fathered upon him: For though the Duke was naturally devoted to thoſe Paſſions when he met with any beautiful Object to entertain them, yet the Dutcheſs of Olivarez, of whom was the Diſcourſe, was then a Woman ſo old, of ſo mean a Preſence, in a Word, ſo crooked and deformed, that ſhe was neither fit to raiſe his Appetite, nor magnify his Revenge. The other Particular which drew upon him ſo many fatal Embaraſſments which he was never able to ſhake off, was his running violently into the War with France, and that upon a private unwarrantable Paſſion. During his Embaſſy in France, ſays the noble Hiſtorian, he had the Ambition to fix his Thoughts upon a Lady of very ſublime

* THIS Gentleman was Anceſtor of the late Richard Norton, Eſq; who left the Bulk of his great Eſtate, by his laſt Will and Teſtament, to the Diſpoſition of the Parliament of Great-Britain.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

ſublime Quality, and purſued his Addreſſes ſo far, that after the French King, who had attended his Siſter on her Way to England, had left her in the Hands of the Duke, to be by him conducted home, he preſumed once more to viſit that Great Lady, which he thought he might do with the Privacy he deſired; but this Attempt was ſo eaſily diſcovered, that had he purſued his Deſign, he would have periſhed in it; of which he had only Notice enough to ſecure himſelf from the Danger; ſwearing in the Inſtant that he was reſolved both to ſee and ſpeak with that Lady in ſpight of all the Power of France. And from the Time the Queen arrived in England his whole Buſineſs was to undervalue and exaſperate that Nation, which extended even to an Endeavour of leſſening the King's Affections towards the young Queen, who, during the Duke's Life, never had that Credit with his Majeſty in reference to publick Affairs, that might have diverted him from a War with France. My Lord Clarendon concludes upon the whole, that it cannot be denied but from thoſe two Wars ſo imprudently undertaken (and he might have added, ingloriouſly carried on) the Duke's Ruin took its Date.

A MODERN Hiſtorian, who has been remarkable for his Criticiſms on the noble Author laſt mentioned, extols this Duke's Generoſity, Eaſineſs of Acceſs, Politeneſs of Manners, Pleaſantneſs of Converſation, and Sublimity of Genius; but taxes him with being a Slave to his Paſſions, particularly the Luſt of Power and Women, and ſays, that Revenge and Cruelty were alſo laid to his Charge; and ſuch a Haughtineſs to thoſe who had diſpleaſed him, that it is reported he once told the Queen her ſelf, I would have you know there have been Queens beheaded in England.

THOSE who would know more of his Character, may conſult the Life of this Duke, and his Parallel with Robert Devereux Earl of Eſſex, both writ by Sir Henry Wotton, who ſays he was born the 20th of Auguſt, 1592, at Brookesby in Leiceſterſhire, which had been the Seat of his Anceſtors four hundred Years.

THE 27th of November following Felton was removed from the Tower to the Gate-houſe, and being that Day tried and condemned at the King's Bench Bar, was firſt hanged at Tyburn on the 19th of December, and his Body being afterwards ſent down to Portſmouth, was hanged in Chains without the Town.

Felton's Execution.

BEFORE his Execution, being made ſenſible of his horrid Crime, he manifeſted great Sorrow and Contrition for it, and upon his Trial behaved with all Humility and Repentance, offering to have the Hand that did the Fact cut off before the Execution; which the King alſo deſired; but the Judges ſaid it could not be done by Law.

Ruſhworth's Character of him.

RUSHWORTH takes notice that Felton was a little Man, but ſtout and revengeful; and that being once affronted by a Gentleman, he cut off a Piece of his little Finger, and ſent it with a Challenge to the Gentleman to fight him; thereby to let him know that he valued not the hazard of Member, Limb, or Life, ſo he might but have an Opportunity to be revenged.

Sir Henry Wotton's Account of him, and of his deſperate Enterpriſe.

SIR Henry Wotton ſays, that this Felton was a younger Brother of mean Fortune, born in the County of Suffolk, of a deep melancholy, ſilent, and gloomy Conſtitution: That he alledged, not three Hours before his Execution, that one of the Incentives which prompted him to the Murder, was a certain Libel written by one Eggleſtone, a Scots Phyſician, which made the Duke one of the fouleſt Monſters upon Earth, and unworthy of any room within the Bounds of Humanity.

IN a little by-Cutler's Shop near the Poſtern-Gate upon Tower-hill, he bought a Ten-penny Knife (ſo cheap, ſays Sir Henry, was the Inſtrument of this great Attempt) and ſewed the Sheath of it to the Lining of his right Pocket, that he might in a Moment draw out the Blade with only one Hand, becauſe he had maimed the other. This done, he made ſhift, partly, as it is ſaid, on Horſeback, and partly on Foot, to go to Portſmouth; for he was indigent, which perhaps put an Edge to his Deſpair. At Portſmouth, on the 23d of Auguſt, being Saturday, he preſſed without any Suſpicion, in a Time of ſo many Candidates for Employments, to the Paſſage where he gave the Duke his Death's-Wound the very Moment that Sir Thomas Fryer withdrew from him.

IT is certain, ſays Sir Henry Wotton, that a pretty while before, Sir Clement Throgmorton, a grave, judicious Gentleman then living, adviſed the Duke privately to wear a Shirt of Mail; which Counſel the Duke received very kindly, but made Anſwer, it would be but a weak Defence againſt popular Fury; and that as for any ſingle Man's Aſſault he took himſelf to be in no Danger. Sir Henry takes notice of one thing very ſurpriſing, which he was told by a Gentleman of very good Senſe, for whom the Duke had a Kindneſs; viz. That in a few Minutes after the Fall of the Body, and its Removal into the firſt Room, there was not a living Creature in either of the Chambers, any more than if it had lain in the Sands of Æthiopia; whereas in ſuch Caſes Crowds of People commonly reſort on a ſudden to the Place to hearken and to see: But it looked as if the very Horror of the Fact had stupified all Curiosity, and so dispersed the Multitude, that it is thought even the Murderer himself might have escaped (for who gave the Blow none could affirm) if he had not lingred about the House below; not from any confused Arrest of Conscience, as hath been seen in the like Instances, but from very Pride in what he had done, as if in Effect there were little Difference between being remembered by a virtuous Fame or an illustrious Infamy.

THUS died this great Peer in a Time of great Recourse to him, and Dependance upon him; the House and Town full of Servants and Suitors, his Dutchess in an upper Room scarce yet out of her Bed, and the Court, which had been the Stage of his Greatness, not above six Miles from him.

His Account of the Duke's Legacies, &c.

To his Wife, who was the Lady Catherine Manners, Heir general to the noble Family of Rutland, and by whom he had three Sons and a Daughter, he bequeathed all his Mansion-Houses during her Life, and a Power to dispose of all his personal Estate, together with a fourth Part of his Lands in Jointure. He left his Mother, a Countess by Patent in her own Person, which had been somewhat rare since the Days of Queen Mary. He left his elder Brother by the same Venter, a Viscount, and his younger an Earl. Sir Edward Villiers, his half Brother by the Father's side, was made a Baronet, and at his Recommendation the Queen had taken his Sister, the Countess of Denbigh, into three several Places of Honour and Trust. In short, not to insist upon every particular Branch of those private Preferments, he left all his Female Kindred, of the entire or half Blood, descending of the Name of Villiers, or Beaumont, in any near Degree, either matched with Peers of the Realm actually, or hopefully with Earls Sons and Heirs, or at least with Knights, or Doctors of Divinity, and plentiful Fortunes; though Sir Henry adds, he did not by such Alliances much strengthen his Interest at Court, but stood there on his own Feet, because most of his Kindred rather leaned upon him than supported him. In a Word, he left all his Servants, whether employed in the Affairs of his Houshold, or of the State, in good Fortune; and which is more, in good Fame: Things which seldom meet together in the Instruments of great Personages.

IT is hoped the Reader will not think we have dwelt too long on this Subject; especially when he considers the great Share of Royal Favour and Confidence which the Duke enjoyed both in this and the former Reigns; and how much he had the Direction of their most important Affairs.

CARDINAL Richlieu no sooner had the News of the Duke's Death, but he caused some Proposals to be made to the Rochellers, which they would not yet hearken to, though they were reduced to such an Extremity that a great many of them lived upon nothing but Cockles and Roots, which it was very difficult to find. Many of the Magistrates were for capitulating, but the Mayor, supported by most of the People, opposed it; while the contrary Party took a Resolution to put all the unprofitable Mouths out of the Town, thinking that the People, affected with so sad a Separation, would resolve to surrender; but the Besiegers drove them back with Musket-shot, and they were forced to lie in some Meadows below the Lines, and the City, where they lived upon Herbs; and the French King and the Cardinal were so far from pitying them, that by firing upon them, they caused the Besieged to take them in again.

CHARLES I. Anno 1628. The deplorable State of the Rochellers.

THE King by this time threatened to give them no Quarter if they did not surrender, and the Rochellers themselves offered to beg Pardon, with Ropes about their Necks, provided they might have their Privileges in relation to their Religion and Magistracy; that the Dukes of Rohan and Soubize, and the Citizens of Languedoc, might be pardoned, and that a Peace be made with England. To this the Cardinal answered, That the King would absolutely punish the two Dukes; that the Cities of Languedoc should be treated with such Mildness as they desired; and that as to England, it was not for them to prescribe to the King what he had to do, it being enough for themselves that they were not punished according to their Deserts, for having drawn France into a War on that side.

MEAN time King Charles, by whose Care and Presence near Portsmouth more Business was dispatched in fitting out the Fleet for the Relief of Rochel in ten or twelve Days, than in many Weeks before, according to the Memoirs of the Duke of Rohan, did the next Day after the Duke's Assassination, make the Earl of Lindsey Admiral, Morton Vice-Admiral, and Montjoy Rear-Admiral; and on the 8th of September the Fleet, consisting of seventy Vessels, sailed from Portsmouth, and on the 18th appeared in sight of the Isle of Rhee, being followed next Day by thirty more. The whole French Army, which was 20,000 Foot and 3000 Horse, were many Days in Arms to repulse the English, in case they should attempt to master the monstrous Boom or Dyke, which was then wholly finished, and only fifty Geometrical Paces left open for the Tide. The English for the first five Days did nothing but coast along along the Shores to look on the French Army, and fire a few Cannon. But on the 3d of October the Fleet ſtood right into the Channel; and the Van-guard, wherein was Soubize and a great Number of Rochellers, after they had made ſeveral Broadſides to gain the Wind, advanced within Cannot-ſhot of the French Fleet: The main Battle and Rear-guard did the ſame, and all the Fleet returned three times to the Charge in the ſame Order, while the Tide laſted. They endeavoured alſo ſeveral times to make uſe of their Fire-ſhips, but to no Purpoſe, as were indeed the reſt of the Attempts they made; ſo that the French ſay with a great deal of Reaſon, there was but little Sincerity in the Engliſh at this Time; eſpecially conſidering that the Lord Montagu would have a private Conference with the Cardinal about an Accommodation, contrary to the Inclinations of the Deputies of Rochel; and that King Charles only ſent theſe Succours to pacify his People, who earneſtly deſired it might be relieved. In the mean time the Cardinal cunningly cauſed the French on Board the Engliſh Fleet (who were now diſtruſtful of them) to be told that it would be a Shame and Diſadvantage to them, to ſuffer an Agreement to be made for them by a foreign Prince who conſidered not their Intereſt ſo much as his own; and that they would make their Conditions better if they implored the King's Clemency: Upon which ſome of them having obtained a ſafe Conduct, waited upon the Cardinal, who by their Means ſo wrought upon the Rochellers, that they ſent out their Deputies to treat about giving up the Place which was now reduced to very great Miſery; and having, after many Difficulties, ſigned the Articles in the utmoſt Diſtreſs and Deſpair, it was ſurrendered the 18th of October in Sight of the Engliſh Fleet, and with it, ſays Ludlow, the Security of the Proteſtants of France; who by this means were expoſed in all Parts of the Kingdom to the Rage of their bloody and cruel Enemies the Papiſts.

THE Author of the Compleat Hiſtory of Europe, from whom moſt of the foregoing Particulars are related, obſerves, that by a great Storm which happened ſoon after the Surrender of Rochel, forty Fathom of the Fences of the Dyke was thrown down, and a Ship that was by a Guſt of Wind drove againſt it, broke four or five Machines without receiving any Hurt; from whence that Author would have his Readers infer what the Engliſh might have done againſt the Dyke, if they had attempted in good Earneſt to have broke it; but great Defects were afterwards complained of to the King and Council, not only in the Ships, their Tackling, Proviſion, &c. but in Diſcipline and the Performance of Commands and Reſolutions.

THE Narrative of the dreadful Extremities to which the Rochellers were reduced before they would capitulate, would hardly gain Credit, was there not a general Concurrence of all Hiſtorians to confirm it. There died above 15,000, ſome ſay 18,000 Perſons, not by the Sword, but by Famine or Diſeaſes proceeding from little, or bad Food, and thoſe who remained alive to the Number of 3000 or 4000, were ſo pale and thin that they reſembled Skeletons, and many of them died every Day. According to a Letter wrote at that time, and ſince printed in the Cabala, Corn was riſen to 800 Franks * a Buſhel; an Ox or Cow ſold after the rate of 2000 Franks. 'The Hoſt of the Inn where I 'lay, ſays the Writer, ſold a Jade of a 'Horſe, worth it may be four or five 'Pounds, for 800 Franks, and for twenty-'five Weeks taſted no Bread. Of twelve 'Perſons in his Family only he and his 'Wife are living, who alſo had died with-'in two Days if the Town had not been 'rendered. He and his Wife made a Col-'lation the Day before the Town was 'rendered, which coſt him about ſix or 'ſeven Pounds Sterling: Their Cheer was 'a Pound of Bread made of Straw, Su-'gar, and Spices, half a Pound of 'Horſe-fleſh, three or four Ounces of 'Comfits, and a Pint of Wine, which 'they imagined was the laſt good Cheer 'they ſhould make together; and in the 'like Caſe were all the reſt of the Town, 'only two or three Families of the bet-'ter Sort excepted; by which you may 'conjecture what Rates ſuch kind of Pro-'viſion was at. There were eaten between '3000 and 4000 Cow-Hides, all the 'Dogs, Cats, Mice, and Rats they could 'get; not a Horſe left alive, which was 'Food for the better ſort; only Madam 'Rohan, after having eaten her Coach-'Horſe, and her Servants the Leather of 'her Coach, removed, though full ſore 'againſt her Will, her Lodgings from 'Rochel to the Caſtle of Nioeul, where 'ſhe is under Guard, and ſince, it is ſaid, 'to the Baſtile in Paris. God ſend her 'and hers to Heaven. They daily diſ-'cover new Miſeries in the Town, which 'when I was there were not ſpoke of: 'The Mother and the Child at the Breaſt 'both dead, the Child having eaten moſt 'part of the Mother's Breaſt. A Soldier 'was found dead with a Piece of his Fel-'low's Fleſh in his Mouth. A Burgher 'having a Servant killed, powdered her,

'which fed him and his Wife along time, and dainty Meat too. Many languiſhing and finding themſelves draw near their Ends, cauſed their Coffins to be carryed into Churches, laid them down in them, and ſo died; theſe were of the better Sort. The common Sort laid themſelves down in Coffins, in the Church Yards, and there died; others in the Streets; others not able to go out of their Houſes, died, and remained there, their Friends being not able to remove them thence. So that when the firſt Forces of the King entered, there were in the Town of Corpſes unburied, ſome in the Church-yards, others in the Streets, ſome in their Houſes, ſome on the Floor, others in their Beds, beſides them that died without the Gates under the Hedges, and in Ditches, round about the Town, which I ſaw my ſelf, when I was there, half devoured with Beaſts, and with Vermin, or with Ravens and Fowls of the Air. In fine, the like Miſery hath not been ſeen nor heard of.

'THE Mayor, with ſome of the chiefeſt of the Town are baniſhed for ever, others, for a certain time limited. There are at leaſt 8000 Houſes in Rochel, which are fain to fall to the King to diſpoſe of, for want of Heirs. The King on All-Saints Day, which was the Day of his Entry, with a Wax-Candle in his Hand, together with the Cardinal, and all the Nobility, in like manner went all over the Town in Proceſſion with the Bleſſed Sacrament.'

THE French King, mixing Mercy, ſays Ruſhworth, with his Conqueſt, was careful by Articles, had they been performed, that thoſe Outrages ſhould not be committed upon entering the Town, which the few remaining Inhabitants were much afraid of, and afterwards felt; but preſently after, high Outrages were committed, and great was the Perſecution of the Reformed Churches, which conſtrained them again to ſend to the King of England, to implore Aid, with this Expreſſion, that what they writ, was with their Tears and their Blood.

As I have not met with the Letter any where in Print, but in the Cabala, 'tis preſumed that the Generality of Readers will not be diſpleaſed to find an exact Copy of it in this Place.

The Proteſtants of France to Charles King of Great-Britain.

SIR,

French Proteſtants Letter to King Charles.

'THE Knowledge and Reſentment 'which it hath pleaſed your Majeſty to 'take of the Miſery of the afflicted Churches of France, hath given us the boldneſs 'to awaken your Compaſſion, in ſuch 'meaſure, as our Calamities are aggravated by the unmerciful Rigor of Perſecutors, and as the preſent Storm doth 'threaten near at Hand the total Ruin, and 'lamentable Deſtruction of that which the 'Mercy of God hath yet kept entire unto us, ſince the Deſolation of Rochel; and 'as we have adored with Humility the 'Judgment of God, in this bad Succeſs '(which we impute only to his Wrath 'juſtly kindled againſt us for our Sins) 'ſo our ſilence could be thought no leſs 'than Ingratitude, if we had not at the beginning of our Aſſembly, reſolved on the 'moſt humble and moſt affectionate Acknowledgment, which we now render 'to your Majeſty, for the great Succour 'which you have ſent us, intereſſing your 'ſelf ſo far in the Grief of our Oppreſſion, and in the Means of our Deliverance. 'The moſt humble Supplication, which 'we do offer to your Majeſty, next after 'this our Thankſgiving, is, that your 'Majeſty (according to the ſweet Inclination of your Goodneſs) would permit 'us ſtill to preſent our Complaints, and diſcover our Wounds, before the Eyes of 'your Royal Charity; proteſting unto your 'Majeſty, that we ſee none other Hand 'under Heaven, by which we may be 'healed, but your Majeſty's, in caſe your 'Majeſty will ſtill vouchſafe to lift it up 'on behalf of oppreſſed Innocents, and 'the Church of our Land, outragiouſly 'perſecuted by the moſt invenom'd Paſſion that our Age, or any Age precedent 'hath ſeen. We moſt humbly beſeech 'your Majeſty to read this Letter, which 'is written with our Tears and our Blood; and, according to your exquiſite 'Judgment, your incomparable Wiſdom, 'and the Devotion of your Zeal to the 'Glory of God, to conſider our Eſtate, 'which is ſuch, that our Perſecutors, upon the loſs of Rochel, ſuppoſing we had 'been put to utter Diſcomfiture, and into 'a Weakneſs, without Recovery, or Reſiſtance, and boaſting themſelves, that 'now there remained no more any Eyes 'unto us, but to bewail ourſelves, nor any 'Senſe, but to feel the Smart thereof, without farther employing our Hands, or our 'Arms, for our Defence, have made uſe 'of this Advantage, with ſo much Fierceneſs, Inſultation, and Cruelty, that they 'have not only ſacked the Houſes, and 'with an unheard of Rudeneſs and Barbariſm, rifled the Goods of our poor 'Brethren, of this Province of Languedoc, relying themſelves upon publick 'Faith, and the Benefits of the Edicts of 'Pacification (eſpecially of the laſt, which 'your Majeſty had favourably procured 'and confirmed unto us) diſſipating whole 'Families, and exiling them with perfiduous Inhumanity, but alſo, they have

CHARLES I. Anno 1628.

'laid waſte and deſtroyed almoſt all the 'Churches of the ſame, which are at 'their Command and Diſcretion, under 'the Liberty of Edicts; employing Monks '(the Pope's Emiſſaries) aſſiſted with 'Force of Soldiers, and of the tyranni-'cal Authority of Governors, to raviſh 'Mens Souls, and to draw the moſt con-'ſtant with Violence to Maſs, and to the 'Feet of the Idol, interdicting Aſſem-'blies, and all Exerciſe of true Religion 'in the ſame Places, beating, impriſon-'ing, ranſoming, aſſaſſinating the Faith-'ful, and their Paſtors, with an enraged 'Fury, which hath exceeded all the In-'humanity of the Inquiſition, prophaning 'and demoliſhing of Temples; their Vio-'lence having proceeded ſo far, as pub-'lickly to burn in Pomp and Triumph 'the ſacred Books of God's Covenant, in 'Preſence of the Governor of the Pro-'vince, with damnable Sacrilege, which 'crieth for Vengeance before God, and 'doth elevate its Voice to the Ears, Sir, 'of a moſt puiſſant Monarch, profeſſing 'the Purity of the Goſpel, zealous of 'his Glory, and capable to revenge ſo 'outragious an Injury. But your Majeſty 'ſhall underſtand, that all this hath pro-'duced an Effect much contrary to the 'Intention of our Perſecutors; for ſo far 'it is from us, that their Objects of Pity 'and Relief, whereof the very Thought 'doth make us repine, ſhould render us 'faint-hearted, and cauſe us to yield our 'ſelves in Prey to their Rage, that, on 'the contrary, ſeeing the Mask taken off, 'and the Pretext which they had alledged 'of the Army of Rebellion, whereof 'they accuſed us, quite removed; and 'that without any more Diſſimulation, 'their Deſign goes on to the ruinating of 'our Religion, and the Extirpation of 'our Church, and that there remained no 'more Hope of Safety and Liberty, but 'a general Reſolution to die in the Arms 'of our juſt and vigorous Defence, and 'that our Perſecutors poſſeſſing the Spi-'rit of our King, and hindering the Ef-'fects of his Bounty, have obtained a 'Declaration of the 15th of December 'laſt, which alluring us to implore his 'Grace and Mercy, yet leaveth us not 'any Hope of enjoying the Benefits of 'any Edict, nor by Conſequence of any 'tolerable Peace, and ſolliciting us to 'diſarm ourſelves, and to put ourſelves 'into the Condition of Sacrifices deſtined 'by one, and by one, to the Slaughter, 'to be all at one Stroak offered up to the 'Fury of Antichriſt, by one general Maſ-'ſacre throughout the whole Kingdom, 'whereof we do not only hear the Vaunts, 'but do almoſt ſee great Armies upon 'our Backs for Execution. This makes 'us, Sir, have Recourſe to your Royal 'and undoubtable Puiſſance, as to a Place 'of Refuge, which God hath yet left 'open unto us, in your ardent Charity, 'to find within your Aſſiſtance aſſured 'and effectual Means to avoid Ruin, which 'is ready inevitably to fall upon our 'Heads; and to attain thereunto, Sir, we 'have religiouſly renewed, in this Aſ-'ſembly, the Oath of Union, which binds 'us with a ſacred Bond unto the Arms of 'your Majeſty; of the violating whereof 'your Majeſty may be aſſured that we 'will never make our ſelves guilty, be-'ing encouraged to this Reſolution by the 'reiterate Confirmations which my Lord 'the Duke of Rohan hath lately given us, 'that your Majeſty continues to take to 'Heart the Aſſiſtance and Deliverance of 'our Churches according to your Royal 'Promiſes, being Debtors to his ſage and 'valorous Conduct, and to his pious Mag-'nanimity, for all that Strength and Li-'berty we yet enjoy: And we will leave 'unto Poſterity memorable Examples of 'our Conſtancy, which prefers Death be-'fore reproachful Cowardice and ſhame-'ful Servitude, hoping that of our Aſhes 'God will draw Matter for his Glory, and 'the Propagation of his Church; being 'perſwaded, Sir, that you are the inſtru-'ment of his Election, to give us Com-'fort and Deliverance from our Evils in 'Time convenient. Be you aſſured alſo 'that he will uphold us in that extraor-'dinary Valour wherewith he has inſpired 'us to endure all Extremities with a Pa-'tience invincible, expecting the Succour 'of his Hands through yours. Of all, 'Sir, which a great Monarch could ever 'do in the World, nothing can be more 'juſt than this Enterpriſe, nor more glo-'rious than this Deliverance: The Lord 'having exalted you to the moſt eminent 'Degree of Dignity and Power, to be the 'nurſing Father of his Church, ſhe hath 'Right, being thus mangled and bloody, 'to ſtretch forth her Arms unto you; 'even ſhe, that Spouſe of Jeſus Chriſt, 'the common Mother of Chriſtians, and 'your Mother alſo, by the Reſpect of her 'bruiſed Members, and of the ſearing of 'her innocent Breaſt, cover'd with Wounds, 'ſhe will move your Pity; ſhe aſſures 'herſelf, Sir, that the glorious Title which 'you bear of the Defender of the Faith, 'ſhall intercede for your accepting of her 'humble Requeſt: If you do extend un-'to us your Cares, your Affections, and 'your formidable Arms, you ſhall nou-'riſh in our Hearts Affections of Honour 'and Obedience which ſhall never die; 'you ſhall daunt all Powers that would 'raiſe themſelves againſt your Crown; 'you ſhall raiſe your Glory to ſuch a 'Height that all the Earth ſhall admire 'it, all Chriſtendom ſhall celebrate it, 'and

'and your Name ſhall be of ſweet Odour unto Angels and Men, and in perpetual Benediction unto all Poſterity of Saints, and your Reward ſhall be great and eternal in Heaven. May it pleaſe your Majeſty to pardon us, if, our Neceſſities preſſing us, we do all preſs your Majeſty by our inſtant Supplications, accompanied with a moſt humble Reſpect, to ſtrengthen ourſelves as ſoon as may be with the Honour of your Commandments, and the Declaration of your Favour, the wholſome Effects of your Aſſiſtance, according to the Sweetneſs of your Compaſſion and Charity, and we will redouble our Prayers to the Divine Clemency for the Length and Safety of your Life, and the Proſperity of your Eſtate, being ready, with a moſt holy and ardent Affection, to expoſe our Goods and Lives, to render us worthy of the Quality which we dare take of

Your moſt humble, moſt obedient, and moſt faithful Servants,

The Deputies of the Reformed Churches of France, in their General Aſſembly held at Niſmes, &c.

THE following Letter from the Duke of Rohan, which is alſo inſerted in the Cabala, requires a Place here before we paſs to another Subject.

The Duke of Rohan to his Majeſty of GREAT-BRITAIN.

SIR,

Duke of Rohan's Letter to King Charles.

'THE deplorable Accident of the Loſs of Rochel, which God hath ſuffered, to humble us under his Hand, hath redoubled in the Hearts of our Enemies their paſſionate Fierceneſs to our utter Ruin, with an aſſured Hope to attain thereunto. But it hath not taken away from the Churches of thoſe Provinces either the Heart, or the Affection, to oppoſe their unjuſt Plots by a juſt and lively Defence. This is it hath made them take Reſolution to aſſemble themſelves to conjoin, in the midſt of theſe Commotions, to aſſiſt me with their good Counſels, and, with me, to provide the Means of their Deliverance. And foraſmuch as the greateſt Support which God hath raiſed unto them upon Earth is the Succour our Churches have, and do look to receive from your Majeſty, the General Aſſembly hath deſired that my Letters, which alone hitherto have repreſented unto your Majeſty the Intereſt of the publick Cauſe, might be joined to their moſt humble Supplications put up to your Majeſty. I do it, Sir, with ſo much the more Affection, becauſe I am a Witneſs that theſe poor People, who with Sighs and Groans implore your Aſſiſtance, having once laid down their Weapons, which the Oppreſſion of their Enemies made ſo neceſſary, becauſe they knew ſuch was your Deſire to take them up again, ſo ſoon as they heard that your Majeſty did oblige them thereunto by your Counſel and Promiſes; they have, upon this only Aſſurance, continued all Dangers, ſurmounted all Oppoſitions, accounted their Eſtates as nothing, and are ſtill ready to ſpend their Blood 'till the very laſt Drop: They eſteem your Love and Favour more precious than their own Lives; and whatſoever Promiſes or Threatenings have been uſed to ſhake their conſtant Reſolution, they could never be brought to make any Breach in that they had tied themſelves to, nor ever to hear of any Treaty without your Conſent. This great Zeal for the Preſervation of all the Churches of this Kingdom which is naturally knit to the Preſervation of theſe few we have left, and that Fidelity, without Example, are worthy and glorious Subjects to exerciſe your Charity and Power. You are, Sir, Defender of that Faith whereof they make Profeſſion; ſuffer it not therefore to be ſo unjuſtly oppreſſed: You have ſtirred up their Affection in this Defence by your Royal Promiſes; and thoſe ſacred Words, That you Majeſty would employ all the Power in your Dominions, to warrant and protect all our Churches from the Ruin that threatened them, have been (after God's Favour) the only Foundation of all their Hope; ſo the Churches ſhould think no greater a Crime could be committed by them, than to doubt of your Royal Performance thereof, if their Miſeries and Calamities have at the Beginning moved your Compaſſion. This woful Subject hath encreaſed with ſuch Violence that nothing but your Succour can prevent their utter Undoing; for, at this Day, the greateſt Offence our Enemies lay to our Charge, (and proclaim, nothing can expiate but our Blood) is, to have implored your Aid, and to hope for it: For this Cauſe, our Lands and Poſſeſſions are taken away and deſtroyed, our Houſes made deſolate, and reduced to Aſhes; our Heads expoſed to Sale to Murderers; our Families baniſhed; and whereſoever the Cruelty of them that hate us can extend, Men and Women are dragged and beaten to Maſs with Baſtinados. To be ſhort, the Horror of the Perſecution we ſuffer is ſo great, that our Words are too weak to expreſs it. Moreover, we ſee great and 'mighty

'mighty Armies at our Gates, that wait 'their only fit Time to fall with Impetu-'ofity upon the Places of Retreat that re-'main; and after that, to expel and ba-'niſh the Exerciſe of Religion, and maſ-'ſacre all the faithful ones throughout 'the Kingdom. Theſe Things conſider-'ed, Sir, I beſeech your Majeſty not to 'forſake us. I ſhould fear by ſuch Words 'to offend ſo Great, ſo Potent, and ſo 'Faithful a King: But becauſe of the 'urgent Neceſſity that preſſeth us, I have 'preſumed importunately to entreat the 'haſtening of your Aſſiſtance, to keep 'us from falling under the heavy Burden 'of our Enemies Endeavours. Your 'Majeſty need not to draw, but out of the 'Source of your own profound Wiſdom, 'for the fit Means how to make your Suc-'cour dreadful and powerful to thoſe that 'contemn it, and ſalutiferous to ſo many 'People that wait and long for it. Your 'Majeſty ſhall by this Means acquire the 'greateſt Glory that can be deſired, pluck 'out from the Fire and Sword three hun-'dred thouſand Families that continually 'pray to God for your Proſperity; pre-'ſerve a People whom God hath pur-'chaſed with his moſt precious Blood, 'and which hath (even in the midſt of 'moſt imminent Dangers, and cruelleſt Tor-'ments) kept entire a ſound and upright 'Faith both towards God and Man: You 'ſhall ſettle the Fidelity of your Word, 'the Reputation of your Kingdoms and 'Arms, to a Pitch worthy of your Gran-'deur; and in repreſſing of the Audaci-'ouſneſs of thoſe that go about every 'Day to blemiſh the ſame through their 'vile and unworthy Reproaches, you ſhall 'add to your Titles that of the Reſtorer 'of a People, the moſt innocent, and moſt 'barbarouſly perſecuted that ever was. 'In that which concerns me, Sir, I will 'not make mention to your Majeſty of my 'own Intereſt, though I might do it, hav-'ing, as it ſeems, the Honour to be unto 'you what I am: But I have ſo long 'ſince conſecrated all things with myſelf 'to the publick Good, that I ſhall eſteem 'myſelf happy enough, ſo that the Church 'were not miſerably diſtreſſed; and that 'I may have this Advantage, that through 'my Actions (which your Majeſty will not 'diſavow) I may make it known, that 'I am

Your Majeſty's moſt humble, and moſt obedient Servant,

March 12, 162⅛. HENRY de ROHAN.

Tonnage and Poundage.

THOUGH the Remonſtrance concerning Tonnage and Poundage was not preſented to the King, it was however made publick, and was ſufficient to let the People ſee what was the Senſe of the Houſe of Commons upon that Point: Nevertheleſs, not only ſeveral Wine-Merchants had been committed to the Fleet ſince the laſt Seſſion of Parliament for Non-Payment of an Impoſition of 20*s.* per Ton, and obliged for their Liberty to enter into Bond for the Payment of it, but the King in full Council declared it his abſolute Will and Pleaſure that the 2*s.* 2*d.* Duty upon every Hundred Weight of Currants ſhould be advanced to 5*s.* 6*d.* alledging that it was a Duty laid by Queen Elizabeth, who firſt gave Being to the Levant Company; that it had been paid both in his Father's Time and his own, and that their Majeſties were equally poſſeſſed of the whole Sum of 5*s.* 6*d.* the Hundred by a ſolemn and legal Judgment in the Exchequer; and he ſtrictly charged his Council to examine the great Abuſe in this Point, and to make a full Reparation to his Honour, by inflicting Puniſhment both upon Officers and Merchants, that for the future they may beware of committing ſuch Contempts.

Merchants ſummoned before the Council.

ALSO diverſe Merchants of London having forcibly landed, and endeavoured to carry away their Goods and Merchandiſe from the Cuſtom-houſe Key without Payment of Duties, were ſummoned to the Council-Table, where Information was given againſt them, that they had cauſed great and unlawful Aſſemblies of People to be gathered together, to the Breach of the King's Peace; and Mr. Richard Chambers, Merchant and Alderman of London, was committed to the Marſhalſea Priſon by the Lords of the Council, on the 28th of September, by a Warrant, declaring that he was committed for inſolent Behaviour and Words ſpoke at the Council-Table; which Warrant was ſubſcribed by the Lord-Keeper and twelve others of the Council. [The Words were, as Information was given, though not expreſſed in the Return, That ſuch great Cuſtoms and Impoſitions were required from the Merchants in England, as were in no other Place, and that they were more ſcrewed up than under the Turk.] The 23d of October he was brought by Habeas Corpus to the Court of King's-Bench, and admitted to Bail, himſelf being bound in a Recognizance of 400 l. and four good Merchants, his Sureties, in 100 l. a-piece for his Appearance there in Craſtino Animarum. The Lords of the Council were much diſſatisfied with his being bailed, and the Judges were ſent for to the Lord-Keeper at Durham-Houſe, where were preſent, beſides the Lord-Keeper, the Lord-Treaſurer, the Lord-Privy-Seal, and the Chancellor of the Dutchy; and then the Lord-Keeper declared declared to them, that the ſaid Enlargement of Chambers was without due Regard had to the Privy-Council, in not firſt acquainting them therewith. To this the Judges anſwered, That to keep a fair Correſpondency with their Lordſhips, they had, by the Lord Chief-Juſtice, acquainted the Lord-Keeper in private therewith, before they bailed the Party: And that what they had done, in that reſpect, was according to Law, and Juſtice, and the Conſcience of the Judges. To this it was reply'd, that it was neceſſary for the Preſervation of the State, that the Power and Dignity of the Council-Table ſhould be preſerved, and that this could not be done without Correſpondency from the Courts of Juſtice. So they parted in very fair Terms.

Proceedings againſt Mr. Vaſſal.

THE next Merchant that ſuffered under the King's abſolute Will and Pleaſure was, Mr. Samuel Vaſſal of London, of which he was afterwards a Repreſentative in Parliament, who had a great Quantity of Currants ſeized by the Farmers and Officers of the Cuſtoms, for refuſing to pay the above-mentioned Duty of 5 s. 6 d. per hundred. Whereupon the King's Attorney-General, Mr. Robert Heath, exhibited an Information againſt him in the Exchequer, ſetting forth, that before the firſt Day of October he brought into the Port of London 4638 C. Weight of Currants, for which, he refuſed to pay Cuſtom. Mr. Vaſſal appear'd, and pleaded the Statutes of Magna Charta, and de Tallagio non concedendo, that he was a Subject, born under the King's Allegiance, and a Merchant, and that the ſaid Impoſition of 5 s. 6 d. a Hundred Weight on Currants, was not antiqua, ſeu recta conſuetudo, and that it was impoſed without Aſſent of Parliament. To which Plea the Attorney demurred, and Mr. Vaſſal joined in the Demur. But the Barons of the Exchequer refuſed afterwards to hear Mr. Vaſſal's Council, and ſaid, the King was in Poſſeſſion, and that they would keep him in Poſſeſſion; and ſhortly after the ſaid Court impriſoned Vaſſal for not paying the Duty impoſed, nor could he obtain Reſtitution of his Goods, becauſe the Court gave their Opinion upon the ſaid Information for the King.

Chambers's Goods ſeized on for not paying Cuſtoms.

ABOUT the ſame Time the Goods of Mr. Chambers, already mentioned, were ſeized by the Officers of the Cuſtoms, becauſe he refuſed to pay the Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage demanded by the Farmers. The ſaid Chambers, conceiving no ſuch Subſidy or Duty was due or payable, the ſame having not been granted by Parliament to his Majeſty, he ſued forth a Writ of Replevin, the proper Remedy in Law to recover Poſſeſſion of Goods; but the Barons of the Exchequer granted an Injunction againſt it; upon which Mr. Chambers then offered to give Security for Payment of ſuch Duties as the Court ſhould direct; but the Court would not agree to it, and inſiſted on his depoſiting all the Sums demanded by the Farmers, or Officers; which Chambers refuſing, the Court ordered the Officers of the Cuſtoms to detain double the Value of the Sums by them demanded for Duties to his Majeſty, out of his Merchandize, and to reſtore the Reſidue.

A Replevin ſued out and ſuperſeded.

Proceedings againſt Mr. Rolls, another Merchant.

THE Barons of the Exchequer proceeded in the ſame Manner, in the Caſe of Mr. John Rolls, of London Merchant, and Member of Parliament for Kellington in Cornwal. This Gentleman having his Goods ſeized by the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers for not paying the Duties demanded, applied to the Commiſſioners for Redreſs, but one of them told him, Privilege of Parliament extended only to Perſons, and not to Goods; and another ſaid, If all the Parliaments were in you, we would take your Goods.

THESE Proceedings ſo diſcouraging to Trade, were ſo inconſiſtent with the Petition of Right, that 1500 Copies of it, which were printed off by Norton, the King's Printer, together with his Majeſty's Anſwer to it, were ſuppreſſed by Warrant, and the Attorney-General commanded that no more ſhould be printed, and that thoſe that were printed, ſhould not be publiſhed.

Being now come to the End of this Year, with which the XVIIIth Tome of the Fœdera alſo concludes, I ſhall inſert the promiſed Extract of ſuch Pieces in this Tome as not only relate to the foregoing Hiſtory, but to variety of other Subjects, in which Perſons of all Ranks, and Stations of Life, are one way or other intereſted; and I have taken Pains to range them into the Order of Alphabet, in hopes that the Reader will be better pleaſed, to find every Subject treated of ſeparately under its proper Head, eſpecially when the Dates of every Piece are preſerved, than to ſee a multiplicity of Articles, which have no manner of Relation to one another, promiſcuouſly huddled together, for the ſake of preſerving the Order of Chronology. And the Reader will alſo perceive, that there was a Neceſſity of deviating from the Method obſerved in the Extracts of the former Tomes, becauſe of the very few Pieces that are in this, which could properly be incorporated in the Series of the Hiſtory.

Amboyna.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. CHARLES I.

Amboyna.

P. 1. A Draught of Inſtructions about Amboyna and the Palatinate.

77. It has no Date, but may be ſuppoſed to have been drawn up by the Duke of Bucks, then Lord High-Admiral, for ſome Miniſter who had a Commiſſion to treat with the Prince of Orange about thoſe Affairs.

THE Penman of theſe Inſtructions complains with how much Patience he has born the Envy of the Eaſt-India Company, and many more of the Engliſh Nation, by ſuſpending the Execution of Repriſal upon the Dutch Eaſt-India Company's Ships ſo long as he durſt; the Horror of that Fact in Amboyna having been too often mentioned to remain ſtill without a good Satisfaction to his Majeſty and his Subjects, and all Parties on this ſide remaining wholly unſatisfied with the Referments and Delays of the Anſwers and Propoſitions made by the Republick. The Miniſter in Holland was therefore inſtructed to preſs the Prince of Orange to move the States to give his Majeſty real and ſpeedy Satisfaction in all the Circumſtances of the Fact of Amboyna, to prevent the evil Conſequences of Attempts upon the Dutch Eaſt-India Company's Ships, which can be no longer forborn, and may be the Beginning of ſuch Evils as none can ſee the worſt of 'till they are acted, nor any Man better foreſee than the Prince of Orange.

Army.

1. A Proclamation for calling home all ſuch of his Majeſty's Subjects as are employed either by Sea or Land in the Service of the Emperor, the King of Spain, or the Archdutcheſs of the Low-Countries, and requiring them, on their Return, to regiſter their Names with one of the Secretaries of State.

20. IT is dated in April, 1625.

RUSHWORTH obſerves, that very many of the natural Subjects of theſe Dominions having, by publick Permiſſion, in the late Reign, betaken themſelves to the Service of the Emperor, the King of Spain, and the Archdutcheſs of the Low-Countries, and that conſequently they fought againſt others of their Countrymen who were employed by the States of the United Provinces, and on the Behalf of the exiled Palatine, King Charles foreſeeing how improper and unnatural it was, that his own natural Subjects ſhould, upon any Occaſion or Accident, draw their Swords one againſt another, or any of them againſt their own Sovereign, did, by Advice of his Privy Council, ſtrictly command all his Subjects who were under Pay of the Emperor, the King of Spain, or the Archdutcheſs, ſpeedily to return to their native Countries, where they ſhould be received and employed as Occaſion ſerved, according to their ſeveral Qualities.

2. A PROCLAMATION for the Reſtraint of Diſorders in Soldiers preſſed for his Majeſty's Service. Dated May 15, at Whitehall. 76.

THE Remembrance of the late Outrages committed by the Army ſent by King James to Calais, under Count Mansfield, in their Paſſage to Dover, occaſioned this Proclamation, to prevent the like Attempts of the Soldiers in their Paſſage through any of the Countries to Plymouth, or other Places of Rendezvous. The Offenders, in which Number were alſo included ſuch as ſtraggled from their Colours, were by the Conſtable to be committed to the County Goal, and to be proſecuted with the utmoſt Severity. The Officers who were to have the Charge of conducting them were enjoined to ſee their Companies duly paid, and provided of all Neceſſaries, and to be always preſent with them, and carefully to conduct them from Place to Place. And to prevent Outrages, when the Army was come to Plymouth, or Parts adjacent, it appears from Ruſhworth, that a Commiſſion was iſſued, impowering Perſons of Truſt, upon any Robbery, Felony, Mutiny, or other Miſdemeanors (puniſhable with Death by Martial Law) committed by the Soldiers, or other diſſolute Perſons joined with them, to proceed to the Trial and Condemnation of all ſuch Delinquents, in ſuch a ſummary Courſe as is uſed in Armies in time of War, according to the Martial Law; and to cauſe Execution to be done in the View of the Publick, for a Terror to others.

3. ANOTHER commanding the Officers and Soldiers belonging to the Forces in Ireland, and the Low-Countries, to return to their Poſts. It is dated at Litchfield the 4th of September. 183.

4. A COMMISSION of Array granted to the Earls of Suſſex and Warwick for raiſing and arming the Militia, &c. of the County of Eſſex againſt a threatened Invaſion. It is dated September the 8th, at Southampton. 185.

IT was rumoured as if the Spaniard intended an Invaſion at the Time that the Engliſh Fleet was preparing for the Voyage to Cadiz. Therefore the Earl of Warwick was commanded with three thouſand of the Trained Bands of Eſſex to ſecure the Port of Harwich and Langer-Point; which Service he performed with much Readineſs. But upon the Blocking up of Dunkirk with Ships belonging to the Engliſh and to the States of the United Provinces, his Lordſhip was ordered to diſmiſs his Men.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

254. 5. A COMMISSION to Edward Viſcount Wimbleton, Lord Marſhal of the Army, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of the Counties of Devon and Cornwal, for reſtraining and puniſhing, according to the Juſtice of Martial Law, any Diſorders committed by the Soldiers that were billeted in thoſe Counties, after the Return of the Fleet from Spain to Plymouth. It is dated December the 28th, at Hampton-Court.

262. 6. ANOTHER of the like Nature to the Deputy Lieutenant, and to the Mayor of the Town and County of Southampton, in regard to ſuch of the Forces that were returned with the Fleet, and billeted in thoſe Parts. It is dated at Weſtminſter, January the 3d, 1626.

751. 7. ANOTHER of the ſame Nature to the Lieutenancy of Suſſex, to puniſh by Martial Law any Diſorders that may be committed in that County by the Soldiers and Mariners going on Board the Fleet that was then fitting out at Portſmouth to put to Sea under the Command of Lord Willoughby. It is dated at Canbury, September the 5th.

763. 8. ANOTHER of the ſame Purpoſe to the Lieutenancy of Kent. Dated October the 4th.

765. 9. A PROCLAMATION, dated October the 7th at Whitehall, againſt the diſorderly Repair of Mariners and Soldiers from the ſeveral Parts of the Realm where they were billeted and quartered, to the King's Court, or to the City of London.

776. 10. A COMMISSION to Sir John Burlacye and Sir James Levingſton, to command two Regiments going to Germany for the King of Denmark's Service, againſt the King of Spain. It is dated at Weſtminſter, October the 23d, 1626.

THESE Forces were to ſecure the Paſſage of the River Elbe, for preventing the Tranſportation of Proviſions for the Service of the Spaniards.

779. 11. ANOTHER Commiſſion, dated November the 3d, and directed to the Perſons above-mentioned, and to Sir Charles Morgan and Sir Edward Horwood, Kts. to go with 6000 Men to the Aſſiſtance of the ſaid King of Denmark againſt the ſaid King of Spain.

THESE Forces had been employed in the Service of the Dutch againſt Spinola, but upon the preſent Occaſion they were called off for the Aſſiſtance of the King of Denmark againſt the Spaniards.

12. ANOTHER directed to Robert Lord Willoughby of Eresby, Robert Earl of Eſſex, Sir John Burlacye, and Sir James Levingſton, Kts. to conduct ſeveral Regiments to the Place or Places where the King of Denmark is, or ſhall be. Dated November the 7th. CHARLES I. 789.

13. ANOTHER Commiſſion to the ſame Purpoſe, directed to the Perſons above-mentioned. Dated at Weſtminſter, November the 25th. 799.

14. A COMMISSION to the Lieutenancy of Southampton, to proceed by Martial Law againſt the Mariners and Soldiers that ſhall commit Felonies, Robberies, Mutinies, or other Outrages, or that ſhall be abſent from their Poſts. It is dated at Weſtminſter, December the 3d. 804.

THIS was looked upon as an Innovation which took from the uſual Judges the Cognizance of Crimes committed by the Soldiery; and though, as Mr. Rapin ſays, it was not much minded in general, yet according to Whitlock this Affair and the Point of Coat and Conduct-Money occaſioned great and frequent Debates among the Judges and other learned Men. [You will find other Commiſſions granted for Martial Law under the Article of Rochel.]

15. A PROCLAMATION, dated at Whitehall the 29th of January, 1627, requiring all Captains and other Officers to repair to their Companies, and all Soldiers to their Colours. 830.

16. A COMMISSION to proceed by Martial Law againſt the Mariners and Soldiers belonging to the Fleet, for any Outrages by them committed in the County of Kent. Dated April the 30th, at Weſtminſter. 888.

17. A PROCLAMATION by the King at Whitehall, November the 20th, forbidding the Uſe of Snaffles in Riding, and enjoining that of Bits, as the fitteſt for managing Horſes employed in the Service. 948.

18. ANOTHER enjoining all Officers to repair to their Poſts, and Soldiers to their Colours. Dated November the 30th. 951.

This was iſſued upon the Return of the Army and Fleet from the Iſle of Rhee, to the Intent that the Soldiers might be exerciſed and kept in good Order for future Service.

19. ANOTHER to the ſame Purpoſe, iſſued January the 25th, 1628. 960.

20. A PROCLAMATION againſt the buying and ſelling of the King's Arms and Ammunition, by preventing the purloining and exchanging of Arms delivered out of the King's Stores for Land or Sea Service, and for remedying the Abuſes committed at the publick Muſters and Exerciſes in the ſeveral Counties. Dated at Whitehall, March the 9th. 978.

Books.

8. 1. A PROCLAMATION to prohibit the Sale of Latin Books reprinted beyond Sea, after having been firſt printed in Oxford or Cambridge. Dated at St. James's, April the 1ſt, 1625.

THE Printers of both Univerſities were hereby enjoined to deliver a Monthly Certificate of what Books they printed from Time to Time, to the Maſter and Wardens of the Stationers Company in London: Which Certificate was to be ſigned by the reſpective Vice-Chancellors.

676. 2. A GRANT to George Sandys, Eſq; for the ſole printing and ſelling of fifteen Books of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, by him tranſlated into Engliſh Verſe. Dated at Weſtminſter, April the 24th, 1626.

1024. 3. A PROCLAMATION for calling in and ſuppreſſing of two Sermons preached and printed by Roger Manwaring, D. D. entituled, Religion and Allegiance. Dated at Whitehall, June 24, 1628.

THE Reader will find a particular Account of theſe Sermons, and the Motive on which they were preached, under the Article of Loans. All that I ſhall take notice of here is a ſmall Miſtake of Mr. Rapin in his general Hiſtory, who ſays, this Suppreſſion conſiſted only in an Order to ſuch as had any Copies of thoſe Sermons to carry them to the Secretary of State, or ſome other Magiſtrate; whereas it expreſly commanded them to be delivered to the Biſhop or other Ordinary of the Dioceſe, or to the Vice-Chancellor of the Univerſity in whatſoever Dioceſe or Univerſity thoſe Books ſhould be found; thoſe Biſhops or other Ordinaries, and ſuch Vice-Chancellor were thereby eſpecially commanded to cauſe them all to be ſuppreſſed; and moreover, all Perſons were forbid to preſume to print the ſaid Sermons, or either of them, on Pain of the King's high Diſpleaſure.

IN the Preamble to this Proclamation the King declared, That although the Grounds of thoſe Sermons were rightly laid to perſwade Obedience from the Subjects to their Sovereign, and that for Conſcience ſake, yet in diverſe Paſſages, Inferences and Applications thereof intrenching upon the Laws of this Land, and Proceedings of Parliaments, whereof he was ignorant, he ſo far erred, that he had drawn upon himſelf the juſt Cenſure and Sentence of the High Court of Parliament, by whoſe Judgment alſo that Book ſtands condemned. Wherefore being deſirous to take away all Occaſions of Scandal or Offence, he hath thought fit that thoſe Sermons (in reſpect of thoſe Inferences and Applications which he hath made thereon) be fully ſuppreſſed, &c.

Church.

1. A PROCLAMATION for eſtabliſhing the Peace and Quiet of the Church of England. Dated June the 16th, 1626, at Whitehall. 719.

IT complains of certain new Opinions broached and propagated againſt the orthodox Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church, and declares his Majeſty's Reſolution to puniſh the Inſolence of ſuch diſaffected Perſons as ſhall preſume to diſturb the Tranquillity of the State, or the Peace of the Church.

DR. Kennet obſerves, that this Proclamation was ſuppoſed by ſome Perſons to be iſſued with a View to reſtrain or ſuppreſs the Book we mentioned in p. 558, publiſhed by Mr. Montagu in favour of Arminianiſm; but Laud was ſo great a Friend both to the Doctor and his Doctrine, that it may well be preſumed that the true Intent of it was to diſcourage and ſuppreſs the Anſwers that were made to it by Dr. Featly, Dr. Goad, &c. and therefore did but ſerve to improve the Jealouſies of Arminianiſm, and of the Growth of Popery.

FOR the better explaining of this Matter, it is neceſſary to enter a little further into the Hiſtory of it than has been done by the Writers of any Lives or Reigns hitherto; eſpecially ſince the Spirit of the preſent Times makes the Doctrine of Libels a uſeful and neceſſary Acquirement.

THIS Mr. Montagu, in the 21ſt of King James, publiſhed a Book called, A new Gag for an old Gooſe, in Anſwer to a Popiſh Tract entituled, A Gag for the new Goſpel. It being ſuggeſted that he had therein receded from ſome Doctrines of the Reformed Churches, and had too much ſoftened ſome of the Roman Tenets, he was then queſtioned in Parliament, and the Cauſe was referred to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who expreſſed his Diſlike of the Book, and gave the Author a ſolemn Reprimand, which made that Prelate ſuſpected by the Court to be a Friend to the Puritans. Some other Biſhops of the Arminian Party encouraged Mr. Montagu, in the Beginning of this Reign, to re-aſſert thoſe Opinions in another Treatiſe, which by their Perſwaſion he publiſhed and dedicated to his Majeſty (who had but juſt made him his Chaplain) with the Title of An Appeal to Cæſar. The Archbiſhop diſallowed this Book alſo, and endeavoured to ſuppreſs it. And by Order of the Commons, on the 7th of July, 1625, Mr. Montagu was brought to the Bar of the Houſe, in Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, and charged with having contrived and publiſhed the ſaid Book, with a Deſign to create a Jealouſy between the King and his well-affected Subjects. The Houſe likewiſe appointed a Committee to examine the Errors of it, and gave the Archbiſhop thanks for the Admonition he had given the Author, whoſe Books they voted to be contrary to the Articles eſtabliſhed by Parliament, tending to the Diſhonour of the King, and Diſturbance of both Church and State, and took Bond for his Appearance next Seſſion, under the Penalty of 2000 l.

BUT on the 9th of July, the King himſelf interpoſed, and ſignify'd to the Commons, that what had been ſpoken in their Houſe, and determined againſt Mr. Montagu was diſpleaſing to him; that he would take the Cauſe into his own Hands, and that he hoped one of his Chaplains might have as much Protection as the Servant of an ordinary Burgeſs. This was looked upon as an arbitrary Obſtruction of Juſtice, and would but have incenſed the Houſe to have proceeded more ſeverely, if the Parliament had not been prorogued, the very next Day they ſate, to Oxford, on account of the Plague, and ſoon after abruptly diſſolved.

THERE is a Letter in the Cabala, dated the 29th of the ſame Month, at Petworth, from Dr. Montagu to the Duke, wherein he ſays, 'That tho' he heard his Majeſty had 'taken him off from that Trouble and 'Vexation which by ſome Men's Pro'curement he was put to in the Houſe of 'Commons, yet he is threatened with 'farther Proſecution; and he therefore 'prays him, to intercede with his Majeſ'ty, that his Bond might be delivered up 'to him, and that he might be protected 'from thoſe who had no Power over his 'Perſon, as being his Majeſty's Servant 'in Ordinary, nor over his Book, as being 'wrote by the Command of his Royal 'Father, and authorized by his preſent 'Majeſty himſelf; and he concluded 'with this Declaration, that if he could 'not really and throughly anſwer what'ſoever was, or could be imputed to 'him, in any of his Books, he would 'no farther deſire any Favour or Protecti'on, but be willingly left to his Ene'mies.'

MEAN time the Biſhops of Rocheſter, Oxford, and St. David's, contrived a Letter, in his behalf, to the Duke of Buckingham, which is dated in the Cabala, on the 2d of Auguſt, 1625. They therein recommend his Cauſe, as the Cauſe of the Church of England; they ſhew that ſome of the Opinions which gave Offence, were the reſolved Doctrine of that Church, and others, curious Points to be diſputed in the Schools, it being the great Fault of the Council of Trent, to require a Subſcription to School Opinions, and the approved Moderation of the Church of England, to refuſe the apparent Dangers and Errors of the Church of Rome, but not to be over buſie with Scholaſtical Niceties. Moreover, in the preſent Caſe, they alledge, that in the Time of Henry VIII, when the Clergy ſubmitted to the King's Supremacy, the Caſe was ſo, that if any Difference aroſe in the Church, the King and the Biſhops were to be Judges of it, in a National Synod, and that if any other Judge, in Matters of Doctrine, were now to be allowed, we depart from the Ordinance of Chriſt, and the continual Practice of the Church. They intimated withal, that if the Church be once brought down below herſelf, even Majeſty, itſelf, will ſoon be impeached. They ſay farther, that King James, in his rare Wiſdom and Judgment, approved of all the Opinions in this Book, and that they cannot conceive what uſe there can be of Civil Government in the Common-wealth, or of external Miniſtry in the Church, if ſome fatal Opinions, which are oppoſite to thoſe delivered by Mr. Montagu, be publickly taught and maintained.

CHARLES I.

SUCH was the Opinion of thoſe three Biſhops; but others of eminent Learning were of a different Judgment. And ſo great was the Prejudice, and ſo popular the Cry againſt the Arminians, that many Divines being engaged in confuting the Principles of Mr. Montagu's Book, their Writings ſerved to heighten the Jealouſies of the wiſer, and to confirm the Prejudices of the weaker Part of Mankind. This was ſoon improved into ſuch an univerſal Diſlike of the dreadful Name of Arminianiſm, that even the King and the Duke began to think it not ſafe to ſupport a Cauſe that was generally run down by the People. For this Reaſon, immediately before the meeting of the next Parliament, Biſhop Laud, who was afraid that the Court would deſert Montagu, got the Duke to ſift the King upon that Head; and underſtanding by what the Duke had collected, that the King had determined to leave him to a Trial in Parliament, he entered theſe Words thereupon in his Diary: Methinks I ſee a Cloud ariſing and threatening the Church of England; God in his Mercy diſſipate it.

As

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

As ſoon as the Parliament began, viz. Feb. 6, 162⅞, the Commons had an Eye upon Montagu, for whom the Duke ſeemed inclinable to drop his Concern, the better to reconcile himſelf to ſome of the leading Members; and when the Houſe fell upon the Subject of Grievances, thinking their Liberty and Property to depend much on the eſtabliſhed Faith and Worſhip, they appointed a Committee to conſider of the State of Religion and the Growth of Popery. To which Committee they referred the Examination of Mr. Montagu's Appeal to Cæſar; who on the 18th of April made their Report of the ſeveral erroneous Opinions it contained, by Mr. Pym; upon which the Houſe voted that Mr. Montagu had endeavoured to reconcile England to Rome, and to alienate the King's Affections from his well affected Subjects. Articles were alſo exhibited by the Commons againſt him, declaring, 'that there are diverſe 'Paſſages in the Appeal, &c. full of 'Bitterneſs, Railing, and injurious Speeches, diſgraceful and contemptible to many 'worthy Divines of this Kingdom, and 'other reformed Churches beyond the 'Seas; impious and prophane in ſcoffing 'at Preaching, Meditating, and Conferring, Pulpits, Bibles, and all Shew of Religion, all in Aggravation of his former 'Offences, having proceeded from malicious and enormous Heat againſt the 'Peace of the Church, and the Sincerity 'of the reformed Religion publickly profeſſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed in 'this Kingdom. All which Offences being to the Diſhonour of God, and of 'moſt miſchievous Effect and Conſequence 'againſt the Church and Commonwealth 'of England, and other of his Majeſty's 'Realms and Dominions, the Commons aſſembled in Parliament do hereby pray 'that the ſaid Richard Montagu may be puniſhed according to his Demerits in 'ſuch exemplary manner as may deter 'others from attempting ſo preſumptuouſly the Peace of the Church and State, 'and that the Books aforeſaid may be 'ſuppreſſed and burnt.'

Mr. Montagu's Impeachment.

THIS may ſuffice to give an Idea of the Commons Sentiments of Montagu's Writings, without troubling the Reader with all the Articles; which ſeemed the more unneceſſary, becauſe it does not appear whether they were preſented to the King, or preferred in any judicial manner, or that Mr. Montagu gave in any Anſwer, or made any publick Vindication; nor that the King took any Notice of this Complaint, or ſuffered it to be debated in Convocation, but thought it a Diſpute fitter to be ſilenced than determined, and therefore iſſued out the Proclamation above mentioned.

CHARLES I.

THIS however raiſed the Curioſity of many Peers to know what Montagu's Tenets were, and in what they differed from the Calviniſtical Opinions, which were commonly called the Doctrine of the Church, and were then the generally received Senſe of its Articles. To this Purpoſe two Conferences were by Procurement of the Earl of Warwick held at the Duke of Buckingham's Houſe, in Preſence of his Grace and many of the Nobility, on the 11th and 17th of February, 162⅞, between Dr. Buckeridge, Biſhop of Rocheſter, Dr. White, Dean of Carliſle, and Mr. Montagu on the Arminian Side, and Dr. Moreton, Biſhop of Litchfield, and Dr. Preſton, Preacher of Lincoln's-Inn on the other Side; the Succeſs of which Conferences was differently reported according to the different Affection of the Hearers.

To the ſcreening of the Duke of Buckingham and this Montagu was charged the firſt Breach between the King and the Houſe of Commons, who were as backward in giving Subſidies as the King was in redreſſing Grievances; and it is very obvious that the Prieſt was guilty of a twofold Crime: 1. Of Contempt and Diſobedience both to the Church of England and the Houſe of Commons, by preſuming to re-print the Book after he had been admoniſhed againſt it by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Defiance to the Metropolitan of England, contrary to his Canonical Obedience, and to the Commons: And, 2. Of Audacioufneſs in dedicating it to the King, thereby to engage his Majeſty in Defence of his Arrogance and Diſobedience. Mr. Montagu however lived not only to obtain his Pardon, but two Mitres; being firſt made Biſhop of Chicheſter, and then of Norwich; his firſt Conſecration being performed at Croydon, by Biſhop Laud, and other Biſhops, on the 24th of Auguſt, 1628, at the Time that News came thither of the Duke of Buckingham's being ſtabb'd by Felton.

Remarks on his Conduct.

IT is obſervable, that the Doctor had a Proclamation to cenſure him immediately after the Letters Patent to promote him; for the King thought fit to call in his Appeal to Cæſar, and to declare, 'that as he had lately cauſed the Articles 'of Religion to be re-printed, as a Rule 'for avoiding Diverſities of Opinions, 'and conſidering that a Book written by 'Richard Montagu, now Biſhop of Chicheſter, entituled, Appello Cæſarem, 'was the firſt Cauſe of thoſe Diſputes and 'Differences which ſince have much troubled the Quiet of the Church, he would 'take away this Occaſion, by commanding all Perſons that had any of thoſe 'Books in their Hands, to deliver them 'to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or if it be

Order for ſuppreſſing his Book.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'in either of the Universities, to the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor thereof, who were commanded to suppress them.

Remarks on it.

IT is left to the Reader how to reconcile this kind of Policy, the preferring of a Writer, and then suppressing the very Book for which the World thought he was preferred. But Rushworth says, that before the Proclamation came out, the Books were for the most part sold, and out of Danger of Seizure, and that the Thing supposed to be intended by it, was to suppress all Writing and Preaching in Answer to them, because the several Answers made by Dr. Featly and Dr. Goad, in their Parallels, and by other Writers, were all in like manner suppressed, and some of the Printers questioned in the High Commission Court.

Colonies.

1. A PROCLAMATION for settling the Plantation of Virginia. Dated the 13th of May, 1625, at Whitehall.

72. IT declares Virginia, the Summer Islands, and New England to be a Part of the Royal Empire, and that Virginia shall be immediately dependent on the King, without being subject to any Company or Corporation, and that the Affairs of that Colony shall be vested in a Council consisting of a few Persons of Understanding and Quality to be subordinate and attendant to the Privy-Council in England. That the King was resolved to establish another Council to be resident in Virginia, to be subordinate to the Council here for that Colony; and that he would maintain the necessary Officers, Ministers, Forces, Ammunition, and Fortifications thereof, at his own Charge.

THE Author of the British Empire in America, Vol. I, p. 238, observes, 'that 'the English on the Borders having been 'twice massacred by the Indians since 'the Beginning of the Year 1622, this, 'together with other Calamities and Di'stractions, was owing to the Differences 'raised by one Captain Martin, who had 'been nominated to be of the Council, 'and to the Mismanagement of the Pro'prietors, who thereby sustained great 'Losses; which so discouraged most of their 'best Members, that they sold their Shares: 'Whereupon King Charles dissolved the 'Company, as by the above Proclamati'on, took the Colony into his own im'mediate Direction, appointed the Gover'nour and Council himself, ordered all 'Patents and Processes to issue in his own 'Name, restored a Quit-Rent of 2*s.* for 'every Hundred Acres, directed the fu'ture Form of its Constitution to be by a 'Governour, a Council of twelve Gentle'men, and an Assembly of RepresenCHARLES I.

'tives deputed by the several Towns and 'Counties in the Colony, granted large 'Tracts of Land to Gentlemen and others 'in England, and to some of them ad'ded Authority independent of the Go'vernment, giving each Gentleman the 'same Power in his Province as the Pro'prietors of Virginia had formerly.

2. A PATENT appointing the Governour 311. and Council of Virginia. Dated at Westminster, March the 4th, 1626.

3. ANOTHER of the same kind. Dated 980. March the 26th, 1628.

Commerce.

1. A PROCLAMATION to forbid the Sub- 251. jects of England to have any Trade or Commerce in any of the Dominions of the King of Spain, or the Archdutchess. It is dated December the 24th, 1625, at Hampton-Court. The Penalty was Confiscation of Ship and Goods.

MOREOVER, in regard of the Subjects apparent Danger, and the Encouragement of the Enemies of this State, by putting Ships to Sea weakly mann'd, and ill furnish'd, the King ordered that no Ship or Pinnace of 60 Tons or upward, should be set forth, unless the same were furnished with serviceable Muskets and Bandaliers sufficient for arming half the Sailors, together with a Quantity of Ammunition answerable to the Length of their intended Voyage.

2. ANOTHER, declaring that all Ships 259. carrying Corn, or other Provisions or Ammunition to or for the King of Spain or his Subjects, shall be deemed lawful Prize. It is dated at Hampton-Court, December the 31st.

3. A COMMISSION to search for, dis- 801. cover, and arrest all the Ships and Effects belonging to the Subjects of France, and to put them into safe Custody. It is dated the 27th of November, 1626, at Westminster.

IT takes notice that the Ships and Effects of the English had been seized in several Ports of France, on Pretence that three Ships belonging to certain Merchants of Roan, were lately taken and brought to England, and on Pretence of some Goods taken many Years ago, amounting to the Value of 25,000 l.

4. ANOTHER for disposing of the Ships 825. and Goods so taken. Dated at Westminster, January the 27th, 1627.

5. A SPECIAL Licence to the East-India 843. Company to export, Custom free, 30,000 l. worth of foreign Gold Coin or Bullion, in their next Voyage to the East-Indies, in lieu of so much foreign Silver allowed them for Transportation by former Letters Patent. It is dated February the 13th

THE

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

THE Company was allowed by thoſe Letters Patent to export any Sum of ſuch Silver yearly, not exceeding 100,000 l. but it appears from this Commiſſion, that by reaſon of the Prohibition of Trade with Spain, the Company could not ſupply themſelves with the uſual Quantity of foreign Silver or Bullion.

853. 6. A COMMISSION confirming the Company's Choice of Perſons to be Captains and Commanders in chief of certain Ships and their Crews that were then fitting out for the Eaſt-Indies. Dated February 27.

856. 7. ANOTHER Proclamation to prevent the furniſhing of the Spaniard with Naval Stores, or any Military Ammunitions and Proviſions. It is dated March the 4th, at Newmarket.

862. 8. A COMMISSION to Sir Peter Wyche, Ambaſſador to Turky, to confirm the Friendſhip, and to ſettle all Matters relating to Commerce in the Turkiſh Dominions. Dated at Weſtminſter, March the 20th, and ſigned by the King's own Hand.

891. 9. A PROCLAMATION explaining another of April the 28th, entituled, A Proclamation prohibiting the Importation of any Goods and Merchandize whatſoever in French Bottoms. This is dated the 12th of May, 1627, at Whitehall.

965. 10. ANOTHER in favour of the Eaſt-India Company, for Encouragement and Advancement of their Trade, and for preventing a ſecret, under-hand Traffick by their Officers and Servants. Dated February the 15th, 1628.

972. 11. A SPECIAL Commiſſion to certain Aldermen and Merchants of London, &c. after the Peace concluded with the Algerines, to enquire into the Diſtribution of the Monies levied by vertue of a former Agreement of the Merchants, both Engliſh and Foreigners, towards defraying the Expences of an Armament, and Expedition againſt the Pirates. It is dated the 25th of the ſame Month, at Weſtminſter.

THE Allowance which the Merchants conſented to for that Service was, One per Cent. upon all Goods traded to the Levant, Spain, Barbary, and the Iſlands, and one Half per Cent. of all Goods traded for Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, and the Eaſt-land Countries, as well by Importation as Exportation; and likewiſe upon Tonnage of Shipping of the ſaid Merchants trading to or from any of the Parts aforeſaid.

1013. 12. Another to the ſame Effect. Dated March the 31ſt.

Councils.

25. 1. A COMMISSION conſtituting the Duke of Bucks, &c. a Council of War for the Security of Ireland and the reſt of the King's Dominions, the equipping of the Royal Navy, the aſſiſting the Confederates, &c. It is dated at Weſtminſter, April the 14th, 1625.

CHARLES I. 246.

2. ANOTHER directed to the Lord-Keeper, &c. conſtituting them Commiſſioners for calling Perſons to Account who divulged Secrets of State. It is dated December the 16th, at Windſor.

976. 3. A COMMISSION appointing James Earl of Marlborough Lord High Treaſurer, and others therein named, to be a Council of War for examining all things, upon all Occaſions, tending to the Advancement of the King's Service in Martial Affairs. Dated March the 6th, 1628, at Weſtminſter.

Coynage.

6. 1. A SPECIAL Commiſſion, dated the 1ſt of April, 1625, at Weſtminſter, and directed to Sir Edward Villiers, who was joint Warden of the Mint with Sir William Parkhurſt, concerning the Coinage of Gold and Silver.

THIS Commiſſion was iſſued during the Suſpenſion of Sir Randil Cranfield, who upon ſundry Complaints made againſt him to the Privy-Council in the Reign of King James, was ſequeſtered from the Profits of the Place of Maſter of the Mint, on the 13th of January preceding.

THERE was one Sir Edward Villiers, who was the Duke of Buckingham's half Brother, and it is not improbable that this was the Gentleman, if we may conclude that the Duke took care to prefer his Relations as well as his Creatures to the chief Places.

108. 2. A PROCLAMATION for the continuing of Farthing Tokens of Copper, and prohibiting them to be counterfeited, or any others to be uſed. Dated at Whitehall, June the 4th.

THE Patent for this Coinage was granted to Frances, Dutcheſs Dowager of Lenox, and to Sir Francis Crane.

143. THE Patentees, by a Grant of the 11th of July following, were to have the ſole Power and Profit of this Coinage ſeventeen Years, on paying 100 Marks per Annum to the King.

THEY contracted to deliver the Rate of 21 s. in Farthings for every 20 s. Sterling, and to deliver 20 s. Sterling for every 21 s. worth of Farthings, to ſuch as were overcharged with them.

THESE Farthings were to weigh 6 Grains a-piece, or more, and to have on one Side two Scepters croſſing under a Diadem, and on the Reverſe a Harp crowned with the Title, Carolus Dei Gratiâ Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex.

184. 3. A PROCLAMATION for the Currency of the French Silver Coin, called Cardecue, at the Value it went for in France, which was 19 d. ſt. It is dated at Litchfield, Sept. 4.

IT ſets forth that the King had received great Sums of this Coin, as part of his Queen's

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. CHARLES I.

Queen's Portion, and his Majesty intended to new coin them; but the Workmen being at this Time infected with the Plague it could not be done. However, the future Importation of that Coin was prohibited.

736. 4. ANOTHER Proclamation touching French Coin: It revokes the former, and suppresses the Currency of the Cardecue's, because it gave Occasion for the Importation of a like Coin, which was lighter. 740. It is dated July 26, 1626, at Whitehall.

5. A COMMISSION for making and working of Money. It is directed to Sir Edward Villiers, and Sir William Parkhurst, Wardens, Richard Rogers, Esq; Comptroller, and Andrew Palmer, Esq; Assay-Master of the Mint, and dated at Westminster, Aug. 14.

732. 6. A COMMISSION to the same Persons, to stamp all Bullion of Gold and Silver that shall be brought into the Kingdom. Dated at Canbury, Sept. 7.

896. 7. A PROCLAMATION for better Execution of the Office of his Majesty's Exchange, and reforming Abuses and Frauds, committed in the Silver Coin, dated May 25, 1627, at Whitehall.

It takes notice, that the Exchange of all manner of Gold and Silver fit for the Mint, which is one of the King's Prerogatives, having been indulged to the Goldsmiths, they had abused it by presuming to sort and weigh all Sorts of Moneys, and daily pick out the heaviest for melting, or for Sale to Strangers, who transported it abroad, to the great Diminution of the current Coin, and to the great Depravation of what remained not exported, or melted, because whoever brought Silver to the Mint, was sure to be a Loser. For the Reformation of these Abuses, Henry Earl of Holland was appointed to have the Office of the Changes, Exchanges, and Out-changes, in England, Ireland, and Wales. The Exportation of any Gold or Silver, either coined or uncoined, was also severely prohibited by this Proclamation, as was likewise the melting of the Coin. There are several Articles for reforming the Abuses of Goldsmiths, and regulating the Value of the Coin. Every Goldsmith, upon the Sale of his Wares, was to demand for Value or Rate apart, the Gold or Silver, and the Fashion or Workman-ship apart, and was to deliver a Note to the Buyer, expressing the Day of Sale, its Weight, the Value or Rate of the Gold or Silver apart, and the Value and Rate of the Fashion and Workmanship apart; by which Means the Buyer, selling the same again, might know what to demand for it at the King's Exchange or Mint.

970. 8. A COMMISSION to the Lord High-Treasurer, &c. for putting the Proclamation in Execution, for reforming Abuses in the Coinage. Dated at Westminster, Feb. 25, 1628.

Dispensations.

291. 1. A DISPENSATION granted to John Smith, Rector of the Parish-Church of Badgeworth near Axbridge in the Diocese of Bath and Wells, from residing at the said Rectory, by reason of his being often subject to Fevers and other Infirmities, and because of the Unwholesomeness of the Place. It is dated Feb. 8, 1626, at Westminster.

309. 2. A DISPENSATION to Sir John Walter, Kt. Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, to eat Flesh on the Days prohibited during his Life, on a Remonstrance that Fish was prejudicial to his Health. It was extended to his Wife, and any other four Persons at his Table, on condition of his paying a Mark yearly to the Poor of his Parish, according to the Act of Parliament of the 5th of Q. Eliz. The Dispensation bears Date the 3d of March, as above.

659. 3. A GENERAL List of Dispensations and Faculties granted in the first Year of King Charles.

873. 4. A GENERAL List of those granted in his second Year.

1002. 5. ANOTHER of those passed in his third Year.

Ecclesiastical Commissions.

114. 1. THE King's Letters Patent erecting a High Commission Court, which was founded upon the Statute 1 Eliz. cap. 1, and consisted of a certain Number of Commissioners who exercised the King's Ecclesiastical Supremacy. It was dated July 1, 1625, at Westminster.

297. THERE is another of the same Nature dated Feb. 15, 1626; and another dated at Canbury, Aug. 15, 1627.

912. IT is notorious that this Court was perfectly of a Piece with the Star-Chamber, and that under Colour of putting a Stop to Schism, it oppressed, as Puritans, those that refused Submission to a despotick Power, which alienated Peoples Minds first from the Hierarchy, and afterwards from Episcopacy itself.

SIR George Paul was appointed Register to the Commissioners, and Robert Christian and Thomas Mottershed, Esqs; Receivers of all the Fines and Forfeitures incurred by the Offenders.

941. 2. A COMMISSION for sequestering Archbishop Abbot, and authorizing the Bishops of London, Durham, Rochester, Oxford, and Bath and Wells, to attend the Services, and act in all Causes appertaining to the Jurisdiction of the See of Canterbury. Dated Oct. 9, 1627, at Westminster.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

THIS was during the Diſgrace of Archbiſhop Abbot, who for refuſing to licenſe Sibthorp's Sermon (hereafter mentioned in the Article of Loans) was ſuſpended from all his Archiepiſcopal Functions, and confined to his Seat at Ford, a mooriſh unhealthy Place, five Miles beyond Canterbury.

HE wrote a Narrative of his Caſe, which is printed in Ruſhworth, and well worth the reading, but we have not room to tranſcribe it. It muſt ſuffice for us to obſerve, that he pleaded his Indiſpoſition with the Gout, Stone, and Gravel, as the Reaſon of his not having been for ſome time at Court, though it was miſinterpreted by his Enemies as a wilful Withdrawing from public Services, and a Diſapprobation of ſome Courſes then taken; that Mr. William Murray, one of the King's Bedchamber, having brought Dr. Sibthorp's Sermon to him by his Majeſty's Order to be licenced, after the Biſhop of London had declined it, on purpoſe to throw the Temptation upon the Archbiſhop, his Grace made Exceptions to ſeveral Paſſages in the Sermon, and deſired the Meſſenger to acquaint his Majeſty with the Reaſons, why he muſt decline to give his Imprimatur. After ſome days Mr. Murray returned, and told the Archbiſhop that the King would inſiſt upon it; but the Archbiſhop ſtill waved the matter, 'till another Meſſage was brought him by the ſame hand, that if he did not diſpatch it, the King would take ſome other Courſe with him. Upon this, the Archbiſhop put his Objections into writing, and ſent them to the King, by whom they were communicated to the Duke, and by him to Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells, who calling for the Biſhops of Durham, Rocheſter and Oxford, in order to have their countenance, an Anſwer was drawn up in their Names to the Archbiſhop's Exceptions, and ſent by Mr. Murrey to Lambeth, where the Archbiſhop was then ſo ill of the Stone, that he kept his Bed. The Anſwer was read to him by Mr. Murray, but he was not permitted to leave it with his Grace, who not being to be prevailed upon by any Argument or Authority to licenſe the Sermon, it was ſoon after licenſed by the Biſhop of London, (whoſe Chaplain had refuſed to do it) and not only licenſed, but approved and recommended as a learned and diſcreet Sermon, agreeable to the ancient Doctrine of the Primitive Church, both for Faith and good Manners, and to the eſtabliſhed Doctrine of the Church of England. The Narrative proceeds to ſhew, how the Duke of Buckingham reſented the Archbiſhop's Denial, and that his Diſgrace aroſe principally from the Duke's Malice, though he had been the Inſtrument of his Advancement. It ſeems that the Duke preſſed his Majeſty to ſend him from Lambeth, for fear that in the Duke's abſence, who was then going to Sea, he ſhould come at every turn to Whitehall and the Council-Table, and croſs all the Duke's Meaſures. The Archbiſhop to obviate that Objection went to Croydon a Month ſooner than he uſed to do, and on the 5th of July (1627) the Lord Conway was ſent thither to inform him, that it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure he ſhould withdraw to Canterbury, and meddle no more with the High-Commiſſion. The Archbiſhop offered Reaſons why Canterbury would be an inconvenient Place at that time for his Reſidence, and deſired that he might be permitted to retire rather to Ford; to which the King agreed, and allowed him convenient time to prepare for his Removal. There it was that he penn'd his Narrative, which it muſt be owned makes both his Judgment and Actions in this Particular very juſtifiable and laudable. But the Court being more and more offended with him, becauſe he made no Submiſſion to the King, and for other Reaſons, ſequeſtred him from his Juriſdiction by the Commiſſion abovementioned. This Quotation from the Narrative may ſerve to give the Reader an Idea of the Archbiſhop's Arguments againſt Sibthorp: His Grace repreſented, 'That the 'Paſſage quoted by Sibthorp out of St. Mat- 'thew to recommend the Tax, plainly 'ſhewed the hard Condition of the Jews 'under the Yoke of the Roman Emperors, 'their Maſters and Conquerors, but it was 'no ways proper to eſtabliſh the Right of 'ſuch a Tax in the Engliſh Nation; that 'the Tax laid upon the Jews was a Poll-'Tax; and that Richard II. by levying 'ſuch a Tax, cauſed an Inſurrection, which 'was attended with horrible Maſſacres; and 'that a good King, ſuch as his Majeſty was, 'ought to exact nothing from his Subjects 'but according to the Laws.'

CHARLES I.

THE Biſhops to whom the abovementioned Commiſſion was granted, were Dr. George Mountain * Biſhop of London, Dr. Richard Neale Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Walter Curl Biſhop of Rocheſter, Dr. John Howſon Biſhop of Oxford, and Dr. William Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells.

3. The King's Writ for recalling the ſaid Commiſſion; dated June 25, 1628. P. 1025.

THIS was after the Summons of the Archbiſhop to Parliament by the King's Writ; for we find a Speech of his on the 25th of April laſt, at a Conference between the Lords and Commons upon the Petition of Right, earneſtly recommending the Maintenance and Support of the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, and the Fun-

* This was he that licenſed Sibthorp's Sermon, and not Laud, as is inconſiderately miſreported by Dr. Welwood and other Writers; the latter not being tranſlated from Bath and Wells to London, 'till the Summer following.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

Fundamental Liberties of the Subject. 'Tis remarkable, that when the Archbiſhop was ſent for to Whitehall, he was received from his Barge by the Archbiſhop of York and the Earl of Dorſet, and by them ſolemnly introduced to the King, who gave him his Hand to kiſs with a particular Countenance of Favour, and bid him not fail being at the Council-Table twice a Week. The Archbiſhop being a popular Man was reſtored at this Juncture, in order to moderate the Heats of certain Eccleſiaſticks, who made great diſturbance in the Church by ſome ſcholaſtical Controverſies on the Points of Predeſtination, Grace, and Perſeverance; while both Parties were abetted by ſeveral Biſhops, and each of them pretended the Opinions they held, to be the Doctrine of the Church; when in truth they were but the Opinions of private Men diſtinguiſhed by the Names of Calviniſts and Arminians, of whom the former were countenanced by the Commons in Parliament, and ſome few of the Biſhops; and the latter juſtified by moſt of the Biſhops, and not diſcountenanced by the King, of whoſe Prerogative-Royal they were great Aſſertors.

Foreſt Laws.

717. 1. A Proclamation about Fee-Deer; dated at Whitehall, May 26, 1626.

UPON Complaint that Perſons having no Right preſumed to ſend their Warrants for Deer out of the King's Foreſts, Chaces, and Parks, it declares that no Subject can challenge ſuch Right but the two Juſtices of the Foreſts on the Trent, and prohibits all the Wardens, Lieutenants, or other Officers of the King's Foreſts, &c. to ſerve the Warrants of any, but only of the ſaid Juſtices of the Foreſts, or of ſuch as have Right, by being Lieutenants or other principal Officers, and are therefore intitled to the ſame by the Allowance of the Juſtices of the Foreſts, according to the Laws of the Foreſt.

Grants.

119. 1. A Grant (dated at Weſtminſter, June 20, 1625.) of 500 Oaks out of the King's Manor of Gillingham in Kent, to the Duke of Bucks, for enlarging his Park at Eaſt-Beaulieu in Eſſex.

HE had a Grant from the late King of 1000 Oaks for that purpoſe, out of the Woods near Milton in Kent, but they were inſufficient.

165. 2. A Grant of a Pinnace, with all its Rigging and Furniture, to the ſaid George Duke of Bucks, High-Admiral of England, who, 'tis therein ſaid, had undertaken to adventure for Diſcovery of the North-Weſt Paſſage; 'tis dated at Oxford, Aug. 1.

199. 3. A Grant to the Duke of Bucks of the yearly Rent of 400 l. payable to the Court of Wards and Liveries for certain Lands farmed of the Crown, during the Minority of the Earl of Southampton; and of two Fines due to the Crown, viz. one of 2000 l. for a Grant made to the Counteſs of Southampton and others, of the Cuſtody, Wardſhip, and Marriage of the young Lord of Southampton; and another of 256 l. on a Compoſition made with the Counteſs by the abovementioned Court. This Aſſignment is dated at Foxley the 8th of October.

CHARLES I.

233. 4. A Grant to Chriſtopher Earl of Angleſey of a Fine of 2000 l. payable by Sir Henry Fines; another of 100 l. payable by Nicholas Rooper, and another of 100 l. payable by Edward Keighlie and Iſabel his Wife, purſuant to a Sentence of the Court of Star-Chamber in the late Reign, for divers Miſdemeanors by them committed, as contained in a Complaint exhibited againſt them by Edward Harriſon, Eſq; 'Tis dated December 6. at Hampton-Court.

248. 5. A Grant to Thomas Earl of Arundel and Surrey, Earl-Marſhal of England, of the Wardſhip of the Body, and Leaſe of the Lands, of Henry Lord Stafford, to be diſpoſed of during the Minority of the ſaid Ward, together with a Fine of 500 Marks impoſed upon the ſaid Lord Stafford in the Court of Wards and Liveries to the King's Uſe, for the ſaid Lordſhips, Wardſhip, and Marriage. The Improvement of the ſaid Lord Stafford's Eſtate, and the better Relief and Maintenance of thoſe who are to receive any Benefits by the ſame, are aſſigned as the Motives of the ſaid Inſtrument, which is dated Dec. 22, at Weſtminſter.

264. 6. A Grant of 1000 l. to Thomas Caldwell, Eſq; dated Jan. 6, 1626. at Weſtminſter.

304. 7. A Grant of Somerſet-Houſe in the Strand to the Queen for her Life; dated at Weſtminſter, Feb. 15, 1626.

685 to 714. 8. A Grant of certain Lands and Revenues to the Queen for her Life, as part of her Jointure; dated at Weſtminſter, Mar. 14.

716. 9. A Grant of 200 l. a Year to Sir Edmund Verney, Knt. Marſhal of England, for his Life; dated May 26.

718. 10. A Commiſſion to the Lord Keeper, &c. to conſider and conclude what Honours and Mannors, Annuities or Revenues, are fitteſt to be conveyed and aſſured to the King's Conſort for her Jointure and Dowry according to the Marriage-Articles. Dated at Weſtminſter, June 8, 1626.

794. 11. A Confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Warden and Scholars of Wincheſter College in Oxford; dated November 11.

816. 12. AN Act for granting Denization and a Sum of Money to William Belowe, Eſq; a Foreigner, in order to make full ſatisfaction of 5000 l. due for the Arrears of a Penſion of 2000 l. granted by the late King to 914. 13. An Act confirming the Divinity-Lecture founded in the Divinity-School at Oxford, by Margaret Counteſs of Richmond, Mother to Henry VII, dated at Canbury, July 5.

Inventions.

73. 1. A Grant of the Office of Maſter-Imboſſer and Maker of the Medals to the King and his Heirs, with a Salary of 40 l. a year to Abraham Vanderdoort, Eſq; who after many chargeable Tryals and long Practice had attained to the Art and Myſtery of making of Medals. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter the 14th of May, 1625.

162. 2. A Grant to William Beale of London Goldſmith, who had invented a certain Compound of Stuffs and Waters called a Cement or Dreſſing for Ships, by which they might be preſerved in Fights from Burning, or Conſuming by Wildfire or Gunpowder, and in long Voyages from the Sea-worm or Barnacle without ſheathing.

He was to have the ſole making and diſpoſal of this Cement for the Term of 14 Years, on paying 40 s. a Year Acknowledgment to the Exchequer. The Grant is dated the 1ſt of Auguſt at Southampton.

638. 3. A Patent granted to Edward Knapp for the ſole making of new-deviſed Axle-Trees of Metal for Coaches, Carts, Waggons, &c. for the Term of 14 Years, under the yearly Rent of 40 s. to the Crown; dated Jan. 7, 1626.

680. 4. A Grant of a Privilege for 31 Years to Joſeph Webb, M. D. for the whole teaching and inſtructing all that deſire to learn the Tongues by the Ways and Means by him invented, and for the ſole Printing and Selling of the Books by him invented or modelled for that end; dated at Weſtminſter, April 26, 1626.

734. 5. A Grant of 14 Years Privilege to Arnold Rotſipen, who had invented a new way of making all Sorts of Guns; dated July 13.

857. 6. A Grant to Caleb Morley, A. M. who is ſaid to have contrived the beſt Method that ever was invented to help the Memory, and to ground Scholars in the Engliſh, Latin, and other Languages. If the ſaid Method ſhould be approved by the Teſtimony of 12 good Grammarians, then the ſame was enjoined to be taught for 21 Years in all Schools throughout the King's Dominions, and he was to have the ſole Privilege, for the ſaid Term, of Printing and Selling any Books, Tracts, or Tables, for that purpoſe. The Patent is dated the 9th of March 1627, at Weſtminſter.

870. 7. A General Liſt of Patents for Inventions granted in the ſecond Year of King Charles.

8. Another of thoſe granted in his third Year. Charles I.

There was one for melting Iron-Ore, 992. and caſting it into Bars, &c. with Sea-Coal and Pit-Coal. A ſecond for an Inſtrument for Earing and Ploughing of Land without Horſes or Oxen; and a third for an Engine to drive any Mills without Horſe, Wind, or Water.

Ireland.

64. 1. A Special Commiſſion directed to Sir John Denham and others, to enquire into the State of Ireland, and to certify the ſame to the Lords of his Majeſty's Privy-Council. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter the 12th of May, 1625.

148. 2. Instructions to Sir Francis Anneſley his Majeſty's Vice-Treaſurer and Receiver-General in Ireland. They are copied from Bibliotheque Harley, contain Directions for improving the King's Revenues, and leſſening his Charge, and are dated at Windſor, July 20.

189. 3. A Commiſſion to the Deputy Lieutenant, Treaſurer, Judges, and Secretaries of State in Ireland, for continuing that called the High Court of Caſtle-Chamber in Dublin-Caſtle, which was firſt erected by King James on the 10th of Auguſt 1605. This Commiſſion bears date at Foxley, Oct. 5, 1625.

242. 4. Another directed to Sir Francis Anneſley, &c. to take a general Muſter of all the Forces in the Kingdom, to ſurvey the Proviſions, and to inquire into, and puniſh all Frauds committed by the Muſter-Maſters, Commiſſaries, Victuallers, and all other Perſons employed in any manner in the Service of the Forces. 'Tis dated the 9th of December at Hampton-Court.

309. 5. A Commiſſion to the Chancellor of Ireland, &c. for inſpecting and ſettling the Accompts of the Officers of the Revenue in that Kingdom. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, March 3, 1626.

932. 6. A Declaration for increaſing the Subſidies in this Kingdom, by laying a higher Impoſt upon the Goods and Merchandize exported from hence to Foreign Parts; dated at Canbury, Aug. 16, 1627.

Knights.

277. 1. A Commiſſion to the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke to prepare for the Rites and Ceremonies for creating Knights of the Bath, previous to his Majeſty's Coronation; dated Jan. 30, 1626, at Weſtminſter.

278. 2. The King's Warrant to the Sheriffs to ſummon all Perſons that had for three Years paſt held 40 l. a Year, or more, of Lands or Revenues in their own Hands, or the Hands of Feoffees, and are not yet Knights, to come before his Majeſty by the the 31ſt of January, to receive the Order of Knighthood.

THIS indeed was old Law and Cuſtom, and when it was firſt authorized by an Act of Parliament in the Reign of Edward II. with regard to ſuch as had 20 l. a Year in Land, 20 l. at that time was equal to 300 l. in the Reign of King Charles; ſo that to reinforce this Law or Cuſtom, now when the Value of Eſtates was ſo much diſproportioned to the Quality of Knights, was diſpleaſing to the Country, and thought at beſt but a legal Oppreſſion, tho' the King imagined he did his Subjects a Favour in including ſuch only in his Order as had 40 l. a Year. His Majeſty's faireſt Pretence for it, was to do honour to his Coronation.

THIS ſhews that the Date given to this Warrant in the Fœdera, viz. February 5. is wrong, and that it muſt have been iſſued ſome time in January, becauſe the Coronation was performed the 2d of February.

889. 3. A Commiſſion to Dudley Lord Carleton and Sir William Seagar to carry the Order of the Garter to Henry Count Naſſau, Prince of Orange; dated at Weſtminſter, May 12, 1627.

1020. 4. A Commiſſion to the Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to fine all Perſons returned as poſſeſſed of 40 l. a Year, who came not in to receive Knighthood according to the Sheriffs Summons. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, May 29, 1628.

Letters betwixt the King and Foreign Powers.

116. 1. A Letter to King Charles from Mary the Queen-Mother of France, dated the 16th of June 1625, N. S. at Amiens, to which place ſhe attended her Daughter (after her Eſpouſals to him ſolemnized by Cardinal Richelieu) in her way to England.

THIS Letter was brought by the Duke of Buckingham, who was ſent to France to fetch the Bride. She therein applauds her Daughter's Happineſs, whoſe Marriage was to cement the Union of the two Crowns, and highly commends the Conduct of the Duke.

229. 2. A Letter from King Charles to the Duke of Chevreuſe, who had in his Name eſpouſed the Princeſs Henrietta-Maria. 'Tis dated at Hampton-Court the 20th of November 1625.

THE Purport of this Letter was to put the Duke in mind of the Aſſurances given by the French Court that the Ships which King Charles ſent to the moſt Chriſtian King ſhould be employed in Italy; whereas they were detained againſt the Rochellers, tho' the King had ſent for them to guard his own Coaſts, and the Trade of his Subjects. The Duke is herein upbraided for not ſolliciting the Court of France for the Return of thoſe Ships. The King urges his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to grant Peace to his Subjects of the Reformed Religion, that he might be more at liberty to proſecute his noble Deſigns in Italy, upon which his own Honour, and the Safety of his Allies, and his own State ſo much depended; while thoſe of that Religion being unmoleſted, would ſerve as Centinels to watch all the Motions and Deſigns of the Spaniards, to whom they were not to be reconciled. But if the King from meer Caprice, rather than real Neceſſity, was for continuing the War againſt his Proteſtant Subjects, King Charles hopes he will not ſo far expoſe him to the ſight of the whole World, as to employ his Ships againſt People of his own Religion; ſince it was plain from Senſe and Reaſon, that the Ruin and Extirpation of thoſe of the Reformed Religion in France would turn entirely to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Diſſervice and Detriment. The King adds, that he had heretofore interceded by his Ambaſſador the Duke of Bucks, for the Releaſe of certain Proteſtants, who were detained Priſoners at Paris and elſewhere, and that he had obtained a Promiſe of the French King for their Liberty, but it was not yet performed. To all theſe Points King Charles preſſes the Duke to procure a ſpeedy and ſatisfactory Anſwer.

FOR the better underſtanding of that part of the King's Letter touching the Employment of the Engliſh Ships againſt Rochel, which was briefly mentioned in p. 549. 'tis neceſſary to be more particular.

CAPTAIN John Pennington with the Squadron no ſooner arrived at Diep, viz. July 21, 1625, but the French Admiral told the Captains, Owners, and their Companies, that they muſt and ſhould go to ſerve againſt Rochel; to which they were all very averſe, tho' Gold Chains and other Rewards were offered to ſome of them: And Pennington ſent a Memorial to the Duke of Buckingham, Lord High Admiral, to decline the Service, and to bring home the Ships in Safety and Honour. But he ſoon received Letters from the Duke, and a Warrant from Secretary Conway in the King's Name, commanding him to deliver up the Ships into the hands of ſuch Frenchmen as his Chriſtian Majeſty ſhould appoint, but not to deſert his Charge over them. Theſe Orders were delivered to him by the French Ambaſſador, together with a Letter from the French King, requiring him to receive aboard a certain number of French Soldiers, and his Admiral the Duke of Montmorency, and therewith to join againſt the Rochellers his rebellious Subjects. Theſe Letters being read, the Ambaſſador inſiſted upon the immediate Surrender of his Ship the Vantguard to his Poſſeſſion, and a Diſcharge of the Engliſh Soldiers, all but 60 or 80, in caſe they were willing to be enter-entertained in the Service. Pennington after much Diſpute, altho' he was firſt of all promiſed an ample Reward in Money, to be given him at the Surrender, and a Royal Penſion during his Life, and then threatned with the Loſs of his Head for Non-compliance, came to this reſolute Anſwer, that without an expreſs and clear Warrant he would not ſurrender, nor diſcharge a Man of his Company. Upon this the Ambaſſador's Secretary came twice aboard his Ship on the 26th at night, to proteſt againſt him as a Rebel to his King and Country. Upon the laſt Proteſt, which was enforced with Challenges and Threats, Capt. Pennington declared, That he had rather live all his Life upon Bread and Water than betray his King and Country of ſo precious a Jewel; and had rather the King ſhould take away his Life, than he would have a hand in the Surrender or Undervaluing ſuch a Bulwark of the Kingdom. Alſo the Soldiers and Mariners of all the Ships grew into ſuch a Fury and Tumult, that they got up their Anchors, and ſet ſail for England without the Order, though with the Connivance of the Captain; ſaying, like true Engliſh Seamen, They would rather be hanged at home than ſurrender the King's Ships, or be Slaves to the French, and fight againſt the Proteſtant Religion. It appears that the Captain of the Man of War was not ignorant of their Deſign to return for England, becauſe under his Prayer-Book he found a Petition, which they had put there privately, ſubſcrib'd by their Names in a Circle or Compaſs, that it might not appear who began it.

Bravery of the Engliſh Seamen.

WHEN they came to Anchor in the Downs, which was on the 27th of July, Capt. Pennington ſent one Ingham expreſs with a Letter to the Duke of Buckingham, to inform him of what had happened, (which Letter being inſerted in the Cabala, is our Authority for moſt of the foregoing Particulars) together with the Petition juſt now mentioned, and he aſſured the Duke that all his Men would rather be hanged than go back to France. Ingham, whom the Captain employed to ſollicit his Diſcharge from ſerving againſt Rochel, delivered the Letter to the Duke, and ſaw him read it, together with the Petition.

ALL this while the King or the Body of the Council knew nothing certain of any other Deſign of the French than their Pretence againſt Genoa, and believed that all the Articles and Inſtruments, that had paſſed between the French and us, or the Captains, Maſters, and Owners of the Engliſh Ships, had been penned and contrived with proper Cautions for preventing all Dangers to the King or the Subjects: And M. de la Touche, who with divers others came over in the mean time from the Duke of Rohan and the Proteſtants of France to ſollicit the King and Council againſt lending of our Ships, received fair Anſwers from both: Nevertheleſs the Duke told them that the King his Maſter was obliged, and that the Ships muſt and ſhould go; ſo that the King, at the Importunity of the Queen and the Duke of Buckingham, wrote a Letter, dated at Richmond the 28th of July, which he ſent to Captain Pennington by Captain Thomas Wilbraham, expreſſly and ſtrictly commanding him, without delay, to put his former Orders in execution, to conſign his Ship called the Vantguard, with all her Furniture, into the hands of the Marquis d'Effiat for the French; aſſuring her Officers, his Majeſty would provide for their Indemnity; and to require the ſeven Merchant-Ships, in his Majeſty's Name, to put themſelves alſo into the Service of the French King, according to the Promiſe his Majeſty had made to him: And in caſe of Backwardneſs or Refuſal, he was commanded to uſe all forcible Means to compel them to it, even to ſinking.

UPON this Pennington in the beginning of Auguſt ſailed again to Diep, and put his Ship forthwith into the abſolute Power and Command of the French King, his Subjects and Miniſters, to the French King's Uſe, and to be employed in his Service at pleaſure; and acquainted the reſt of the Fleet with the Effect of his Majeſty's Letter and Command; demanding and requiring them alſo to deliver, and put their Ships into the power and command of the French King. The Duke of Buckingham's Secretary told them moreover, that if they did not do it, 'twas as much as their Lives were worth. Yet the Captains, Maſters, and Owners of the ſeven Merchant-Ships refuſed, as conceiving it was not the King's Pleaſure they ſhould ſo do, without Security for Delivery of their Ships, or Satisfaction for the ſame to their good Contentment. Hereupon Pennington went aſhore at Diep, and after having conferred with d'Effiat the French Ambaſſador, returned ſhortly after aboard, and gave the Captains, Maſters, and Owners, an Anſwer reſting upon the Validity, and urging the Performance of the former Contract made and perfected in England. Then the ſaid Maſters and Captains prepared to be gone, and accordingly weighed Anchor; but upon a Shot from Pennington they all came in again, except Sir Ferdinando Gorge, who with his Ship the Great Neptune ventured out, and brought her home. The other ſix that remained were delivered into the abſolute Poſſeſſion, Power and Command of the French King and his Ambaſſador d'Effiat, and other the Miniſters and Subjects of the French King, to be employed by him in his Service at his pleaſure; but not one of all the Engliſh Company, Man or or Boy, except one Man a Gunner (who was afterwards killed by charging a Piece of Ordnance which he had not well ſpunged) would ſtay in any of thoſe Ships to ſerve againſt the poor Rochellers of our own Religion.

THIS done, Captain Pennington return'd ſpeedily into England, and went to Oxford, where the Parliament was then ſitting, to whom he could have opened the whole Truth of the Buſineſs for the Service of the King and the Realm; but by means of the Duke of Buckingham he was prevailed on to conceal himſelf there 'till the Diſſolution of the Parliament, which happened very ſoon after.

Engliſh Ships forced into the Service againſt the Rochellers.

IN or about September following, the ſaid Ships were actually employed againſt the Rochellers and their Friends, to their exceeding great Prejudice, and almoſt utter Ruin; and it was ſaid by ſome of the French, that the Vantguard mowed them down like Graſs, to the great Diſhonour of our Nation, and the Scandal of our Religion, and to the Diſadvantage of the great Affairs of this Kingdom, and of all Chriſtendom. Edward Nicholas the Duke of Buckingham's Secretary had a Preſent from the French Ambaſſador of a Diamond Ring and a Hatband ſet with Sparks for his pains in this ignominious Affair.

Letters of Marque.

11. 1. A Commiſſion to George Villiers Duke of Bucks, Lord High-Admiral of England, Ireland, Wales, &c. authoriſing him to grant Letters of Marque and Repriſal to the King's Subjects, who had ſuſtained any Wrongs and Loſſes from the Netherlanders under the Obedience of the King of Spain and the States-General. 'Tis dated the 7th of April 1625, at Weſtminſter.

188. 2. Another Commiſſion to the Duke, authorizing him to grant Letters of Marque to ſuch of the Engliſh as had ſuſtained Damages from the Spaniards, for apprehending and taking the Goods, Ships, and Merchandize of the King of Spain or his Subjects, whereſoever found. 'Tis dated Sept. 17. at Foxley.

IT muſt be obſerved, that Reſtitution or Satisfaction had firſt been demanded by all fair Means and due Proceedings, but none could be obtained.

222. 3. ANOTHER Commiſſion to the ſame purpoſe; dated Nov. 2. at Weſtminſter.

731. 4. A Commiſſion to Dudley Lord Carleton, Sir John Cook Secretary of State, Sir Julius Cæſar Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Henry Martin Judge of the Admiralty, Sir Robert Harley Knight of the Bath, Sir John Finch, William Noy, Eſq; William Reeves, Thomas Talbot, and other Lawyers, to diſcover and find out dubious Caſes occurring in Letters of Repriſal, and to conſider what was Law in ſuch Caſes, and what the Practice of other Nations. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, July 11, 1626. CHARLES I.

'TIS proper to note here, that the Proclamations were ſtill in force againſt carrying Proviſions to Spain, and that among other Grievances which fell under the Cognizance of King Charles's ſecond Parliament, they took into conſideration certain Repriſals made upon France, with too much precipitation, to the great Damage of the Engliſh Merchants. Sir James Bagg Vice-Admiral of Cornwal, and others, had in September laſt ſeized upon the Goods of the French in our Ports, particularly thoſe of the Ship called the Peter of Newhaven, by Order of the Duke of Bucks, after the King and Council had ordered the Ship to be reſtored upon a juſt Claim, and after ſhe had been releaſed by the Admiralty. If Ruſhworth may be credited, 23 Bags of Silver and eight of Gold, were by Sir Francis Steward delivered to the Duke, who ſaid he would juſtify the Stay of the Ship by Order from the King. This Ship's Lading was valued at 40,000 l. Sterling, and the Duke's detaining of it was afterwards made one of the Articles of his Impeachment; for he took 20,000 l. out of her in Jewels and other rich Commodities. The Seizure of this Ship provoked the King of France, not only to deny the Reſtitution of the ſeven Ships lent him for his Aſſiſtance on the Coaſts of Italy (tho' employed againſt his Proteſtant Subjects at Rochel, contrary to Treaty) but to lay an Arreſt upon our Merchants Goods in his Dominions to the value of 300,000 l. However, Satisfaction being made to the French Merchants, the French King reſtored the Engliſh Ships, and releaſed the Embargo on their Goods in the beginning of May 1626.

860. 5. A Commiſſion to the Magiſtrates of Dover, &c. to appraiſe all French Ships and Goods arreſted within any of the Cinque-Ports, and to make Sale of what was periſhable; dated at Weſtminſter, March 12, 1627.

861. 6. ANOTHER to the Duke of Bucks, Lord High-Admiral, to grant Letters of Repriſal againſt the French; dated the 19th of March.

887. 7. ANOTHER to the ſame purpoſe; dated the 20th of April.

895. 8. A Commiſſion to receive and ſell all Prizes and Prize Goods taken from the French; dated at Weſtminſter, May 17.

901. 9. ANOTHER for examining Perſons touching the embezzling, carrying away, or ſpoiling the Goods, and to puniſh Offenders; and for appointing Sir John Wolſtenhome Treaſurer of the Moneys ariſing from the Sale. 'Tis dated June 6.

10.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. 911. 1052.

10. A Proclamation againſt making illegal Claims to any part of thoſe Goods; dated at Whitehall, June 25.

11. A Commiſſion to Richard Lord Weſton, Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to grant Letters of Repriſal againſt the French to the Subjects of England who had been injured by that Nation; dated at Weſtminſter, Sept. 20.

Licences.

120. 1. A ſpecial Licence to John Hemings, William Rowley, and others, for playing Comedies, Tragedies, Stage-Plays, &c. within their moſt uſual Houſes called the Globe in Surrey, and their private Houſes in Black-Friars; as alſo in any Town-Halls, or other convenient Places in the Liberties of any other Town or Univerſity, whenever the Lord-Mayor of London certifies that the Infection of the Plague does not carry off above 40 Perſons weekly. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, June 24, 1625.

136. 2. A Licence to Henry Minors, Eſq; Maſter of the King's Otter-Hounds, to take up as many Hounds, Beagles, Spaniels, and Mongrels for hunting the Otter, as he ſhould think fit for his Majeſty's Recreation, and to ſeize all Dogs that might be offenſive to the Game. 'Tis dated July 1. at Weſtminſter.

187. 3. AN Order to the Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal to grant Licences for Collections to be made through the Realm, for certain Petitioners his Subjects, who had ſuffered much by Fire, Shipwreck, &c. and for Chriſtians of other Nations forced to fly hither on account of their Religion. 'Tis dated the 5th of February 1626.

947. 4. A Licence to Sir Kenelm Digby to undertake a Voyage beyond Sea, tending to the Service of the King and Kingdom; dated at Weſtminſter, Nov. 15, 1627.

Loans.

AMONG other illegal and impolitic Methods which King Charles took to raiſe Money by Advice of his Council inſtead of Parliament, one was the borrowing of Money by Letters of Privy-Seal ſent to ſeveral of the ableſt Perſons in all parts of the Kingdom; in each of which Letters the King promiſed, in the name of himſelf and his Succeſſors, to repay it in 18 Months after it was paid in to the Collectors, who were to have it in 12 Days after Delivery of the Privy-Seal, and then to carry it to the Exchequer, and to return the Names of ſuch as delayed or refuſed to pay the Sums required.

THE firſt time he ſet a Loan on foot was in 1625, juſt before the Fleet ſailed for Cadiz, and the Method of raiſing it was this;

FIRST, The King wrote to the Lord-Lieutenants of the Counties to ſend him in the Names of the moſt able Lenders, and what Sums they thought they could ſpare. Then the Comptroller of the King's Houſehold, by the Council's Order, iſſued forth Letters in the King's Name, under the Privy-Seal, to the ſeveral Perſons returned for the Loan of Money, in form as followeth.

'TRUSTY and Well-beloved, &c. having obſerved in the Cuſtoms of former Times, that all the Kings and Queens of this Realm upon extraordinary Occaſions have uſed either to reſort to thoſe Contributions, which ariſe from the Generality of Subjects, or to the private Helps of ſome well-affected, in particular by way of Loan. In the former of which Courſes, as we doubt not of the People's Love when they aſſemble in Parliament, ſo we being inforced to proceed to the latter Courſe for Supply of ſome Treaſure for publick Services that cannot be deferred, doubt not but as this is the firſt time we have required any thing in this kind, we ſhall receive ſuch a Teſtimony of your good Affection, and that with ſuch Alacrity and Readineſs, as may make the ſame ſo much more acceptable; eſpecially ſeeing we require but that Sum, which few Men would deny a Friend—The Sum we require of you by theſe Preſents is—— which we promiſe in the name of us, our Heirs, &c. to repay to you or your Aſſigns within 18 Months after Payment thereof, &c.'

THESE kinds of forced Loans were indeed practiſed by ſome former Kings, but were always conſidered as great Grievances, and as tending to render Parliaments uſeleſs. And as for this particular Project it did not ſo much anſwer the King's Occaſions, as it increaſed People's Murmurs and Complaints: For the King's borrowing what the Parliament denied to give, was arraigning the Judgment of the Commons; the Valuation of the Abilities of the Subjects by the Lieutenants, was an unprecedented way of Aſſeſſment; the demanding of a particular Sum took away all Appearance of a voluntary Loan; and the returning the Names of thoſe who refuſed or delayed, as well as of the free Lenders, was regiſtring the King's Subjects in oppoſite Columns of Friends and Enemies: Beſides, the Lenders could hardly expect to be repaid without a Parliamentary Fund; and yet a following Parliament might be ſo far from thinking it a juſt Debt, that they would rather refuſe the Diſcharge, for fear it ſhould encourage the like Practice in other Intervals of Parliament.

THE

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

THE King being under various Difficulties next Year, and eſpecially for Money to ſupport his Uncle the King of Denmark, whom he had engaged againſt the Emperor for the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine, (and who had been defeated on the 27th of Auguſt 1026, by Count Tilly near Luttern) iſſued forth Privy-Seals to ſome Perſons; and to others he propoſed the way of Benevolence: And the Juſtices of Peace in the ſeveral Counties were directed by the Privy-Council to ſend for Perſons able to give, and to deal with them ſingly, by uſing the moſt pevailing Arguments.

BUT it ſeems that all hitherto proved ineffectual, for in this Tome of the Fœdera we find a Proclamation dated at Hampton-Court, Sept 22, 1626, wherein the King took notice, that he expected a better Return than he had received, which he aſcribed partly to the Averſeneſs of ſome Perſons not ſo well affected: And as for ſuch who had given him Money upon the ſaid Letters, or lent him any upon the Privy-Seals, he declares that he had given Orders for the ſpeedy Payment of it.—One remarkable Inſtance of his Majeſty's Neceſſities, was his borrowing 100,000 l. of the City of London; from which the Magiſtracy would fain have been excuſed, but were ſo ſeverely checked and threatned by the Council for preſuming to diſpute the King's Orders ſignified by their Board, that they were glad to ſubmit.

IN ſhort, the King was ſo preſſed, that he commanded his Council to adviſe by what ways and means he might be ſpeedily furniſhed with Moneys ſuitable to his great Occaſions; and after many days Conſultation, they came to this Reſolution, that the Urgency of Affairs not admitting the way of Parliament, the moſt ſpeedy, equal, and convenient Means would be by a general Loan from the Subject, according as every Man was aſſeſſed in the Rolls of the laſt Subſidy. But as the King and Council expected to meet with a great many Obſtacles in executing this Project, they gave the following Inſtructions to the Commiſſioners who were appointed in the ſeveral Counties to levy it.

1. THAT for a good Example to others, they themſelves ſhould lend his Majeſty the ſeveral Sums required of them, and teſtify it by their Names with their own hands.

2. TO be guided by thoſe Rates at which Men were aſſeſſed in the Book of the laſt Subſidy; and to require the Loan of ſo much Money, as the entire Rate and Value amounts to, at which they are rated and ſet; as (namely) he that is ſet 100 l. in Goods, to lend 100 Marks; and he that is ſet 100 l. in Land, to lend 100 l. in Money; and ſo pro rata for a greater or leſſer Sum.

3. TO uſe all poſſible Endeavours to cauſe every Man willingly and chearfully to lend, by convincing them of the Neceſſity and Unavoidableneſs of it for the Honour and Reputation of the Kingdom, the true Religion, and the common Safety of the Prince and People, and of our Friends and Allies engaged in the common Cauſe; and that now is not the time of Diſputing, but of Acting.

CHARLES I.

4. THAT they appoint the Days of Payment to be within 14 Days, and perſuade ſuch as ſhall be able, to pay it at one entire Payment, the better to accommodate his Majeſty's Occaſions; otherwiſe to accept of the one half at 14 Days, and the other to be paid before the 20th of December next.

5. THAT they treat apart with every Lender, and not in the Preſence or Hearing of any other, unleſs they ſee cauſe to the contrary. And if any refuſe to lend, or make Delays and Excuſes, they were to examine ſuch Perſons upon Oath, whether they have been dealt withal to deny, or refuſe to lend, or to make an Excuſe for not lending, and by whom they have been ſo dealt with. And that they ſhall alſo charge every Perſon in his Majeſty's Name upon his Allegiance, not to diſcloſe to any other Perſon what his Anſwer was.

6. THAT they ſhew their Diſcretion and Affections, by making choice of ſuch to begin with, who are likely to give the beſt Examples; and when they have a competent Number of Hands to the Roll or Liſt of the Lenders, that they ſhew the ſame to others, to lead them in like manner.

7. THAT they endeavour to diſcover whether any, publickly or ſecretly, be Workers or Perſuaders of others to diſſent from, or diſlike of this Courſe, or hinder the good Diſpoſition of others. And that, as much as they may, they hinder all Diſcourſe about it, and certify to the Privy-Council in writing, the Names, Qualities, and Habitations of all ſuch refractory Perſons with all ſpeed, and eſpecially if they ſhall diſcover any Combination or Confederacy againſt theſe Proceedings.

835. 838.

8. THAT they let all Men know whom it may concern, that his Majeſty is well-pleaſed upon lending the Sums required, to remit and diſcharge all the Money that by Letters had been deſired upon the late Benevolence or Free Grant, and that whatever had been already paid on that account, ſhall be accepted for part of this Loan; and if it exceed the Sum deſired, that the Overplus ſhall be repaid without Fee or Charge; ſo likewiſe for Privy-Seals, if any have been already paid: But if not, that they agreeing to the Loan of the Sum required, be excuſed the Payment of the Privy-Seal.

9. THAT they admit of no Suit to be made, or Reaſons to be given for the Abatement ment of any Sum, the Time and inſtant Occaſion not admitting of any ſuch Diſpute, which would but diſturb and protract the Sheriff.

LASTLY, the Commiſſioners were required and commanded upon their Faith and Allegiance to his Majeſty, to keep thoſe Inſtructions ſecret to themſelves.

764. THE King alſo publiſhed an Act dated the 7th of October 1626, at Whitehall, intitled, A Declaration of his Majeſty's clear Intention in receiving the Aid of his loving Subjects in this way of Loan. After alledging the Reaſons his Majeſty had given at large in his late Declaration concerning the Diſſolution of the Parliament, he repreſents the Impoſſibility of taking any other Courſe at preſent for maintaining the Cauſe of Religion, preſerving the King's Honour, defending his People, ſecuring his Kingdoms, and ſupporting his Allies; but promiſes that this Method ſhall not be drawn into Precedent hereafter, to charge them or their Poſterity to the prejudice of their juſt and ancient Liberties enjoyed under his moſt noble Progenitors. His Majeſty took notice of the Rumor at that time, that if this Project ſucceeded, the ſame was to be renewed every Year on any pretence of want of Money, and that no Parliaments were to be called hereafter: But he declared and promiſed in the word of a Prince, that tho' the Suddenneſs and Importance of his preſent Occaſions would not admit of the time neceſſary for ſummoning, aſſembling, and for the Deliberations of a Parliament, yet it was far from his Deſign to make any ſuch Uſe of the Love of his People; that he fully purpoſed to call a Parliament, as ſoon as he might conveniently do it, to which the Affections of the People, demonſtrated to him in the preſent Emergency, would the ſooner induce him; that all the Sums of Money lent him ſhould be repaid without Fee or Charge, as ſoon as he was able; and that every Penny of it ſhould be expended for the Service of the Publick.

King's Declaration about the Loan.

835. 838. THE Commiſſions for raiſing this Loan may be ſeen in this Tome of the Fœdera.

Methods taken to advance it.

FOR the Advancement of it, a Liſt was publiſhed of ſuch of the Nobility, Judges, Serjeants at Law, &c. as had freely ſubſcribed, for a good Example to others; and divers Lords of the Council were ordered to repair to their Country-Seats with it. And the King, in order to give an Example that he would admit of no Excuſe, removed Sir Randolph Crew from his Place of Lord Chief-Juſtice, becauſe he ſhewed no Zeal for advancing the Loan *. Soldiers were quartered upon the private Houſes of ſuch as were backward to lend the King Money, and where any ſuffered by thoſe troubleſome Gueſts, they were obliged by the King's Orders to apply for Redreſs to a Council of War, ſo that the Officers were the ſole Judges of the Soldiers. The Biſhop of Lincoln ſpoke publickly againſt the Loan, for which a Complaint was ſent up to the Council, and an Information of other pretended Matters was afterwards preferred againſt him; of which we ſhall treat more at large in the Account of the next Tome. The Benchers of Lincoln's-Inn demurring upon the Loan, as not altogether legal, received a Letter of Reproof from the Lords of the Council, with a Command to return the Names of the Refractory. The Gentry in ſeveral Counties, for refuſing to ſubſcribe, were bound over by Recognizance to appear at the Council-Table; and upon Noncompliance there, were many of them (as has been already obſerved in p. 595.) committed to Priſon in Counties diſtant from their Seats, while very many of the common Sort of People that refuſed the Loan, were impreſſed either for Soldiers or Seamen.

BESIDES theſe means, the Court hired Miniſters to preach up as Scripture-Doctrine, that Subjects were obliged to obey the King's Will and Pleaſure without Examination. Thoſe of the Clergy who diſtinguiſhed themſelves moſt by their Sermons on this Subject were, Dr. Robert Sibthorp Vicar of Brackley, in a Sermon preached February 22, 1626-7, at the Lent Aſſizes at Northampton; and Dr. Roger Manwaring, in two Sermons preached at Oatlands before the King in July following, and publiſhed under the Title of Religion and Allegiance. Dr. Sibthorp in his Sermon, which he now printed and dedicated to the King with the Title of Apoſtolick Obedience, aſſerted, 'That Subjects were bound to obey 'the Commands of Princes, and to ſuffer 'the Puniſhment if they are againſt the Laws 'of God or Nature, or impoſſible, without 'reſiſting, railing, or reviling; it being the 'Duty of the Prince to direct and make 'Laws; for where the Word of a King is, 'there is Power, and who may ſay unto 'him, What doſt thou?' Dr. Manwaring, who ſpoke ſtill more plainly, ſaid, 'That 'the King was not bound to obſerve the 'Laws of the Realm concerning the Subjects Rights and Liberties, but that his 'Royal Will and Command in impoſing 'Loans and Taxes without Conſent of Parliament, obliges the Subjects Conſciences, 'on pain of eternal Damnation. That thoſe 'who refuſed to pay this Loan offended 'againſt the Law of God, and the King's 'ſupreme Authority, and became guilty of 'Impiety, Diſloyalty, and Rebellion. That 'the Authority of Parliament is not neceſſary for raiſing Aids and Subſidies, and 'that the ſlow Proceedings of ſuch great 'Aſſemblies were not fitted for the Supply 'of

'of the State's urgent Neceſſities, but would 'rather produce ſundry impediments to the 'juſt Deſigns of Princes.'

Their Cenſure by Parliament, and Reward by the King.

THE Court was ſo far from diſcountenancing ſuch extraordinary Doctrine, that, as was obſerved in the Article of Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſions, Archbiſhop Abbot, for refuſing to licenſe Sibthorp's Sermon, and giving his Reaſons againſt it in writing, was ſuſpended from all his Archiepiſcopal Functions. Manwaring, tho' ſentenced by the Lords in the next Parliament, to pay a Fine; to make a publick Submiſſion at the Bars of both Houſes, and to be impriſoned; ſuſpended for three Years, and declared for ever incapable of any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, or Secular Office; ſoon after obtained the King's pardon, with a good Benefice, viz. Stamford-Rivers in Eſſex, to hold with his Vicarage of St. Gyles in the Fields; after which, he had the Deanry of Worceſter, and then the Biſhoprick of St. David's. And Sibthorp, tho' alſo cenſured by Parliament, was made Chaplain in ordinary to the King, Prebendary of Peterborough, and Rector of Burton Latimers in Northamptonſhire.

Memoirs relating to Sibthorp.

THIS Dr. Sibthorpe was of Lincoln-College, Oxford; but leaving the Univerſity early, before he was ſo much as Bachelor of Arts, was obliged for his Doctor's Degree to Dr. Pierce, Dean of Peterborough, in 1624, when he was Vice-Chancellor of Oxford. Beſides his Vicarage of Brackley, he was Rector of Water-Stratford in Bucks, by the Gift of Sir Anthony Throckmorton; and having married the Daughter of Sir John Lamb of Bothwell in that County, Chancellor of Peterborough, he was put into the Commiſſion of Peace. He was a Man of low Fortune and Parts, and put his Sermon in print, with a view of gaining favour at Court; in which by his Forwardneſs and Flattery he was not diſappointed, as will be ſeen hereafter. The Year before he preached his Sermon, he happen'd to be at Leiceſter, and being deſir'd to ſtay there, to act as Commiſſary for the High-Commiſſion, he and his Father-in-law join'd in preſſing the Biſhop of Lincoln, then at Bugden, to proceed againſt the Puritans. The Biſhop inquiring into their Character, they were repreſented to him by Sir John Lamb, in the Doctor's preſence, as a People that would not ſwear, whore, nor drink, but yet would lye, cozen, and deceive. That they would frequently hear two Sermons a-day, and repeat the ſame at Night; and that ſometimes they would ſpend a whole day in Prayer and Faſting. Thereupon the Biſhop aſk'd, what manner of Collection was made upon the Loan in thoſe places where the Puritans lived: both Sir John and the Doctor reply'd, That in the general they lent freely. 'Then, ſaid the 'Biſhop, no Man of diſcretion can ſay, that 'place is a place of Puritans. For my 'part, I am not ſatisfied to give way to Pro-'ceedings againſt them. I am already un-'der a Cloud, and have the Duke of Buck-'ingham for my Enemy, and will not draw 'the Puritans upon me, who I am ſure will 'carry things at laſt.' At this, Dr. Sibthorp was much diſcontented; and ſaid, He was troubled to ſee the Church no better regarded. Theſe Informations being tranſmitted to the Council-Table, were ordered to be ſealed up, and committed to the Cuſtody of Mr. Trumbal, one of the Clerks; but the Biſhop found means to get a Copy of them.

THERE is a Fact related in Archbiſhop Abbot's Narrative concerning the Licenſing of this Doctor's Sermon, which is not improper to be mentioned, before we take our leave of this Divine. It was ſaid in the Article of Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſions, that his Sermon was licenſed by the Biſhop of London, after his Chaplain had refuſed it. Now it ought to be remarked, that this Chaplain, (by name Dr. Worral) a Man of no very tender Conſcience, raſhly approv'd the Sermon when it was firſt brought to him, and actually ſet his Name to it; but upon better Thoughts, he went and adviſed with the learned Mr. Selden of the Inner-Temple, who told him, that if the Book he had allow'd, was true, there is no Meum and Tuum, no Man in England hath any thing of his own; adding, that if ever the Tide turn'd, he would be hang'd for publiſhing ſuch a Book. The Doctor, upon his advice, ſcrap'd out every Letter of his Name, and thereby withdrew his Finger from the Pye.

To Manwaring.

Manwaring was born at Stretton in Shropſhire, learnt Grammar in the King's School at Worceſter, was enter'd a Student in Oxford the beginning of 1604, and came ſoon after to be one of the Clerks of All-Souls College.

HAVING juſt mentioned the ſuppreſſion of Dr. Manwaring's Sermons by the King's Proclamation, under the Article of Books, and referr'd to this Article for the Proceedings of the two Houſes of Parliament againſt him, we will here inſert the Charge, Declaration and Sentence paſſed upon him, together with his Submiſſion, Pardon, and Preferment; which being particulars too curſorily treated of in Mr. Rapin's, and moſt other General Hiſtories, to give the Curious any tolerable ſatisfaction, and ſuch that ſome of the moſt eminent Hiſtorians have been ſorry they have been obliged to omit for want of room; we hope our Readers will not think us too tedious in this Article, before we paſs to the next.

ABOUT the latter end of May 1628, Mr. Rouſe, Member of Parliament for Truro

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. Truro in Cornwal, brought the following Charge againſt Dr. Roger Manwaring, into the Houſe of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER,

Mr. Rouſe's Charge againſt Dr. Manwaring.

'I AM to deliver from the Committee, a Charge againſt Mr. Manwaring, a Preacher in Divinity; but a Man ſo criminous, that he hath turned his Titles into Accuſation; for the better they are, the worſe he is that diſhonours them.

'HERE is a great Charge that lies upon him; it is great in itſelf; and great, becauſe it has many great Charges in it: Serpens qui ſerpentem devorat, fit draco; his Charge having digeſted many Charges into it, becomes a Monſter of Charges.

'THE main and great one is this Plot and Practice to alter and ſubvert the Frame and Fabrick of this Eſtate and Commonwealth. To this end,

'1. HE labours to infuſe into the Conſcience of his Majeſty, the perſuaſion of a Power not bounding itſelf with Laws; which King James, of famous Memory, calls in his Speech to his Parliament, Tyranny, yea, Tyranny accompanied with Perjury.

'2. HE endeavours to perſuade the Conſcience of the Subjects, That they are bound to obey Commands illegal; yea, he damns them for not obeying them.

'3. HE robs the Subject of the Propriety of their Goods.

'4. HE brands them that will not loſe this Propriety, with moſt ſcandalous Speech and odious Titles, to make them both hateful to Prince and People; ſo to ſet a Diviſion between the Head and the Members, and between the Members themſelves.

'5. To the ſame end, not much unlike to Faux and his Fellows, he ſeeks to blow up Parliaments and Parliamentary Powers.

Here he read ſeveral Paſſages out of Manwaring's Book, and then proceeded thus: 'You have heard his Charge made up by his own Words; and withal I doubt not but you ſeem to hear the Voice of that wicked one (Quid dabitis?) What will you give me, and I will betray this State, Kingdom, and Commonwealth!

'BUT there are two Obſervations will draw the Charge more violently upon him.

'1. THE Time when this Doctrine of Deſtruction was ſet forth; it was preach'd in the heart of the Loan, and was printed in the beginning of that Term which ended in a Remittitur: So that you might gueſs there might be a double Plot, by the Law and Conſcience, to ſet on fire the Frame and Eſtate of this Commonwealth; and one of theſe entailed Foxes, was Mr. Manwaring.—— Then, as for this Doctrine of the Loan, (in caſe of Neceſſity) the Unſeaſonableneſs of it is to be noted, in that it was the Year after an Aſſent in Parliament to four Subſidies and three Fifteenths; which might ſerve for a ſufficient Stopple for the Doctor's Mouth, to keep in his Doctrine of Neceſſity. CHARLES I.

'2. THE Means by which he ſeeks to deſtroy this Commonwealth; his Means are Divinity; yea, by his Divinity, he would deſtroy both King and Kingdom: The King; for there can be no greater Miſchief to a Prince, than to put the Opinion of Deity into his Ears; for if from his Ears it ſhould have paſs'd to his Heart, it had been mortal: You know how Herod periſh'd. Now, this Man gives a participation of Divine Omnipotence to Kings; and tho' a part may ſeem to qualify, yet all may ſeem again to fill up that Qualification, and very dangerouſly, if we remember that God ſaith of himſelf, I am a jealous God.

'HE goes about to deſtroy the Kingdom and Commonwealth by his Divinity: But do we find in Scripture ſuch a deſtroying Divinity? Surely I find there, that God is a God of Order, and not of Confuſion; and that the Son of God came to ſave, and not to deſtroy. By which it ſeems he hath not his Divinity from God, nor from the Son of God: And that we may be ſure he went to Hell for Divinity, he names ſundry Jeſuits and Friars with whom he conſulted and traded for his Divinity. But not to belye Hell itſelf, the Jeſuits are honeſter than he; for if he had not brought more Hell unto them than he found with them, he had not found this Divinity in them which he hath brought forth; yea, in his Quotations, he hath uſed thoſe ſhifts and falſhoods for which Boys are to be whipt in Schools; and yet by them he thinks to carry the Cauſe of a Kingdom.

'BUT for a Concluſion, to give the true Character of this Man, whom I never ſaw, I will ſhew it you by one whom I know to be contrary to him: Samuel, we all know to be a true Prophet; now we read of Samuel that he wrote the Law of the Kingdom in a Book, and laid it up before the Lord. And this he did, as one of Mr. Manwaring's own Authors affirms, that the King may not know what to command, nor the People what to obey.—— Thus Mr. Manwaring being contrary to a true Prophet, muſt needs be a falſe one; and the Judgement of a falſe Prophet belongs to him.

'I have ſhewed you an evil Tree that bringeth forth evil Fruit; and now it reſts with you to determine, whether the following Sentence ſhall follow, Cut it down, and caſt it into the fire.'

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

On the 3d of June, the Commons proceeded with a Declaration againſt Doctor Manwaring, and preſented it the ſame Day to the Lords, at a Conference betwixt the Committees of both Houſes of Parliament; of which, Mr. John Pym was by the Commons appointed their Manager.

The Commons Declaration was as follows:

Declaration of the Commons againſt Dr. Manwaring.

'FOR the more effectual prevention 'of the apparent Ruin and Deſtruction 'of this Kingdom, which muſt neceſſarily 'enſue, if the good and fundamental Laws 'and Cuſtoms therein eſtabliſhed, ſhould 'be brought into contempt and violated, 'and that Form of Government thereby 'altered, by which it hath been ſo long 'maintained in Peace and Happineſs, and 'to the Honour of our ſovereign Lord the 'King, and for the Preſervation of his 'Crown and Dignity: The Commons in 'this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do, by 'this their Bill ſhew, and declare againſt 'Roger Manwaring, Clerk, D. D. That 'whereas by the Laws and Statutes of this 'Realm, the free Subjects of England do 'undoubtedly inherit this Right and Li'berty, not to be compell'd to contribute 'to any Tax, Tallage, Aid, or to make 'any Loans, not ſet or impoſed by com'mon conſent, by Act of Parliament: And 'divers of his Majeſty's loving Subjects re'lying upon the ſaid Laws and Cuſtoms, 'did, in all humility, refuſe to lend ſuch 'Sums of Money without Authority of 'Parliament, as were lately required of 'them.

'NEVERTHELESS, he the ſaid Roger 'Manwaring, in contempt, and contrary 'to the Laws of this Realm, hath lately 'preached in his Majeſty's Preſence, two 'ſeveral Sermons; that is to ſay, the 4th 'Day of July laſt one of the ſaid Sermons, 'and upon the 29th of the ſame Month, 'the other of the ſaid Sermons; both which 'Sermons he hath ſince publiſhed in print, 'in a Book intituled, Religion and Alle'giance; and with a wicked and malicious 'intention, to ſeduce and miſguide the 'Conſcience of the King's moſt Excellent 'Majeſty, touching the obſervation of the 'Laws and Cuſtoms of this Kingdom, and 'of the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, 'to incenſe his Royal Diſpleaſure againſt his 'good Subjects ſo refuſing, to ſcandalize, 'ſubvert, and impeach the good Laws and 'Government of this Realm, and the Au'thority of the High-Court of Parliament, 'to alienate his Royal Heart from his 'People, and to cauſe Jealouſies, Sedition, 'and Diviſion in the Kingdom, he the ſaid 'Roger Manwaring, doth in the ſaid Ser'mons and Book perſuade the King's moſt 'Excellent Majeſty,

'1. THAT his Majeſty is not bound to 'keep and obſerve the good Laws and 'Cuſtoms of this Realm, concerning the 'Rights and Liberties of the Subjects afore'mentioned: And that his Royal Will and 'Command in impoſing Loans, Taxes and 'other Aids upon his People, without com'mon conſent in Parliament, doth ſo far 'bind the Conſciences of the Subjects of 'this Kingdom, that they cannot refuſe 'the ſame without peril of eternal Dam'nation.

'2. THAT thoſe of his Majeſty's loving 'Subjects, which refuſed the Loan afore'mentioned, in ſuch manner as is afore cited, 'did therein offend againſt the Law of 'God, againſt his Majeſty's ſupreme Au'thority; and by ſo doing, became guilty 'of Impiety, Diſloyalty, Rebellion and 'Diſobedience, and liable to many other 'Taxes and Cenſures, which he in the ſe'veral other parts of his Book, doth moſt 'falſely and maliciouſly lay upon them.

'3. THAT Authority of Parliament 'is not neceſſary for raiſing of Aids and 'Subſidies; that the ſlow Proceedings 'of ſuch Aſſemblies are not fit for the 'Supply of the urgent Neceſſities of the 'State; but rather apt to produce ſun'dry Impediments to the juſt Deſigns of 'Princes, and to give them occaſion of 'Diſpleaſure and Diſcontent.

'ALL which the Commons are ready to 'prove, not only by the general ſcope of 'the ſame Sermons and Book, but likewiſe 'by ſeveral Clauſes, leſſer Hints, and Sen'tences therein contained; and that he the 'ſaid Roger Manwaring, by preaching and 'publiſhing the Sermons and Book afore'mentioned, did moſt unlawfully abuſe 'his holy Function, inſtituted by God in 'his Church for the guiding of the Con'ſciences of all his Servants, and chiefly 'of ſovereign Princes and Magiſtrates, and 'for the maintenance of the Peace and 'Concord betwixt all Men, eſpecially be'twixt the King and his People, and hath 'thereby moſt grievouſly offended againſt 'the Crown and Dignity of his Majeſty, 'and againſt the Proſperity and good Go'vernment of this State and Common'wealth. And the ſaid Commons by Pro'teſtation, ſaving to themſelves the liberty 'of exhibiting at any time hereafter, on 'any other occaſion or impeachment againſt 'the ſaid Roger Manwaring, and alſo of 'replying to the Anſwers which he the 'ſaid Roger ſhall make unto any of the 'Matters contained in this preſent Bill of 'Complaint, and of offering farther Proof 'of the Premiſes, or any of them, as the 'Cauſe, according to the courſe of Par'liament, ſhall require; do pray, that the 'ſaid Roger Manwaring may be put to 'anſwer to all and every the Premiſes; 'and that ſuch Proceeding, Examination, 'Tryal, Judgement, and exemplary Pu'niſhment may be thereupon had and exe'cuted, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.'

This

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

THIS Declaration being ingroſſed and read, Mr. Pym addreſſed himſelf to the Lords in this manner:

Mr. Pym's Speech to the Lords at the delivery of the Declaration againſt Dr. Manwaring.

'THAT he ſhould ſpeak to this 'Cauſe with the more confidence, 'becauſe he ſaw nothing out of himſelf 'to diſcourage him. If he conſidered the 'Matter, the Offences were of a high Na-'ture, and of eaſy Proof: If he conſider'd 'their Lordſhips, who were the Judges of 'their own Intereſt and their own Honour, 'the Example of their Anceſtors, the Care 'of their Poſterity, would all be Advocates 'with him in this Cauſe in the behalf of 'the Commonwealth. If he conſider'd the 'King our Sovereign, (the pretence of 'whoſe Service and Prerogative might 'perchance be ſought unto as a Defence and 'Shelter for this Delinquent) he could not 'but remember that part of his Majeſty's 'Anſwer to the Petition of Right of both 'Houſes, that he held himſelf bound in 'conſcience to preſerve thoſe Liberties, 'which this Man would perſuade him to 'impeach. He ſaid farther, That he could 'not but remember his Majeſty's love to 'Piety and Juſtice, manifeſted upon all 'occaſions; and he knew Love to be the 'Root and Spring of all other Paſſions 'and Affections. A Man therefore hates, 'becauſe he ſees ſomewhat in that which 'he hates contrary to that which he loves: 'A Man therefore is angry, becauſe he ſees 'ſomewhat in that wherewith he is angry 'that gives impediment and interruption 'to the accompliſhment of that which he 'loves.

'IF this be ſo, by the ſame act of his 'Apprehenſion by which he believes his 'Majeſty's love to Piety and Juſtice, he 'muſt needs believe his hate and deteſta-'tion of this Man, who went about to 'withdraw him from the exerciſe of both.

'HE laid down three Poſitions to be 'maintained as the Ground-work and Foun-'dation of the whole Cauſe.

'1. THAT the Form of Government 'in any State could not be alter'd without 'apparent Danger of Ruin to that State.

'2. THAT the Law of England where-'by the Subject was exempted from Taxes 'and Loans not granted by common con-'ſent of Parliament, was not introduced 'by any Statute, or by any Charter or 'Sanction of Princes, but was the an-'cient and fundamental Law iſſuing from 'the firſt Frame and Conſtitution of the 'Kingdom.

'3. THAT this Liberty of the Subject 'is not only moſt convenient and profitable 'for the People, but moſt honourable, moſt 'neceſſary for the King; yea, in that point 'of Supply for which it was endeavoured 'to be broken.

'1. FOR the Form of a Government is 'that which doth actuate and diſpoſe every 'Part and Member of the State to the 'common Good; and as thoſe Parts give 'Strength and Ornament to the Whole, ſo 'they receive from it again Strength and 'Protection in their ſeveral Stations and 'Degrees. If this mutual Relation and 'Intercourſe be broken, the whole Frame 'will quickly be diſſolved and fall in pieces; 'and inſtead of this Concord and Inter-'change of Support, whilſt one part ſeeks 'to uphold the old Form of Government, 'and the other Part to introduce a new, 'they will miſerably conſume and devour 'one another. Hiſtories are full of the 'Calamities of whole States and Nations 'in ſuch caſes. 'Tis true, that time muſt 'needs bring ſome Alterations, and every 'Alteration is a ſtep and degree towards a 'Diſſolution: Thoſe things only are eternal, 'which are conſtant and uniform. There-'fore it is obſerved by the beſt Writers upon 'this Subject, that thoſe Commonwealths 'have been moſt durable, which have often 'reformed and recompoſed themſelves ac-'cording to their firſt Inſtitution and Ordi-'nance; for by this means they repair the 'Breaches, and counterwork the ordinary 'and natural Effects of Time.

CHARLES I.

'2. THERE are plain footſteps of thoſe 'Laws in the Government of the Saxons; 'they were of that Vigour and Force as to 'outlive the Conqueſt, nay, to give Bounds 'and Limits to the Conqueror, whoſe Vic-'tory gave him firſt hope; but the Aſſu-'rance and Poſſeſſion he obtained by Com-'poſition, in which he bound himſelf to 'obſerve theſe, and the other ancient Laws 'and Liberties of the Kingdom, which af-'terwards he likewiſe confirmed by Oath 'at his Coronation: From him the ſaid Ob-'ligation deſcended to his Succeſſors. It is 'true, they have been often broken; they 'have been often confirmed by Charters 'of Kings, by Acts of Parliaments; but 'the Petitions of the Subjects, upon which 'thoſe Charters and Acts were founded, 'were ever Petitions of Right, demanding 'their antient and due Liberties, not ſuing 'for any new.

'3. IT hath been upon another occaſion, 'ſaid he, declared, That if the Liberties 'of the Subject were taken away, there 'would remain no more Induſtry, Juſtice, 'or Courage: Who will contend, who will 'endanger himſelf for that which is not his 'own? But without inſiſting on any of 'thoſe points, he added, That if thoſe Li-'berties were taken away, there would 'remain no means for the Subjects, by any 'act of Bounty or Benevolence, to ingra-'tiate themſelves to their Sovereign.

'AND he deſired their Lordſhips to 'remember, what profitable Prerogatives

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I.

'the Laws had appointed for the Support 'of Sovereignty; as Wardſhips, Treaſures-'trove, Felons Goods, Fines, Amerciaments, 'and other Iſſues of Courts, Wrecks, Eſ-'cheats, and many more, too long to be 'enumerated; which for the moſt part are 'now by Charters and Grants of ſeveral 'Princes, diſperſed into the hands of pri-'vate Perſons; and that beſides the antient 'Demeſns of the Crown of England, Wil-'liam the Conqueror did annex, for the 'better maintenance of his Eſtate, great 'proportion of thoſe Lands which were 'confiſcate from thoſe Engliſh who per-'ſiſted to withſtand him; and of theſe, 'very few remain at this day in the King's 'poſſeſſion: And that ſince that time, the 'Revenue of the Crown had been ſupplied 'and augmented by Attainders, and other 'Caſualties in the Age of our Fathers, by 'the diſſolution of Monaſteries and Chan-'tries, near a third part of the whole Land 'being come into the King's poſſeſſion. 'He remember'd moreover, that conſtant 'and profitable Grant of the Subjects in the 'Act of Tunnage and Poundage: And all 'theſe, he ſaid, were ſo alienated, anti-'cipated, over-charged with Annuities and 'Aſſignments, that no means were left for 'the preſſing and important occaſions of 'this time, but the voluntary and free 'Gift of the Subjects in Parliament.

'THE Hearts of the People, ſaid he, 'and their Bounty in Parliament, is the only 'conſtant Treaſure and Revenue of the 'Crown, which cannot be exhauſted, alie-'nated, anticipated, or otherwiſe charged 'and incumbred.

'THEN he proceeded to the conſidera-'tion of the Offence given by the Doctor, 'whom he charged by Proofs from his 'Book, with aſſerting in the firſt place, 'That his Majeſty was not bound to keep 'and obſerve the Laws and Cuſtoms of this 'Realm concerning the Right and Liberty 'of the Subjects to be exempted from all 'Loans, Taxes, and other Aids laid upon 'them, without common conſent in Par-'liament: And that his Majeſty's Will and 'Command in impoſing any Charges upon 'his Subjects without ſuch conſent, doth ſo 'far bind them in their Conſciences, that 'they cannot refuſe the ſame without peril 'of eternal Damnation.

'FROM this Evidence of the Fact, 'ſaid he, doth iſſue a clear Evidence of 'his wicked Intention, to miſguide and 'ſeduce the King's Conſcience touching the 'Obſervation of the Laws and Liberties of 'the Kingdom, and to ſcandalize and im-'peach the good Laws and Government of 'the Realm, and the Authority of Par-'liaments. If to give the King ill Coun-'ſel, he argued, in ſome one particular 'Action, hath heretofore been heinouſly 'puniſhed in this High-Court, how much 'more heinous muſt it needs be thought, 'by ill Counſel to pervert and ſeduce his 'Majeſty's Conſcience, which is the ſove-'reign Principle of all moral Actions, from 'which they are to receive Warrant for 'their Direction before they be acted, and 'Judgement for their Reformation after-'ward? If Scandalum Magnatum, Slander 'and Infamy caſt upon great Lords and 'Officers of the Kingdom, have been al-'ways moſt ſeverely cenſured, how much 'more tender ought we to be of that Slan-'der and Infamy which is here caſt upon 'the Laws and Government, from whence 'is derived all that Honour and Reverence 'due to thoſe great Lords and Magiſtrates? 'All Men (and ſo the greateſt and higheſt 'Magiſtrates) are ſubject to Paſſions and 'Partialities, whereby they may be tranſ-'ported into over-hard injurious Croſſes: 'Which Conſiderations may ſometimes ex-'cuſe, tho' never juſtify the railing and 'evil Speeches of Men who have been ſo 'provoked; it being a true Rule, That 'whatſoever gives ſtrength and inforcement 'to the Temptation in any Sin, doth ne-'ceſſarily imply an abatement and diminu-'tion of guilt in that Sin. But to ſlander 'and diſgrace the Laws of Government, is 'without poſſibility of any ſuch excuſe, 'it being a ſimple act of a malignant Will, 'not induced nor excited by any outward 'provocation; the Laws carrying an equal 'and conſtant reſpect to all, and claiming 'equal reverence from all.

'IN the ſecond place, he charged the 'Doctor, from the ſame Proofs, with aſ-'ſerting that the Refuſers had offended 'againſt the Law of God, and againſt the 'ſupreme Authority; and by ſo doing, 'were become guilty of Impiety, Diſloy-'alty, Rebellion, Diſobedience, and liable 'to many other Taxes. And he took no-'tice of the Doctor's odious Compariſons, 'by ranking them with Popiſh Recuſants, 'Turks and Jews; with Corah, Dathan, 'and Abiram; Theudas and Judas. Upon 'this ſecond Article, ſaid he, are imprinted 'two malicious Characters, viz. a wicked 'intention to increaſe his Majeſty's Diſ-'pleaſure againſt his good Subjects ſo re-'fuſing, and to alienate his Heart from 'the reſt of his People.

'IN the third place, he charged the 'Doctor, by other Proofs from his Book, 'with a wicked Intention to avert his Ma-'jeſty's Mind from calling of Parliaments, 'and to cauſe Jealouſies, Seditions, and Di-'viſions in the Kingdom; by aſſerting, 1. 'That the Authority of Parliament is not 'neceſſary for raiſing of Aids and Subſi-'dies. 2. That the ſlow Proceedings of

'ſuch

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I.

'ſuch Aſſemblies are not fit to ſupply the 'urgent Neceſſity of the State. And, 3. 'That Parliaments are apt to produce ſun-'dry impediments to the juſt Deſigns of 'Princes, and give them occaſion of Diſ-'pleaſure and Diſcontent.

'Mr. Pym concluded this third Article of 'his Charge by inferring, that if Parliaments 'be taken away, Miſchiefs and Diſorders muſt 'needs abound, without any poſſibility of 'good Laws to reform them; Grievances 'will daily increaſe without opportunities or 'means to redreſs them. And what readier 'way, ſaid he, can there be to Diſtractions 'betwixt the King and People, to Tumults 'and Diſtempers in the State, than this?'

THE Limitations whereby the Doctor had propoſed to juſtify (or at leaſt to excuſe) himſelf, were theſe three. '1. That 'he did not attribute to the King any ſuch 'abſolute Power as might be exerciſed at 'all times, or upon all occaſions, accor-'ding to his own pleaſure; but only upon 'Neceſſity extreme and urgent. 2. That 'the Sum required muſt be proportioned to 'the Ability of the Party, and to the Uſe 'and Occaſion. 3. That he did not ſay, 'that the Subſtance of the Municipal or 'National Laws might be omitted or neg-'lected, but the Circumſtances only.'

Mr. Pym obſerv'd in anſwer, 'That 'tis all one to leave the Power abſolute, 'and to leave the Judgement arbitrary 'when to execute that Power; for altho' 'theſe Limitations ſhould be admitted, yet 'it is left to the King alone to determine 'what is an urgent and preſſing Neceſſity; 'what is a juſt Proportion, both in reſpect 'of the Ability, and of the Uſe and Occa-'ſion; and what ſhall be ſaid to be a 'Circumſtance, and what of the Subſtance 'of the Law; and the Subject is left with-'out Remedy: for the legal Bounds being 'taken away, no private Perſon ſhall be 'allowed to oppoſe his own particular O-'pinion in any of theſe Points, to the 'King's Reſolution; ſo that all theſe Li-'mitations, tho' ſpecious in ſhew, are in 'effect fruitleſs and vain.

'As to the Limitation of urgent Ne-'ceſſity, Mr. Pym apply'd a particular An-'ſwer taken from the caſe of Normandy, 'as it appears in the Commentaries of Guilme 'Jeremie, upon the cuſtomary Laws of 'that Dutchy. The Normans having been 'oppreſſed with ſome Grievances, contrary 'to their Franchiſe, made their Complaint 'to Lewis X. who, by his Charter Anno '1314, acknowledging the Right and 'Cuſtom of the Country, and that they 'had been unjuſtly griev'd, did grant and 'provide, that from thenceforward, they 'ſhould be free from all Subſidies and 'Exactions to be impoſed by him and his 'Succeſſors, but with this Clauſe, Si ne-'ceſſitie grand ne le requiret; i. e. except 'in caſe of great Neceſſity: Which ſmall 'exception, Mr. Pym very well obſerved, 'hath devoured all theſe Immunities. For 'though theſe States meet every Year, yet 'they have little or no power left, but to 'agree to ſuch Levies as the King will 'pleaſe to make upon them.

'THE Circumſtances of Aggravation 'which Mr. Pym mentioned in Manwa-'ring's Caſe, were theſe.

'1. THE Place where theſe Sermons 'were preached; the Court the King's own 'Family, where ſuch Doctrine was before 'ſo well believed, that no Man needed to 'be converted. Of this there could be no 'other end, but either Simoniacal, by flat-'tery and ſoothing to make way for his own 'Preferment; or elſe extreme malicious, to 'add new Afflictions to thoſe who lay un-'der his Majeſty's Wrath, diſgraced and 'impriſoned; and to inlarge the Wound 'which had been given to the Laws and 'Liberties of the Kingdom.

'2. HIS holy Function. He is a Prea-'cher of God's Word, ſaid Mr. Pym, and 'yet he hath endeavoured to make that 'which was the only Rule of Juſtice and 'Goodneſs, to be the Warrant for Violence 'and Oppreſſion. He is a Meſſenger of 'Peace, but he hath endeavoured to ſow 'Strife and Diſſenſion, not only among 'private Perſons, but even betwixt the 'King and his People, to the Diſturbance 'and Danger of the whole State. He is a 'Spiritual Father, but like that evil Fa-'ther in the Goſpel, he hath given his 'Children Stones inſtead of Bread; inſtead 'of Fleſh, he hath given them Scorpions. 'Laſtly, he is a Miniſter of the Church of 'England, but he hath acted the part of a 'Romiſh Jeſuit. The latter labour our 'Deſtruction, by diſſolving the Oath of 'Allegiance taken by the People: he doth 'the ſame work, by diſſolving the Oath of 'Protection and Juſtice taken by the King.

3. THE Authors upon whoſe Authority 'he doth principally rely, who are for moſt 'part Friars and Jeſuits; and his Fraud and 'Shift in citing thoſe Authors to purpoſes 'quite different from their own meanings; 'of which he gave ſeveral inſtances.

'4. THE Doctor's Behaviour ſince the 'preaching of thoſe Sermons at Court, by 'which he ſtill continued to multiply and 'increaſe his Offence; yea, even ſince his 'being queſtioned in Parliament, upon the '4th of May laſt, he was ſo bold as to 'publiſh the ſame Doctrine in his own Pa-'riſh Church of St. Gyles in the Fields; 'in which he ſaid it would be proved by 'very good Teſtimony, that he aſſerted, 1. 'That the King had Right to order all, as 'to him ſhould ſeem good, without any 'Man's conſent. 2. That the King might

're-

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I.

'require Aid in time of neceſſity; and if 'the Subjects did not ſupply, the King 'might juſtly avenge it. 3. That the Pro-'priety of Eſtates and Goods was ordina-'rily in the Subject, but extraordinarily '(that is, in caſe of the King's need) the 'King hath Right to diſpoſe of them.

'Mr. Pym therefore obſerved, that the 'Commons held it to be a great Contempt of 'the Parliament, for him to maintain that ſo 'publickly, which was here queſtion'd; and 'for a private Divine to debate the Right and 'Power of the King; which is a Matter of 'ſuch nature as to be handled only in this 'High Court, and that with Moderation 'and Tenderneſs.

'HAVING concluded his Aggravations, 'he produced the following precedents to 'teſtify what the Opinion of our Anceſtors 'would have been, if this Caſe had fallen 'out in their time.

'BY the Statute of 3 Edw. I. at Weſtm. '1. cap. 33. proviſion was made againſt 'thoſe who ſhould tell any falſe News or 'Devices, by which any Diſcord or Scandal 'may ariſe between the King, his People, 'and great Men of the Kingdom.

'27 Edw. III. Rot. Parl. num. 20. It 'was declared by the King's Proclamation, 'ſent into all the Counties of England, 'That they who reported that he would 'not obſerve the Great Charter, were ma-'licious People, who deſired to put trouble 'and debate betwixt the King and his Sub-'jects, and to diſturb the Peace and good 'Eſtate of the King, the People, and the 'Realm.

'5 Edw. II. Inter novas ordinationes. 'Henry de Beamond for giving the King 'ill Counſel againſt his Oath, was put from 'the Council, and reſtrained from coming 'into the Preſence of the King, under pain 'of Confiſcation and Baniſhment.

'19 Edw. II. Clauſe Minidors. Com-'miſſions were granted to enquire upon 'the Statute of W. I. touching the ſpread-'ing of News, whereby Diſcord and Scan-'dal might grow betwixt the King and his 'People.

'10 Edw. III. Clauſe M. 26. Procla-'mation went out to arreſt all them who 'had preſumed to report, That the King 'would lay upon the Wools certain Sums, 'beſides the antient and due Cuſtoms; 'wherein the King calls theſe Reports, 'Exquiſita mendacia, &c. quæ non tan-'tum in publicam læſionem, ſed in noſtrum 'cedunt damnum, & dedecus manifeſtum; 'i. e. Exquiſite Lyes, &c. which are not 'only injurious to the Publick, but a da-'mage and manifeſt diſhonour to us.

'12 Edw. III. Rot. Almaniæ. The King 'writes to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, 'excuſing himſelf for ſome Impoſitions which 'he had laid; profeſſing his great ſorrow 'for it; and deſiring the Archbiſhop, by 'Indulgencies and other ways, to ſtir up the 'People to pray for him; hoping that God 'would enable him, by ſome ſatisfactory 'Benefit, to make amends, and comfort his 'Subjects for thoſe preſſures.

'To theſe he added an Eccleſiaſtical 'Precedent out of a Book, called Pupilla 'oculi, publiſhed for the Inſtruction of 'Confeſſors; wherein all the Articles of 'Magna Charta are inſerted, with this Di-'rection, Hos articulos ignorare non de-'bent quibus incumbit Confeſſiones audire 'infra Provinciam Cantuarienſem; i. e. 'None ought to be ignorant of theſe Ar-'ticles, on whom it is incumbent to hear 'Confeſſions within the Province of Can-'terbury.

'HE likewiſe remember'd the Procla-'mation of Jac. 8. for calling in and burn-'ing Dr. Cowel's Book; for which theſe 'Reaſons are there given, viz. For miſta-'king the true State of the Parliament, of 'the Kingdom, and the fundamental Con-'ſtitution and Privileges thereof; and for 'ſpeaking irreverently of the Common 'Law; it being a thing utterly unlawful 'for any Subject to ſpeak or write againſt 'that Law under which he liveth, and 'which we are ſworn and reſolve to maintain.

'FROM theſe Precedents, Mr. Pym 'collected, that if former Parliaments were 'ſo careful of falſe Rumours and News, 'they would have been much more tender 'of ſuch Doctrines as theſe, which tend to 'produce true occaſions of Diſcord betwixt 'the King and his People. If, ſaid he, 'thoſe who reported the King would lay 'Impoſitions, and break his Laws, were 'thought ſuch heinous Offenders, how 'much more ſhould the Man be condem-'ned, who perſuaded the King he is not 'bound to keep thoſe Laws? If that great 'King was ſo far from challenging any 'Right in this kind, that he profeſſed his 'own Sorrow and Repentance for grieving 'his Subjects with unlawful Charges: If 'Confeſſors were enjoin'd to frame the 'Conſciences of the People to the Ob-'ſervance of thoſe Laws, certainly ſuch 'Doctrine, and ſuch a Preacher as this 'would have been held moſt ſtrange and 'abominable in all theſe Times.

'HE finiſhed with the Concluſion or 'Prayer of the Commons, which conſiſted 'of three Clauſes. 1. They reſerved to 'themſelves liberty of any other Accuſa-'tion; and for this, he ſaid, there was great 'Reaſon, that as the Doctor multiply'd 'his Offences, ſo they may renew their 'Accuſations. 2. They ſave to themſelves 'the liberty of replying to his Anſwer; 'for they had great cauſe to think that 'he who would ſhift ſo much in offending, 'would ſhift much more in anſwering. '3. They deſire he might be brought to 'Examination and Judgment; this they 'thought

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. CHARLES I.

'thought would be very important for the 'Comfort of the preſent Age, and for the Se-'curity of the future againſt ſuch wicked and 'malicious Practices. And ſo he concluded, 'that ſince the Cauſe had ſtrength enough 'to maintain itſelf, his humble ſuit to 'their Lordſhips was, That they would 'not obſerve his Infirmities and Defects 'to the Diminution or Prejudice of that 'Strength.'

Sentence given againſt Man waring by the Lords.

NOT long after, the Commons by their Speaker, demanded Judgment againſt Manwaring of the Lords; who, ſays Ruſhworth, not accounting his Submiſſion with Tears and Grief, a Satisfaction for the great Offence wherewith he ſtood charged, gave this Sentence:

1. That he be impriſoned during the pleaſure of this Houſe.

2. That he be fined 1000 l. to the King.

3. That he make ſuch Submiſſion and Acknowledgment of his Offences as ſhall be ſet down by a Committee in writing, both at this Bar, and in the Houſe of Commons.

4. That he be ſuſpended for three years from the exerciſe of the Miniſtry; and in the mean time, a ſufficient preaching Miniſter ſhall be provided to ſerve the Cure, out of his Livings: This Suſpenſion and Proviſion to be done by the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

5. That he be hereafter diſabled to have any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, or Secular Office.

6. That he be diſabled hereafter ever to preach at Court.

7. That his ſaid Book is worthy to be burnt; and that for the better effecting of this, his Majeſty may be moved to grant a Proclamation to call in the ſaid Books, that they may be all burnt accordingly in London, and both the Univerſities; and to inhibit the printing thereof upon a great Penalty.

Dr. Manwaring's Submiſſion was in theſe words:

May it pleaſe this Honourable Houſe,

The Doctor's Submiſſion.

'I do here in all Sorrow of Heart and 'true Repentance acknowledge the many 'Errors and Indiſcretions which I have 'committed, in preaching and publiſhing 'thoſe two Sermons of mine, which I 'called Religion and Allegiance; and my 'great Fault in falling upon this Theme 'again, and handling the ſame raſhly and 'unadviſedly in my own Pariſh Church of 'St. Giles in the Fields, the 4th of May laſt 'paſt. I do fully acknowledge thoſe three 'Sermons to have been full of many dan-'gerous Paſſages, Inferences, and ſcanda-'lous Aſperſions in moſt parts of the ſame: 'And I do humbly acknowledge the 'Juſtice of this Honourable Houſe in that 'Judgment and Sentence paſſed upon me 'for my great Offence: And I do from the 'bottom of my Heart crave pardon of God, 'the King, and the Honourable Houſe, 'and the Church, and this Commonwealth 'in general, and thoſe worthy Perſons ad-'judged to be reflected upon by me, 'in particular, for theſe great Errors and 'Offences.'

Roger Manwaring.

London.

1. A Proclamation concerning Buildings and Inmates within the City and its Confines. Dated the 2d of May 1625, at Whitehall. 33

It reſtrains the Building upon any new Foundation within two Miles of the City-Gates, or the King's Palace at Weſtminſter; directs that the outer Walls of all Buildings in the City, or within three Miles, be of Brick, or Brick and Stone; that every Story be ten feet in height, and every half Story ſeven feet and a half at leaſt; and that the Fore-front, and all outward and party Walls be of Brick, or Brick and Stone, to prevent the ſpreading of Fires. That the Window-Lights of every whole Story be of more heighth than breadth, that the Rooms may receive Air for Health. That the firſt Floors be not raiſed to gain height in the Cellars, in order to prevent the making of Steps into the Street. Here are alſo particular Directions for the making and rating of Bricks. It likewiſe prohibits the ſupporting of ruinous old Buildings by digging of Cellars, and bringing up new Walls, by erecting new Chimneys and Stair-Caſes, by placing pieces of Timber, ſetting on new Roofs or Rafters, thruſting out of Dormers, and faſtening the new Additions to the old Timber by Bars and Cramp-Irons, without a Licence from his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Buildings. It forbids the erecting, covering, overlaying or incloſing any Hovels or other Sheds of Timber, with Reeds, Faggots, Hay, Straw, Boards, or other Materials, and the raiſing up any Wall, Pale, or Bank of Earth to which Sheds might be added, without ſuch Licence as aforeſaid. And to prevent the breeding of Infection (as well as for other Reaſons) by letting Parts of Houſes and Chambers to Inmates and Underſitters, no Perſon was to receive into any Houſe more than one Family. All Offenders were to be proſecuted by the Attorney-General in the Court of Star-Chamber. This is the firſt Act that takes notice of the Danger of Sickneſs and Infection with which the City was threatned, by the unwholeſome peſtering of multitudes of poor People together.

2. A Commiſſion to the Privy-Council and others of Quality, to give Directions for enforcing the ſaid Proclamation. 'Tis dated May 30. 97.

3. A Charter of Incorporation granted to the Preſident and Fellows of Sion College, founded by Thomas White late Reſidentiary of St. Paul's, and Vicar of St. Dunſtan's 321.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. 816. in the West, for the Ministers of London. 'Tis dated at Westminster, March 13, 1626.

4. A Commission directed to the Lord-Keeper, and others his Majesty's Judges and Justices of the Peace, for enquiring into irregular and illegal Buildings, and such Houses as entertain several Families under one Roof, and into the Obstructions, Nusances, and Incroachments in the Streets of the City; dated Jan. 29, 1627.

828. 5. ARTICLES and Instructions for the better Direction of the Commissioners in the Execution of the abovementioned Commission.

889. 6. A Commission to enquire into the State of Bethlehem Hospital, commonly called Bedlam, near Bishopsgate, and to reform all Abuses in the Management of its Patients and its Revenues; dated May 12, 1627, at Westminster.

THIS Commission was granted upon a Petition of Helkiah Croke, M. D. whom King James had appointed Guardian of the said Hospital, setting forth, that he had done his utmost for regulating the said Hospital, but had always been opposed by the Governors of Bridewell, who are also by the City of London appointed Governors of Bedlam.

Manufactures.

60. 1. A Grant of a Pension of 2000 l. a Year to Sir Francis Crane, for the Encouragement of the Work of Tapestries, which he lately brought into the Kingdom, and erected at Mortlake in the County of Surrey. 'Tis dated at Westminster the 10th of May, 1625.

810. 2. A Proclamation to restrain the unlawful Transportation of Hides and Leather to Scotland and other Foreign Parts; dated at Whitehall, Dec. 14, 1626.

813. 3. Another for the better making of Salt-Petre within this Kingdom; dated at Whitehall, Jan. 2, 1627.

IT took notice that a Patent was granted to Sir John Brook and Thomas Russel, Esq; for the sole Privilege of making it during a Term of Years, and enjoined all Housekeepers to save all their Urine together with the Stale of their Cattle, entire without any Mixture, for the use of the Patentees, who were to cause the same to be removed to their Workhouses once a day in the Summer, and every other Day in the Winter.

915. 4. ANOTHER for keeping up and improving the Mines of Salt-Petre, for the right making of Salt-Petre and Gun-Powder, and for remedying all Abuses therein. 'Tis dated July 23, at Ampthil.

23. THERE is another of the same Tenor, dated at Whitehall, April 13, 1625.

918. 5. A Commission to the Duke of Bucks Lord High-Admiral, to George Earl of Totness, Master-General of the Ordnance, &c. their Deputies and Workmen, to enter, break open, and work for Salt-Petre in all Houses and Lands belonging either to the Crown or the Subject; dated July 25, at Canbury. CHARLES I. 957.

6. A Proclamation for preventing the purloining and stealing of Arms, Gun-Powder, and all other military Stores; dated Dec. 8, at Whitehall.

IT was issued upon Information that great Quantities had been purloined and sold in and about Plymouth, after the Return of the Fleet from the Isle of Rhee.

965. 7. ANOTHER against the unnecessary Consumption of Gun-Powder in Salutations, and other needless Ceremonies used in his Majesty's Castles and Ships, and commanding that no Shot be made from any of the Forts or Shipping but in Fight with the Enemies, or as Warning-Pieces upon Discovery of any Enemy, or for intercepting or arresting any Foreign Ships, or in case of Distress, without special Authority given or derived from the King or the Lord High-Admiral. 'Tis dated the 10th of February 1628.

Mines and Minerals.

21. 1. A Proclamation prohibiting the Importation of Allum, and the buying and spending thereof in any of his Majesty's Dominions; dated at Whitehall, April 13, 1625. 153.

THIS was the Produce of certain Mines discovered in Yorkshire, and brought to perfection after the Expence of great Sums of Money by King James I.

66. 2. A special Commission directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Bucks, and others, appointing them Governors of the Royal Mines and Mineral Works of Gold, Silver, Copper, and Lead in Cardiganshire, which were farmed by Sir Hugh Middleton, Bart. who as the Patent sets forth, had been at great Charge and Pains to bring them to Perfection; dated May 12.

90. 3. A Grant of a Lease for 21 Years to George Villiers Duke of Bucks, of certain Mines of Silver and Lead, in or near Mugglisby in the County of Durham, on paying the King one Tenth of the Silver. 'Tis dated at Westminster the 23d of May. 174.

936. 4. A Commission to the Earl of Devonshire and others, to make a Contract with the Miners of Derbyshire, for farming their Lead-Mines, upon Information that a good Quantity of Silver was to be found in those Mines, and that Foreigners to whom the Lead had been transported, had refined it, and thereby gained much Silver. 'Tis dated at Canbury, August 22, 1627. 156. 236.

Misdemeanors.

863. 1. A Proclamation for apprehending John Holland Steward to the Earl of Lincoln, and Robert Blowe Clerk of the Kitchen, who had committed divers Misdemeanors, to the Danger and Disturbance of the State. 'Tis dated at Whitehall, March 20, 1627.

967. 2. ANOTHER for putting the Laws in execution against Rogues and Vagabonds; dated Feb. 16, 1628.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. 1621.

3. A Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer to the Earls of Sunderland, Cumberland, and Mulgrave, the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of Durham and Carliſle, and to ſeveral Knights and Gentlemen in the North; dated at Weſtminſter, June 9.

CHARLES I. 246.

5. A ſpecial Warrant impowering the Duke of Bucks to borrow of the States-General, or their Subjects 300,000 l. or ſuch Sum as he could get for the Pawn of certain Jewels, Plate, &c. mentioned in the Schedule above referred to. 'Tis dated at Windſor, Dec. 16.

306. 6. A Commiſſion to the Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to manage, demiſe, and diſpoſe of the King's Lands in the Dutchy of Cornwal, and the Revenues thereof, for Payment of his Debts; and to agree and compound with his Tenants there for Leaſes. Given under the Privy-Seal at Weſtminſter, February 23, 1626.

Mortgages for Loans, &c.

101. 1. A Mortgage of divers Royal Manors therein mentioned to Edward Allen, Robert Ducie, George Whitmore, Nicholas Rainton, Thomas Moulſon, Robert Parkhurſt, Aldermen of London; Chriſtopher Cletheroe, Eſq; Francis Neave, William Rodowaie, Mich. Grigge, Merchant-Taylors; Edward Cropley, John Cordel, Hugh Perry, Mercers; Simon Lawrence, Grocer; John Mannyng, Thomas Smith, Skinners; Anthony Abdie, Clothworker; and James Bunce, Leatherſeller, Citizens of London, Perſons named in Truſt to receive Security for the Repayment of Moneys lent to the late and preſent King by the Citizens, with Intereſt for the ſame. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, June 1, 1625.

153. 2. A Grant to certain Commiſſioners who had taken up 40,000 l. at Intereſt for Charles I. when he was Prince of Wales. The Perſons to whom the Commiſſioners had given Bonds for the ſeveral Sums were, Sir Paul Bannynge, Bart. George Huxley, Eſq; Thomas Plummer, Roger Palmer, Eſq; Sir Peter le Maire, John Smith, Eſq; Mr. Richard Grigge, William Boulton, Eſq; John Bland Citizen and Grocer, Mr. John Gouldwell, Thomas Hooſt of London, Merchant, Philip Burlimachie a Dutch Merchant, James Oyles, John Cotton, and David Edwards Citizens of London.

IT appears that this Money was depoſited in the hands of Philip Burlimachie, to be employed towards the Pay of 12,000 Soldiers, then at and about Dover, and for tranſporting them beyond Sea for the Service of the late King (James I.)

IN this Grant, which is dated at Foxley, July 22, the Securities are ſpecified which were given by the King to the Commiſſioners, who were bound for the Loan. See the Commiſſion dated Aug. 12, at Oxford.

174.

156. 3. ANOTHER Act of the like nature granted to Sir William Courten of London, Merchant, for repaying him 27,000 l. ſo advanced, with 8 per Cent Intereſt out of the two entire Subſidies of the Laity granted lately to the King by Parliament. 'Tis dated as above July 29.

236. 4. A Warrant for the Delivery of certain Jewels and Plate to George Duke of Bucks and Henry Earl of Holland, the King's Ambaſſadors Extraordinary to the States of the United Provinces, for their Diſpoſal thereof in ſuch manner as the King had ordered them by private Direction.

THE Warrant is dated December 7, at Hampton-Court. How thoſe Jewels, &c. were diſpoſed of, appears from the following Act.

Navy.

13. 1. A Commiſſion to Sir Richard Weſton, Knt. Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, and other Perſons therein mentioned, transferring to them the Authority of the Comptroller, Surveyor, and Clerk of the Navy, under the Direction of George Duke of Bucks, without whoſe Advice they were to undertake no Caſe of Difficulty or Importance. 'Tis dated the 7th of April 1625, at Weſtminſter.

104. 2. ANOTHER of the ſame kind dated the 4th of June.

245. 3. A Proclamation dated Dec. 15, at Windſor, ſignifying that the Ships which were ſent to Sea in October, were ſhortly expected in ſome of the Weſtern Ports of the Kingdom, and commanding that none of the Soldiers upon their Arrival ſhould depart from their Colours, or be diſcharged from their Service 'till his Majeſty's Pleaſure be farther known.

THIS was the Fleet that was ſent on that unſucceſsful Expedition againſt Spain, under Command of Edward Cecil Viſcount Wimbleton, which we mentioned in p. 555. Whitelock ſays the Duke of Bucks was the only one of the King's Council that knew of it, and that Sir Robert Manſel Vice-Admiral, the moſt experienced Sea-Officer in England, and the Lord Chicheſter, another old Officer, declared againſt the Undertaking.

WHEN this Fleet was outward bound, it met with a furious Storm after four Days Sail, which ſunk one of the beſt Ships with all her Crew, and ſo diſperſed the reſt, that 50 of them were miſſing for ſeven Days, but they joined again on the Coaſts of Spain. 'Tis obſervable, that notwithſtanding the Storm and Plague at Sea, and the Surfeit in Spain, Lord Clarendon ſays, that all the Ships, and upon the Matter all the Men came back again.

250. 4. A Commiſſion for the Duke of Bucks, Lord High-Admiral, for ſuppreſſing Pyracies; dated Dec. 22, at Weſtminſter.

252. 5. A Proclamation to the well-manning and arming ſuch Ships as ſet out to Sea; dated at Hampton-Court, Dec. 24.

253. 6. A Proclamation againſt embezzling of Armour, Ammunition, Victuals, and other Military Naval Stores; dated as above the 25th ditto.

7.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. 674. 7. A Warrant to the Duke of Bucks, Lord High-Admiral, and other Officers of the Admiralty, for the Payment of 17,000 l. for the Victualling of the Fleet for this Season; dated at Weſtminſter, April 18, 1626.

679. 8. A Proclamation for the Encouragement of Sailors by increaſing their Pay from 14 s. to 20 s. a Month; and for the Allowance of 5 s. per Tun to every Ship, which ſhall hereafter be built of 200 Tuns or upwards, for the better Encouragement of Ship-Building. 'Tis dated at Whitehall, April 27.

721. 9. A Proclamation againſt Mariners abſenting from the Service, and requiring them to repair to the Places, and at the Times appointed, upon Pain of Death, and all other Pains, Penalties, and Forfeitures enjoined by the Law. 'Tis dated June 18.

750. 10. A Proclamation for all Captains, Maſters, and Officers of Ships, and for all Mariners that are to ſerve in the King's Fleet, to repair immediately to Portſmouth. 'Tis dated the 29th of Auguſt.

758. 11. A Commiſſion to diſcover all Defects and Abuſes committed in or about the Navy; dated Sept. 12, at Weſtminſter.

766. 12. A Commiſſion to the Duke of Soubize, Brother to the Duke of Rohan, to levy Ships of War for attacking the Subjects of the King of Spain; dated Oct. 10.

HE was to bring all Prizes that he took into ſome Port of England.

802. 13. A Commiſſion for collecting and ſetting down proper Directions and Regulations for preventing Abuſes, as well in Matters of Commerce as Prize. 'Tis dated Nov. 27.

904. 14. A Commiſſion for levying and appropriating the Penalties of Popiſh Recuſants Convict, towards the expence of equipping ſix ſtout Men of War for Defence of the Coaſt, from the fartheſt North-Eaſt Point of the Shore, to the Mouth of the River Thames, by reaſon of the Depredations which the Inhabitants of the Maritime Places, eſpecially in the North Parts, had ſuffered from the Aſſaults and Inſults of Foreign Enemies at Sea.

THE Newcaſtle and Sunderland Men offered alſo to contribute Six-pence for every Chaldron of Coals, which they ſent away by Sea or Land, that they might have the Benefit of the ſaid Convoys, which the King accepted. The Commiſſion is dated June 23, 1627, at Weſtminſter.

912. 15. A Proclamation declaring his Majeſty's Intention upon that Head; dated at Whitehall, June 27.

968. 16. A Proclamation for ſuppreſſing and preventing Mutinies among the Mariners lately returned from the Iſle of Rhee, by billetting them 'till they had received their Pay, about Wapping, Stepney, &c. and furniſhing them with Meat, Drink, and Lodging, after the rate of 3 s. 6 d. a Week. 'Tis dated at Whitehall, Feb. 17, 1628.

THE Mariners came in Multitudes to the Court at Whitehall, clamouring in great Diſorder and Confuſion for their Pay, which Mr. Rapin ſays, they complained they had not received for three Years paſt, and that they deſerted in great Numbers, that they might not be forced to ſerve any longer for nothing. CHARLES I.

1017. 17. A Commiſſion to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c. for the well-ordering and husbanding the Affairs of the Royal Navy; dated at Weſtminſter, May 2, 1628.

1035. 18. A Proclamation, directing that Priſoners taken at Sea by Men of War, and brought to England, ſhall be kept in Priſon and ſafe Cuſtody at the Charge of thoſe who bring them hither, 'till they are releaſed by way of Exchange, or otherwiſe; dated from the Court at Portſmouth, July 23.

THIS was to reſtrain the Indulgence granted to ſeveral Priſoners, who by being ſuffered to go about, had Opportunities of obſerving Paſſages, of conferring with the Diſaffected, and corrupting them, and of viewing the Situation and Condition of Places moſt liable to be invaded.

Nobility and Gentry.

798. 1. A Proclamation commanding the Repair of Noblemen, Knights, and Gentlemen of Quality to their Manſion-Houſes in the Country, there to attend their Services, and keep Hoſpitality at the approaching Feſtival of Chriſtmas; dated at Whitehall, Nov. 23, 1626.

IT took notice that by their frequent Reſort and ordinary Reſidence in London and Weſtminſter, thoſe Cities were overburdened with Inhabitants and Recuſants, and requires them immediately, by the end of this Month, to repair, as aforeſaid, to their Country-Seats, on the Penalty not only of Diſability to hold any Places of Truſt under his Majeſty, but alſo of further Cenſure and Puniſhment.

950. 2. ANOTHER of the ſame nature; dated the 28th of November 1627.

Palatinate.

77. 1. A Draught of Inſtructions concerning the Palatinate.

IT has no Date or Subſcription, but may be imagined to have been drawn up by the Duke of Bucks, for ſome Miniſter who had a Commiſſion to the Prince of Orange about the Affair of Amboyna; for he inſtructs him to tell the Prince, that if he receive ſatisfaction in the Buſineſs of Amboyna, which he muſt require inſtantly, he would be glad to take occaſion upon a League to be formed between the neighbouring Kings and Princes of Germany for the Recovery of the Palatinate, to move his Majeſty to make a League Offenſive and Defenſive with the States-General 'till the Palatinate ſhall be recovered to the entire Poſſeſſion of his Majeſty's Son-in-Law and his Heirs. As he makes this Overture of his own Head, he fears if it were known to the King, while he ſtands injured and neglected by the Dutch, it might ruin his Credit with him, but he expreſſes an entire Confidence in the Judgment and Secrecy of the Prince of Orange.

HE

1. He inſtructs him farther to acquaint his Excellency, that upon the Negotiations with Denmark, Sweden, &c. his Majeſty expects to have an Army in the Field of 30 or 40,000 Men, whereof 6 or 8000 to be Horſe. And becauſe the Parliament cannot meet ſoon enough to raiſe and pay the Number of Soldiers requiſite for his Majeſty's Quota, he bids him tell the Prince, that his Majeſty would take it very kindly, if the States will permit the 6000 Engliſh paid by his Majeſty in the Low Countries, to join with that Army for re-eſtabliſhing Peace in Germany, and recovering the Palatinate, and that in ſuch Caſe his Majeſty will ſend as many more Men to them to be alſo paid by his Majeſty, and continued as many more Months longer with the States than the Day concluded of in the laſt Contract, as theſe 6000 ſhall be abſent from their Service.

He was alſo to ſift his Excellency, whether he thought that State would, upon a ſudden Emergency, furniſh him with 1000 Horſe, and 18 or 20 Pieces of Ordinance for that Service, and upon what Terms.

171. 2. A Commission to the Duke of Bucks to be Admiral, Captain-General, and Governor of the Fleet and Army of 10,000 Men that were to be ſhipped at Plymouth for aſſiſting the King's Brother-in-Law and Siſter, the Prince and Princeſs, Electors Palatine, in recovering their rightful Patrimony and Inheritance which had been taken from them in a hoſtile Manner. It is dated at Oxford Auguſt the 6th, 1625.

Mr. Rapin is miſtaken to call it Portſmouth. It ſeems alſo that both he and Whitlock were out in the Number of Land-Men, which the former makes only 8000, and the latter 12,000.

The Duke was hereby impowered by a Bill or Warrant under his Hand, to take up any Carriages by Land or Sea that ſhould be neceſſary for the King's Service, and all Magiſtrates were charged to be obedient.

181. 3. Instructions for the Duke of Bucks concerning the Fleet; by which it appears that the King of Spain had aſſiſted in the Oppreſſion of the Elector Palatine; becauſe the Duke was ordered to deſtroy the Spaniſh Shipping and Proviſion, to plunder any rich Town that he ſhould find, and to lie in wait for the Plate-Fleet, or to follow the Spaniſh Fleet, that was purſuing the Dutch to Braſil. They are taken out of Bibliotheque Harley, as well as thoſe above-mentioned, but have no Date nor Subſcription. The Fleet here meant is that which went to Spain under Lord Wimbleton.

207. 4. Instructions to treat with France. To whom they were addreſſed is not ſaid, nor by whom ſigned, but they are copied from Bibliotheque Harley, and dated October the 17th, at Salisbury, where the Court then was.

We may very well ſuppoſe that they were addreſſed to the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland, then at the Hague, with a Deſign to go to France. They were to perſwade the French King to join with King Charles in the offenſive and defenſive League he had made with the States General againſt the King of Spain, in order to bring the Houſe of Auſtria, which had long aimed at the Settlement of the Empire hereditarily in their Family, to conſent to the Reſtitution of the Palatinate, to leave the Valloline and Switzers in their ancient Liberties, and to their right Protectors, for the Security of the French Dominions on that Side, and for reſtoring Peace to Germany, and to each Prince of the Empire their proper Eſtates.

At the ſame Time the French King's Proteſtant Subjects (at Rochel) were to be perſwaded to accept of ſuch Terms as their Sovereign ſhould offer them, to rely on the King's (Charles's) Mediation with their Sovereign that thoſe Conditions ſhould be kept, and on his Promiſe that if ſuch Mediation did not prevail, he would aſſiſt and defend them.

But if he refuſed, or ſo far delayed to grant his ſaid Proteſtant Subjects Conditions of Peace (notwithſtanding King Charles's Diſcountenance of, and Aſſiſtance againſt Soubize, who was their Sollicitor) as to endanger their Deſtruction, the Ambaſſador was to let him know that King Charles could not be contented to ſee the Proteſtants, thoſe good Subjects of France, ruined by the Enemies of France, to the apparent Danger of his Sovereignty and of the Sovereignty of all other Princes and States, ſince the Enemies of France made the Extirpation of Hereticks a Pretence for encreaſing their Monarchy.

The Ambaſſador was to obſerve, that the Caſe of the Proteſtant Subjects of France, and of the Roman Catholicks in England, and other Proteſtant Countries, was different, ſince the former acknowledge no Sovereignty but their King's, whereas the Roman Catholick Subjects of other Princes do not only acknowledge the Pope's Power in ſpiritual Things, but a Poſſibility and Authority to incline and ſubmit them to the Favour and Protection of the King of Spain.

He was, moreover, to repreſent to the French King, that it would be as imprudent and ſlothful for all the Proteſtants in the World to ſtand by and ſee the Depreſſion and Extirpation of their Religion in France, as it would be for the Magiſtrate of a City to ſpare the pulling down of ſome Houſes, to ſave the reſt from a Fire ſpreading towards them.

If the Ambaſſador ſhould find that the French King had not, upon his Requeſt by Lorkin, ſent back his Ships, he was to preſs their Return for Defence of the Engliſh Coaſts, and the narrow Seas, rather than to be employed for the Extirpation of thoſe of the Proteſtant Religion in France, for whom the King gave his Word that they would ever remain loyal Subjects to their Sovereign, and that they would as vigorouſly defend his Perſon and Eſtate as any of his Subjects whatſoever.

Finally, The Ambaſſador was to ſollicit the Reverſion of the Government of Picardy for the Duke de Chevreuſe, and for the Removal of the French Secretary, who is ſaid to have done the King (Charles) many ill Offices: And for this End, the Ambaſſador was to uſe the Mediation of ſuch Miniſters at the Court of France as were beſt diſpoſed to the King of England; eſpecially the Queen Mother and the Queen Regent.

209. 5. Instructions for the Ambaſſadors to the States, to treat of the Reſtoration of the King's Brother, Siſter, and Nephews, to their ancient Dignities and Eſtates, as alſo of the Peace of Germany. They are of the ſame Date as the former, and without any Subſcription. The only Ambaſſador herein mentioned is, Henry Earl of Holland; but, as is ſaid above, it appears from the Hiſtory of this Time, that the Duke of Bucks was the other.

When they came to the Hague, where Sir Dudley Carleton was then the Engliſh Reſident, they were to acquaint the Elector and Electoreſs Palatine of the King's Reſolution to purſue the Re-eſtabliſhment of them and their Children to their Eſtates and Dignities. And they were to repreſent to the Prince of Orange, and the States, the great Advantages which they received, among others, from their League with England, not only by the Diverſion and Suſpenſion of the King of Spain's Power from falling upon them, but by the Aſſiſtance of the Engliſh Ships in the narrow Seas, which would break the King of Spain's great Project grounded upon the forming of a Company or Admiralty between Flanders and Spain, for infeſting the Dutch Fiſhery and Trade. They were alſo to ſhew the infinite Coſt the King was, and muſt be at, in fitting out Fleets, and other Aids, to them, the King of Denmark, Count Mansfield, and otherwiſe. All which was to be repreſented with a View to convince the Dutch of the Neceſſity there was of joining ſeriouſly for the vigorous Suppport of the War.

They were likewiſe to deſire the States to keep the Forces they had raiſed for the Relief of Breda two Months longer in their Pay; and to inſiſt on that, and every other Article relating to the Aſſiſtance or Accommodation of the King of Denmark or Count Mansfelt. They were to conſult with the Dutch upon the Feaſibleneſs of the Conqueſt of Dunkirk, Oſtend, and Mardyke, and to adviſe them to preſerve their Unity, as the only Foundation and principal Cement of their State, which had been dangerouſly ſhaken of late by religious Sects and Factions brought in by the Truce, by a Liquoriſhneſs after the Trade with Spain, by the Hopes of entertaining either the Armenian or Romiſh Religion, and alſo by Domeſtick Quarrels betwixt one Province and Town and another. Finally, they were to preſs them for ſpeedy Juſtice, and Satisfaction of our Merchants in point of Honour and Profit as to the Buſineſs of Amboyna, and for ſuch a Regulation between the Ships and Subjects of both States as might prevent all future Queſtions and Exceptions.

Charles I.

211. 5. Other Inſtructions of the ſame Date to the ſaid Ambaſſadors, for treating with the King's Uncle, the King of Denmark, in order, if poſſible, to moderate the King of England's Quota towards the War, who was charged with the Maintenance of 6000 Foot and 1000 Horſe, beſides Artillery, or with 30,000 l. a Month; but this was to be done with Caution, leſt he ſhould think of diſengaging himſelf, and cloſing with the Emperor.

212. 6. Instructions of the ſame Date to treat with Swedeland. The Ambaſſadors were to endeavour by all means to promote a good Underſtanding between the Kings of Sweden and Denmark, becauſe a Diſunion and a War between them would give an Opportunity to their publick Enemies the Houſe of Auſtria and the King of Poland, to devour one firſt, and the other after. They were to put the King of Sweden in mind of the eternal Quarrel betwixt him and Poland, of the ſtrict Alliance between the Emperor and that Crown, and that if he ſuffer the German Princes to be ſubdued, the Houſe of Auſtria and the King of Poland will not want Pretences either of Religion or State to invade Sweden. They were to perſwade his Swediſh Majeſty to enter into Confederacy with Great-Britain, Denmark, the Dutch, and the reſt of the Princes of Germany, who from ſeveral Intereſts were engaged in a War againſt the Houſe of Auſtria and Bavaria. They were for this Reaſon to acquaint him, that their Maſter being moſt properly ſeated and beſt furniſhed for maritime Actions, had undertaken, at very great Expence, to interrupt, or to ſhare in the Wealth the Houſe of Auſtria drew from the Indian Mines,

Mines, on which the aſpiring Hopes of that Family for unlimited Monarchy were firſt blown up, and are ſolely maintained: And finally, they were to conſult with his Swediſh Majeſty on the great Importance of taking away the Harbours of Flanders from the King of Spain.

747. 7. A COMMISSION conſtituting Robert Lord Willoughby of Eresby, who was Great Chamberlain of England, to be Admiral, Captain-General, and Governor of the Fleet to be ſent forth for the Service of the Prince and Princeſs, Electors Palatine. It is dated at Canbury the 29th of Auguſt, 1626.

210. 8. A COMMISSION to the Marquiſs of Baden, to raiſe 4000 Foot and 1000 Horſe, to be employed againſt the King of Spain, for reſtoring Frederick, Elector Palatine, and the Princeſs Elizabeth, to their Dominions. It is dated at Weſtminſter, November the 3d.

791. 9. ANOTHER Commiſſion to the Marquiſs to march with thoſe Forces for the ſame Purpoſe. Dated November the 10th.

886. 10. A COMMISSION to Sir Robert Anſtruther to go to Nuremberg, where a Congreſs was appointed of the Electors and other Princes, in order to treat of the Peace of Germany, and of the Affairs of the Elector Palatine. It is ſigned with the King's own Hand at Weſtminſter, April the 12th, 1627.

945. HE had another afterwards to go to Malhauſen, which was ſigned by the King's own Hand at Weſtminſter, October the 20th.

Pardons.

43. 1. A PARDON for twenty Popiſh Recuſants, of whom ſix were Clergy-men. Dated at Weſtminſter May the 4th, 1625.

MR. Ruſhworth mentions a ſpecial Pardon granted on the 10th of this Month to twenty Roman Prieſts, of all Offences committed contrary to the Laws then in Force againſt the Papiſts. Which Pardon he calls the Firſt-Fruits of the Indulgence and Favour promiſed to the Catholicks by vertue of the King's Marriage-Treaty.

2. A PARTICULAR Pardon of the ſame Kind and Date, for Edward Lord Vaux, of Harrowden Magnâ in the County of *Northampton. 44.

'So ſoon, ſays another Author, did 'the ſad Effects of the Popiſh Alliance 'with France appear, and ſo kind was the 'young King to the young Queen.'

3. A PARDON for Lionel Earl of Middleſex, who in the late Reign was ſentenced by the Houſe of Lords to pay a Fine of 50,000 l. Dated May the 10th, 1625, at Weſtminſter. 69.

4. A PARDON for James Alleſtre of Coventry Goldſmith, who was convicted in the late Reign of clipping and filing Shillings. It is dated May the 23d, at Weſtminſter. 92.

5. A PARDON for Ezekiel Groſſe of Camborne in the County of Cornwal, who in the late Reign had a Bill preferred againſt him in the Star-Chamber, for ſcandalous Words againſt the King, the Prince, and the Duke of Bucks; and afterwards, for having committed Adultery with Elizabeth Meriſield, was by the High Commiſſion Court at Lambeth fined in a Sum of 2000 l. and ordered to do publick Pennance at the Pariſh-Church of St. Burien, and to ſuffer Impriſonment. 166.

THE ſcandalous Words laid to his Charge were theſe that follow, as they are expreſſed in the Pardon; viz. 'The King 'and the Prince (innuendo King James 'and Charles Prince of Wales) are both 'rank Papiſts. If it were not ſo, then 'why ſhould the King ſend the Prince 'over into Spain with the Arch-Papiſt of 'England the Duke of Buckingham?— 'The Archbiſhop (innuendo George Archbiſhop of Canterbury) and the Nobility of the Realm (innuendo of England) have ſworn and ſubſcribed to

* THIS Family, whoſe Seat had been at Harrowden above 300 Years, was deſcended of Robert de Vaux, a Great Man in the North of England. In the Time of the ſharp Conteſt between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter, William de Vaux of this Family was a fierce Stickler for the Lancaſtrians, and on that account loſt all his Eſtate when King Edward IV obtained the Crown: But his Son Nicholas, on the Acceſſion of Henry VII to the Throne, not only regained his Eſtate, but was highly in that Prince's Favour, and a principal Perſon at the Solemnity of Prince Arthur's Marriage. King Henry VIII alſo made him Lieutenant of the Caſtle of Guiſnes, ſent him one of his Ambaſſadors to confirm the Peace with the French King, and at length he was advanced to the Dignity of a Baron of this Realm, which Honour continued in the Family 'till the Year 1661, when Edward Lord Vaux died without Iſſue.

WHEN King Charles was Priſoner at Holmby-Houſe, he came ſometimes under a proper Guard to a Bowling-Green at this Lord's Seat, of which Diverſion he was very fond.

IT appears by a Letter in the Cabala (dated the 20th of November, 1625) from the Earl of Carliſle to the Duke of Buckingham, then in Holland, that when the Reſolution of the King and Council for the diſarming of all the Popiſh Lords came to be executed at this Lord's Houſe by the Deputy Lieutenant, aſſiſted by Mr. Knightly a Juſtice of the Peace, a Quarrel happened, in which ſome Blows were exchanged between his Lordſhip and his Worſhip, and that when Complaint was made of it to the King in Council, by whom the matter was referred to the Court of Star-Chamber for next Term, the Lord Vaux took Occaſion to tell Sir William Spencer (who with the reſt had given Information in favour of Mr. Knightly) that tho' he had neglected his Reputation before the Lords, yet he doubted not but he would have more Care of his Oath when it came to be examined in the Star-Chamber: Upon which Sir William Spencer, finding his Character called in queſtion, complained, and the Lord Vaux was committed Priſoner to the Fleet.

THE Earl adviſes the Duke that he need not be uneaſy about the diſarming of the Lords Recuſants, by aſſuring him, that there was as much Reſpect had to ſome who have Relation to his Lordſhip as he himſelf would deſire.

THIS Pardon bears Date at Oxford, Auguſt the 3d.

292. 6. ANOTHER for Ferdinando Cardues of Amſterdam, for the Murder of Peter Clauſon of Plymouth. It is dated February the 12th, 1626, at Weſtminſter.

319. 7. A COMMISSION to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and others to repriеve and ſtay from Execution ſuch Perſons as ſtand convicted of Felony, &c. who were able enough of Body to be employed in foreign Diſcoveries, or other Services beyond the Seas; and alſo to appoint and commit them to ſuch Service. This Commiſſion, which excepts all Malefactors convicted of Murders, Rapes, Witchcraft, High-way Robberies, Burglaries, and Burning of Houſes, is dated as above, March the 8th.

1050. THERE is another to the ſame Purpoſe dated September the 20th, 1628.

630. 8. A GENERAL Liſt of Pardons granted in the firſt Year of King Charles.

678. 9. A PARDON granted to Henry Hinckley of Southampton, for Pyracies committed within the Juriſdiction of the Admiralty of England. Dated at Weſtminſter April the 26th, 1626.

726. 10. A PARDON of Heron Heris, a Foreigner, for the Murder of another Foreigner, Tobias Wolties. Dated July 6.

744. 11. ANOTHER ſpecial Pardon granted to Lionel Earl of Middleſex, of all Penalties and Diſabilities impoſed on him by Parliament in the 21ſt Year of King James, for Errors and Miſdemeanors in certain Offices which he held in that Reign. In the Preamble to this Proclamation, which is dated at Canbury Auguſt the 20th, his ſeveral Employments are enumerated as follows; viz. Maſter of the great Wardrobe, Maſter of the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Lord High Treaſurer, General Receiver of the Revenues of Dorſet and Somerſet, Surveyor General of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms, Receiver of the Fines and Profits of Wine Licenſes, Receiver of the Impoſitions upon Silk, Lawns, and Cambricks, &c. and Receiver of the 3 d. in the Pound on Strangers. It is alſo ſaid in the Preamble, that upon the Earl's Petition to King James, he had been pleaſed to reduce his Fine of 50,000 l. to 20,000 l. which the ſaid Earl actually paid, and ſubmitted himſelf to the reſt of the Cenſures, and to the Diſability of ſitting in the upper Houſe, which with all others were by this Proclamation taken off.

Parliament.

1. THE King's Warrant to the Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, to iſſue Writs for calling a Parliament (which was the ſecond of this Reign) to meet at Weſtminſter on the 6th of February, 162⅞*. It is dated at Hampton-Court, Dec. 16, 1625. 245.

2. A PROCLAMATION againſt publiſhing a Declaration or Remonſtrance of the late diſſolved Parliament. Dated at Weſtminſter June the 17th, 1626. 721.

THIS Proclamation ſays, that ſeveral Copies of the ſaid Remonſtrance having been diſperſed, containing many things to the Diſhonour of the King and his Royal Father, his Majeſty for ſuppreſſing of this inſufferable Wrong, commands all Perſons who have any Copies or Notes of the ſaid Remonſtrance forthwith to burn the ſame, that the Memory thereof may be utterly aboliſhed.

3. A PROCLAMATION for calling a Parliament to meet on the 17th of March next. Dated the 16th of February, 1628, at Whitehall. 967.

Patents for Peerage.

9. 1. A PATENT dated the 1ſt of April, 1625, at Weſtminſter, for creating Sir Edward Chicheſter Baron Chicheſter of Belfaſt, and Viſcount Chicheſter of Karickfergus in Ireland, with an annual Fee of 13 l. 6 s. 8 d. payable out of the great and ſmall Cuſtoms collected at the Port of Dublin.

17. 2. ANOTHER for creating Sir Robert Needham of Shenton, in the County of Salop, a Peer of Ireland, with the Stile and Title of Robert Viſcount of Kilmorey; and the ſame yearly Fee. It is dated the 8th of April, at Weſtminſter.

It recites his Services to Q. Elizabeth againſt the Rebels and Traitors in Ireland, and his worthy Behaviour in the Reign of King James I, while he was Vice-Preſident of the Council in Wales.

180. 3. ANOTHER for creating Hugh Hare, Eſq; Son to Margaret Viſcounteſs Mandeville, who was about to marry the Daughter of Henry Viſcount Mandeville, Preſident of the Council, a Peer of Ireland, with the Title of Baron Colerain of Colerain. It is dated Aug. 31, at Southampton. This Gentleman, who was created a Baron when but 19 Years of Age, was noted for a great Floriſt.

278. 4. A PATENT for advancing George Lord Carew of Clopton, Maſter of the Ordnance, to the Dignity of Earl of Totneſs in the County of Devon. It is dated the 5th of February, 1626, at Weſtminſter. The Preamble recites his Induſtry, Skill, and ſucceſsful Exploits in War, both by Land and Sea, and his Fortitude and Prudence when he was Preſident of the Province of Munſter in Ireland, not only in ſubduing the Rebels there, but in expelling the Spaniards, who had invaded that Kingdom.

280. 5. ANOTHER creating Robert Lord Cary of Leppington Earl of Monmouth, of the

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. CHARLES I.

the ſame Date as above. The Preamble takes notice of his Deſcent from a very ancient Family, and his being Couſen to Queen Elizabeth; that upon her Death he undertook a Journey to Scotland, with great Hazard of his Life, to carry King James the News of his Acceſſion to the Crown, who afterwards committed the Care of Prince Charles's Education to him; and that he accompanied the ſaid Prince to Spain.

281. 6. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for advancing Thomas Lord Wentworth of Nettleſtead in Yorkſhire, to the Dignity of Earl of Cleveland. King Charles ſoon after made him Captain of the Guards. He had been made Knight of the Bath at the Creation of Henry Prince of Wales in 1610; and in the eighth of King James he was created a Baron.

282. 7. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for advancing Edmund Lord Sheffield, Baron of Butterwick, &c. Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, to the Dignity of Earl of Mulgrave in Yorkſhire. The Preamble takes notice of his gallant and honourable Behaviour for ſeventeen Years, while he was Preſident of the Council in the North of England, and particularly of his Service in 1588, againſt the Spaniards, who then invaded the Kingdom; for which Queen Elizabeth granted to the ſaid Lord and his Heirs the Manour of Mulgrave in Yorkſhire. It is ſaid that he had ſix Sons, of whom four were drown'd, and another broke his Neck by a Fall from a Horſe.

284. 8. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for advancing Thomas Howard, Baron of Charlton, Viſcount Andover, and Knight of the Garter (the ſecond Son of Thomas Earl of Suffolk) to the Dignity of Earl of Berkſhire.

285. 9. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for advancing Henry Baron Danvers of Danſtey in the County of Wilts (Son of Sir John Danvers) to the Dignity of Earl of Danby in Yorkſhire. The Preamble takes notice, that he was created a Baron by King James I, for his heroic Services to Queen Elizabeth, eſpecially in Ireland, as well againſt the Rebels there as the Spaniſh Invaders, particularly at Kinſale. He was alſo created by King Charles a Knight of the Garter. This Lord, who was likewiſe Governour of the Iſle of Guernſey, was afterwards Founder of the Phyſick-Garden at Oxford, which had 'till then been the Jews Burial-place. He purchaſed the Ground, which is five Acres, of Magdalen College, and erected round it moſt magnificent Walls and Gates of the beſt ſquared and poliſhed Stone, which coſt him 5 or 600 l. He endowed it with an annual Revenue for ever for the Maintenance and keeping of the ſame, and its great Variety of Plants.

10. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for creating Henry Montagu (who was Baron of Kimbolton, and Viſcount Mandeville) Earl of Mancheſter. The Preamble takes notice of his Deſcent from the ancient and moſt noble Family of Montacutes, and of his Behaviour in the late Reign, when he was Recorder of London, Lord Chief Juſtice, and afterwards High Treaſurer of England, and Preſident of the Council.

THIS Nobleman was the firſt Earl of the Family: He was created a Baron of Kimbolton and Viſcount Mandeville, Decemb. 19, 1620, becauſe he was then in Poſſeſſion of the Caſtle and Lordſhip of Kimbolton, which had for many Ages belong'd to the Family of Mandeville. His Brother was Edward Lord Montagu of Boughton.

289. 11. ANOTHER of the ſame Date for advancing James Lord Ley of Ley, to the Dignity of Earl of Marlborough in Wilts. The Preamble mentions his prudent and faithful Diſcharge of the Offices of Lord Chief Juſtice in Ireland, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas in England, one of the Commiſſioners of the Revenue, and afterwards Lord High Treaſurer.

THIS Earl had made himſelf very eminent for his Proficiency in the Laws of England, and was firſt preferr'd in 44 Eliz. to be Lent-Reader in Lincolns-Inn; ſoon after which he was raiſed to diverſe Degrees of Honour, and eminent Employments. King James made him a Baron, and King Charles an Earl, with a Limitation of this Honour to the Heirs Male of his Body by Jane his third Wife, Daughter of John Lord Butler of Brimsfield in Hertfordſhire, and for lack of ſuch Iſſue, to the Heirs Male of his own Body. He died at Lincolns-Inn, March 14, 1628, and was buried under a ſumptuous Monument in the Pariſh-Church of Weſtbury. After his Death were publiſhed his Reports of diverſe Law-Caſes tried in the Reigns of King James I, and King Charles I. His Son and Grandſon were both of his own Name, and the latter was kill'd at Sea, at Solebay Fight. His Uncle William became thereupon Heir to his Honours, but leaving no Iſſue, the Title became extinct, 'till it was revived by King William III, of Immortal Memory in the Perſon of the ever Victorious John Churchil.

291. 12. A PATENT for ſettling the Precedency of the eight Earls above-mentioned; dated at Weſtminſter, Febr. 7.

625. 13. A LIST of Perſons promoted to the Peerage in the firſt Year of King Charles.

14. A

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. 714.

14. A PATENT for advancing Oliver St. John who was by King James created a Peer of Ireland, with the Stile and Title of Viſcount Grandiſon of Limeric) to the Dignity of Baron Tregoze of Highworth in Wilts. It is dated May 21, at Weſtminſter. The Preamble ſets forth, that he was deſcended of the ancient and noble Family of St. John, and that he had ſerv'd the late King in Ireland firſt as Maſter of the Ordnance, and then as his Deputy and Lieutenant; that he was one of the Privy-Council, and a Member of the Council of War to King Charles, and his Chief Treaſurer in Ireland, at the Time of this Creation.

CHARLES I.

HE was a younger Branch of the Family of the St. Johns of Bletſho, and was created Viſcount Grandiſon by reaſon of his Deſcent from a Female Heir of the Grandiſons. By his wiſe Conduct he ſo civilized the People of Ireland, that whereas that Kingdom had for many Years been a Burden to the Engliſh Exchequer, through the continual Broils in it, he kept it under ſuch a Subjection and Regulation, that the Income of it turn'd to good Account, and the People liv'd peaceably together. He died without Iſſue-Male at Batterſea, where he had liv'd many Years after his Return from Ireland, and left his Honour to his Siſter's Son Sir Edward Villiers, but the Main of his Eſtate to his Brother's Son Sir John St. John.

THE Author of the Britiſh Compendium ſays, that being ſent to ſtudy the Law in the Inns of Court, he had a Quarrel with one Beſt, Captain of the Guards to Queen Elizabeth, and Champion of England, and kill'd him in a Duel, for which he was forc'd to leave the Kingdom, but returned in the Reign of King James, who Knighted and created him a Peer, and that King Charles gave him a Grant by Patent, of the Manours of Batterſey and Wandſworth.

715. 15. ANOTHER for creating Sir Dudley Carleton, who was Vice-Chamberlain of the Houſhold, and one of the Privy-Council, Baron Carleton of Imbercourt in the County of Surry. It is dated May 22. The Preamble mentions the Embaſſies he had been employ'd in for ſixteen Years to the Dutch, the Venetians, the Duke of Savoy, and the French King.

743. 16. A PATENT for advancing William Baron Knollys of Greys in Oxfordſhire, and Viſcount Wallingford, to the Dignity of Earl of Banbury; dated at Weſtminſter, Aug. 18, 1626. The Preamble takes notice, that this Gentleman, who was Sir William Knollys in the Reign of King James I, was by him preferred to be Treaſurer of his Houſhold, Baron of Greys, Maſter of the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Viſcount Wallingford, and that he was related by Blood to Queen Elizabeth.

THE Relation was owing to the Marriage of his Father Sir Francis Knollys with Catherine, Daughter of Mary Bullen, who was the Queen's Aunt. As the Father was Treaſurer of that Queen's Houſhold, ſo was the Son, who in the next Reign was created Knight of the Garter.

777. 17. A PATENT for advancing Edward Lord Denny, whom King James created Baron of Waltham, to the Dignity of Earl of Norwich; dated October 24. The Preamble to it takes notice, that his Grandfather, Sir Anthony Denny, was Gentleman of the Privy Chamber to King Henry VIII, and one of the Executors of his laſt Will and Teſtament. He was alſo of Council to Prince Edward, that King's only Son and Succeſſor. This Edward was Knighted 31 Eliz. and ſummoned to Parliament as Lord Denny, among the Peers of the Realm, in the third Year of King James. He married Mary, Daughter to Thomas Earl of Exeter, but died without Iſſue.

778. 18. ANOTHER for creating Sir Nicholas Tufton, Kt. and Bart. Baron Tufton of Tufton in the County of Suſſex. It is dated Nov. 1. The Preamble ſets forth the great Antiquity of his Family, their Alliance with many noble Families of the Kingdom, their ample Poſſeſſions and ſplendid Revenues; and of the Perſonal Wiſdom, Bravery and Integrity of the Patentee, who was indeed a Perſon of very great Merit.

781. 19. ANOTHER for advancing Thomas Savage Lord Darcy of Chicheſter (who was by King James created Viſcount Colcheſter) to the Dignity of Earl Rivers, with Remainder to Sir Thomas Savage of Rock-Savage in Cheſhire, if he died without Iſſue-Male. It is dated Nov. 4, at Weſtminſter.

797. 20. A PATENT for creating Robert Lord Willoughby of Willoughby Beake and Eresby, Earl of Lindſey; dated Nov. 22. It takes notice that the Office of Great Chamberlain of England was devolv'd to him, as the next a-kin to Henry de Vere late Earl of Oxford, who enjoy'd it laſt. Queen Elizabeth, who did him the Honour to be his Godmother, ſeem'd to prognoſticate his martial Genius, by calling him her young General at the Chriſtening; and it is recorded of him, that as ſoon as he came to any Knowledge of Things, he was more delighted with Swords and Guns than the uſual Toys of Children. In that Queen's Reign he diſtinguiſh'd ſtinguiſh'd his Valour at the Siege of Calais, the Adventure at the Brill, the Siege of Amiens, and the taking of the great Spaniſh Carrack, worth a Million of Crowns. In the following pacific Reign he generally reſided in Lincolnſhire; and in the Reign of King Charles, he was made chief Commander of the Fleet, as has been already mention'd in the Hiſtory, and Knight of the Garter, and loſt his Life at the Battle of Edgehill, 1642, where his Son alſo was taken Priſoner.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII. CHARLES I.

810. 21. A PATENT for creating Sir Thomas Somerſet Viſcount Caſſile in the County of Tipperary in Ireland; dated Dec. 8. He was the ſecond Son of Edward Earl of Worceſter, Knight of the Garter, who was then Lord Privy-Seal. The Preamble ſays, that he was related to the Royal Family, and that he had been Maſter of the Horſe to King James.

863. 22. A GENERAL Liſt of Patents for Baronettage and Peerage, granted in the ſecond Year of this Reign.

983. 23. ANOTHER General Liſt of ſuch Patents granted in the third Year of this Reign.

Penſions.

26. 1. A GRANT to James Duke of Lenox of the Sum of 1050 l. and of a Penſion of 1400 l. for the Term of 20 Years; dated at Weſtminſter, April 16, 1625.

27. 2. A GRANT to Catherine, Dutcheſs Dowager of Lenox, of 4400 l. and of an Annuity of 2100 l. during her Life, on the Surrender of Patents for Green Wax, &c. and alſo of a Penſion of 2100 l. to James Duke of Lenox, and his Heirs, from and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid Dutcheſs Dowager, to be continued during the Life of the ſaid Duke, and of his Brother Henry Lord Steward or Stuart: And alſo of a Penſion of 2100 l. to the ſaid Lord Henry Stuart, and his Aſſigns, from and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid Dutcheſs, and the ſaid Duke, without Heirs Male, for and during the ſaid Henry's Life. All which Sums were to be paid out of the Court of Wards and Liveries. It is dated the 21ſt, and both this and the former are under the Privy-Seal.

88. 3. A GRANT under the Privy-Seal of a Penſion of 2000 l. for 21 Years to Edward Lord Conway (his Executors and Aſſigns) who by a Patent of the ſame Date, viz. May 23, was appointed one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State *.

95. 4. A GRANT of 500 l. a Year to Thomas Carey, Eſq; Groom of the Bedchamber, for his Life; dated the 28th of May.

112. 5. A GRANT of 100 l. a Year to Francis Cleyne during his Life. It is dated June 4, at Weſtminſter. The King, about a Week before made him a Denizen of England by an Act for that Purpoſe. 96.

113. 6. A GRANT of 1000 l. a Year to Chriſtopher Earl of Angleſea for his Life; dated as above.

198. 7. ANOTHER of 500 Marks a Year to James Hay, Eſq; for his Life; dated Octob. 5, at Foxley.

243. 8. ANOTHER of 150 l. a Year during Life to John Cookeburn, Eſq; one of the King's Carvers; dated Dec. 10, at Hampton-Court.

317. 9. ANOTHER of 200 l. a Year to Sir Francis Biondy, and Dame Mary his Wife, who was Siſter to Dr. Mayerne, his Majeſty's Phyſician, for their former Services to his Majeſty and the late King. It is dated at Weſtminſter, March 8, 1626.

332. 10. ANOTHER of 100 l. a Year to Sir James Younge, one of the Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, for his Life; dated as above, March 21.

626 to 630. 11. A GENERAL Liſt of Penſions granted in the firſt Year of King Charles.

805. 12. A GRANT of a Penſion of 100 l. to M. l'Avignon (Gentleman Uſher to the Queen) for his Life; dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 4.

808. 13. ANOTHER of 120 l. a Year to Charles Trevor, Gent. who was Servant to the King when Prince of Wales. It is dated Decemb. 7.

Plague.

78. 1. A PROCLAMATION dated the 17th of May, 1625, at Whitehall, for Reſtraint of diſorderly and unneceſſary Reſort to the Court.

IT takes notice, that this Seaſon grew every Day more dangerous for increaſing the Infection already begun in the City and Confines of London, and forbids the Concourſe of People to ſee his Queen when he went to receive her at Dover †, or in any other

* THE Author of a late Hiſtory, viz. R. H. S. ſays, that when the Warrant came to Biſhop Williams, Lord Keeper, to paſs this Grant, he boggled at it, and told the King, He durſt not do it for fear of infringing his Duty to his Majeſty, and drawing ſome Danger upon himſelf, and that the Reaſons he gave, with much ado, prevail'd; but that he made the Lord Conway his Enemy, which is no great Wonder.

† WE have met with a Letter in the Cabala ſince the 'foregoing Sheets were printed off, which gives ſuch a Character of this Queen, that we chooſe this Opportunity to take notice of it, tho' it be a little out of Time, rather than wholly to omit it. It is from Sir Tobias Mathew to the Dutcheſs of Buckingham; dated the 9th of June at Boulogne, the Day after the Queen arrived there in her Way to England. 'Madam, ſays Progreſſes which they, or either of them ſhould make this Summer. For the ſame Reaſon it forbad the Repairing to Court on account of the King's Evil, for that his Majeſty would not touch 'till Michaelmas next, and after his Coronation. And as it was uſual for the poor People to flock into the Highways and Streets where his Majeſty travell'd, under colour of Relief from the Almoner, the ſaid Almoner was to deliver the ſaid Alms to the Overſeers of the Pariſhes, and the Magiſtrates were to ſend all ſturdy Vagabonds to the Houſe of Correction, and to paſs all Strollers that were not able to work, to their reſpective Countries. Nor were any of the King's Servants to attend him in his Journey without ſpecial Orders.

IT is an Obſervation of L'Eſtrange, that this Plague, and that in 1605, were both Natives of one Pariſh, viz. Whitechappel, yea, under the ſame Roof, and that they both iſſued forth on the ſame Day of the Month.

94. 2. ANOTHER Proclamation of the ſame Kind, dated the 26th of the ſame Month, which commands in particular, that no Laundreſs ſhall have Recourſe to any Officer or Chambers within the Palace, but that the Linnen be ſent to and from ſuch Laundreſſes; and that for preventing ſuch Diſorders as frequently happened to the great Diſhonour of the King's Houſhold, the Laundreſſes to the Body, and others who were allowed to follow the Houſhold, ſhould attend in Perſon, and not ſupply their Places by their Servants and Maids.

116. 3. ANOTHER for the Adjournment of Part of Trinity-Term, by reaſon of the Increaſe of the Plague. It is dated at Whitehall the 18th of June.

118. 4. ANOTHER of the ſame Date, entituled, A Proclamation for the better ordering of thoſe who repair to Court for Cure of the Diſeaſe call'd the King's Evil.

THIS was for changing the Times of preſenting ſuch Perſons to his Majeſty from Eaſter and Whitſuntide, to Eaſter and Michaelmas, as Times more convenient both for the Temperance of the Seaſon, and in reſpect of any Contagion which might happen by ſuch near Acceſs to his Majeſty's Perſon.

5. ANOTHER, dated June 26, certifying, that by reaſon of the violent Increaſe of the Plague, his Majeſty intended to remove with the Queen from Whitehall, and prohibiting Reſort to Court by People dwelling in or near infected Places; who were alſo hereby reſtrained from taking Houſes on, or near the Roads to Richmond, Nonſuch, Hampton-Court, or Windſor. CHARLES I. 121.

6. A PROCLAMATION for a General Faſt to be obſerved throughout the Kingdom on Wedneſday the 20th of July, and every Wedneſday following, to implore the Divine Mercy to ſtop the Fury of the Plague, and to grant a Bleſſing to his Majeſty's Perſon, People and Armies both by Land and Sea. It was dated at Whitehall the 3d of July. It takes notice, that his Majeſty had ordered a Form of Prayer to be compoſed and publiſhed for that Purpoſe. 142.

IT was firſt ſolemnly obſerved by both Houſes of Parliament on Saturday the 2d of July. In a Collection of Sermons by Dr Arthur Lake, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, we find that which he preached on this Occaſion at Weſtminſter before his Majeſty and the Houſe of Lords.

7. A PROCLAMATION, dated at Oatlands the 12th of July, for adjourning the Parliament from Weſtminſter to Oxford, to be there held on the 1ſt of Auguſt following, by reaſon of the Infection of the Plague, which was ſo general, that the two Houſes had mov'd his Majeſty for a ſhort Receſs. This Motion, which was ſaid to come from the Duke of Buckingham, was carried againſt the Opinion of the Lord Keeper and Biſhop Williams (then in good Terms with the Duke) who ſaid, that the Parliament would not take it well to be forc'd Abroad at ſuch a Time of Mortality, and might perhaps vote out of Diſguſts which it was not adviſeable for his Majeſty to give. 148.

8. ANOTHER for removing the Receipt of his Majeſty's Exchequer from Weſtminſter to Richmond, for the ſame Reaſon. It is dated at Rycot, in Oxfordſhire, July 31. 160.

'he, upon my Faith, ſhe is a moſt ſweet, lovely Creature, and hath a Countenance which opens a Window into her Heart, where a Man may ſee all Nobleneſs and Goodneſs; and I dare venture my Head (upon the little Skill I have in Phyſiognomy) that ſhe will be extraordinarily beloved by our Nation, and deſerve to be ſo, and that the Actions of her ſelf, which are to be her own, will be excellent. Methought I diſcerned in her Countenance a little Remnant of Sadneſs, which perhaps the freſh Wound of parting from the Queen-Mother might have made. Her Attire was very plain; but I hope, that amongſt many other Bleſſings which God will have provided for us by her Means, her Example will be able to teach our Country Wit in this kind. Believe me, ſhe is full of Wit, and hath a lovely manner of expreſſing it. But I confeſs, I was ſorry with all my Heart to hear that her Courage was ſo great, as to carry her inſtantly to Sea in a poor little Boat. I dare give my Word for her, that ſhe is not afraid of her own Shadow, who could find in her Heart to put her ſelf, at the firſt Sight, upon an Element of that Danger and Diſeaſe for meer Paſtime, unleſs it were perhaps that ſhe might carry ſome Steel about her, and that there is ſome Adamant at Dover which may already begin to draw her that Way.'

9. ANOTHER prohibiting the keeping of Bartholomew and Sturbridge Fairs, and for reſtraining the Citizens of London from repairing to any Fairs in the Kingdom 'till the Plague ſhould ceaſe. It is dated at Woodſtock, the 4th of Auguſt.

184. 10. ANOTHER for the Adjournment of part of Michaelmas Term, by reaſon of the general Infection of the Plague in London and Weſtminſter. It is dated Sept. 4, at Titchfield.

198. 11. ANOTHER for the avoiding all Intercourſe between his Majeſty's Court and the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, &c. by reaſon that the Plague ſtill raged in thoſe Cities and Suburbs. The Court was then about removing firſt to Windſor, and from thence to Hampton-Court. The Proclamation is dated Oct. 7, at Salisbury.

206. 12. ANOTHER Proclamation for the further Adjournment of Michaelmas Term for the ſame Reaſon, to the Town of Reading; dated Oct. 11, at Salisbury.

IT was obſerved the Plague was ſo hot at one time, that in London only 5000 Perſons died in one Week, and for fear of Infection, many Perſons who were to pay Money, firſt put it into a Tub of Water, and the Party that was to recieve it took it out. At the time of this Adjournment it was ſo aſſwaged, that there died but 2500 in a Week. It falling to Judge Whitelock's Turn to make this Adjournment, we are told in his Memoirs, that when he came from his Seat in Buckinghamſhire to Hide-Park Corner, he and his Retinue there dined on the Ground, with ſuch Proviſion as they brought with them in the Coach, and that afterwards he drove furiouſly through the Streets, which were empty of People and overgrown with Graſs, to Weſtminſter-Hall, where he went ſtreight to the King's-Bench, adjourned the Court, returned to his Coach, and drove away inſtantly out of the Town.

MR. Grant, in his Obſervations on our Bills of Mortality, ſays, that the whole Number of thoſe who died laſt Year in the ſeveral Pariſhes, amounted to 35,417.

THAT Author, in an Hiſtorical Note relating to the Origin of our printed Weekly Bills, ſays, that the Riſe of keeping theſe Accounts was taken from the Plague, inſomuch as for ought appears the ſaid Bills were firſt printed in the Year 1592, being a Time of Great Mortality, but were diſus'd from the Year 1594 to 1603, the firſt Year of King James I, when by reaſon of the Plague that Year, they were reſumed. From the 29th of December in that ſame Year, he dates the Continuance of the Weekly Bills extant at Pariſh Clerks-Hall: But he adds, that every Pariſh was not particularized in the Bills (as they are now) 'till this Year 1625.

230. 13. A WRIT directed to the Lord-Keeper, and dated the 20th of November at Hampton-Court, for adjourning Michaelmas Term from Reading to Weſtminſter.

CHARLES I. 255.

14. A PROCLAMATION declaring his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that a former Reſtraint enjoined to the Citizens of London for repairing to Bartholemew, Sturbridge, or any other Fairs, be now taken off, by reaſon the Contagion is ceaſed. It is dated Dec. 30, at Hampton-Court.

276. 15. A PROCLAMATION appointing a general and publick Thankſgiving to God, for his great Mercy in ſtaying his Hands, and aſſwaging the late fearful Viſitation of the Plague. It was to be obſerved on the 29th of January, in and about London and Weſtminſter, and on the 19th of February throughout the Kingdom; and for that Purpoſe a ſmall Book was to be compoſed by the Biſhops, and by them diſpers'd through their Dioceſe. The Proclamation is dated at Whitehall, Jan. 22, 1626.

THE ſaid Form of Prayer and Thankſgiving was drawn up by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Durham, Rocheſter, and St. Davids: It was to be us'd in Common-Prayer on Sundays, Wedneſdays, and Fridays, and was printed by Authority at London, in 4to, by Bonham Norton, &c.

725. 15. ANOTHER Proclamation dated June 30, 1626, at Whitehall, for a general Faſt to be obſerved in London and Weſtminſter, on the 5th of July, and throughout England and Wales, on the 2d of Auguſt following; in remembrance of the late fearful Viſitation of the Plague, which was ſtill ſpreading in many Parts of the Kingdom, and of the Scarcity and Famine lately threaten'd, but diverted by the Bleſſing of God, upon the Fruits of the Earth; and in conſideration of the powerful Invaſion threaten'd from Abroad.

MR. Rapin ſays, that the Motive of this Proclamation was by ſuch Exaggeration of the pretended Neceſſity and Danger of the King's Affairs, to juſtify the late Impoſition of Tonnage and Poundage, and the other extraordinary Methods he had taken to raiſe Money.

1012. 16. A PROCLAMATION appointing another general Faſt to be obſerved on the 5th of April in and about London and Weſtminſter, and on the 21ſt of the ſame Month through England and Wales. It is dated March 21, 1628.

1023. 17. A PROCLAMATION for deferring the Repair of Perſons to Court for Cure of the King's Evil, 'till Michaelmas next, for preventing any Contagion which might happen by ſuch near Acceſs, at the preſent Seaſon, to his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon. Dated at Whitehall, June 17.

Popiſh

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I.

Popiſh Prieſts and Recuſants.

179. 1. A PROCLAMATION dated at Woodſtock, Auguſt 14, 1625, for recalling his Majeſty's Subjects from foreign Seminaries, and putting the Laws in Execution againſt Jeſuits and Popiſh Prieſts, who ſhould be found within his Dominions after Michaelmas following.

THIS is the Proclamation which Dr. Kennet obſerves, was iſſued to gratify the Deſires of the late Parliament, in which the Parents, Tutors, Governours, Guardians, &c. of all Engliſh Youth bred up in foreign Schools and Seminaries, and other Houſes of the Popiſh Religion, were commanded to recall them home; ſo that they were to return by Chriſtmas next; and which enjoined, That no Biſhop, Prieſt, or other Perſon, ſhould preſume to confer Eccleſiaſtical Orders, or exerciſe his Function or Juriſdiction towards any of his natural born Subjects within his Dominions.

2. THIS Proclamation ſo diſguſted the French Court, that on the 3d of Novemb. following, the Marquiſs de Blainville, Ambaſſador from France to King Charles, delivered a Remonſtrance againſt it, which we find in this XVIIIth Tome, of the following Tenour.

223. 'IT puts the King in mind of the Promiſe he made for the ſake of his Marriage 'to the French King's Siſter, That the 'Catholicks in his Kingdom ſhould enjoy 'more Security and Freedom in every thing 'reſpecting Religion, than they were to 'have done by vertue of any Articles what-'ſoever in the Marriage-Treaty with Spain; 'and that they were not to be moleſted 'in their Perſons or Eſtates for ſuch their 'Religion, nor obliged to take any Oath 'contrary to it.

'IT obſerves, that the Queen of En-'gland, who profeſſes that Religion can-'not but be concerned to ſee that his Sub-'jects of the ſame Religion have leſs Li-'berty now than they had in former Reigns. 'For theſe Reaſons it ſets forth that the 'King has ordered him to demand the 'Recall of the ſaid Proclamation, and 'that the Pecuniary and other Laws a-'gainſt the ſaid Catholicks may not be put 'in Execution, becauſe they have not 'paid the Compoſition-Money for their 'Eſtates.

'THE King of France being alſo in-'form'd that the Sieur de Soubize was re-'tired to England with ſeveral Ships 'belonging to his Subjects before there 'was any Appearance of the War with 'the Hugonots, and that ſome others, 'taken by the Engliſh, were detained 'in their Harbours, his Majeſty not on-'ly demanded the Reſtoration of the ſaid 'Ships, but the Expulſion of the Sieur 'de Soubize, whom it calls a Rebel to 'his King, the Author of all the Trou-'bles in France, and the ſole Remora 'of the Enterprizes in Italy, the Suc-'ceſs or Ruin whereof was of Impor-'tance to the Welfare of all Chriſtendom 'in general. Finally, it concludes, that 'twill be the greateſt Pleaſure in the 'World both to his Majeſty, and the 'Queen his Mother, to hear that the 'Queen his Siſter has all the Satisfacti-'on which ſhe has juſt Reaſon to ex-'pect.

UPON this followed,

214. 3. AN Anſwer to the ſaid Demands, wherein the Ambaſſador is charg'd to tell his Maſter, 'That he had not fail'd in 'his Promiſe in their Favour in any one 'Point or Circumſtance; that all he de-'ſires, or intends, is to treat his Roman 'Catholick Subjects with all manner of 'Equity; and that for the ſake of his 'good Brother and dear Spouſe, he 'ſhews them all the Favour they could 'expect on theſe Conſiderations, or by 'vertue of any Promiſes or Articles made 'before the Marriage. But he entreats 'the Moſt Chriſtian King and his Mini-'ſters to recollect, that the moſt binding 'and punctual Terms and Expreſſions in 'thoſe Articles were propoſed on the 'Part of the Moſt Chriſtian King, only 'to give the Pope ſuch Satisfaction as 'might induce him to grant the Diſpen-'ſation for the Marriage: And that as 'for his Britannick Majeſty, he always 'made it a Reſerve, that his firſt and 'principal Care ſhould be the Preſervati-'on of his State, and the Peace and Se-'curity of his Kingdoms: And that 'conſequently, his Majeſty's Favour to 'his Roman Catholick Subjects was li-'mited and extended no farther than 'while they behav'd modeſtly and du-'tifully: But that inſtead of ſuch mo-'deſt Behaviour, they had held Con-'venticles and ſecret Aſſemblies, advanc'd 'dangerous Schemes for inducing and 'encouraging one another, and furniſh'd 'themſelves with Arms, and other Means 'to oppoſe the Proceſs and Execution of 'the Laws.

'As to theſe things, his Majeſty re-'ſerves it to himſelf to examine and re-'form them without being accountable 'to any one, and alſo to provide for 'the Security and Succeſſion of his 'Crown.

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

CHARLES I.

'As to the Shipping, his Majesty promised to give Order for Justice to be done to the Subjects of France, and declares, that there is no Person in the World to whom he is more ready to give the desired Satisfaction; but that in an Affair so intricate and perplex'd, in which the Law of Nations, and the Law of the Land were confounded with his and his Officers Right of Admiralty, and the Usage and Maxims of crown'd Heads in the like Cases, he hopes his good Brother will not be offended if he take Advice of the Lawyers, that he may be the better able to give his Brother the true State of the Affair; and then his Majesty may be assur'd, that he will do every thing that by Law can be expected from him, and every thing that the Respect which he has for him can challenge. As for the Chapel and Church-yard, his Majesty promised to give speedy Orders for the Queen's Satisfaction.

As the Histories of this Reign make little or no mention of this Minister (M. Blainville) there are some Letters in the Cabala from whence we have collected the following Account of him, intermix'd with some Passages of Secret History not to be met with elsewhere.

By a Letter from the Earl of Holland at Paris, to King James I, it appears, that Monsr. Blainville was then a Minister at the Court of England, and that he had sent bitter Complaints Home of Wrongs and Violences done him here, even to the assaulting of him in his Lodging; insomuch that Madam de Blainville petition'd the French Court, that she might have Satisfaction upon the Persons of our Ministers then at Paris; and the Queen-Mother was so concern'd at it, that she told the Earl of Holland, with Tears, before all the Princes and Ladies at the Louvre, that if the King his Master continued to affront, and suffer such Indignities to be done to the Ambassador of the King her Son, his Master must expect that his Ambassadors should be used in like manner. The Earl, who was mov'd, told her, that his Master's Intentions were not to be balanc'd with a Person who made it his daily Business to stir up Disputes and Jars, even between his Sovereign and his Royal Consort; and that for his own Part, he never desired to be employ'd again at a Court where he found that he was of no more Weight than the unworthiest Minister that ever was employ'd, which so wrought upon the Queen that she was sorry for having express'd so much.

The Conclusion of his Letter is very remarkable.

'Sir, said he, the Malice of this Blainville is so great to your worthy Servant my Lord Duke, that he hath written a private Letter to the King, that his Grace is in a Condition of Danger to be ruin'd by the Fury and Power of the Parliament. And to confirm his Majesty in that Opinion, he hath sent all the Passages amongst them that concern my Lord Duke; adding, that there are great Factions against him at the Council-Table, and naming some Lords; by which I see he hath Intelligence with all those that he believes may contribute any thing towards the doing him Mischief. But those that know the Magnanimity and Nobleness of your Majesty's Heart, know that so noble a Vessel of Honour and Service as he is, shall never be in Danger for all the Storms that can threaten him; when it is in your Majesty's Hands not only to calm all these Tempests, but to make the Sun and Beams of your Favour to shine more clearly upon his Deservings than ever, which upon this Occasion your Courage and Virtue will not doubt to do, to the Encouragement of all deserving and excellent Servants, and to his Honour and Comfort that is the most worthy that ever Prince had, and so affectionate, that the World hath no greater Admirations than the Fortunes that the Master and Servant have run together. And certainly, our good God will ever preserve that Affection which in so many Accidents, and (one may say) Afflictions, hath preserved your Persons.—— Sir, This Boldness that I take, proceeds not from the least Doubt these foolish Rumours give me of Changes, but out of a passionate Meditation of those Accidents which your Courage and Fortune hath carried you through, blessing God for your Prosperity, &c.

The Earl of Holland wrote also to the Duke, of the daily Alarms that came out of England from Blainville, of the beating of his Servants, and of the Danger he himself had ran of being assassinated in his own House, insomuch that no Man believed he had escaped with less than five or six Wounds; 'which, says 'the Earl, has so animated this Court, 'apt, upon all Occasions, to be fir'd and 'stirr'd up, that the King hath been mo-'ved to forbid us our Entries and Liber-'ties here. And Yesterday Madam de 'Blainville openly petition'd the King 'to imprison us for the Wrongs and In-'juries done to her Husband, and his 'Ambaſſador, who ſhe feared was by this 'time dead; but that had no other Ef-'fect than to be laugh'd at. I told the 'Queen of the Ambaſſador's continual 'Malice in inventing daily Injuries and 'Falſhoods of your Lordſhip, to unload 'himſelf from his Inſolencies and Faults, 'and deſired her not to entertain the Be-'lief of theſe things too haſtily, 'till we 'had News out of England that we 'knew would contradict all theſe malici-'ous Diſcourſes. And I muſt tell your 'Grace, that by a Friend (whom I am 'tied not to name) I was ſhewed the 'private Letter that Blainville wrote to 'the King, wherein he ſent him the 'whole Proceedings of the Parliament, 'and concludes they will ruin you, na-'ming great Factions againſt you, and 'as it were a Neceſſity to deſtroy you. But 'I hope he and the whole World here 'will fall, before any Misfortunes will 'fall upon ſo generous and ſo noble a 'Deſerver of his Maſter, and ſo excel-'lent a Friend and Patron to, &c.

BY a Letter dated the 30th of Auguſt, 1625, Mr. Thomas Lorkin, then at Paris, tells the Duke, that this Blainville, who was firſt Gentleman of the Bed-chamber to the French King, had receiv'd a ſudden Command ſpeedily to provide himſelf to go Extraordinary Ambaſſador to England. He gueſs'd that his Er-rand was to ſpy and diſcover what he can, and (according as he ſhall find Cauſe) to frame Cabals and Factions, for which, ſaid Lorkin, he is eſteem'd very proper, being characteriſed with the Marks of a moſt ſubtle, prying, penetrating and dan-gerous Man: Therefore Lorkin tells the Duke of Buckingham, that the Duke de Chevreuſe, who had been ſuſpected at the French Court of being more a Ser-vant to the King of England than to his own King and Maſter, cautions every one before-hand to keep cloſe and covert to-wards him, and to avoid Familiarity with him, though (otherwiſe) he wiſhes him a kind and honourable Entertainment.

IN a Letter to the Duke of the 17th of September following, Lorkin gives Blainville the Character of a hollow-hearted, mercenary, faithleſs Man, and renews his Advice to the Duke to be very circumſpect.

227. 4. A COMMISSION under the Privy-Seal to the Lord Keeper, &c. for putting the Laws in execution againſt Popiſh Re-cuſants, particularly the Law of 1 Eliz. for paying Twelve-pence for every Sun-day's Abſence from Divine Service. It is dated Novemb. 11, at Reading.

THIS Commiſſion was in compliance with the Petition that had been preſented to the King at London by the two Houſes of Parliament, which we mentioned in p. 550. The Petition indeed pray'd, that the Penalty for Abſence from Church might go ſolely to the Uſe of the Poor; but this Commiſſion directed all Forfei-tures to be applied to the Publick Service, particularly towards the Charge of Am-munition, Fortifications, and the Navy. It alſo commanded his Majeſty's learned Council to take care that all former Grants and Leaſes of Recuſants Lands, which have been made to the Recuſants Uſe or Truſt, or out of which the Recuſants do or may receive Benefit, may be avoid-ed, if by Law they are avoidable.

IT is to be noted, that none of our Hi-ſtories make mention of this Commiſſion, only Ruſhworth ſays, that the King or-der'd his Attorney-General to acquaint the Judges (of Circuits) that it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure they ſhould proceed againſt the Recuſants with Rigour. He had promiſed the ſame thing in his An-ſwer to the Parliament's Petition; but whether this Article had been neglected through the Fault of the Court, or of thoſe who were commiſſioned to execute that Order, it is certain that, during this Reign, ſuch kind of Orders were never punctually executed.

The Letter which the Attorney ſent to the Judges was to this Effect:

'That their Lordſhips will not omit 'to publiſh the King's gracious and reli-'gious Determination to go on really and 'conſtantly in this way, and that out of 'his Bounty and Goodneſs he hath pub-'liſhed his Reſolution under the Great 'Seal of England, that whatſoever Re-'venue or Benefit ſhall ariſe hereby from 'Purſes of Popiſh Recuſants, ſhall be 'ſet apart from his own Treaſury, and 'wholly employ'd for the Service of the 'Commonwealth, and ſhall not be diſpen-'ſed with to any of what Degree ſoever, 'nor diverted by any of the Suits of his 'Servants or Subjects.

'That their Lordſhips will be pleaſed, 'at their firſt coming into every County 'within their Circuit, to command the 'Clerk of Aſſize, and Clerk of the Peace, 'to be careful for the Indictment of 'Popiſh Recuſants, without reſpect of 'Perſons, of what Degree of Honour or 'Office ſoever; and that they neither 'make, nor ſuffer to be made, any Omiſ-'ſion, or Miſtaking in their Indictment, 'or other Proceedings; and that the next 'Term, within ten Days of the begin-'ning of the Term, they give or ſend to 'him (viz. the Attorney) a Note in 'Writing, who ſtand indicted of new 'Crimes, and that they fail not to certify 'the Recuſants convicted in the Ex-'chequer by that time.

'THAT

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

'THAT at their Lordſhips firſt coming into the County they call the Juſtices of the Peace then preſent, and the Grand Jury-men, to give their Lordſhips true Information of the Recuſants of any Note or Name in that County, and that thereupon their Lordſhips will be pleaſed to take Care that the Grand Jury-men, either by Evidence or their own Knowledge, indict them which are not already indicted, before the End of the Aſſizes, and that their Lordſhips admit no Traverſe, unleſs the Perſons convicted have firſt yielded their Bodies into the Cuſtody of the Sheriff, as their Lordſhips know well all the Judges, with one Voice, reſolved the Law to be.

'THAT there be ſpecial Care taken of School-maſters and Teachers of any kind, who are Popiſh Recuſants, that they be preſented and proceeded againſt.

'THAT their Lordſhips give Knowledge to the Counties where they ſit, that the married Women, who are Popiſh Recuſants, convicted by the Law, ought to be committed to the Common Goal without Bail, unleſs their Huſbands redeem their Liberty by their conſtant Payment of 10 l. a Month, and that it muſt be executed.

Inner-Temple, Mar. 7, 162⅞. Your Lordſhips ready to be commanded,

ROB. HEATH.

166. 5. A PROCLAMATION for the more cloſe and ſtrict Confinement of Popiſh Recuſants convict according to Law; dated January 11, 1626, at Whitehall. This was to put the Laws in force for confining them to their Dwellings, or within five Miles thereof, unleſs upon ſpecial Licenſe firſt obtained in Caſes of neceſſity.

314. 6. A COMMISSION to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord-Chancellor, Lord-Treaſurer, &c. for baniſhing Jeſuits, Seminary-Prieſts, &c. Dated at Weſtminſter, March 6.

801. 7. A WARRANT for releaſing 16 Popiſh Prieſts impriſoned in or near London, at the Requeſt of the Marſhal de Baſſompiere, the French Ambaſſador, and to give him Leave to tranſport them beyond the Seas; dated Nov. 27.

847. A PROCLAMATION dated at Whitehall, Feb. 16, 1627, explaining his Majeſty's Intention with regard to the Execution of the Laws againſt Jeſuits, Prieſts, and Popiſh Recuſants.

THE King having granted Inſtructions to the Lords and others of his Council, for giving Eaſe to the ſaid Recuſants, who had complained, that if the Laws in Force againſt them were ſtrictly executed, they muſt become a Burden to the Places where they liv'd, and the King's Profit not at all increaſed; his Majeſty was apprehenſive that his Clemency and Moderation would be miſconſtrued, and that on the one hand, the obnoxious to thoſe Laws might flatter themſelves with the Hopes of prevailing on him to ſilence the ſaid Laws, and that on the other hand, the Orthodox would miſtruſt that his Zeal and Conſtancy in the true Religion was cooled or abated. Therefore his Majeſty made this publick Declaration, to aſſure all his Subjects that he was fully reſolved never to decline from his firſt Purpoſe and Promiſe for the due Execution of the Laws in this Caſe, and at the ſame time that he will proceed with ſuch Moderation that the whole World ſhall bear him Witneſs, that he ſeeks their Converſion and not their Ruin.

CHARLES I.

AND whereas the Recuſants or their Friends were allowed to take Leaſes of the King's two Parts of their Lands (which they would not do in ſtrictneſs of Law) on condition of giving as great Rent as any other Perſons would, leaſt this Favour alſo ſhould be miſconſtrued to the Prejudice of his Service; his Majeſty hereby declared his Will and Pleaſure, that all ſuch Leaſes of Recuſants Lands as have been already contracted for, and not yet paſſed the Seals, ſhould be proceeded in according to thoſe Contracts, but that for all other Lands yet to be contracted for, the Recuſants themſelves, or ſome for them, ſhall within three Months make their Compoſitions with the King's Commiſſioners, for their own Lands, or elſe it ſhall be free for any other to take the ſame; and that then, and in the mean time alſo if any others ſhall make a better Offer for the King than the Recuſant, or any Perſons in his Behalf ſhall do, he ſhall be received.

9. A COMMISSION to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord-Keeper, Lord-Treaſurer, &c. for granting Leaſes of the Eſtates of Perſons convicted of Popiſh Recuſancy, which ſubjected them to the Forfeiture of 20 l. a Month, or of two thirds of their Lands, and of compounding with thoſe who had not ſufficient Eſtate, for a yearly Payment to the Crown, in lieu of ſuch Forfeitures. It is dated at Weſtminſter, Feb. 19. 851.

THERE are two others to the ſame Purpoſe, viz. One dated the 11th of July laſt, and another dated at Canbury, Aug. 30, 1627. 729. 937.

10. A COMMISSION under the Privy-Seal to the Earl of Sunderland, the Archbiſhop of York, and others of chief Quality in the North, to treat and make Compoſitions with the Popiſh Recuſants for Leaſes of 904.

of any of their forfeited Eſtates lying within eleven Northern Counties; which not only extended to all Forfeitures due ſince the 10th Year of King James, but alſo to ſuch as ſhould become due hereafter. This Commiſſion which Mr. Rapin obſerves, was directly contrary to the Promiſe which the King made to the Parliament at Oxford, and which gave the People an indifferent Opinion of his Zeal for Religion, bears Date the 23d of June, at Weſtminſter.

It recites, That his Majeſty hath received credible Information of the great Loſſes and Damages which the King's Subjects inhabiting Maritime Places, and eſpecially in the Northern Parts of this Kingdom, do ſuffer by Depredations, Attempts, and Aſſaults at Sea from foreign Enemies, whereby the Trade by Sea from thoſe Northern Parts is interrupted, and the City of London and other Parts of the Kingdom much endamaged for want of Coals and other Commodities uſually tranſported thither from Newcaſtle upon Tyne, and Sunderland. That for the Redreſs of this Evil, his Majeſty, with the Advice of his Privy-Council, hath thought fit to appropriate and convert all ſuch Debts, Sums of Money, Rents, Penalties, and Forfeitures of all Recuſants, inhabiting in the Counties of Stafford, Derby, Cheſter, Lancaſter, Nottingham, York, Lincoln, Weſtmoreland, Cumberland, Northumberland, and Durham, which at any time have grown due ſince the 10th Year of the late King James, and are not yet ſatisfy'd, or which hereafter ſhall grow due by reaſon of any Law or Statute againſt Recuſants to be employed for the Maintenance, Proviſion, Arming, Manning, Victualling, and furniſhing of 6 able Ships of War, for Guarding and Defending the Coaſts of this Realm, eſpecially from the fartheſt N. E. point of the Sea to the Mouth of the River Thames.

His Majeſty farther expreſſes in the ſaid Commiſſion, that his Subjects who are Owners of Coal-pits, the Caſt-men of Newcaſtle upon Tyne, Owners of Ships, and Merchants, Buyers and Sellers of Newcaſtle Coals, have been, and are willing to contribute and pay 6 d. for every Chaldron of Coals for the Uſes aforeſaid; which ſaid Sum his Majeſty declares his Acceptance of, to and for the Purpoſe aforeſaid; and his Majeſty, upon the Conſiderations before mentioned, doth by his ſaid Commiſſion give Power to the ſaid Commiſſioners, or any four or more of them, to treat and make Compoſition and Agreement with the ſaid Recuſants inhabiting within the ſaid Counties, for Leaſes of all their Manours, Lands, and Tenements, &c. to which the King ſhall be entituled within thoſe Counties, for any Term not exceeding 41 Years; and for all Forfeitures, Arrears of Rents, and other Debts and Penalties due ſince the 10th Year of King James, for their Recuſancy in not going to Church to hear Divine Service, according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, under ſuch Condition and Immunities as they, or any four of them ſhall ſee meet and convenient, according to ſuch Inſtructions as his Majeſty gave on the 30th of March laſt, or ſhall hereafter give to that Purpoſe.

AND whereas many Recuſants are, or will be found inſolvent and deſtitute of any perſonal Eſtate to anſwer the Forfeitures, the Commiſſioners were hereby impowered to compound with them for a Sum to be pay'd to the King yearly, without preſſing them to pay more than they were able, to the utter undoing of themſelves and their Families, his Majeſty rather deſiring their Converſion than Deſtruction.

SIR John Saville was, by this Commiſſion, appointed Receiver-General of all the Rents, Arrears, &c. due or payable to the Crown by reaſon of ſuch Recuſancy. Mr. Alexander Davidſon Merchant, then Mayor of Newcaſtle, was appointed to receive the 6 d. for every Chaldron of Coals exported as aforeſaid from that Port. Mr. William Poore, of Farenton-Hall in Durham, Receiver of the ſame Duty upon every Chaldron carry'd from Sunderland, and John Richardſon, Eſq; of Durham, was appointed Clerk to the Commiſſioners.

ALL that we have to add is, that in purſuance of this Commiſſion, the Recuſants did make their Compoſition upon very eaſy Terms, as was afterwards complained of in Parliament.

11. A PROCLAMATION declaring his Majeſty's Intention with regard to the aforeſaid Commiſſion; dated June 27, at Whitehall. It not only ſets forth, that the Benefit of all ſuch Forfeitures ariſing in thoſe Northern Counties ſhould be employed towards the equipping and maintaining of 6 ſtout Men of War, for the Defence and Guard of thoſe Parts, and for the ſecuring of their Ships and Merchandize from Pyrates, &c. in the ſame manner as the Forfeitures of Recuſants in all other Parts of the Kingdom were appropriated to the Charge of the Navy and other publick Services; but it gives notice to thoſe whom it concern'd, that the meeting of the Commiſſioners for the Northern Parts was to be at York; and that if any Recuſant did not accept of the Grace offered, and to be extended to them by the Commiſſioners within two Months after the Date of this Proclamation, the the King was resolved to take the uttermost Benefit of the Forfeitures without any Favour.

1037. 12. ANOTHER Proclamation declaring his Majesty's Royal Pleasure and Command for putting the Laws and Statutes made against Jesuits, Priests, and Popish Recusants in due Execution. It is dated the 3d of August, 1628, at Southwick in Hampshire. Whensoever they could be apprehended they were to be committed to the County-Goal, there to remain without Bail or Main-Prize 'till Trial; and if upon their Trial and Conviction there was Cause to respite the Execution of any of them, they were not to lie in the Common Goals, nor to be permitted to wander about at large, but, according to the Example of former Times, they were to be sent to the Castle of Wisbich *, or some other safe Prison, there to remain in strict and close Custody, and to be wholly restrained from exercising their Functions, or spreading their superstitious and dangerous Doctrine. Those who received, harbour'd or maintained such Jesuits, &c. were to be left to the due Course of the Law: And upon Complaint of the Misdemeanour of the inferior Officers employed under the said Commission by which the Recusants were oppressed, the King's Revenue lessened, and those who were backward in Religion encouraged to persist in their Obstinacy and Blindness, it declares that his Majesty had caused those Commissions and Instructions to be received, and in many Places altered for the better. And whereas several Persons who had contracted with the Commissioners for Leases of Recusants Lands, had not sued out their Leases, to the King's great Hindrance, they were hereby required to pass them under the Seals before the end of Michaelmas Term next; and all that did hereafter contract for any such Leases, were to pass them under the Seals before the end of the Term next following such Contracts, or else the same to be utterly void.

HAVING now gone through all the Acts of this Tome of the Fœdera relating to the Article of Popish Recusancy, 'tis thought proper to subjoin from Rushworth, the particular Lists of the Recusants, &c. referred to by the House of Commons, in their Petition, which we inserted in p. 571. As to which List it must be observed, that where though only the Children or the Wives happened to be Recusants, the Fathers, and the Husbands were presented for Prosecution, and liable to the Forfeitures, &c.

CHARLES I.

Francis, Earl of Rutland †, Lieutenant of the Counties of Lincoln, Rutland, Northampton, and Nottingham, a Commissioner of the Peace and of Oyer and Terminer in the County of York, and Justice of Oyer from Trent Northwards. His Lordship is presented to be a Popish Recusant, and to have affronted all the Commissioners of the Peace within the North-Riding of Yorkshire, by sending a License under his Hand and Seal to his Tenant Thomas Fisher, dwelling in his Lordship's Manour of Helmsley, in the said North-Riding of the said County of York, to keep an Ale-house, soon after he had by an Order made at the Quarter-Sessions been discharged from keeping an Ale-house, because he was a Popish convict Recusant. The said Earl is also charged to have procured a Popish School-master, namely Roger Conyers, to teach Scholars within the said Manour of Helmsley, who formerly had his License for that Purpose taken from him for teaching the Children of Popish Recusants, and because he suffered those Children to be absent themselves from the Church whilst they were his Scholars; for which the said Conyers was formerly complained of in Parliament.

THE Right Honourable Viscount Dunbar, Deputy-Justice in Oyer to the Earl of Rutland from Trent Northward, a Commissioner of Sewers, and a Deputy-Lieutenant within the East-Riding of Yorkshire. His Lordship is presented to be a Popish Recusant, and his Indictment is removed into the King's-Bench. His Wife, Mother, and the greatest Part of his Family are also Popish Recusants, and some of them convicted.

Protections.

178. 1. THE King's Protection of Arthur Beſwicks of Spelmonden in Kent, Gent. and all others bound with him, from the Proſecution of their Creditors. It is dated at Oxford, Aug. 12, 1625.

232. 2. ANOTHER of the like Nature, granted under the Privy-Seal, only for one Year, to the Lady Anne Molineux; dated the 29th of November, at Reading.

IT was a Continuation of a Protection granted her by the late King for one whole Year, to enable her to make Satisfaction to her Creditors by the Sale of certain Lands, which after long and chargeable Suits in Law ſhe had then lately recovered.

684. 3. ANOTHER for protecting Sir Henry Goodyere of Poleſworth in Warwickſhire, for one Year, who is ſaid to have contracted great Debts by his Service and Attendance on the late and preſent Kings, in Quality of Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber in Ordinary; dated at Weſtminſter, May 9, 1626.

722. 4. ANOTHER of the like nature for protecting Sir George Rivers, Richard Amhurſt, Serjeant at Law, and Edward Lindſey, Eſq; who were bound with Richard late Earl of Dorſet for Payment of his Debts. It is dated June 29.

724. 5. ANOTHER Protection for John Smith, Citizen and Leatherſeller of London, to continue, like the former, for one whole Year; dated June 30.

765. 6. ANOTHER for William Murray, Earl of Tullibardin; dated Octob. 7.

767. 7. ANOTHER for Bray Aylesworth, Gent. dated Oct. 14.

785. 8. A GRANT of Protection for 6 Months to Richard Earl of Deſmond; dated at Weſtminſter the 6th of November.

815. 9. ANOTHER Protection to Sir John Townſhend, and his Sureties; dated Jan. 4, 1627. The Grant takes notice, that he had obtained a former Protection for a whole Year, in regard of great Sums of Money which he had laid out for the Purchaſe of ſeveral Grants from the late King, which he had been depriv'd of, and had not yet receiv'd Satisfaction; in Conſideration whereof, and of an important Affair he was then employ'd in for the King's Service, the Lords of the Privy-Council, to whom it was known, pray'd his Majeſty to renew his Protection for another Year, which was granted.

CHARLES I.

Proviſions.

74. 1. A PROCLAMATION for regulating the Price of Victuals within the Verge of the Court; dated at Whitehall, May 14, 1625.

268. 2. ANOTHER for Reſtraint of killing, dreſſing and eating of Fleſh in Lent, or on Fiſh-Days appointed by the Law to be hereafter ſtrictly obſerved by all People.

The Motive of making the Laws and Statutes for this Purpoſe, is ſaid to be the Sparing and Increaſe of Fleſh-Victuals, and the Maintenance of the Navy, by the Encouragement of Fiſhermen to go to Sea for the taking of Fiſh.

THIS Proclamation, which is dated at Whitehall, 14 Jan. 1626, requires the Mayors, Juſtices of Peace, and all other Magiſtrates, to ſend for the Servants of all Publick Houſes, and examine them upon Oath what Fleſh is, or hath been dreſſed, kill'd, ſold, or eat at their Houſes during Lent-Seaſon, or other Days prohibited by Law, and if they refuſed ſuch Oath, they were to be committed to Priſon.

THEIR Maſters, who liv'd in London and Weſtminſter, were, at the beginning of Lent, to enter into Recognizances of 100 l. each, beſides 30 l. a-piece for their Sureties, not to dreſs any Fleſh, or ſuffer it to be eaten at their Houſes in Lent, or at other times prohibited. And Perſons were to be appointed to watch at the Gates, and to intercept any Fleſh brought out of the Country. The dreſſing of Suppers for any Perſon whatſoever at any Publick Houſe upon Friday Nights, either in Lent or out of Lent, was alſo forbid by this Proclamation. Licences for eating Fleſh at ſuch prohibited Times were to be granted very ſparingly, and only in Caſes of Neceſſity. The Butchers, Innholders, Victuallers, Vintners, Alehouſe-keepers, Cooks, &c. in the Country, were to enter into Recognizances with Sureties every Year before Lent, for the Obſervation of the Premiſſes, viz. the Principals in 10 l. and the two Sureties in 5 l. a-piece, on Pain of entring into another Recognizance with Sureties, viz. the Principals in 20 l. and their two Sureties in 10 l. each to ſell no more Beer, Ale, Wine, Proviſions, &c. and to be committed to Priſon till they conſent to become bound as aforeſaid.

812. 3. ANOTHER of the ſame Kind; dated Jan. 25, 1627, at Hampton Court.

4. ANO-

FOEDERA Tom. XVIII.

961. 1015. 4. Another dated February 4, 1628, at Whitehall.

5. A Commiſſion to the Lord-Steward and to the Treaſurer and Comptroller of the Houſhold, to treat and compound with the County of Suffolk, for ſerving the King's Houſhold with Proviſions therein ſpecified, according to a compoſition made with Queen Elizabeth. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, April 26.

Releaſes.

261. 1. A Releaſe and Diſcharge of George Duke of Buckingham for all Sums of Money which he ever received from the late and preſent King. Dated the 4th of January 1626, at Weſtminſter *.

733. 2. A Releaſe and Diſcharge of John Earl of Anandale (who, in the Reign of King James, when he was John Murray Eſq; had been Keeper of the Privy-Purſe) for all the Money, Jewels, &c. that had paſſed thro' his hands. 'Tis dated July 13.

Revenue.

214. 1. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal, directed to the Lord High-Treaſurer and to the Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, to take Surrenders of Indentures and Eſtates of Perſons having Leaſes or Grants for Terms of Years or Lives, of any Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, &c. belonging to the King, and alſo to leaſe ſuch Eſtates to any Perſons for 21 Years or under, or for Lives, on the payment of certain Fines. 'Tis dated at New Sarum the 20th of October, 1625.

674. 2. A Warrant to the Lord-Keeper for paſſing a Farm or Leaſe of Cuſtoms and Subſidies to Sir John Wolſtenholme, Sir Maurice Abbot, Henry Garwaie and Abraham Jacob Eſqs; Given under the Signet at Whitehall, April 14, 1626.

737. '3. A Commiſſion by the King and 'Council to the Officers of the Revenue, to 'levy the uſual Cuſtoms, Subſidies and Im-'poſts upon Goods and Merchandize, tho' 'not ſettled by Authority of either of the 'two laſt Parliaments.' 'Tis dated July 26, at Weſtminſter. As the King could not get Money of his Parliaments, but on ſuch terms as he did not care to comply with, he thought himſelf authorized to ſupply his wants this way.

740. '4. A Proclamation declaring his Ma-'jeſty's Reſolution to aſcertain his Revenues, 'by granting his Lands held as well by 'Copy as otherwiſe, in Fee-Farm. Dated at Nonſuch, Auguſt 16. This Project for raiſing Money was diſliked, becauſe it tended to impoveriſh the ſtated Revenue of the Crown by raiſing preſent Fines.

755. 5. A Commiſſion to the Earl of Marlborough Lord High-Treaſurer, the Duke of Bucks Lord High-Admiral, &c. to ſell divers of the King's Lands in Fee-farm, or to let for terms of Years or Lives. Dated at Weſtminſter, the 15th of September.

6. Another Commiſſion of the like Nature, dated October 23. CHARLES I.

771. 786. 7. A Declaration of the King's Intention to grant any of the Honours, Manors, &c. of the Crown to ſuch Perſons as the Commiſſioners nominated for that purpoſe, ſhould bargain for the ſame; dated Novem. 6.

790. 8. A Commiſſion to Sir John Walter Knt. Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, and others, to make conveyance of the King's Honours, Manors, &c. Dated the 8th of Novemb.

806. 9. A Commiſſion to the Earl of Marlborough, Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to conſider of ſeveral Points for augmenting the Revenue. Dated December 5.

THE chief Points that they were to take into conſideration, were, 1. What Foreſts, Chaces and Parks were fit to be diſinforeſted and diſpark'd. 2. What Penſions and Payments were proper to be reſtrain'd. 3. How reſpite of Homage might hereafter be ordered for the increaſe of the King's Profit, and the eaſe of the Subject. 4. What Tenures were fit to be alter'd by doubling of the Rents, and paying of Fines. 5. Whether it will not be fit to reduce the King's Lands now in leaſe for Lives or Years, or held by Copy, into Fee-Farm for an increaſe of Rent to the Crown, and for preſent Money to be paid to the Crown for Fines for the ſame, and in what manner. 6. What Officers and Offices might with convenience be leſſen'd.

943. 10. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to the Lord-Treaſurer, &c. declaring his Majeſty's aſſent to Contracts they had made for leaſing out certain of the King's Lands, and granting others in Fee-Farm, and authorizing them to direct Warrants to the Leſſees in Truſt of the Lands aſſured to them for the King's Uſe when he was Prince of Wales, to make ſuch farther Surrenders or Aſſignments as ſhould be neceſſary. Dated at Weſtminſter Oct. 14, 1627.

952. 11. A Commiſſion to James Earl of Marlborough, Lord High-Treaſurer, Sir Richard Weſton Knt. Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, and to Sir Humphry May, Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, to bargain for, grant, demiſe or lett the King's Honours, Manors, &c. Dated the firſt of December.

1053. There's another of the ſame kind, Dated Sept. 20, 1628.

1031. '12. A Commiſſion to Sir Ralph Hop-'ton, Sir John Horner, Sir Henry Berk-'ley, Sir Robert Phelips, Sir Edward 'Rodney, Thomas Windham Eſq; Edward 'Popham Eſq; and other Gentlemen of the 'County of Somerſet, to enable them to 'execute the late King's purpoſe for di-'viding, draining, incloſing and improving 'King's Sedgmore in the ſaid County. 'Tis dated July 18, 1628. at Weſtmin-'ſter.' It takes notice, that in the Reign of King James, the Earls of Pembroke and Northampton, Sir John Davies, Sir John Stawell, Sir John Strangewaies, Sir Rochel.

256. 1. Inſtructions for Henry Earl of Holland Captain of the Guard, and Sir Dudley Carleton Vice-Chamberlain of the King's Houſhold, when they were ſent Ambaſſadors Extraordinary to the moſt Chriſtian King. Dated at Hamptou-Court Decemb. 30, 1625.

They were to preſs the moſt Chriſtian King to give Peace to his faithful Proteſtant Subjects, being a great Body of Nobles, Captains, Soldiers, Citizens and People, numbers of Souls, Women and Children, who with all ſubmiſſion and humility implore his Favour, Grace and Mercy to enjoy the Religion they have been brought up in, under the Protection granted them by the Placaerts, Edicts and Confirmations of his good, great, wiſe and happy Progenitors of glorious Memory, who had alſo reap'd notable Services and Fidelity from thoſe of the Reformed Religion, to whom the more freely and ſpeedily his Majeſty ſhall give Peace, and with how much the greater ſurety, within the limits of what hath been formerly granted to them, the more will be their Obligation, and the greater Fruit and Effect will his Majeſty draw from their Services, becauſe when their Fears and Jealouſies are ſettled and compoſed, they will be free to apply themſelves with all gratitude to ſuch dutiful Services as his Majeſty ſhall have cauſe to command them; and his Majeſty would alſo have his Mind, his Arms, and his Treaſure more at liberty to purſue his glorious purpoſes.

THE Ambaſſadors were inſtructed above all things to mark the King's Proceedings with his Proteſtant Subjects, and the Courſe he takes againſt Rochel, and to take care by Delays and Entertainments that the Town be not ſo block'd up, but that it may be afterwards relieved. They were to take exact Information of the State of the Town as to Men, Ammunition, Proviſions, ſecurity from Faction, fears of Corruption, or framing of Parties; alſo what Forces by Land the Reformed were able to muſter, either to raiſe the Siege, or diſtreſs the Beſiegers; and to know what they have to offer to his Britannick Majeſty, to engage him in a War for their Defence. CHARLES I.

ON the other hand, if the Ambaſſadors found the King of France inclinable to give Peace to his Proteſtant Subjects, comprehending Rochel and its Inhabitants, they were to employ all their Power and Mediation with the Reformed to induce them to accept it on Terms of Security. They were alſo to give aſſurance to the Proteſtants, of his Majeſty's Regard for them, their Cauſe, their Peace, and their Security; and that his Majeſty was reſolved, and ready to apply his Mediation and communicate his Aſſiſtance, as their Neceſſities ſhould require. They were to repreſent, that if the King of France ſhould proceed againſt them with Violence, any Aſſiſtance they ſhould receive from King Charles might involve him in a War with France, Spain, and the whole Roman Catholick League: therefore they were to enquire of the Reformed what Forces and Shipping they could in ſuch caſe provide, and what aſſurance they could give that the ſame ſhould be conſtantly employ'd to his Uſe and by his Directions. Finally, they were to conſult with the Reformed as to the Expediency of repreſenting to him, by a Compariſon of the preſent Times with the Works of the League in the Reigns of Henry III. and IV. how dangerous it will be for the King to extirpate the Reformed.

891. 2. A Commiſſion appointing the Duke of Bucks Admiral of the Fleet, and Commander in Chief of the Land-Forces that were to be embark'd for the Recovery of the Palatinate, and to be conducted and employ'd according to ſuch private Inſtructions as he was to receive under the King's Sign Manual. 'Tis Dated the 14th of May, 1627, and gave him a power of puniſhing by Martial Law, or of advancing to Knighthood ſuch Perſons as he thought fit.

901. 3. THERE'S a ſpecial Commiſſion impowering the Duke to puniſh by Martial Law. Dated June 1, 1627, at Weſtminſter.

935. 4. A Proclamation empowering the Merchants who are Natives of England or Ireland to export Corn and other Proviſions for Supply of the Navy under Command of the Duke of Bucks at the Iſle of Rhee, or to the Town of Rochel. 'Tis dated Auguſt 18, at Bagſhot.

939. 5. A Commiſſion to Charles Viſcount Wilmot, for billeting, diſpoſing, and ordering ſome Companies of Soldiers and Mariners impreſs'd, to be ſent as a Supply to the Fleet at the Iſle of Rhee, and which were to rendezvous in and about Plymouth. 'Tis dated at Canbury Sept. 20, 1627. Many of them ran away from their Conductors; whereupon, ſays Whitelocke, it was reſolved by all the Judges, that ſuch Deſertion was Felony, by the Statute of 7 H. VII. c. 1. and 3 H. VIII. c. 5.

6. A

FOEDERA Tom XVIII. 945.

6. A Commiſſion to Capt. Henry Woodhouſe, who was to take the Charge and Government of 2000 Soldiers who were to be at Plymouth on the firſt of Novemb. and to be billeted in that and the adjacent Towns, empowering him and others mentioned in the Commiſſion to puniſh all Offences of the Soldiers by Martial Law. Dated at Weſtminſter, November 8.

THE like Commiſſions were granted to the Magiſtrates of other Towns and Counties.

1043. 7. A Commiſſion conſtituting Robert Earl of Lindſey, Admiral, Captain-General and Governour of the Fleet fitted out for Rochel. Dated at Canbury, Sept. 2, 1628, juſt ten days after the Aſſaſſination of the Duke of Bucks at Portſmouth.

Sea-Coaſts.

719. 1. A Proclamation commanding the People on the Sea-Coaſt not to deſert their Habitations for fear of the threatned Invaſion. Dated at Whitehall, July 10, 1626.

IT muſt be obſerved, that at this time, a heavy Charge was laid upon the ſeveral Ports and Maritime Counties to furniſh and fit out a certain number of Ships. The County and Ports of Dorſet and the City of London, which alone was required to furniſh twenty Men of War, preſented Petitions to the Council-Table, alledging that it was an Impoſition without a Precedent, and pleading at leaſt for an Abatement: But the Council gave a general Anſwer, That Precedents in former times were Obedience, and not Direction; and that Pleadings againſt a neceſſary Command did but obſtruct the publick Service, and were therefore by no means to be admitted. The Terror of this Burden made many of the Inhabitants remove higher into the Country, which withdrawing render'd the Load the more inſupportable by thoſe that ſtaid behind; and therefore this Proclamation was iſſued, requiring ſuch as were abſent to return, leſt the deſerting of the Coaſts, Ports and Sea-Towns, ſhould expoſe thoſe Places to become a Prey, and invite the Enemy to an Invaſion.

1038. 2. A Commiſſion and Inſtructions to Theophilus Earl of Suffolk, Lord-Warden of the Cinque-Ports, to examine all Perſons offering to paſs beyond Sea. Dated Sept. 2, 1628, at Canbury.

Probably this was iſſued on account of what had happened to George Duke of Bucks, Lord High-Admiral, who was ſtabb'd by Felton at Portſmouth, on the 23d of the preceding Month. This is the more likely, becauſe by the Terms of the Proclamation, the Lord Warden was to impriſon all that he ſhould ſuſpect to be dangerous Perſons, or fit to be made Inſtruments of deſperate Attempts.

WE cannot paſs over a Letter which the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge wrote upon this occaſion to the King, lamenting the Loſs of his Majeſty's moſt loyal Servant, their Patron and Chancellor, by that atal Blow, 'Which, ſaid he, hath ſo 'ſtunn'd our Univerſity, that (like a Body 'without a Soul) ſhe ſtirs not, till your 'Majeſty's Directions breathe Life again, in 'the Choice of another.'

CHARLES I.

Seals.

1. Three ſeveral Commiſſions iſſued by the King at Weſtminſter, the 28th of March 1625, to the Lord-Keeper, &c. authorizing the Uſe of the Great-Seal, Privy-Seal, and Signet, till new ones could be prepared. 1. 3.

2. Another of the ſame nature for Ireland; dated the 2d of April. 11.

3. There's a Proclamation of the ſame Date with the three Commiſſions, ſignifying his Majeſty's pleaſure, that all Men in Office of Government, whether in England ro Ireland, at the Deceaſe of the late King, ſhould continue in their Places till his Majeſty's farther Direction; becauſe by the Death of King James I. which happen'd the Day before, their Powers ceaſed. 4.

Star-Chamber.

1. A Note of all Cauſes cognizable by this Court, and of the Manner of their Proceedings. 192.

According to a Statute of the 3d of Henry VII. they were to hear and determine upon all Riots and unlawful Aſſemblies, all unlawful Retainders and Maintenances, Imbraceries of Jurors, Misbehaviour of Sheriffs in making of Pannels and falſe Returns, and taking of Money by Jurors, the Perjury of Jurors and Witneſſes, Forging of Deeds, Writings, Bills, Letters, or privy Tokens to ſlander or deceive any Man, Extortions of Sheriffs or other Officers, &c.

THE Lord-Chancellor or Lord-Keeper, the Lord Treaſurer, and Lord Privy-Seal, or two of them, one Spiritual, and one Temporal Lord of the Privy-Council; the two Chief Juſtices, or two other Juſtices in their abſence, ſate to hear and determine all ſuch Cauſes; and all other Lords of the Privy-Council, and the reſt of the Judges of both the Benches, ſometimes ſate with them.

THE Curious are referred to the Act it ſelf for their Methods of Proceeding.

2. A Note of the Fees due to the Clerk of the Court. 194.

3. The Forms of the Warrants for Proceſs. 194.

4. The Forms of all manner of Proceſs made out of this Court, ſuch as Subpœnas, Attachments, Commiſſions of Rebellion, Dedimus's, Superſedeas's, Certiorari's, &c. 195 to 198.

THE Rigours practiſed by the Star-Chamber Court, particularly in this Reign, were ſuch, that a farther account of it may not not be unacceptable to the Reader, especially considering that our Vouchers are those eminent Historians, Francis Lord Verulam, Sir Thomas Smith, and Bishop Nicholson.

FOEDERA Tom XVIII

THE Authority of this Court subsisted anciently by the common Laws of the Realm, and was afterwards confirm'd in certain Cases by Act of Parliament in the Reign of Henry VII.

THIS Court, says Lord Verulam, is one of the sagest and noblest Institutions of the Kingdom. 'Tis compounded of good Elements; for it consists of four kinds of Persons, Counsellors, Peers, Prelates, and Chief Judges. It discerneth also principally of four kinds of Causes, Forces, Frauds Crimes various of Stellionate, and the Inchoations or middle Acts towards capital or heinous Crimes not actually committed. But the thing which was principally aimed at by the Act confirming this Court, was Force, and the two chief Supports of Force, Combination of Multitudes, and Maintenance or Headship of great Persons.

Sir Thomas Smith tells us, that this Court commonly sate on Wednesdays and Fridays in Term-time, and the next day after the Term ended, from nine o'Clock till eleven, in a Place called the Star-Chamber, either because 'tis full of Windows, or because at first the Roof was adorn'd with gilded Stars *.

UPON the certifying of any Riot, the Party complain'd against (of whatsoever degree he be) must appear in the Star-Chamber, and if he does not give a good account of himself, he shall be committed to the Fleet-Prison, where he shall be kept in such sort as the Judges of the Court shall appoint, and lie there till he is weary of the long Restraint and great Expences; when after the Suit of his Friends, he will be glad to be order'd by Reason. Sometimes, according to the nature of his Crime, he pays a great Fine to the Prince, besides great Costs and Damages to the Party aggrieved; and yet the matter whereof he attempted such Riot is referr'd to the Common-Law. For the purpose of this Court is to bridle such stout Noblemen or Gentlemen, who would offer wrong by Force to People, and cannot be content to demand or defend Right by due Course of Law.

THIS Court, as is already observed, began long before the Reign of Henry VII. but had lain dormant for a while, till Cardinal Wolsey, when Chancellor of England, augmented the Authority of it; for which reason, says our Author, some thought the Cardinal first devised it. He adds, That it was at this time absolutely necessary for him to take that Course for repressing the insolence of the Nobility and Gentry of the North of England, who being far from the King, and the Seat of Justice, were generally at war with one another, banding themselves with their Tenants and Servants, to do or revenge Injuries one against another. CHARLES I.

THIS was so insupportable to King Henry VIII. that he sent for them one after another to Court, and referred them to the Star-Chamber; so that after being made sensible of their Misdemeanor, and being well disciplin'd by Words, and imprisonment in the Fleet, which exhausted both their Purse and Courage, they began to be orderly, and to understand that they had a Prince who would rule his Subjects by his Law, to which he expected Obedience: After this, Sir Thomas Smith says, the Court of Star-Chamber was in more estimation.

THE Officers of this Court, according to his Account, were a Clerk, three Attorneys, and an Examiner. The Clerk kept the Records, Rules, Entries, Orders and Decrees of the Court. The Attorneys were to draw up the Complaints and Answers of the Plaintiff and Defendant, and to methodise the same fit to be heard by the Lords. The Examiner took the Depositions of the Witnesses on both sides.

THE Order of proceeding to Judgement was by assent of Voices; to the majority of which, Sentence was referred.

THE common Punishments were Imprisonment, Pillory, or Fine; and many times both Fine and Imprisonment.

THE Process was a Subpœna, which was in the manner of a Libel or Precept; an Attachment, a Proclamation of Rebellion, and a Commission of Rebellion; which Proclamation and Commission were issued when the Party was stubborn, or had been guilty of Contempt for not coming in by the former Process.

THE Messengers of the Court of Star-Chamber, were the Warden of the Fleet, or the Serjeants at Arms.

THE Crimes generally laid before them, were the taking away of Maids under Age, against the Will of their Parents or Guardians; all notable Forgeries; counterfeiting Letters or Privy-Tokens; slandering of Nobles, and seditious News: All notable Riots and unlawful Assemblies; and all the Titles of Riots in Rastal's Abridgement; all notable Deceits, and all kind of Cousenage, &c.

Bishop Nicholson says, It were in vain to look for any Records of the Court of Star-Chamber higher than the third Year of Henry VII. if the Statute of the third of his Reign, cap. 7. which declares the Powers of its Judges, were (as some have thought) the first Original and Foundation of their Jurisdiction: But in Chambers's Case †, it was the unanimous Opinion of the whole Court of King's-Bench, That it was not erected by that Statute, but was a Court many Years before, and one of the moſt High and Honourable Courts of Juſtice. Returns of Writs to the King in Camera, (which is commonly expounded * Star-Chamber) are as old as the 28th of Edward III. And it appears (from a Caſe in one of the Lord Dyer's MSS) that both the Chief-Juſtices ſate in that Court, and that they fined Delinquents very deep, in the Reign of Henry VI. It took Cogniſance of Riots, Extortions, Oppreſſions, and other grievous Offences; but meddled not with Crimes liable to the pains of Death. It is ſaid to have but few Seſſions; and that for theſe Reaſons: 1. Becauſe thoſe Enormities that were chiefly therein cognizable, were rare. 2. Ne Dignitas hujus Curiæ vileſcerit. 3. That the Council might not neglect the publick Affairs of State in their too frequent Attendance on private Cauſes. Their Proceedings were by Informations, Bills, Anſwers, Replications, Interrogatories, &c. All which were filed up; and the Sentences and Decrees were ingroſſed in a fair Book, with the Names of the Lords and others who were preſent, and gave their Voices.

Titles to Eſtates.

45. 1. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to the Lord-Keeper, Lord-Treaſurer, and to the Duke of Bucks, and others, to compound for defective Titles to Eſtates. Dated the 9th of May 1625, at Weſtminſter.

650 to 657. 2. Commiſſions to enquire what Lands were held of the Crown by Perſons deceaſed in the firſt Year of the King.

739. 3. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to Sir John Savile, &c. to diſcover what Lands and Tenements within the Weſt-Riding of Yorkſhire are held in Chief, and by Knights Service, or in Socage in Chief. 'Tis dated July 29, 1626, at Weſtminſter.

Tobacco.

19. 1. A Proclamation prohibiting the Importation and Uſe of all Tobacco which is not of the proper growth of the Colonies of Virginia and the Summer-Iſlands: And for tranſporting all other foreign Tobacco out of the King's Dominions Cuſtom-free, before the 4th day of May next. 'Tis dated at Whitehall the 9th of April 1625.

'Twas enforced by another of May 13.

73. 831. 2. A Commiſſion to Sir John Wolſtenholm and others, for ſeizing all Spaniſh and other foreign Tobacco. Dated Jan. 31, 1627. at Weſtminſter.

848. 3. 'A Proclamation concerning Tobacco 'which gave leave for importing Spaniſh 'or other foreign Tobacco, not being the 'growth of our Plantations, provided the 'quantity ſo imported did not exceed '30,000 lb. weight in any one Year.' The Reaſon aſſign'd for this Licence was, becauſe the Subjects at that time thought there was ſo little difference betwixt Spaniſh or foreign Tobacco, and that of our own Plantations in America, that they could hardly be induced to forſake the Spaniſh Tobacco totally. This Proclamation is dated at Whitehall, Febr. 17.

CHARLES I.

886. 4. A Proclamation for ſealing of Tobacco, dated at Whitehall, March 30. This was to diſtinguiſh that of the growth of our own Plantations from Spaniſh or other foreign Tobacco.

920. '5. Another not only commanding the 'plucking up and deſtruction of Tobacco 'planted in England, Ireland and Wales, 'and the Iſles thereto belonging, and pro'hibiting the Importation and Sale of Spa'niſh and other foreign Tobacco; but for 'reſtraining the planting and importation 'of Tobacco from the American Colonies.' Dated at Windſor the 9th of Auguſt. This Proclamation takes notice of the inordinate Deſire that then prevailed of taking Tobacco; and that the Planters, &c. in the American Colonies gave themſelves over to the planting of Tobacco for the ſake of a preſent return of Profit, and neglected the improvement of ſolid Commodities fit for the eſtabliſhing of Colonies; therefore his Majeſty commanded that no Tobacco at all ſhould be imported into his Dominions from Virginia, the Summer Iſlands, or any other Colonies without his ſpecial Licence under the Great Seal; and that upon the importation thereof, the ſame be delivered for the King's Uſe to Commiſſioners to be appointed by his Majeſty under the Great Seal, at certain Prices to be agreed on between the Owners and the ſaid Commiſſioners; or elſe to be exported again, and ſold elſewhere, on pain of Forfeiture thereof to the King. And no Perſon whatſoever was to buy Tobacco of any Perſon but thoſe Commiſſioners, on the ſame Penalty.

Treaties.

793. 1. A Commiſſion under the Great Seal to Captain John Harriſon to treat with the Kings, Princes, and other Governours of the Parts of Barbary, and Town of Sallee, for the Redemption and Exchange of Captives, and ſettling Commerce. Sign'd with the King's own Hand at Weſtminſter, the 10th of November, 1626.

807. 2. Another Commiſſion directed to the Captain for the ſame purpoſe. Dated December 5.

896. '3. Another to Sir Robert Anſtruther, 'to treat of a Peace in Germany, and con'cerning the Affairs of the Elector Pala'tine.' 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, April 12, 1627, and ſign'd with the King's own hand. It appears that the Emperor had ordered a Congreſs of Electors and other German Princes, to be held for this purpoſe at Nuremberg.

4. A Commiſſion to the Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to treat with Sir Adrian Pawe Knt. and another Dutch Ambaſſador, ſent over to propoſe and conclude divers Matters of great Importance. Dated as above, the laſt Day of February 1628.

Wardrobe.

769. 1. A Commiſſion for enquiring into the State of the King's Wardrobe, Dated Oct. 18, 1626. 'Tis directed under the Privy-Seal, to James Earl of Marlborough, Lord High-Treaſurer, &c.

1046. 2. Another of the ſame kind to his Succeſſor Richard Lord Weſton, &c. Dated at Weſtminſter, Sept. 3. 1628.

Woollen Manufacture.

81. 1. A ſpecial Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal, appointing ſeveral Lords of the Council and others, a ſtanding Committee to inquire into and redreſs the decay'd ſtate of the Woollen Manufacture, by contriving Ways and Means to raiſe the Price of Wools, to prevent the Exportation of Engliſh Wool, Fullers-Earth and Wood-Aſhes; to promote the Importation of Wool from Ireland and Scotland, and ſo to order the Manufacture that it may recover the ancient Price it bore in foreign Parts, and which by ill and deceitful Making, Dying, and Dreſſing, was of late Years ſunk both in Value and Vent. They were alſo to inquire into the Neceſſity for Wool-Jobbers, the Cauſe of the Dearneſs of Dyes, and the Scarcity of Money; the Expediency of Joint-Stocks and Companies of Merchants, and to take care of the Balance of Trade and the Courſe of Exchange; the encouragement of the Herring-Fiſhing upon our Seas and Coaſts; to guard againſt the Importation of Merchandiſe in foreign Bottoms, and to promote the uſual Returns of Corn, rough Hemp and Flax from the Eaſtland Countries. They were alſo to conſider how to encourage the ſowing of Hemp and Flax at home, and how the Trade to the Eaſt-Indies might be carried on to the Profit of the Nation without carrying out its Coin and Treaſure. 'Twas dated at Weſtminſter, May 19, 1625.

We now enter into the XIXth Tome of the FOEDERA, being the laſt that is hitherto publiſhed of that ineſtimable Collection, (to uſe the Words of the Compiler in his Dedication of it to his preſent Majeſty) which contains ſo vaſt and rich a Fund of uſeful and inſtructive Learning, in all Tranſactions, whether Foreign or Domeſtick, that no other Nation ever did, nor indeed is able to produce the like: A Collection drawn from the pure and unadulterate Fountain of his Majeſty's Sacra Scrinia, which give the firmeſt Sanction to its Veracity, and the ſureſt Proof to its Authority.

Tom. XIX. Private Conſultations about the enſuing Parliament.

THE Parliament which was to have met on the 20th of October, was by Proclamation on the firſt of that Month prorogued to the 20th of January, during which it was reſolved in Council, to juſtify the proceedings againſt the Merchants with reſpect to Tonnage and Poundage, at the next Meeting, and to diſſolve the Parliament, if they did not paſs the Bill. And thoſe of the Council that were Members of the Houſe of Commons, were directed what to ſay, if the Houſe ſhould fall upon any of the King's Miniſters.

ON the ſaid 20th of January, the Parliament met, and one of the firſt things they took into conſideration, was the Violation of the Subject's Liberty and Property ſince the laſt Seſſion, by the Levies of Tonnage and Poundage, contrary to the Petition of Right. Whereupon Sir Robert Philips made this Speech *.

Sir Robert Philips's Speech on the Violation of the Subjects Liberties and Properties.

'BY this Information, you ſee how unfortunate theſe Times are, and how full time 'it was for this Aſſembly to meet to ſerve 'his Majeſty, and to ſerve their Country; 'and I am confident that coming hither 'with fullneſs of Affection to our King 'and Country, all will conduce to a happy 'Concluſion, and the King's Honour. Indeed our own great and weighty Affairs 'wound deep: Caſt your Eyes which way 'you pleaſe, you ſhall ſee Violations on 'all ſides. Look on the Liberty of the 'Subject; look on the Privilege of this 'Houſe; let any ſay if ever he ſaw or 'read the like Violations by inferior Miniſters, that over-do their command. 'They knew the Party  was a Parliament 'Man; nay, they ſay, If all the Parliament were in you, this we would do, and juſtify it. If we ſuffer the Privilege 'of Parliament, and Liberty of Subjects, 'to be thus violated for fear of complaint, 'we give a Wound to the Happineſs of the 'Kingdom. The Courſe of Juſtice is interrupted, and an Order in the Exchequer 'made for the ſtay of the Goods; and ſince 'there is a ſeizure upon the approach of 'Parliament, of Goods amounting to 5000*l.* 'for a pretended Duty of 200*l.* Cuſtom, 'tis time to look about us.

'IN the firſt Year of King James, by 'reaſon of the Sickneſs that then was, the 'Parliament was prorogued, and there were 'ſome ſo bold as to take this Tonnage 'and Poundage, when we queſtioned the 'Men that demanded it. Let us proceed 'with affection of Duty, and make up 'Breaches: Let a Committee be appointed 'for examination of theſe Proceedings.'

The King's Meſſage to the Commons.

THE Buſineſs was accordingly referred to a Committee, and the Officers of the Cuſtoms, who had ſeized the Goods of Rolls, and the other Merchants, were ordered to be ſent for; but while the Debate was warm upon it, the King ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe, deſiring them to deſiſt till next day in the Afternoon, at which time he would ſpeak with them in the Banquetting-Houſe at Whitehall. The Lords having alſo received Orders to be there, the King made the following Speech to both Houſes:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

And Speech to both Houſes.

'THE Care I have to remove all Obſtacles that may hinder the good Correſpondency between me and this Parliament, is 'the Cauſe I have called you together 'at this time; the particular Occaſion 'being a Complaint made in the Lower 'Houſe. And for you, my Lords, I am 'glad to take this, and all other Occaſions, 'whereby you may clearly underſtand 'both my Words and Actions: For as you 'are neareſt in degree, ſo you are the 'fitteſt Witneſſes unto Kings.

'THE Complaint I ſpeak of is, for ſtaying Mens Goods that deny Tonnage and 'Poundage. This may have an eaſy and 'ſhort Concluſion, if my Words and Actions be rightly underſtood: For by paſſing the Bill as my Anceſtors have had it, 'my by-paſt Actions will be included, and 'my future Proceedings authoriſed; which 'certainly would not have been ſtuck on, 'if Men had not imagined that I had taken 'theſe Duties as appertaining to my hereditary Prerogative; in which they are 'much deceived; for it ever was, and is 'ſtill my Meaning, by the Gift of my People to enjoy it: And my Intention in my 'Speech, at the ending of the laſt Seſſion, 'concerning this Point, was not to challenge Tonnage and Poundage as of Right, 'but de bene eſſe, ſhewing you the Neceſſity, not the Right by which I was to 'take it, until you had granted it to me; 'aſſuring myſelf, according to your general Profeſſions, you wanted Time, not 'Will to give it to me.

'WHEREFORE now, having opportunity, I expect that, without loſs of 'time, you make good your Profeſſions, 'and ſo by paſſing of a Bill, put an end 'to all the Queſtions ariſing from this Subject; eſpecially ſince I have cleared the 'only Scruple that can trouble you in this 'Buſineſs.

'TO conclude, Let us not be jealous of 'one another's Actions: For if I had been 'eaſily moved at every occaſion *, the Order you made on Wedneſday laſt, might 'have made me ſtartle, there being ſome 'ſhew to ſuſpect that you had given yourſelves the Liberty to be the Inquiſitors 'after Complaints, (the Words of your Order being ſomewhat too largely penn'd;) 'but looking into your Actions, I find you 'only here Complainers, not ſeeking Complaints: For I am certain you neither 'pretend nor deſire the Liberty to be Inquiſitors of Mens Actions, before particular Complaint be made.

'THIS I have ſpoken, to ſhew you how 'ſlow I am to believe harſhly of your Proceedings; likewiſe to aſſure you, that the 'Houſes Reſolutions, not particular Mens 'Speeches, ſhall make me judge well or 'ill; not doubting, but according to my 'example, you will be deaf to ill Reports 'concerning me, till my Words and Actions 'ſpeak for themſelves; that ſo this Seſſion 'beginning with Confidence one towards another, it may end with a perfect good Underſtanding between us: Which God grant.'

King's Meſſage for the ſpeedy taking off of Tonnage and Poundage.

Monday the 26th of January, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons from the King, to deſire that the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage might be taken into Conſideration without loſs of Time. But the Houſe, tho' they reſented it that the King ſhould impoſe a Bill upon them, which ought naturally to ariſe from themſelves, imagining at leaſt that his Majeſty had not a Power to preſcribe a Time to them, forbore however to ſpeak their Minds freely, and reſolving to husband their Time, did further impower the Committee to examine the Violation of Liberty and Property ſince the laſt Seſſion; and thinking it proper to ſuſpend the Bill for a while, fell upon other Grievances, and in the firſt place thoſe relating to Religion; particularly the Increaſe of Arminians: upon which occaſion Mr. Rouſe ſpoke to this purpoſe †:

But the Commons reſolve to proceed on Matters of Religion.

Mr.

* It does not appear from any Hiſtory what this Order could be, unleſs it was that made by the Houſe the preceding Day (which by all accounts was Tueſday,) to ſend for the Cuſtom-houſe Officers who had ſeiz'd the Merchants Goods: for the Houſe had not ſate from June laſt, till that day.

† The Author of this Speech, who made ſo great a Figure in the Parliaments during this Reign, and the Uſurpation, was Francis Rouſe, younger Son of Sir Anthony Rouſe of Cornwall. He was born about 1579, and at twelve Years of Age became a Commoner of Broadgates-Hall in Oxford, which is ſince converted into Pembroke-College. Being eſteemed a Man of Parts, ſays the Author of Athenæ Oxonienſes, and ſolely devoted to the Puritanical Party, he was generally choſe by the Men of Truro to repreſent them in Parliament. In 1643, he was choſe one of the Aſſembly of Divines, and by Authority of Parliament made Provoſt of Eaton College; and in 1653, choſe Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, on condition that he ſhould continue but a Month in the Chair; and in December following, he was nominated one of Oliver's Council. He wrote ſeveral Tracts, for which we refer to A. Wood, the above-mentioned Writer, particularly one of the Anſwers to Dr. Mountague's Appeal; and tranſlated David's Pſalms into Engliſh Metre. He died at Acton near this City, on the 7th of January 165⅔, and was buried in Eaton College Church, near to the Entrance of that Chapel formerly built by Roger Lupton, one of the Provoſts. He was very exemplary in Works of Charity whilſt living, and at his Death he left 60*l. per Annum* for the Maintenance of three Students of low Fortune at Broadgates-Hall, aforeſaid, who were either to be taken out of his Kindred, or from two of the Upper Claſſes of Eaton School.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

CHARLES I. A°. 1629.

Mr. Rouse's Speech on that head.

Mr. Speaker,

'WE have of late entered into Consideration of the Petition of Right, and the Violation of it, and upon good reason; for it concerns your Goods, Liberties and Laws; but there is a Right of higher Nature that preserves for us far greater Things, Eternal Life, our Souls, yea our God himself; a Religion derived to us from the King of Kings, confirmed upon us by the King of this Kingdom, enacted by Laws in this place, streaming down to us in the Blood of Martyrs, witnessed from Heaven by Miracles, even miraculous Deliverances; and this Right in the Name of this Nation I this day require and claim, that there may be a deep and serious Consideration of the Violation of it: I desire it may be considered what new Paintings are laid on the old Face of the Whore of Babylon, to make her shew more lovely, and to draw so many Suitors to her. I desire that it may be considered how the See of Rome doth eat into our Religion, and fret into the Banks and Walls of it, the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, especially since those Laws have been made in a manner by themselves, even by their own Treasons and bloody Designs: And since that Popery is a confused Heap of Errors, casting down Kings before Popes, the Precepts of God before the Traditions of Men, (living and reasonable Men) before dead and senseless Stocks and Stones: I desire that we may consider the Increase of Arminianism, an Error that makes the Grace of God lackey it after the Will of Man, that makes the Sheep to keep the Shepherd, and makes a mortal Seed of an immortal God. Yea, I desire that we may look into the very Belly and Bowels of this Trojan Horse, to see if there be not Men in it ready to open the Gates to Romish Tyranny and Spanish Monarchy; for an Arminian is the Spawn of a Papist, and if there come the Warmth of Favour upon him, you shall see him turn into one of those Frogs that rise out of the bottomless Pit; and if you mark it well, you shall see an Arminian reaching out his hand to a Papist; a Papist to a Jesuit; a Jesuit gives one hand to the Pope, another to the King of Spain; and these Men having kindled a Fire in our Neighbour Country, have now brought over some of it hither to set this Kingdom also on a flame. Yea, let us further search and consider whether these be not the Men that break in upon the Goods and Liberties of this Common-wealth; for by this means they make way for the taking away of our Religion: It was an old Trick of the Devil, when he meant to take away Job's Religion, he begun at his Goods, saying, Lay thy Hand on all he hath, and he will curse thee to thy Face. Either they think thereby to set a Distaste between Prince and People, or else to find some other way of Supply, to avoid or break Parliaments, that so they may break in upon our Religion, and bring in their Errors. But let us do as Job did, who being constant against Temptation, held fast his Religion, and his Goods were restored to him with advantage; so if we hold fast God and our Religion, these things shall be added unto us: Let us now consider the Times past, how this Nation flourished in Honour and Abundance when Religion flourished amongst us: But as Religion decayed, so the Honour and Strength of this Nation decayed also: When the Soul of a Common-wealth is dead, the Body cannot survive it. If a Man meet a Dog alone, the Dog is fearful, though never so fierce by nature; but if that Dog have his Master by him, he will set upon that Man from whence he fled before. This shews, that lower Natures being backed with the higher, increase in Courage and Strength; and certainly Man being backed with Omnipotency, is a kind of Omnipotency. All things are possible to him that believeth; and where all things are possible, there is a kind of Omnipotency. Wherefore let us now by the unanimous Consent and Resolution of us all, make a Vow and Covenant, henceforth to hold fast, I say, to hold fast our God and our Religion; and then may we from henceforth certainly expect Prosperity on this Kingdom and Nation: And to this Covenant let every Man say Amen.'

A Report from the Committee for Religion.

THE 27th of January, a Report was made to the House from the Committee for Religion, that a Remonstrance upon that Subject, drawn up last Session, had since that time, by the Command of the King, been delivered by the Clerk to some Persons whom his Majesty had sent for it, and that for want of it the Committee could not proceed. Upon this Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Message from his Majesty, That notwithstanding the Remonstrance concerning Religion was called for, he was pleased (to take away all Question) to deliver it back to them; hoping nevertheless that they will proceed with the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage, and give Precedency to that Business, and so put an end to a further Dispute between some of his Subjects, (meaning the Merchants, and the Customers who had seized their Goods for Tonnage and Poundage,) or else he shall think his Speech, which was with good Applause accepted, had not that good Effect which he expected. But it being observed by some of the Members, That if Popery and Arminianism join hand and hand, it would by degrees bring in Spanish Tyranny; under which our Laws and Liberties must cease;

The Remonstrance on that Subject sent back by the King.

Precedency again given to Religion before Tonnage and Poundage.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

ceaſe; that it was high time to enquire what Perſons had been advanced to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, ſince the laſt Seſſion, and to whom Pardons had been granted; that Religion concerned the King as well as the Subjects, and that the Work of the Lord muſt not be done negligently, the Houſe reſolved it ſelf into a Committee, and gave Religion the Precedency of Tonnage and Poundage. And in the Committee, Mr. Pym took notice of an old Diſeaſe, viz. Popery, and a new one, viz. Arminianiſm. As to the former, he moved for an Enquiry into, 1. The Ceſſation of the execution of the Laws againſt Papiſts. 2. Into the Employment and Countenance of Papiſts. 3. Into the Violation of the Law, by continually bringing in ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, eſpecially at Durham *, by Dr. Coſins, a Prebendary, as Angels, Saints, Crucifixes, Altars, and Candles on Candlemaſs-day burnt in the Church after the Popiſh manner. And as to Arminianiſm, he concluded thus; 'That whereas 'by the Articles ſet forth 1652, and by the 'Catechiſm ſet forth in King Edward the 'Sixth's Days, and by the Writings of Martin Bucer and Peter Martyr, who were 'employed in making our Articles; and 'by the conſtant Profeſſions, ſealed by the 'Blood of ſo many Martyrs, as Cranmer, 'Ridley, and others; and by the 36 Arti'cles in Queen Elizabeth's time; and by the 'Articles agreed upon at Lambeth, as the 'Doctrine of the Church of England, which 'King James ſent to Dort and to Ireland, 'and were avowed by us and our State; 'his Majeſty hath expreſſed himſelf in pre- 'ſerving Unity in Religion eſtabliſhed, tho' 'his Royal Intention, notwithſtanding, hath 'been perverted by ſome to ſuppreſs the 'Truth: Let us ſhew wherein theſe late 'Opinions are contrary to thoſe ſettled 'Truths, and what Men have been ſince 'preferr'd, that have profeſs'd theſe Here'ſies; what Pardons they have had for 'falſe Doctrine; what prohibiting of Books 'and Writings againſt their Doctrine, and 'permitting of ſuch Books as have been 'for them? Let us inquire after the Abet'ters; let us inquire alſo after the Pardons 'granted of late to ſome of theſe, and Pre'ſumption of ſome that dare preach the 'contrary to Truth before his Majeſty. It 'belongs to the Duty of a Parliament to 'eſtabliſh true Religion, and to puniſh 'falſe; we muſt know what Parliaments 'have done formerly in Religion. Our Par'liaments have confirmed general Councils. 'In the time of King Henry VIII. the Earl 'of Eſſex was condemned for countenan'cing Books of Hereſy: As for the Con'vocation, it is but a Provincial Synod of 'Canterbury, and cannot bind the whole 'Kingdom. As for York, that is diſtant, 'and cannot do any thing to bind us or 'the Laws; and as for the High Commiſ'ſion, it was derived from Parliament.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1629.

Mr. Pym's Speech about Religion.

And particularly Arminianiſm.

BUT the Inquiry he mov'd for was interrupted by a freſh Meſſage, delivered by Secretary Cook, from the King, requiring the Houſe to give the Precedence to the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, whereby his Majeſty declared, he intended not to interrupt

Another Meſſage from the King about Tonnage and Poundage.

* This was Dr. John Coſins, a Native of Norwich, who was educated in Caius College Cambridge, preferred to be a Prebendary of Durham, then Archdeacon of the Eaſt-Riding of Yorkſhire, upon the Reſignation of Richard Remington, whoſe Daughter he married; next Rector of the Church of Branſpath, in the Biſhoprick of Durham; then Maſter of Peter's College in Cambridge; next Vice-Chancellor of that Univerſity, and then Dean of Peterborough; and at laſt having been Chaplain in Ordinary, both to King Charles I. and King Charles II. he was, upon the Reſtoration of the latter, advanced to the Biſhoprick of Durham. He died in Pall-mall, January 15, 1672, about the Age of 77, and was buried the 29th of April, at Biſhop's-Aukland in his Dioceſe, after having beſtowed much Wealth on pious and publick Uſes; particularly 5 l. a Year for ever to the Poor of Peterborough, payable out of 100 l. which he left with the Dean and Chapter. He was alſo a Benefactor to Biſhop's-Aukland, where he founded and endowed an Hoſpital for two Men, and as many Women, after he had, at vaſt Expence, repaired and beautified the Palace, (which Sir Arthur Haſlerig had almoſt reduced to Ruins) and enriched it with a good Library of Books, and a ſtately Chapel.

The Author of that called the True Secret Hiſtory of the Kings and Queens of England, ſaid to be written by a Perſon of Honour, tells us, that at the Aſſizes held this Year at Durham, a Bill was found againſt this Divine by the Grand Jury, (though Proceedings were ſtopped) for introducing and practiſing ſeveral Innovations and Corruptions in the Cathedral, for unſound Doctrines, and for impugning the King's Supremacy; particularly by his preaching there upon the Parable of the Tares, and ſaying, 'That the Reformers of our Church when 'they took away the Maſs, took away or marred all Religion, and the whole Service of God; that they called 'it a Reformation, but that it was a Deformation; and that the Maſs was not ſo taken away, but that the Pre'ſence of Chriſt ſtill remained; and that if the Reformation were otherwiſe, it was not a Reformation, but a 'deformed Religion.' He was alſo charged with ſaying, 'that in Queen Elizabeth's time, when Popery was put 'out, the Reformation was a Deformation, and that inſtead of bringing in Order, they brought in Ordure: That he 'perſuaded a Papiſt to come to Church, by ſaying, That the Body of Chriſt was ſubſtantially and really in the 'Sacrament; and that he ſaid at a publick Dinner, That the King was not the ſupreme Head of the Church of 'England, nor could be ſo called.'

interrupt them as to Religion, provided they did not intrench upon that which did not belong to them. But by this 'twas plain, as Mr. Rapin obſerves, that he took away with one Hand, what he gave with the other, ſince it was his Opinion that the Commons had nothing to do with Religion. The Courtiers however ſeconded the Meſſage, particularly Sir Thomas Edmonds, one of his Majeſty's Domeſticks, who reproached the Members with neglect of Duty, preſſed them to a Compliance, and urged them to conſider how dangerous it was to alienate his Majeſty's Heart from Parliaments. To which Mr. Corriton made this Anſwer: 'When Men ſpeak here of 'neglect of Duty to his Majeſty, let them 'know we know no ſuch thing, nor what 'they mean; and I ſee not how we do 'neglect the ſame. I ſee it is in all our 'Hearts to expedite the Bill of Tonnage 'and Poundage in due time. Our Buſineſs 'is ſtill put back by theſe Meſſages, and 'the Buſineſs in hand is of God: His Ma'jeſty's Affairs are certainly amiſs, and e'very one ſees it, and woe be to us, if 'we preſent them not to his Majeſty.'

Seconded by Sir Tho. Edmonds.

Mr. Corriton's Anſwer.

AFTER this the Houſe reſolved to ſend an Anſwer to the King, that theſe Meſſages are inconvenient, and breed Debates and Loſs of Time; and did further reſolve, that Tonnage and Poundage ariſing naturally from this Houſe, they would in fit time take ſuch a Courſe therein, as they hoped would be to his Majeſty's Satisfaction and Honour, but that at preſent they would proceed in matters of Religion.

Reſolution of the Houſe.

* SIR John Elliot ſpoke upon this occaſion, as follows; 'I have always ob'ſerved, ſaid he, that in the Proceedings 'of this Houſe, our beſt advantage is Or'der; and I was very glad when that no'ble Gentleman my Countryman gave oc'caſion to ſtate our Proceedings, for I fear 'it would have carried us into a Sea of 'Confuſion and Diſorder. And having now 'occaſion to preſent my Thoughts in this 'great and weighty Buſineſs of Religion, 'I ſhall be bold to ſpeak a few Words.

Sir John Elliot's Speech on Religion.

'THERE is a Jealouſy conceived, as 'if we meant to diſpute on Matters of Faith. 'It is not in the Parliament to make a new 'Religion, nor I hope ſhall it be in any to 'alter the Body of Truth which we now 'profeſs. I muſt confeſs amongſt all thoſe 'Fears we have contracted, there ariſeth 'to me not one of the leaſt Dangers in the 'Declaration that is made and publiſhed 'in his Majeſty's Name, concerning diſ'puting and preaching: Let not this my 'Saying bear the leaſt Suſpicion or Jealouſy 'of his Majeſty, for if there be any Miſ'priſion or Error, I hope it is in thoſe Mi'niſters about him, which not only he, but 'all Princes are ſubject to; and Princes 'no doubt are ſubject to Miſinformations, 'and many Actions may be intitled to their 'Names, when it is not done by themſelves. 'Antiochus, King of Aſia, ſent his Letters 'and Miſſives to ſeveral Provinces, that if 'they received any Diſpatches in his Name 'not agreeable to Juſtice, Ignoto ſe literas 'eſſe ſcriptas, ideoque iis non parerent; 'and the reaſon of it is given by Gratian, 'becauſe that oſtentimes by the Importu'nity of Miniſters, Principes ſæpe conſtrin'guntur ut non concedenda concedant; and 'as it was in that Age, ſo it may be in 'this. And now to the Particular in the 'Declaration; we ſee what is ſaid of Po'pery and Arminianiſm. Our Faith and 'Religion is in danger by it; for like an 'Inundation it doth break in at once upon 'us. It is ſaid, if there be any difference 'of Opinion concerning the ſeaſonable In'terpretation of the Thirty-nine Articles, 'the Biſhops and the Clergy in the Con'vocation have power to decide it, and to 'order which way they pleaſe; and for 'ought I know, Popery and Arminianiſm 'may be introduced by them, and then it 'muſt be received by all. A ſtrange thing, 'that the Power of Religion ſhould be left 'to the Perſons of theſe Men. I honour 'their Profeſſion. There are among our 'Biſhops ſuch as are fit to be made Ex'amples for all Ages, who ſhine in Virtue, 'and are firm for our Religion; but the 'contrary Faction I like not. I remem'ber a Character I have ſeen in a Diary 'of

* This Gentleman, ſo famous for his Speeches in Parliament, was a Native of Cornwall. In Michaelmas Term 1607, when he was about 15 Years of Age, he became a Gentleman-Commoner of Exeter College in Oxford; but after he had been there about three Years, he went, it ſeems, without any Degree, to one of the Inns of Court, where he was made a Barriſter. May 10, 1618, he was knighted by King James at Whitehall; and ever after, as long as he lived, was choſe to ſerve in Parliament, either as Knight of the Shire, or as Burgeſs of ſome Corniſh Borough; but his brave Oppoſition to the Incroachments of riſing Favourites brought him ſeveral times into trouble; particularly in 1626, when he was committed, as has been already obſerved, to the Tower and the Gatehouſe: to the firſt, for his Speech, by way of Epilogue, to the Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham; Sir Dudley Diggs, who ſpoke the Prologue, being his Fellow-Priſoner; and to the laſt, for refuſing to part with Money upon the Loan. And a little before the Diſſolution of this Parliament, we ſhall find, that for a Speech of his againſt ſome particular Perſons, he, with ſome other Members, was again committed to the Tower, and had an Information exhibited againſt him in the King's Bench, for a Sower of Diſcord, Sedition, &c. againſt the King's Nobles, Prelates, &c. in Parliament.

Fœdera Tom. XIX.

'of Edward VI. that young Prince of famous Memory, where he doth expreſs the 'Condition of the Biſhops of that time under his own Hand-writing, That ſome for 'Sloth, ſome for Age, ſome for Ignorance, 'ſome for Luxury, and ſome for Popery, 'were unfit for Diſcipline and Government. We ſee there are ſome among our 'Biſhops who are not orthodox nor ſound 'in Religion as they ſhould be; witneſs 'the two Biſhops complained of † the laſt 'Meeting of the Parliament; I apprehend, 'that ſhould we be in their power, we may 'be in danger to have our Religion overthrown. Some of theſe are Maſters of 'Ceremonies, and they labour to introduce 'new Ceremonies into the Church; yet 'ſome Ceremonies are uſeful. Give me 'leave to join, that I hold it neceſſary and 'commendable, that at the Repetition of 'the Creed we ſhould ſtand up, to teſtify 'the Reſolution of our Hearts, that we 'will defend the Religion which we profeſs; 'and in ſome Churches it is added, they 'did not only ſtand upright with their Bodies, but with their Swords drawn. Let 'us go to the ground of our Religion, and 'lay down a Rule on which all others may 'reſt; then when that is done, it will be 'time to take into conſideration the Breakers 'and Offenders of that Rule.'

THIS Speech being ended, the Commons after ſome Debate upon ſuch a Power of determining the Senſe of the thirty-nine Articles, were work'd up into ſuch a Ferment, that, in order to prevent the Dangers they were afraid of, by the Introduction of Popery or Arminianiſm, they entered into the following ſolemn Proteſtation or Vow:

Commons Vow.

'WE the Commons in Parliament aſ'ſembled, do Claim, Proteſt, and Avow 'for Truth, the Senſe of the Articles of 'Religion, which were eſtabliſhed by Par'liament in the 13th Year of our late Queen 'Elizabeth, which by the publick Act of 'the Church of England, and by the ge'neral and current Expoſitions of the Wri'ters of our Church, have been delivered 'unto us. And we reject the Senſe of the 'Jeſuits and Arminians, and all others, 'wherein they differ from us.'

Both Houſes petition the King for a Faſt.

THE Fears and Jealouſies about Religion were ſo much in the heads of the leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, that in order to make the People believe it was actually in very great danger, they deſired the Concurrence of the Lords, to petition the King for a Faſt, which, with ſome difficulty they obtained; and on the 30th of January an Addreſs to that purpoſe was preſented to the King by both Houſes, denoting the Jealouſies and Diſtractions at home, and the Miſeries of the Reformed Churches abroad, to be apparent Signs of God's Diſpleaſure, and praying that a Day of publick Faſting and Prayer might be appointed by his Majeſty, to ſeek the Favour of Almighty God.

CHARLES I. Aº. 1629.

THE King plainly perceived the Drift of this Petition; and though he did not think fit to reject it, yet he anſwered, That the Cuſtom of Faſting every Seſſion was but lately begun; that he granted it for this time, though he did not ſee the Neceſſity of it; that he did not intend to grant a Faſt for the future, except on extraordinary occaſions; and that as for the Reformed Churches abroad, Fighting would do them more good than Faſting.

King's Anſwer.

SOON after this, the Commons preſented a Declaration to the King, to apologize for their giving Matters of Religion preference before the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, which he had ſo often preſſed by Speeches and Meſſages. They therein deſired to be excuſed, becauſe of the extreme Dangers of Religion, and the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of ſecuring it from Popery and Arminianiſm, the Profeſſor of the one being an open Enemy, and the Maintainer of the other a ſubtle and more dangerous Underminer of the eſtabliſhed Religion; and they concluded with Thanks to the King for his Promiſes to maintain Religion, which they prefer above their Lives, and all earthly things whatever; thereby reproaching him tacitly for not performing them, and at the ſame time courting him that their future Proceedings may be the more acceptable.

Commons Apology to the King for preferring Religion to Tonnage and Poundage.

THE King anſwered this Declaration not fully and particularly, but by ſome ſhort Remarks. He told them, he thought it ſtrange that they ſhould have an ill Opinion of him with reſpect to Religion. He aſſured them, that he would never ſtop his Ears to any Complaints upon that Subject, provided that in Form and Matter the Commons did not tranſgreſs their Limits. And he concluded with theſe Words, 'I muſt ſtill be inſtant with you, 'that you proceed with Tonnage and Poun'dage with diligence, (not looking to be de'nied in ſo juſt a deſire) and you muſt not 'think it ſtrange, if I, finding you ſlack, 'give you ſuch further quickning as I ſhall 'find cauſe.'

The King's Anſwer.

THE

† Theſe Suſpicions, ſays Rapin, fell chiefly upon Laud and Neile, who being the King's Counſellors for Matters of Religion, governed almoſt all the other Biſhops.

Debates about the King's Declaration concerning Disputes about Religion.

THE 4th of February, the House continued their Debates about Matters of Religion, and particularly about the Proclamation or Declaration to prohibit Disputes upon that Article. It was alledged, that the same was a Snare to entrap the Orthodox, or as some said, to suppress the Puritans, and to give more liberty to the Arminians; and that the Persons who had advised the King to it were Laud and Mountague. They also complained of a late Pardon granted by the King, under the Great Seal, which, though intended only for Bishop Mountague, according to the Warrant for drawing it, yet the Attorney-General had put in three other Ecclesiasticks, the most suspected of any in England, viz. Dr. Cosins, Dr. Sibthorp, and Dr. Manwaring; insomuch, that Sir Robert Philips said in a Speech, If ever King of England was abused in his Mercy, it is our King. What Persons are pardoned? Even the greatest Enemies to the Church and State, that were standing under the Judgment of the Parliament, and they are pardoned between Parliaments.

Pardons of Mountague, Sibthorp, Manwaring, &c.

THEY were not only pardoned, but in contempt of the Parliament, promoted to good Bishopricks, or other good Benefices. Is it possible to justify the King's Complaisance for those who advised him to protect so openly, nay to prefer Men so odious to the Parliament, since he could not be ignorant how much he rendered himself suspected by such a Conduct? At least, it cannot be denied, that he afforded his Enemies a Handle against him. But besides that it was the Temper of the King and Court to look upon the Parliament, and especially the Commons, with extreme Contempt, the King could deny nothing to Dr. Laud, who was his Prime Counsellor in Ecclesiastical Affairs.

Mr. Rolls called out of the Parliament-House, and served with a Subpœna.

ON the 10th of February, whilst the House was in Debate touching Matters of Religion, the Warehouse of Mr. Rolls Merchant, and then a Member sitting in the House, was lock'd up by a Pursuivant, and himself called out, and served with a Subpœna *.

Debate upon it.

THIS occasioned smart Debates in the House, where some said they were made the Subject of Scorn and Contempt; others took it as a Bone thrown in to divert and interrupt them in the Prosecution of the Religious Grievances; and they desired the Messenger might be sent for and examined, by what Procurement this Subpœna was taken out.

SIR Humphry May, Chancellor of the Duchy, and one of the Privy-Council, assured the House, that it proceeded neither from the King nor Council, and therefore desired it might be searched to the bottom. The Attorney-General wrote a Letter to Mr. Rolls, that the serving a Subpœna upon him was a mistake, and pray'd that a favourable Construction might be put upon it; but it appeared upon a Report from the Committee of Tonnage and Poundage, that the Attorney, notwithstanding his Letter, did give Order for the Process against Mr. Rolls; and that in the Bill preferr'd in the Exchequer, it was expressed, that the Merchants did plot, practise, and combine against the Peace of the Kingdom.

A Committee on Tonnage and Poundage.

THE 12th of February, the House being formed into a Committee on the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, and several Merchants having petitioned that their Goods were not only seized, but Informations preferr'd against them in the Star-Chamber, they sent for the Officers of the Customs to know upon what account they had seized the Merchants Effects, and carried them to the King's Storehouse. They replied, it was for refusing to pay Tonnage and Poundage, and other Duties. But because of the Information already preferred against the Merchants in the Exchequer and Star-Chamber, the Commons resolved not to proceed with the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, till the Goods were restored to the Owners; and Mr. Noy expressed himself in these Words:

Mr. Noy's Speech.

'WE cannot safely give, unless we be 'in possession, and the Proceedings in the 'Exchequer nullified, as also the Informa-'tion in the Star-Chamber, and the An-'nexion to the Petition of Right; for it 'will not be a Gift, but a Confirmation; 'neither will I give, without the Removal 'of those Interruptions, and a Declaration 'in the Bill, that the King hath no right, 'but by our free Gift: if it will not be 'accepted, as it is fit for us to give, we 'cannot help; if it be the King's already, 'we do not give it.'

A Message to the Barons of the Exchequer, and their Answer.

UPON this the House ordered, that the Barons of the Exchequer be sent to, to make void their Injunction concerning the staying of the Merchants Goods: The Barons returned Answer, that they did not by their Injunctions determine, or any way touch upon the Right of Tonnage and Poundage; neither

* Mr. Rapin says, that the Parliament only sent for Mr. Rolls out, to order him not to touch what was lock'd up; which appears from Rushworth to be a mistake.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

neither did they by their Orders bar the Owners from ſuing for their Goods in a Courſe of Law; but whereas the Merchants endeavoured to take their Goods out of the King's Poſſeſſion by Writs of Replevin, which was no lawful Courſe in the King's Caſe, nor agreeable to his Royal Prerogative, therefore the Court of Exchequer did ſtay thoſe Suits, and fully declare, that the Owners, if they thought themſelves wrong'd, might take ſuch Remedy as the Law allows.

Not ſatisfactory.

THIS Anſwer, which was not to the purpoſe, not being ſatisfactory to the Commons, a Motion was made to conſider of their Proceedings, and whether ever a Court of Exchequer held this Courſe before, for ſtaying of Replevins; and whether this hath been done by Prerogative of the King in his Court of Exchequer.

The Report of the Committee concerning the Pardons granted to Manwaring, Mountague, Sibthorp, &c.

THE ſame day a Report was made from the Committee, to inquire into the Pardons granted ſince the laſt Seſſion to certain Perſons queſtioned in Parliament; that upon Examination of Heath, the Attorney-General, &c. they found that Dr. Sibthorp, and Mr. Coſins did ſollicite their own Pardons, and that they ſaid the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſhould get the King's Hand to them. It alſo appeared to the Committee, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter did promiſe the procuring of Mr. Mountague's Pardon; that Dr. Manwaring ſollicited his own Pardon, and that the Biſhop of Wincheſter got the King's Hand to it. Mr. Oliver Cromwell, who was one of this Committee, informed the Houſe what countenance the ſaid Biſhop gave to ſome Perſons, (whom he mentioned by Name) who preached flat Popery; and how by this Biſhop's means Dr. Manwaring, (who, by Cenſure of the laſt Parliament, was diſabled from ever holding any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity in the Church, and who confeſſed the Juſtice of that Cenſure) was now advanced to a rich Living. If theſe be the Steps to Church-Preferment, ſaid he, what may we expect?

Mr. Cromwell againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Complaint of the not licenſing Books againſt Popery and Arminianiſm.

TO confirm the Suſpicions of the Commons againſt Laud, a Petition was ſet on foot by the Artifice, or at leaſt the Countenance of this Committee, from the Printers and Bookſellers in London, complaining of the Reſtraint of Books written againſt Popery and Arminianiſm, whilſt a Licenſe was never refuſed to ſuch as were compoſed in favour of Popiſh or Arminian Doctrines. They even inſtanced in certain Books againſt Popery, which were denied to be licenſed, and in ſeveral Printers and Bookſellers who had been ſent for by Purſuivants for printing Books againſt Popery; and they affirmed this was all done by the ſole means of the Biſhop of London, or his Chaplains, to whom alone the Examination and Licenſing of Books was committed.

CHARLES I. A°. 1629.

Who were the ſole Licenſers of Books.

Mr. Selden about Printing.

Mr. Selden took notice upon this occaſion, that there was no Law to prevent the Printing of any Books in England, only a Decree in the Star-Chamber; and he moved that a Law might be made concerning Printing, otherwiſe, ſaid he, a Man might be fined, impriſoned, and his Goods may be taken from him by virtue of the ſaid Decree; which is a great Invaſion upon the Liberty of the Subject.

Another Committee about the Merchants.

THE Houſe of Commons being inform'd, that an Information was preferred in the Star-Chamber againſt Richard Chambers and others, they referred the ſame to a Committee to examine the Truth of their Proceedings, and whether they ought not to have Privilege of Parliament, in regard they had then a Petition in Parliament, to protect them againſt the ſaid Proceedings; and Sir William Aſton, Sheriff of London, being examined before the Committee concerning Matters about the Cuſtomers, and not giving that clear Anſwer which he ought, and as the Houſe conceived he might have done, was therefore committed to the Tower of London. And a Queſtion being then put in the Houſe, whether the Houſe had at any time before committed a Sheriff of London to Priſon; Mr. Selden made anſwer, That he could not call to mind a Precedent of ſending one Sheriff of London to Priſon, but he well remembered a Precedent of ſending both the Sheriffs of London to the Tower; and he inſtanced the Caſe.

Sheriff of London committed to the Tower by the Commons.

Debates about Increaſe of Popery.

February 13, the Parliament took into conſideration the great Increaſe of Popery; and it was moved to examine the releaſing of the Jeſuits that were arraigned at Newgate, whereof only one was condemned, though they were ten in number, and all of them Prieſts, who had a College about Clerkenwell. Theſe Men, ſaid ſome of the Members, could not attempt theſe Acts of Boldneſs, if they had not great Countenance.

College of Jeſuits at Clerkenwell, &c.

HEREUPON Secretary Cook declared, That a Miniſter of State having notice of theſe Prieſts, and their intended College, acquainted his Majeſty with it, who referred it to the ſpecial Care of the Lords of the Council, by whom thoſe ten Perſons were examined, ſent to Newgate, and ordered to be proſecuted by the Attorney-General. He added, that this College was firſt at Edmonton, then at Camberwell, and removed thence to Clerkenwell. Upon this it was ordered, that next day every Member of the Houſe ſhould declare what he knew of Letters, and other means uſed, for the ſtaying of Proceedings againſt Recuſants; and Meſſengers were ſent to the Attorney, to examine him touching that matter.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Examinations about their Proſecution.

Mr. Long, a Juſtice of Peace, was likewiſe ſent for and examined; who ſaid, that by Mr. Secretary Cook's Appointment he apprehended thoſe Perſons, and took their Examinations, but that he heard they were releaſed out of Newgate by order from Mr. Attorney; that Mr. Middlemore, a general Solicitor for the Papiſts, hired this Houſe, and that there are divers Books of Receipts and Diſburſements to the Value of above 300 l. a Year in the Hands of Mr. Secretary Cook, with the Names of certain Recuſants who allowed towards the Maintenance of this College.

SIR Robert Philips complained, that 500 at a time have been ſeen coming from Maſs in Somerſet Houſe; and that there are 940 Engliſh, Scots, and Iriſh in Religious Houſes in the Netherlands, maintained by the Papiſts of England.

IT was further reported from the Committee, That the Prieſt taken at Clerkenwell, and condemned, was to be reprieved by a Warrant from the King, ſignified by a Privy-Counſellor; and another Warrant was produced by the Keeper of Newgate, under the Hand of the King's Attorney-General, to releaſe the other nine Prieſts: To which Mr. Secretary Cook replied, That the King being merciful in caſe of Blood, gave direction for reprieving the condemn'd Prieſt. But the Houſe not willing to let this paſs, appointed ſome of the Members to go to the Lord Chief-Juſtice, and the other Judges that were preſent at the Trial, to know why the Papers and Evidences which Mr. Long had to produce, were not made uſe of.

Their Pardons.

THE Anſwer which Sir Robert Heath gave to the Committee, was as follows:

Attorney-General's Anſwer concerning their Proſecution.

'I did receive (ſaid the Attorney) an 'Order from the Council-Board, touching 'ſome Perſons conceived to be Prieſts, pur- 'ſuant to which I cauſed them to be ſent 'for from their ſeveral Priſons, and committed all to Newgate; and having di- 'rected Indictments to be drawn againſt 'them as Prieſts, I ſent for and took the 'Informations of Witneſſes; and by ad- 'vice of Mr. Secretary Cook, deſired Mr. 'Long, who was formerly acquainted with 'that Buſineſs, to take ſpecial Care of it 'at the Seſſions; though if I had con- 'ceived that I was directed by the Order 'to go thither myſelf, I ſhould not have 'declined the Service.

'I never heard of any Lands convey'd 'to the Uſe of thoſe Perſons, or of any 'Foundation there, and what mention was 'made of it in ſome of the Papers de- 'livered to me by Mr. Secretary, was ſo 'general, that I know not how to inquire 'of it; but according to the ſpecial Or- 'der of the Board, I took care to intitle 'the King to the Goods, purſuant to an 'Inquiſition found and returned by a Com- 'miſſion granted to Gentlemen of very good 'Quality; for which Commiſſion I have a 'Warrant to the Treaſurer's Remembran- 'cer of the Exchequer.

'I had Warrant from his Majeſty to 'bail them; but for the manner of that, I 'muſt crave leave to acquaint the King 'therewith, before I anſwer any farther.

'I underſtood that three of them were 'indicted for Treaſon; and I directed Mr. 'Long, that if the Indictments ſhould not 'be found for Treaſon, yet to tender them, 'and all the reſt, the Oath of Allegiance, 'to bring them within the King's Mercy 'upon a Premunire, if they ſhould refuſe 'the Oath; which Oath I underſtood was 'miniſter'd to them accordingly at that 'Seſſion, and that the Indictment was 'found againſt one of them only to be 'a Prieſt, and that the others were quit. 'Therefore receiving an expreſs Command 'from the King for bailing them, I did 'conceive they were bailable, which other- 'wiſe I would not have done. The Bonds 'I took and keep them myſelf; for the 'Surety, I refer myſelf to the Bond, and 'underſtand that ſome of them were 'Houſe-keepers in the Town. I gave 'Directions for Indictments to be drawn 'againſt them, but no ſpecial Directions 'whether they ſhould be drawn againſt 'Jeſuits or Prieſts, which I left to the Care 'of Mr. Long, and did not then conceive 'there was any difference in the Subſtance 'of the Indictment for Treaſon between 'Prieſts and Jeſuits.

'I

FOEDERA Tom. XIX

'I can give no ſpecial Reaſon why I 'rather bound them to appear at the Coun-'cil-Table, than at the Seſſions, but only 'this, becauſe I received my firſt Directions 'from the Council-Board.'

THE Attorney's Anſwer not being ſatiſfactory, and being again ſent to for a clearer Anſwer, he ſaid, 'As for the Warrant I 'received for the Diſcharge of the Pri-'ſoners, and the Bond I took upon their 'Deliverance, which has a Dependance 'upon that Warrant, and whereof ye re-'quire an account, I have attended his 'Majeſty, but have no leave to ſhow them; 'and the Bonds being taken but in De-'cember laſt, I conceive it proper for my 'place to keep them with me; but ſhall 'be ready to deliver them when I ſhall 'receive a Command to that purpoſe.'

Officers of the Cuſtoms again examined.

THE 19th of February, which was the Day after the Faſt, the Officers of the Cuſtoms being again ſent for to anſwer the Point of Privilege, in taking the Goods of Mr. Rolls, a Member of the Houſe, one of them ſaid, That he took his Goods by virtue of a Commiſſion under the Great Seal, and other Warrants: That he knew Mr. Rolls demanded his Privilege; but he underſtood that his Privilege extended only to his Perſon, and not to his Goods. And he further ſaid, He took thoſe Goods for Duties that were due in the time of King James; and that his Majeſty had ſent for him, and commanded him to make no other Anſwer.

ANOTHER of the Officers ſaid, that he knew Mr. Rolls to be a Parliament-Man, and that he told him, he did not find any Parliament-Man exempted in their Commiſſion. And as for the Words charged on him, that he ſhould ſay *, If all the Body of the Houſe were in him, he would not deliver the Goods; he anſwered, if he ſaid he would not, it was, becauſe he could not.

Mr. Selden in a Paſſion.

UPON this Mr. Selden ſaid, If there be any Man near the King that doth miſrepreſent our Actions, let the Curſe light on them, not on us; and believe it, 'tis high time to vindicate ourſelves in this Caſe, elſe it is in vain for us to ſit here.

The Houſe in a Committee.

THEN for the greater Freedom of Debate, the Houſe formed itſelf into a Committee, and ordered that no Member go out without leave while it ſate.

Mr. Noy.

Mr. Noy was of Opinion, That the Cuſtomers had neither Commiſſion nor Command to ſeize; and that therefore the Houſe may, without doubt, proceed ſafely to the Queſtion, that its Privilege is broke by the Cuſtomers, without relation to any Commiſſion or Command from the King: Which Motion was ſeconded by Mr. Nathaniel Rich.

CHARLES I. A°. 1629.

THE 22d of February, when the ſame Affair was upon the Carpet, ſome of the Members were for a bare Reſtitution of the Goods taken, others for impleading thoſe who took them as Delinquents. In the mean time, Mr. Secretary Cook brought this Meſſage from the King, grounded upon an Order made the Day preceding in full Council; 'That it concerns his Majeſty, 'in a high Degree of Juſtice and Honour, 'that Truth be not concealed; which is, that 'what the Cuſtomers did, was by his own 'direct Order and Command at the Coun-'cil-Board, himſelf being preſent: And 'though his Majeſty takes it well, that 'the Houſe have ſever'd his Intereſt from 'the Intereſt of the Cuſtomers, yet this 'will not clear his Majeſty's Honour, if 'the ſaid Cuſtomers ſhould ſuffer for his 'ſake.'

Meſſage from the King about the Cuſtomers.

THE King's Commiſſion to the Lord-Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer, and to the Cuſtomers of the Ports, was to this effect.

C. R.

'WHEREAS the Lords of the Council, 'taking into conſideration our Revenue, 'and finding that Tonnage and Poundage 'is a principal Revenue of our Crown, and 'has been continued for theſe many Years; 'have therefore ordered all thoſe Duties of 'Subſidy, Cuſtom and Impoſt, as they were 'in the 21ſt of King James, and as they 'ſhall be appointed by us under our Seal, 'to be levied: Know ye, that we, by the 'Advice of our Lords, declare our Will, 'that all thoſe Duties be levied and col-'lected as they were in the time of our 'Father, and in ſuch manner as we ſhall 'appoint; and if any Perſon refuſe to 'pay, then our Will is, That the Lord-'Treaſurer ſhall commit to Priſon ſuch 'ſo refuſing, till they conform themſelves. 'And we give full Power to all our 'Officers from time to time, to give 'Aſſiſtance to the Farmers of the ſame, 'as fully as when they were collected by 'Authority of Parliament.'

King's Commiſſion to the Cuſtomers, &c.

A Report being made from the grand Committee, after ſeveral hot Speeches pro and con, that they had taken into conſideration the Violation of the Liberty of the Houſe by the Cuſtomers, and had reſolved, that Mr. Rolls ought to have Privilege both of Perſon and Goods; but that the Command of the King is ſo great, that they leave it to the Houſe.

Debates.

THEY then enter'd into the conſideration of the King's laſt Meſſage; upon which, ſome took occaſion to ſay, That theſe interruptions proceeded from certain Prelates, and others, Abettors of the Popiſh Party, who fear to be diſcovered, and would provoke to a Breach. To which Sir Humphry May reply'd, We have Oil and Vinegar before us; if you go to puniſh the Cuſtomers, as Delinquents, there is Vinegar in the Wound: Think rather of ſome courſe to have reſtitution. Others ſaid, Delinquency cannot be named, but preſently a Breach muſt be intimated. When we do that which is juſt, let there be no fear nor memory of Breaches, and let us go upon the Delinquency of the Men.

Sir Humphry May.

Sir John Elliot's Speech againſt particular Perſons.

HEREUPON, Sir John Elliot made a ſtinging Speech, wherein he named Dr. Neal the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the Great Lord-Treaſurer (Weſton,) In whoſe Perſon, ſaid he, all Evil is contracted; *I find him acting and building on thoſe grounds laid by his Maſter the great Duke; and his Spirit is moving to theſe Interruptions, and they for fear break Parliaments, leſt Parliaments ſhould break them. I find him the Head of all the great Party; the * Papiſts, all Jeſuits and Prieſts, derive from him their Shelter and Protection*, &c.

His Remonſtrance.

Sir John offer'd a Remonſtrance to be delivered to the King; which the Speaker and Clerk refuſing, he read it himſelf to this effect: 'That they had conſidered on a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage; but were over-preſs'd with other 'Buſineſs, and that ſo perplex'd, as would 'require more time to diſcharge, than 'they could then ſpare. And leſt his 'Majeſty ſhould hereafter, as he had 'done heretofore, incline to evil Spirits, 'or be abuſed to believe that he might 'juſtly receive the Subſidies of Tonnage 'and Poundage; they humbly declare it 'to be againſt the fundamental Law of 'the Nation, and contrary to the King's 'late Anſwer to the Petition of Right. 'And therefore they crave, that his Majeſty would for the future, forbear ſuch 'Taxes, and not take it ill if his Subjects 'refuſe what is commanded by arbitrary 'and unwarrantable Power.'

Speaker refuſes to put the Queſtion.

Sir John Finch the Speaker was moved to put the Queſtion, Whether it ſhould be preferred to the King: but he refuſed; and ſaid, the King commanded him otherwiſe.

Mr. Selden's Speech upon it.

Then ſaid Mr. Selden, Dare not you, Mr. Speaker, put the Queſtion when we command you? If you will not put it, we muſt ſit ſtill; thus we ſhall never be able to do any thing. They that come after you may ſay, They have the King's command not to do it. We ſit here by the command of the King under the Great Seal; and you are, by his Majeſty ſitting in the Royal Chair, before both Houſes, appointed for our Speaker; and now you refuſe to perform your Office.

Two Adjournments; the one voluntary, the other commanded.

As ſuch a Declaration of ſuch a Command could not but throw the Houſe into a ſurprize and diſturbance, they adjourn'd to the 25th of February; and then by his Majeſty's Order, both Houſes were adjourned to the 2d of March.

THE Commons meeting on that Day, Mr. Strode ſaid, 'Let the Remonſtrance 'be read, that we may not be turn'd off 'like ſcatter'd Sheep, and ſent home, as 'we were laſt Seſſion, with a ſcorn put 'upon us in print.'

Speaker again refuſes to put the Queſtion.

THE Speaker being again urged to put the Queſtion, he declin'd it; and ſaid, he had a command from the King to † adjourn the Houſe till the 10th of March, and put no Queſtion.

THE Speaker was preſs'd to it again and again; but he could make no other Anſwer, than that his Majeſty had expreſſly commanded him to riſe as ſoon as he had delivered the Meſſage of Adjournment. Accordingly he roſe to leave the Chair; but Mr. Denzil Hollis and Mr. Benjamin Valentine drew him back, and held him in it by force, while the Door was ordered to be lock'd, and the Key given to Sir Miles Hobart. Sir Thomas Edmonds and other Privy-Counſellors then in the Houſe, endeavoured to free the Speaker; but Mr. Hollis cry'd, He ſhall ſit till it pleaſes us to riſe. Upon which the Speaker, with Tears in his Eyes, cry'd, I do not ſay I will not, but I dare not. He deſired, they would not command his Ruin, in regard he had been their faithful Servant; but he durſt not ſin againſt the expreſs command of his Sovereign. Mr. Selden reply'd, I ever loved

He is held in the Chair by force.

* Lord Weſton died a Papiſt, tho' as an Occaſional Conformiſt he uſed to go to Church with the other Courtiers.

† 'Tis very well obſerv'd by Mr. Coke in his Detection, that in a former Seſſion of this Parliament, Sir Edward Coke ſaid, The King makes a Prorogation, but the Houſe adjourns itſelf. That the Houſe never read a Commiſſion of Adjournment; but ſay, the Houſe adjourns itſelf; yet here the Speaker verbally ſays, I am commanded by the King to adjourn the Houſe till the 10*th of* March.

loved your Perſon, but I cannot chuſe but condemn you now, that you being a Servant of the Houſe, ſhould refuſe their Commands; which Obſtinacy will be a Precedent to Poſterity if it ſhould go unpuniſhed. He therefore wiſh'd him to proceed; which he ſtill refuſed, and burſt out again into Tears. Sir Peter Hayman, a Countryman of his, ſaid, I am ſorry you are my Kinſman, for you are the Diſgrace of your Country, and a Blot of a noble Family. Poſterity will remember you with Scorn and Diſdain. For my part, ſince you will not be perſuaded to do your Duty, I think it fit you ſhould be called to the Bar, and a new Speaker choſe.

THE Houſe perceiving Finch's inflexibility, and foreſeeing that the next Act would be a Diſſolution, and that this was the only Opportunity they ſhould have of bearing their Teſtimony againſt the Miniſtry, the following Proteſtation was drawn up by Sir John Elliot, which, at the Requeſt of Sir Peter Hayman, was read by Mr. Hollis, and approved by the Majority; tho' not without great tumult and confuſion, and ſome few blows *.

Commons final Proteſtation while the Speaker was held in his Chair.

1. Whoſoever ſhall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by favour or countenance ſeem to extend or introduce Popery or Arminianiſm, or other Opinion diſagreeing from the Truth and Orthodox Church, ſhall be reputed a capital Enemy to this Kingdom and Commonwealth †.

2. Whoſoever ſhall counſel or adviſe the taking or levying the Subſidies of Tonnage or Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or ſhall be an Actor or Inſtrument therein, ſhall be likewiſe reputed an Innovator in the Government, and a capital Enemy to the Kingdom and Commonweath.

3. If any Merchant or Perſon whatſoever ſhall voluntarily yield or pay the ſaid Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, he ſhall likewiſe be reputed a Betrayer of the Liberties of England, and an Enemy to the ſame.

To each of theſe the Houſe gave a loud Applauſe.

WHEREUPON the King ſent for the Serjeant of the Houſe of Commons (Edward Grimſton) but he was lock'd in with the Members; then he ſent Maxwell the Uſher of the Black-Rod, with a Meſſage; but he was refuſed admittance till the ſaid Votes were read; during which, the King, in great Indignation, ſays Mr. Echard, ſent for the Captain of his Guards. And then in much confuſion, the Houſe, after having ſate thus two Hours, was adjourned to the 10th of March, according as had been intimated from the King. Mean time, as his Majeſty expected no Supply of Money from this ſecond Seſſion, he was very glad of having, as he thought, a plauſible pretence to diſſolve the Parliament; and that very Day, viz. March 2. a Proclamation was drawn up, but not publiſhed till after the 10th, by which his Majeſty declared the Parliament diſſolved ‡.

Another Adjournment, and Proclamation for its Diſſolution.

THE next day, viz. March 3, ( according to Ruſhworth) Warrants were directed from the Council to Denzil Holles Eſq; Sir Miles Hobart, Sir John Elliot, Sir Henry Hammond, Sir John Corbet, Sir John Heveningham, Sir John Barrington, Sir

Members ſummon'd before the Council.

* It was ſet forth in an Information exhibited in the Star-Chamber againſt Sir John Elliot, that Mr. William Coriton ſtruck Mr. Winterton.

† Dr. Kennet obſerves, that this was ſomewhat owing to the many Innovations in the Cathedral of Durham, and to the unmerciful Proſecution of the Reverend Mr. Peter Smart, one of the Prebendaries, who preached againſt them; and afterwards proved before the Parliament, that being juſtly offended with their Innovations in the Communion-Table, Font, Candles, Pictures, Images, Copes, Singing, Veſtments, Geſtures, Prayers, Doctrines and Speeches of Dr Coſins (already mentioned) and other Alterations unlawfully uſed and practiſed in the ſaid Cathedral, he oppoſed the ſame, and in diſcharge of his Duty, did upon the 27th of July, 1628, in a Sermon preached in the Cathedral, wherein there was nothing ſcandalous nor diſagreeable to the Word of God, or the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England, reprove thoſe Innovations and Innovators, and exhorted the People to keep themſelves from the Infections of them; that during the ſaid Sermon, the ſaid Dr. Coſins demeaned himſelf turbulently; and when it was ended, he and others ſent a Warrant for Mr. Smart in the Name of an Attachment under the High-Commiſſion Seal for that Province, by two Purſuivants, to convene him before them; whereupon he appeared, and delivered up to them the imperfect Notes of his Sermon, which were ſealed up, and he ordered to attend the next day: That he was for the ſame proſecuted for ſix Months together, by the Dean and Prebendaries of Durham, where he was cenſured by two Acts of Sequeſtration, and one of Suſpenſion: that then he was unlawfully tranſmitted to London, to anſwer for the ſame Cauſe before the High-Commiſſion, and thence ſent back to the High-Commiſſion at York, where he was fined 500 l. committed to Priſon, detained under great Bonds, excommunicated, ſequeſter'd from all his Eccleſiaſtical Livings, and degraded ab omni gradu & dignitate Cleritali, becauſe he did not recant, and pay coſts; by colour of which Degradation, his Prebend and Parſonage were both taken from him, and he kept in Priſon; by which heavy and unjuſt Oppreſſions, his Life was ſeveral times endangered, and he and his Children loſt and ſpent above 14000 l. of real Eſtate, whereby they were utterly undone.

‡ Beſides the Hiſtory of this Parliament by Sir Thomas Crew, in 8*vo*, the Curious may find a true Relation of every day's Proceedings in the laſt Seſſion, in MSS. Harley 62. A 11. and another Abſtract of Proceedings in the ſame among the MSS. Collections left to Lambeth Library by Archbiſhop Tenniſon, in Folio.

A modern Hiſtorian ſays, that Biſhop Williams, who foreſaw the diſmal Effects of ſuch arbitrary Counſels and Actions, importuned the Lord Weſton to tell his Majeſty, That he ſhould be glad to ſee the Parliament meet again for all this; and that there might be a Conference between the two Houſes to debate about Differences, and that he hoped the Lords would check, if not cenſure the Commons, who were ſo very rude. The Author commends the Biſhop's Advice, but at the ſame time charges him with flattering the Court, by inſinuating, contrary to his own Judgment, that the Lords would be induced to cenſure the Commons for aſſerting their Rights.

 Mr. Whitelocke ſays, theſe Warrants were dated the 5th inſtant, and Mr. Sanderſon makes it the 18th; but Mr. Ruſhworth's Account ſeems to be the moſt certain.

Warrants and a Proclamation issued for others.

Hollis's Examination and Answer. Sanderson's History, p. 135.

Mr. Hollis, (who was Son to the Earl of Clare) being asked, Why (on the Day of Dissolution) he placed himself by the Chair above several of the Privy-Council? he said, 'That he had seated himself 'there at other times, and took it to be his 'Due there as well as any place whatsoever, '(unless at the Council Board) to sit above 'those Privy-Counsellors: That he came 'into the House with as much Zeal as any 'other to serve his Majesty; yet finding 'his Majesty offended, he humbly desir'd 'to be the Subject rather of his Mercy than 'his Power.'

THE Lord Treasurer reply'd, You mean rather of his Majesty's Mercy than his Justice.

I say (answer'd Hollis) of his Majesty's Power, my Lord.

Hobart's Excuse.

Hobart, whose Offence was locking the Parliament-Door, and putting the Key in his Pocket, was excused; because it was by command of the House. But Sir Edward Peyton says, he was remember'd for it on another occasion; for that one Richard Plumley, an ordinary Officer, pretending a Quarrel with Sir Miles, took an advantage of him, pull'd him out of his Coach, and beat him so that he died; for which Plumley was so far from being punished, that he was made Admiral of the Irish Seas, and knighted; when in strict Justice he should have been arraigned at the Bar for his Life.

Other Members Plea.

ALL the other Gentlemen were question'd for reproving the Speaker, and not permitting him to perform the King's commands; to which they pleaded Privilege of Parliament.

Elliot's Answer.

BUT Elliot, who was charged for Words he spoke in Parliament, and for producing the last Remonstrance, returned an Answer that was more peremptory; 'That what-'soever was said or done by him in that 'Place, and at that Time, was in the ca-'pacity of a publick Man, and a Member 'of the House; and that he was, and ever 'will be ready to give an account of his 'Sayings and Doings there, whensoever he 'should be called unto it by that House, 'where he conceives he is only to be 'questioned; and in the mean time, he 'being now but a private Man, would 'not trouble himself to remember what he 'said or did there as a publick Person.'

Four Members committed to the Tower.

* Hollis, Elliot, Coriton and Valentine were committed close Prisoners to the Tower, others to the Fleet and the Gate-house; and Warrants were issued for sealing up of the Studies of Hollis, Elliot, Selden, Long and Strode; and a Proclamation for apprehending the two latter. 'Tis observable, that as the Parliament was not yet actually dissolved, these Gentlemen were still Members of Parliament.

THE 10th of March, the Day whereto the Parliament was adjourned, which was just six days after the commitment of the Members, the King went to the Upper House, (the Peers being in their Robes, and a few of the Commons below the Bar, neither the Speaker, nor the House being call'd) where being seated on the Throne in his Royal Robes, and the Crown on his Head, he made his Court to the Lords in the following Speech.

My Lords,

King's Speech to the Lords at the Dissolution of the Parliament.

'I never came here on so unpleasant an 'Occasion, it being the Dissolution of a 'Parliament; therefore Men may have 'some cause to wonder why I should not 'rather chuse to do this by Commission, 'it being rather a general Maxim of Kings 'to leave harsh Commands to their Mini-'sters, themselves only executing pleasing 'things; yet considering that Justice as 'well consists in Reward and Praise of 'Virtue, as punishing of Vice, I thought it 'necessary to come here to-day, and to 'declare to you and all the World, that it 'was merely the undutiful and seditious 'Carriage in the Lower House that hath 'made the Dissolution of this Parliament; 'and you, my Lords, are so far from be-'ing any Causers of it, that I take as much 'comfort in your dutiful Demeanor, as I 'am justly distasted with their Proceedings: 'yet to avoid their mistakings, let me tell 'you, that it is so far from me to adjudge 'all the House alike guilty, that I know 'that there are many there as dutiful Sub-'jects as any in the World; it being but 'some few Vipers among them that did 'cast this Mist of Undutifulness over most 'of their Eyes: Yet, to say truth, there 'was a good number there that could not 'be infected with this Contagion; inso-'much that some did express their Duties 'in speaking, which was the general fault 'of the House the last Day.

'To conclude, as those Vipers must look 'for their Reward of Punishment, so you, 'my Lords, must justly expect from me 'that Favour and Protection that a good 'King oweth to his loving and faithful 'Nobility.

'AND now, my Lord-Keeper, do what 'I have commanded you.'

THEN the Lord-Keeper said, My Lords and Gentlemen of the House of Commons, (tho',

* There is a manifest Error here in Rapin's General History, in p. 217, of the Translation in 8*vo*, VOL. X. where just after he has given an Account that these four Gentlemen were committed close Prisoners to the Tower, it is said, that a Proclamation was issued for apprehending them; but it is probable that he meant Mr. Long and Mr. Strode.

(tho', as is already obſerved, the Commons were not called) the King's Majeſty doth diſſolve this Parliament.

THE Diſcontents of the common People upon this Diſſolution were heightned againſt the powerful Men at Court, and the King's moſt intimate Counſellors; particularly againſt Biſhop Laud and the Lord-Treaſurer Weſton, who were accuſed of putting the King upon theſe violent Proceedings. For in a few days after, two Libels were found againſt them in the Dean of Paul's Yard. That againſt the Biſhop, (and the other was as bad) was to this effect; Laud, look to thy ſelf, be aſſured thy Life is ſought; as thou art the Fountain of Wickedneſs, repent of thy monſtrous Sins before thou be taken out of the World; and aſſure thy ſelf, neither God nor the World can endure ſuch a vile Counſellor or Whiſperer to live. That the Biſhop join'd heartily in the Advice for Diſſolving the Parliament, ſeems probable from his own Obſervation in his Diary, that this Parliament ſought his Ruin, and it was no doubt his Judgment that they ſought the Ruin of the Church.

Libels caſt abroad.

THE King reſolving to proceed in the Star-Chamber againſt the impriſoned Members, all the Judges met by his Order on the 25th of April, at Serjeants-Inn, to whom he propoſed the following Opinions, leſt he ſhould be accuſed of proceeding too arbitrarily.

Queſtions propoſed by the King to the Judges, concerning the impriſoned Members.

'1. Whether the Statute of 4 H. VIII. 'concerning Richard Strode, was a parti-'cular Act of a Parliament, and extended 'only to him and to thoſe Perſons that had 'join'd with him to prefer a Bill to the 'Houſe of Commons concerning Tinners?

Anſw. Altho' the Act be private, and extendeth to them alone, yet it was no more than all other Parliament-Men by the Privilege of the Houſe ought to have, viz. Freedom of Speech concerning Matters debated in Parliament by a parliamentary Courſe.

'2. Whether if any Subject hath re-'ceived probable Information of any Trea-'ſon, or treacherous Attempt or Intention 'againſt the King or State, that Subject 'ought not to make known to the King, or 'his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, when there-'unto required, what Information he hath 'received, and the grounds thereof; to the 'end that the King being truly informed, 'may prevent the Danger? And if the ſaid 'Subject ſhall in ſuch caſe refuſe to be ex-'amined, or to anſwer the Queſtions which 'ſhall be demanded of him for farther In-'quiry and Diſcovery of the Truth, whe-'ther it be not a high Contempt in him, 'puniſhable in the Star-Chamber, as an 'Offence againſt the general Juſtice and 'Government of the Kingdom?

Anſw. 'Tis an Offence puniſhable as aforeſaid, ſo that this does not concern himſelf, but another, nor draw him to danger of Treaſon or Contempt by his Anſwer.

'3. Whether it be a good Anſwer or 'Excuſe, being thus interrogated, to ſay, 'that he was a Parliament-Man when he 'received this Information, and that he 'ſpake thereof in the Parliament-Houſe; 'and therefore the Parliament being now 'ended, he refuſed to anſwer to any 'ſuch Queſtions but in the Parliament-'Houſe?

Anſw. The Judges did not venture to decide this Queſtion publickly; but gave this private Anſwer to the Attorney-General, That this Excuſe being in nature of a Plea, and an Error in Judgment, was not puniſhable, until he were over-ruled in an orderly manner, to make another anſwer; and whether the Party were brought in Ore tenus, or by Information, he was not for this Plea to be puniſhed.

'4. Whether a Parliament Man com-'mitting an Offence againſt the King or 'Council, not in a Parliament way, might, 'after the Parliament ended, be puniſhed or 'not?

Anſw. All the Judges, unâ voce, anſwered, he might, if he be not puniſhed for it in Parliament; for the Parliament ſhall not give Privilege to any contra morem Parliamentarium, to exceed the Bounds and Limits of his Place and Duty. And all agreed, that regularly he cannot be compell'd out of Parliament to anſwer things done in Parliament in a Parliamentary Courſe; but it is otherwiſe where things are done exorbitantly: for thoſe are not the Acts of a Court.

'5. Whether if one Parliament Man 'alone ſhall reſolve, or two or three ſhall 'covertly conſpire to raiſe falſe Slanders 'and Rumours againſt the Lords of the 'Council and Judges, not with intent to 'queſtion them in a legal Courſe, or in a 'Parliamentary way, but to blaſt them, 'and to bring them to the hatred of the 'People, and the Government in Con-'tempt, be puniſhable in the Star-Cham-'ber after the Parliament is ended?

Anſw. The Judges reſolve, That the ſame was puniſhable out of Parliament, as an Offence exorbitant committed in Parliament, beyond the Office and beſides the Duty of a Parliament-Man.

'6. Whether if a Man in Parliament by 'way of digreſſion, and not upon any oc-'caſion ariſing concerning the ſame in 'Parliament, ſhall ſay, The Lords of the 'Council and the Judges * had agreed to 'trample upon the Liberty of the Subject 'and the Privileges of Parliament, he 'were puniſhable or not?'

The Judges deſired to be excuſed from making an Anſwer to this Queſtion, becauſe it concern'd themſelves in particular.

'7.

* In an Information exhibited in the King's-Bench in Trinity-Term this Year, againſt Sir John Elliot and others, he was charged with that Expreſſion in the Houſe, to raiſe Sedition between the King, the Nobles, and the Commons.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

CHARLES I. A°. 1629.

'7. Whether if a Parliament Man being called Ore tenus before the Court of Star-Chamber, and charged that he did not ſubmit himſelf to Examination for ſuch things as did concern the King and Government, and were affirmed to be done by a third Perſon, and not by himſelf; whether, if he confeſs his hand to ſuch Refuſal, and make his Excuſe, and plead, becauſe he had Privilege of Parliament, the Court will not over-rule this Plea as erroneous, and that he ought to make a further Anſwer?

Anſw. It is the juſteſt way for the King and the Party not to proceed Ore tenus, becauſe it being a Point in Law, 'tis fit to hear Counſel before it be over-ruled; and upon an Ore tenus, by the Rules of the Star-Chamber, Counſel ought not to be admitted; and that it would not be for the Honour of the King, nor the Safety of the Subject to proceed in that manner.

Rapin's Remarks on the Queſtions.

THE Artifice of theſe Queſtions will be ſeen, 1. In the King's propoſing them in a general manner, as if they had not related to any particular Perſon's Caſe. 2. In his aſcribing to one, two, or three Members of the Houſe, what was done by a great Majority. 3. In ſuppoſing Offences, Outrages, Treaſons againſt himſelf or Council, and in deciding Queſtions of Law before the Facts were ſtated.

Whitelock's.

Judge Whitelock often highly complain'd againſt this way of ſending to the Judges for their Opinions beforehand; and ſaid, That if Biſhop Laud went on in his way, he would kindle a Flame in the Nation.

UPON the ſtrength of theſe Opinions however, the King confirmed his Reſolution of bringing the impriſoned Members to Submiſſion, or Penalties for their late Behaviour in St. Stephen's Chapel: And on the 7th of May, Sir Robert Heath the Attorney-General, by ſpecial Order from the King, preferr'd an Information againſt them in the Star-Chamber, aggravating their Miſdemeanors in the late Parliament; which the Reader may find in Ruſhworth at large.

Information againſt the impriſoned Members, in the Star-Chamber.

They bring their Habeas Corpus.

IN Trinity Term, Mr. Selden, Hollis; Strode, and Valentine were brought to the King's Bench-Bar by ſeveral Habeas Corpora, and the Cauſe of their Commitment returned; one on a Warrant from the Council, another on a Warrant from the King for Sedition and Contempt; and the Argument was, whether it was a good Return.

Judges perplexed about it.

THE Judges of this Court were perplexed about the Habeas Corpus, and wrote a Letter to the King in humble but in ſtrong Terms, That by their Oaths they were to bail the Priſoners, but thought fit before they did it, or publiſh'd their Opinions therein, to inform his Majeſty thereof; and humbly to adviſe him (as had been done by his noble Progenitors in like caſe,) to ſend a Direction to his Juſtices of his Bench, to bail the Priſoners. But the Lord-Keeper (Coventry) would not own to Juſtice Whitelock, who was ſent to him from the reſt of his Brethren about this Buſineſs, that he ſhew'd the Judges Letter to the King; but diſſembled the matter, and told him, that he and his Brethren muſt attend his Majeſty at Greenwich on ſuch a day.

ACCORDINGLY the Judges of the Court aforeſaid, attended the King, who was not pleaſed with their Determination; but commanded them not to deliver any Opinion in this Caſe without conſulting the reſt of the Judges, who delay'd the Buſineſs, and would hear Arguments on the Caſe as well as the Judges of the King's Bench had done; and ſo the Buſineſs was put off to the end of the Term. The Court of King's Bench being then ready to deliver their Opinions, the Priſoners, inſtead of being brought to the Bar according to the Rule and Cuſtom of the Court, were by expreſs command removed to other Priſons; ſo that by being thus ſhifted from one Priſon to another, they could not be bailed, delivered, or remanded, but continued in Reſtraint all the long Vacation. And on the laſt day of this Term, a Letter came to the Judges from the King, that this was done, becauſe of their former inſolent Carriage at the Bar: Which Inſolence, according to a Remark of Mr. Rapin, was only their applying to the Judges for Bail, rather than to his Majeſty for Pardon.

UPON the approach of next Term, the Judges of the King's Bench being then in the Country, were ſent to by the Lord-Keeper to be at Serjeants-Inn by Michaelmas-Day. They came accordingly; and Sir Nicholas Hyde the Lord Chief-Juſtice, and Juſtice Whitelock, were ſent for next day to the King at Hampton-Court, who adviſed with them about the impriſoned Members, and was contented they ſhould be bailed, tho' ſuch was their obſtinacy, that they would not ſo much as expreſs their Sorrow, in a Petition to him, that he was offended with them. He alſo ſignified his purpoſe to wave his Proceſs in the Star-Chamber, and to proceed againſt them by common Law in the King's-Bench.

King adviſes with the Judges about them.

THE firſt Day of Michaelmas Term, Mr. Maſon moved for the Priſoners to have the Reſolution of the Court. All the Judges declared with one voice, that they were contented the Priſoners ſhould be bailed, but that they muſt find Sureties for their good Behaviour. Mr. Selden, with whom all the other Priſoners agreed in Opinion, anſwered, That their Sureties for the Bail were ready, but not for the good Behaviour; and therefore they pray'd, that their Bail might be accepted without their being urged to the other; and that for theſe Reaſons.

Motion to bail the Priſoners.

1. THAT

Mr. Selden's Arguments againſt finding Sureties.

1. THAT during the long Dependance of their Caſe in Court (they having been thirty Weeks in Priſon) it was never deſired in all the Arguments for and againſt the Priſoners, that they ſhould be bound to their good Behaviour, the ſole Point in queſtion being, whether they were bailable?

2. BECAUSE the finding of Sureties for good Behaviour is ſeldom urg'd upon Returns of Felonies or Treaſons, and it is but an Implication on the Return, that we are guilty of thoſe Matters which are objected.

3. WE demand to be bail'd in Point of Right; and if it be not a Right, we don't demand it; but the finding of Sureties for the good Behaviour, is meerly a Point of Diſcretion, and we cannot aſſent to it without great Offence to the Parliament, where theſe Matters, which are ſurmiſed by Return, were acted: And by the Statute of 4 Hen. VIII, all Puniſhments of ſuch nature are made void and of no Effect.

THE Attorney-General, a fit Inſtrument for thoſe Times (ſays Whitelock in his Memoirs) ſaid, That by Command of the King he had an Information ready in his Hand to deliver in the Court againſt them. And Chief-Juſtice Hide ſaid, If now you refuſe to find Sureties for the good Behaviour, and be for that Cauſe remanded, perhaps we ſhall not afterwards grant a Habeas Corpus for you, inaſmuch as we are made acquainted with the Cauſe of your Impriſonment.

ASHLEY, the King's Serjeant, who had married the Daughter and Heir of Mr. Holles, one of the Priſoners, offer'd to be Bail for him, but it was not accepted, becauſe the Priſoner himſelf refuſed to be bound with him: And Mr. Long, who had actually found Sureties in the Chief-Juſtice's Chamber, declared in Court, that they ſhould continue no longer, inaſmuch as they were bound in 2000 l. and that the good Behaviour was a tickliſh Point. Therefore he was committed to the Marſhal, and all the other Priſoners were remanded to the Tower, becauſe they would not find Sureties for their good Behaviour. Whitelock ſays, it was intimated to them from good Hands, that if they would petition the King, they might be diſcharg'd; but they refus'd, and were therefore detained, and that ſome of the Priſoners moving the King's-Bench for more Freedom in their Impriſonment, could not obtain it.

Information exhibited againſt them in the King's-Bench.

ACCORDING as the Attorney-General had declared but juſt before, an Information was exhibited by him in this Michaelmas-Term againſt Mr. Selden, Hollis, and Valentine, and Sir John Elliot, ſetting forth the ſame Matters in effect as were in the Information in the Star-Chamber. All the Defendants, as to their Actions in Parliament, were charg'd with a Conſpiracy to ſow Diſcord, Ill-will, Murmurs and Seditions between the King, the great Ones, and the People. They were accus'd of having done it falſo, ſeditioſe, & malitioſe, and of having forced the Speaker to keep in his Chair vi & armis. The Defendants put in a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, becauſe the Offences are ſaid to have been committed in Parliament, and ought not to be puniſh'd in this or any other Court, except the Parliament. The King's Attorney-General mov'd the Court to over-rule the Plea, though he did not demur to it, but the Court would not, and gave a Day to join in Demurrer in that Term, and the firſt Day of the next Term the Record to be read, and the Point argued within a Day after at the Bar.

Juriſdiction of that Court.

IN Hillary-Term the Information, and the Point of the Juriſdiction of the Court, came to be argued by the Council for the King and the Priſoners, and all the Judges ſeverally declared their Opinions, That in this Caſe the King's-Bench hath Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, although theſe Offences were committed in Parliament, and that the impriſon'd Members ought to anſwer. The Defendants were ruled to plead farther, but they refuſed to put in any other Plea. Whereupon Judgment was given againſt them the laſt Day of Term, upon a Nihil dicit, That they ſhould be impriſoned during the King's Pleaſure (Sir John Elliot in the Tower, and the reſt in other Priſons) and not deliver'd 'till they had made a Submiſſion, and Acknowledgment of their Offences, and given Security for their good Behaviour: And that Sir John Elliot, whom they reckon'd as the greateſt Offender, and the Ring-leader, ſhould be fined to the King 2000 l Mr. Holles 1000 Marks, and Mr. Valentine, becauſe he was of leſs Ability than the reſt, 500 l. In like manner all the reſt of the Gentlemen were proceeded againſt, and Fines impoſed upon them, which when paid, the Offenders were ſet at Liberty.

Judges Opinion.

Their Sentence on the Priſoners.

MR. Acherley, Author of the Britiſh Conſtitution, ſays, that their Impriſonment was accompanied with ſome arbitrary Severities; and that theſe Gentlemen were not only denied Pen, Ink and Paper, but their Wives were denied to viſit them in their Sickneſſes; and that Sir John Elliot, after many Years Confinement, ſunk and dy'd under the Oppreſſion. In Conſideration of his Sufferings for oppoſing the Illegality of theſe Times, the Houſe of Commons in 1640 voted 5000 l. for his Children.

Mr. Long's particular Charge in the Star-Chamber.

MR. Long's Charge being different from the other Members, we ſhall juſt take notice of it in this Place. This Gentleman, who was Walter Long, Eſq; of Wiltſhire, being made Sheriff of the County a little before the calling of the laſt Parliament, was however elected a Member for Bath, which Service he preferr'd to his Office in the County. As long as the Parliament ſat they let him alone; but after the Diſſolution, viz. in the very Term laſt mentioned, an Information was preferr'd againſt him in the Star-Chamber, for that he being High-Sheriff of Wilts, and ſworn, according to Law, to abide within his Bailiwick, did contrary to his Oath ſuffer himſelf to be choſe a Citizen of Bath to ſerve in the laſt Parliament, and did attend at Weſtminſter in Parliament without his Majeſty's Licence. And after hearing Council upon his Demurrer and Plea, the whole Court agreed in a Sentence againſt him in theſe, or the like Words: 'For which 'ſaid ſeveral great Offences, in Breach 'of his ſaid Oath, Neglect of the Truſt 'and Duty of his Office, and the great 'and high Contempt of his Majeſty, and 'to the end that by this Example the 'Sheriffs of all other Counties may be 'deterr'd from committing the like Of-'fences hereafter, and may take notice, 'that their Perſonal Reſidence and At-'tendance is required within their Bailiff-'wicks, during the Time of their Sheriff-'wick, the Court has therefore adjug'd, 'that he ſhall be committed to the Tow-'er during his Majeſty's Pleaſure, pay '2000 Marks Fine to his Majeſty's Uſe, 'and make a Submiſſion and Acknow-'ledgment of his Offence in the Court of 'Star-Chamber, and to his Majeſty, be-'fore his Enlargement.

Judgment on him.

ABOUT this time one Atkinſon being ow'd a great Sum of Money by one of the King's Servants, ſued him for his Debt, but the Earl of Montgomery, Lord-Chamberlain, ſent the Creditor to Goal for ſuing him without his Leave. Atkinſon brought his Habeas Corpus, and was diſcharg'd; but the Earl reſenting it, he again committed him the very ſame Day, in Contempt of the Court, and, ſays Whitelock, to the Admiration of all wiſe Men. Three of the Judges, viz. our Hiſtorian's Father, Jones and Croke, granted a Warrant for a new Habeas Corpus, after Hyde, the Chief-Juſtice, had refuſed it; but before the Return of it, the Earl of Montgomery, upon wiſer Thoughts, diſcharg'd Atkinſon from Priſon.

Caſe of Atkinſon.

AT the ſame time that an Information was exhibited againſt the Members in the Star-Chamber, the Attorney-General preferr'd that already mentioned, againſt Mr. Richard Chambers a Merchant, wherein he firſt ſet forth the King's gracious Government, the great Privileges of the Merchants in Trading by paying moderate Duties, and that the raiſing and publiſhing of falſe and undutiful Speeches, tending to the Diſhoncur of the King or the State, or to the Diſcouragement or Diſcontentment of the Subject, or to breed Diſcord and Variance between his Majeſty and his good People, are Offences of dangerous Conſequence, prohibited by Law, and condemn'd under ſeveral Penalties and Puniſhments; but that, nevertheleſs, the ſaid Richard Chambers on the 28th of September laſt, being, among other Merchants, called to the Council-Board at Hampton-Court, about a Complaint in reference to the Cuſtoms, did then and there, in an inſolent manner, in the Preſence or Hearing of the Lords and others of his Majeſty's Privy-Council then ſitting in Council, utter theſe undutiful, ſeditious, and falſe Words, That Merchants have more Encouragement in Turky, and are in no Part of the World ſo ſcrew'd and wrung as in England. By which Words he the ſaid Richard Chambers, as the Information ſets forth, did endeavour to alienate the good Affection of his Majeſty's Subjects from his Majeſty, and to bring a Slander upon his juſt Government: For which the King's Attorney pray'd Proceſs againſt him.

CHARLES I. Anno 1629.

Information in the Star-Chamber againſt Mr. Chambers a Merchant.

To this Mr. Chambers made Anſwer, That having a Caſe of ſilk Grogram brought from Briſtol by a Carrier to London, of the Value of 400 l. the ſame was, by ſome inferior Officers attending on the Cuſtom-Houſe, ſeiz'd without the Defendant's Conſent, notwithſtanding he offer'd Security to pay ſuch Cuſtoms as ſhould be due by Law; and that he hath been otherwiſe griev'd and damnified by the injurious Dealing of the under Officers of the Cuſtom-houſe, the Particulars of which he mentioned; and that being called before the Lords of the Council, he confeſſeth, that out of the great Senſe which he had of the Injuries done him by the ſaid inferior Officers, he did utter theſe Words, That the Merchants in England were more wrung and ſcrew'd than in Foreign Parts; which Words were only ſpoke in Preſence of the Privy-Council, and not ſpoke Abroad to ſtir up any Diſcord among the People, nor ſpoke with any diſloyal Thought, but only to introduce his juſt Complaint againſt the Wrongs and Injuries he had ſuſtain'd by the inferior Officers; and that as ſoon as he had heard a hard

His Anſwer.

Con-

Conſtruction was given of his Words, he endeavour'd, by Petition to the Lords of the Council, humbly to explain his Meaning, that he had not the leaſt evil Thought to his Majeſty's Government; yet was not permitted to be heard, but preſently ſent away Priſoner to the Marſhalſea; and when he was there a Priſoner he did again endeavour, by Petition, to give Satisfaction to the Lords of the Council; but they would not be pleaſed to accept of his faithful Explanation, which he now makes to this honourable Court upon his Oath; and doth profeſs from the bottom of his Heart, That his Speeches only aim'd at the Abuſes of the inferior Officers, who in many things dealt moſt cruelly with him and other Merchants.

Sentence paſſed on him.

NOTWITHSTANDING the Defendant had confeſſed his Words as aforeſaid, two of the Clerks of the Privy-Council were examined, who prov'd the Words as laid in the Information. And when the Cauſe came to be heard in the Star-Chamber, the Court were of Opinion that the Words ſpoken were a comparing his Majeſty's Government with that of the Turks, with an Intent to make the People believe that his Majeſty's happy Government may be term'd Turkiſh Tyranny, and therefore the Court fined the ſaid Mr. Chambers in the Sum of 2000 l. to his Majeſty's Uſe, and to ſtand committed to the Priſon of the Fleet, and to make Submiſſion for his great Offence both at the Council-Board, in the Court of Star-Chamber, and at the Royal-Exchange

His Submiſſion tender'd and refuſed.

THERE was a variety of Opinions in the Court about the Fine, and it is obſervable that the Lord-Treaſurer Weſton, Dr. Laud, Biſhop of London, and Dr. Neal, Biſhop of Wincheſter, would have had the Fine laid at 3000 l. The Court drew up a Submiſſion for him, by which he was to acknowledge his Inſolence, Contempt, Sedition, Falſhood, and Malice, and the Juſtice of his Sentence; but when it was deliver'd for his Peruſal by the Warden of the Fleet, he underwrote it thus;

> All the aboveſaid Contents and Submiſſion, I Richard Chambers do utterly abhor and deteſt, as moſt unjuſt and falſe; and never 'till Death, will acknowledge any Part thereof.

His Plea and Petition to the Barons of the Exchequer refuſed.

THE Fine was eſtreated, in Trinity Term, into the Exchequer, where he pleaded Magna Charta, and other Statutes againſt the Fine, as impoſed by the King and Council, and not by legal Judgment of his Peers, nor ſaving his Merchandize, nor for any Offence mentioned in the ſaid Statutes; and with this Plea he annexed a Petition to the Barons of the Exchequer, but they would not ſuffer his Plea to be filed. And in Michaelmas-Term following Mr. Chambers was brought by a Habeas Corpus out of the Fleet, and pray'd Deliverance, the rather for that the Statute of 3 Hen. VII, which is the Foundation of the Court of Star-Chamber, doth not authorize any Puniſhment for Words only. But all the Court informed him, that the Court of Star-Chamber was not erected by the Statute of 3 Hen. VII, but was a Court many Years before, and one of the moſt high and honourable Courts of Juſtice; and that to deliver one who was committed by the Decree of one of the Courts of Juſtice, was not the Uſage of this Court, and therefore he was remanded; and after ſix Years Impriſonment in the Fleet, for not ſubmitting to that Sentence and Fine, beſides the Detainer of his Goods, to the Value of above 7000 l. by the Officers of the Cuſtoms for the pretended Duties; after nine Months further Impriſonment in Newgate, in the Year 1637, for withſtanding Ship-Money, and after twelve Years tedious waiting for Satisfaction for his Loſſes from the long Parliament, he at laſt died in Want, in the Year 1658, being about the Age of Seventy, and having a Wife and nine Children. As for the reſt of the Priſoners above-mentioned, ſome of them died in Cuſtody, but others indeed who liv'd to 1640, had an ample Reward both of Thanks and Money.

A Summary of his Sufferings.

THE Reader no doubt is fully convinced by the foregoing Sheets, that the Murmurs and Clamours of the People againſt Loans, Tonnage and Poundage, the Encouragement of Popery, and other oppreſſive Injuries and Grievances of that Time, nor the late Aſſaſſination of the Premier Miniſter and Confident, to whom theſe were charg'd, in concert with Biſhop Laud, had made no manner of Change in the Diſpoſition of the King and his Miniſtry, with regard to his Subjects Rights and Liberties, and that a Reſolution was form'd to ſpare neither Members of Parliament, nor Lawyers, nor Merchants, that offer'd to ſtand up in Defence of the Birth-rights of Engliſhmen, and the Laws of the Land. And if ever it was neceſſary to have printed Magna Charta *, and to have ſet it up in

* THE Editors of the Fœdera having omitted this great Baſis and Bulwark of the Liberties of Engliſhmen, viz. the MAGNA CHARTA, ſign'd by King John near Stanes, it was intended to have ſupply'd that Omiſſion by printing it at the End of this Work. But it is the leſs neceſſary now, becauſe we already ſee in the Libraries in every Town-Hall in England, we may venture to ſay, that was the Time.

HAVING been thus particular to give a View of the Matters controverted between this King and his Parliament; what the Power was which his Majeſty aſpired to, and what the Rights which the Lords and Commons contended for, we will now return from the Courts of Law to the Cabinet.

THE King's Conduct as well in diſſolving the Parliament, as in what was done afterwards, had ſo embitter'd and enflam'd the Minds of the People, and ſo ſtrong were the Tendencies to Sedition, that in order to prevent worſe Complaints, his Majeſty publiſhed the following Declaration, which we inſert at length from Ruſhworth, that we may not be accuſed of having either paſs'd over in Silence, or too much abridg'd what might ſerve to juſtify the King.

The King's Declaration to all his loving Subjects, of the Cauſes which mov'd him to diſſolve the laſt Parliament.

The King's Reaſons for diſſolving the laſt Parliament.

HOWSOEVER Princes are not bound to give an Account of their Actions but to God alone, yet for the Satisfaction of the Minds and Affections of our loving Subjects, we have thought good to ſet down thus much by way of Declaration, that we may appear to the World in the Truth and Sincerity of our Actions, and not in thoſe Colours, in which we know ſome turbulent and ill-affected Spirits (to maſk and diſguiſe their wicked Intentions, dangerous to the State) would repreſent us to the publick View.

WE aſſembled our Parliament the 17th Day of March, in the third Year of our Reign, for the Safety of Religion, for ſecuring our Kingdoms and Subjects at Home, and our Friends and Allies Abroad. And therefore at the firſt ſitting down of it, we declared the miſerable afflicted Eſtate of thoſe of the Reformed Religion in Germany, France, and other Parts of Chriſtendom; the diſtreſſed Condition of our deareſt Uncle the King of Denmark, chaſed out of a great Part of his Dominions; the Strength of that Party which was then united againſt us; that (beſides the Pope, and the Houſe of Auſtria, and their ancient Confederates) the French King profeſſed the rooting out of the Proteſtant Religion; that of the Princes and States of our Party, ſome were over-run, others diverted, and ſome diſabled to give Aſſiſtance. For which, and other important Motives, we propounded a ſpeedy Supply of Treaſure, anſwerable to the Neceſſity of the Cauſe.

THESE things in the Beginning were well reſented by the Houſe of Commons, and with ſo much Alacrity and Readineſs, that they agreed to grant a liberal Aid: But before it was brought to any Perfection, they were ſo diverted by a Multitude of Queſtions rais'd amongſt them touching their Liberties and Privileges, and by other long Diſputes, that the Bill did not paſs in a long time; and by that Delay our Affairs were put into far worſe Caſes than at the firſt; our Foreign Actions then in Hand being thereby diſgraced and ruined for want of timely Help.

IN this, as we are not willing to derogate from the Merit and good Intentions of thoſe wiſe and moderate Men of that Houſe (to whoſe Forwardneſs we attribute it that it was propounded and reſolved ſo ſoon) ſo we muſt needs ſay, that the Delay of paſſing it when it was reſolved, occaſioned by cauſeleſs Jealouſies, ſtirr'd up by Men of another Temper, did much leſſen both the Reputation and Reality of that Supply. And their Spirit infuſed into many of the Commiſſioners and Aſſeſſors in the Country, hath return'd up the Subſidy in ſuch a ſcanty Proportion as is infinitely ſhort not only of our great Occaſions, but of the Precedents of former Subſidies, and of the Intentions of all well affected Men in that Houſe.

IN thoſe large Diſputes, as we permitted many of our high Prerogatives to be debated, which in the worſt times of our Predeceſſors had never been queſtioned without Puniſhments or ſharp Reproof, ſo we did endeavour to have ſhortened thoſe Debates, for winning of Time, which would have much advantaged our great Affairs both at Home and Abroad. And therefore both by Speeches and Meſſages we did often declare our gracious and clear Reſolution to maintain not only the Parliament, but all our People, in their ancient and juſt Liberties, without either Violation or Diminution; and in the End, for their full Satisfaction and Security, did, by an Anſwer fram'd in the Form by themſelves deſired, to their Parliamentary Petition, confirm their ancient and juſt Liberties and Rights, which we reſolve, with all Conſtancy and Juſtice to maintain.

Libraries of Numbers of Gentlemen a curious and exact Copy of it, on a handſome Broadſide, lately engrav'd by Mr. Pine from the Original in the Cotton-Library, with Permiſſion of the Right Honourable the Lord-Chancellor King, the (late) Lord Chief-Juſtice Raymond, the Speaker of the preſent Houſe of Commons, and other Truſtees of that Library, examined by the proper Officers who have the Care of the Records, and finely ornamented with the Arms of the twenty-five Barons who were appointed to decide any Diſpute that ſhould ariſe between the King and his Subjects.

THIS Parliament, however, beſides the ſettling our neceſſary Supplies, and their own Liberties, they waſted much Time in their Proceedings (blaſting our Government, as we are unwilling to remember) yet we ſuffered them to ſit until themſelves deſired us to appoint a Time for their Receſs, not naming either Adjournment or Prorogation.

WHEREUPON, by Advice of our Council, we reſolved to prorogue, and make a Seſſion; and to that end prefix'd a Day, by which they might (as was meet in ſo long a ſitting) finiſh ſome profitable and good Laws; and withal gave Order for a gracious Pardon to all our Subjects; which, according to the Uſe of former Parliaments, paſſed the higher Houſe, and was ſent down to the Commons. All which being graciouſly intended by us, was ill entertained by ſome diſaffected Perſons of that Houſe, who, by their Artifices, in a ſhort time raiſed ſo much Heat and Diſtemper in the Houſe, for no other viſible Cauſe, but becauſe we had declared, our Reſolution to prorogue, as our Council adviſed, and not to adjourn, as ſome of that Houſe (after our Reſolution declar'd, and not before) did manifeſt themſelves to affect, that ſeldom hath greater Paſſion been ſeen in that Houſe upon the greateſt Occaſions: And ſome Glances in the Houſe, but upon Rumours Abroad, were ſpread, That by the Anſwer to the Petition, we had given away not only our Impoſitions upon Goods exported and imported, but the Tonnage and Poundage (whereas in the Debate and Hammering of that Petition, there was no ſuch Speech or Mention in either Houſe concerning theſe Impoſitions, but concerning Taxes and other Charges within the Land; much leſs was there any Thought thereby to debar us of Tonnage and Poundage, which both before and after the Anſwer to that Petition, the Houſe of Commons in all their Speeches and Treaties did profeſs they were willing to grant.) And at the ſame time many other Miſinterpretations were raiſed of that Petition and Anſwer by Men not well diſtinguiſhing between well order'd Liberty and Licentiouſneſs; as if by our Anſwer to that Petition we had let looſe the Reins of our Government. And in this Diſtemper the Houſe of Commons laying aſide the Pardon (a thing never done in any former Parliament) and other Buſineſs fit to have been concluded in that Seſſion, ſome of them went about to frame and contrive a Remonſtrance againſt our receiving of Tonnage and Poundage; which was ſo far proceeded in the Night before the prefixed time for concluding the Seſſion, and ſo haſten'd by the Contrivers thereof, that they meant to have put it to the Vote of the Houſe the next Morning, before we ſhould prorogue that Seſſion. And therefore finding our gracious Favours in the Seſſion afforded to our People, ſo ill requited, and ſuch ſiniſter Strains made upon our Anſwer to that Petition, to the Diminution of our Profit, and (which was more) to the Danger of our Government, we reſolved to prevent the finiſhing of that Remonſtrance, and other dangerous Intentions of ſome ill-affected Perſons, by ending the Seſſion the next Morning, ſome few Hours ſooner than was expected, and by our own Mouth to declare to both Houſes the Cauſe thereof; and for hindering the ſpreading of thoſe ſiniſter Interpretations of that Petition and Anſwer, to give ſome neceſſary Directions for ſettling and quieting our Government until another Meeting; which we performed accordingly the 26th of June laſt.

His Majeſty's Reaſons for Tonnage and Poundage.

THE Seſſion thus ended, and the Parliament riſen, that intended Remonſtrance gave us Occaſion to look into the Buſineſs of Tonnage and Poundage. And therefore, tho' our Neceſſities pleaded ſtrongly for us, yet we were not apt to ſtrain that Point too far, but reſolved to guide ourſelf by the Practice of former Ages, and Examples of our moſt noble Predeceſſors; thinking thoſe Counſels beſt warranted which the Wiſdom of former Ages, concurring with the preſent Occaſions, did approve; and therefore gave Order for a diligent Search of Records; upon which it was found, That although in the Parliament holden in the firſt Year of the Reign of King Edward IV, the Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage was not granted unto that King, but was firſt granted unto him by Parliament in the third Year of his Reign, yet the ſame was accounted and anſwered to that King from the firſt Day of his Reign, all the firſt and ſecond Years of his Reign, and until it was granted by Parliament; and that in the ſucceeding Times of King Richard III, King Henry VII, King Henry VIII, King Edward VI, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, the Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage was not only enjoy'd by every of thoſe Kings and Queens, from the Death of each of them deceaſing, until it was granted by Parliament unto the Succeſſor; but in all thoſe Times (being for the moſt part peaceable, and not burthen'd with like Charges and Neceſſities as theſe modern Times) the Parliament did moſt readily and chearfully, in the beginning of every of thoſe Reigns, grant the ſame as a thing moſt neceſſary for the guarding of the Seas, the Safety and Defence of the Realm, and ſupporting of the Royal Dignity. And in the Time of our Royal Father of bleſſed

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Memory, he enjoy'd the ſame a full Year, wanting very few Days, before his Parliament began; and above a Year before the Act of Parliament for the Grant of it was paſſed. And yet when the Parliament was aſſembled, it was granted without Difficulty. And in our own Time we quietly receiv'd the ſame three Years and more, expecting with Patience, in ſeveral Parliaments, the like Grant thereof, as had been made to ſo many of our Predeceſſors; the Houſe of Commons ſtill profeſſing, that Multitudes of other Buſineſſes, and not want of Willingneſs on their part, had cauſed the ſettling thereof to be ſo long deferred. And therefore finding ſo much Reaſon and Neceſſity for the receiving of the ordinary Duties in the Cuſtom-houſe, to concur with the Practice of ſuch a Succeſſion of Kings and Queens famous for Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Government; and nothing to the contrary but that intended Remonſtrance, hatch'd out of the paſſionate Brains of a few particular Perſons; we thought it was ſo far from the Wiſdom and Duty of a Houſe of Parliament, as we could not think that any moderate and diſcreet Man (upon compoſed Thoughts, ſetting aſide Paſſion and Diſtemper) could be againſt receiving of Tonnage and Poundage; eſpecially ſince we do, and ſtill muſt purſue thoſe Ends, and undergo that Charge for which it was firſt granted to the Crown; it having been ſo long and conſtantly continued to our Predeceſſors, as that in four ſeveral Acts of Parliament for the granting thereof to King Edward VI, Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, and our bleſſed Father, it is in expreſs Terms mentioned to have been had and enjoy'd by the ſeveral Kings named in thoſe Acts, Time out of Mind, by Authority of Parliament. And therefore upon theſe Reaſons we held it agreeable to our Kingly Honour, and neceſſary for the Safety and Good of our Kingdom to continue the Receipt thereof, as ſo many of our Predeceſſors had done. Wherefore when a few Merchants (being at firſt but one or two) fomented, as it is well known by thoſe evil Spirits that would have hatch'd that undutiful Remonſtrance, began to oppoſe the Payment of our accuſtomed Duties in the Cuſtom-houſe, we gave Order to the Officers of our Cuſtoms to go on, notwithſtanding that Oppoſition, in receiving of the uſual Duties, and cauſed thoſe that refuſed to be warned, to attend at the Council-Board, that by the Wiſdom and Authority of our Council they might be reduced to Obedience and Duty; where ſome of them, without Reverence or Reſpect to the Honour and Dignity of that Preſence, behav'd themſelves with ſuch Boldneſs and Inſolency of Speech as was not to be endured by a far meaner Aſſembly, much leſs to be countenanc'd by a Houſe of Parliament againſt the Body of our Privy-Council.

CHARLES I. Anno 1629.

His Declaration about Montagu's Book.

AND as in this we did what in Reaſon and Honour was fit for the preſent, ſo our Thoughts were daily intentive upon the reaſſembling our Parliament, with full Intention on our part to take away all ill Underſtanding between Us and our People; whoſe Loves, as we deſired to continue and preſerve, ſo we uſed our beſt Endeavours to prepare and facilitate the Way to it. And to this End, having taken a ſtrict and exact Survey of our Government, both in the Church and Commonwealth, and what things were moſt fit and neceſſary to be reformed, we found in the firſt Place that much Exception had been taken at a Book entituled, Appello Cæſarem, or an Appeal to Cæſar, and publiſhed in the Year 1625 by Richard Montagu, then B. D. and now Biſhop of Chicheſter; and becauſe it did open the Way to thoſe Schiſms and Diviſions which have ſince enſued in the Church, we did, for Remedy and Redreſs thereof, and for the Satisfaction of the Conſciences of our good People, not only by our publick Proclamation call in that Book, which miniſtred Matter of Offence, but to prevent the like Danger for hereafter, reprinted the Articles of Religion eſtabliſhed in the Time of Queen Elizabeth of famous Memory; and by a Declaration before thoſe Articles, we did tie and reſtrain thoſe Opinions to the Senſe of thoſe Articles, that nothing might be left for private Fancies and Innovations. For, we call God to record, before whom we ſtand, that it is, and always hath been our Heart's Deſire, to be found worthy of that Title, which we account the moſt glorious in all our Crown, Defender of the Faith. Neither ſhall we ever give way to the authoriſing of any thing whereby any Innovation may ſteal or creep into the Church, but to preſerve that Unity of Doctrine and Diſcipline eſtabliſhed in the Time of Queen Elizabeth, whereby the Church of England hath ſtood and flouriſhed ever ſince.

Prieſts and Popiſh Recuſants.

AND as we were careful to make up all Breaches and Rents in Religion at home, ſo did we by our Proclamation and Commandment for the Execution of Laws againſt Prieſts, and Popiſh Recuſants, fortify all Ways and Approaches againſt that foreign Enemy; which if it have not ſucceeded according to our Intention, we muſt lay the Fault where it is, in the ſubordinate Officers and Miniſters in the Country, by whoſe Remiſsneſs Jeſuits and Prieſts eſcape without Apprehenſion, and Recuſants, from thoſe Convictions and Penalties nalties which the Law and our Commandment would have inflicted on them. For we do profeſs, that as it is our Duty, ſo ſhall it be our Care to command and direct well; but it is the Part of others to perform the miniſterial Office. And when we have done our Office, we ſhall account ourſelf, and all charitable Men will account us innocent, both to God and Men. And thoſe that are negligent we will eſteem as culpable both to God and Us; and therefore will expect, that hereafter they give us a better Account.

The King's Declaration as to the Liberties of the Subject.

AND as we have been careful for the ſettling of Religion, and quieting the Church, ſo were we not unmindful of the Preſervation of the juſt and ancient Liberties of our Subjects, which we ſecured to them by our gracious Anſwer to the Petition in Parliament, having not ſince that time, done any Act whereby to infringe them. But our Care is, and hereafter ſhall be, to keep them entire and inviolable, as we would do our own Right and Sovereignty, having for that Purpoſe enrolled the Petition and Anſwer in our Courts of Juſtice.

and the Supply.

NEXT to the Care of Religion, and our Subjects Rights, We did our beſt for the provident and well ordering of that Aid and that Supply which was granted us the laſt Seſſion, whereof no part hath been waſtefully ſpent, nor put to any other Uſe than thoſe for which it was deſired and granted; as upon Payment of our Fleet and Army; wherein our Care hath been ſuch as we choſe rather to diſcontent our deareſt Friends and Allies, and our neareſt Servants, than to leave our Soldiers and Mariners unſatisfied, whereby any Vexation or Diſquiet might ariſe to our People. We have alſo, with part of thoſe Monies, began our Supply, our Magazines, and Stores of Munition, and to put our Navy into a conſtant Form and Order. Our Fleet likewiſe is fitting, and almoſt in a readineſs, whereby the narrow Seas may be guarded, Commerce maintained, and our Kingdom ſecured from all foreign Attempts. Theſe Acts of ours might have made this Impreſſion in all good Minds, that we were careful to direct our Counſels, and diſpoſe our Actions, as might moſt conduce to the Maintenance of Religion, Honour of our Government, and Safety of our People. But with miſchievous Men, once ill-affected, ſeu benè ſeu malè facta premunt; and whatſoever ſeem'd once amiſs, is ever remember'd; but good Endeavours are never regarded.

Now all theſe things, that were the chief Complaints the laſt Seſſion, being by our Princely Care ſo ſeriouſly reformed, the Parliament reaſſembled the 20th of January laſt. We expected, according to the Candour and Sincerity of our own Thoughts, that Men would have framed themſelves, for the effecting a right Underſtanding between Us and our People. But ſome few malevolent Perſons, like Empericks and lewd Artiſts, did ſtrive to make a new Work, and to have ſome Diſeaſe on foot, to keep themſelves in requeſt, and to be employed and entertained in the Cure. And yet to manifeſt how much Offences have been diminiſhed, the Committees for Grievances, Committees for Courts of Juſtice, and Committees for Trade, have ſince the ſitting down of the Parliament received few Complaints, and thoſe ſuch as they themſelves have not thought to be of that Moment or Importance with which our Ears ſhould be acquainted.

His Complaint of the Conduct of the Members at the Opening of the laſt Seſſion.

No ſooner therefore was the Parliament ſet down, but theſe ill-affected Men began to ſow and diſperſe their Jealouſies, by caſting out ſome Glances and doubtful Speeches, as if the Subject had not been ſo clearly and well dealt with, touching their Liberties, and touching the Petition anſwered the laſt Parliament. This being a plauſible Theme thought on for an ill Purpoſe, eaſily took hold on the Minds of many that knew not the Practice. And thereupon, the ſecond Day of the Parliament, a Committee was appointed to ſearch, whether the Petition and our Anſwer thereunto were enrolled in the Parliament Roll, and in the Courts of Weſtminſter, and in what manner the ſame was done. And a Day alſo was then appointed, on which the Houſe being reſolved into a Committee, ſhould take into Conſideration thoſe things wherein the Liberty of the Subject had been invaded againſt the Petition of Right. This, tho' it produced no other Effect of Moment or Importance, yet was ſufficient to raiſe a Jealouſy againſt our Proceedings, in ſuch as were not well acquainted with the Sincerity and Clearneſs of them. There followed another of no leſs Skill; for although our Proceeding before the Parliament, about Matters of Religion, might have ſatisfied any moderate Men of our zealous Care thereof (as we are ſure it did the moſt) yet as bad Stomachs turn the beſt things into their own nature, for want of good Digeſtion; ſo theſe diſtempered Perſons have done the like of our good Intents, by a bad and ſiniſter Interpretation. For when they did obſerve that many honeſt and religious Men did complain of thoſe Dangers that did threaten the Houſe, they likewiſe took the ſame Word in their Mouth, and their Cry likewiſe was, Templum Domini, Templum Domini, when the true Care of the Church never came into their Hearts: And what the one did out of Zeal unto Religion, the other took up as a plauſible Theme, to deprave our Government,

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Government, as if We, our Clergy and Council, were either senseless or careless of Religion; and this wicked Practice hath been to make us seem to walk before our People as if we halted before God.

Their Imposition of Tonnage and Poundage.

HAVING by these Artifices made a jealous Impression in the Hearts of many, and a Day being appointed to treat of the Grant of Tonnage and Poundage at the Time prefixed, all express great Willingness to grant it. But a new Strain is found out, that it could not be done without great Peril to the Right of the Subject, unless we should disclaim any Right therein, but by Grant in Parliament; and should cause all those Goods to be restored, which upon Commandment from us, or our Council, were stayed by our Officers until those Duties were paid, and consequently should put ourselves out of the Possession of Tonnage and Poundage before they were granted; for else it was pretended, the Subject stood not in fit Case to grant it. A Fancy and Cavil raised of Purpose to trouble the Business, it being evident that all the Kings aforenamed did receive that Duty, and were in actual Possession of it before, and at the very Time when it was granted to them by Parliament; and although We, to remove all Difficulties did from our own Mouth, in those clear and open Terms that might have satisfied any moderate and well disposed Minds declare, that it was our Meaning, by the Gift of our People, to enjoy it; and that We did not challenge it of Right, but took it de benè esse, shewing thereby not the Right, but the Necessity by which we were to take it (wherein we descended for their Satisfaction, so far beneath ourself, as we are confident never any of our Predecessors did the like, nor was the like ever expected or required of them) yet for all this, the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage was laid aside, upon pretence they must first clear the Right of the Subject therein; under colour whereof they entertain the Complaints not only of John Rolles, a Member of their House, but also of Richard Chambers, John Fowks, and Bartholomew Gilman, against the Officers of our Customs, for detaining their Goods, upon refusal to pay the ordinary Duty, accustomed to be paid for the same. And upon these Complaints, they send for the Officers of the Customs, enforcing them to attend Day after Day, by the space of a Month together. They cause them to produce their Letters Patents under our Great Seal, and the Warrants made by our Privy-Council, for levying of those Duties. They examine the Officers upon what Questions they please, thereby to intrap 'em for doing our Service and Commandment. In these and other Proceedings, because we would not give the least shew of Interruption, we endured long with much Patience both these and sundry other strange and exorbitant Incroachments and Usurpations, such as were never before attempted in that House.

CHARLES I. Anno 16:9

His Complaint of their many Committees.

WE are not ignorant how much that House hath of late Years endeavoured to extend their Privileges, by setting up General Committees for Religion, for Courts of Justice, for Trade, and the like, a Course never heard of until late. So as where in former Times the Knights and Burgesses were wont to communicate to the House such Business as they brought from their Countries; now there are so many Chairs erected to make Inquiry upon all sorts of Men, where Complaints of all sorts are entertained, to the unsufferable Disturbance and Scandal of Justice and Government, which having been tolerated a while by our Father and ourself, hath daily grown to more and more Height; insomuch, that young Lawyers sitting there, take upon them to decry the Opinions of the Judges; and some have not doubted to maintain, that the Resolutions of that House must bind the Judges, a thing never heard of in Ages past. But in this last Assembly of Parliament they have taken on them much more than ever before.

and of their examining the Attorney-General and Judges.

THEY sent Messengers to examine our Attorney-General (who is an Officer of Trust and Services) touching the Execution of some Commandments of ours, of which, without our Leave first obtained, he was not to give account to any but ourselves. They sent a captious and directory Message to the Lord Treasurer, Chancellor, and Barons of the Exchequer, touching some judicial Proceedings of theirs in our Court of Exchequer.

THEY sent Messengers to examine, upon sundry Questions, our two Chief-Justices, and three other of our Judges, touching the judicial Proceedings at the Goal-Delivery at Newgate, of which they are not accountable to the House of Commons.

AND whereas Suits were commenc'd in our Court of Star-Chamber against Richard Chambers, John Fowks, Bartholomew Gilman, and Richard Phillips, by our Attorney-General, for great Misdemeanours, they resolved that they were to have Privilege of Parliament against us for their Persons, for no other Cause but because they had Petitions depending in that House; and (which is more strange) they resolved that a Signification should be made from that House, by a Letter to issue under the Hand of their Speaker, unto the Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, that no Attachment should be granted out against the said Chambers, Fowks, Gilman, man or Philips, during their ſaid Privilege of Parliament; whereas it is far above the Power of that Houſe to give Directions to any of our Courts at Weſtminſter to ſtop Attachments againſt any Man, tho' never ſo ſtrongly privileged, the Breach of Privilege being not in the Court that grants, but in the Party or Miniſter that puts ſuch Attachments in Execution: And therefore if any ſuch Letter had come to the Lord-Keeper, as it did not, he ſhould have highly offended us if he had obey'd it. Nay, they went ſo far as they ſpared not the Honour of our Council-Board; but examined their Proceedings in the Caſe of our Cuſtomers, interrogating what this or that Man of our Council ſaid, in Direction of them in the Buſineſs committed to their Charge. And when one of the Members of that Houſe, ſpeaking of our Counſellors, ſaid, we had wicked Counſel; and another ſaid, that the Council and Judges ſought to trample the Liberty of the Subject under Feet, and a third traduc'd our Court of Star-Chamber for the Sentence given againſt Savage, they paſs'd without Check or Cenſure by the Houſe. By which may appear, how far the Members of that Houſe have of late ſwoln beyond the Rules of Moderation, and the Modeſty of former Times; and this under pretence of Privilege and Freedom of Speech, whereby they take Liberty to declare againſt all Authority of Council and Courts at their Pleaſure.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

and of their Endeavours to ſtop Attachments againſt the Merchants.

and of their Reflections on the Privy-Council.

and of their committing the Sheriff of London to the Tower.

THEY ſent for our Sheriff of London, to examine him in a Cauſe whereof they had no Juriſdiction; their true and ancient Juriſdiction extending only to their own Members, and to the Conſervation of their Privileges, and not to Cenſure of foreign Perſons and Cauſes which have no relation to their Privileges, the ſame being but a late Innovation. And upon an enforced Strain of Contempt for not anſwering to their Satisfaction, they commit him to the Tower of London, uſing that outward Pretext for a Cauſe of committing him, the true and inward Cauſe being for that he had ſhewed himſelf dutiful to us, and our Commandments, in the Matter concerning our Cuſtoms.

IN theſe Innovations (which we will never permit again) they pretended indeed our Service; but their Drift was to break, by this Means, through all Reſpects and Ligaments of Government, and to erect an univerſal overſwaying Power to themſelves, which belongs only to us, and not to them.

and of their Proceedings againſt the Cuſtom-houſe Officers.

Laſtly, in their Proceedings againſt our Cuſtomers, they went about to cenſure them as Delinquents, and to puniſh them for ſtaying ſome Goods of ſome factious Merchants in our Store-houſe, for not paying thoſe Duties which themſelves had formerly paid, and which the Cuſtomers, without Interruption, had received of all other Merchants many Years before, and to which they were authoriſed both by our Great Seal, and by ſeveral Directions and Commandments from us and our Privy-Council.

CHARLES I. Anno 1619.

To give ſome Colour to their Proceedings herein, they went about to create a new Privilege (which we will never admit) That a Parliament-man hath Privilege of his Goods againſt the King; the Conſequence whereof would be, that he may not be conſtrain'd to pay any Duties to the King during the Time of Privilege of Parliament. It is true, they would have this Caſe to be between the Merchants and our Farmers of our Cuſtoms, and have ſevered them from our Intereſt and Commandment, thereby the rather to make them liable to the Cenſure and Puniſhment of that Houſe. But on the other ſide, we holding it both unjuſt and diſhonourable to withdraw ourſelf from our Officers, in any thing they did by our Commandment, or to diſavow any thing that we had enjoined to be done, upon Monday the 23d of February ſent a Meſſage unto them by Secretary Coke, thanking them for the Reſpect they had ſhew'd in ſevering the Intereſt of our Farmers from our own Intereſt and Commandment. Nevertheleſs, we were bound in Honour to acknowledge a Truth, that what was done by them, was done by our expreſs Commandment and Direction; and if for doing thereof our Farmers ſhould ſuffer, it would highly concern us in Honour: Which Meſſage was no ſooner delivered unto them, but in a tumultuous and diſcontented manner they call'd Adjourn, Adjourn; and thereupon, without any Cauſe given on our Part, in a very unuſual manner adjourned until the Wedneſday following.

ON which Day, by the uniform Wiſdom of our Privy-Council, we cauſed both Houſes to be adjourned until the 2d Day of March, hoping that in the mean time a better and more right Underſtanding might be begotten between us and the Members of that Houſe, whereby the Parliament might come to a happy Iſſue.

The King's Reaſons for adjourning the Houſe.

BUT underſtanding by good Advertiſement that their Diſcontent did not in that time digeſt and paſs away, we reſolved to make a ſecond Adjournment until the 10th of March, which was done as well to take Time to our ſelf to think of ſome Means to accommodate thoſe Difficulties, as to give them Time to adviſe better; and accordingly we gave Commandment for a ſecond Adjournment in both Houſes, and for Ceſſation of all Buſineſs 'till the

FOEDERA Tom. XIX

Day appointed; which was very dutifully obey'd in the higher Houſe, no Man contradicting or queſtioning it. But when the ſame Commandment was deliver'd in the Houſe of Commons by their Speaker, it was ſtreightways contradicted; and although the Speaker declared unto them, it was an abſolute Right and Power in us to adjourn, as well as to prorogue or diſſolve, and declared and read unto them diverſe Precedents of that Houſe to warrant the ſame, yet our Commandment was moſt contemptuouſly diſobey'd; and ſome riſing up to ſpeak, ſaid, They had Buſineſs to do before the Houſe ſhould be adjourn'd *.

He complains of the Commons groundleſs Fears and Jealouſies.

WHILST the Duke of Buckingham lived, he was entituled to all the Diſtempers and ill Events of former Parliaments, and therefore much Endeavour was uſed to demoliſh him, as the only Wall of Separation between us and our People: But now he is dead, no Alteration was found amongſt thoſe envenom'd Spirits, which then troubled the bleſſed Harmony between us and our Subjects, and continue ſtill to trouble it. For now, under pretence of publick Care of the Commonwealth, they ſuggeſt new cauſleſs Fears, which in their own Hearts they know to be falſe, and deviſe new Engines of Miſchief, ſo to caſt a Blindneſs upon the good Affections of our People, that they may not ſee the Truth, and Largeneſs of our Heart towards them. So that now it is manifeſt the Duke was not alone the Mark theſe Men ſhot at, but was only as a near Miniſter of ours, taken up on the Bye, and in their Paſſage to their more ſecret Deſigns; which were only to caſt our Affairs into a deſperate Condition, to abate the Powers of our Crown, and to bring our Government into Obloquy; that in the end all things may be overwhelmed with Anarchy and Confuſion.

His good Opinion of ſome of the Members.

WE do not impute theſe Diſaſters to the whole Houſe of Commons, knowing that there were amongſt them many religious, grave, and well-minded Men; but the ſincere and better Part of the Houſe was over-born by the Practices and Clamours of the other, who, careleſs of their Duties, and taking Advantage of the Times, and our Neceſſities, have enforced us to break off this Meeting; which, had it been anſwered with like Duty on their Parts, as it was invited and began with Love on ours, might have proved happy and glorious both to us and the whole Nation.

WE have thus declared the manifold Cauſes we had to diſſolve this Parliament, whereby all the World may ſee how much they have forgotten their former Engagements at the Entry into the War, themſelves being Perſwaders to it; promiſing to make us feared by our Enemies, and eſteemed by our Friends, and how they turned the Neceſſities grown by that War to enforce us to yield to Conditions incompatible with Monarchy. CHARLES I. Anno 1629.

His Declaration of his Faith,

AND now that our People may diſcern that theſe Provocations of evil Men (whoſe Puniſhments we reſerve to a due Time) have not changed our good Intentions to our Subjects, we do here profeſs to maintain the true Religion and Doctrine eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, without admitting or conniving at any Back-ſliding either to Popery or Schiſm. We do alſo declare, that we will maintain the ancient and juſt Rights and Liberties of our Subjects, with ſo much Conſtancy and Juſtice, that they ſhall have Cauſe to acknowledge, that under our Government and gracious Protection, they live in a more happy and free Eſtate than any Subjects in the Chriſtian World. Yet let no Man hereby take the Boldneſs to abuſe that Liberty, turning it to Licentiouſneſs; nor miſinterpret the Petition by perverting it to a lawleſs Liberty, wantonly or frowardly, under that or any other Colour, to reſiſt lawful and neceſſary Authority. For as we will maintain our Subjects in their juſt Liberties, ſo we do, and will expect, that they yield as much Submiſſion and Duty to our Royal Prerogatives, and as ready Obedience to our Authority and Commandments, as hath been performed to the greateſt of our Predeceſſors.

and of his Reſolution to maintain the Liberties of the Subjects, and to protect his Miniſters,

AND for our Miniſters, we will not that they be terrified by thoſe harſh Proceedings that have been ſtrained againſt ſome of them. For as we will not command any thing unjuſt or diſhonourable, but ſhall uſe our Authority and Prerogatives for the Good of our People, ſo we will expect that our Miniſters obey us, and they ſhall aſſure themſelves we will protect them.

and to encourage the dutiful Merchants.

As for our Merchants, we let them know we ſhall always endeavour to cheriſh and enlarge the Trade of ſuch as be dutiful, without burthening them beyond what is fitting: But the Duty of five in the Hundred for guarding of the Seas, and Defence of the Realm, to which we hold ourſelves ſtill oblig'd (and which Duty hath continued without Interruption,

* HERE the King inſerted a long Account of what paſs'd in the Houſe when the Speaker was kept by Force in the Chair, whilſt the Remonſtrance was drawing up. This Account is much aggravated, being taken Word for Word from the Attorney-General's Information againſt Elliot. But it contains in Subſtance no more than what hath been ſaid upon that Matter; ſo that we forbear to repeat it.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

so many Successions of Ages) we hold no good or dutiful Subject will deny it, being so necessary for the Good of the whole Kingdom. And if any factious Merchant will affront us in a thing so reasonable, and wherein we require no more, nor in no other manner, than so many of our Predecessors have done, and have been dutifully obey'd: Let them not deceive themselves, but be assured, that we shall find honourable and just Means to support our Estate, vindicate our Sovereignty, and preserve the Authority which God hath put into our Hands.

He sums up the Happiness of the Subject.

AND now having laid down the Truth and Clearness of our Proceedings, all wise and discreet Men may easily judge of those Rumours and jealous Fears, that are maliciously and wickedly bruited Abroad, and may discern, by Examination of their own Hearts, whether (in respect of the Free Passage of the Gospel, indifferent and equal Administration of Justice, Freedom from Oppression, and the great Peace and Quietness which every Man enjoyeth under his own Vine and Fig-tree) the Happiness of this Nation can be parallel'd by any of our Neighbour Countries; and if not, then to acknowledge their own Blessedness, and for the same be thankful to God, the Author of all Goodness.

Rapin's Remarks on the King's Declaration.

THIS Declaration, or rather Apology, had not the Effect the King intended. It was hardly possible for the King to make the People believe that a Dozen Members of Parliament had form'd a Project to subvert the Government, to introduce Anarchy, to usurp the Royal Authority, without its appearing that themselves or others were to reap the least Benefit from it. It would have been still more strange, that granting the King to be so just a Prince, and so tender of his People as he would have been thought, these Men should have had Credit enough to bring over the Majority of the Commons to their Sentiments. On the other hand, the King defended himself but poorly in his Declaration on some Heads, as those of Recusants, Tonnage and Poundage, and in general on the Causes of the Dissolution of the Parliament. For when he greatly aggravated the Common's Fault in not obeying the Adjournment immediately, he not only supposed his Power incontestable, though it was not so, but also said not one Word of the immediate Cause of their Non-compliance. And that was, the Speaker's refusing, by his express Command, to put the Question, which was a manifest Breach of the Freedom of Parliament. Complaints therefore and Clamours continued more than ever, notwithstanding this Apology; and it was said, that if a Parliament were not speedily call'd again all things would be unsettled, and out of order, Trading would fail, and Contests would arise about Tonnage and Poundage, &c. Whereupon his Majesty issued out a Proclamation on the 27th of March to this Effect:

Proclamation against false Rumours touching Parliaments.

'THAT notwithstanding his Majes-
'ty's late Declaration for satisfying of 'the Minds and Affections of his lo-
'ving Subjects, some ill-disposed Persons,
'do spread false and pernicious Rumours
'abroad, as if the scandalous and seditio-
'ous Proposition in the House of Com-
'mons, tumultuously taken up by some 'few, after that, by his Majesty's Royal
'Authority, he had commanded their 'Adjournment, had been the Vote of the 'whole House, whereas the contrary is the 'Truth; which Proposition was a thing
'of most wicked and dangerous Conse'quence to the good Estate of this King'dom, and it appeareth to be so, by
'those Impressions which this false Ru-
'mour hath made in Mens Minds, where-
'by, out of causeless Fears, the Trade of 'the Kingdom is disturbed, and Merchants
'discouraged to continue their wonted
'Traffick; his Majesty hath thought it
'expedient, not only to manifest the Truth
'thereof, but to make known his Royal
'Pleasure, that those who raise or nou-
'rish false Reports, shall be severely pu-
'nished; and such as go on chearfully
'with their Trades, have all good Encou-
'ragement, not purposing to overcharge
'his Subjects by any new Burdens; but
'to satisfy himself with those Duties that 'were received by the King his Father of 'ever blessed Memory, which his now Ma-
'jesty neither can, nor will dispense with-
'al. And whereas for several ill Ends
'the calling again of a Parliament is di-
'vulged, howsoever his Majesty hath 'shewed by his frequent meeting with 'his People, his Love to the use of Par-
'liaments, yet the late Abuse having
'for the present driven his Majesty
'unwillingly out of that Course, he shall 'account it Presumption for any to pre-
'scribe any Time to his Majesty for Par-
'liaments, the calling, continuing, and 'dissolving of which is always in the 'King's own Power. And his Majesty
'shall be more inclined to meet in Par'liament again, when his People shall see
'more clearly into his Intents and Actions;
'when such as have bred this Interrupti-
'on shall receive their condign Punish'ment, and those that are misled by them,
'and such ill Reports as are raised upon

'derſtanding of his Majeſty and them-
'ſelves.'

CHARLES I. Anno 1629.

THERE was a Treatiſe handed about this Year in the long Vacation, and afterwards queſtioned in the Star-Chamber, entituled A Propoſition for his Majeſty's Service, to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments. The Drift of it was, to adviſe his Majeſty to be troubled with no more Parliaments, but to aboliſh them after the Example of Lewis XI, King of France, who on pretence that the third Eſtate repreſenting the Commons, incroached too much upon the Clergy and Nobility, diſſolved that Parliament of the three Eſtates, and never had a free Election of the third Eſtate afterwards, but ordered another kind of Meeting in lieu of it, called L' Aſſembly des notables, being an Aſſembly of certain eminent Perſons of his own Nomination, who would more readily comply with his Propoſals, and not diſpute his Will and Pleaſure, as the general Aſſembly of the three Eſtates us'd to do, when the King trench'd upon the Liberty and Property of the Subject; which Alteration of Government, as is obſerved by Ruſhworth, has ever ſince expoſed the Commons of France to much Slavery and Miſery, as appears at this Day, from their Poverty, and Wooden Shoes. But, ſays Whitelock, King Charles took another Courſe to gain over the moſt eminent Men that were againſt him in Parliament. He made Sir Thomas Wentworth, and his Countryman Sir John Saville, Peers, and Privy-Counſellors, and the latter Comptroller of the Houſhold, Sir Dudley Diggs, Maſter of the Rolls, Noy, his Attorney-General, and Littleton, his Sollicitor-General. This Wentworth, afterwards Earl of Strafford, had had ſo long an intimate Friendſhip with Mr. Pym, that they had gone Hand in Hand in every thing in the Houſe of Commons, and therefore upon making his Peace with the Court, he ſent for Pym to meet him alone at Greenwich, where he began in a ſet Speech to ſound Mr. Pym, about the Dangers they were like to run, by the Courſes they ſteer'd, and the Advantages they might have, if they would liſten to ſome Offers which would probably be made them from the Court. Pym, perceiving his Driſt, ſtopped him ſhort with this Expreſſion, You need not uſe all this Art to tell me that you have a mind to leave us; but remember what I ſay, You are going to be undone; and tho' you leave us now, I will never leave you while your Head is upon your Shoulders. And he actually proved as good as his Word.

Pym's Warning to Wentworth.

MOST of the Hiſtorians who have treated of this Reign, take notice of a great Fray that happened this Year in Fleet-ſtreet, on the 10th of July, upon the Reſcue of one Captain Bellingham, (an Officer in the late Expedition to the Iſle of Rhee) The Templers, on pretence that the Serjeants took him within their Precincts, drew together in a great Body, and having made a Barricade againſt St. Dunſtan's Church, beat back the Sheriffs Officers, and releaſed their Friend; of which Sir James Campbel the Lord Mayor, being inform'd, he and the Sheriffs, with a Company of Train-Bands came to diſperſe the Templers, &c. who were now increaſed to 500, armed with Swords and Piſtols, and to recover the Priſoner. The Lord-Mayor immediately made Proclamation for them to diſperſe, on pain of being treated as Rebels; but this not prevailing, the Soldiers fired their Muskets on them, charged only with Powder, but the Gentlemen were ſo provoked, that they fired their Piſtols which were loaded with Bullets, and in a hot Skirmiſh with the Train-Bands, killed five of them on the Spot, and near a hundred were wounded on both Sides But by this time the City Soldiers were ſo reinforced, that at the laſt the Gentlemen were ſubdued, and one Vaughan, Aſhurſt, and Stamford, three Captains, together with Ward an Enſign, and ſome others, were taken and committed. The King who was much offended at an Uproar ſo near the Court, ſent for the Lord Chief-Juſtice, by whoſe Advice a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was iſſued out, and in about a Fortnight after, the Malefactors were arraign'd at Guildhall, and Aſhurſt and Stamford being found guilty of the Murder, were condemn'd and executed at Tyburn. Stamford was a Relation and Servant of the late Duke of Buckingham, and much Interceſſion was made for him, but the King would not pardon him, becauſe he had been pardoned before for the Murder of a Watchman.

Riot in Fleet-ſtreet, upon a Reſcue.

THE ſeveral Orders and Directions that were given this Year, relating to the Cuſtoms, and the Militia, were a Proof of the declining of the King's Revenues, and of his Intereſt in the Affections of the People. By his Diſſolution of the late Parliament, and his Reſolution never to call another, which, ſays Rapin, was known to every Body, the King had not only depriv'd himſelf of the extraordinary Supplies he might have expected from the Commons, but had alſo done himſelf great Prejudice with reſpect to his Treaſure. The five Subſidies granted by the Parliament did not bring in by a great deal what he expected: The People generally pleaded Poverty, Decay of Trade, or

Decay of the King's Revenues and Intereſt.

or ſome ſuch Excuſes for not paying the the Taxes, which the Commiſſioners not being well inclined to, the Court allow'd of very readily, and appeared much better diſpoſed to favour their Countrymen than the King; which occaſioned a great Diminution of the uſual Value of the Subſidy. Moreover, Tonnage and Poundage were hardly paid but by Force. There was continual Occaſion to uſe Violence to ſeize the Effects, and impriſon the Perſons of the Merchants, in order to oblige them to pay what the Houſe of Commons had declared illegal; beſides, they practiſed a thouſand Artifices to defraud the King of a Right which they thought was an unjuſt Impoſition. To remedy theſe Inconveniencies, the Council was forc'd to iſſue out very ſtrict Orders even to the impowering of the Officers of the Cuſtoms to enter into any Ship, Veſſel or Houſe, and to ſearch in any Trunk or Cheſt, and break any Bulk whatſoever in Default of the Payment of Cuſtoms, and to apprehend all Perſons that ſhould make Reſiſtance, cauſe any Diſturbance, or utter any ſcandalous Speeches againſt his Majeſty's Service. As this had never been practiſed before, another Inconvenience aroſe from it; for theſe Officers, under Colour of ſearching, us'd a great many Oppreſſions and Rogueries, which made People exclaim the more. The Goods ſeiz'd on Board the Ships were ordered to be remov'd to Storehouſes at the Cuſtom-houſe Key and the Tower, there to remain 'till the King's Duties and the Freight were ſatisfied. Sir Francis Cottington was authoriſed to call before him thoſe Merchants that had been truſted by the Collectors for Sums grown due by the Cuſtoms, and to require them to pay the ſame without Delay, and otherwiſe to enjoin them to attend the Lords of the Council. Mr. Richard Chambers, whoſe Goods were detain'd in the Commiſſioners Hands for Nonpayment of Cuſtoms, being fined 2000 l. to the King in the Court of Star-Chamber, and the Fine eſtreated in the Exchequer, and Proceſs of Extent iſſued out from thence to levy it, the Court of Exchequer made an Order afterwards that the Goods ſhould be deliver'd to Chambers on Payment of ſo much Money into the Court as the Duties demanded for the King did amount to, or levying ſo much Goods as ſhould amount to double the Value of thoſe Monies. But the Privy-Council required the Commiſſioners not to deliver the Goods 'till the Fine was firſt levied (the Order of the Exchequer no ways intending, or being intended, to prevent the ſame) and then to obſerve the Order of Court. In a Word, the King had not half the Profit from Tonnage and Poundage that he received before his falling out with the Parliament, and the People were much more diſſatisfied than ever. But to hinder their Diſcontent from breaking out into a Rebellion, the Council gave ſtrict Orders to have the Militia both Horſe and Foot compleatly arm'd, accoutred, and diſciplin'd, by which they intended to keep the Subjects in awe, whilſt on the other hand they amuſed them by iſſuing out Orders for the rigorous Execution of the Laws againſt Recuſants, which, by the way, were very much neglected, as appear'd by the continual Complaints of the People upon this Occaſion through the whole Courſe of this Reign. The King tax'd the ſubordinate Officers and Miniſters in the Country with Remiſſneſs on this Head, and made a ſtrict Order for his Meſſengers to ſeize upon all Engliſh going to Ambaſſadors Houſes to hear Maſs; and to ſhew the Clearneſs of his Intention, declar'd at the ſame time that he had already begun at his own Houſe, not permitting any to go the Queen's Chapel but her own Domeſticks.

Orders about the Cuſtoms.

And about Mr. Chambers's Fine.

And concerning the Militia.

And Popiſh Recuſants.

IN Scotland alſo the Prieſts and Jeſuits were very active in promoting their Religion; the People in many Places repairing publickly to Maſs, and being chiefly countenanc'd by the Marquiſs of Huntly, Hereditary Sheriff of the North of Scotland, the Earls of Nithſdale, Athol, Abercorn, and other Scots Noblemen of the Romiſh Religion. But this gave ſuch Diſtaſte to the Council of Scotland, that they proceeded againſt the ſaid Noblemen, who flying into England, were all put to the Horn for Non-appearance, and afterwards proclaim'd Rebels; but finding no good Reception here, they returned back, upon good Security, to abide their ſeveral Trials at Home.

Prieſts and Jeſuits in Scotland and Ireland.

AT the ſame time the Apprehenſions of Popery in Ireland were more dreadful and juſt. The Popiſh Biſhops and Prieſts held their publick Aſſemblies in all Parts of the Kingdom, and exerciſed an open Juriſdiction. Convents were profeſſedly erected, and even in Dublin the Fryars, and their Adherents, were inſolent enough to make a Riot, and to affront the Archbiſhop and Mayor. The Lords Juſtices of this Kingdom being ſworn October 26, did immediately direct that the Papiſts ſhould be proſecuted for not coming to Church, and accordingly the Statute of 2 Eliz. was given in Charge at the Aſſizes; but it appears by Cox's Hiſtory of Ireland, that the ſaid Proſecution was ſuperſeded by Direction from England.

Monopolies inſtituted to bring in Money to the King.

MEAN while, as the King wanted Money, and it was eaſy to foreſee that his ordinary Revenues would not be ſufficient to ſupply his Expence, the Miniſters, after a Conſultation in the Month of July, found no better way to encreaſe the King's Revenues than by granting Monopolies; that is, forming Companies by his Letters Patent, to whom alone he gave the Privilege of ſelling certain Goods and Wares on their paying him a certain Annuity. This Abuſe, which was directly contrary to the Rights of the People, and moſt deſtructive to Trade, went ſo far, that in a manner all ſorts of Commodities were monopoliz'd, and the Sale thereof engroſſed by ſome Company, even to old Rags. As theſe Monopolies were not all ſet on foot at one time, the Reader will find a particular Account of them when he comes to our Extract of this Tome of the Fœdera.

THE King not thinking it proper, after Rochel was taken, to continue a War with France, which could bring him no Advantage, nor ſerve him for a Pretence to ask Money of the Parliament, ſince he was determin'd not to call one; and France having nothing to demand of him but with regard to the Queen's Domeſticks, which was not a ſufficient Motive to carry on the War, a Peace was concluded between the two Crowns at Suſa in Italy, on the 24th of April, by the Mediation of the Venetian Ambaſſador, proclaim'd by both Princes on the 10th of May, and ſworn in the Month of September following by Sir Thomas Edmonds, Comptroller of the King's Houſhold, and the Marquiſs de Chateauneuf. France had ſo little at Heart what had paſs'd concerning the Queen's Domeſticks, that they were content with cauſing this Article to be inſerted in the Treaty of Peace, viz.

Peace with France.

Article relating to the Marriage-Treaty with the Queen.

The Articles and Contract of the Marriage of the Queen of Great-Britain, are to be confirm'd faithfully. And as for the ſaid Queen's Houſhold, if there be any thing to be added or diminiſhed, it ſhall be done by a mutual Conſent freely and willingly, as it may be judg'd fit and convenient for the Service of the ſaid Queen *.

Recuſants ſet at Liberty.

HIS Majeſty, however, at the Inſtance of the Queen, was graciouſly pleas'd, in regard of this Peace, that certain Prieſts and Recuſants, who then were in ſeveral Priſons, ſhould be releaſed and delivered to the French Ambaſſador, to be tranſported beyond Seas, notwithſtanding any former Orders contrary thereunto.

Remarks on the Treaty of Peace.

COKE in his Detection, ſpeaking of this Treaty, tells the Truth, though a little coarſly. The War, ſays he, was not more inconſiderately begun about two Years before than the Peace now made with it was ſecret: The firſt time it was made known was when the French King beſieged Privas †, where the Peace between Lewis XIII, and his good Brother of England, was proclaim'd. The Reformed were aſtoniſhed and confounded that the King of England, who brought them into the War, ſhould leave them out of the Peace: Hereupon Privas ſurrenders, ſo does Caſtres and Niſmes; the great ROHAN is forced to ſubmit and disband, and the Power of the Reformed was rooted out; and while the King of England was making War againſt the Members of Parliament, Richlieu march'd with an Army into Italy, and took Saluſſes and Pignerol from the Duke of Savoy; which, as is juſtly enough obſerved by a modern Author, prepared the Way for the exorbitant Power of the French King's Succeſſor Lewis XIV.

IT appears from the Duke of Roban's Memoirs, that while the French King was proſecuting the War againſt his Proteſtant Subjects, he would not leave Paris to go to the Relief of Caſal in Italy 'till he had privately got ſuch Aſſurance out of England as freed him from the Fear of any Invaſion from hence whilſt he was engag'd in that Expedition, and made him confident of a Peace with the Engliſh, excluding the Reformed Party, from whom he would not receive any Addreſſes. The Curious are referr'd to the ſaid Memoirs, where they will find the Articles of Peace between the French King and his ſaid Proteſtant Subjects, upon Condition of a general Pardon, and keeping the Edict of Nants in Force. It was concluded on the 27th of June.

Queen's Delivery of a Son.

ON the 13th of May the Queen was deliver'd of a Son before ſhe had gone her full Time, and the Romiſh Prieſts, then in the Bedchamber, would have immediately baptiz'd the Child in their Way, if the King had not ſtepp'd in, and expreſly aſſign'd that Office to his Chaplain Dr. Webb, who baptiz'd him by the Name of Charles. But he died in about an Hour after, and was interr'd at Weſtminſter by the Biſhop of London upon His Baptiſm, Death, and Interment.

* THE Reader may have Recourſe to the Treaty at length in the ſecond Volume of the General Collection of Treaties, printed for Meſſieurs Knapton, Pemberton, Clay, &c.

Aſcenſion-

Aſcenſion-Day, a little before Midnight. There was a Sheet printed laſt Year, being a Prayer for her Majeſty's ſafe Childbearing, and this Year there was another by way of Thankſgiving after it.

An Order about Goldſmiths ſhops in Cheapſide.

RUSHWORTH, who takes notice of the great Splendor and Wealth which abounded at this time in the City of London, and of the glorious Shew of Goldſmiths Shops all in one Row from the End of the Old-Change to the lower End of Cheap, in the open Place againſt Mercers-Chapel, ſays, that upon Complaint in Council on the 18th of November, that diverſe mean Traders had opened Shops in the ſaid Row among the Goldſmiths, his Majeſty, in order to remedy the Deformity or Unſeemlineſs, directed the Judges to conſider what Statutes or Laws were in force to oblige the Goldſmiths to plant themſelves for the Uſe of their Trade in Cheapſide, Lombardſtreet, and Parts adjacent, and to report the ſame to the Council.

Conſiderations concerning Church Government.

To reſtore the decay'd Diſcipline of the Church, Biſhop Laud preſented the King with a Paper of Conſiderations for the better ſettling of the Church Government. It conſiſted of eleven Articles, of which theſe are the moſt remarkable.

1. THAT a ſpecial Care be had over the Lecturers in every Dioceſe, which by reaſon of their Pay are the People's Creatures, and blow the Bellows of their Sedition.

2. THAT the Afternoon Sermons in all Pariſhes be turned into Catechiſing, by Queſtions and Anſwers, according to an Order ſet out by King James.

3. THAT Emanuel and Sidney Colleges in Cambridge, which are the Nurſeries of Puritaniſm, may from time to time be provided with grave and orthodox Men for their Governors.

4. THAT his Majeſty's High Commiſſion be countenanc'd by the Preſence of ſome of the Privy-Council, as oft at leaſt as a Matter of Moment is to be ſentenced.

King's Inſtructions to the two Archbiſhops.

BY the Zeal of Biſhop Laud thoſe Conſiderations were afterwards formed into regal Inſtructions, which were ſent on the 30th of December to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, to be by them tranſmitted to all the Biſhops. The only material Particulars in which they differed from the Conſiderations were theſe:

1. 'THAT the Biſhops take a particular Note of all that abſent themſelves 'from Divine Service, as Recuſants or 'otherwiſe.

2. 'THAT no Biſhop from the Day of 'his Nomination ſhall preſume to make 'any Leaſe for three Lives, or twenty-one Years, or concurrent Leaſe, or any 'ways to renew any Eſtate, or cut any 'Wood or Timber, but meerly to receive the Rents due, and quit the Place: 'For we think it a hateful thing that any 'Man's leaving the Biſhoprick ſhould 'almoſt undo the Succeſſor. And if any 'Man ſhall preſume to break this Order, 'we ſhall refuſe our Royal Aſſent, and 'keep him at the Place he hath ſo 'abus'd.

3. 'THAT they ſhould give the King 'an Account every Year, on the 2d of 'January, of the Performance of the ſaid 'Injunctions.

Remarks on them.

THE laſt but one of theſe Inſtructions was reckoned the more ſeaſonable and honourable, becauſe Tranſlations began to be more frequent now than in former Reigns; and ſome Biſhops upon the Proſpect of Removal had been ſordid and ſcandalous in leaving Places bare behind them, but the chief End of the Inſtructions in general was to hinder any Presbyterian Miniſter from creeping into the Church of England, and to diſcover ſuch as were careleſs Obſervers of the Rites preſcribed by the Canons. As the Presbyterians, ſays Rapin, were not ignorant that Laud was the Author of the ſaid Inſtructions, they entertained an implacable Enmity againſt him, which they made him ſenſible of afterwards when they found an Opportunity.

Diſputes betwixt the Univerſity and Town of Cambridge.

THERE was a Diſpute this Year between the Univerſity and Town of Cambridge, concerning the rating and ſettling the Price of Victualia, and particularly of Candles and other Neceſſaries, compriz'd under the Term Focalia. The Controverſy was referr'd to the King in Council; and after a long Debate by learned Counſel on both Sides, it was finally order'd by his Majeſty, with Advice of the Board, that the Mayor and Bailiff, &c. ſhould acknowledge and ſubmit themſelves to the Juriſdiction and Privileges of the Univerſity, as well for the rating and ſetting the Price of all manner of Victualia and Focalia, as for correcting and puniſhing of all Inhabitants that ſhould break and exceed the Rates and Prices ſo ſet by the Vice-Chancellor or other Officers of the Univerſity in that Behalf authoriſed: And that all the Parties fined by the Vice-Chancellor ſhall pay the Fines, and ſuch Charges of the Court as were ſet on them by the Vice-Chancellor, and make publick Confeſſion in the Vice-Chancellor's Court of their Fault in breaking the ſaid Rates and Prices ſo ſet, refuſing to pay the Fines ſo aſſeſſed upon them, and queſtioning the Privileges of the Univerſity.

Determin'd by the King and Council.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

CHARLES I. Anno 1630.

Diſaffection in the inferiour Clergy.

THERE was at this time a warm Spirit of Diſaffection to the Court in many of the inferiour Clergy. On the 28th of January Mr. Bernard, Lecturer at St. Sepulchre's in London, had this Expreſſion in his Prayer before Sermon; Lord open the Eyes of the Queen's Majeſty, that ſhe may ſee Jeſus Chriſt, whom ſhe hath pierced with her Infidelity, Superſtition and Idolatry. For which being queſtion'd in the High Commiſſion Court, the Court declared, that it was an unadviſed and ſcandalous Expreſſion, derogatory to ſome particular Perſon of moſt eminent Place, which the Court did not deſire to have repeated. But Mr. Bernard making an humble Submiſſion, the Court deſired the Biſhop of London to inform his Majeſty of it, and he was diſmiſſed.

Mr. Bernard queſtioned in the High Commiſſion for Words in his Prayer.

Mr. Chancy for Words in his Sermon,

MR. Charles Chancy, Miniſter of Ware, had likewiſe ſaid in a Sermon, That Idolatry was admitted into the Church; that the preaching of the Goſpel would be ſuppreſs'd; that there is much Atheiſm, Popery, Armenianiſm, and Hereſy crept into the Church; for which he was alſo brought into the High Commiſſion Court, who referr'd the Cauſe to the Biſhop of London, by whom he was injoin'd no other Penalty than a Latin Form of Submiſſion. And and Mr. Palmer for factious Preaching.

MR. Palmer, a Lecturer of St. Alphage in Canterbury, for having preached a factious Sermon in the Cathedral Church, and gain'd all factious Parties to be his Auditors, was only ſilenc'd by the Commiſſioners; 'till being inform'd that the Archbiſhop [Abbot] had authoriſed him to preach again, they then found a Way to drive him out of the City.

Letter from the Council in England to the Council in Ireland.

THE Lords of the Council in Ireland having ſent up an Account of the above-mentioned Diſorders committed at Dublin by the Roman Catholicks, a Letter, dated the 31*ſt* of January, was ſent to them from the Council of England, with Thanks for ſuppreſſing the ſeditious Riot, mov'd by the Friars and their Adherents at Dublin, Advice to reſtrain them by a due Execution of the Laws, and an Order ſpeedily to demoliſh the Houſe in Dublin where the Archbiſhop and Mayor received the firſt Affront, and to convert the reſt of the Houſes erected there for ſuperſtitious Societies, into Houſes of Correction and Workhouſes.

FROM this and many other Inſtances there can be no Doubt that the King was in his own Conſcience averſe to Popery, and whatever Favours were obtained for ſome of that inſolent Party, were all extorted from his Majeſty's good Nature, in compliance with an importunate Queen. When his Majeſty's own Judgment and Inclinations could exert themſelves, the King always fell upon the proper Meaſures of eſtabliſhing the Church of England, and ſupporting the Proteſtant Intereſt Abroad. To this latter Purpoſe, he granted Letters Patent under the Great-Seal at Weſtminſter, dated the 16th of March, 'for a Collection to be made 'throughout England and Wales, for the 'poor exiled Miniſters of the Palati- 'nate, and their Wives and Children, 'who were ſpoiled of all their Temporal 'Eſtates, and expoſed to inexpreſſible 'Miſery; and whoſe Caſe was the more 'to be deplored, for that this Extremity 'is fallen upon them for their Sincerity 'and Conſtancy in the true Religion, 'which we, together with them, do 'profeſs, and which we are all bound 'in Conſcience to maintain to the ut-'moſt of our Powers:

A Brief iſſued for the exiled Miniſters of the Palatinate.

IT is remarkable, that after this Patent was paſs'd, Biſhop Laud cavill'd at the laſt Expreſſion, and prevail'd with his Majeſty to have it cancell'd, and a new one drawn up with an Omiſſion of the ſaid Clauſe.

Biſhop Laud's Cavil at this Clauſe.

ON the 10th of April died a great Miniſter of State, William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Warden of the Stannaries, Governor of Portſmouth, Knight of the Garter, Lord High Steward of the King's Houſhold, and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford. He ſupp'd that Night with the Counteſs of Bedford at Biſhopſgate, and was more than ordinarily cheerful, it being his Birth-day: After Supper he went Home to Baynard's-Caſtle, and being that Day ſeventy Years of Age, he was boaſting of his Health and Strength, and ſaid, he would never truſt a Woman Propheteſs for the Lady Davis's ſake, who told him he ſhould die upon his Birth-day. He went to Bed very well, but died of an Apoplexy before Eight in the Morning. This famous Fortune-teller, who was impriſon'd for it, had propheſy'd, that he ſhould not outlive his Birth-day when fifty Years old; and according to A. Wood, the ſame was predicted by Thomas Allen of Glouceſter-Hall in Oxford. The Reader will find this Nobleman's Character, with others of his Contemporaries, in Clarendon.

Sudden Death of William Earl of Pembroke on his Birth-day.

BY his Death the Office of Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford became vacant, in which Office he was ſucceeded by Laud, Biſhop of London, in two Days after the News reach'd the Univerſity, who in a little time came up with Ceremony, and gave the Biſhop his Oath. But it appear'd afterwards from Laud's Trial, printed by Order of Parliament, that the deceaſed Earl's Brother Philip, who, becauſe he died without Iſſue, ſucceeded him in his Honour, was choſe by a a fair Majority of Voices, and that the Bishop's Creatures were guilty of foul Practices in the Scrutiny.

prince Charles born

THE 29th of May was remarkable for the Birth of the Prince (afterwards King Charles II) whom the Bishop of London was admitted to see before he was an Hour old. He was born at St. James's Palace, at Noon, when, according to Sanderson, in the Life of the Father, a bright Star appeared in the Sky, as he rode with the Nobility on Horseback to St. Paul's Church, to give God Thanks for the Queen's safe Delivery *. This Author takes notice of the Phænomenon as a Miracle wrought by God in favour of the new-born Prince, and some Interpreters of the heavenly Signs at that Time would needs have it to prognosticate that the young Prince should eclipse the Kingdoms of the East, to which Quarter of the Heavens the Star pointed; but it is very plain that the Historians who make such a Parade with the Glory of this Appearance, are puzzled how to reconcile it with the Prince's future Misfortunes and Mismanagements.

Heylin's Note upon the Reception the News met with from the Presbyterians.

Dr. Heylin, with some other Writers, no Friends to the Presbyterians or Puritans of that Time, charges them with a general Mourning and Disconsolation, when they received the Tidings of this Prince's Birth, by reason that their Souls had sighed for the Succession of the Protestant Line (which now is happily in Possession of the British Empire) even before the Birth of the two last Kings of the Stuarts Family. But it is no Wonder that the Queen of Bohemia had so endear'd her self and her Posterity to all true Protestants, when it is considered, that such was her great Zeal for the Reformed Religion, that when it was proposed to marry her Son to the Emperor's Daughter, and to breed him up for her at the Imperial Court, the pious Queen, tho' then in her lowest Estate, declared she had rather be his Executioner than suffer her Child to be bred up in Idolatry.

Their early Devotion to the Succession in the present Royal Line.

Proceedings on Sir Robert Dudley's Libel in the Star-Chamber.

ON the Birth-Day of Prince Charles, a great Cause was brought to a Hearing in the Star-Chamber, concerning a Discourse entituled, A Proposition for his Majesty's Service to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments; which being a Project to raise Money without Parliaments, had given so much Offence and Jealousie about the time of the last Dissolution, that the King ordered his Attorney-General to prefer an Information against the Earls of Bedford, Clare, and Somerset, Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Selden, Oliver St. John, Esq; and others, who for spreading the said Libel were committed to Prison.

Earl of Somerset's Defence.

Robert, Earl of Somerset, by his Council pleaded 'That the Discourse, as 'he believed, was either the same that was 'shewed him at the time of his Attend-'ance upon the late King, or had the same 'things in it: And finding no Cause of 'concealing a Proposition made in a 'former King's Time, and having no Ap-'prehension that Scandal to his Ma-'jesty, or the present Government, might 'thereby happen, he casually imparted it 'to the Earls of Bedford and Clare, 'who after perusal thereof, delivered this 'Opinion of it, That it was a fantas-'tick Project of some Brain-sick Tra-'veller, who had made Collections of 'some Princes in Italy, and other fo-'reign States, no way suitable to the 'Government of this Kingdom. That 'he neither contrived the Proposition, 'nor knew of the contriving of it, nor 'ever imagined that his Majesty would 'innovate the ancient Form of Govern-'ment, or dispose of the Estates of 'his Subjects without their Consent, or 'make or repeal Laws by Proclamation, 'without Consent of Parliament, or plant 'Garrisons in his principal Cities and 'Towns, or put any part of the said 'Discourse in Execution. That the Reason 'why he did not present this Discourse 'to his Majesty, the Lords of the Coun-'cil, or some Magistrate, was, because he 'did not conceive the same did in 'any manner concern the Time of his Ma-'jesty's Government, but was contrived 'in some former Time, as appeared mani-'festly by the Particulars therein con-'tained; and that 16 or 17 Years ago 'Sir David Fowlis shewed him the Pro-'ject, to whom he reply'd, That he was 'satisfied no Use could be made of it, 'and so he re-delivered it, and concluded 'that the divulging of it was in his O-'pinion pardoned, by the General Pardon 'granted upon his present Majesty's Coro-'nation.'

* It is said, that when the King came to St. Paul's Church, the following Verses were presented to him, upon that Occasion.

Rex ubi Paulinas accessit gratus ad aras;
Immituit medio lucida Stella Polo;
Dic divina mihi tractans ænigmata Cœli,
Hæc Oriens nobis quid sibi Stella velit,
Magnus in occiduo modo Princeps nascitur orbe,
Moxque sub Eclipsi Regna Orientis erunt.

MR. Lilly, in his Observations on the Life and Death of King Charles in 4to. says, it was not a new Star, but the Planet Venus, usually seen in the Day-time, and that there was an Eclipse on the Monday following.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Examination of Sir David Fowlis, &c.

THE reſt of their Defendants made the like Plea, averring their Deteſtation of the Project; and it appeared by the Depoſitions of Sir David Fowlis, that the Paper was written in the late Reign by Sir Robert Dudley, under the Name of the Duke of Northumberland, then at Florence, and other Witneſſes ſwore, that they bought the ſaid Diſcourſe nine Years ago in Little-Britain, among other MSS. While the Cauſe was hearing in preſence of a great many of the Nobility and Gentry, the King ſent Word to the Lord-Keeper Coventry, that in reſpect of the great Joy, upon the Birth of his Son, it was his Pleaſure that the Proceedings ſhould be ſtopped, and the Defendants diſcharged. The Keeper acquainted the Court accordingly with his Majeſty's ſpecial Command, upon which, the ſaid Writing was ordered to be burnt, as ſeditious and ſcandalous to his Majeſty and the Government, and the Proceedings were taken off of the File.

The Cauſe diſmiſſed.

Dr. Leighton's horrid Treatment, copied from a M.S. of his which he afterwards preſented to the Parliament.

ON the 4th of June, another remarkable Cauſe was heard in the Court of Star-Chamber, againſt a Scotſman, viz. Alexander Leighton, D. D. in the two Univerſities of St. Andrew's and Leyden, Father of Dr. Leighton, Biſhop of Glaſcow, and of Sir Ellis Leighton; When the High-Commiſſion and Spiritual Courts had render'd Laud and his Brethren odious to the Nation, ſeveral Gentlemen and Citizens repaired to Dr. Leighton's Houſe in Black-Friars, to deſire him to draw up Articles againſt the Oppreſſion of thoſe Prelates; which, after much Perſuaſion he did; and thoſe Articles being expatiated upon, made a Book called An Appeal to the Parliament, or Sion's Plea againſt Prelacy. His Friends deſired him to go beyond Sea and print it, but he would not do it 'till ſeveral pious, learned, and judicious Miniſters and others, ſome of them Members of Parliament, ſet their Hands to it, in Approbation of its Contents. Dr. Leighton then went abroad, and returned with an Impreſſion of it, to his very great Charge and Loſs. Two Copies of the Book were delivered to ſome Members of the Parliament, a few Days before it was diſſolved, and not long after, as he came out of Black-Friar's Church, Croſs and Tomlins, two High-Commiſſion Purſuivants, arreſted and dragg'd him with great Force and Violence to the Houſe of Laud, Biſhop of London, who returning from Clapham with Dr. Corbet in his Coach, Leighton demanded to be heard. Croſs made as if he ſhould; but inſtead of it he brought him through a ſubterraneous Paſſage to a Door not opened ſince the Bloody Reign of Queen Mary; and having provided Bolts to put on his Hands, he was carried with a huge Multitude of Bills and Staves to Newgate, where in the Entry his Wife was almoſt killed, and himſelf was caſt into a naſty Dog-hole full of Rats and Mice, no Light but from the uncovered Roof, no Fire-Place but the Ruins of an old Chimney, no Bedding, and no Meat nor Drink from Tueſday Night to Thurſday Noon. In this doleful Place and Plight they kept him with two Doors ſhut upon him for 15 Weeks, ſuffering none, not ſo much as his own Wife, to come at him in all that Time. Four Days after his Commitment, the Purſuivant of the High-Commiſſion Court, with other Ruffians belonging to that impious Court, came to the Doctor's Houſe in Black-Friars, under pretence of ſearching for Jeſuits Books, laid violent Hands upon his diſtreſſed Wife, and uſed her in ſuch a barbarous manner, as is a ſhame to expreſs. They rifled every Soul in the Houſe, and held a cock'd Piſtol to a Boy's Breaſt of five Years old, threatning to kill him if he would not tell where the Books were; at which the Child was ſo frighted that he never recovered it. They ſpoiled and carry'd away all the Doctor's Books, Houſhold-Stuff, Apparel, Arms, &c. notwithſtanding Mrs. Leighton told them there would be a Day of Reckoning for it. They alſo carried off a great number of Books belonging to the Doctor from one Mr. Archer, with whom he had left them for Security. The Keeper of Newgate deny'd him a Copy of his Commitment, and the Sheriffs of London, Arthur Abdy and Robert Campbel, refuſed to Bail him upon his Wife's Petition, according to the Statute in that behalf, one of the Sheriffs ſaying, He wiſhed the Laws of the Land, and Privileges of the Subject, had never been named in Parliament. At fifteen Weeks end, the Doctor was ſerv'd with a Subpœna, and an Information was laid againſt him by Sir Robert Heath, the Attorney-General, who came to him in Newgate, and told him, the King was informed he would not be examined. The Doctor reply'd 'I have the more Wrong, and 'the contrary will appear; I am will-'ing to be examined by the meaneſt of 'his Majeſty's Subjects coming with 'lawful Authority, tho' I refuſed to 'anſwer before the High-Commiſſioners, 'as having no lawful Authority.' He then gave his Reaſons, with which Heath ſeemed to be ſatisfy'd. Sir Hen. Martin, and Dr. Reeves, two Civilians, the former of whom was Judge of the Admiralty, together with the Clerk of the High-Commiſſion-Court, and ſeven or eight of the Commiſſioners had before been with him in Newgate, to examine him, and he refuſed it; for that they had by an unlawful Warrant, violently caſt him into a loathſome Priſon, and that by the Laws of God and Man, they were forbidden to meddle with the Body or Goods of the Subject. The two Civilians told him, they were ordered by the King to take his Examination. Dr. Leighton ſaid, It is more than I know; if you will lay aſide your Commiſſion, and examine me by the King's Command, I will anſwer. Sir Henry Martin reply'd, Not ſo. Neither, ſaid Dr. Leighton, will I be examined as you would. Which made Heath the Attorney-General accoſt him as he did. Sir Henry, and he, had much Diſcourſe about the King's Supremacy, the Hierarchy, going to Religious Aſſemblies different from Church-Worſhip, Faſting and Prayer. Reeves ſaid, I believe in my Conſcience, you have done more hurt than the Jeſuits. Sir Henry Martin, looking ſtedfaſtly on the Doctor, and ſeeing his Countenance very pale and meagre, through long Faſting, beaſtly Lodging, and other Afflictions, the Tears ruſhed into his Eyes. But Reeves was inſenſible, as was alſo the Attorney-General, who, upon aſſurance that he ſhould come to no Harm, got a Confeſſion out of him that he wrote the Book he was charged with, and at a ſecond Conference promiſed him not only Pardon, but Favour, if he would confeſs who ſet him on; which Dr. Leighton refuſing, he was immediately brought into the Star-Chamber Court, and required to put in an Anſwer to an Information, wherein he was charged, among other things, with ſetting forth theſe falſe and ſeditious Aſſertions and Poſitions following:

1. THAT we do not read of greater Perſecution, and higher Indignity, done upon God's People in any Nation profeſſing the Goſpel, than in this our Iſland, eſpecially, ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth.

2. HE terms the Prelates of this Realm Men of Blood, and Enemies to God and the State, and ſaith, That the maintaining and eſtabliſhing of Biſhops within this Realm, is a main and Maſter-Sin, eſtabliſhed by Law, and that Miniſters ſhould have no Voices in Council, Deliberative and Deciſive.

3. HE avowed the Prelacy to be Antichriſtian, and Satanical, and terms the Biſhops Ravens and Magpies that prey upon the State.

4. HE terms the Canons of our Church made Anno 1603, Nonſenſe.

5. HE diſſallowed and contemn'd the Ceremony of kneeling at the Sacrament, alledging that the Suggeſtion of falſe Fears to the King by the Prelacy, and the ſeeking of their own unlawful Standing, brought forth that received Spawn of the Beaſt.

6. HE affirmed that the Prelates did corrupt the King, foreſtalling his Judgment againſt God and Goodneſs, and calleth our Queen a Daughter of Heth.

7. HE ſeems to commend the Murder of the late Duke of Buckingham, and to encourage others to do the like.

8. HE ſcandalizes the King, State, and Kingdom, by affirming that all that paſs by us, ſpoil us, and we ſpoil all that rely upon us. And among other Particulars, inſtanceth the black pining Death of 15,000 famiſhed Rochellers, in four Months; by which Paſſages, Poſitions, and Aſſertions, he did as much as in him lay, ſcandalize the King and his Government, the Queen, the Peers, and eſpecially the Biſhops.

9. THAT in order to ſlander his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and to detract from his Royal Power in making Laws and Canons for Government Eccleſiaſtical, and in Matters concerning the Church, he ſaith, that the Church hath her Laws from the Scripture, and that no King may make Laws in the Houſe of God.

10. AND thinking to ſalve all with an Expreſſion of his ſacred Majeſty, he hath theſe Words following; What pity it is, and indelible Diſhonour it will be to you the State's Repreſentative, that ſo ingenuous and tractable a King ſhould be ſo monſtrouſly abuſed, to the undoing of himſelf and his Subjects!

THE Defendant, for whom no Council durſt plead, when he was very ill in Priſon, put in an Anſwer, That he wrote the Book with no ſuch ill Intention as is ſuggeſted in the Information; and that his End was only to remonſtrate certain Grievances in Church and State, under which the People ſuffer'd, to the end that the Parliament might take them into Conſideration, and give ſuch Redreſs as might be for the Honour of the King, the Quiet of the People, and the Peace of the Church. However ſatisfactory this Anſwer might be to all religious reaſonable Perſons, when the Court proceeded to give Sentence, they declared, that it evidently appeared upon Proof, that the Defendant had printed five or ſix hundred of the ſaid Books, and that, in their Opinions, he had committed a moſt odious and heinous Offence, deſerving the ſevereſt Puniſhment the Court could inflict, for framing and publiſhing a Book ſo full of moſt peſtilent, deviliſh, and dangerous Aſſertions, to the Scandal of the King, Queen, and Peers, eſpecially the Biſhops. The two Lord Chief-

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Chief-Juſtices being preſent, deliver'd their Opinions, That they would have proceeded againſt him for Treaſon, if the Cauſe had come before them: And other Lords affirm'd it to be his Majeſty's great Mercy and Goodneſs that he was brought to receive the Cenſure of this Court, and not arraign'd at another Bar for a Traitor. The Court therefore in the Abſence of the Defendant, whoſe Caſe (ſuppoſed to be the Effect of Poiſon) was certified by four Phyſicians and an Attorney to be deſperate, unanimouſly decreed, That he ſhould be committed to the Fleet for Life, unleſs his Majeſty pleaſes to enlarge him, that he pay a Fine of 1000 l. be degraded in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, and then Pillory'd at Weſtminſter (the Court ſitting) and there Whipp'd, and after ſome convenient Space ſet again upon the Pillory, there to have one of his Ears cut off, and his Noſe ſlit, and his Face branded with a double S S, for a Sower of Sedition; and that he ſhall then be carried to the Fleet Priſon, and after a convenient Space ſet in the Pillory at Cheapſide, upon a Market-Day, and there likewiſe Whipp'd and again ſet in the Pillory, and have his other Ear cut off, and from thence be carried back to the Fleet Priſon there to remain during his Majeſty's Pleaſure.

THIS Sentence being paſs'd toward the End of Trinity Term, and the Court not being uſed to ſit after the Term, unleſs upon emergent Occaſions, and it requiring ſome time in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, in order to the Defendant's Degradation, it was Michaelmas Term following before any Part of the Sentence could be put in Execution; but on the 4th of November he was accordingly degraded, and on the 10th, being a Star-Chamber Day, he was to have undergone the Execution of this horrid Sentence; but he eſcap'd out of the Fleet the Night before. Upon which the Lords of the Council next Day order'd a Hue and Cry to be printed for retaking him, whereby he was apprehended in Bedfordſhire, and brought back to the Fleet, and on the 16th of November he was carried to the new Palace at Weſtminſter, in Term-Time, where he was ſeverely Whipp'd, put in the Pillory, and had one of his Ears cut off, one Side of his Noſe ſlit, and one Cheek branded with a red hot Iron with the Letters S S. And upon that Day Se'nnight, his Sores on his Back, Ear, Noſe and Face being far from being cured, he was again Whipp'd at the Pillory in Cheapſide, and there had the Remainder of his Sentence executed upon him, by the cutting off of the other Ear, ſlitting the other Side of the Noſe, and branding the other Cheek. It appears from the Petition which the Doctor preſented to the Parliament in 1640, that the Hangman was arm'd with ſtrong Drink the Night before in Priſon, and threatning Words to do it cruelly; that he receiv'd thirty-ſix Stripes at the Stake with a terrible Cord; that he ſtood almoſt two Hours in the Pillory in the cold Froſt and Snow; that what with the cutting off of his Ear, firing his Face, and ſlitting of his Noſe (the mention of which ſo moved the Compaſſion of the Houſe, that the Clerk, who read his Petition, was bid to ſtop 'till they had recover'd themſelves) he was made a Theatre of Miſery to Men and Angels; and being ſo broken with his Sufferings, that he was not able to go, the Warden of the Fleet would not ſuffer him to be carried in a Coach, but hurried him away by Water from Palace-Yard, to the hazard of his Life, &c. *

THIS unfortunate Gentleman, ſays Ruſhworth, was ſo well known for his Learning and other Abilities, that he was pitied by a world of People, who had therefore the harder Thoughts of the Government; only his untemper'd Zeal (as his Countrymen then gave out) prompted him to that Miſtake, for which the Neceſſity of Affairs at that time required this Severity from the Hand of the Magiſtrate, more than perhaps the Crime would do in a following Juncture.

THE Doctor's Countrymen, viz. Levingſton and Anderſon, who had aſſiſted him in his Eſcape, by changing Cloaths with him, were afterwards taken and brought into the Star-Chamber, where they were fin'd 500 l. a-piece, and committed to the Fleet during the King's Pleaſure.

ON the 27th of June, Laud, Biſhop of London, had the Honour, as Dean of the Chapel (his Grace of Canterbury being infirm) to Chriſten Prince Charles at St. James's. His Godfathers were the King of France and the Prince Elector, repreſented by the Duke of Lenox and the Marquis of Hamilton, and the Godmother was the Queen-Mother of France, who was repreſented by the Dutcheſs of Richmond. In MSS Harley, 61. B. 70, there is a particular Account of the Rites and Ceremonies.

But in Michaelmas Term the Judges calling on the Marſhal for his Priſoner Selden, and he producing the Treaſurer's Warrant, by the King's Direction, for his Removal to the Gatehouſe, they declar'd the Warrant to be illegal, and ſent their Writs to remand the four Priſoners back again to the Marſhalſea.

Peace with Spain.

ON the 5th of November, O. S. a Peace was concluded with Spain at Madrid, which was proclaimed at London on the 27th, and in a few Days after ſworn to in the Chapel at Whitehall, when King Charles, and the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, Don Carlo Colonna, went into their ſeveral Retirements whilſt an Anthem was ſung, and whilſt the Dean of the Chapel, Dr. Laud, with three other Biſhops, went up to the Altar with a Latin Bible, upon which the King laid his Hand while Secretary Cook read the Oath, and then he kiſſed the Book, ſign'd the Articles, deliver'd them up to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, and then went to the Banquetting-Houſe to a Princely Entertainment*.

WHEN this War was firſt begun in Spain there was great Hopes to have oblig'd that King by Force to procure the Reſtitution of the Palatinate, but all that could be obtained, after long Expence in War, was only that he would uſe his utmoſt Intereſt for that Purpoſe with the Emperor.

Conſecration of Catherine Creed Church by Bp. Laud.

ONE of the moſt remarkable things that uſher'd in this Year, was the Conſecration of St. Catherine Creed Church in Leadenhall-ſtreet, by Laud, Biſhop of London, which was perform'd with ſo much Ceremony, reſembling the Practice of the Church of Rome upon the like Occaſion, as gave a very great Handle to the Biſhop's Enemies to charge him with a Deſign of introducing Popery. As great Exceptions were taken at the Formalities, it may be proper to relate the manner of it, and what the Biſhop ſaid in his Juſtification afterwards, when he was queſtioned for it in Parliament.

THIS Church being newly rebuilt, on the 16th of January, being the Lord's Day, the Biſhop came in the Morning to conſecrate it. At his Approach to the Weſt Door, ſome that were prepar'd for it, cry'd with a loud Voice, Open, open ye everlaſting Doors, that the King of Glory may enter in; and preſently the Doors were opened, and the Biſhop, with ſome Doctors, and many other principal Men, went in, and immediately falling upon his Knees, with his Eyes lifted up, and his Arms ſpread Abroad, utter'd theſe Words; This Place is holy, the Ground is holy: In the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, I pronounce it holy.

THEN he took up ſome of the Duſt and threw it up into the Air ſeveral times, as he advanc'd towards the Chancel. When they approached near to the Rail and Communion-Table, the Biſhop bowed towards it ſeveral times, and returning, they went round the Church in Proceſſion, repeating the hundredth Pſalm, and the nineteenth Pſalm, and then ſaid a Form of Prayer, beginning, Lord Jeſus, &c. and concluding, We conſecrate this Church, and ſeparate it unto thee as holy Ground, not to be prophaned any more to common Uſe.

AFTER this the Biſhop being near the Communion-Table, and taking a written Book in his Hand pronounced Curſes upon thoſe who ſhould afterwards prophane that holy Place, by Muſters of Soldiers, or keeping prophane Law Courts, or carrying Burdens through it; and at the

* THIS Peace was ſaid to be firſt negotiated by Peter Reuben, the famous rich Painter of Antwerp (and Secretary and Gentleman of the Chamber to the Arch-dutcheſs Eugenia) who was ſent over to paint the Banquetting-Houſe, and was well rewarded for it, beſides the Honour of Knighthood. The Reader will find both the Treaty and the Oath entire, in the 2d Vol. of the General Collection of Treaties, printed for our Bookſellers.

End of every Curſe he bowed towards the Eaſt, and ſaid, Let all the People ſay Amen.

When the Curſes were ended, he pronounced a Number of Bleſſings upon all thoſe that had any Hand in framing and building of that ſacred and beautiful Church, and thoſe that had given, and ſhould hereafter give any Chalices, Plate, Ornaments or Utenſils; and at the End of every Bleſſing he bowed towards the Eaſt, ſaying, Let all the People ſay Amen.

After this followed the Sermon, at the End of which the Biſhop conſecrated and adminiſtred the Sacrament in manner following.

As he approached the Communion-Table he made many low Bows, and coming up to the Side of the Table, where the Bread and Wine were covered, he bowed ſeven times, and then after the reading of many Prayers, he came near the Bread and gently lifted up the Corner of the Napkin wherein the Bread was laid, which as ſoon as he beheld, he laid it down again, ſtarted back a Step or two, bowed three ſeveral times towards it, and then he drew near again, opened the Napkin, and bowed as before.

Then he laid his Hand on the Cup, which was full of Wine with a Cover upon it, which he let go again, went back, and bowed thrice towards it; then he came near again, and lifting up the Cover of the Cup, looked into it, and ſeeing the Wine, he let fall the Cover again, retired back and bowed as before; then he received the Sacrament, and gave it to ſome principal Men; after which, many Prayers being ſaid, the Solemnity of Conſecration ended.

The Biſhop's Charge and Defence.

If Laud had taken all theſe Ceremonies from a Ritual of the Church of England made ſince the Reformation, there would have been nothing to object. But ſome Years after, the Houſe of Commons accuſed him in Form, of having exactly copied the Roman Pontifical, which was found in his Study. The Biſhop made a learned Defence, by endeavouring to juſtify the Conſecration of Churches from the Practice of Moſes, Solomon, Hezekiah, and other Princes of the Jews in the Time of the Ceremonial Law; and from the Expreſſion in the Old Teſtament, that the Tabernacle, with all the Veſſels and Ornaments thereunto belonging, were all ſolemnly conſecrated by Moſes; and afterwards when the Temple was built, it was ſolemnly dedicated and conſecrated to God by King Solomon, and all his Princes and People. He alſo argued out of Euſebius in the Time of Conſtantine, and other Chriſtian Princes, of the Antiquity of conſecrating Churches, and then he deſcended more particularly to anſwer the Charge as to the Conſecration of Creed Church. It was teſtified, ſaith he, that I came thither in a pompous manner. I deny it, it was only in a grave and ſeemly manner. It is objected, that as ſoon as I came within the Church Door, I fell down upon my Knees. True; it was no more than my Duty, being an Oratory: Moſes and Aaron fell down on their Knees at the Door of the Tabernacle. Hezekiah and the People bowed and worſhipped, as I have prov'd at large in my Speech in the Star-Chamber. And, O come, let us worſhip and fall down before the Lord our Maker, is the common Introitus in our own and other Liturgies. It is objected, I pronounced the Place and Ground holy; I did ſo, and it is an ordinary and legal Speech, there being a relative, though not an inherent Holineſs in Churches dedicated to God's Service. Whereas it was ſaid, I threw up Duſt in the Air; This I deny. And where it was alledg'd, that this was in Imitation of the Roman Pontifical; that, ſaid he, is a Miſtake; for the Pontifical preſcribes (Cinis) Aſhes, not Duſt, to be caſt Abroad. For my Form of Conſecration, Biſhop Andrews made it, from whom I deſired a Copy, and had it. It was objected, that the Form of Prayer I uſed is in the Maſs-Book and Roman Pontifical. It may be ſo, he replied, and many other very good Prayers are in it.

Commons Reply.

The Member of the Houſe of Commons appointed to manage the Evidence, made this Reply:

1. That Moſes had an expreſs Command from God himſelf to conſecrate the Tabernacle, with all the Veſſels thereof, by anointing them with conſecrated Oil, they being Types of Chriſt to come. But we have no ſuch Command from God to conſecrate Churches, Churchyards, Chapels, Altars, and Veſtments, which are no Types of Chriſt already come. Exod. xl. 10, 11, 12.

2. This Conſecration was made by Moſes, the Temporal Magiſtrate (not by Aaron the High-Prieſt) without any other Ceremony than meer anointing the Tabernacle, and its Veſſels and Implements with Oil; therefore this was no Warrant for Biſhops conſecrating Churches, Churchyards, Chapels, Altars, and Veſtments, with other Ceremonies, without anointing them with Oil.

3. This

FOEDERA Tom XIX.

3. THIS Conſecration was only Temporary, the Jewiſh Ceremonial being aboliſhed by Chriſt's Death, Coloſſ. ii. 14, &c.

4. KING Solomon did not conſecrate the Temple, nor the Veſſels, and the Court thereof, with Oil, as Moſes did the Tabernacle; but after he had brought the Ark, Tabernacle, and all the holy Veſſels into it, with Praiſes, Thankſgiving, and Inſtruments of Muſick, and after the Cloud and Glory of the Lord had filled the Houſe, he made an heavenly Prayer only in the midſt of the Court, not in the Temple, before all the Congregation of Iſrael.

5. THAT the moſt holy Place was ſo ſtiled, though never conſecrated; ſo Jeruſalem is frequently called the holy City, Matt. iv. 5. and xxvii. 53. though never conſecrated, and God told Moſes, The Place whereon thou treadeſt is holy Ground, Exod. iii. 5. though never conſecrated by a Biſhop.

6. OUR own Homilies inform us, That the Church is counted and called holy, not of itſelf (nor yet for its Conſecration by a Biſhop) but becauſe God's People reſorting thither are holy, and exerciſe themſelves in holy and heavenly things.

7. THE hearing and preaching God's Word, Prayer, and receiving the Sacraments therein, are ſufficient of themſelves to ſanctify and make it holy, without any other Conſecration.

8. SANTIFICATION in its own nature is nothing elſe but a ſequeſtring any thing from a common to a religious Purpoſe, which may be done without a Biſhop's Exorciſm or Conjuration.

As to the Biſhop's Denial that he threw up Duſt, two Witneſſes expreſly depoſed the Affirmative. And as to his Averment, that he took his Form from Biſhop Andrews, it is very certain, that it agrees with that in the Pontifical found in his Study, even in terminis; ſo that if Biſhop Andrews imitated the Pontifical, and he Biſhop Andrews, the Charge is much alike.

AFTER all, it muſt be own'd, that it was a Piece of Affectation in the Biſhop, both in conſecrating the Church, and adminiſtring the Sacrament, to uſe a different Form from that of the Church of England, and to chooſe one ſo very like the Pontifical. But he little regarded what could be ſaid againſt him: The King's Favour had raiſed him ſo high, that it was not in the Power of his Enemies to do him any Hurt, but on the contrary, he had frequent Opportunities to be reveng'd on them; for even whilſt the Clamour was ſtrongeſt againſt him, three Doctors of Divinity at Oxford having preached againſt Arminianiſm, were expelled the Univerſity, and ſome others, who had undertaken to defend them, were turned out of their Poſts.

CHARLES I. Anno 1631.

Combat agreed upon between Ramſey and Rea about the Marquiſs of Hamilton.

ON the 22d of Auguſt, the Lord-Keeper and Judges conſulted how to examine into the Truth of an Accuſation againſt the Marquiſs of Hamilton, who having contracted with Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, to carry over ſix thouſand Men to his Aſſiſtance, in order to be employ'd againſt the Imperialiſts, or other Enemies, for reſtoring our oppreſſed Friends in Germany, and having a Leaſe of the Cuſtom of Wines in Scotland granted him for ſixteen Years, to enable him to raiſe and tranſport his Men, was charg'd with a treaſonable Deſign of raiſing this new Army with an Intention, when he was at the Head of them, to ſet himſelf up for King of Scotland. The Lord Treaſurer Weſton encourag'd this Suggeſtion, and preſs'd it home to the King, who told Hamilton, the next time he came into his Preſence, what an Accuſation was brought againſt him; but, ſays the King, I don't believe it; and that the World may know I have a Confidence in your Loyalty, you ſhall lie this Night in my Bed-Chamber: And the Marquiſs accordingly continued in the moſt intimate Acceſſes to the King.

DONALD Lord Rea, a Scots Highland Baron, impeached David Ramſey and Robert Meldran, for moving him to this Conſpiracy. They denied it flatly, and no Witneſs could be produced. Ramſey, who was a Soldier, and a true Scots Courtier, offered to clear himſelf by Combat, and the Appellant Rea accepted of the Challenge. The King was deſirous it ſhould be put upon a Duel, and the Judges were conſulted with,

I. WHAT the Offence was?
II. WHERE the Trial ſhould be?

THEY were all of Opinon, That if the Examinations were true, it was a high and horrible Treaſon; and adviſed that the Trial might be by an Appeal of Treaſon, after the manner of the Civil Law, the Judges not to intermeddle; upon which a Court of Chivalry was erected, conſiſting of the Conſtable and Marſhal, by a Commiſſion under the Great Seal, on the 24th of November, and the Earl of Lindſey being made Conſtable for that Purpoſe, the Proceedings in that Court between Rea and and Ramsey were very solemn, and Multitudes of People, for the Novelty sake, attended the Trial, which was in the Painted-Chamber at Westminster.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

IN this Trial, wherein Mr. Selden was one of Lord Rea's Council, it was delivered for Doctrine, That if the Defendant do send a Challenge to the Appellant, it is a Proof of the Defendant's Guilt. That no Testimony is to be neglected in Matter of Treason. And the Story in Livy was cited, That it is not base to undergo any Office to save a Nation; but that it was unbecoming a Gentleman to fish for Circumstances, and then to be an Informer. That in France the holding up of the Hand is taking an Oath; and in this Case it was urged, That if Ramsey be guilty of Treason, Rea is so likewise; for that both did speak the Words in the Accusation.

IN fine, after very long and formal Proceedings, of which there is a full Account in Sanderson's History, and the second Volume of Rushworth, in May following, when the Parties were just ready for Combat, which was appointed in Tuttle-Fields, the King interposed, through the Interest of the Marquis of Hamilton, whose Servant Ramsey was, and to prevent the Duel, sent one of the Kings at Arms with a Letter to the Lord High Constable, by which he revoked his Commission, and both were remanded Prisoners to the Tower.

THE Marquis of Hamilton's Expedition to Germany turned to so little Purpose, that it is not worth insisting on, and we shall dismiss the Subject with the Letter which King Charles wrote to the Marquis on the 8th of May following, when a Period was put to the great Trial.

JAMES,

'SINCE you went I have not wrote 'to you of Mackay's Business, be'cause I neither desire to prophesy, 'nor write half News; but now seeing '(by the Grace of God) what shall be 'the End of it, I have thought fit to 'be the first Advertiser of it to you. 'I doubt not but you have heard, that '(after long seeing of Proofs for clear'ing the Business as much as could be, 'and Formalities which could not be 'eschewed) the Combat was awarded, 'Day set, Weapons appointed: But 'having seen and considered of all that 'can be said of either Side, as likewise 'the Carriage of both the Men, upon 'mature Deliberation, I have resolved 'not to suffer them to fight. Because, 'first, for Mackay he hath failed so 'much in his Circumstantial Probations, 'especially concerning Muschamp, upon whom he built as a chief Witness, 'that no body now is any way satisfied 'with his Accusations. Then for David Ramsey, though we cannot condemn him for that which is not, yet 'he hath so much, and so often offended by his violent Tongue, that we 'can no ways think him innocent, though 'not that way guilty whereof he was 'accused; wherefore I have commanded the Court shall be dismissed, and 'Combat discharged, with a Declaration to this Purpose, that though upon 'want of good Proof the Combat was 'necessarily awarded, yet upon the 'whole Matter I am fully satisfied, 'that there was no such Treason as 'Mackay had fancied. And for David Ramsey, though we must clear 'him of that Treason in particular, yet 'not so far in the general, but that 'he might give Occasion enough by his Tongue, of great Accusation, 'if it had been rightly placed, as by 'his foolish presumptuous Carriage did 'appear.

CHARLES I. Anno 1632.

'THIS is the Substance, and so short, 'that it is rather a Direction how to believe others, than a Narrative itself, 'one of my chief Ends being, that you 'may so know David Ramsey, that 'you may not have to do with such 'a Pest as he is, suspecting he may 'seek to insinuate himself to you upon 'this Occasion. Wherefore I must desire you, as you love me, to have nothing to do with him.

'To conclude now, I dare say, that 'you shall have no Dishonour in this 'Business; and for myself, I am not 'ashamed that herein I have shewed my 'self to be Upon this Information, the Mayor and Commonalty appearing, confessed the Offence, and submitting themselves to the Favour of the Court, were fined 1500 Marks by the Common Law, and not upon the Statute of 28 Edw. III, nor upon the Statute of 4 Hen. VIII.

Against Mr. Barnard, for his Sermon at Cambridge.

MR. Nathaniel Barnard, Lecturer of St. Sepulcre's, whom we formerly mentioned, having in a Sermon preached May the 6th at St. Mary's in Cambridge, from 1 Sam. iv. 21. The Glory is departed from Israel, &c. delivered several smart Passages against the Possibility of Salvation in the Faith and Worship of the Church of Rome, as it was decreed in the Council of Trent, and against the introducing of Pelagian Errors and Romish Superstition into our Church; to the Authors of which Errors and Superstitions he pray'd for Conversion or Destruction: He was questioned in the High Commission Court, censur'd in the Presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and enjoined a Form of Recantation, which he refusing to submit to, though in general Terms he expressed his Sorrow for any Oversights and unbecoming Expressions in his Sermon, he was suspended from the Ministry, fined 1000 l. condemn'd in Costs, and committed to Prison, where with ill Usage he died.

Cause against Feoffees for Impropriations.

THE Cause against the Feoffees for buying in Impropriations, as Instruments of the Puritan Faction to divide and destroy the Church, was now brought by Information into the Exchequer, where the Attorney-General set forth, That the said Feoffees had purchased diverse Rectories, Tythes, &c. under pretence of augmenting poor Vicarages, but had not employ'd them to such pious Uses, according to the true Intention of the Donors.

THE Defendants made Answer, That they believed Impropriations in the Possession of Laymen not employ'd for the Maintenance of Preachers, to be a great Damage to the Church of England; and therefore that the purchasing thereof for the Maintenance of Divine Service and Preaching, was a pious Work, and that the Donors and Benefactors had not specially assign'd the Endowment of perpetual Vicars, but intended the Maintenance of Preachers, and such other good Uses as the Defendants should think meet; and that they had converted the Money to such Uses, according to the best of their Discretion.

THE Court gave Judgment, that the Defendants had usurped upon the King's Regality, and of their own Authority had made themselves a Body or Society; that they had purchased diverse Impropriations, but never restored one of them to the Church; that by disposing the Profits to Lecturers and Ministers, they had drawn a Dependance of the Clergy upon them, and introduc'd many Novelties of dangerous Consequence*. For this, their Corporation was dissolved, and their Money adjudg'd to the King; and his Majesty determin'd a Criminal Process against them in the Star-Chamber; but it was never prosecuted, because many discreet and devout Men were rather desirous of the Regulation, than the Ruin of so pious an Undertaking.

THE Design of destroying Presbyterianism occasioned the having no manner of Regard to the Scruples of tender Consciences in Matters of little Moment, which the Reformers had left in the publick Worship rather as indifferent than as absolutely necessary. On the contrary, every thing that gave most Offence to the Presbyterians, was not only industriously practised, but also made to be deemed necessary, and several new things were added, tending to widen the Breach, and make an Union impracticable. Of which the following Fact may be allowed to be a clear Evidence.

* IT was urged against them, that they generally preferred Nonconformists to their Lectures; to which they answered, That none were placed therein but such whose Sufficiency and Conformity was approved by the Ordinary; and moreover, that one of the Feoffees acquainted the Bishop of London at Fulham, That if he either disliked the Persons who managed, or the Order they took in the Work, they would submit the Alteration to his Discretion. Baker's Chronicle.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Process against the Recorder of Salisbury about painted Glass in Churches.

IN Salisbury there was a Collegiate Church called St. Edmond's, which, with its Revenues, like the rest of that kind, came by Act of Parliament into the Hands of Henry VIII, and remained in the Crown 'till the Reign of James I, who sold it to a private Person, and he to another, from whom it pass'd successively through several Hands, 'till at length the last Proprietor sold the Church to the Parishioners of St. Edmunds, who repaired and made it the Parish-Church. The Windows, which had 'till then been preserv'd, were painted after the old Fashion, and among other things contained the History of the Creation, where the Painter had represented God the Father in the Form of an old Man, creating the World during the first six Days, but on the seventh he had painted him sitting, denoting the Day of Rest. The blundering Painter had through Ignorance given to one Day the Work which was done on another, and in expressing the Creation of the Sun and Moon, he had put a Pair of Compasses in God's Hand, as if he was going to measure them. Henry Sherfield, Recorder of Sarum, who was a Parishioner of St. Edmund's, called a Vestry, wherein he represented to the Parishioners, that those Pictures gave Offence, and were apt to lead the People to Superstition; that the Painter had committed several Errors; and besides, the Representation of God the Father in the Form of an old Man, offended the Eyes of good Christians: Whereupon the Assembly thought it would be proper to take down the Windows, and put up others in their Room that were not painted, and the Recorder sending for a Glazier, show'd him with his Stick the Glass that was to be changed, and broke some of the Panes, as not thinking them worth preserving.

UPON this an Information was exhibited against Sherfield in the Star-Chamber; shewing, that though the Canons forbad any private Person to alter or innovate any thing in the Fabrick or Ornament of a Church without Licence from the King or the Bishos of the Diocese, Sherfield being ill-affected to the Discipline of the Church of England, and the Government thereof by Bishops, did combine with others of the same Opinion, and undertake, by a bare Order of the Vestry, and in Contempt of the King, and the Diocesan, to break down the Windows of St. Edmund's Church, which contain'd excellent Pictures of the Creation made an hundred Years ago, and were a great Ornament to the Church; that he committed this Outrage contrary to the Order of the Bishop, who had enjoined him to give over the Design; and that by this ill Example other wicked and schismatical Persons, ill-affected to the Government of the Church of England under his Majesty, might be encouraged to use the like violent Courses.

CHARLES I. Anno 1632.

SHERFIELD answered, that St. Edmund's Church was a Lay-Fee; that it had so continued ever since it fell to the Crown, and for that reason was legally exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of the Diocese. That consequently those who had purchased the Church, had lawful Power to alter the Windows, as they had before made other Alterations in the Steeple, Walls, Pulpit, and other Parts, without any Complaints from the Bishop; that after all, he had only taken down some small Quarries of Glass, to shew the Glazier what was to be alter'd; that the History of the Creation might still be plainly discover'd; and that the Painting was so far from being fine, that when it was done it did not cost above forty Shillings. Then he set forth the gross Blunders of the Painter, and proved by Acts of Parliament made in the Reigns of King Edward VI and Queen Elizabeth, that all Pictures should be removed out of the Churches. Finally, he denied that he was ill-affected to the Government of the Church under Bishops, or had acted in Contempt of the King, or ever received a Letter from the Bishop of Salisbury concerning this Matter.

THE Bishop of London said, that he did not pretend to justify the Errors of the Painter, but only to observe to the Court, that God being called in Scripture the Ancient of Days, might occasion the Painter's representing God the Father like an old Man. To which Edward Earl of Dorset replied, That by that Text was meant God from Eternity, and not God to be pictured as an old Man drawing the Plan of the World with a Pair of Compasses. But the Bishop added, that Sherfield was much more to blame than the Painter, for daring to make Alterations without Licence. In short, he was sentenced to pay a Fine of Five hundred Pounds, to be removed from the Recordership, to make publick Acknowledgment, and to be bound to his good Behaviour. And truly some of his Judges would have mounted his Fine to One Thousand Pounds, and obliged him to confess his Fault before such Persons as the Bishop should name.

Death of three Kings.

THIS Year was very remarkable for the Death of three Kings, viz. Sigismond King of Poland, who died the 29th of April; Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, who was slain in the Bed of Honour the 6th of November at the Battle of Lutzen; and Frederick King of Bohemia, who died of an Infection, which some call a Plague, the 19th of November.

Anno 1633.

King's Journey to Scotland to be crown'd there.

KING Charles having a mind to be crown'd in Scotland, to hold a Parliament there in order to get Money, and to execute a Project long since form'd, to reduce the Kirk of Scotland to a Conformity with the Church of England, the Year 1633 began with Preparations for his Progress into Scotland, where he had been expected for the Solemnity of a Coronation, ever since his Father's Death *. His long Delay was taken very unkindly in that Kingdom, and some Murmurs were given out, That if the King did not think the Crown of Scotland worth his Journey thither, there might be some other way of disposing of it. Accordingly on the 13th of May his Majesty set out from London with a noble Retinue of the Earls of Northumberland, Arundel, Pembroke, Southampton, and Holland, the Marquis of Hamilton, the Bishop of London, and many others of Quality. In his Progress he stepp'd a little out of the Way to view what was called a Protestant Nunnery at Gidding-Parva near Stilton in Huntingdonshire †, instituted and appointed by Mrs. Farrar, a Widow of eighty Years of Age (who said she had bad adieu to all Fears and Hopes of this World, and only desired to love God) in whose House none were permitted to reside but such as would devote themselves to Prayers at certain Hours, Morning, Noon, Evening and Night, and to eat and drink by Measure. Within her Chapel was a rich Altar, Crucifix, and Wax Candles; and before the reading of Prayers they bowed thrice to the Altar, as they went up and came down. They were at Liberty to use any Vocation within the House, as binding of Books, or teaching of Scholars, or studying; and if any of the Society had a mind to marry, they had free Liberty to depart.

He stops to see a Protestant Nunnery.

HIS Majesty accepted of many noble Entertainments by the Way, particularly at Welbeck in Nottinghamshire, by the Earl, afterwards Duke of Newcastle; at Raby-Castle in Yorkshire by Sir Henry Vane, his late Ambassador to the Kings of Denmark and Sweden; at Durham by Bishop Moreton; at Newcastle upon Tyne by the Magistrates; and at Berwick he was harangu'd on the 2d of June by the following remarkable Speech made by their Recorder Mr. Widdrington of Gray's-Inn.

CHARLES I. Anno 1633.

Most Gracious and Dread Sovereign,

Mr. Widdrington, the Recorder of Berwick, his Speech to the King.

'WHAT the Noise of useless and obsolete Cannons; what these strong, yet desolate Walls; what the Reliques of sometimes warlike Soldiers; what the Ruins of a poor, yet ancient Borough; what all those would say (if they could say any thing) and what all we your Majesty's humblest and meanest Subjects desire to express with an unanimous and chearful Acclamation, is no more but this, That your Majesty's Presence doth now bring as much Joy and Comfort to us all, as ever the Loss of this Town of Berwick brought Sorrow to the English or Scotish Nation.

'IT were unseasonable for us to represent to your Majesty's View the gloomy Cloud of our Pressures and Wants: No, I need not do it. The Mite we are to cast into your Majesty's Treasury will quickly tell you them: We cannot do it, for that Cloud is suddenly vanished by the radiant Beams of your Sunlike Appearance; by whose Approach these rusty Ordnances, these solitary Walls, these Soldiers, this now despicable Town, have all instantly received their former Life, Lustre and Vigour; and hence we are induc'd to think that this Year (being the Year of your Majesty's most Royal Progress) is likewise the Year dream'd on by Plato, wherein all things were to return to their former Life, Splendor and Excellency.

'YOU have in your Majesty's Eye the Representative Body of the poor Town of Berwick, yet a Town (for fuimus Troes) that hath been the Delight, nay the Ransom, of Kings; a true Helena, for which many bloody Battles have been fought, lost and regained several times within the Compass of one Century of Years. A Town the strongest Fortress of both your Majesty's flourishing Kingdoms;

* MR. Sanderson says, the King had been very humbly sollicited by the earnest and affectionate Supplication of the Scots to chear them with his Court, and to honour them with his Personal Coronation.

'yet,

'yet, upon each Diſcord and Diſſenſion, banded as a Ball between them; 'if held in the Hands of one, then toſs'd by the other Kingdom; a Ball 'that never found Reſt until the happy 'Union.

'A TOWN at this Day as uſeleſs as 'Arms in Time of Peace, yet may ſerve 'for your Majeſty to caſt your Eye upon, 'as a little Map of both your great 'Kingdoms; as a participating of the 'Nature of both, yet doubtful whether 'moſt beyond the ordinary Limits of the 'one, and without the Juriſdiction of the 'other Kingdom, but conſpicuous in the 'Eye of both.

'A TOWN neither wholly regulated 'by Engliſh or Scotiſh Laws, but by 'Cuſtoms and Uſages in ſome things dif'ferent from both; yet rather inclined 'to Engliſh Laws, and more affecting 'Scotiſh Faſhions and Language, as 'being oftner ſaluted by the Reſcripts of 'the one, and ſeeing and hearing of the 'other.

'ALTHOUGH it is now Engliſh, and 'ſo hath continued ſince the Time of 'King Edward IV, yet ſuch is our Di'ſtance from the Centre of the King'dom, that the Lines of thoſe Felicities 'now enjoy'd by that Kingdom, by your 'Majeſty's happy Government and Reſi'dence there, do not ſo happily concen'tre in us.

'WE well know (as indeed who know'eth not) that Royal Blood running in 'your Majeſty's Veins, to be extracted 'from the moſt renowned Kings of both 'theſe Kingdoms, and by thoſe Kings '(moſt Dread Sovereign) eſpecially 'your Royal Father of ever bleſſed and 'happy Memory, hath this Town, tho' 'in the Skirts of either Kingdom, been 'richly embroider'd with many Privi'leges, Franchiſes, and Immunities: 'And therefore we doubt not but 'your Majeſty, in whom each Man 'may behold the Worth of all your 'Anceſtors, you being no leſs right'ful Inheritor of all their Virtues than 'of their Crowns, will graciouſly main'tain what they have moſt benignly 'granted.

'BUT few Words are beſt to be uſed 'to Kings, eſpecially when they are 'ſpoken by an unskilful Orator. We 'dare boldly ſay (moſt gracious and 'mighty King) that our Hearts are 'better than our Tongues: We hum'bly crave your free Pardon of the 'one, and your gracious Intepretation 'of the other.

'YOUR Majeſty is now going to 'place a Diadem upon your moſt ſa'cred Head, which God and your own 'Right have long ſince given into your 'Hands.

'OUR humble Prayers are, that not 'only that, but all your other Crowns, 'may be unto your Majeſty Crowns of 'Roſes, without the Mixture of any 'Thorns.

'AND we moſt affectionately wiſh, 'that the Throne of King Charles, 'the Great and Wiſe Son of our Bri'tiſh Solomon, may be like that of 'King David the Father of Solomon, 'eſtabliſhed before the Lord for 'ever.'

His Entrance into Scotland, and Edinburgh.

THE King entered Scotland on the 12th of June, being met by abundance of the Nobility and Gentry in noble Equipage, when immediately all his Engliſh Servants and Officers yielded up their Places of Attendance to the Scots, who were admitted to the ſame Titles and Duties. That Day his Majeſty was nobly entertained at Seaton by the Earl of Winton, as he was the next Day at Dalkeith by the Earl of Moreton, Lord High-Treaſurer of Scotland; and on the 15th with great State and Magnificence he entered Edinburgh, being preceded to his Palace of Holyrood-Houſe by the whole Scots Nobility, who rode down the Streets according to their Degrees in Order of Parliament. The Sword, Scepter and Crown were carried juſt before him, and the Engliſh Nobility followed in Order according to their ſeveral Ranks.

His Coronation.

THE 18th of June, which was his Coronation-Day, paſſed with as much Solemnity and publick Joy as could poſſibly fill the Hearts of both Prince and People. The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. David Lindſey, Biſhop of Brechin, and the chief Ceremonies performed by Dr. Spotſwood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's. Ruſhworth obſerves, that the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow being placed at the King's Left Hand, as the Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's was on his Right, Laud, then only Biſhop of London, and a Stranger in that Kingdom, not only preſumed to take upon him the Order and Management of the Ceremonies; but perceiving that the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow was not dreſſed in his Pontificalibus, as the others were, being a Perſon that abhorr'd Pomp, he had the Boldneſs to thruſt him out of his Seat, and to put the Biſhop of Roſſe in his Place, with theſe Words, Are you a Churchman, and appear here without the Coat of your Order?

Laud's Inſult upon the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

CHARLES I. A°. 1633.

Meeting of the Scots Parliament.

THE Parliament meeting on the 20th, the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews preached, and the King made a very gracious Speech. In this Seſſion ſeveral Bills were paſſed agreeable to the King's Deſire, by ſome of which they gave him the largeſt Subſidy that ever was granted to any King of Scotland before; and there was little or no Difference in the Seſſion, except about the Revival of an Act declaring the Royal Prerogative, as it had been aſſerted by Law Anno 1606; and another paſſed in 1609, by which King James was empowered to preſcribe Apparel to Churchmen, with their own Conſent.

The Kirk's Jealouſy of the Surplice.

Biſhop Burnet, who gives the beſt Account of this matter in the firſt Volume of the Hiſtory of his own Time, ſays, theſe two Acts were now drawn into one; to which great Oppoſition was made by the Earl of Rothes, who deſired the Acts might be divided. But the King ſaid, It was now one Act, and he muſt either vote for or againſt it. The Earl ſaid, He was as much for the Prerogative as any Man, but that Addition was contrary to the Liberties of the Church, and he thought no Determination ought to be made in ſuch matters, without the Conſent of the Clergy, or at leaſt without their being heard. The King bid him argue no more, but give his Vote. So he voted, Not Content. Some few of the Lords offered to argue, but the King ſtopped them, and commanded them to vote. Almoſt the whole Commons voted in the Negative, ſo that the Act was indeed rejected by the Majority; which the King knew, for he had called for a Liſt of the Members, and with his own Pen had marked every Man's Vote; yet the Clerk of Regiſter, who gathers and declares the Votes, ſaid it was carried in the Affirmative. The Earl of Rothes affirmed it went for the Negative. But the King ſaid the Clerk of Regiſter's Declaration muſt be held good, unleſs the Earl of Rothes would go to the Bar, and accuſe him of falſifying the Record of Parliament, which was a Capital Crime. The Earl being told, that if he ſhould fail in the Proof, he was liable to the ſame Puniſhment, would not venture it; ſo that the Act was publiſhed, though in truth it was rejected. The King expreſſed a high Diſpleaſure at all who had concurred in the Oppoſition; ſo that, ſays Ruſhworth, he would not admit them to kiſs his Hand, and went out of his way ſometimes on purpoſe to avoid them. Upon this the Lords had many Meetings. They reckon'd now, ſays the Biſhop, that all their Liberties were gone, and a Parliament was but a piece of Pageantry, if the Clerk of Regiſter might declare as he pleaſed how the Votes went, and no Scrutiny allowed. Hereupon one William Hague the King's Sollicitor, a zealous Man of their Party, drew a Petition of all their Grievances, to be ſigned by the Lords, and offered to the King for Redreſs. He ſhewed it to the Lord Balmerinoch, who liking it in the main, ſpoke of it to the Earls of Rothes, Caſſels, and others; who not approving of it, the Earl of Rothes carried it to the King, but he would not look upon it, and ordered him to put a ſtop to it. The Copy being returned by the Earl to Balmerinoch, he kept it 'till next Winter, and having interlined it, in order to make it more acceptable, he then ſhewed it in confidence of Secrecy, to one Dunmoor a Lawyer; who ſhewed it, upon the ſame Condition, to one Hay of Naughton: but the latter carried it to Spotſwood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, who apprehending it was going about for Hands, was alarmed at it, and was in ſuch haſte to carry the News to the King at London, that he began his Journey on a Sunday, as he frequently did, which was a very odious thing in Scotland.

Lord Balmerinoch's Tryal.

By ſome Laws of that Country, though looſely worded, it was made Capital to know of any that ſpread Lyes of the King or his Government, or alienate his Subjects from him, and not diſcover it; which, though never once put in execution, the Petition was thought within ſuch Law, and an Order was ſent down for committing Lord Balmerinoch to Cuſtody, which was followed not long after, with a ſpecial Commiſſion for his Tryal. The Biſhop obſerves, that there was a manifeſt Deſign to have this Lord's Life, by the Nomination of the Judges, who were either very weak or very poor, and by the Partiality in ſtriking a Jury. Hague, who drew the Petition, went over to Holland, after having writ a Letter to Lord Balmerinoch, in which he owned that he drew the Petition, without any Direction or Aſſiſtance from him. It was therefore long in debate, upon what the Priſoner ſhould be tried: For his interlining the Paper, which plainly ſoftened it, was not thought Evidence that he drew it, or was acceſſary to it: and they had no other Proof againſt him, nor could they infer from thence that he was the Divulger of it, ſince it appeared it was only ſhewed by him to a Lawyer for Counſel. So that they agreed to inſiſt on this, that the Paper tended to alienate the Subjects from their Duty to the King, and that the Priſoner, knowing the Author of it, did not diſcover him, which by Law was Capital. The Court judged the Paper to be ſeditious, and to be a Lye of the King and his Government: And as to his knowing, and not diſcovering him, the Point was clear. The Priſoner pleaded, that the Statute for Diſcovery had never been put in execution; that it could never be meant but of matters that were notoriouſly ſeditious; that, 'till the Court judged ſo, he did not take this Paper to be of that nature, but conſidered it as a Paper full of Duty, deſigned to ſet himſelf and others right in the King's Opinion; and the Earl of Rothes atteſted in favour of the Priſoner, that upon the King's ſaying he would receive no ſuch Petition, it was quite laid aſide.

When the Jury was ſhut up, Gordon of Bucky, who was one of them, and reckoned a ſure Man, ſays the Biſhop, becauſe he had 43 Years before aſſiſted in the Murder of the Earl of Murray, broke ſilence, by deſiring they would all conſider what they were about; it was a matter of Blood, and they would feel the Weight of that as long as they lived. He had in his Youth been drawn in to ſhed Blood, for which he had the King's Pardon, but it coſt him more to obtain God's Pardon. It had given him many ſorrowful Hours both Day and Night. And as he ſpoke this, the Tears ran down his Face. Another of the Jury, viz. the Earl of Traquair, a private Gentleman of the Name of Steward, who had raiſed himſelf by degrees to be now Lord Treaſurer, being a Man of great Parts, but too much Craft, and reckoned the beſt Speaker in the Kingdom, as well as the moſt capable Man for Buſineſs: This Man, who was afterwards ſo reduced, that the Biſhop ſays he ſaw him when he wanted Bread, and was forced to beg, took up the argument, and ſaid, They had it not before them whether the Law was a hard Law or not, nor had they the Nature of the Paper before them, which was judged by the Court to be Leaſing-making; but they were only to conſider whether or no the Priſoner had diſcovered the Contriver of it. Upon this, the Earl of Lauderdale took up the argument, and urged, that ſevere Laws never executed, were looked on as made only in terrorem; and that though after the Court had judged a Paper to be ſeditious, it would be Capital to conceal the Author, yet before ſuch Judgment, the thing could not be thought ſo evident that he was bound to reveal it. Upon the whole, after the Lords had argued the matter many Hours, it went to the Vote, when ſeven acquitted, but eight caſt him, and he was thereupon condemned to loſe his Head.

His Condemnation.

We have inſiſted the longer on this Lord's Proſecution, becauſe our Author ſays, he had often heard from his Father, who was very intimate with Lord Lauderdale, that the Ruin of the King's Affairs in Scotland was owing to it in a great meaſure; and that after many Meetings, it was reſolved either to force Balmerinoch's Priſon, and ſet him at liberty; or if that failed, to revenge his Death both on the Court and the eight Jurors, ſome undertaking to kill them, and others to burn their Houſes *; which when the Earl of Traquair underſtood, he went to Court, and told the King, that the Lord Balmerinoch's Life was in his hands, but that his Execution was by no means adviſeable, and therefore the King thought fit to pardon him.

CHARLES I. A°. 1633.

His Pardon.

While the King was in Scotland, he erected a new Biſhoprick at Edinburgh, and made one Forbes Biſhop, of whom Dr. Burnet gives this Character. He was a very learned and pious Man, but had a ſtrange Faculty of preaching five or ſix Hours at a time. His way of Life and Devotion was thought monaſtic, and his Learning lay in Antiquity. He ſtudied to be a Reconciler betwixt Papiſts and Proteſtants, leaning rather to the firſt, as appears by his Conſiderationes modeſtæ: He was a very ſimple Man, and knew little of the World, ſo that he fell into ſeveral Errors in Conduct, but died ſoon after, not without a ſuſpicion of Popery, which was increaſed by his Son's turning Papiſt.

Edinburgh erected into a Biſhoprick in favour of one Forbes.

Effects of the King's Progreſs to Scotland.

Before we mention the King's Return to England, we will juſt take notice of ſome of the Effects of his Progreſs, which by the Obſervation of another Right Reverend Hiſtorian (Dr. Kennet Biſhop of Peterborough) concurred to open a way for thoſe Commotions which afterwards diſtracted both Kingdoms. For, 1. It now appeared that the Scots Noblemen who had been the greateſt Favourites in the Engliſh Court, had the leaſt Intereſt in their own Country; and that the Bounties conferred upon them by the King and his Father, were not looked upon as any Favour to the Nation, but as Obligations thrown away upon particular Men, who in being the more gracious with the King, were but the more ſuſpected to the People. 2. Some of the Scots Nobility endeavoured to make themſelves popular, by ſpeaking in Parliament againſt thoſe things which were moſt grateful to his Majeſty, and in entring their Diſſent to ſome Acts, for which the King did openly diſcountenance ſeveral of them, and made them not forgive the King, becauſe they imagined the King would never forgive them. 3. Two or three Acts were paſſed, which very much leſſened the Authority of the great Men, and the Subjection and Dependance of their Tenants; which ſerved to incenſe the one, and to make the other more licentious. But, 4. which was the worſt of all, was the Fears and Jealouſies taken up by the Kirk Party: They were taught to be upon their Guard, by the Biſhop of London's waiting upon the King, whom they look'd upon with the worſe Eye, when they heard him preach in the Royal Chapel at Edinburgh, chiefly on the Benefit of Con-

* Salmonet a French Papiſt owns, that even at his Tryal, the People were ſo exaſperated, that they got together at the Palace-Gate, and threatened the Judges as they went in.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Conformity, and the Reverence due to the Ceremonies of the Church. They were more and more exaſperated, when the King had erected and endowed an Epiſcopal See at Edinburgh, and had promoted ſome of the Biſhops to the principal Offices of the State, and had committed the framing a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland, to a ſelect number of their Biſhops. Theſe Steps were with great indignation exclaimed againſt as a Project to make Scotland ſubject to all the Forms and Eſtabliſhments of England, which they pretended would make their Kingdom look like a dependent Province, and render any farther Reformation of their Kirk in their own way, impoſſible.

The King's Return to England.

IT was on the 16th of July that the King, after having been in danger of drowning as he croſſed the Frith from Bruntiſland to Edinburgh, left Scotland, in a Ferment (which every Step he took after his Return, ſerved to increaſe) and travelling Poſt, he arrived on the 20th at the Queen's Court, which was then at Greenwich.

Archbiſhop Abbot's Death, and Character by the Lord Clarendon.

ON the 4th of Auguſt Archbiſhop Abbot, who had been long dead to the Church, died at Croydon, in his 71ſt Year; of whom the Earl of Clarendon ſays, He had ſate too many Years in the See of Canterbury, and had too great a Juriſdiction over the Church; that his Houſe was a Sanctuary to the moſt eminent of the factious Party; that he licenſed their moſt pernicious Writings, and by long neglect had ſuffered the Church to be filled with many weak, and more wilful Clergy. The noble Hiſtorian ſeems to bear ſtill harder upon him, when he ſays, 'He 'had been Head or Maſter of one of the 'pooreſt Colleges in Oxford, and had juſt 'Learning enough for that Province; that 'he was a Man of very moroſe Manners, 'and a very ſour Aſpect, which in that 'time was called Gravity; that he 'was made Biſhop, before he had been 'Parſon, Vicar, or Curate of any Pariſh-'Church in England, or Dean or Preben-'dary of any Cathedral; that he was in 'truth, totally ignorant of the Conſtitu-'tion of the Church of England, and the 'State and Intereſt of the Clergy; that he 'conſidered the Chriſtian Religion no o-'therwiſe than as it abhorred and reviled 'Popery, and valued thoſe Men moſt who 'did that the moſt furiouſly; that as to 'the ſtrict Obſervation of the Diſcipline 'of the Church, in the Conformity to the 'Articles or Canons eſtabliſhed, he made 'little Enquiry, and took leſs Care *; and 'that having made a very little Progreſs 'in the ancient and ſolid Study of Divi-'nity, he adhered only to the Doctrine 'of Calvin, and for his ſake did not think 'ſo ill of the Diſcipline as he ought to 'have done.'

CHARLES I. A°. 1633.

ANOTHER Author in the 3d Volume of the Compleat Hiſtory of England, ſeems to think alſo that the Non-conformiſts to the Diſcipline of the Church too much increaſed through the Remiſſneſs of his Government, when he tells us, that it was indeed the Senſe of many Churchmen, that the Lenity and Coldneſs of Archbiſhop Abbot had a very unhappy Influence on the Peace and Honour of the Church of England.

By Dr. Kennet.

BUT notwithſtanding all that has been ſaid to the diſadvantage of his Character, there are not wanting Authors of good Credit, who ſeem to extenuate or excuſe the great Remiſſneſs ſo much complained of in him. Dr. Wellwood in his Memoirs tells us, 'That Archbiſhop Abbot was a 'Perſon of wonderful Temper and Mode-'ration, and in all his Conduct ſhewed an 'unwillingneſs to ſtretch the Act of Uni-'formity beyond what was abſolutely ne-'ceſſary for the Peace of the Church; or 'the Prerogative of the Crown, any fur-'ther than conduced to the good of the 'State: That being not well turned for a 'Court, though otherwiſe of conſiderable 'Learning and genteel Education, he either 'could not, or would not ſtoop to the 'Humour of the Times; and that now and 'then by an unſeaſonable Stiffneſs he gave 'his Enemies occaſion to repreſent him as 'not well inclined to the Prerogative, or 'too much addicted to a popular Intereſt, 'and therefore not fit to be employed in 'matters of Government.'

By Dr. Wellwood.

AND 'tis obſerved by Larrey a French Author, that while Abbot was living, Laud kept ſome meaſures; and that tho' the Archbiſhop was in diſgrace at Court, he was nevertheleſs reſpected by the Church, by the Univerſities, and the whole Kingdom. Though he was ſtripped of part of the Temporalities of his Biſhoprick, and depriv'd of the Functions, yet the Character of ſo eminent a Poſt, which he ſtill held, and his Learning and Integrity, were Barriers which Arminianiſm durſt not attempt to force.

Laud's Preferment to the See of Canterbury.

TWO days after the Death of Abbot, Laud Biſhop of London, who had in effect been Adminiſtrator of the Province of Canterbury for ſome Years paſt, was received by his Majeſty with this Compliment, My Lord's Grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome: and the ſame day the King gave order for the diſpatch of all

* Nevertheleſs, it appears from the Regiſters of his Time, that one of the laſt Acts of Juriſdiction which he lived to exerciſe, was an Act of Diſcipline to inforce Conformity, even beyond the Rules of the Church, it being an Order and Injunction dated the 8th of July laſt, to the Pariſhioners of Crayford in Kent, to receive the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, kneeling at the Steps aſcending to the Communion-Table.

His Character.

DR. Laud bore ſuch Sway both in Church and State, during the Period we are treating of, that the Reader will naturally expect ſome Account of him, as well as of his Predeceſſor, which we ſhall give from three Spiritual Lords, one Temporal Lord, &c. all celebrated Writers, and ſum up the whole for the Reader's better Judgment, with Mr. Rapin's Sentiments upon what he had ſeen in print both for and againſt him.

By Archbiſhop Abbot.

WE ſhall begin, becauſe 'tis firſt in time, with the Character given of him by his immediate Predeceſſor, in the Narrative he drew up in his own Vindication, in the Year 1627, when Dr. Laud was only Biſhop of St. David's; a Character which the Reader will not expect to find much to his advantage, when he conſiders that the Archbiſhop aſcribed his own Diſgrace to the ſecret Counſels which that Prelate gave to the Duke of Buckingham.

'THIS Man, ſays the Archbiſhop, is 'the only inward Counſellor with Buckingham, ſitting with him ſometimes privately whole Hours, and feeding his Humour with Malice and Spight. His Life 'in Oxford was to pick Quarrels in the 'Lectures of the publick Readers, and to 'advertiſe them to the then Biſhop of Durham, that he might fill the Ears of King 'James with Diſcontents againſt the honeſt 'Men that took pains in their Places, and 'ſettled the Truth (which he called Puritaniſm) in their Auditors. He made it his 'Work to ſee what Books were in the 'Preſs, and to look over Epiſtles Dedicatory, and Prefaces to the Reader, in order to ſpy out Faults.

'IT was an Obſervation what a ſweet 'Man this was like to be, that the firſt notable Act that he did, was the marrying 'of the Earl of D. to the Lady R *, 'when it was notorious to the World 'that ſhe had another Husband, a Noble'man who had divers Children then living 'by her. King James for many Years took 'this ſo ill, that he wou'd never hear of 'any great Preferment of him; inſomuch 'that the Biſhop of Lincoln Dr. Williams, 'who taketh upon him to be the firſt 'Promoter of him, hath many times ſaid, 'that when he made mention of Laud to 'the King, his Majeſty was ſo averſe from 'it, that he was often conſtrain'd to ſay, 'that he would never deſire to ſerve that 'Maſter, who could not remit one Fault 'to his Servant. Well, in the end he did 'conquer it, to get him to the Biſhoprick 'of St. David's, which he had not long 'enjoy'd, but he began to undermine his 'Benefactor, as at this day it appeareth. 'The Counteſs of Buckingham told Lincoln, that St. David's was the Man who 'undermin'd him with her Son: And verily ſuch is his aſpiring Nature, that he 'will underwork any Man in the World, 'ſo that he may gain by it.'

By the Earl of Clarendon.

THE Lord Clarendon ſays, 'He was a 'Man of exemplary Parts and Virtues, 'which yet were allay'd with ſome unpopular natural Infirmities; the chief of 'which, (beſides a haſty froward way of 'Expreſſion) was, that he believed an Innocence of Heart, and Loyalty of Manners, was a ſufficient Guard to conduct a 'Man thro' the World, be his Company 'what it would: From a Scholar in St. 'John's College in Oxford, he became a 'Fellow, and then Preſident. He had 'been oppoſed all along by the Calvinian 'Party, who, according to an old Cuſtom 'among them, called every Man they did 'not love, Papiſt; under which Appellation 'they raiſed him many Troubles and Vexations, and ſo far ſuppreſs'd him, that the 'Vigour of his Age was paſt, before he 'had any Preferment to invite him to leave 'his poor College, the worſt endow'd at 'that time of any in the Univerſity. He 'retain'd, it may be, when he came into 'Authority, too ſharp a Memory of thoſe, 'by whom he had been ſo uncharitably 'proſecuted, and was but too guilty of 'the ſame Paſſion he complain'd of in 'his Adverſaries, that as they accus'd him 'of Popery for maintaining ſome doctrinal Points they diſlik'd, ſo he look'd on 'ſome Perſons as Enemies to the Diſcipline 'of the Church, becauſe they agreed with 'Calvin in ſome Points of Doctrine; tho' 'they, at the ſame time, liked not his Diſcipline, but loved the Government of the 'Church, and prayed for the Peace of it, 'equal with any in the Nation, as appeared 'afterwards in their Sufferings with it and 'for it. As ſoon as ever he came into 'Power, he did all he could to hinder the 'Progreſs of the Party; but having a Superior in the Church, who could ſlacken 'the Reins according to his own Humour 'and Indiſcretion, he had not power to 'go through that difficult Reformation as 'effectually as he deſired: 'till being at 'length Primate himſelf, he thought it 'his Duty to apply ſpeedy and ſeaſonable 'Remedies to thoſe Diſeaſes, which he ſaw 'would increaſe daily. His firſt Care after 'his Promotion to Canterbury, was, that 'the Place from whence he was removed 'might be filled with a Man of his own 'Stamp, and he prevailed with the King to 'make his old Friend and Fellow-Collegiate Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London. 'Now tho' the Nation in general bore no 'Ill-will to the Church, either in the 'Point of Doctrine or Diſcipline; yet were 'they jealous that Popery was not ſufficiently diſcouraged, and were eaſily perſuaded

* Laud it ſeems had married Charles Blunt Earl of Devonſhire, to the Lady Rich, Wife to the Earl of Warwick, who was then alive.

'ſuaded to believe any thing they had 'not been uſed to, and which they called 'Innovation, was admitted purely to pleaſe 'the Papiſts. The Archbiſhop had all his 'Life-time vigorouſly oppoſed Calvin's Doc-'trine, and thereupon, for want of another 'Name, (for Arminius was hardly known, 'or his Opinions heard of) his Enemies 'called him Papiſt. He was a Man of 'great Courage and Reſolution, and being 'conſcious to himſelf that he propoſed no-'thing in all his Actions and Deſigns, but 'what was pious and juſt, he never ſtu-'died the eaſieſt Ways of attaining it. If 'the Faults and Vices deſerved to be in-'quired into, be the Perſons who they 'wou'd that had committed them, they 'were ſure to find no Favour or Exemption 'from him. He reſolved to make the Diſ-'cipline of the Church felt, as well as ſpo-'ken of, and applied it, without any Re-'ſpect of Perſons, as much to the greateſt 'as meaneſt Offenders. The Remiſſneſs of 'Abbot and others gave birth to a Neg-'ligence, which no doubt offended very 'many pious Men. The People were 'grown ſo careleſs of the Churches, and 'the Parſons of the Chancels, that inſtead 'of beautifying or adorning them, they were 'kept with more Indecency, than they would 'willingly allow in the ordinary Offices of 'their own Houſes; and the Sacraments 'themſelves were ſuffer'd to be adminiſtred 'where the People had moſt mind to re-'ceive them. This prophane Liberty the 'Archbiſhop reſolved to reform with all 'ſpeed, requiring the other Biſhops to join 'with him in ſo good a Work. Yet I 'know not how, the Proſecution of it was 'managed ſo unluckily, that the Enemies 'of the Church took advantage by it, as 'ſoon as they had the Opportunity of 'making the worſt Uſe of it. He had not 'been long Archbiſhop, when the Death 'of the Earl of Portland, High-Treaſurer 'of England, made another great Alte-'ration in the Court, without much Grief 'to him, who was thereby rid of an Enemy, 'and made one of the Commiſſioners of the 'Treaſury and Revenue; which engaged 'him in Civil Buſineſs and Affairs of State, 'wherein he had but ſmall Experience, 'and which he had hitherto declined. But 'being now engaged in it by his Truſt, he 'applied himſelf to it with his uſual Heat 'and Earneſtneſs, making it his main Care 'to advance and improve the Revenue, 'and ſo gave ear to all Informations and 'Propoſitions of that kind, which often 'miſled him to think better of ſome Pro-'jects than they deſerved, and made him 'countenance too much the Commiſſion 'concerning Depopulations, which was 'very troubleſome and expenſive to the 'People, and was likewiſe thrown upon 'his account. However, the Archbiſhop 'himſelf was highly pleaſed with what 'was done, and never remitted any thing 'of his Severity towards Men of all Con-'ditions, nor the Sharpneſs of his Lan-'guage; which was ſo natural to him, that 'he could not debate any thing without 'Paſſion, nor ſuffer himſelf to be contra-'dicted in Debate: which Imperfection ex-'poſed him too much to thoſe who wiſh'd 'him not well, eſpecially the Lord Cot-'tington, who would lead him into a Miſ-'take, drive him into Choler, and then 'expoſe him; and this he choſe moſt to 'do in the King's Preſence, and yet he 'would dine with him the next Day. What-'ever was the Reaſon of it, Laud, from 'the time of his Promotion to the See of 'Canterbury, or rather from that of his 'being Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, ex-'tremely provoked, or ſuffered the Envy, 'Reproach, and Malice of Men of all Qua-'lities and Conditions; of all which, tho' 'he was very ſenſible, yet did he not con-'ſider it enough, believing the Government 'ſo ſtrongly built, that nothing could 'ſhake it from within or without, nor any 'thing leſs than a general Confuſion of 'Law and Goſpel hurt him: but then he 'did not foreſee how eaſily that Confuſion 'might be, and was afterwards brought 'about.'

By Dr. Burnet Biſhop of Sarum.

THE Biſhop of Sarum ſays, 'He was 'a learned, a ſincere, and a zealous Man, 'regular in his own Life, and humble in 'his private Deportment; but was hot and 'indiſcreet, eagerly purſuing ſome Matters 'that were either very inconſiderable or 'miſchievous; ſuch as ſetting the Com-'munion-Table by the Eaſt Walls of 'Churches, bowing to it, and calling it the 'Altar; the ſuppreſſing the Privileges of the 'Walloons, the breaking of Lectures, the 'encouraging of Sports on the Lord's Day, 'with ſome other things that were of no 'value. And yet all the Zeal and Heat 'of that time was laid out in theſe. His 'Severity in the Star-Chamber, and in the 'High-Commiſſion Court, but above all, 'his violent, and indeed inexcuſable Inju-'ſtice in the Proſecution of Biſhop Wil-'liams, were ſuch viſible Blemiſhes, that 'nothing but the putting him to death in 'ſo unjuſt a manner, could have raiſed his 'Character, which indeed it did to a de-'gree of ſetting him up as a Pattern, and 'the eſtabliſhing all his Notions as Stan-'dards, by which Judgments are to be 'made of Men, whether they are true to 'the Church or not. His Diary, tho' it 'was a baſe thing to publiſh it, repreſents 'him as an abject Fawner on the Duke 'of Buckingham, and as a ſuperſtitious 'Regarder of Dreams. His Defence of 'himſelf, writ with ſo much care when he 'was in the Tower, is a very mean Per-'formance. He intended in that to make 'an Appeal to the World. In moſt Par'ticulars he excuſes himſelf by this, that 'he was but one of many, who either in 'Council, Star-Chamber, or High-Commiſſion, voted illegal things. Now tho' 'this was true, yet a chief Miniſter, and 'one in high Favour determines the reſt ſo 'much, that they are generally little better 'than Machines acted by him. On other 'occaſions he ſays, the thing was proved 'but by one Witneſs. Now, how ſtrong 'ſoever this Defence may be in Law, it is 'of no force in an Appeal to the World; 'for if a thing is true, 'tis no matter how 'full, or how defective the Proof is. The 'thing that gave me the ſtrongeſt Prejudice 'againſt him in that Book is, that after he 'had ſeen the ill Effects of his violent Coun-'ſels, and had been ſo long ſhut up, and 'ſo long at leiſure to reflect on what had 'paſſed, in the hurry of Paſſion, in the Ex-'ultation of his Proſperity, he does not in 'any one part of that great Work acknow-'ledge his own Errors, nor mix in it any 'wiſe or pious Reflections on the ill Uſage 'he met with, or the unhappy Steps he 'had made. So that while his Enemies 'did really magnify him by their inhuman 'Proſecution, his Friends Heylin and Wharton have as much leſſened him, the one 'by writing his Life, and the other by pub-'liſhing his Vindication of himſelf.'

By Sir Philip Warwick.

SIR Philip Warwick called Sir Philip the Treaſurer, becauſe he was Secretary to two Lord-Treaſurers, viz. Dr. Juxon Biſhop of London, and Thomas Earl of Southampton, left this Account behind him, in what he calls Memoirs or Reflections on King Charles I.

'HE was a Man of an upright Heart 'and pious Soul, but of too warm Blood 'and too poſitive a Nature towards aſſert-'ing what he believed to be Truth, to be 'a good Courtier; and his Education fitted 'him as little for it as his Nature, which 'had been moſt in the Univerſity, and 'among Books and Scholars, where oft 'canvaſſing Affairs that are agitated in that 'Province, and prevailing in it, rather gave 'him wrong than right Meaſures of a 'Court. He was generally acknowledged 'a good Scholar, and throughly vers'd in 'Eccleſiaſtical Learning. He was a Zealot 'in his Heart both againſt Popery and 'Presbytery, but a great Aſſertor of Church-'Authority inſtituted by Chriſt and his 'Apoſtles, and as primitively practiſed, 'which notwithſtanding he freely acknow-'ledged ſubject to the ſecular Authority. 'And therefore he carefully endeavoured to 'preſerve the Juriſdiction, which the 'Church anciently exerciſed before the Se-'cular Authority owned her; at leaſt ſo 'much thereof, as the Law of this our 'Realm had applied to our Circumſtances; 'which our common Lawyers daily ſtruck 'at, and thro' Prohibitions and other Ap-'peals every day leſſened: and this bred 'an Unkindneſs to him in many of the 'long Robe, however ſome of them were 'very careful of the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſ-'diction. He was a Man of great Mo-'deſty in his Perſon and Habit, and of Re-'gularity and Devotion in his Family; and 'as he was very kind to his Clergy, ſo 'he was very careful to make them modeſt 'in their Attire, and very diligent in their 'Studies, in faithfully diſpenſing God's 'Word, reverently reading the Prayers, 'and adminiſtring the Sacraments, and in 'preſerving the Churches in Cleanlineſs, 'and with plain and fitting Ornament, that 'ſo, void of Superſtition, God's Houſe in 'this Age, where every Man better'd his 'own, might not lie alone neglected; and 'accordingly he ſet upon that great Work 'of St. Paul's Church *, which his Dili-'gence perfected in a great meaſure; and 'his Maſter's Piety made that moſt noble 'Structure magnificent by a Portico. Laud 'likewiſe prevented a very private and 'clandeſtine Deſign of introducing Noncon-'formiſts into too many Churches; for that 'Society of Men (that they might have 'Teachers to pleaſe their itching Ears) had 'a Deſign to buy in all the Lay Impropri-'ations, of which the Pariſh-Churches in 'Henry VIIIth's Time were robb'd, and 'lodging the Advowſons and Preſentations 'in their own Feoffees, to have introduced 'Men, who would have introduced Doc-'trines ſuitable to their Dependencies; which 'the Court already felt the Smart of too 'much, by being forced to admit the Pre-'ſentations of the Lay-Patrons, who too 'often diſpoſe their Benefices to Men ra-'ther ſuitable to their own Opinions than 'the Articles and Canons of the Church. 'All this bred him more and more Envy. 'When he found Providence had led him 'into Authority, he very readily and ſtrongly 'oppoſed both Popery and Presbytery; but 'the Weight of both cruſh'd him. The 'Evidence he gave of his Zeal againſt Po-'pery, is manifeſted by as learned and ju-'dicious a Book †, (and ſo acknowledged 'even by his Adverſaries) as ever was writ-'ten on that Subject by any Man ſince the 'Reformation, and is ſo eſteemed by all 'abroad

* Laud got Briefs for Contributions throughout the Kingdom, and Letters Monitory were ſent from the Lords of the Council to quicken the Country-Gentlemen in raiſing Money for ſo religious a Work. Sir Francis Knollys and Sir Thomas Vachel, two Juſtices of the Peace in Berkſhire, who were not over-forward in it, as not liking either Laud or his Projects, were check'd for delaying to gather in the Contribution-Money, and not giving liberally themſelves; by which compulſory Method great Sums were raiſed. The Privy-Council having little elſe to do, and being under the Influence of Laud, publiſhed an Order, that no body carry any thing in the Church which may prophane it, that Parents ſhould be puniſhed for Children's playing at any time in the Church, &c. Laud ſet up certain Images in this Cathedral, which, according to Ruſhworth, were to the diſcontent of many Perſons. The King came himſelf to viſit this Church in a kind of Proceſſion. Above 80,000 l. were gathered by the Briefs, beſides 19,000 l. laid out by Sir Paul Pindar.

'abroad as well as at home: And this good 'Biſhop, like his Maſter, maintained it as 'well with his Blood as his Ink; for when 'he was murdered and martyred on the 'Scaffold, (no time for Diſſimulation) he 'died with this Profeſſion: And he who 'looks upon him thro' thoſe Canons, which 'paſſed in Synod in his time, will find him 'a true Aſſertor of Religion, Royalty and 'Property; and that his grand Deſign was 'no other than that of our firſt Refor-'mation; which was, that our Church 'might ſtand upon ſuch a Foot of Primi-'tive and Eccleſiaſtical Authority, as ſuited 'with God's Word, and the beſt Interpre-'ters of it, ſound Reaſon and primitive 'Practice.'

By Dr. Well-wood.

'As Archbiſhop Laud was nothing in-'ferior to the Earl of Strafford in Parts, 'and much his ſuperior in Learning; ſo 'tis hard to determine which of the two 'made a nobler Defence at their Tryal. 'The Fate of the former has been the 'ſame with that of moſt great Men, to be 'repreſented to Poſterity in Extremes; for 'we have nothing writ of him, but what's 'either Panegyrick or Satyr, rather than 'Hiſtory.

'THAT the Archbiſhop ſhould be brought 'to his Tryal, and found guilty, during 'the Heat of a Civil War, and when all 'things were tending to Confuſion, was 'nothing ſtrange: Nor was Serjeant Wild's 'Introduction at the opening of his Charge, 'any thing but what might have been 'expected at ſuch a time, when he told 'the Lords, That it might be ſaid of the 'great Cauſe of the Archbiſhop of Canter-'bury, as it was in a like caſe, Reper-'tum eſt hodierno die facimus, quod nec 'poeta fingere, nec hiſtrio ſonare, nec mi-'mus imitari potuerit. But it was in-'deed ſtrange, and none of the leaſt of 'this great Man's Misfortunes, that three 'Years before he ſhould be declared by 'the Houſe of Commons, a Traytor, ne-'mine contradicente, at a Time when there 'was not the leaſt Miſunderſtanding be-'twixt the King and Parliament, being 'within the firſt Month after they ſat 'down: And which was yet ſtranger, 'that nobody was more ſevere upon him, 'than ſome of thoſe that afterwards took 'the King's Part againſt the Parliament, 'and were at laſt the chief Inſtruments of 'his Son's Reſtoration. Whoever reads Sir 'Harbottle Grimſton's Speech upon voting 'his Impeachment, or Pym's upon carry-'ing it up to the Lords, will be apt to 'think, that ſcarce any Age has produced 'a Man whoſe Actions and Conduct have 'been more obnoxious to Obloquy, or giv-'en greater Occaſion for it.

'THERE was one Thread that run thro' 'his whole Accuſation, and upon which 'moſt of the Articles of his Impeachment 'turned; and that was his Inclination to 'Popery, and his Deſign to introduce the 'Romiſh Religion: Of which his immortal 'Book againſt Fiſher, and his Declaration 'at his Death, do ſufficiently acquit him. 'And yet, not Proteſtants only, but even 'Roman Catholicks themſelves were led in-'to this miſtake, otherwiſe they would not 'have dared to offer one in his Poſt a Car-'dinal's Cap, as he confeſſes in his Diary 'they did twice*. The Introduction of a 'great many pompous Ceremonies into this 'Church, the licenſing of ſome Books that 'ſpoke favourably of the Church of Rome, 'and the refuſing to licenſe others that were 'writ againſt it, were the principal Cauſes 'of his being thus miſrepreſented: And in-'deed, his Behaviour in ſome of theſe mat-'ters, as likewiſe in the Star-Chamber, and 'High-Commiſſion Court, can hardly be ac-'counted for; and particularly his theatrical 'manner of conſecrating a new Church at 'London.

'HE was certainly, continues Dr. Well-'wood, in ſpite of malice, a Man of an e-'levated Capacity, and vaſt Deſigns; a 'great Encourager of Learning and learn-'ed Men, and ſpared no Pains nor Coſts 'to enrich England with ſuch a noble 'Collection of Books and MSS. in moſt 'Languages, as looked rather like the 'Bounty of a King than of a Subject. 'As he left behind him many laſting Mo-'numents of his Beneficence to the learned 'World, ſo was he in a way to have car-'ried it much farther, if his Misfortunes 'had not intervened, and deprived Learn-'ing of ſo powerful a Benefactor. But 'after all, as there is ſeldom found a 'Mind ſo great, but has ſome Allay, ſo 'it ſeems Archbiſhop Laud, notwithſtand-'ing his excellent Endowments, was not 'proof againſt either the Impreſſion of 'Dreams, or Revenge of Perſonal Af-'fronts, though never ſo trivial in them-'ſelves, nor the Perſon never ſo mean: 'Of the one, witneſs his taking ſo parti-'cular notice in his Diary of ſeveral of his 'Dreams; and of the other, his carrying 'his Reſentments ſo far againſt Archie 'the King's Fool, for a meer Jeſt, that he 'obtained an Order of Council (of March '11. 1637.) by which his Coat was pulled 'over his head, and he was diſcharged 'from the King's Service, and baniſhed 'the Court: Which being ſo unaccount-'able a piece of Weakneſs in ſo great a 'Man, and done at a full Board, the King 'and the Archbiſhop preſent, is a remark-'able Inſtance, how far the greateſt of 'Men

* We find in Ruſhworth, that he ſaid to his Majeſty upon this Offer, that ſomething dwelt within him which would not ſuffer that, 'till Rome were other than it is: but another Author quotes the Lord Wiqueſort's Tract of the Ambaſſador, to prove that he treated with Count Roſetti, the Popiſh Agent in England, for a Penſion of 48,000 Livres, provided that he accepted the Cap.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

'Men may ſometimes be left without a 'Guard againſt Paſſion.' Thus far Dr. Wellwood, (who has alſo given a Character of the Duke of Buckingham, George Villers, for which the Reader is referred to his Memoirs.)

ON the other hand, if we look into the Life of Archbiſhop Williams, writ by Dr. Hacket, Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry, we ſhall find Laud repreſented in a very different Light, and what wicked Inſtruments, Perjuries, Subornations, keeping back of Witneſſes, expunging and eraſing of Records, &c. he made uſe of to ruin Biſhop Williams, the Particulars whereof are ungrateful to mention; and therefore we ſhall diſmiſs Laud's Character, with Mr. Rapin's brief Summary of it, which muſt be owned to be very candid and impartial.

By Mr. Rapin.

'IT ſeems to me impracticable, fully to 'make known the Genius, Character, and 'Religion of Dr. Laud, conſidering what 'Opinions there are concerning him, it 'being almoſt impoſſible to affirm any 'thing of him good or bad, upon the 'Teſtimony of ſome, but what is contra-'dicted and rejected as falſe by others. 'This is the common effect of Parties. 'Hardly can any thing be added to the 'Encomiums which thoſe who profeſs what 'they call High-Church, i. e. the rigid 'Epiſcopalians, beſtow on this famous 'Biſhop. The Lord Clarendon, in his Hi-'ſtory, expreſſes on all occaſions a great 'Eſteem for Laud, and finds no fault in 'him, but a little too much Eagerneſs to 'bring about what he took in hand. All 'the reſt of the ſame Party extol him to 'the Skies; they ſee no Imperfection in 'him; they every where cry up his Wiſ-'dom, his good Senſe, his Learning, his 'Piety, and above all, his Zeal for the 'Church of England, for which he at laſt 'died a Martyr. The Presbyterians, on 'the contrary, without denying his Qua-'lifications and Learning, affirm he was a 'rank Arminian, and almoſt a Papiſt. They 'ſay, that under the colour of great Zeal 'for the Ceremonies of the Church, he 'carried them ſo far as to make them 'border upon Popery, and render himſelf 'juſtly ſuſpected of deſigning by degrees 'to re-eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion in 'England. That to this end he made 'even the leaſt Trifles, ſuch as the Re-'formers had not meddled with, becauſe 'they ſeemed to them to be indifferent, to 'be looked on as eſſential to Religion. 'They inferred from thence, that it was 'impoſſible for a Man of his Senſe to be 'attached to things of ſo little moment, 'had he not had ſome ill Deſigns againſt 'the reformed Religion. That he was a 'mortal Enemy of the Presbyterians and 'Puritans, becauſe from them he met with 'moſt Oppoſition to the Execution of his 'Projects. For my part, I own, that in 'all that has been ſaid againſt him, I 'have found no convincing Proof of his 'having had any Deſign to re-eſtabliſh 'the Roman Catholick Religion in Eng-'land, unleſs we confound, as many did 'in thoſe days, Popery with High-Church, 'through a pure Spirit of Party. But it 'is very certain he mortally hated the Pres-'byterians, and would have utterly rooted 'out Puritaniſm, had it been in his power. 'As to Arminianiſm, there is all the like-'lihood in the World that he leaned very 'much that way.'

IT being preſumed, that from what has been ſaid the Reader is enabled to form a tolerable Judgment of the Principles and Motives of this great Man's Conduct, we now proceed to the other chief Occurrences of this Period.

Birth of Prince James.

ON the 13th of October the Queen was brought to bed of her ſecond Son, who was chriſtened at St. James's by Archbiſhop Laud on the 24th of November following, by the Name of James, afterwards created Duke of York.

Articles for his Majeſty's Royal Chapel in Scotland.

THE Archbiſhop of Canterbury being now the greateſt Man in the Church, thought fit by virtue of his Place to adviſe his Majeſty for a Reformation in the Church of Scotland, and procured certain Articles to be ſent in his Majeſty's Name, on the 8th of this Month, to the Biſhop of Dunblain, then Dean of the Royal Chapel in the Palace of Holy-Rood at Edinburgh, for Prayers to be performed there twice a Day, after the Engliſh manner; for receiving the Communion the firſt Sunday of every Month, by the Lords of the Council, Seſſion, &c. kneeling, for an Example to the whole Kingdom; and that the Dean ſhould always officiate there in his Surplice: Which Orders the then Dean durſt not obey, for fear of exaſperating the People. And when the Archbiſhop, who had a Warrant from the King to correſpond with him, wrote ſeveral Letters to him, to promote the Deſign, and to let the King know who conformed and who did not, he anſwered, that he did what he could, but the Times required Patience. Ruſhworth ſays, that the Royal Chapel being thus ordered, was declared to be for a Pattern of the intended Reformation, to all Cathedrals, Chapels, and Pariſh-Churches in Scotland.

HENCE 'tis viſible, that not only the whole Council of Scotland, but alſo all thoſe who were in public Employments and Court Places, were ready before-hand to conform to the Church of England, otherwiſe they would not have been employed, or kept in their Poſts. It was with them that the King intended to begin, that, as he ſaid himſelf, they might ſerve for Examples to the reſt.

BUT

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

BUT whilſt the King was ſeeking means to engage the Scots to conform to the Church of England, Pains were taking to alienate from her the Presbyterians in England, by affecting ſuch Uſages and Cuſtoms as were moſt apt to offend them; of which I ſhall give theſe two very flagrant Inſtances, to ſhew that the Presbyterians bare Diſlike of a thing was ſufficient Reaſon with the Court ſtrenuouſly to ſupport it; and that the Heads of the Church of England at this time, inſtead of endeavouring to undeceive thoſe, who imagined ſhe was leaning to Popery, ſeemed to take all poſſible care to confirm them in their Suſpicions, by induſtriouſly conforming to the Church of Rome in matters of little moment, and without any Neceſſity, as if it was done purpoſely to brave them.

Revels, &c. in Somerſetſhire.

THE Cuſtom of Revels, Wakes, and other Pariſh-Feſtivals, was at this time grown to a great Enormity; Drunkenneſs, Lewdneſs and Riot were but the leaſt part of it; Fighting and Blood generally accompanied it. No County in England (ſays a modern Hiſtorian, who was born in it, and has traverſed it all over, in order to write the Hiſtory of it) was then, and is now more debauched and diſturbed by Revels and Church-Ales than that of Somerſet; and it was ſo ſcandalous even in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, that there was this Order made againſt it at the Seſſions held at Bridgewater the 10th of October 1593, viz.

Complained of by the Gentry.

'THAT no Church-Ale, Clerk's-Ale, 'Bid-Ale, or Tippling be ſuffered; and that 'ſuch only be permitted to tipple, as are, 'or ſhall be lawfully licenſed according to 'the Order now made by us.

THERE was a ſecond Order made, that no Church-Ales be admitted in any part of this Shire, which was ſigned at Bridgewater the 28th of September, 1595, by the underwritten:

John Popham, who was alſo Lord-Chief Juſtice of England;
Sir George Sydenham,
George Speke, Eſq;

IN March 1627, Sir John Denham one of the Barons of the Exchequer, being then upon the Circuit in Somerſetſhire, had a Petition deliver'd to him againſt Revels and Church Ales by the following Miniſters:

Mr. Adam Abraham,
Mr. William Gyllet,
Mr. Ralph Turner,
Mr. John Ford,
Mr. John Fathers,
Mr. George Drake.

And the Baron iſſued an Order accordingly; which was revived this Year by the ſaid Baron, and the Lord Chief-Juſtice Richardſon, (who went the Weſtern Circuit for the Lent Aſſizes) at the Requeſt of the Juſtices, without the Conſent of Dr. Pierce Biſhop of Bath and Wells, who immediately gave notice of it to Laud his Patron, who complained of it to the King. He alſo wrote a Letter to Pierce, on the 4th of October, to know whether there had been any Diſorders at theſe Feaſts, which his Majeſty was willing ſhould be continued for the Recreation of the People, and to encourage neighbourly Meetings; and whether ſuch Diſorders might not be prevented by the Care of the Juſtices, without abrogating the Feaſts.

Favoured by the King and two Biſhops.

THE Anſwer he returned was, that if the Judge's Order againſt Revels was revoked, it would be acceptable to the Gentry there, as well as to the Clergy and common People. Which was ſo contrary to the Truth, that it was at the earneſt Requeſt of the Gentlemen of Somerſetſhire, that the Judges, Richardſon and Denham, iſſued their Orders to Lawrence Muſgrave, and all the Conſtables in that large County, to hinder ſuch unlawful Riots and Revels; thoſe Gentlemen giving for Reaſon at the Aſſizes, That many Perſons had been indicted for murdering Baſtards begot at Revels, and for other grand Diſorders occaſioned by thoſe intemperate Meetings: of which Dr. Pierce ſays not a Syllable in his Letter to his Patron the Archbiſhop; and what he ſaid of the Gentry, is ſo far from being true, that when Judge Richardſon came their Circuit again, they deſired him to repeat that Order, and he puniſhed ſome Perſons for the Breach of it; which, and his requiring the Order to be read in Churches yearly, on the firſt Sunday in February, and the two Sundays before Eaſter, irritated Archbiſhop Laud beyond meaſure, who complained of him again to the King, and he was ſummoned to appear before the Lords of the Council, where he was ſeverely reprimanded, and enjoined to revoke the former Order made at the Aſſizes againſt Revels, as he wou'd anſwer the contrary at his Peril; tho' he informed the Board, that the Order was made at the Requeſt of the Juſtices of the Peace in the County, with the general Conſent of the whole Bench, and upon view of divers ancient Precedents. Accordingly the Lord Chief-Juſtice Richardſon at the next Aſſizes informed the Juſtices, Grand Jury, and Country, that thoſe good Orders made by him and his Brother Denham, for ſuppreſſing unruly Wakes and Revels, wherein he thought he had done God, the King, and the Country good Service, were to be reverſed by Order of his Majeſty, upon complaint of ſome ill-affected Perſons; but that, as it was not an Order made by himſelf only, but with the joint Conſent of the whole Bench, he conceived that he could not do it alone; however, in purſuance of the Command, he declared to the Bench, that he did, as much in him lay, revoke the ſaid Order; tho' he doubted not, that if the Juſtices of the Peace would truly inform his Majeſty of the neceſſity there was for ſuch an Order, from the great Diſorders occaſioned by Wakes and Church-Ales, his Majeſty would give his Command to revive it. Upon this, all the Juſtices there preſent, of whom there was a numerous Bench, being troubled at the Revocation of the ſaid Order, drew up a Petition to the King, that they might have Favour and Allowance to ſuppreſs all unlawful Aſſemblies of Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, and Bid-Ales, and to puniſh all Diſorders then uſually committed; adding, that ſince the Rumor of revoking the former Orders, the Prophanation of the Lord's Day, riotous Tipling, Contempt of Authority, Quarrels, Murders, &c. have increaſed: which Petition was ſigned by the following Perſons, Men, ſays Fuller, who in Birth, Brains, Spirit, and Eſtate, were inferior to no County in England; viz.

And forced to revoke his Order for that purpoſe.

John Harrington, Eſq; Cuſtos-Rotulorum of the County, was directed to carry this Petition to their Lord-Lieutenant the Earl of Pembroke, and deſire him to deliver it to the King. Biſhop Pierce gave the Archbiſhop quick Information of what was coming; and the Earl of Pembroke happening to be out of Town, Laud prevented the Delivery of it, by procuring and publiſhing an Order from the King, enjoining his Grace, to ſee that his Majeſty's Declaration concerning Recreations on the Lord's Day, after Evening Prayer, be printed. And, on the 18th of October, it was accordingly publiſhed *, being an Order for renewing and confirming the Declaration that had been publiſhed on that account at Greenwich, May 24, 1618, by King James I. of which the following is an Extract. It was intitled, A Declaration to all his loving Subjects concerning lawful Sports to be uſed upon Sundays after Evening Prayers ended, and upon Holidays.

King's Declaration concerning Sports and Paſtimes on Sundays.

'It declared, that King James in his late 'Progreſs through Lancaſhire (from Scotland) rebuked ſome Puritans and preciſe 'People, for prohibiting and unlawfully puniſhing of his good People, for uſing their 'lawful Recreations and honeſt Exerciſes 'upon Sundays and other Holidays, after 'the Service of the Afternoon; which Prohibition cannot but produce two Evils, 'the one the hindring the Converſion of 'many Papiſts, whom their Prieſts will 'hereby take occaſion to vex, perſuading 'them that no honeſt Mirth or Recreation 'is lawful or tolerable in the Religion 'which the King profeſſeth; the other, the 'barring the common and meaner ſort of 'People from uſing ſuch Exerciſes, as may 'make their Bodies able for War, when his

* After it was publiſh'd, the Lord Chief-Juſtice Richardſon returning from his laſt Weſtern Circuit, was again ſummoned before the King and Council, for not effectually revoking the Order, by which means the Presbyterians ſtill continued to forbid their Servants to play, to go to Alehouſes, or uſe any publick Recreation on Sundays after Divine Service. And he was ſo reprimanded by Archbiſhop Laud, ſays my Author, that when he came from the Council-Board, the Earl of Dorſet meeting him, and ſeeing the Tears in his Eyes, ask'd how he did? To which the Judge replied, Very ill, my Lord, for I am like to be choaked with the Archbiſhop's Lawn-Sleeves. And for this Cauſe alone, he was by Laud's means, to his great Grief and Loſs, put from riding the Weſtern, and forced to go the Eſſex Circuit, reputed the meaneſt of all others, and which no Juſtice uſed to ride but the puny Judge or Serjeant.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

'his Majeſty, or his Succeſſors, ſhall have occaſion to uſe them: For when ſhall the common People have Leiſure to exerciſe, if not upon the Sundays and Holidays, ſince they muſt apply to their Labour, and win their Living in all Working-days? 'Twas therefore the King's expreſs Pleaſure, that no lawful Recreation ſhould be barred to the good People, which did not tend to the Breach of the Laws and Canons of the Church; ſuch as Dancing, either Men or Women, Archery for Men, Leaping, Vaulting, or other ſuch harmleſs Recreation; nor from having of May-Games, Whitſun-Ales, and Morrice-Dances, and the ſetting up of May-Poles, and other Sports therewith uſed, ſo as the ſame be had in convenient time, without Impediment or Neglect of Divine Service; and that Women ſhould have leave to carry Ruſhes to the Church for adorning it, according to their old Cuſtom; but his Majeſty prohibited all unlawful Games on Sundays, ſuch as Bear and Bull-baitings, Interludes, and Bowling. All known Recuſants were barred from this liberty, as were others who did not repair to their own Pariſh-Church before their going to the ſaid Recreations; and every Pariſh was to uſe ſuch Recreations by itſelf, during which the People were to carry or uſe no offenſive Weapon.

'Now therefore, ſays King Charles, in his Declaration, dated October 18, 1633, at Weſtminſter, out of a like pious Care for the Service of God, and for ſuppreſſing of any Humours that oppoſe Truth, and for the Eaſe, Comfort, and Recreation of his well-deſerving People, his Majeſty doth ratify and publiſh this his bleſſed Father's Declaration; the rather becauſe of late in ſome Counties of the Kingdom, his Majeſty finds that, under pretence of taking away Abuſes, there hath been a general Forbidding, not only of ordinary Meetings, but of the Feaſts of the Dedication of Churches commonly called Wakes. Now his Majeſty's expreſs Will and Pleaſure is, that theſe Feaſts, with others, ſhall be obſerved, &c.'

RUSHWORTH proves from divers Inſtances, that this Declaration was a Snare to many Miniſters, very conformable to the Church of England, becauſe for refuſing to read the ſame publickly in the Church, as they were required, many were ſuſpended, and others ſilenced from Preaching; for however innocent, nay ſeaſonable and popular it was thought in the Reign of King James I. it was now reſented by many ſober People, not only as needleſs, but even irreligious and prophane; which ſhews that Political Phyſick in one Reign may be Poyſon in another.

CHARLES I. A°. 1633.

Diſputes about placing the Communion-Table in Churches.

ANOTHER Topick which occaſioned a Diſpute, was placing the Communion-Table. In this Month of October, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, as Ordinaries of St. Gregory's Church, which ſtood cloſe to the Wall of the Cathedral, removed the Communion-Table from the middle of the Chancel, where it had long ſtood, to the upper end, where they placed it Altar-wiſe, for theſe two Reaſons; 1. Becauſe the Communion-Tables were ſo placed in the King's Chapel, and all Cathedrals, to which it was fit all other Churches ſhould conform. 2. Becauſe when the Table ſtood in the middle of the Chancel, ſeveral ſcandalous Indecencies were committed, People leaning thereon at the time of Sermon, or putting their Hats on it. This laſt Reaſon, added to the great Care that was taken about kneeling at the Sacrament, cauſed many to believe, that the ſtriving to inſpire ſuch an extraordinary Reſpect for the Communion-Table, and the giving it always the Name of Altar, was not without Deſign. And therefore ſome of the Pariſhioners of St. Gregory's complain'd of this Removal, by Appeal to the Court of the Arches, where they had Advocates to plead, that the Book of Common-Prayer, and the 82d Canon, did give liberty to place the Communion-Table, where it may ſtand with moſt Convenience, which a general Cuſtom had determined to be in the Body of the Church, or towards the bottom of the Chancel; but the Council having notice of it, prevented the Sentence by an Order to the Dean of the Arches, to confirm by his Authority what had been done in St. Gregory's Church. A few days after, viz. Nov. 3. the King being preſent in Council, cauſed this Affair to be debated, and approving the Act of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, he gave Commandment, that if thoſe Pariſhioners did proceed in their Appeal, the Dean of the Arches, (who was then attending at the Hearing of the Cauſe) ſhould caſt them, and confirm what was done. This Sentence given by the King's Sovereign Authority, without ſtaying for the Judgment of the Court, to whoſe Cognizance this Matter properly belonged, was a Source of Apprehenſions to many Miniſters and Congregations, who were not willing to comply with it. There was ſcarce a Church in England, except the Cathedrals, and the King's Chapel, where the Communion-Table was placed Altar-wiſe, at the upper end of the Chancel. But after the King had confirmed the Removal of it in St. Gregory's Church, the like Diſputes aroſe in numberleſs Places, and the High Commiſſion had frequent Occaſions to puniſh the Miniſters, who were ſuſpected to have too little Zeal for the Church of England: So that,

that, says Rupin, as after the Reformation, the Altars were changed into Communion-Tables, and placed in the middle of the Chancel, to avoid Superstition; so now many imagined that the Tables were to be turn'd again into Altars, in order to revive a superstitious Worship.

In the MSS. left by Archbishop Tenniſon, there are three or four Papers written upon this occasion; 1. Reasons why the Communion-Table in every Church should be set close under the East Window or Wall, with the Ends North and South, and be rail'd in. 2. The Arguments used against placing the Communion-Table Altar-wise in the Parish of St. Gregory's, London. 3. The Reasons given by the Church-Wardens of Beckington (near Frome) in Somersetshire, for their Refusal to remove the Communion-Table from the Place it had stood in since the Reformation; for which Refusal the said Church-Wardens were excommunicated by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and tho' they appealed to the Arches Court, and petitioned the King, they stood excommunicated a whole Year, and were afterwards thrown into the common Goal, from whence they were at length released by the King, upon their publick Submission and Penance in three Parish Churches.

Penance by the Church-Wardens of Beckington.

A°. 1634. A Masquerade of the Lawyers.

THE 2d of February (1634) which was Candlemas Day *, was distinguished by a very costly and splendid Compliment to the King and Queen, in the most famous Masque, perform'd at Whitehall, that ever was seen; which is the more remarkable for that two of the Managers of it were Mr. Selden and Mr. Whitelock, the latter of whom has given a very ample Account of it in his Memorials; by which it appears, that the Shew, the Musick, the Dancing were all incomparable, and that the Queen danced in Person; and 'tis said by Whitelock, that these Societies of Lawyers put themselves to 21,000 l. Charge †, purely to take off the Prejudice, which the Writings of their Brother Prynne might have given the Court against their Profession.

Proceedings against Prynne the Lawyer for his Histrio-Mastix.

THE Case was this, William Prynne, Esq; of Lincolns-Inn, Barrister, had taken it into his Head to write a Folio of above a Thousand Pages, intitled, Histrio-Mastix. The Author's main Drift was to shew, that Stage-Plays, Balls, and Masques were unlawful and antichristian; and in the Table of the Book there was this Reference, Women Actors notorious Whores, relating, as he affirmed, to some Women Actors therein mentioned.

The Court being at this time fond of these Entertainments, it happened about six Weeks after, that the Queen herself acted a Part in a Pastoral at Somerset-House; and then Bishop Laud, and other Prelates whom Prynne had anger'd by his Tracts against Arminianism and the Jurisdiction of the Bishops, shewed Prynne's Book against Plays to the King, pointing particularly to that Passage in the Table, Women Actors notorious Whores: and they informed the King and Queen, that Prynne had purposely writ this Book against the Queen and her Pastoral, tho' it was published, as Whitelock says, six Weeks before that Pastoral was acted. Yet the King and Queen directed nothing against him till the 27th of June 1632, when his Majesty, at the Instigation of Laud, sent for Dr. Peter Heylin (who bore Prynne a great Spite for confuting some of his Doctrines) to the Council-Table to sift Prynne's Book, and to collect all the scandalous Passages; which Laud carrying to the Attorney-General, Noy, on a Sunday Morning, he charg'd him to prosecute Prynne for this Book; which he did accordingly, with great Severity in the Star-chamber. It was pretended, his Aim in general was to make it appear, that there was a Design form'd to reduce Religion to a kind of Paganism, in order to make way for Popery. This wicked Attempt was represented by the King's Counsel in the blackest Colours they could possibly give it. The Cause came on in the Star-chamber, Feb. 7, 1634, and after a solemn Hearing, which held several Days, the Book was condemn'd to be burnt by the common Hangman, a Thing till then unusual in England; and seven Sentences were pass'd upon the Author, viz. 1. To be expell'd from Lincolns-Inn; 2. Disabled to practise; 3. Degraded of his Degree in the University of Oxford; 4. Set in the Pillory in Westminster and Cheapside; 5. To have an Ear cut off at each Place; 6. To be imprison'd for Life; 7. And to pay a Fine of 5000 l. The Publisher, Michael Sparkes, who was also the Printer of the Book, was fined 500 l. and Mr. Buckner, Archbishop Abbot's Chaplain, who licensed it, 50 l. Mean time, the Bishops and Lords in the Star-chamber sent Prynne to the Tower; but before the Fine was estreated, Laud, now Archbishop of Canterbury, and other High Commissioners, by their Warrant, caused Prynne's Books and Papers to be seiz'd at his Lodgings, and had them inspected, to fish for more Scandal.

And

* And on Shrove-Tuesday the 18th of February, at the Request of the Queen, who desired to see it again, another was perform'd at Merchant-Taylors Hall, where Alderman Freeman then kept his Mayoralty, to the great Content of the Court and the Citizens, and to the no less Charge of the Lord Mayor.

† Whitelock says, some of the Musicians had 100 l. a-piece for their Performance, that the whole Charge of the Musick came to 1000 l. that the Clothes of the Horsemen, and the Liveries of the Pages and Lackeys, which were at their own particular Charge, were reckoned at 100 l. a Suit at the least; so that 100 of those Suits amounted to 10,000 l.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Archbiſhop's Zeal for reforming Engliſh Factories.

Archbiſhop Laud being ſollicitous to ſettle the regular Worſhip of the Church of England in our Factories abroad, had obtained an Order of Council the firſt of October laſt, injoining a ſtrict Obſervation of the Engliſh Liturgy, and Rites and Ceremonies: Which not being much regarded by the Merchants, the Archbiſhop now preſented ſome Propoſitions to the Council concerning Engliſh Preachers employed in Foreign Parts; and wrote a Letter dated June 17, to the Factory at Delft, acquainting them, 'that it was his Majeſty's expreſs Com-'mand, that both they, and all Merchants 'reſiding in thoſe Parts beyond the Seas, 'ſhould conform themſelves to the Doc-'trine, Diſcipline and Worſhip ſettled in the 'Church of England.

Their Majeſties Progreſs.

THE King and Queen made a Progreſs this Summer North of Trent, and were ſo magnificently treated by the Earl, afterwards Duke of Newcaſtle, that it was computed the Entertainment which this noble Lord gave his Majeſty laſt Year at Welbeck, and now at Bolſover Caſtle in Derbyſhire, coſt him at leaſt 10,000 l. Ruſhworth takes notice how he afterwards adventured his Life and Fortune for the King in the Civil Wars; and, that when his Eſtate was ſold by the Parliament as forfeited, there was raiſed out of the Sale of it 111,593 l. notwithſtanding the Loſſes which both his Real and Perſonal Eſtate had ſuffered during thoſe troubleſome Times.

Sir Edward Coke's Death.

IN September, died that long abdicated Judge, the Oracle of the Engliſh Law, Sir Edward Coke, Knight; who had been Lord Chief Juſtice of England, a Perſon of very great Reputation among the People, but of leſs at Court, whoſe illegal Proceedings he earneſtly oppoſed in Parliament, being uſually a Member of the Houſe of Commons after he was put out of Affairs. He was valued as a juſt impartial Magiſtrate, and his Inſtitutes, and other Works, have eternized his Learning and Induſtry.

Laud's Injunctions to the French and Dutch Churches.

ABOUT the latter End of this Year, Archbiſhop Laud, in his Metropolitical Viſitation, ſummoned the Miniſters and Elders of the Dutch and French Churches, in his Province, to appear before Sir Nathaniel Brent, his Vicar-General, who, by his Order did, on the nineteenth of December, deliver them theſe two Injunctions, which had been approved of by the King.

1. THAT all the Natives of the Dutch and Walloon Congregations, in his Grace's Dioceſe, ſhould repair to their own Pariſh Churches for Divine Service, and perform all the Duties and Payments required in that behalf.

2. THAT the Miniſters and all others of the Walloon Congregations, who were not Natives, and born Subjects of the King's Majeſty, or any other Strangers that ſhould come over to them, while they remain'd Strangers, might have and uſe their own Diſcipline as formerly: yet it was thought fit, that the Engliſh Liturgy ſhould be tranſlated into French and Dutch, for the better ſettling of their Children in the Engliſh Government. CHARLES I. A°. 1634.

THE Reader muſt know, that the Dutch, the Walloons, and the French, who had taken Refuge in England ſince the Reign of Edward VI. had obtained ſundry Privileges from the former Kings, and particularly the Liberty of celebrating Divine Service after their own Manner, i. e. Presbyterian; and formed ſeveral Congregations, both at London and other Parts of the Kingdom: But by theſe Injunctions, Laud not only impoſed upon the foreign Churches a Liturgy which they did not approve of, but reduced thoſe Congregations almoſt to nothing, becauſe he excluded all that were born in the Kingdom, i. e. all the Deſcendants of ſuch as fled hither in the Reign of King Edward VI. and conſequently there could be but a very few left of thoſe born out of the Kingdom.

UPON the 21ſt of February, next Year, the Dutch and Walloon Churches at Norwich, where they had ſet up the Woollen Manufacture, preſented a Petition to their Biſhop Wren, ſetting forth, that the Archbiſhop's Injunctions were contrary not only to ſeveral Orders of the Council heretofore given in favour of their Congregations, but alſo to the Privileges granted to them by the Kings of England ſince they firſt ſettled here. The Biſhop of Norwich not returning a favourable Anſwer to their Petition, they applied to the Archbiſhop himſelf, who anſwered them by Letter dated the nineteenth of Auguſt following, that his Majeſty was reſolved his Inſtructions ſhould ſtand, and that Obedience ſhould be yielded to them by all thoſe that were born in England after the firſt Deſcent; concluding his Letter with theſe Words: And thus I have given you an Anſwer fairly in all your Particulars, and do expect all Obedience and Conformity to my Inſtructions; which if you ſhall perform, the State will have Occaſion to ſee how ready you are to practiſe the Obedience which you teach: And for my part, I doubt not but yourſelves, or your Poſterity at leaſt, ſhall have cauſe to thank both the State and the Church for this Care taken of you; but if you refuſe (as you have no Cauſe to do, and I hope you will not) I ſhall then proceed againſt the Natives according to the Laws and Canons Eccleſiaſtical. A°. 1635. Petition againſt them to the Archbiſhop, &c. The Archbiſhop's Anſwer.

RUSHWORTH tells us, that by theſe Injunctions the Foreign Churches here were moleſted and diſquieted ſeveral Years together for refuſing Conformity, and we learn from other Hiſtories, that Thouſands of the induſtrious Refugees were, by Laud's Threats, frightened out of Norfolk and Suffolk; and that one hundred and forty of the principal Woollen Manufacturers who ſupplied Hamburgh, and all the Countries within the Sound, fled to the United Provinces from the Cruelties of the Spiritual Courts, and ſet up the ſame Manufactures there, which the Dutch knew not of before, and have ever ſince carried on that Trade to our unſpeakable Loſs.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Reproaches againſt the Archbiſhop.

GREAT Offence was taken againſt Laud by the Presbyterians, who publiſhed ſeveral Libels againſt him, taking notice of all the Innovations he had brought into the Church as ſo many Steps to Popery, and upbraiding him with the Pictures he had ſet up in the Windows of his Chapel at Lambeth and Croydon, drawn according to the Roman Miſſal; particularly that of God the Father, in form of a little old Man; for which, among other Things, he was afterwards impeached in the Houſe of Commons.

Scots Biſhops Letter to him about the Liturgy.

ON the ſecond of April, the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and other Scots Biſhops, ſent the Biſhop of Roſs over with a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, acquainting him of the Pains they were taking to ſettle a Conformity in the Churches, but that his Grace was ſenſible it muſt be a Work of Time. The Liturgy for Scotland was not finiſhed 'till Sept. 28, but the Book of Canons was by the King referred to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of London; after whoſe Approbation, it was confirmed by royal Authority under the Great Seal, the twenty-third of May, and ſent back to be inforced in the Nature of Royal Inſtructions. But the Scots raiſed ſo many Objections againſt them, that they could never be brought to a ſettled Uſe and Practice. Farther Advice was ſent in a Letter of the tenth of November, from Archbiſhop Laud to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews; Laud's Letters to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, &c.

That for all the Buſineſs of that Church, in future they were immutably to hold this Rule, that they were privately to acquaint the Earl of Traquair with every Matter before it was propoſed in public; and that the Earl had aſſured the King, in his Preſence, that he will ſtrictly obſerve a Correſpondence with them, and faithfully do all good Offices for the Church, according to the Commands he ſhould receive from the King: which mutual Relation between the Earl of Traquair and them was to be kept very ſecret.

AND in another Letter of the firſt of December he adviſes the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, 'That the King was much 'diſpleaſed with the Biſhop of Aberdeen 'for allowing a public Faſt through his 'Dioceſe to be kept upon the Lord's-Day; 'and that it was his Majeſty's Will, that 'no Biſhops there ſhould preſume to com-'mand or ſuffer any Faſt to be kept on 'that or any other Day, without the ſpe-'cial Leave and Command of the King; 'and, that if the Canons were not already 'printed, they ſhould make one for the 'Purpoſe againſt this unworthy Cuſtom.'

THESE Advices and Orders, however juſt and ſeaſonable, raiſed ſome uneaſy Jealouſies even amongſt the Scots Biſhops themſelves, as if they interfered with the Liberty of their National Church; and they were ſtill more offenſive to the People, who hated to receive Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline from England; and eſpecially from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who ſeemed to them by this means to affect a Britiſh Primacy.

Preaching againſt Innovations.

MEAN time many of the Calviniſtical Divines ſhewed a high Spirit of Impatience at theſe Proceedings. In November, Mr. Samuel Ward, a Miniſter in Ipſwich, preached againſt bowing at the Name of Jeſus, and againſt the King's Book of Sports, ſaying, That the Church of England was ready to ring Changes in Religion, and that the Goſpel ſtood on Tip-toe, ready to be gone. For this he was cenſured and ſuſpended in the High-Commiſſion, and injoined Public Recantation; for Refuſal of which, he was committed to Priſon, where he lay a long time.

AND Mr. Charles Chauncey, Miniſter of Ware in Hertfordſhire, a pious and learned Divine, of an ancient Family in that County, preaching againſt Arminianiſm, Atheiſm, Hereſy, Popery and Idolatry, and particularly for oppoſing the making of a Rail about the Communion-Table in that Church, and calling it an Innovation and Snare to Men's Conſciences; was brought into the High-Commiſſion Court, where he was cenſured for Contempt of Eccleſiaſtical Government and raiſing a Schiſm, ſuſpended from his Miniſtry, condemned in great Coſts of Suit, and to be impriſoned 'till he paid them, and to make a ſolemn Recantation of his Crime in open Court; to which he conſented, and then the Archbiſhop diſmiſſed him with a ſevere Admonition *.

SEVERAL Proclamations having been publiſhed, commanding the Reſidence of

* His Sufferings afterwards obliged him to remove to New-England, and they were by the ſame perſecuting Spirit continued in his Family. For his Son Dr. Ichabod Chauncey, who was Chaplain to Sir Edward Harley's Regiment, when he was Governor of Dunkirk, was outed of all Church-Preferment by the Bartholomew-Act, and drove with his Family to Holland, from whence in a Time of Toleration, he returned and practiſed Phyſic at Briſtol, with good ſucceſs.

Prosecutions in the Star-Chamber against the Nobility and Gentry for coming up to live in London.

the Nobility and Gentry in their respective Counties for the better Defence of the Realm, and Support of the meaner Sort of People; an Information was exhibited this Year, on the twenty-first of April, in the Star-Chamber, against several Lords and Ladies, and about thirty Knights, and one hundred Esquires, whose Names may be seen in Rushworth, for residing in Town contrary to the said Proclamations; who were all forced to make their peace as well as they could, by Fines and Compositions.

And against Sir James Bagg, for Words spoken of the Lord Treasurer.

AND on the tenth of November, an Information was filed in the same Court against one Sir James Bagg, for saying of the late Lord-Treasurer Weston, Earl of Portland, I have laid many a thousand Pounds under his Pillow. The Queen was present at his Trial, and the Lord Chief Justice Finch fined him 5000 l. to the King, and Imprisonment in the Tower during his Majesty's Pleasure; in which Sentence he was seconded by Archbishop Laud, tho' Lord Cottington, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Earl of Dorset, were of opinion that he ought to be acquitted; it appearing by the Trial, which the Reader may see at large in Rushworth, That the Words were liable to a more favourable Construction than the Court put upon them. Upon the whole, however, the Votes of the Judges being equal, the Lord-Keeper Coventry's casting Vote gave it against Bagg; but by the King's Command the Sentence was not registered.

Old Part brought to Court.

IN September, the Earl of Arundel brought up to London, out of Shropshire, one Thomas Parr, the Wonder of his Time, who was above an hundred and fifty-two Years of Age, he being born in the last Year of the Reign of Edward IV. and on Michaelmas-day his Lordship shewed him to the King and the Nobility; but he died soon after, tho' it was thought he would have survived some Years longer, if he had not been incommoded by the Fatigue of so great a Journey, and the Change of Air and his usual Diet.

Palatine Princes arrival.

IN November, Charles, Prince Elector Palatine, came over to sollicit his Royal Uncle to promote his Restoration. On the twenty-second he came to the King at Whitehall, and on Christmas-day he received the Communion at that Palace with his Majesty.

HIS younger Brother, Prince Robert, or Rupert, came over also in December, and they were both entertained with great Civility at the King's Palace; but Ceremony and Courtesy was all they obtained by the Visit.

Birth of the Princess Elizabeth.

ON the twenty-eighth of the same Month, the Queen was brought to-bed of a second Daughter, (who was christened Elizabeth, by Archbishop Laud, on the second of January) on which Occasion the States of Holland sent a solemn Embassy hither with a noble Present of a massy Piece of Amber-grease, two fair China Basons, almost transparent, a Clock said to be the Workmanship of the Emperor Rudolphus, besides four exquisite Pieces of Painting, by those two famous Painters, Tintoret and Titian.

CHARLES I. A°. 1635.

THE twenty-eighth of February this Year, Dr. Roger Manwaring, so obnoxious to former Parliaments, (of whose Proceedings against him we gave a large Account under the Article of Loans, in our Extract of the eighteenth Tome of the Fœdera) was consecrated Bishop of St. David's, by Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury.

A°. 1636. Manwaring made a Bishop.

AND on the sixth of March following, Dr. William Juxon, Bishop of London, who was a keen Sportsman, and is said to have kept the best Pack of Hounds in England, was, by Laud's Procurement, preferred to the great Office of Lord-Treasurer, (it having been in Commission ever since the Death of the Earl of Portland, who died March 13, 1635.) by which most of the Courtiers, and especially the Nobility, thought themselves in a particular manner injured, no Churchman having had that great Office since the Time of Henry VII.

And Juxon, Lord Treasurer.

THE Reader will perceive, that the History we have given of the two last Years is much shorter than the Accounts of the Years preceding; but it is hoped, he will find that Defect amply supplied in the following Extract of this nineteenth Tome of the Fœdera, which abounds with Acts of one kind or another, relating to Ship-Money, Monopolies, &c. and the like Projects, for raising Money, which were the chief Business of those Years. And as this, which is the last Tome of the Fœdera hitherto printed, goes no farther than the Entrance of the Year 1636, we are obliged to stop there too, according to Mr. Rapin's Plan; in pursuance of which, we shall proceed with the History of England, as we have done hitherto, as soon as any other Tomes of the Fœdera come abroad, that Collection of Records being the grand Basis of this Work.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. Pag. 4.

'1. A Proclamation declaring his Majesty's Pleasure, that the English Soldiers 'lately employed at Sea in his Service, and 'since paid off and discharged, do return 'to the Places mentioned in their Passes, and 'there follow their honest Vocations 'till 'his Majesty has farther Occasion for 'their Service. It is dated at Whitehall the 'fifteenth of November 1628.'

113. 2. A Proclamation requiring all English and Scots Soldiers that were returned from from the Service of the Dutch, to repair to their reſpective Habitations, to prevent their being burdenſome to the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, &c. Dated at Weſtminſter, December 27, 1629.

IT charges all Magiſtrates to favour their Paſſage through their ſeveral Towns and Diſtricts, by treating them with all charitable Reſpect, due to Men who have faithfully ſerved the Allies of their Prince and Country.

309. 3. A ſpecial Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to the Company of Armourers, &c. for ſurveying the Armours, Arms, &c. of the Trained-Bands; and for ſettling the Rates and Prices of the ſame. Dated June 29, 1631.

IT contains Directions not only for the Survey, but for the new making, altering, amending, dreſſing, repairing, proving and ſtamping of Armour, Guns, Pikes, and Bandaliers, both of the common Arms, and Arms of the Trained-Bands throughout England and Wales. This was a neceſſary Precaution, that the Government might not be to ſeek for Arms in foreign Parts upon an Emergency, and be obliged to pay dear and uncertain Rates for them to other Princes and States.

314. '4. A Schedule (annex'd to the above 'Commiſſion) containing the new Rates 'and Prices of the ſeveral Parts and whole 'Arms both for Horſe and Foot, through-'out the Kingdom, ſet down and eſtabliſh-'ed by the Right Honourable the Lords 'Committees of the Council of War, as 'every of the ſaid Arms may be afforded 'at London by the Armourers, Gun-Ma-'kers, Pike-Makers, and Bandalier-Ma-'kers, according to the Intent of the ſaid 'Commiſſion.'

Ruſhworth ſays, That on July 27, there came out by Order of Council, printed Inſtructions for Muſters and Arms, and the Uſe thereof, upon occaſion of the Trained-Bands of ſeveral Counties being ordered to march to the Sea-Coaſts for Defence of the Kingdom: That the Rates to be paid to the Muſter-Maſter of each County, were thought a Grievance, tho' grounded upon Precedent in the Reigns of King James and Queen Elizabeth. And that ſeveral Perſons refuſing to pay the Muſter-Maſters Aſſeſſments, were ſent for up by Meſſengers, to the Council-Table, where moſt of them ſubmitted; but the misfortune was, that under a Jealouſy of new Impoſitions, not much unlike the late Clamour that was raiſed againſt a General Exciſe, never intended, People were alarmed and affrighted at the calling for any old Cuſtom, or Tribute.

398. '5. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Lord-'Mayor of London, &c. to ſurvey all 'Grounds within two Miles of the City, 'where the Archers were, time out of 'mind, allow'd to ſhoot; and if they 'found that Liberty abridged, by reaſon 'of any Ditching, Hedging, or Incloſures, 'to reduce ſuch Cloſes or Fields to their 'former State. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, 'December 20, 1632.

CHARLES I.

'6. Another to the Maſter of the Ord-692. 'nance, &c. to reſerve Arms in the Tower 'for at leaſt 10000 Men, Horſe and Foot; 'and to ſell the ſurplus for the uſe of the 'Militia in the Country. Dated Oct. 5, '1635, at Weſtminſter.'

Artillery.

'1. A Commiſſion to Sir Sackvil Crow 89. 'Knt. to caſt 610 great Guns in the Foreſt 'of Deane, and to have them ready on 'Tower-hill by the Feaſt of All-Saints 'next enſuing the Date of the Commiſſion, 'which is June 20, 1629.

'2. Another under the Privy-Seal, to 106. 'take a Survey of the Armour and Am-'munition in the Tower of London, &c. 'Dated at Weſtminſter, Octob. 13.'

'There's another, dated March 8, 1633. 408.

3. A Proclamation to revoke a Commiſſion formerly granted to enforce Archery and Shooting with long Bows. Dated Auguſt 23, 1631. 316.

THIS was a Commiſſion which the King had granted under the Great Seal, on the 4th of April in the fourth Year of his Reign, to Timothy Taylor, John Hubert, Henry Hubert, and Jeffery le Neve Eſq; for inforcing the execution of the Statute for Archery, 33 Henry VIII. It was now revoked, by reaſon of divers Exactions and other unſufferable Abuſes committed under colour of it.

THE great Decay of the ancient, laudable and uſeful Exerciſe of Archery and Shooting in the Long-Bow, whereby great Victories had heretofore been atchieved by the Engliſh Nation, and of which good Uſe might ſtill be made in time of War, and the good Means by ſuch a commendable and healthful Recreation to keep Men from other idle Sports, and unlawful Plays and Games, the common Nurſeries of many hateful Vices, Miſchiefs and Diſorders in this Realm, were aſſigned as the Motives to the ſaid Commiſſion.

4. A Proclamation for the Uſe of the 469. Bow and Pike together in Military Diſcipline. Sign'd by the King at Oatelands, Auguſt 12, 1633.

IT recommends the Exerciſe of Shooting to be a Means to preſerve Health, Strength and Agility of Body, and to avoid Idleneſs, unlawful Diſports, Drunkenneſs, and the like Enormities and Diſorders, which are too frequent among the People. It declares alſo that William Nead, an ancient Archer, had preſented to his Majeſty a warlike Invention of the Uſe of the Bow with the Pike together, whereby every Pikeman might alſo be a Bowman. And that the ſaid William Nead and his Son were authorized under the Great-Seal, to teach and exerciſe the Subjects therein.

552. 5. A Grant of a Patent under the Privy-Seal to William Nead and his Son, for the ſole making of Engines for affixing the Bow and the Pike together, and for making a new Quiver of Arrows of his own Invention, for the Term of fourteen Years from the 16*th of* May, 1634. Dated at Weſtminſter.

THE Preamble ſays, that he had began to teach the Exerciſe to the Artillery-Company, and that it had been approved by the King and Council.

Books.

26. 1. A Proclamation by the King at Whitehall, January 17, 1629, for ſuppreſſing the Book intituled Appello Cæſarem, or an Appeal to Cæſar.

THIS is the Proclamation referr'd to in the Extract of the XVIIIth Tome, under the Article CHURCH.

IT not only ordered the Books to be delivered to the Biſhop or Chancellor of the reſpective Dioceſe, or to the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor of the reſpective Univerſity; but declared that if Men renew'd ſuch Diſputes by reading, preaching, or making Books pro or con, they and their Books ſhall be dealt with in ſuch a manner, that they ſhall repent it.

153. 2. A Privilege under the Privy-Seal granted to Clement Cotton, for the ſole printing and ſale of his Concordance to the Bible for twenty-one Years from the 16*th of* April 1630.

IT was the firſt Concordance or Table to the laſt Tranſlation of the Bible, and no other was to be bound up with it during the ſaid Term.

161. 3. A Licence of the like nature to Paul Willet A. M. for the ſole printing and ſale of a Book written by his Father Dr. Willet, intitled Synopſis Papiſmi, which was dedicated four ſeveral times to the late King James. The Privilege was to laſt twenty-one Years from Apr. 26, 1630.

THIS was Dr. Andrew Willet, a Native of Ely, who was bred at Chriſt's-College in Cambridge, and not only wrote Synopſis Papiſmi, but ſeveral Commentaries on the Old and New Teſtament, and other Pieces; the Titles of moſt of which may be ſeen in the Bodleian or Oxford Catalogue. He ſucceeded his Father Thomas Willet in a Prebend of Ely, and the Rectory of Barley in Hertfordſhire, and dying Decemb. 4, 1621, was interr'd in the Chancel of the ſaid Church; to the School of which Place, he gave a Tenement, and 40 l. in Money. The Preamble to the Patent takes notice, that the Doctor was a very painful Man in behalf of the Church, and that his Synopſis had been approved by the Biſhops, held in great eſteem by the two Univerſities, and much deſired by all the Learned both of the Clergy and Laity throughout the King's Dominions; and that the Stationer who printed the firſt Edition, was either not able, or at leaſt not willing to diſburſe the Moneys neceſſary for Reprinting it; and that therefore few or none of the Books were to be had without paying a greater Price than many of the Clergy could afford to give.

CHARLES I.

198. 4. A Commiſſion to the Lord Privy-Seal and others, to ſee what Records, Writings, &c. belong to the King in the Cuſtody of Sir Robert Cotton at Weſtminſter. 'Tis dated at Canbury, October 2.

THIS Commiſſion was owing to a late Order of the Court of Star-Chamber, to the intent that ſuch Records and original Papers of State as were not fit to be kept by any private Perſon, might be diſpoſed of by the King at his pleaſure, for his better Service. The Commiſſioners were to be aſſiſted in their enquiry by Sir William Beecher Knt. and William Boſwel Eſq; two of the Clerks of the Council.

269. ‘ 5. A ſpecial Licence under the Privy-
‘ Seal (dated April 5, 1631.) to George- ‘ Rodolph Weckherlin, for the printing of ‘ ſeveral Books heretofore printed by the ‘ Company of Stationers at London, pur-
‘ ſuant to a Patent granted them by the late ‘ King James for twenty-one Years, which ‘ were juſt expiring. The ſaid Books are ‘ thus enumerated; Catonis Diſticha,
‘ Pub. Terentii Comœdiæ, Æſopi Fabulæ,
‘ Pub. Virgilii Maronis Opera, Ciceronis
‘ Opera, Ovidii Opera, Corderii Colloquia, ‘ Pueriles Sententiæ & Confabulationes,
‘ Lud. Vivis Colloquia, Eglogæ Mantu-
‘ ani, Epiſtolæ Sturmii. His Patent was
‘ for thirty-one Years, during which, none
‘ of thoſe Books were to be printed or ſold
‘ but by him or his Aſſigns, on the Pe‘ nalty of 40 s. for every Book.

366. ‘ 6. A ſpecial Grant to Thomas Far-
‘ naby, of the ſole Privilege for the Term
‘ of twenty-one Years of printing certain
‘ of the ancient Poets, with his Notes as ‘ they are therein enumerated, viz. Ju-
‘ venal and Perſius, Seneca's Tragedies,
‘ Martial's Epigrams, Lucan's Pharſalia, ‘ Florilegium Epigrammaton Græcorum,
‘ Index Rhetoricus, Phraſes Elegantio-
‘ res, Virgilii Opera, Petronius Arbiter,
‘ Ariſtotle's Ethics. The Patent is dated
‘ at Weſtminſter, April 6, 1632, under
‘ the Privy-Seal.'

THIS Farnaby, according to Mr. A. Wood's account, was the moſt noted School-Maſter of his time; who, for his Aſſiduity in promoting Learning, was a great Benefactor to that Republick. His Father was a Carpenter of London, his Grandfather Mayor of Truro in Cornwall, and his Great Grandfather an Italian Muſician. Our Patentee, who was born in London about 1575, became a Student in Merton-College in the beginning of 1590, and being a very hopeful Youth, was entertained by Mr. Thomas French, a learned Fellow of that Houſe, who made him his Poſt-Maſter, and conſequently his Servitor; it being the Faſhion then for Poſt-Maſters to ſerve thoſe Fellows from whom they received their Places.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

BUT young Farnaby being very wild, tho' of pregnant Parts, and having a Temptation to forſake both his Religion and Country, left the College abruptly, went into Spain, and was for ſome time educated there in a College of the Jeſuits. At length, being weary of their ſevere Diſcipline, he left them; and having a fancy to take a Ramble, went with his Friend Sir Francis Drake, and Sir John Hawkins, in their laſt Voyage, when he was about twenty Years old. 'Tis ſaid, that afterwards he turn'd Soldier in the Low-Countries, being more addicted to the Military than the Literary Life; and that being reduced to Poverty, he made a ſhift to be ſet aſhore in the Weſt part of England, where after wandering to-and-fro under the Name of Baynraf, (the Anagram of his Surname) he ſettled at Martock in Somerſetſhire, and taught the Grammar-School there for ſome time, with good ſucceſs; for in the Year 1646, when Mr. Charles Darby was call'd to teach that School, he found in that Town and Neighbourhood many that had been Mr. Farnaby's Scholars, ingenious Men and good Grammarians, even in their grey Heirs; among whom it was then reported, that when he landed in Cornwall, his Diſtreſſes made him ſtoop to teach Children the Horn-book. After he had got ſome Feathers at Martock, ſays Anthony Wood, he took his flight to London, and taught a long time in Goldſmith's-Rents behind Redcroſs-ſtreet, where were large Gardens and handſome Houſes, with great Accommodations for the young Noblemen and Gentlemen, his Pupils, who at one time amounted to at leaſt three hundred. In this time he was A. M. of Cambridge, and ſoon after incorporated at Oxford. At length, upon occaſion of ſome under-hand dealing of his Landlord's, and frequent Sickneſſes in the City, he removed about 1636, to Sevenoak in Kent, bought a little Eſtate at Otford, taught the Sons of ſeveral Noblemen, &c. (who boarded with him at Sevenoak) with great eſteem; grew rich, made a purchaſe there alſo, and another near Horſham in Suſſex.

OUR Author ſays, that in 1641, when the Proteſtation was urged to Mr. Farnaby, he ſaid, It was better to have one King than five hundred; and that afterwards being ſuſpected to have favoured the riſing of the Country about Tunbridge for the King, he was impriſoned firſt in Newgate, and thence removed on board a Ship, upon a Motion in the Houſe of Commons, to tranſport him to America; but it dropt, and he was ſent to Ely-Houſe in Holborn, where he was for about a Year before his Death, which happened in 1647, and he was buried in the Chancel of the Church at Sevenoak, with this Epitaph over his Grave:

CHARLES I.

P. M. Viri ornatiſſimi, Thomæ Farnabii Armigeri, cauſæ olim Regiæ, reique publicæ ſed literariæ vindicis acerrimi. Obiit 12 Junii 1647.

Vatibus hic ſacris qui lux Farnabius olim
Vate carens ſaxo nunc ſine luce jacet.

HE was the chief Grammarian, Rhetorician, Poet, Latiniſt, and Grecian of his time, and his School was ſo much frequented, that more Churchmen and Stateſmen iſſued from it, than from any School taught by one Man in England. He wrote ſeveral Pieces, beſides the above-mentioned Commentaries; for which, the Curious may conſult A. Wood,

'7. A Warrant to the Warden of the 520.
'Fleet, to deliver William Prynn, Author
'of the Hiſtrio-Maſtix, to the Lieutenant
'of the Tower. And,

'8. Another to the Lieutenant of the 'Tower, to receive and keep him Priſoner
'for Life. Both dated 24 Febr. 1634.

'9. A ſpecial Licence under the Privy- 642.
'Seal to Francis Holyoak Clerk, for the 'ſole printing and publiſhing, during the 'term of fourteen Years, of a Book by him
'compiled; with the Title of Dictiona-
'rium Etymologicum Latinum. Dated
'July 4, 1635, at Weſtminſter.'

THIS Clergyman, who was alſo an eminent School-Maſter, was born at Nether Whitacre in Warwickſhire, and had his Education about the Year 1582, in Queen's College in Oxford, in which City he taught School a little while, but moſtly in his own Country, where in February 1604, he was made Rector of Southam, and being eſteemed a grave and learned Perſon, was elected a Member of the Convocation of the Clergy, 1 Car. I. for whoſe Cauſe he was a conſiderable Sufferer in the time of the Civil War; and dying on the 13th of November 1653, was buried in St. Mary's Church in Warwick.

'10. A

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. 708.

'10. A Grant of a Privy-Seal to George 'Sandys Eſq; for the ſole printing and 'publiſhing his Paraphraſe upon David's 'Pſalms, &c. for the term of fourteen 'Years. Dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 4.'

THIS Poet generally liv'd at Caſwel near Witney in Oxfordſhire, at the Houſe of Sir Francis Wenman Bart. who married his Siſter. He was the Son of Edwin Archbiſhop of York, and born at Biſhop's-Thorp in that County. At eleven Years of Age he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, and enter'd in St. Mary's-Hall. In the Year 1610, he made the Tour of France, Italy, Turkey, Paleſtine, &c. and on his Return, publiſhed an Account of his Travels, and a Play, intitled Chriſt's Paſſion, a Tragedy, which is dated 1640, dedicated to King Charles, and tranſlated from the Latin of Hugo Grotius, with Annotations. It was excellently well done, and in 1688 reprinted. He alſo tranſlated the fifteen Books of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, (for which he had the Grant mentioned in p. 679.) and the firſt of Virgil's Æneid; died at Boxley-Abbey in Kent (being the Seat of his Nephew Mr. Wyat) in 1643, and was buried in the Chancel.

Churches and Chapels.

105. '1. A Proclamation for preventing the 'Decays of Churches and Chapels, for 'time to come.'

THE Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Archdeacons, &c. were hereby commanded not to rely upon the Church-Wardens Preſentments, but to take a view by themſelves, or their Officials, of all Churches and Chapels within their Juriſdiction. And, becauſe Collections had lately been very frequent, the Lord-Keeper was commanded to paſs no Letters-Patent for any Collection for repairing or rebuilding any Churches, or Chapels, or Steeples thereof, except the ſame be ſuddenly ſo damaged by Fire or Tempeſt, that the Inhabitants and Landholders are not able to repair the ſame without the Help of others. 'Tis dated at Hampton-Court, October 11, 1629.

171. '2. A ſpecial Commiſſion for the Re- 'pair of St. Paul's Cathedral at London. 'Dated at Canbury, April 10, 1631.

IT commanded, that all Moneys to be raiſed for maintaining or repairing this Fabrick ſhould be depoſited in the Chamber of London; and that Dr. Laud, the preſent Biſhop of London, (who offer'd 100 l. a Year for the ſaid Repair) and his Succeſſors in that See, ſhould keep a Book to regiſter the Names of all Subſcribers, and the Sums they were willing to contribute to the Work. Biſhop Laud, who had ſet his Heart upon the Strength and Beauty of this Cathedral, obtained this Commiſſion, which was to authorize the two Archbiſhops of England, the Biſhops of London and Wincheſter, all the Lords of the Council, the Lords Chief-Juſtices, the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, the Dean and Reſidentiaries of St. Paul's, &c. to purſue this Work. CHARLES I.

IT appears from this Commiſſion, that Dr. George Mountaine, the late Biſhop, had laid in good Store of large Purbeck Stones, at his own Expence, towards the Repairs.

Whitelock ſays, that new Images and Ornaments were now ſet up in this Cathedral, to the great diſcontent of many People.

'3. A Commiſſion or Warrant of the At- 389. 'torney-General, to ſurvey, and take an 'Inventory of the Books, Veſtments and 'Ornaments of the King's Chapel at White- 'hall. Dated October 5, 1632.'

'4. Another to the Archbiſhop of 630. 'Canterbury, &c. to viſit St. Peter's at 'Weſtminſter. Dated April 20, 1635, at 'Weſtminſter.'

THE Preamble ſets forth, how much this Church had ſuffered in its Revenue, in matters appertaining to Divine Service, and in many other reſpects, under the Adminiſtration of Williams Biſhop of Lincoln, who held the Deanery of Weſtminſter in Commendam. The Abuſes into which the Commiſſioners were hereby to enquire, were manifold, and the Dean was to be anſwerable for all.

Colonies.

'1. A Proclamation forbidding the diſ- 210. 'orderly Trading with the Salvages in 'New-England, eſpecially the furniſhing 'the Natives in thoſe and other parts of 'America, by the Engliſh, with Weapons, 'and other Habiliments of War. 'Tis 'dated at Whitehall, Novemb. 24, 1630. 1. A Proclamation by the King at 1. Whitehall, October 15, 1628, prohibiting the tranſportation of any Corn, Grain, Victuals,

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Victuals, Ordnance, Arms, or Ammunition into France by the Subjects of England, or of its Allies.

IN the Preamble, his Majesty takes notice how much his Mildness and Facility had been abused by the King of France; who, by two Declarations, one on the 14th of May 1627, and the other on the 12th of August following, both full of acrimony, had prohibited all Traffick and Commerce with England, to his own Subjects and all others of whatsoever Quality or Nation; whereas, on the other hand, his Majesty had not only forborn such publication hitherto, but had in a sort dispensed with the carrying of Warlike Provisions, and other prohibited Commodities to France.

2. '2. Another commanding his Subjects to 'forbear all Acts of Hostility or Violence 'to any Persons, Ships, or Goods belong-'ing to Algier, Tunis, Tetuan, Sallee, &c. 'Tis dated the 22d of the same Month.'

27. 3. A Commission under the King's own hand to Captain John Harrison, to treat with the Kings and Governors of Barbary, for the Redemption of English Captives, and settling Commerce there. 'Tis dated at Westminster, January 21, 1629.

THIS Captain had been employ'd in the King's Service in these parts before, and he was hereby authorized, in order to facilitate the said redemption, not only to carry over the Moorish Prisoners that were here, to be exchanged with the English Prisoners there, but to take along with him six pieces of Cannon, with the necessary Carriages, Shot, &c. as Presents to such Governors of their Towns and Forts, as he thought fit.

94. 4. A Proclamation against the Importation of French Wines in foreign Bottoms, before the first of February following. Dated at Nonsuch, July 7, 1629.

THIS Proclamation was owing to a Complaint of the French Merchants and Vintners in London, that the quantity of French Wines already imported, and remaining in their Cellars, owing to the liberty taken during the late Disturbance with France, was so great, that they could not make sale of those Wines, unless a farther Importation was for a time prohibited. Nevertheless, the French Merchants, Natural-born Subjects of the French King, were not debarr'd the liberty of importing Wines, or any other the natural Commodities of that Kingdom, in their own Ships and Vessels.

102. '5. A special Commission under the 'Privy-Seal to the Lord High-Treasurer, '&c. to fit out a sufficient Naval Force a-'gainst the Pyrates and Sea-Rovers of all 'Nations that disturbed the Commerce. 'Tis dated at Westminster, September 11, '1629.'

'6. A Proclamation touching the Com- CHARLES 'pany of Eastland Merchants trading to I. 'the Baltick, for restraining the Imports 129. 'and Exports to and from those Parts en-'tirely to the Company, Corn and Grain 'excepted, which was left free for Impor-'tation by any others.' 'Tis dated March 7, 1630, at Westminster; and commanded the execution of the Statutes of 5 Ric. II. 4 Hen. VII. and 32 Hen. VIII. which restrain'd the Subjects from shipping any Commodities in foreign Bottoms.

'7. A Proclamation for preventing the 155. 'Exportation of Wool, Woolfells, Yarn, 'Cornish Hair, Fullers-Earth, Wood-'Ashes, and Hides both tann'd and raw. 'Dated at Whitehall, April 17.'

IT appears by this Act, that Complaints had been made to the late King, that the Wools were very much sunk in value, and the Manufacture thereof in the vent it had abroad formerly; that upon enquiry into the Causes of it, he was convinced, that the Exportation of the above-mentioned Commodities was a great means of the foreign Manufacture of Cloth, and a principal impediment to the vent of English Cloths; and that the false and deceitful making, dying, and dressing home-made Cloth and Woollen-Stuff, did exceedingly disgrace and discredit the Drapery of this Kingdom, and hinder the vent of it; and that therefore he published a Proclamation on the 20th of July, in the twentieth Year of his Reign, prohibiting the Exportation of Wools, Cornish Hair, and the other Commodities above-mentioned, from England, Ireland and Wales, to any foreign Parts, or into the Kingdom of Scotland. King Charles's Act, whereby the said Proclamation was renewed for the further Encouragement of the Manufacture, enjoin'd, that all black Cloth and Stuffs for Mourning, be made only of English Wool, and strictly prohibited the Use of Logwood and Blockwood in the dying of any Cloth or Stuffs whatsoever.

'8. A special Commission under the 168. 'Privy-Seal, to Fabian Smith Esq; Agent 'in Russia, to transact and perform all 'Matters that he shall think proper for 'preserving the Amity, and supporting the 'Trade with that Country. 'Tis dated at 'Westminster, June 12.'

'19. A Proclamation prohibiting the 169. 'Exportation of Corn and Grain, from 'England and Wales, dated June 13, at 'Whitehall.'

The Weather had been so unseasonable, that a bad Harvest was expected, at the same time that there was an actual Scarcity in the neighbouring Kingdoms. The Proclamation concludes with an Order, for apprehending one Abraham, or Arthur

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Rutter, who, by counterfeiting of divers Licences, had been the Cauſe of the undue tranſporting of much Corn. There is another to inforce it, dated March 25, 1631.

205. ‘ 11. A ſpecial Licence, under the Privy-Seal, to two of the King's Coachmen, ‘ during their Lives, to import Coach-Horſes, Coach-Mares, and Coach Geldings, from beyond Sea, for the Uſe of the King, the Nobility and Gentry of this Realm, without paying any Cuſtom. It is dated November 15, at Weſtminſter.’

They were to import none under fourteen Hands high, and three Years of Age, nor above ſeven Years; and they were to ſell none, ſo imported, 'till the Maſter of the Horſe, or ſuch as he ſhould appoint, had ſeen whether they were fit for the King's Service.

283. 12. Another to Sir Thomas Badger, Maſter of the old Harriers; Sir Timothy Tyrrel, Maſter of the Buck-hounds; and Thomas Potts, Eſq; Maſter of the Privy Harriers, to have the ſole Exportation of as many Hounds, Beagles, or Hunting-Dogs, as they think fit; and to ſell, or otherwiſe diſpoſe of the ſame, without accounting for them to the King, or paying any Cuſtom or Duty, dated May 8.

335. ‘ 13. A Proclamation for the better Encouragement and Advancement of the ‘ Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, and for preventing the Exceſs of private Trade, ‘ dated at Weſtminſter, February 19, 1632.’

It recites the Wares and Merchandize licenſed to be exported and imported, and mentions the Size and Number of the Cheſts allowed by the Company to their Officers, for packing up their Goods. The ſaid Cheſts, of which the Commanders, Captains and Factors, were allowed four a-piece; the Maſters three a-piece, and every of the Purſers Mates, Maſters Mates, Boatſwains, Carpenters, Gunners, and Stewards, two a-piece; were to be four Feet long, one Foot and a half in breadth, and the ſame in depth.

337. 14. Another for enabling all his Majeſty's Subjects, Engliſh, or Scots, to trade within his ſeveral Dominions, without being further charged with Cuſtoms, or other Duties, than they of that Kingdom in which they trade, are liable to pay. Dated at Whitehall, February 2, 1632.

370. 15. A Privy-Seal of Protection to Sir Richard Young; Sir Kenelm Digby; George Kirk, Eſq; Nicholas Criſpe, and other Merchants; to whom the King had granted the ſole Trade, for thirty-one Years, to Guiney, Angola, and all the Coaſt of Africa, between Cape Blanco, in North Latitude 20, and the Cape of Good-Hope, in South Latitude 34, by Letters Patent, under the Great-Seal, bearing date the twenty-fifth of June laſt. This Protection is dated at Weſtminſter, April 23, 1632. CHARLES I. 386.

‘ 16. A ſpecial Licence, under the Privy-Seal, to the Governor and Company ‘ of Merchants of London, trading to ‘ the Eaſt-Indies. Dated at Canbury, ‘ September 25.’

In regard the Company was to trade this Year to Perſia, as well as the Indies, the King gave them a Liberty to take up, within this Realm, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, the Sum of 40,000 l. in foreign Gold, and to tranſport the ſame to the Eaſt-Indies, or Perſia, or both, as they ſhall think fit, for this preſent Year: And if they could not take up ſo much foreign Gold, they were allowed to make up what was wanting with Engliſh Gold, and tranſport the ſame, for their preſent ſupply in the ſaid intended Voyage. But they were forbid to tranſport ſo much Silver, out of the Sum of 100,000 l. of foreign Silver, which they were allowed to export in any one Year, as ſhould equal the Amount of the Gold which they ſhould then tranſport.

‘ 17. A Proclamation to reſtrain the Ex- 387. ‘ portation of Corn, Wool, Wool-Fells, ‘ Fullers-Earth, and Leather. Dated at ‘ Hampton-Court, September 30.’

It takes notice of the Practices of Corn-Maſters, and Hoarders of Corn, and of the Merchants, &c. to inhance the Prices of Corn and Grain, tho' the laſt was as plentiful a Harveſt as was almoſt ever known; and of the falſe Rumours ſpread of great Tranſportation of Corn, licenſed and authoriſed; the Authors of which ſcandalous Report, his Majeſty requires to be ſeverely puniſhed: And all Perſons who tranſported Corn, and the other Commodities above-mentioned, from Port to Port, within this Realm, were to give Bonds, with ſufficient Securities, reſident in the Kingdom, for whoſe Sufficiency, the Officers of the Cuſtoms taking the ſame were to be anſwerable; in the Condition of which Bonds the true Quantity of Corn and Fullers-Earth, and the other Commodities ſhipped on board, was to be ſpecified: And thoſe Cuſtomers, or other Officers, who acted by Deputies, or other Servants, were to be anſwerable for their Offences.

18. A ſpecial Warrant, under the Privy-Seal, to give licence to the Merchants of Flanders, living under the Dominion of Philip, King of Spain, to fetch our Gold and Silver, in Money, or otherwiſe, in return for their Merchandize, on the ſame Bottoms that brought their Goods, provided it be within one hundred Days after the unlading of the Goods, and that they do not carry off above 2000 l. Engliſh Money, in any one Ship. Dated at Weſtminſter, December 1. 396.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. 472.

19. A Commiſſion to Thomas Young, of London, Gent. to make new Diſcoveries in Virginia, and other adjacent Parts of America. Dated at Canbury, Sept. 23, 1633.

583. ‘ 20. A Proclamation prohibiting the ‘ Tranſportation of Woollen-Cloth, or ‘ other Woollen Commodities, to Germa- ‘ ny, or the Netherlands. Dated at White- ‘ hall, December 7, 1634.’ There was an Exception, as to the Mart and Staple Towns of the Fellowſhip of Merchant Adventurers, who were hereby allowed to admit into their Freedom, all Perſons dwelling in the City of London, exerciſing the Profeſſion of Merchandize, but not Shopkeepers, on paying 50 l. Fine, provided they took up their Freedom before Midſummer next. And they were allowed to admit into their Freedom, ſuch Perſons of the Out-Ports, exerciſing the Trade of Merchandize, on their paying 25 l. Fine, provided they took up their Freedom before Michaelmas next; and, that the Sons and Servants of Perſons ſo admitted, pay to the ſaid Fellowſhip, at their ſeveral Admiſſions, twenty Nobles a-piece; and, that Perſons admitted after the Days aforeſaid, pay double of the Fines before limited reſpectively,

651. ‘ 21. A Licence, under the Privy-Seal, ‘ for two Years, for a Collection through- ‘ out England, Scotland, and Ireland, for ‘ making a Harbour and Key, at Port-Pa- ‘ trick in Scotland. Dated at Canbury, ‘ Auguſt 4, 1635.’

It was computed that the Expence would amount to above 5000 l. in regard of the Violence of the Seas there, the Scarcity of Timber, and the great Rocks that were to be cut. This was reckoned a convenient Port, becauſe of its Situation near to the Point, where England and Scotland join towards Ireland, to which the Paſſage is but three or four Hours.

Councils.

278. ‘ 1. Letters Patent conſtituting a Coun- ‘ cil in the North of England, with a Com- ‘ miſſion of Oyer and Terminer, &c. Da- ‘ ted, December 15, 1628, at Weſtmin- ‘ ſter.’

Thomas, Viſcount Wentworth, was appointed Preſident of the ſaid Council, with more ample Powers, ſays Rapin, than any of his Predeceſſors were ever inveſted with. In this Commiſſion are no leſs than fifty-ſix Articles of Inſtructions, drawn up by the King's Order, to be obſerved by him and the reſt of the Council. Our Hiſtorian ſays, this was only a renewal of the Commiſſions granted in ſome former Reigns for eſtabliſhing this Northern Council, otherwiſe called the Court of York; which being one of the greateſt Grievances complained of by the Engliſh againſt Charles I. and one of the moſt noted Occaſions wherein that Prince diſcovered his Deſign to ſet up unlimited Power; it may be neceſſary to give a brief Account, from Mr. Rapin, of the Origin and Nature of this Council in the North, and how the King would have made uſe of it, to ſubject his People to a deſpotic Power. CHARLES I.

THERE being ſeveral Inſurrections in the North, upon the Suppreſſion of the leſſer Monaſteries, by King Henry VIII. he eſtabliſhed a Court of Juſtice, at York, under pretence of eaſing his poor Subjects, who had not wherewithal to go and proſecute their Suits in the Courts at Weſtminſter: But his real Intent was, that this Court ſhould have an eye upon the Lords and Gentlemen in the North, who were ſuſpected of a deſign to raiſe freſh Commotions; and, that they ſhould puniſh them on the Spot, as ſoon as they attempted it. The Juriſdiction of this Court extended over Yorkſhire, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmoreland, the County and City of Durham, the County and City of York, Carliſle, Kingſton upon Hull, Newcaſtle upon Tyne, and Berwick upon Tweed. Tho' it was no other than a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, it had an illegal Clauſe at the end, whereby the Council was impowered to hear all Cauſes, Real and Perſonal, in caſe either of the Parties was too poor to proſecute their Rights elſewhere, according to the Laws of the Land: And whenever the Commiſſion was renewed, which was upon every change of Preſident, or any Counſellor, the King ſent new Inſtructions, which tended to render the Court of York independent not only of the Courts of Weſtminſter, which were for the whole Kingdom, but even of all Sorts of Laws: So that it is evident, that by making the Power of this Court depend upon the King's Inſtructions, the Intent was, that its Deciſions ſhould not be made ſo much according to the Laws, as according to his Majeſty's private Orders.

IN the ſecond Commiſſion, which was granted by King James I. to Lord Sheffield, the Preſident of this Council, or Court, the Clauſes that they ſhould inquire per ſacramentum bonorum & legalium hominum, and hear, and determine, ſecundum leges Angliæ, were left out.

279. ‘ 2. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Arch- ‘ biſhop of Canterbury, &c. to hear, and ‘ determine all Diſputes concerning the ‘ Juriſdiction of Courts. It is dated at ‘ Weſtminſter, May 6, 1631.’ They were likewiſe to reform the Diſorders of Priſons, and their Keepers, by whoſe ſuffering their Priſoners to go abroad, Prieſts and and Jeſuits were let looſe, to ſay Maſſes, to uſe Superſtitious Rites, to exerciſe foreign Juriſdiction, and to ſeduce the People; and by whoſe admitting all manner of Perſons freely to the Priſons, they were become Places of Riot, Gaming and Diſorder, and Nurſeries of Hereſy, Schiſm and Corruption, inſtead of being Places of Reſtraint from, and Puniſhment for ſuch Vices.

410. '3. A Renewal of the Commiſſion, conſtituting a Council in the North of England. Dated at Weſtminſter, March 21, 1633.'

To this Commiſſion a Clauſe was added, impowering the Lord Wentworth, the Preſident, to hear and determine all Offences and Miſdemeanors, Suits, Debates, Controverſies and Demands, Cauſes and Matters, contained in the Inſtructions annexed to the Commiſſion.

AMONG other Matters in the Inſtructions, the ſaid Preſident was to hear, and determine according to the Courſe of Proceedings in the Star-Chamber, divers Offences, Deceits and Frauds, whether the ſame were provided againſt by Act of Parliament or not: Likewiſe to hear, and determine according to the Courſe of Proceedings in the Court of Chancery, all manner of Complaints, as well concerning Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, &c. and to ſtay Proceedings in the Courts of Common-Law, by Injunctions, or otherwiſe, as is uſed in the Courts of Chancery. And that no Prohibition ſhould be granted at all, but in Caſes where the Preſident exceeded the Limits of the ſaid Inſtructions. And, that if a Habeas Corpus be granted, the Party was not to be diſcharged 'till he performed the Decree of the Council.

IN the Parliament of 1640, this Court was aboliſhed, when Mr. Edward Hyde (afterwards Earl of Clarendon) being ſent by the Commons to the Lords, concerning this Court of York, ſaid, in his Speech to them, that in theſe Inſtructions there was ſcarce one that was not againſt, or beſide the Law. From whence he took occaſion to ask, What have the good Northern People done, that they only muſt be diſfranchiſed of all their Privileges, and be governed according to the Diſcretion of the Court of York? Nay, tho' this Court might proceed according to their Diſcretion, ſpecial Proviſion was made in the King's Inſtructions, that no Fine, no Puniſhment ſhould be leſs than by Law appointed: 'But, added Mr. Hyde, as much 'greater as your Diſcretion ſhall think 'fit; and indeed, ſays he, in this Improve-'ment we find arbitrary Courts are very 'pregnant. If the Law require my good 'Behaviour, this Diſcretion makes me 'cloſe Priſoner: If the Law ſets me in 'the Pillory, this Diſcretion appoints me 'to leave my Ears there. And ſuch Con-'fuſion hath this Diſcretion, in theſe In-'ſtructions, produced, as if Diſcretion 'were only to act with Rage and Fury.' The Proceedings at large are reported by Ruſhworth, Vol. II. from p. 159, to 165.

CHARLES I.

449. '4. The King's Inſtructions to the Preſident, and Council of the Dominion and 'Principality of Wales, and the Marches, 'ſigned at Theobalds, May 12.

JOHN, Earl of Bridgwater, was the Preſident of this Council.

THE Inſtructions conſiſted of fifty-five Articles, not much unlike thoſe given to the Council of the North.

Ecclesiastical Commissions.

470. ' 1. THE King's Instructions for Laud, ' the Archbishop of Canterbury, concern- ' ing certain Orders to be observed and ' executed by the several Bishops of his ' Province, A. D. 1633.'

THE Bishops were hereby commanded to their several Sees, except those whose Attendance was necessary at Court; and they were to reside in their Episcopal Houses, and not on any Estates by them purchased, nor on their Commendams. The Afternoon Sermons, in all Parish-Churches, were to be turned into Catechising. All Lecturers were to read Divine-Service according to the Liturgy, in their Surplices and Hoods before the Lecture; and they were to preach in seemly Habits belonging to their Degrees, and not in Cloaks. The Bishops were to suffer none but Noblemen, or others qualified by Law, to keep Chaplains. Particular notice was to be taken of all Persons, both Recusants and others, who absented from Divine-Service. No Bishop nominated to any other See should, from the Day of his Nomination, make any Lease for three Lives, or twenty one Years, or concurrent Lease, or any ways renew any Estate, or cut any Wood or Timber, but merely receive the Rents and quit the Place, it being deemed by his Majesty a hateful thing, that any Man's Translation to a better Bishoprick should almost undo the Successor: wherefore his Majesty declared, that if any presumed to break this Order, he would refuse him the Royal Assent, and keep him at the Place which he hath so abused. Every Bishop was to give a strict Account, yearly, to his Metropolitan, of their Obedience to the King's late Letters, prohibiting them to change any Leases from Years into Lives, and the Bishops were also to certify all Transgressions of the King's Commands aforesaid, by the Dean, or Dean and Chapter, or any Archdeacon, or Prebendary, within their Dioceses. The Bishops were likewise, in their yearly Accounts to their Metropolitan, to give notice of any remarkable Alteration, or other Accident, within their respective Dioceses, which might any ways concern the Doctrine, or Discipline of the established Church. The House built by Dr. Bancroft, Bishop of Oxford, upon the Vicarage of Cudsden, near Oxford, which was in the Patronage and Gift of him and his Successors, was to be for ever held in Commendam, together with the said Vicarage, by all future Bishops of Oxford. And finally, the Archbishop of Canterbury was from the said yearly Accounts (which were to be sent in by the tenth of December) to draw out a Brief, and present it by the second of January following to the King, that his Majesty might see how the Church was governed, and his Commands obeyed.

CHARLES I.

2. A special Commission to William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, for Causes Ecclesiastical. It is dated at Westminster, Dec. 17, 1633. 487.

3. A Commission to the Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. for a Visitation in his Province. Dated March 31, 1634. 544.

' 4. Archbishop Laud's Certificate upon ' his Majesty's Instructions. It is dated the ' second of January 1634-5. 583

The Archbishop sent annual Accounts of his Province to the King; some of which are well worth the Reader's Perusal. In that of 1633, as it is related by Dr. Kennet, he certifieth his Majesty, that as to the former part of the Year, when he was Bishop of London, he left Mr. Nathaniel Ward, under the Censure of Excommunication, for refusing to subscribe to the Articles; had convented Mr. John Beadle, Rector of Barnston in Essex, for omitting some Parts of Divine Service, and had dismissed him with canonical Admonition only; and that he found Mr. John Davenport, Vicar of St. Stephen's Coleman-Street (whom he had used with all Moderation) had now resigned his Vicarage, and declared his Judgment against Conformity.

As for Bath and Wells, he found the Bishop had, in his late Visitation, taken a great deal of pains to see all his Majesty's Instructions observed; and particularly had put down divers Lecturers, in Market-Towns, who were beneficed Men in other Bishops Dioceses, and had sent up a List of Romish Recusants.

IN the Diocese of Rochester, the Town of Malling, and that whole Deanry were very much out of order, 'till the Archdeacon, by the Bishop's Command, had settled them; the Bishop complained, that the Cathedral suffered much for want of Glass in the Windows, and the Churchyard lay very indecently, and the Gates down; and that he had no power to remedy these things, because the Dean and Chapter refused to be visited by him, on pretence, that the Statutes were not confirmed under the Broad Seal. [To which the King wrote this Postill in the Margin,] This must be remedied one way or other, concerning which I expect a particular Account of you.

CONCERNING Peterborough Dioceſe, whereas his Majeſty's Inſtructions required that Lecturers ſhould turn their Afternoon-Sermons into Catechiſing, ſome Parſons and Vicars made a queſtion, whether they were bound to that Order, becauſe Lecturers only are named.

As to Coventry and Litchfield, the Biſhop complain'd, that the Peculiars of his Dioceſe, (wherein he had no power) were much out of order; that he had ſuppreſs'd a ſeditious Lecture at Repon, and divers Monthly-Lectures, with a Faſt and a Moderator, as alſo the Running-Lecture, (ſo called, becauſe the Lecturer went from Village to Village) ordain'd, as they ſaid, to illuminate the dark Corners of the Dioceſe. [To which the King noted in the Margin,] If there be dark Corners in this Dioceſe, it were fit a true Light ſhould illuminate it, and not this that is falſe and uncertain.

MY Lord of St. David's, who was now Reſident in his Dioceſe, had ſuſpended a Lecturer for his Inconformity; and found but few Romiſh Recuſants.

IN St. Aſaph, all was exceeding well, ſave only that the Number and Boldneſs of ſome Romiſh Recuſants increaſed much in many places, and was encouraged by the ſuperſtitious and frequent Concourſe of that Party to Holy-Well, long complain'd of without Remedy.

THE Biſhop of Llandaff had certified, that he had not one refractory Non-conformiſt, or ſchiſmatical Miniſter within his Dioceſe, but two Lecturers who were both licenſed Preachers.

THE Biſhop of Lincoln had ſignified, that the Mercers Company in London, truſted with the Gift of one Mr. Fiſhburn, had ſet up a Lecturer in Huntingdon, to be retained or removed without any relation to Biſhop or Archbiſhop. His moſt humble Suit to his Majeſty is, that no Layman whatſoever, and leaſt of all, Companies or Corporations ſhould have power to put in or put out any Lecturer, or other Miniſter. [To which his Majeſty remark'd in the Margin,] Certainly I cannot hold fit that any Lay Perſon or Corporation whatſoever, ſhould have the power theſe Men take to themſelves: For I will have no Prieſt have any neceſſity of a Lay-dependency. Wherefore I command you to ſhew me the way to overthrow this, and to hinder the performance of all ſuch Intentions in time.

THE ſecond yearly Account which the Archbiſhop gave of his Province, was that contained in the Certificate above-mention'd for the Year 1634, inſerted in the Fœdera from Bibliotheque Harley.

THE Archbiſhop held a Metropolitical Viſitation this Year thro' his whole Province, by his Vicar-General, Sir Nathanael Brent: And upon Articles of Inquiry, a great many Defects and Abuſes were reformed, as to the Fabrick and Ornaments of Churches, and the decent Habit of the Clergy, who in the Country had almoſt loſt that apparent diſtinction of their Order. Whence we find Sir Nathaniel giving this Admonition to the Clergy of the Dioceſe of Lincoln, on the 11th of Auguſt 1634, 'That 'all who wanted Canonical Cloaks, com-'monly called Prieſts Cloaks, ſhould pro-'vide themſelves before Allhallowtide 'next, on pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.'

THE Archbiſhop repreſents to the King in this, which is the ſecond yearly Account, that he had this Year, partly by his Vicar-General, and partly by the Dean of the Arches, viſited ſeven Dioceſes, beginning (as he was bound by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws) at his own Metropolitan Church of Canterbury: That he found in his own Dioceſe, eſpecially towards Aſhford, divers profeſſed Separatiſts, with whom he ſhould take Order; ſome of them, and ſome of Maidſtone, (where much Un-conformity hath of late Years prevailed and ſpread) being already called into the High Commiſſion-Court; where, if they are prov'd as guilty, as it is reported they are, he ſhould not fail to do them juſtice.

THAT he conceived the Dutch Churches in Canterbury and Sandwich to be great Nurſeries of Inconformity, of which he had before complained to his Majeſty and the Council-Board, and had humbly deſir'd, that they both of the French, Italian and Dutch Congregations, which were born Subjects, might not be any longer ſuffer'd to live in ſuch a Separation both from Church and State. [The King remark'd in the Margin,] Put me in mind of this at ſome convenient time, when I am at Council, and I ſhall redreſs it.

THAT he found the greateſt part of Wiltſhire overgrown with the Humours of thoſe Men who do not conform, and are as backward, both Clergy and Laity, towards the Repair of St. Paul's Church, as thoſe of any part of England. That the Cathedral of Salisbury was much peſter'd with Seats, which he had given orders to remove, and hoped his Majeſty would approve, as he did at York and Durham, and add the Royal Power, if his own were not ſufficient.

THAT the Biſhop of Briſtol had taken great pains and care ſince his coming thither; and that ſome Clergymen in Dorſetſhire, who gave great cauſe of ſuſpicion, had acquitted themſelves in a better manner than was expected: tho' all was not right in thoſe parts.

AS to Bath and Wells, all his Majeſty's Inſtructions had been punctually obſerved.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

AND as to Exeter, he declares in juſtice to the Biſhop, that his Majeſty's Inſtructions had alſo been carefully obſerved; but there was a great Diviſion betwixt the Dean and Chapter, which he had healed twice, but it was broke out again; and he (the Archbiſhop) doubts, there being ſo many Brothers and Brothers-in-law in that Chapter, is not the leaſt Cauſe of it; the reſt ſiding together for fear of Oppreſſion. He took notice of another great Difference betwixt the Dean and Chapter and the City, about Burial within the Church-yard of the Cathedral, which he fears he ſhall not be able to reconcile; and that he muſt therefore be obliged to be an humble Suitor to his Majeſty, that he would take it into Conſideration.

THAT he found Bedfordſhire moſt tainted of any part of the Dioceſe of Lincoln; and that in particular Mr. Barkley was ſent to the High-Commiſſion for Inconformity; and in Leiceſter, the Dean of the Arches ſent one Mr. Angel, who hath continued a Lecturer in that great Town for divers Years without any Licence at all to preach, yet took ſuch liberty that the Archbiſhop doubts his Violence hath crack'd his Brain; and therefore doth uſe him the more tenderly, becauſe he ſees the hand of God hath overtaken him.

THAT there are many Anabaptiſts in Lincoln, whoſe Leader is one Johnſon, a Baker; and that in divers parts of that Dioceſe, many, both of Clergy and Laity, are exceſſively given to Drunkenneſs: That the Town of Boſton, which was a great Nurſery for Inconformity, is, ſince the calling of ſome of the Magiſtrates into the High-Commiſſion, become very orderly; but the Town of Lowth is ſtill ſomewhat to blame.

AT Kelſtern, (ſays the Archbiſhop) dwells the wild, young Gentleman, Mr. South, (concerning whom, I have lately ſpoken, and that often with your Majeſty) who hath committed a horrible Inceſt, and gotten two Siſters with Child. I have called him to the High-Commiſſion againſt the next Term, and I hope your Majeſty will give me leave to make South blow Weſt for St. Paul's. [The King remark'd in the Margin,] The South-Weſt Wind is commonly the beſt, therefore I will not hinder the blowing that way.

AT Kenſworth in Hertfordſhire, and ſome other places, many gad from their own Churches by Troops after other Miniſters, which is a common fault in the South parts of that Dioceſe, where the People are ſaid to be very giddy in matters of Religion.

THAT in all the Dioceſes which he hath viſited this Year, he finds one great Complaint, that is fit to be redreſſed; 'tis the general Grievance of the poor Vicars, that their Stipends are ſcarce able to feed and cloath them; and that in great Market-Towns, the Vicars are commonly worſt provided for.

THAT in the Dioceſe of Wincheſter, the Biſhop has been very careful of his Majeſty's Inſtructions, ſave only that in two Pariſhes the Biſhop finds ſome Defect about Catechiſing in the Afternoon, which he will take care to remedy; and that in thoſe parts there were divers obſtinate Recuſants.

THAT the Biſhop of London, who had viſited his Dioceſe this Year in Perſon, found divers Complaints about Inconformity to the Church-Diſcipline; but the Proofs came home only againſt four, three Curates and a Vicar; of whom, the Vicar and two Curates had ſubmitted; but the third, one Philip Saunders of Hutton in Eſſex, being refractory, was ſuſpended, and had forſaken the Dioceſe.

AS to Norwich, the Biſhop had certified, that he had put down ſome Lectures where factious Men perform'd them, and particularly that he had ſuſpended one Bridges, Curate of St. George's Pariſh in Norwich, for tranſgreſſing the King's Declaration in his Lecture; but that upon his Submiſſion, he had taken off his Suſpenſion. That he had heard complaint of Mr. Ward of Ipſwich, for Words in ſome Sermons of his, for which he is now called into the High-Commiſſion: That he had ſuſpended one Enoch Grey for unſound Doctrine; and that having ſummoned two wandring Preachers, viz. one Simon Jacob, alias Bradſhaw, and Ralph Smith, they are run out of the Dioceſe.

THAT in the Dioceſe of Ely, all his Majeſty's Inſtructions had been carefully obſerved.

THAT the Biſhop of St. David's had been forced to ſuſpend and diſmiſs one Roberts a Welch Lecturer for Inconformity, and hath likewiſe driven out of his Dioceſe one or two others, who with their giddineſs have offered to diſtemper the People. That this Biſhop complained grievouſly, and not without cauſe, that divers Impropriators in thoſe Parts, have either pull'd down the Chancels, or ſuffered them to fall, to the great debaſing of their Churches, and leaving them ſo open and cold, that the People in thoſe mountainous Parts muſt endure a great deal of Hardſhip, as well in the Churches, as in their way to them.

THAT the Biſhop of St. Aſaph wiſhes his Dioceſe were as free of Superſtition and Prophaneneſs, as it is of Inconformity.

THAT the Biſhop of Landaff found William Erbury, Vicar of St. Mary's in Cardiff, and Walter Cradock his Curate, very diſobedient and dangerous ſchiſmatical

Preachers,

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

Preachers; for which he had given the Vicar a judicial Admonition: And as for his Curate, being a bold, ignorant, young Fellow, he hath ſuſpended him, and taken away his Licence to ſerve the Cure; for that amongſt other things, he uſed this baſe and unchriſtian Paſſage in the Pulpit, viz. That God ſo loved the World, that for it, he ſent his Son to live like a Slave, and die like a Beaſt. [The King notes in the Margin,] This is not much unlike that which was not long ſince utter'd elſewhere; viz. 'That the Jews crucified Chriſt like 'a d—n'd R—ue between two Thieves, '&c.'

THAT the Biſhop deſired leave to bring William Newport, Rector of Languare in Monmouthſhire, into the High-Commiſſion, for having pull'd down the Partition between the Chancel and the Church, and ſold part, and diſpoſed of the reſt to his own Uſe; with ſome other Violences, to the great Prophanation of the Place.

THAT the Biſhop of Glouceſter certified, that he is forced to ordain ſome very mean Miniſters in his Dioceſe, to ſupply Cures as mean; and that he hath put down ſome Lectures, and ſet up others; which he conceived he did without offence, being done upon different occaſions. [The King noted in the Margin,] I muſt be ſatisfied that the Occaſions were very neceſſary, otherwiſe he ſhall anſwer it.

THAT the Biſhop of Oxford, as he had promiſed his Majeſty, had built a Houſe at Cudſden, a Vicarage in his own Dioceſe and Giſt, which he now holds in Commendam, and deſires his Majeſty to annex for ever to the See of Oxford. And that he had ſuppreſſed two Lectures, which were not perform'd as they ought, viz. at Dedington and Woodſtock.

THAT the Biſhop of Chicheſter had certified, all was very well in his Dioceſe, except the Eaſt part, where ſome Puritan Juſtices of the Peace had gain'd ſome of the Clergy into like Opinions with themſelves.

Fiſhery.

286. '1. A Proclamation for the better ordering of Fiſhing upon the Coaſts of his 'Majeſty's Dominions.' Dated at Greenwich, May 24, 1631.

THE Preamble takes notice of the Abuſes committed by the Fiſhermen, who had ſo far deſtroy'd both the Fiſh-Fry and Spawn, that they were forced to ſeek other Buſineſs for a Livelihood; that the Fiſh-days were not obſerved as they ought; and that not only the City of London, but the Court was often unprovided of their neceſſary Diet, by reaſon of the Scarcity and Dearneſs of Fiſh.

'2. Another againſt the Uſe of a Trawl- CHARLES 'Net in Fiſhing whereby not only ſmall I. 'and unſizable Fiſh, but even the Fry and 625. 'Spawn were utterly deſtroy'd.' Dated at Whitehall, April 2, 1635.

'A ſpecial Commiſſion to Henry Earl 638. 'of Holland, Lord Chief-Juſtice in Eyre 'on this ſide Trent, and others, to com- 'pound for Pardons for Incroachments and 'Offences committed in the Foreſts of 'Deane in Glouceſterſhire, and Epping in 'the County of Eſſex.' Dated at Canbury, September 28, 1635.

Game.

1. 'A Proclamation prohibiting the 574. 'keeping and uſing of Setting-Dogs; da- 'ted at Hampton-Court, Oct. 7, 1634.'

THE Preamble took notice, that the Game of Partridge was of late Years almoſt utterly deſtroyed in many parts of the Realm by the Setting-Dogs, trained up and kept by Perſons of ſundry Qualities, for the taking of Partridges. Therefore the Maſter of the King's Hawks, his Deputy or Deputies, and all other Perſons whom it ſhould concern, were to take, kill, and deſtroy the ſaid Setting-Dogs, and all Dogs of that kind uſed for the taking of Partridges with Nets or Snares, and to cut all Nets and Snares that were uſed for that purpoſe to pieces.

2. ANOTHER prohibiting the Uſe of 584. any Nets, Inſtruments, or Engines, for the taking of Pheaſants or Partridges; dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 11.

Gardeners.

A Proclamation prohibiting all Perſons, 582. who had not ſerved ſeven Years Apprenticeſhip to ſome Freeman of the Company of the Gardeners of London, incorporated by King James I. in the third Year of his Reign, from uſing or exerciſing the Art or Science of Gardening within ſix Miles of London, further than for the neceſſary Occaſion of his Family; and from oppoſing the ſaid Company in their taking away, cutting, burning, or deſtroying of any dead, corrupt, or unwholeſome Plants, Stocks, Trees, Sets, Slips, Flowers, Roots, Herbs and Seeds; and from ingroſſing the ſaid Commodities, by buying Crops upon the Ground, or ſelling ſuch bad and unwholeſome Plants, Trees, Stocks, &c. to the deſrauding of the Buyer; dated at Whitehall, Dec. 3, 1634.

Preachers; for which he had given the Vicar a judicial Admonition: And as for his Curate, being a bold, ignorant, young Fellow, he hath ſuſpended him, and taken away his Licence to ſerve the Cure; for that amongſt other things, he uſed this baſe and unchriſtian Paſſage in the Pulpit, viz. That God ſo loved the World, that for it, he ſent his Son to live like a Slave, and die like a Beaſt. [The King notes in the Margin,] This is not much unlike that which was not long ſince utter'd elſewhere; viz. 'That the Jews crucified Chriſt like 'a d—n'd R—ue between two Thieves, '&c.'

THAT the Biſhop deſired leave to bring William Newport, Rector of Languare in Monmouthſhire, into the High-Commiſſion, for having pull'd down the Partition between the Chancel and the Church, and ſold part, and diſpoſed of the reſt to his own Uſe; with ſome other Violences, to the great Prophanation of the Place.

THAT the Biſhop of Glouceſter certified, that he is forced to ordain ſome very mean Miniſters in his Dioceſe, to ſupply Cures as mean; and that he hath put down ſome Lectures, and ſet up others; which he conceived he did without offence, being done upon different occaſions. [The King noted in the Margin,] I muſt be ſatisfied that the Occaſions were very neceſſary, otherwiſe he ſhall anſwer it.

THAT the Biſhop of Oxford, as he had promiſed his Majeſty, had built a Houſe at Cudſden, a Vicarage in his own Dioceſe and Giſt, which he now holds in Commendam, and deſires his Majeſty to annex for ever to the See of Oxford. And that he had ſuppreſſed two Lectures, which were not perform'd as they ought, viz. at Dedington and Woodſtock.

THAT the Biſhop of Chicheſter had certified, all was very well in his Dioceſe, except the Eaſt part, where ſome Puritan Juſtices of the Peace had gain'd ſome of the Clergy into like Opinions with themſelves.

Fiſhery.

286. '1. A Proclamation for the better ordering of Fiſhing upon the Coaſts of his 'Majeſty's Dominions.' Dated at Greenwich, May 24, 1631.

THE Preamble takes notice of the Abuſes committed by the Fiſhermen, who had ſo far deſtroy'd both the Fiſh-Fry and Spawn, that they were forced to ſeek other Buſineſs for a Livelihood; that the Fiſh-days were not obſerved as they ought; and that not only the City of London, but the Court was often unprovided of their neceſſary Diet, by reaſon of the Scarcity and Dearneſs of Fiſh.

'2. Another againſt the Uſe of a Trawl- CHARLES I.
'Net in Fiſhing whereby not only ſmall
'and unſizable Fiſh, but even the Fry and 625.
'Spawn were utterly deſtroy'd.' Dated at Whitehall, April 2, 1635.

Foreſt-Laws.

'A ſpecial Commiſſion to Henry Earl 688.
'of Holland, Lord Chief-Juſtice in Eyre
'on this ſide Trent, and others, to com-
'pound for Pardons for Incroachments and 'Offences committed in the Foreſts of 'Deane in Glouceſterſhire, and Epping in 'the County of Eſſex.' Dated at Canbury, September 28, 1635.

Game.

1. 'A Proclamation prohibiting the 574.
'keeping and uſing of Setting-Dogs; da-
'ted at Hampton-Court, Oct. 7, 1634.'

THE Preamble took notice, that the 595.
Game of Partridge was of late Years almoſt utterly deſtroyed in many parts of the Realm by the Setting-Dogs, trained up and kept by Perſons of ſundry Qualities, for the taking of Partridges. Therefore the Maſter of the King's Hawks, his Deputy or Deputies, and all other Perſons whom it ſhould concern, were to take, kill, and deſtroy the ſaid Setting-Dogs, and all Dogs of that kind uſed for the taking of Partridges with Nets or Snares, and to cut all Nets and Snares that were uſed for that purpoſe to pieces.

2. ANOTHER prohibiting the Uſe of 584.
any Nets, Inſtruments, or Engines, for the taking of Pheaſants or Partridges; dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 11.

Gardeners.

A Proclamation prohibiting all Perſons, 582.
who had not ſerved ſeven Years Apprenticeſhip to ſome Freeman of the Company of the Gardeners of London, incorporated by King James I. in the third Year of his Reign, from uſing or exerciſing the Art or Science of Gardening within ſix Miles of London, further than for the neceſſary Occaſion of his Family; and from oppoſing the ſaid Company in their taking away, cutting, burning, or deſtroying of any dead, corrupt, or unwholeſome Plants, Stocks, Trees, Sets, Slips, Flowers, Roots, Herbs and Seeds; and from ingroſſing the ſaid Commodities, by buying Crops upon the Ground, or ſelling ſuch bad and unwholeſome Plants, Trees, Stocks, &c. to 697.
the deſrauding of the Buyer; dated at Whitehall, Dec. 3, 1634.

Grants.

1. 'LETTERS-PATENT under the 67.
'Privy-Seal, containing certain Articles to 'be

'be obſerved by the Dean and Prebendaries of the Cathedral of Norwich; dated at Weſtminſter, May 15, 1629.'

'TIS a Confirmation and Declaration of Statutes granted them by King James I.

290. 2. A Commiſſion to the Lord Treaſurer Weſton, for making Leaſes of the forfeited Eſtates of Popiſh Recuſants convict; dated June 13, 1631, at Weſtminſter.

292. 3. THE Form of thoſe Leaſes.

383. 4. A Grant under the Privy-Seal to Thomas Elliot and Thomas Killigrew, Eſqs; two of the King's Pages, of a Fine of 500*l.* impoſed upon Sir James Winkfield, and of another of 500 Marks impoſed on Sir Francis Bodenham, for certain Treſpaſſes and Contempts by them committed on the Under-Sheriff of Middleſex, in the Execution of the King's Proceſs; dated July 3, 1632.

595. 5. 'ANOTHER to the Feodaries of the 'ſeveral Counties of England and Wales, 'and their Succeſſors, of divers Fees on the 'finding of Offices, &c. dated at Weſtmin-'ſter, Feb. 3, 1635.'

THEY were to have a Fee of 40*s.* beſides 2*s.* for their Dinner at every Inquiſition or Office, to be found of any Lands held of the Crown, and the like Fee of 40*s.* for, and upon every Survey to be by them had and made. And as for other Services to be perform'd by the ſaid Feodaries to the King, they were to be paid for ſuch Service and Attendance quantum meruit by the Maſter of the Court of Wards and Liveries. Every Juror was to have only 18*d.* for his Dinner, at the finding of every Office; which ſaid Sums, both to the Feodary and Juror, were to be paid by thoſe who make the Inquiſition, if a Title be found for the King; or by thoſe who ſhall proſecute or defend any Office or Offices of ſuch Lands, in caſe the ſame ſhall be found againſt the King.

Highway.

1. 'A Proclamation for the preventing 'of exceſſive Carriages, to the Deſtruction 'of the Highways; dated March 9, 1630.'

IT refers to a Proclamation of the like Tenor on the 6th of Auguſt, in the 20th Year of the late Reign, and orders that no Wain, Cart, or Carriage, ſhould go with more than two Wheels, or above a Tun-weight at once, nor be drawn by above five Horſes.

697. 2. ANOTHER of the like kind; dated at Hampton-Court, Nov. 1, 1635; whereby no Waggon, Cart, or other Carriage, was to be drawn by above five Horſes, or above four Oxen and two Horſes, or above ſix Oxen without Horſes at any one time.

Jewels.

90. 1. A Commiſſion to Sir Francis Cottington, Bart. Chancellor and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, &c. James Maxwell, Eſq; Groom of the Bed-Chamber, and George Bingley, Eſq; Deputy-Auditor of the Impreſts, to make Sale of divers Jewels that remained in the Jewel-Houſe in the Tower, and were thought unfit for the King's Uſe and Service; dated at Weſtminſter, June 20, 1629.

146. 2. THEIR Releaſe and Diſcharge for the Jewels by them ſold. 'Tis dated Apr. 3. 1630, at Weſtminſter.

586. 3. A ſpecial Commiſſion to Sir William Boſwell, who was the Engliſh Agent and Reſident at the Hague, and Nathaniel Gerrard of London, Merchant and Jeweller, for the Diſpoſal and Sale of divers Jewels, which, by virtue of a Commiſſion granted to the late Duke of Bucks, were by him pawned to two Merchants of Amſterdam for 13,500*l.* and with the Produce thereof, to redeem other Jewels to the value of 33,000*l.* pawn'd to other Perſons in Holland; and alſo one other Jewel pawn'd to the Queen of Bohemia for 30,000*l.* 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 15, 1634.

Informers.

682. 1. 'A Proclamation for preventing the 'Abuſes of Informers, Clerks, and others, 'in their Proſecution upon the Laws and 'Statutes of this Realm; dated at Windſor, 'Sept. 6, 1635.'

THESE Informers were Perſons who watch'd People's Actions, in order to inform againſt them, if they infring'd the Laws; but they had been guilty of ſuch Abuſes, by combining with Under-Clerks to proſecute for private Gain, that the King was forced, if not to aboliſh them intirely, at leaſt to qualify them by certain Directions, which he ordered to be obſerv'd. It appears by this Proclamation, that King Charles, by Letters-Patent under the Great-Seal, dated at Weſtminſter the 20th of February, in the fifth Year of his Reign, confirm'd the Office of Receiver and Collector of Fines and Forfeitures, due upon Penal Laws, &c. erected by King James, in the 18th Year of his Reign, to James Chambers, M.D. one of his Phyſicians in Ordinary, and Edward Brawne, Eſq; one of his Gentlemen-Sewers in Ordinary, for the Term of their Lives, and the longeſt Liver of them: And that he thereunto annexed the Surveying, Regiſtring, Collection, and Receipt of Fines and Forfeitures, for tranſgreſſing the Common-Law, and of all Recognizances thereupon forfeited in any of the Courts of Juſtice in England and Wales, and of all Sums of Money due to the Crown, by reaſon of any Proceſs commenced and proſecuted by the Attorney-General, or by any common Informer or other Proſecutor, againſt any Offender for tranſgreſſing the ſaid Laws, or for any Recognizance ſo forfeited, ſince the 31ſt of Queen Elizabeth; excepting the Regiſtring of all Proceſs, and the collecting of Fines and Forfeitures due by any Sentence of the Star-Chamber, or of the Courts of the Preſident and Council of Wales, or the Preſident and Council of the North, or in any Court-Leet, and alſo except the Regiſtring of all Fines and Forfeitures for Cauſes of Cuſtoms and the eſtabliſhed Revenue.

Ireland.

319. 1. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Chancellor, Treaſurers, Judges, &c. of Ireland, for the taking and ſtating of the Accounts of divers Officers of the Revenue in this Kingdom; dated at Weſtminſter, Oct. 24, 1631.

331. 2. ANOTHER to the Lord High-Treaſurer of England, &c. for diſpoſing of the King's Lands in Ireland; dated Feb. 11, 1632.

341. 3. A Declaration, under the Privy-Seal, for the Impoſition of divers Subſidies upon certain Merchandizes, to be brought into, and carried out of the Realm of Ireland; dated March 10.

377. 4. A ſpecial Commiſſion to Thomas Viſcount Wentworth Lord-Deputy of Ireland, and others, to treat and agree for the Inheritance of Eſtates in this Kingdom; and to ſettle the Fines and Compoſitions for Eſtates, held by the reputed Owners or their Anceſtors, or thoſe under whom they claim for 60 Years paſt. 'Tis dated at Canbury, June 27.

562. 5. A Commiſſion, under the Privy-Seal, to the Lord Viſcount Wentworth, Deputy of Ireland, to ſettle Diſputes for Precedency, between the Biſhops or Nobility there, to the hindrance of Proceedings in Parliament; dated at Weſtminſter, June 20, 1634.

577. 6. A Commiſſion under the King's Sign-Manual, to Thomas Lord Coventry the Lord-Keeper, and Sir John Banks Attorney-General, to explain, alter, and amend ſome Clauſes in certain Acts tranſmitted hither under the Great-Seal of Ireland, and to tranſmit the ſame, after ſuch Alteration, back to Ireland, under the Great-Seal of England; dated at Hampton-Court, October 26.

592. 7. ANOTHER of the ſame kind, under the Sign-Manual; dated Jan. 17, 1635.

597. 8. THE King's Royal Aſſent to Bills ſent over from Thomas Viſcount Wentworth, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; dated at Weſtminſter, March 9, 1635.

629. 9. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Lord-Lieutenant to continue the Parliament of this Kingdom by Adjournment; dated Apr. 20.

Knights.

119. 1. 'A Commiſſion to the Lord-Keeper, 'Lord-High-Treaſurer, &c. to compound 'with thoſe who had made themſelves liable to Forfeitures, by neglecting to receive 'Knighthood according to Act of Parliament. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, January 28, 1630.' CHARLES I.

IT was a Commiſſion to compound with thoſe that had not appeared, not only for their Contempt of the Summons, but for their being excuſed from receiving the Order of Knighthood. Mr. Rapin ſays, that a great many Perſons having been ſummoned upon this Occaſion, the Compoſitions brought in the King above 100,000 l. but that this was looked upon as a grievous Oppreſſion; and therefore the Statute (intitled Statutum de Militibus) on which it was grounded, being never expreſſly aboliſhed, tho' it had been long diſuſed, was afterwards repealed by the Parliament.

175. '2. A Proclamation for the Eaſe of the 'Subjects, in making their Compoſitions 'for not receiving the Order of Knighthood 'according to Law; dated July 13.'

THIS was only declaring the King's Reſolution to ſend Commiſſioners to the ſeveral Counties, to take their Compoſitions on the Spot, in order to ſave them the Trouble and Expence of Journies to London.

WE read that James Maliverer, Eſq; of Yorkſhire, tho' he was at Arncliff, 180 Miles from Court, was, by the Procurement of his Countryman Wentworth, Preſident of the Council of the North, fined 2000 l. as a Compoſition for not attending at the King's Coronation to receive the Order of Knighthood, whereas he might have been a Baronet for half the Money. The Commiſſioners had this main Inſtruction, 'To take no leſs than after the Rate of 'thrice and half as much as the Perſons 'compounding were found rated in the 'Subſidy.' But as there were many in all Parts that neglected to appear, or refuſed to compound, they were ſummoned by Meſſengers to the Council-Table, and there told of ſevere Proceedings in caſe of Obſtinacy, and divers put in their Pleas into the Court of Exchequer, to be diſcharged from thoſe Fines. But the Commiſſioners in the Country were to inform themſelves of the true State of the Livelihood of each Perſon, and to admit them to Compoſition if they deſired it; otherwiſe to let them know that upon Return of Certificates, they muſt expect to undergo a legal Trial in the Exchequer. And upon conſideration of the Prejudice done to this Service by Reaſon of the partial and negligent Returns made by the Sheriffs in moſt Counties, it was ordered that the Attorney-General ſhould proceed, by Information in the Exchequer, againſt ſuch of the Sheriffs as ſhou'd appear to have been moſt negligent.

Letters of Marque, &c.

1. A Commiſſion of Appeal granted to 7. Richard Lord Weſton, Lord High-Treaſurer, surer, and others, to be Commissioners of Appeal, in Cases of Prizes taken by virtue of Letters of Marque; dated Dec. 11, 1628, at Westminster.

581. 2. ANOTHER, under the Privy-Seal, of the same kind; dated Nov. 19, 1634.

London.

177. 1. 'A Proclamation concerning new 'Buildings in and about the City, and 'against the dividing of Houses into several Dwellings, and receiving and harbouring of Inmates and Lodgers. 'Tis 'dated at Canbury, July 24, 1630.

WE took notice of several Proclamations on this Head in our Account of the XVIIIth Tome, p. 701, &c. By this Proclamation the King declared that he had empowered Commissioners to punish those, who, contrary to former Prohibitions, had enlarged the City by new Buildings: And from hence Mr. Rapin observes, that the King drew considerable Sums, the Fines in which the Offenders were condemn'd, being all to his Use.

181. 2. THE Commission itself to Sir James Campbell, the Lord-Mayor, &c. follows the Proclamation, and bears the same date.

321. '3. A Proclamation for the Restraint of 'the Multitude and promiscuous Use of 'Coaches throughout London and Westmin- 'ster, to the great Disturbance and Impedi- 'ment of the Court, the Nobility, Gentry, '&c. the Damage of the Pavements, and to 'the great Increase of the Rates of Hay and 'Provender; dated at Westminster, Jan. 19, '1636.'

No Hackney-Coach was to be used in the Cities or Suburbs of London and Westminster, after Midsummer-Day next, unless it was to travel at least three Miles out of Town; and no Person was to go in a Coach in the Streets or Suburbs, except the same Owner of the Coach constantly keep in the said Cities and Suburbs, four able Horses, or Geldings, fit for his Majesty's Service, when his Occasions require.

IT seems that the Number of Hackney-Coaches had been prodigiously increased within eight or nine Years past, for Rushworth takes notice, that in the first Year of this Reign, they did not ply in the Streets as they do now, but, when wanted, were sent for to the Stables; and that of these Hackney-Coaches, there were then not more than 20 to be had.

Manufactures and Monopolies.

92. '1. A Proclamation concerning the 'making of Starch, and avoiding the An- 'noyances thereby. Dated June 30, 1629, 'at Greenwich.' It prohibited the making of Starch by any but the Members of the Company of Starchmakers, who were incorporated by King James, and injoined, that it should be made of nothing but Pollard and Bran, and that the Starch-houses should be remote from any City, Town, or common Road.

THIS was one of the Monopolies encouraged by the King's Ministers to increase his Revenue. For the better Regulation of this Trade, his Majesty had appointed a Surveyor to oversee it in every part, and Commissioners to hear and dispatch all Complaints, and to see that all Offenders be prosecuted in the Star-Chamber.

2. A Proclamation against the Importation of Iron-Wire, and for the Support of the English Manufacture of Osmond Iron, the best for making good Wool Cards; dated at Whitehall, May 7, 1630. 163.

'3. ANOTHER against the false Dying 'of Silk, dated at Farnham, Aug. 9.' Information had been given to the Court of Star-Chamber, of a notorious Abuse committed in the Dying of Silk, by a bad Mixture of the Ingredients used in dying, in order to make it increase in weight, by which the Silk was weakened, and spoiled both in its Substance and Colour. 187.

'4. A Commission, under the Privy- 'Seal, to Anthony Wither, and Samuel 'Lively, Gentlemen, to survey the Manu- 'facture of white Cloth, in the Counties 'of Glouceſter, Somerset, Wilts, Oxford, '&c. dated Dec. 14, at Westminster.' It appears by this Commission, that through the Defect of the Clothiers, and the neglect of others appointed to see to the due Execution of the Laws relating to their Manufacture, the white Cloth had of late Years proved deficient in Length, Breadth and Substance, to the great Damage of the Exporter, and detriment of the Cloathing Trade in general, because the foreign Merchants took advantage of the Badness of the Cloth, to abate in the Price more than the true value of their Damage by such Cloth, and bought up other foreign Cloth in lieu of the English; therefore the Commissioners hereby appointed, were to examine the Searchers and Overseers of the white Cloth; and to see that those who were insufficient, or negligent, were removed by the Magistrates, and to recommend others more able in their room. And the Searchers and Overseers of the Cloth, finding any Defect in the Length, Breadth, or Substance of it, were to inform the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor, who were to distrain upon the Clothier, for the Penalties and Forfeitures in behalf of the Poor, according to the Statute of the twenty-first of King James. The Magistrates were also injoined to see to the Execution of the Statute for the true making of Cloth, passed in the thirty-ninth and forty-third Years of Queen Elizabeth, prohibiting the Use of the lower Bar in the Tenters, Ropes, Ringheads, Wrenches, and 213.

all other Engines and Inſtruments for ſtraining, ſtretching and falſifying of Cloth, and whereby the Defects of white Cloth might be concealed from the Buyer. And the Commiſſioners were to make ſtrict Inquiry into ſuch Abuſes, and give due Information thereof to the Juſtices of the Peace and other Magiſtrates, that they might proceed accordingly.

297. '5. A Proclamation for preventing of 'Deceit uſed in the Importation of Mad-'der, dated at Greenwich, the fifteenth of 'June, 1631.' The Preamble to it takes notice, that Madder was ſometimes deceitfully mixed with Sand, which not only defrauded the Buyer, but fretted the Cloth and ſpoiled the Colours. And therefore, one Mr. George Bedford, who had found out a way to diſcover and reform the ſaid Abuſe, was authoriſed by Letters Patent, under the Great-Seal, on the twelfth of Jan. 1630, and now again by this Proclamation, to be the King's Officer to ſearch all Madder, when imported, before it was put to ſale, and to diſcover and diſtinguiſh all undue Mixtures, by ſuch Marks and Deſcriptions, that neither the Buyer nor Dyer might be cheated.

323. 6. A Patent granted, under the Privy-Seal, for the ſole making of hard and ſoft Soap for the Term of fourteen Years, dated Dec. 17, 1631, at Weſtminſter *.

338. '7. A ſpecial Commiſſion for the better 'Regulation of Starchmakers. It is dated 'March 8, 1632.' Ruſhworth ſays, that about this time there was a Contract between the King and the Maſter, &c. of this Company, whereby the ſaid Company did covenant to pay into his Majeſty's Exchequer, 1500 l. the firſt Year; 2500 l. the ſecond; and then 3500 l. a Year.

381 8. A Proclamation concerning the well making of Soap. By the King at Greenwich, June 28.

IT takes notice of certain Letters-Patents, which the King granted under the Great-Seal, on the 20th of January laſt, incorporating the Soap Makers, by the Name and Title of the Governour, Aſſiſtants and Fellows of the Society of Soapers, in the City of Weſtminſter. 'Tis ſaid this ſingle Patent was worth to him 10000 l. by way of Advance, beſides 8 l. a Tun for all Soap boil'd hereafter; of which they contracted to make 5000 Ton after the firſt Year, for his Majeſty's Uſe. And as all who did not come into this Corporation, were prohibited the Trade of Soap-boiling, it was look'd upon as a Monopoly, and all other Trades began to be jealous of the like practiſing upon them.

WE don't find the Patent in the Fœdera; but according to Ruſhworth, the Perſons to whom it was granted, were Sir Henry Compton Knight of the Bath; Henry Gilford, Nicholas Forteſcue, Baſil Brook, Edward Stradling, Richard Weſton, William Ford, Sir James Banks, Knts; George Gage, Francis Townly, Beverley Bretton, Thomas Jones, and Thomas Ruſſel, Eſqs; and their Succeſſors. That it gave them and their Succeſſors power to admit Perſons into their Society, and to purchaſe Lands and Hereditaments to them and their Succeſſors in Fee and Perpetuity, for Life or Years, and diſpoſe of the ſame as they ſhall pleaſe; and that Sir Richard Weſton Knt. afterwards Lord-Treaſurer, and Earl of Portland, was appointed the firſt Governor of the ſaid Society, and the ſaid Sir Henry Compton, and others his Aſſiſtants. It appears from the above Proclamation, that an Office was erected by the ſaid Patent for keeping the Patterns, and making the Eſſays of Soap; and that Francis Coningsby Eſq; was appointed the firſt Aſſay-Maſter, and to take an Oath for the true Execution of his Office. The Proclamation commanded the Society to uſe none but Olive and Rape Oils, that the Soap might be ſweet and ſerviceable; and that no Soap, Pot-Aſhes, &c. ſhould be ſold before they had been aſſay'd, and found good and ſerviceable, and ſo mark'd by the Deputies of the ſaid Society.

THERE was one Company in particular erected for making of playing Cards, of whom the King bought them at eighteen Shillings a Groſs, one Sort, and twenty-eight Shillings another Sort; and after ſealing them, ſold them again. The Duties ariſing from the Office for ſealing them, which was given to William Watkins, were farmed to one Henry Cogan. The Maſter and Wardens of the Company of Card-Makers, made ſome Oppoſition to it, but ſubmitted to a Contract with the King, that rendered the Profit anſwerable to the Project. The like Contract was made between his Majeſty and the Dice-Makers of London, to pay him an Allowance for every Bale of Dice, beſides other mean Projects for raiſing Money.

'9. A Proclamation againſt the making 'up of Girdles, Belts, Hangers, and other 'Wares for Men's wearing, or for War-'Service, with Braſs Buckles. Dated at 'Whitehall, Jan. 12, 1633.' It was founded upon a Petition of the Company of Buckle-Forgers, Buckle-Filers, Trimmers, and Dreſſers of Buckles, Members of the Society of Girdlers of London, which was preſented

* The Patentees were Sir William Ruſſel, Bart. Sir Baſil Brooke, Sir Richard Weſton, Sir Edward Stradling, Sir Richard Bettiſon, Knts. George Gage, Thomas Jones, Beverley Bretton, Thomas Ruſſel, Eſqrs. Thomas Jennings, Thomas Hicks and Albertus Belton, Merchants, and Mr. Robert Carver presented to the King's Highneſs, and by him referr'd to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, who appointed Commiſſioners to take the ſame into Conſideration. And after Enquiry into the Allegations on both Sides, the Commiſſioners reported, that thoſe Buckles which are caſt in Braſs, were brittle, and not ſo ſerviceable as thoſe made of Iron; that there were three hundred Perſons in London who had no other way of maintaining themſelves and Families, but by forging and making of Iron Buckles and Harneſs, and that thoſe who caſt the Braſs Buckles can make more in one Day than ten Men can do who make the Iron Buckles.

445. 10. 'A PROCLAMATION for preventing 'Frauds and Deceits uſed in Drapery; 'dated at Weſtminſter, April 16.'

As this is the Staple Manufacture of the Kingdom, it concerns both the Clothier, the Blackwell-hall Factor, and the Merchant, to know the Regulations that were hereby enjoin'd to retrieve the Reputation which our Woollen Cloth had loſt Abroad by the Abuſes which had crept into that Manufacture, notwithſtanding the many Statutes made and provided for the true making of Cloth, and notwithſtanding the Commiſſion above-mentioned of December 14, 1630, to put them in Execution.

No Wools were to be boiled with Galls 'till they had been made Blue with Woad or Indico, as far as the Goodneſs of the Colour intended to be made would bear. The Spinners of Yarn were to make the ſame in Skeyns upon Reels of two Yards, or one Yard each, and of equal Wideneſs in all the Parts where the Yarn ſhall be reel'd. Every Weaver was to ſet the firſt Letters of his Chriſtian and Surname, or at leaſt the firſt Letter of his Surname, to his Cloth, and no other Mark; and the Weaver ſhall redeliver to the Clothier the Thrums, Knots and Ends, and all Yarn not woven into the Cloth; and the Clothier ſhall take in the ſame at ſuch a Price as others will give, becauſe under Colour of buying them of the Weaver, the Clothier was robb'd of much Yarn. No white Cloth was to be hang'd upon any Rack or Tenter, which had more than one Bar, viz. above, though it hang but by one Liſt only. All Moſing-Mills, in which the Cloths were ſtretch'd and wrought with the Teaſel, were to be taken down. No Man was to put another's Mark to his Cloth. Every Searcher was to affix a Leaden Seal at either End of the Cloth, expreſſing its Length and Breadth when meaſured wet out of the Fulling-Mill, together with the juſt Weight of it when Home-dried; and after ſuch Seal ſo affixed, with the Searcher's Chriſtian and Surname at length, the ſame Cloth ſhall not be immediately put into the Mill and thicken'd: And before the Searcher affix'd his Seal, the Clothier was to ſet on his Seal, expreſſing the Length, Breadth and Weight in manner aforeſaid, and if there be Cauſe, he was to put on the Word Faulty: And the Searcher was to put on but two Seals upon a Cloth, viz. one at each End. Thus the Searching and Sealing of Cloths, which by the Statutes was anciently done by the Clothier and Aulnager, was now to be perform'd wholly by the Clothier, Searcher, and Overſeer of the Cloth. No Workman was hereafter to fold or tack together any Cloth, and no Cloth was to be offered to Sale, or to be tranſported, before the Seal of the Overſeers or Searchers was affix'd to it. All white Cloths not ſealed as aforeſaid, were to be ſeiz'd by the Commiſſioners, and brought to Trial. The Clothier was to allow the Searcher or Overſeer Two Pence for ſearching and regiſtring every Cloth. And every Searcher was to keep a Regiſter of every Cloth by him ſearched, together with the Name of the Owner, its Contents and Weights, and the Time it was ſearch'd, that the Aulnager might not be defrauded of the Duty of Aulnage and Subſidy upon every Cloth. After the Cloth had been ſeal'd as above by the Clothier, Searcher or Overſeer, the Aulnager was alſo to put on his Seal to it, but not to reſearch the Cloth, it being by Law prohibited. The Word Faulty was not to be ſtamp'd becauſe the Cloth was deficient in Weight or Meaſure, but only when it was falſe made, waſted in Mill, ſqually, bandy, rowy, holely, or the like. All white Worceſter Cloths, and the like, that ſhould be milled in Glouceſterſhire, were not to be ſtamped, nor reputed narrow, if they were found to be ſix Quarters and half a Quarter wide within the Liſts, and accepted as clean Cloth by the Foreign Merchants who bought up that ſort of Cloth.

501. 11. 'A PROCLAMATION concerning 'Tin; dated at Whitehall, January 22, '1634.' All Perſons were hereby enjoin'd not to utter, ſell, receive, ſhip, carry or contract for any black Tin unblown, nor any white Tin or caſt Tin, before it be coin'd and ſtamp'd with the King's Seal and Mark. All Petty-Chapmen and Tinkers, privy to the buying or ſelling, receiving, delivering or bartering of black Tin by the Bowl, or white Tin uncoined, by the Pound Weight, or other ſmall Quantities, were to be committed to the Goal of the Stannaries of ſuch County where taken, and to be puniſhed according to the Stannary Laws: And all Perſons sons, except such of the Pewterers of London as should be nominated by the Farmers of the Emption or Pre-emption of Tin for the Time being, were forbid to cast any Tin into Bars, nor even they any where but in London.

504. 12. 'ANOTHER Proclamation concern-'ing Soap and Soap-makers; dated at 'Whitehall, Jan. 26, 1634.'

566. 13. 'ANOTHER for the well-ordering 'the making of soft Soap, and settling 'the Price of it; dated at Theobalds, July '13.' It mentions the several Methods that some factious People had tried to defeat the Patent granted to the Soap-makers Corporation for making Soap with the native Commodities of the Kingdom. 1. By using Castile, Venice, Smyrna, and English hard Soap from the Western Parts, and by dissolving of it to multiply and encrease it. 2. By bringing in great Quantities of Fish-Oil, Soap, and other Soap from Scotland, France, Holland, &c. 3. By increasing the Soap Manufacture in Places where no more was made formerly than would serve the Neighbourhood, and dispersing it to such Parts of the Kingdom where it was never used before. 4. By perswading the Subjects that they could instruct Housholders and other private Persons to make Soap at easy Rates for their Use. It also takes notice, that they had so raised the Prices of the old Soap, that what used to be sold for Three Pence and Three Pence Half-penny a Pound, was risen to Six Pence, and in some Places to Eight Pence, Ten Pence and Twelve Pence a Pound; and that in order to bring the new white Soap into Dislike, they had abused and falsify'd it, and had presum'd to sell it by Retale for the like extravagant Rates.

THE Lord-Keeper, &c. were therefore hereby commanded to grant Commissions to proper Persons to rectify the Prices of Soap, and to punish the Importers, Carriers, and Makers of all prohibited Soap, and the Buyers, Sellers, Spenders, and Receivers of Soap at excessive Prices. The Corporation of Soap-makers was also enjoin'd to make a particular Sort of soft Soap at Three Pence a Pound, for the Silk-dyers, Woolcombers, Weavers, Say-thickers, Fullers, and the like, who had complain'd to the Privy-Council, that they required some other sort of Soap than that made and used by the said Corporation.

591. 14. 'ANOTHER of the same kind, da-'ted at Whitehall, Jan. 25, 1635.' By this Proclamation no Persons were to make Soap but such as were free of the Corporation of Soap-makers of Westminster, or such as acted under their Authority: Nor was any Soap to be imported into England or Wales from Scotland, Ireland, or any Foreign Parts *.

'A PROCLAMATION prohibiting the 'Importation of Purles, Cut-works, and 'Bone-laces made in Foreign Parts, and 'for the sealing of such as are made in 'England and Wales; dated at Hampton-'Court, Sept. 30.' The Officer who was appointed by Letters Patent under the Great-Seal, to mark or seal these Home-made Manufactures, was one Thomas Smith, who kept his Office at the Sign of the Red Hart in Forestreet without Cripplegate.

693. 19. 'ANOTHER prohibiting the Impor-'tation of all sorts of Glass made in Fo-'reign Parts; dated at Royston, Octob. 14.' This was to be in Force during the Grant made by King James to Sir Robert Mansel (Lieutenant of the Admiralty) for the sole making of Glass, he having perfected the Manufacture of all Sorts of Glass with Sea-Coal or Pit-Coal, to the great saving of the Woods and Timber. But the said Sir Robert Mansel was not debarr'd from importing Glasses from

* IT appears from Rushworth, that Archbishop Laud was a very notable Factor for the Soap-boilers; for in the Archbishop's Diary, which he has printed for the Year 1635, there's the following Article:

July 12. 'Sunday at Theobalds the Soap-Business was ended and settled again upon the new Corporation, 'against my Offer for the old Soap-boilers; yet my Offer made the King's Profit double two Years after the 'new Corporation was rais'd. How it is perform'd, let them look to it whom his Majesty shall be pleased 'to trust with his Treasurer's Staff. In this Business, and some other of great Consequence, during the Com-'mission for the Treasury, my old Friend Sir *F. RUSHWORTH gives an Account of a Process by the Attorney-General Noy, in Trinity Term, 1634, against certain Persons for making Soap of Fish-Oil bought of the Greenland Company, for not suffering the Assay-Master to try or mark their Soap, and for holding unlawful Meetings, to set a Price on their Commodities; for which Offences they were all, to the Number of fifteen, committed to the Fleet during his Majesty's Pleasure, and one of them fined 1500*l.* two of them 1000*l.* each, and the rest 500*l.* a piece, and all of them disabled by themselves, their Workmen, or Agents, ever to use or exercise the Trade of Soap-boiling any more.

694. 20. A SPECIAL Commiſſion to Sir William Slingsby, and others, for reforming the Abuſe of Logwood; ſeveral Perſons having of late Years imported great Quantities of a falſe Dying-Wood call'd Logwood or Blockwood, to the great Diſcredit of the Clothing and other Manufactures of the Kingdom. It is dated at Weſtminſter, October 15.

718. 21. 'A PROCLAMATION for the Reſtraint of the Conſumption of the Coin and Bullion of this Realm, and the deceitful making of Gold and Silver Thread, Purles, Plates, Spangles, &c. to the great Abuſe of the Subjects, and Prejudice of the King's Cuſtoms, by the exceſſive Quantities now made in the Realm, which formerly were brought from Foreign Parts; dated Jan. 18, 1636, at Whitehall.'

By this Proclamation no Coin, Plate or Bullion was hereafter to be uſed in the making of Gold and Silver Thread, Copper gilt or ſilvered, Gold and Silver foliat Purles, Oaes, Spangles, Wire, and the like Manufactures, but what ſhall be imported from Abroad by Perſons thereunto appointed by the King, or which ſhall ariſe from the ſame Works and Manufactures when melted again. None of the current Gold or Silver Coins of this Realm was hereafter to be melted down by any Refiner, Goldſmith, or other Perſon whatſoever, for any Uſe whatſoever. And all the Gold and Silver to be employ'd in the ſaid Manufactures was to be furniſh'd, refined, prepared and diſgroſſed by ſuch Perſons only as the King ſhould appoint, and by them ſold to all who ſhall work or uſe the ſame, according to the Standards and Rates limited by the King. No Perſons but ſuch as were licenſed by the King or his Commiſſioners, were to buy any Gold or Silver for the ſaid Manufactures, or ſo much as to make them, or to ſet up, keep or uſe any Machine or Tool for that Purpoſe. And to the Intent that all Gold and Silver Thread, Copper gilt or ſilvered Thread and Wire, and other the ſaid Manufactures, might be well made, all Thread was to be made up in Skeins, and not on Quills; and no Copper ſilvered or gilt was to be made or ſpun upon any Silk. All theſe Manufactures were to be mark'd with the King's Seal, before they were expoſed to Sale, and none was to be bought or ſold but what was made and wrought by Perſons thereunto allowed by the Commiſſioners.

730. 22. 'AN Act for regulating the Abuſes and Frauds of Weavers, Combers, Spinſters, and other Workers and Makers of Woollen Cloth and Yarn, by the daily falſifying their Yarn as well in the Length of the Reel-ſtaff as in the Number of the Threads: And for putting an End to the Difference between the Worſted Weavers and the Clothiers, Combers and Sellers of Yarn in diverſe Clothing Countries, by ſettling a conſtant Reel-ſtaff for the reeling of Yarn, to be kept in every County; and for increaſing the Poor's Wages, according to the Statutes of 5 Eliz. and 1 King James.' This Act, which is dated the 22d of January, under the Privy-Seal, takes notice, that by Direction of the late King, John Elthrington, one of the Yeomen of the Chamber, and his Partner Henry Stracey, ſpent many Years, and above 1100 l. in ſolliciting the ſaid Regulation: It order'd, that there ſhould be a conſtant Reel provided, called a Clock-Reel, or Reel-ſtaff, to be kept by every one concern'd in the Woollen or Linnen Manufacture, which was to be one Yard about the ſingle Reel, and twice as much the double Reel, every Knot thereof to contain eighty Yards for all Yarn, and to be kept and continued as a conſtant Meaſure between the Maſter and Servant, the Buyer and the Seller. The King created an Office for ſearching, ſurveying and ſealing the ſaid Reels, or Reel-ſtaffs, and granted it to the two Partners above-mentioned, who were to hold it thirty-one Years, and to exerciſe it by themſelves and their Deputies throughout England and Wales, with the ſame Fees as the Clerk of the Market of the Houſhold has for Weights and Meaſures, i. e. Two Pence for ſealing the ſingle Reel, and One Penny for regiſtring the Owners Names and Places of Abode, to be paid at the actual Survey and Sealing of the ſaid Reels by the Clothier, Comber, Weaver, Spinſter, or other Perſon that has or uſes them; and double that Fee for ſealing and regiſtring the conſtant Reel of two Yards or two Ells about.

735. 23. A COMMISSION under the Privy-Seal, directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and others, concerning the Manufacture of Gold and Silver Thread; dated Jan. 26.

Mortgages.

99. 1. A COMMISSION under the Privy-Seal to Philip Burlamachi, a Merchant of London, to redeem ſeveral Jewels and Plate belonging to the King and the late Duke of Buckingham, which were pawned to ſeveral Perſons in Holland. To this end he was to propoſe to the Dutch to take off 4000 Tons of Iron-Ordnance in part of Payment. The Commiſſion is dated at Weſtminſter, the 29th of Auguſt, 1629. See Jewels.

Navy.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. 95.

CHARLES I.

Navy.

1. 'A PROCLAMATION againſt ſelling 'Ships; dated at Nonſuch, July 12, 1629.'

THIS Order was owing to Information which his Majeſty had received that ſeveral Maſters and Owners of Ships actually ſold their Ships and other Veſſels to Foreigners, which manifeſtly tended to weaken the Navigation of the Kingdom. A Clauſe was added for preſerving of all Timber fit for Shipping, becauſe of the great Deſtruction that had been made of it of late Years. And we find in Ruſhworth another Proclamation by the King and Council, dated the 19th of December following, whereby the Tranſportation of Ship-Timber, eſpecially Knee-Timber and Pipe-Staves, is prohibited both from England and Ireland.

185. 2. A COMMISSION under the Privy-Seal, to certain Perſons to take a Survey of the State of the Royal Navy lying at Chatham, Portſmouth, &c. It is dated at Canbury the 5th of Auguſt, 1630.

211. 3. A COMMISSION to the Lord Treaſurer, &c. to erect a common Fiſhery as a Nurſery for Seamen, &c. dated at Weſtminſter, December 8.

394. 4. A SPECIAL Commiſſion to the Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to perform the Office of Lord Admiral of England, Ireland and Wales; dated at Weſtminſter, November 20, 1632.

549. 5. A PROCLAMATION prohibiting Ships to carry the Union-Flag, and appointing Flags both for the Ships of England and Scotland; dated at Greenwich, May 5, 1634. The Union-Flag was St. George's Croſs and St. Andrew's Croſs, which was ſtill reſerv'd as an Ornament for the King's Ships and thoſe in his Service and Pay only. But the Ships of the Subjects of South-Britain were hereafter to carry the Red Croſs, or St. George's Croſs, as of old Time, and thoſe of Scotland the White Croſs, commonly called the Croſs of St. Andrew.

6. A PROCLAMATION of the ſame Date and Page, requiring all Sea-faring Men, Shipwrights, Ship-Carpenters, &c. being the King's Subjects, and in the Service of any Foreign Prince, to return Home by the 1ſt of November following.

697. 7. A SPECIAL Commiſſion to Robert Earl of Lindſey, and others, for the preparing and furniſhing of Ships. See Ship-Money.

699. 8. ANOTHER to the Recorder and Cuſtom-houſe Officers of London, to examine upon Oath all Perſons going beyond Sea; dated at Weſtminſter, Nov. 17, 1635.

Nobility and Gentry.

1. A PROCLAMATION commanding the 3744 Nobility and Gentry to go from London, and its Neighbourhood within forty Days, and reſide at their Manſion-Houſes in the Country; dated at Greenwich, June 20, 1632. This Injunction was pretended to be grounded upon the King's Deſire to hinder the Nobility and Gentry from waſting their Eſtates by a needleſs Reſidence in London, where they were oblig'd to be at a great Expence, eſpecially in Apparel, to the enriching of Foreign Nations. But it was perceiv'd afterwards, that the King had another End in it, when ſuch were ſummon'd before the Star-Chamber as had neglected to obey the Proclamation, and were condemn'd in grievous Fines to the King's Uſe.

498. 2. A SPECIAL Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to Clarencieux and Norroy, Kings at Arms, to viſit their ſeveral Provinces; dated at Weſtminſter, Dec. 25, 1633.

722. 3. ANOTHER of the ſame Effect, directed to Sir William le Neve, Kt. Clarencieux King at Arms of the South, Eaſt and Weſt Parts of England, from the River Trent Southward; dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 20, 1636.

724. 4. ANOTHER of the ſame Kind and Date, to Sir Henry St. George, Norroy King at Arms of the Eaſt, Weſt and North Parts of England, from the River Trent Northward.

Palatinate.

628. 1. A LICENCE under the Privy-Seal for a Collection to be made for two Years throughout England, for the Relief of the poor Miniſters of the Palatinate; dated April 9, 1635, at Weſtminſter. It ſays, that they and their Families were reduced to a moſt diſtreſſed and lamentable Eſtate of Miſery and Poverty by the Invaſion of their cruel Enemies, and by the continual Incurſion of Armies, which had trodden them under Foot, and deprived them of all that Maintenance and Proviſion which they had ſcrap'd together in the little Time of Reſpite which God had lately given them; inſomuch, that they were now more afflicted than ever, ſome being baniſhed, others impriſon'd, and ſome ſhut up in Towns, where they who had formerly Plenty enough to maintain themſelves, and to be helpful to others, were reduced to the Extremity of Want, for the Sake of their Religion. To which Words theſe were added in a former Patent, which we, together with them, do profeſs, and which we are all bound in Conſcience to maintain to the utmoſt of our Power: But Laud prevailed to have the Patent cancell'd, and a new one granted, in which the Addition was entirely left out. According to Ruſhworth, the firſt Patent was paſſed in 1629, and the FOEDERA Tom. XIX. the Annotator upon Dr. Kennet's Account of this Reign, mentions a Licence paſſed for ſuch Collection on the 19th of Auguſt, 1630; but we find neither of theſe in the Fœdera.

Pardons.

40. 1. THE Pardons of Robert Sibthorp, Roger Manwaring, and Richard Montague, Biſhop of Chicheſter; dated the 3d, 9th, and 16th of January, 1629.

166. 2. A PARDON of John Mawde, for raiſing and publiſhing a falſe, ſeditious, ſcandalous, and infamous Report of the King, was by the Star-Chamber Court, on the 6th of May, committed to the Fleet-Priſon, fin'd 5000 l. and ſentenc'd to walk to the Bars of the ſeveral Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, while the Courts were ſitting, denoting his Offence, to make the ſame Acknowledgment at the publick Aſſizes for the Counties of Suffolk and Huntingdon, and to perform the ſame Penance at Paul's Croſs during Sermon-time, in which the Preacher, by Order of the Biſhop of London, was to reprove the Raiſers and Publiſhers of ſuch notorious, falſe and ſlanderous Reports. This Pardon was dated under the Privy-Seal at Canbury, the 22d of May, 1630.

170. 3. THE like ſpecial Pardon for John Hunton, of St. Stephen's in the County of Cornwal, Clerk, who on the 3d of Auguſt, 1629, was indicted at Exeter Aſſizes for having aſſerted before a large Congregation at Chidleigh in the County of Devon on the 28th of June preceding, That the Pope of Rome is the Head of the Church, and hath ſpiritual Juriſdiction within the Territories of Chriſtian Princes, and who was attainted and convicted in a Premunire for refuſing the Oath of Allegiance. This Pardon was granted on the 22d of June at Canbury, on a Report made to the King by Sir Thomas Richardſon, Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, that the ſaid Hunton at the laſt Aſſizes held at Exeter acknowledged his Crimes, and made his Submiſſion in open Court, and did then and there take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and promiſe to behave for the future as a loyal and dutiful Subject. Nevertheleſs he was obliged to give Security for his good Behaviour according to an Act of the Tenth of Edward III.

321. 4. A PARDON of Anne Counteſs of Caſtlehaven in Ireland, late Wife of Mervin Lord Audley, Earl of Caſtlehaven, for the Crimes of Adultery, Fornication and Incontinency; dated at Weſtminſter, November 14, 1631, under the Privy-Seal. See Trials.

5. A SPECIAL Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord-Keeper, Lord-Treaſurer, &c. to reprieve and ſtay from Execution ſuch Felons-Convict (wilful Murder, Rape, Witchcraft, Robbery on the Highway, Burning of Houſes, and Burglary only excepted) who were ſtrong and able enough to be employ'd in Foreign Diſcoveries and Services, and to appoint them accordingly. It is dated February 23, 1633, at Weſtminſter. CHARLES I. 406.

6. A SPECIAL Commiſſion to Sir David Cunningham, Bart. and others, to compound with certain Sheriffs for Miſdemeanors and Offences by them committed in their Offices; dated Auguſt 17, 1635, at Canbury. 653.

Parliament.

1. A PROCLAMATION for diſſolving the Parliament; dated March 2, 1629, at Whitehall. 29.

2. A PROCLAMATION for ſuppreſſing of falſe Rumours touching Parliaments; dated at Whitehall, March 27. 62.

3. ANOTHER for apprehending Walter Long, Eſq; late High-Sheriff of the County of Wilts, and William Strode, Son of Sir William Strode, of the County of Devon, two Members of the laſt Parliament, for ſeditious Practices and high Crimes againſt the King; dated March 27. 63.

ANSWER to the Remonſtrance of the Commons againſt the Duke of Buckingham in 1628, which was inſerted in p. 657. This Anſwer was given in the King's Name, but penn'd by Laud then Biſhop of London, and produced afterwards at his Trial. It was hinted at in p. 661, but after ſearching all other Hiſtories for it in vain, we met with it at the Entrance of the ſecond Volume of Ruſhworth, as follows.

The King's Anſwer to the Commons Remonſtrance about Biſhop Laud, &c.

'WE are not bound (ſaith his Majeſty) to give an Account of our Actions 'to any but to God only; yet out of the 'Honour and Integrity of our Grace, 'the Love and Care of our People, the 'great and hearty Deſire we have to 'take off all Fears and Jealouſies from 'our loyal and loving Subjects, we have 'thought fit to declare theſe Reaſons 'following, why we have called in this 'Remonſtrance, which yet we preſume 'and conſtantly believe was fram'd and 'delivered up unto us with good 'Intentions, though by a miſguided 'Zeal.

'FOR, firſt, that Remonſtrance begins 'at Religion, and fears Innovation of it 'by Popery: But we would have our 'Subjects of all ſorts to call to Mind what 'Difficulties and Dangers we endured

‘ not many Years ſince for Religion ſake; ‘ that we are the ſame ſtill, and our ‘ holy Religion is as precious to us as it ‘ is or can be to any of them; and we ‘ will no more admit Innovation therein, ‘ than they that think they have done ‘ well in fearing it ſo much.

‘ IT is true that all Effects expected ‘ have not followed upon the Petition ‘ delivered at Oxford; but we are in ‘ leaſt Fault: For that Supply being not ‘ afforded us, diſenabled us to execute ‘ all that was deſired, and cauſed the ‘ Stay of thoſe legal Proceedings which ‘ have help'd to ſwell up this Remon- ‘ ſtrance: Yet let all the Counties of ‘ England be examined, and London ‘ and the Suburbs with them, neither is ‘ there ſuch a noted Increaſe of Papiſts, ‘ nor ſuch Cauſe of Fear as is made, ‘ nor hath any amounted to ſuch an odi- ‘ ous tolerating as is charged upon it, nor ‘ near any ſuch.

‘ FOR that Commiſſion ſo much com- ‘ plained of, both the Matter and Intent ‘ of it are utterly miſtaken; for it ‘ doth not diſpenſe with any Penalty, ‘ or any Courſe to be taken with any ‘ Papiſts for the Exerciſe of their Re- ‘ ligion; no nor with the pecuniary ‘ Mulct, or not Conformity to ours. It ‘ was adviſed, for the Increaſe of our ‘ Profit, and the returning of that into ‘ our Purſe, which Abuſe or Conni- ‘ vance of inferiour Miniſters might, ‘ perhaps, divert another way; if that ‘ or any other ſhall be abuſed in the Ex- ‘ ecution, we will be ready to puniſh ‘ upon any juſt Complaint.

‘ THE next Fear is the daily Growth ‘ and Spreading of the Arminian Facti: ‘ on, called a cunning Way to bring in ‘ Popery; but we hold this Charge as ‘ great a Wrong to our ſelf and our ‘ Government as the former; for our ‘ People muſt not be taught by a Par- ‘ liament-Remonſtrance, or any other ‘ Way, that we are ſo ignorant of Truth, ‘ or ſo careleſs of the Profeſſion of it, ‘ that any Opinion or Faction, or what- ‘ ſoever it be called, ſhould thruſt it ‘ ſelf ſo far, and ſo faſt into our King- ‘ doms without our Knowledge of it: ‘ This is a meer Dream of them that ‘ make, or would make our loyal and ‘ loving People think we ſleep the ‘ while.

‘ IN this Charge there is great Wrong ‘ done to two eminent Prelates * that ‘ attend our Perſon; for they are ac- ‘ cuſed without producing any the leaſt ‘ Shew or Shadow of Proof againſt ‘ them; and ſhould they or any other ‘ attempt Innovation of Religion, either ‘ by that open, or any cunning way, ‘ we ſhould quickly take other Order ‘ with them, and not ſtay for your Re- ‘ monſtrance.

‘ To help on this, our People are ‘ made believe there is a Reſtraint of ‘ Books Orthodoxal; but we are ſure ‘ ſince the laſt Parliament begun, ſome, ‘ whom the Remonſtrance calls Ortho- ‘ dox, have aſſum'd to themſelves an ‘ unſufferable Liberty in Printing. Our ‘ Proclamation commanded a Reſtraint ‘ on both Sides, 'till the Paſſions of Men ‘ might ſubſide and calm. And had this ‘ been obey'd, as it ought, we had not now ‘ been toſs'd in this Tempeſt; and for ‘ any diſtreſſing or diſcountenancing of ‘ good Preachers, we know there is ‘ none, if they be (as they are called) ‘ Good; but our good People ſhall ne- ‘ ver want that ſpiritual Comfort which ‘ is due unto them. And for the Pre- ‘ ferments which we beſtow, we have ‘ ever made it our great Care to give ‘ them as Rewards of Deſert and Pains: ‘ But as the Preferments are ours, ſo ‘ will we be Judge of the Deſert our ‘ ſelf, and not be taught by a Remon- ‘ ſtrance.

‘ FOR Ireland, we think, in Caſe ‘ of Religion it is not worſe than ‘ Queen Elizabeth left it; and for other ‘ Affairs it is as good as we found it, ‘ nay, perhaps, better: And we take it ‘ for a great Diſparagement of our Go- ‘ vernment, that it ſhould be voiced ‘ that new Monaſteries, Nunneries, and ‘ other ſuperſtitious Houſes are erected ‘ and repleniſhed in Dublin, and other ‘ great Towns of that our Kingdom; ‘ for we aſſure our ſelf, our Deputy and ‘ Council there will not ſuffer God ‘ and our Government ſo to be diſhonour- ‘ ed, but we ſhould have had ſome Ac- ‘ count of it from them; and we may not ‘ endure to have our good People thus ‘ miſled with Shews.

‘ THERE is likewiſe ſomewhat conſide- ‘ rable in the Time when theſe Practices to ‘ undermine true Religion in our King- ‘ dom are ſet on Foot: The Remonſtrance ‘ tells us it is now, when Religion is op- ‘ poſed by open Force in all other Parts: ‘ But we muſt tell our People there are ‘ no undermining Practices at Home a- ‘ gainſt it, if they practiſe not againſt it ‘ that ſeem moſt to labour for it. For ‘ while Religion ſeems to be contended ‘ for in ſuch a factious Way (which can- ‘ not be God's Way) the Heat of that ‘ doth often melt away that which it la- ‘ bours earneſtly (but perhaps not wiſely)

Patents for Inventions.

40. 1. A GENERAL Liſt of Patents for Inventions in the fourth Year of King Charles.

157. 2. A SPECIAL Licence to Francis Tucker of London, Gent. and other Perſons to dig in ſearch of hidden Treaſure, on paying a quarter Part of what is found to the King; dated at Weſtminſter, April 19, 1630, under the Privy-Seal.

189. 3. A GRANT to Edward Ball, Edmund Laſſels, Robert Hampton, and William Audley, of the ſole Benefit (for the Term of fourteen Years) of a Method they had invented of Melting, Forging, and Fining of Iron, Lead, and Tin, and Boiling of Salt, Burning of Brick, Tile, and Lime, &c. with the Fuel of Peate or Turf, reduced into a Coal, without the Addition or Uſe of any Wood, Charcoal, Pitcoal or Seacoal. It is dated at Canbury the 13th of Auguſt. The Patentees were to pay 6 l. 13 s. 4 d. yearly Rent to the Crown.

200. 4. 'A LICENCE dated at Weſtminſter, 'November 11, under the Privy-Seal, 'to David Ramſey, Eſq; for the Term of 'fourteen Years, to have the ſole Uſe 'and Benefit of an Invention of his for ſe-'parating Gold and Silver from other 'Metals, on Condition of his paying to 'the Crown a third Part of all the Profits 'after the firſt Year of the aforeſaid 'Term.' Mr. Ramſey had ſet forth, that great Damage accrued to the Crown becauſe the ſeveral Farmers of the Mines of Copper, Tin, and Lead, for want of Experience to make a Separation of the Metals of the ſaid Mines, daily caſt away, and loſt much of thoſe Mines which contained Gold and Silver in them, and did not diſtinguiſh which were Mines-Royal and which were not. Therefore he had moreover, a Privilege for twenty-one Years to dig in the Counties of York, Somerſet, and Devon, where no Tin-works had been, for all Mines and Minerals, Works of Silver and Gold, or Lead holding Silver, or mix'd with Silver, and all other the Mines-Royal whatſoever, and to extract and refine the ſaid Oars, on paying to the Crown, after the two firſt Years of the ſaid Term, the tenth Part of all the Gold, Silver, Copper and Lead ſo extracted and refined.

236. 5. ANOTHER granting to David Ramſey, Eſq; one of the Grooms of the Privy Chamber, and to Thomas Parker, Edward Biſſe, and Richard Jarret, the ſole Benefit of their Invention for raiſing Water out of Mines and Coal-pits by a ſort of Barrel-Engine, for the Term of fourteen Years, on paying 1 l. 6 s. 8 d. a Year to the Crown during the ſaid Term. It is dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 21, 1631.

6. ANOTHER Patent of the ſame Date, granted to the ſaid David Ramſey, allowing him for the ſame Term of Years, on paying 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. per Ann. to the Crown, the ſole Benefit of his Inventions to multiply and make Salt-petre, in an open Field in four Acres of Ground, ſufficient to ſerve all the King's Dominions: To make any ſort of Mills go on ſtanding Waters by continual Motion, without the Help of Wind, Weight or Horſe: To make all ſorts of Tapiſtry without any Weaving-Loom, in a Method never before uſed: To make Boats, Ships and Barges go againſt ſtrong Wind and Tide: To make the Earth more fertile than uſual: To raiſe Water in a new Method from Mines and Coal-pits, and other low Places: To make hard Iron and Copper ſoft and tough; and to make yellow Wax white very ſpeedily. 239.

7. A SPECIAL Licence to Michael Parker of London, and Everard Maynwaring of Weſtminſter, Gent. who had with great Induſtry and Expence found out certain Springs of good Water, to ſet up a Lottery in order to raiſe Money for the Expence of Aquæducts, &c. to bring it to London and Weſtminſter; dated at Weſtminſter, Feb. 11. 242.

8. AN Indenture of the ſame Date, between King Charles on the one Part, and Sir Edward Stradling of Glamorganſhire, John Lyde of Oxfordſhire, Eſq; and the aboveſaid Michael Parker, on the other Part, for making an Aquæduct to convey Water to London and Weſtminſter from any Springs, Pools or Currents within a Mile and half of Hoddeſdon in the County of Hertford, that have not been heretofore uſed for ſupplying the ſaid Cities. The ſaid Sir Edward Stradling and John Lyde, their Heirs and Aſſigns, were to have the Benefit thereof for ever, on paying the King 4000 l. a Year out of the Profits of the ſaid Water-works. But there was a Proviſo, that they ſhould not in the ſaid Water-work diminiſh any of the Springs, or take away any of the Water already brought into London and Weſtminſter by Sir Hugh Middleton, or by any other Water-work then in being. 244.

9. A GRANT of Privy-Seal to Stephen Gibbs, of an Invention for Defence of Marſh-Lands againſt Inundations of the Sea, and for other Purpoſes; dated at Canbury 251.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX

Canbury, March 26. He was to have the ſole Privilege of it for fourteen Years, on paying 20 s. a Year during the ſaid Term to the Crown.

305. 10. A PATENT to Capt. John Gilbert, and James Freeſe of London, Merchant, for the making of Engines called Water-Ploughs, or any other Inſtruments for taking up of Sand, Gravel, Shelves and Banks out of the River of Thames, and all Waters and Harbours for the Term of twenty-one Years, on paying 6 l. 13 s. 4 d. to the Crown; dated July 8, at Canbury, under the Privy-Seal. There was a Proviſo in this Patent in favour of a Grant made by the late King to Robert Crump for the ſole making and Practice of an Engine by him invented for raiſing of Waters, or for draining of Mines.

365. 11. ANOTHER to Richard Norwood, granting him the ſole Benefit of his Invention of an Engine for Diving and bringing up of Goods caſt away by Shipwreck. It was to laſt during the Term of fourteen Years, and was dated at Weſtminſter, April 2, 1732.

371. 12. ANOTHER to Thomas Grent, M. D. of the ſole Uſe and Benefit of certain Inſtruments by him invented, for the Term of fourteen Years, viz. 1. An Inſtrument called the Wind's-Mate, for the navigating of Ships and Veſſels when becalm'd. 2. A Fiſh-Call, or a Looking-Glaſs for Fiſhes in the Sea, very uſeful for Fiſhermen to call all ſorts of Fiſh to their Nets, Spears or Hooks, in the Nature of Fowlers Bird-Calls. 3. A Water-Bowl, being a very ſerviceable manual Inſtrument for preſerving Houſes and Ships from Fire. 4. A Building-Mould, or Stone-Preſs, for making Stone-Windows, Door-Caſes, Chimney-pieces, &c. 5. A moveable Hydronlike, or Chamber Weather-Call, which being placed in any Room, or by the Bed-ſide, cauſeth ſweet Sleep to thoſe that by hot Fevers, or otherwiſe, cannot take Reſt, and cooleth and moiſtens the dry hot Air either with or without muſical Sounds. 6. A Crane Corrected for drawing any Liquor from one Veſſel to another, without ſucking or forcing it by the Mouth. He was to pay 1 l. 6 s. 8 d. yearly Acknowledgment to the Crown for this Privilege, which is dated June 20.

554. 13. A PATENT granted under the Privy-Seal to Jerome Lanyer, for his Invention called Londridiana, being an Art and Myſtery, by affixing of Wool, Silk, and other Materials of diverſe Colours upon Linnen-Cloth, Silk, Cotton, Leather, and other Subſtances, with Oil, Size, and other Cements, to make them uſeful and ſerviceable for Hangings, &c. He was to have the ſole Practice and Profit of his ſaid Invention for the Term of fourteen Years, on paying 10 l. yearly Rent to his Majeſty. It was dated at Weſtminſter, May 21, 1634.

CHARLES I.

14. 'A PROCLAMATION for erecting 563.
'and making of Boiling Furnaces, for leſ-
'ſening the Annoyance occaſioned by
'Smoak, and for ſaving of Fuel; da-
'ted at Greenwich, June 25.

IT declares, that Capt Thorneff Francke had a Patent for this Invention on the 2d of November laſt, to continue for fourteen Years, and that the ſame had been invaded by other Perſons without his Licence. It alſo certifies of what great Benefit the Invention was to all the King's Subjects, eſpecially Brewers, Dyers, Soap-boilers, Salt-makers, and all others who had or might have Occaſion to uſe boiling Furnaces, as alſo for leſſening of the great Annoyance of Smoak, ſo obnoxious to London, and all other Cities and Towns-Corporate; and that the Brewers in particular had confeſſed that it ſaved them a third Part of Expence in Fuel, and three Parts in four of the Charge of Iron heretofore expended in ſupporting the Furnace; that whereas before they brewed but thrice a Week, they now were able to brew five times, and that the Smoak ariſing from the new invented Funnels was not half ſo much as that which came from the old Furnaces.

15. 'A GRANT of a Privy-Seal to 564.
'William Bolton, Grocer, for his In'vention of the Art and Myſtery of 'making the Duſt of Indico into In-
'dico, and bringing rich Indico into 'the Nature of flat, by ſoaking and grind-
'ing of it.

HIS Privilege for the ſole making of this Duſt into Indico, &c. was to continue fourteen Years, on paying the annual Rent of forty Marks to the Crown. It is dated at Weſtminſter, July 2, under the Privy-Seal.

16. ANOTHER of fourteen Years Privilege to William Parham, John Prewet, Ambroſe Prewet, and Thomas Dorney, Gentlemen, who had invented an Engine for the Earing and Ploughing of Land without Horſes or Oxen, to be drove by two Men only, and a third to hold or guide the Plough or Sullow. They were to pay 20 l. a Year for it to the Crown. The Patent bears Date July 17. 569.

17. ANOTHER Grant, under the Privy-Seal, of the like Term, to John Bulmer, Eſq; Maſter-Surveyor of the King's Mines, Minerals, and Engines for Water-works, for the ſole Uſe of his own Engines and Inventions for the taking up of Ships and Goods ſunk at Sea; dated July 18. 571.

18. A

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. 572.

'18. A Grant, under the Privy-Seal, to Sir Sanders Duncombe, for the ſole uſing 'and putting forth to hire of covered 'Chairs, which he was to procure to be 'made at his own Coſts and Charges, for 'carrying thoſe Perſons that deſired it, in 'and about London and Weſtminſter, and 'the Suburbs.' The Preamble to this Grant, which is dated Oct. 1. at Canbury, and was to extend fourteen Years, takes notice that the Streets were, at that time, much incumbered with an unneceſſary multitude of Coaches, to the great Danger of Paſſengers, and the Impediment of the neceſſary Carts and Carriages; and that the Patentee had repreſented in his Petition for the Grant, that few Coaches were uſed beyond the Seas, becauſe the People were frequently carried up and down in covered Chairs.

577. '19. A Grant to John Day, Citizen 'and Fiſhmonger, and ſworn Broker of 'London, for the ſole Printing of the week-'ly Bills of the Prices of all foreign Com-'modities, for the Term of fourteen Years.' The Patent, which is ſealed with the Privy-Seal, at Weſtminſter, Nov. 1. declares it to have been his own Invention; and that it had been diſcontinued near three Years, to the great Hindrance of the Merchants in their Commerce and Correſpondence, to the Diſgrace of the City of London, and to the Prejudice of the Cuſtoms.

656. 20. Letters Patent of Privilege, for twenty-one Years, granted, under the Privy-Seal, to William Braithwaite, Reader and Schoolmaſter, for the ſole printing and ſale of his Books, containing an eaſy Method which he had accompliſhed to facilitate Muſic, both for expedite and exquiſite compoſing, and for ſpeedy and pleaſant teaching, and learning it by Voice, or Inſtruments; and his Invention of a Method to expreſs the long and ſhort Syllables in the Greek and Latin Tongues, by the Letters themſelves, without the Accents, to the great advantage of Poetry, Oratory, and of a graceful Pronunciation of the Greek and Latin Tongues. They are dated Aug. 18, 1635.

716. 21. A Writ of Privy-Seal, granting to Francis Chamberlayne, Eſq; a Licence for the ſole making of Wines with dried Grapes, or Raiſins, for the Term of fourteen Years, on paying forty Shillings Annuity to the Crown, according to his own Way and Invention in his Travels. Dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 4, 1636.

RUSHWORTH ſays, another Proclamation came out for him on the 24th of March following*.

80. 2. A Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of York and others, to compound with the Popiſh Recuſants in the Counties of Staffordſhire, Derby, Cheſter, Lancaſter, Nottingham, York, Lincoln, Weſtmorland, Cumberland, Northumberland and Durham, for all Forfeitures due to the late King, to Queen Elizabeth, or to himſelf; and alſo for all ſuch as ſhall become due hereafter. 'Tis dated June 8, 1629, at Weſtminſter.

206. 3. A ſpecial Commiſſion of the Privy-Seal to ſeveral Perſons, to examine all People going out of the Kingdom upon Oath, and to adminiſter the Oath to them, which is mentioned in the Act of the 3d of James, intitled, An Act for diſcovering and repreſſing of Popiſh Recuſants. 'Tis dated Nov. 19, 1630.

738. 4. A Commiſſion of the ſame nature as the former of June 8, 1629, and directed as that is to the Archbiſhop of York and others. 'Tis dated Jan. 27, 1636, at Weſtminſter.

746. 5. THE Form of the Grants of the Leaſes of the Eſtates forfeited by the Popiſh Recuſants.

Ports.

750. '1. A Commiſſion, under the Privy-Seal, 'granted to the Lords Commiſſioners of the 'Treaſury and others, for the Repair of 'Dover Pier; dated Feb. 19, 1636, at Weſtminſter.'

IT ſets forth, that in October and December laſt ſuch great Breaches had been made

* He was born in Lincolnſhire, Anno 1566, became a Student of Trinity-College in Cambridge, about 1583, and went thro' a Courſe of Philoſophy there; but before he took a Degree, he went to Rome, and ran another Courſe in Divinity, in which making great Proficiency, he was ſent by his Superior to Valladolid in Spain, where he took the Degree of D. D. From thence, it is ſuppoſed, that he went in the Miſſion of England, and after ſome Years ſtay in that Employment, was ſent for to Rome, to be conſulted with about the Affairs of the Engliſh Popiſh Clergy; which being finiſhed according to his Mind, he was, on the fourth of Auguſt 1625, created, by Pope Urban, Biſhop of Calcedon, and ſent over hither to exerciſe Epiſcopal Juriſdiction over the Catholics in this Kingdom. His chief Reſidence was in Lancaſhire, where he appeared in his Pontificalibus, conferring Orders, and beſtowing Benedictions, to the Wonder, and almoſt Terror of the Common People; of which the King having notice, renewed the former Proclamation for apprehending him, with an Offer of 100 l. Reward beſides the Forfeitures legally accruing to the Crown from the Perſon that entertained him. This, together with the Perſecution of his Office of Biſhop, raiſed by the regular Clergy, who not only wrote againſt his Epiſcopal Power, but made ſuch a ſtir among the Brethren againſt the Inconveniency of having a Biſhop in England, that the Pope, about 1634, was forced to interpoſe to prevent the Scandal, obliged him to fly to France, where he became a Confident of the Cardinal de Richelieu, who conferred on him the Abbotſhip of Charroux in Poictou, which he kept 'till 1647, when Cardinal Mazarine took it into his own hands. As for the Biſhop, he was a general Scholar, well read in the Controverſies betwixt the Papiſts and Proteſtants, and did great Service to the Cauſe he profeſſed, by writing ſeveral Books, viz. The Prudential Balance of Religion; and an Anſwer to Biſhop Bramhall's Vindication of the Church of England from criminal Schiſm, &c. and ſome others, for which we refer to A. Wood. He died at Paris, March 8, 1654, O. S. and was buried in the Church of the Engliſh Nuns, of the Order of St. Auſtin, in the Suburbs of St. Victor.

made by Tempeſts in the Walls of the Harbour, and ſo much Damage done to the Heads and Outworks, that the Repairs would coſt 2000 l. For this end the Merchant-Strangers, who uſed to pay for the Benefit of that Harbour but 4 d. for a Bale of Goods, ſhould hereafter pay 12 d. more for the Term of three Years.

Preſentations to Benefices, &c.

40. 1. A general Liſt of Preſentations to Benefices in the 4th Year of King Charles.

136. 2. ANOTHER of thoſe granted in his fifth Year.

257. 3. ANOTHER of thoſe granted in his ſixth Year.

348. 4. ANOTHER of thoſe granted in his ſeventh Year.

433. 5. ANOTHER of thoſe granted in his eighth Year.

513. '6. A Certificate of the Preſentation to 'the Biſhoprick of Man, ſigned by the 'Lord-Keeper, the Lord Chief Juſtices, and 'the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, 'the 17th of Feb. 1634.' By which it appears, that in the Reign of King Henry IV, the Patronage of this Biſhoprick was granted to one of the Progenitors of the Earl of Derby; that the Biſhoprick being twice vacant in the 12th and 18th of Elizabeth, the Earl of Derby commended and nominated two Perſons to the Biſhoprick, humbly praying her Majeſty to write to the Archbiſhop of York, to conſecrate and inſtall them; which was done accordingly: and that in the ſeventh of Jac. I. the ſole Patronage of this Biſhoprick was confirmed to the Earl of Derby and his Succeſſors.

518. 7. A general Liſt of Preſentations to Benefices, in the ninth Year of this Reign.

608. 8. ANOTHER of thoſe in his tenth Year.

768. 9. ANOTHER of thoſe in his eleventh Year.

Proviſions.

64. 1. A Proclamation againſt the Exportation of Corn and Grain, by reaſon of the late unſeaſonable Weather; dated at Greenwich, May 2, 1629.

116. 2. ANOTHER for reſtraint of killing, dreſſing, and eating of Fleſh in Lent, or on Fiſh-days appointed by Law; dated at Whitehall, Jan. 18, 1630. It is of the ſame kind with thoſe taken notice of in our Extract of the former Tome of the Fœdera.

195. '3. A Proclamation for preventing the 'Dearth of Corn and Victuals; dated at 'Hampton-Court, Sept. 28.' It took notice, that there was very great Expectation at that time; of a general ſcarcity of Corn, &c. in the following Year; and, therefore it is hereby required, that according to ancient and laudable Cuſtom there be a general Abſtinence from Suppers on Fridays, and on the Eves of Faſt-Days, and on Wedneſdays and Saturdays in the Ember Weeks, and the Lent-Seaſon; and that the Poor may be relieved out of what ſhall be ſaved by ſuch Abſtinence, and by a ſober and moderate Diet at other Times. The Feaſts uſually kept at the Companies Halls in London, were for the ſame reaſon to be forbore; and it was recommended by his Majeſty to ſuch Perſons whoſe turn it came to be, to bear the Charges of thoſe Feaſts, to allow, at leaſt, one Half of the Charge which they hereby ſave to the Relief of the Poor. CHARLES I.

329. 4. ANOTHER Proclamation, forbidding the eating and ſale of Fleſh in Lent, and other prohibited Times; dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 27, 1632.

376. 5. ANOTHER, commanding the due Execution of the Laws concerning Lent and Faſting-Days; dated at Greenwich, June 24.

448. '6. A Proclamation for ſettling the 'Price of Victuals within the Verge of the 'King's Houſhold, during his intended 'progreſs to Scotland; dated at White-'hall, May 4, 1633.' The Clerk of the Market of the Houſhold was to aſſeſs the Prices of all Proviſions, or elſe his lawful Deputy, and to fix the ſame upon the Gates of the Court, and other Places in the Verge; which Rates were to be conformed to, both by Buyer and Seller, on pain of Impriſonment, Fine, and ſuch farther Puniſhment as ſhould follow.

449. 7. ANOTHER of the Day following, for the good Government of the King's Houſhold in his Journey to and from Scotland.

476. '8. His Majeſty's Confirmation of a De-'cree for the Prices of Victuals which was 'made the thirteenth of November, in the 'Court of Star-Chamber.'

INGROSSING of Victuals, and particularly of Hay, being therein declared to be a great occaſion of inhancing the Prices, and being an act puniſhable both by the Statute and Common-Law; the Judges and Juſtices were required to make diligent ſearch for ſuch Ingroſſers, and to ſee them ſeverely puniſhed. No Chandler was hereafter to buy any Corn, Meal, or Flour, to ſell again: No Taverner, or Vintner, was to ſell, or make ready for ſale, any ſort of Fleſh, or Fiſh, or other Victual but Bread; nor cauſe, or procure the Trade of a Cook to be ſet up under his Roof, or in his Neighbourhood, or permit any thing but Bread to be brought into his Houſe, to be eat by any of his Gueſts: No Baker was to ſell Bread for more than thirteen to the

Foedera Tom. XIX.

Dozen. None that kept Ordinaries, or Victualling Houſes, were to take more than 2 s. per Head for a Meal, nor more than 8 d. for each Servant attending his Maſter. No Taverner, or other Victualler, was to ſuffer Cards, Dice, Tables, or other unlawful Games at his Houſe. No Inn-keeper, or other, in London, or within ten Miles, was to take more than 6 d. for a Horſe ſtanding in his Stable, at Hay, a Day and a Night, nor more than 6 d. for a peck of Oats, without taking any thing for Litter, nor more than 1 d. for ſtanding of a Horſe in his Stable a whole Day without Meat, nor more than 2 d. for a Horſe ſtanding at Hay in the Day, and going away before Night. This Act was dated the fourteenth of Dec. 1633.

514 9. A Proclamation for the Prices of Poultry, Rabbets, Butter, Candles, Charcoal, and all manner of Fewel and Wood; dated at Whitehall, Feb. 12, 1634.

579 '10. A Proclamation to reform and prevent Frauds in the Weights, and Casks, 'of Butter; dated Nov. 13, 1634. at 'Theobalds.'

It was founded on a Petition of the Freemen of London, trading in Butter and Cheeſe, ſhewing, that whereas every Firkin of Butter uſed, time out of mind, to weigh 56 lb. neat, beſides the Cask, and the Cask 8 lb. and no more; yet by the Avarice and Fraud of the Makers and Packers of Butter, moſt part of the Firkins fill'd and pack'd, weigh'd ſome 12, and ſome 14 lb. the empty Cask: and both Cask and Butter, for moſt part, weighed not above 60 or 62 lb. and that the Makers and Packers of Butter commonly pack'd up corrupt Butter with their beſt Cream Butter. And it declares that, purſuant to the Petition and Recommendation of the Freemen of London, his Majeſty, on the 2d of July laſt, by his Letters-Patent, created and made an Office, as well for the Gauging of Butter, as for the branding and marking of all empty Butter-Casks and Veſſels, and granted the ſaid Office to Captain John Read during his natural Life, to be executed by him and his Deputies throughout England and Wales, to receive from all Perſons, who ſhall bring ſuch Cask or Veſſel to be marked or branded, 2 d. for every Firkin, and in proportion for every leſſer or greater Cask or Veſſel. And by this Proclamation all Makers and Packers of Butter were forbid to fill or pack up any Butter after the 1ſt of March next, in any Veſſel whatſoever, 'till marked as aforeſaid by Captain John Read, or his Deputies: all Perſons were likewiſe forbid to buy Butter put up in any Veſſel, which had not ſuch Mark; and the making or packing of bad Butter with good Cream Butter was prohibited, on pain of incurring the Penalties of the Star-Chamber.

Charles I.

'11. A Proclamation againſt the Exportation of Butter; dated at Oatlands, July '28, 1635.' 648.

It appears that this King, in the 6th Year of his Reign, had granted Letters-Patent to George Lord Goring, and Sir Henry Hungate, for exporting 3200 Barrels of Butter yearly from Boſton, Hull, and Newcaſtle, for the Term of 21 Years, at ſuch times only, as Butter was not above 4 d. a Pound.

12. A Commiſſion to Sir Anthony Drury, &c. to inquire into the Frauds committed by his Majeſty's Purveyors for the County of Norfolk; dated at Canbury, Aug. 17. 652.

'13. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal to Sir Henry Spiller, Sir Abraham 'Dawes, and others, for reſtraining the 'Exportation of ſalted Butter out of the 'Kingdom without legal Authority; dated 'at Weſtminſter, Feb. 23, 1636.' 754.

They were to inquire into, and puniſh all Frauds committed in this Article, from the beginning of this Reign to the 15th of September laſt.

Revenue.

'1. A Warrant of Privy-Seal to the 'Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c. for the 'Payment of divers Sums of Money due 'from the Crown to the late Duke of Bucks; 'dated at Weſtminſter, May 18, 1629.' 73.

'Tis obſervable, that mention is herein made of 10,000 l. remaining unſatisfied upon a Privy-Seal of 20,000 l. in the Name of Philip Burlemachi, dated Octob. 12, 1625. and of 5353 l. unpaid upon another Privy-Seal for 6000 l. in the name of the ſaid Burlemachi.

Mr. Ruſhworth, who has inſerted a Privy-Seal by King Charles, directed to the Treaſurer, &c. of the Exchequer, to pay to Philip Burlemach of London, Merchant, the Sum of 30,000 l. to be remitted to him by Bill of Exchange into the Low-Countries and Germany, to Sir William Balfour and John Dalbier, Eſq; for levying and providing certain Numbers of Horſes, with Arms for Horſe and Foot, to be brought over to England for the King's Service; ſays, that this Merchant being called before the laſt Houſe of Commons, confeſs'd that he received the ſaid 30,000 l. by Privy-Seal for the buying of Horſes, that 1000 of them were actually levied, that thoſe Horſes and their Riders were to come over, and Arms provided for them in Holland; but that he heard a Countermand was gone to ſtay them.

It was upon the Diſcovery which the aforeſaid Houſe of Commons made of this Privy-Seal, that they grounded their Complaint plaint in their Remonſtrance of the King's Deſign to bring Foreign Forces into the Nation.

107. 2. A Warrant of Privy-Seal to Richard Lord Weſton, Lord High-Treaſurer, to execute all the Power and Authority veſted in Sir Francis Cottington, as Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, during his abſence in Spain, whither he was going Ambaſſador. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, Oct. 27, 1629.

123. 3. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to inquire into the Value of the Lands alienated from the Crown, and to compound with the Owners; dated Feb. 24, 1630, under the Privy Seal.

129. '4. A Commiſſion, under the Privy-Seal, 'to inquire into the Quantity and Value of 'the Goods and Merchandiſe taken by 'Captain David Kirk from the French 'that were remaining in the College of the 'Jeſuits at Quebec Fort in Canada; dated 'March 5.'

THE French Settlements in Canada, which this Officer deſtroyed, were recovered by them in the Reign of King Charles II.

467. 5. A Commiſſion to examine and paſs the Accompts of Henry Poer, Viſcount Valencia, and Maſter of the Ordnance, who was by the late Duke of Bucks preferred to be Colonel of a Regiment of Foot in the Expedition to Cadiz. 'Tis dated at Weſtminſter, May 14, 1633.

721. 6. A ſpecial Warrant to the Treaſury to deliver out to the Queen Conſort, that called the Queen's Gold, ariſing from the Fines and other Sums of Money, out of which the Queen's Gold ought to be levied; dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 19, 1636.

Riots.

96. 1. A Proclamation for diſcovering and apprehending of thoſe Malefactors, who were Actors in the late inſolent Riots and Murders committed in Fleet-ſtreet on the 10th Day of July, of which we gave an account in p. 756. The Surgeons eſpecially, who had any hurt or wounded Men in their Cure, were enjoined to diſcover them to the Lord-Preſident of the Council, &c. if they knew, or but ſuſpected them to have been Actors in the ſaid Tumult. This Proclamation is dated at Whitehall, July 18, 1629.

705. 2. A Commiſſion to Thomas Earl of Arundel, and others, to ſuppreſs certain unlawful and riotous Aſſemblies on the Borders, contrary to the Peace of both Kingdoms; dated at Weſtminſter, Nov. 30, 1635.

Rivers.

597. 1. A Grant under the Privy-Seal enabling Thomas Skipwith to make the River Soare, which falls into the Trent, navigable for Boats and Barges from the Town of Leiceſter; dated March 10, 1635.

CHARLES I.

686. 2. A ſpecial Commiſſion for making the River Wey, that runs from Guilford into the Thames at Weybridge, navigable for Barges, Boats, &c. dated at Canbury, Sept. 8, 1635.

Ship-Money.

6, 8. 1. A ſpecial Writ to Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, requiring him, for the Safeguard of the Seas, and Defence of the Realm, to iſſue forth Writs from the High Court of Chancery, with Duplicates of them under the Great Seal, to the ſeveral Counties, Cities and Towns of England thereafter mentioned, to provide Ships, Men, Ammunition, Proviſions and Wages.

THE City of London, which by the Writ bearing Teſte the 20th of October, 1634, was commanded to provide ſeven Ships of War, furniſhed with Men, Victuals, and all warlike Proviſions and Ammunition, to be at Portſmouth by the firſt of March next enſuing, and to continue from thence 26 Weeks in the King's Service, for Defence of the Seas, and other Cauſes in the ſaid Writ contained, preſented an humble Petition to the King, ſetting forth, that they thought themſelves exempt and free from that Charge by ancient Privileges, Grants, and Acts of Parliament, which they were ready to produce. But this Plea was ſo far from inducing the King to lay the Project aſide, that the Tax, which was impoſed in the Year 1634 for the Year 1635 upon the Maritime Towns only, was in 1635 extended for 1636 all over the Kingdom, to the Inland Counties and Towns.

THE Reaſon, or rather Pretence, for this General Tax, was the great Danger of the Kingdom from Privateers and Pyrates, and from the League lately concluded between France and the Low-Countries; from whence the King inferred, that the two moſt conſiderable Maritime Powers being united, it was abſolutely neceſſary, that England ſhould have a ſtrong Fleet to preſerve the Dominion of the Sea, otherwiſe ſhe might be inſulted, and her Trade diſturbed. This Tax being impoſed ſolely by virtue of the Prerogative-Royal, ſeveral Perſons refuſed to pay it, and ſome actually ſued the Magiſtrates and other Officers appointed to levy it, aſſerring that the Subject could not be taxed but by Act of Parliament. This Oppoſition was the Reaſon that in the year 1636, Ship-Money amounted to no more than 200,000 l. tho' the King expected a much larger Sum. Mean while his Majeſty imagining, that by help of this Tax he ſhould have a ſettled Revenue; beſides, that it wou'd be a Precedent to exert his his Prerogative on other Occaſions, reſolved to ſupport his Project at any rate.

BUT to guard it againſt all Objections of its being illegal and contrary to his Anſwer to the Petition of Right, he had a mind to ſhew he was authorized on this occaſion to make the moſt of his Prerogative. To that end, he conſulted the Judges of the Realm, who depending wholly upon the Court, very readily decided the matter for the King, and gave him their Opinion in Writing; but Whitelock ſays, it was very much owing to the Sollicitation of the Chief-Juſtice Finch, who promiſed preferment to ſome, and ſeverely threatened others whom he found doubting. The King apprehending that the Examples of ſeveral, who refuſed to pay this Tax, might be of dangerous Conſequence, publiſhed their Opinion for the Satisfaction of his Subjects; nevertheleſs, it created a general Offence and Odium. The Nobility and Gentry had reaſon to be jealous of any Methods of raiſing Money out of Parliament. The Merchants and Traders had the mortification to think that at laſt the whole Burden of it would lie upon them: tho' the Clergy at preſent were taxed as well as the reſt, yet they were favoured in the Levy; and the Country-Farmers thought it little leſs than ſeizing their Corn and Cattle to be ſent on ſhipboard. The Murmurs were indeed ſo univerſal, and ſo artfully improved by the Enemies of the Court, that they looked upon the Death of the Attorney-General Noy *, who projected it, (which happened on the 9th of Auguſt 1634.) as a Judgment on him from Heaven. Lord Clarendon ſpeaking of this matter, ſays, that 'Sir John Finch, Chief-Juſtice 'of the Common-Pleas, took up Ship-'Money, where Mr. Noy left it, and car-'ried it up to a Pinnacle, from whence he 'almoſt broke his own Neck, having in-'fluenced his Brethren to concur in a Judg-'ment, which they had all cauſe to repent.'

DR. Kennet ſays, that the Charges which were given by the Judges at the Aſſizes, in favour of this Impoſition, only alarm'd the Country-People, and made them feel the Burthen before it touch'd them.

IN London, Richard Chambers a Merchant, the ſame that ſuffered ſo much for Tonnage and Poundage, being committed Priſoner by Sir Edward Bromfield Lord-Mayor, for refuſing to pay Ship-Money, commenced a Suit againſt him for Treſpaſs and falſe Impriſonment; but Sir Robert Berkeley, one of the Judges of the King's Bench, would not ſuffer the Legality of Ship-Money to be ſo much as argued by Chambers's Counſel, declaring in open Court, 'That 'there was a Rule of Law and a Rule of 'Government; and that many things which 'might not be done by the Rule of Law, 'might be done by the Rule of Govern-'ment.' But this Diſtinction was thought new and dangerous, and this ſilencing of a Cauſe made People more ſuſpicious of the Merits of it.

CHARLES I.

THE City of London, who had moſt ability, and indeed moſt reaſon to bear the Burden, betrayed ſo much Averſion to it, that the Lords of the Privy-Council wrote to them to adviſe their Submiſſion; but they met with ſuch a ſtout Return, that their Lordſhips were forced to write again on the eighth of Auguſt, 1636, to inform the Lord-Mayor and Court of Aldermen, that 'they had received a denial by ſome 'of the Aldermen, in the Name of the Ci-'ty, to their late Letter, for the ſetting 'forth of Shipping, and Excuſes had been 'ſince made on the like occaſion; which 'they could not impute to any thing but 'want of Duty: and therefore in his Ma-'jeſty's Name, their Lordſhips require them 'to ſee the Directions of their Letter per-'formed upon their Allegiance, and as they 'will anſwer the contrary at their Peril.' When the City perceived they could not ſhake off the Burden, they, however, deſired a Mitigation of it, and therefore, on the eleventh of Auguſt, petitioned for an Abatement, ſays Dr. Kennet, of the twenty Ships rated upon the City, to ten Ships, and two Pinnaces; but this too was denied in a manner, that made the Denial more grievous: for Mr. Secretary Cook, by Order of the Privy-Council, told them, 'That the former Commandment was ne-'ceſſary, and the Charge upon them was 'not immoderate; that Petitions and Plead-'ings againſt ſuch Commandment, were 'not to be received; and that they ought 'to know, that the Precedents of former 'Times were Obedience, and not Direction.' Now it was that the King conſulted his Judges, by Letters dated the ſecond of Feb. 1636, in the twelfth Year of his Reign, the Influence and Effect of which, is thus deſcribed by Lord Clarendon.

'It is notorious, that the Preſſure of Ship-'Money was borne with much more Chear-'fulneſs before the Judgment, than ever 'it was afterwards; Men before, pleaſing 'themſelves with doing ſomewhat for the 'King's Service, as a Teſtimony of their 'Affection, which they were not bound to 'do. But when they heard this demanded 'in

* Ruſhworth ſays, that after his Deceaſe, Papers were put upon Poſts reflecting on him; that his Body being opened, a Bundle of Proclamations was found in his Head, Moth-eaten Records in his Maw, and a Barrel of Soap in his Belly; alluding, no doubt, to the Multiplicity of Proclamations in this Reign, and to the old Records, which were tumbled over every day to find Patterns for Monopolies, &c.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

'in a Court of Law, as a Right, and 'found it by ſworn Judges of the Law 'adjudged ſo, upon ſuch Grounds and 'Reaſons, as every Stander-by was able 'to ſwear was not Law, and ſo had loſt 'the Pleaſure and Delight of being kind 'and dutiful to the King, and inſtead of 'giving were required to pay; and by a 'Logic, which left no Man any thing that 'he might call his own. They no more 'looked upon it as the Caſe of one Man, 'but the Caſe of the Kingdom; nor as an 'Impoſition laid on them by the King, but 'by the Judges, which they thought them-'ſelves bound in Conſcience to the Public 'Juſtice not to ſubmit to. The Damage 'and Miſchief, adds the noble Lord, cannot 'be expreſſed which the Crown and State 'ſuſtained by the deſerved Reproach and 'Infamy that attended the Judges, by be-'ing made uſe of in this, and the like Acts 'of Power, there being no poſſibility to 'preſerve the Dignity, Reverence and Eſti-'mation of the Laws themſelves, but by 'the Integrity and Innocency of the Judges.'

THE Ships and Compliments of Men, which every County was charged to furniſh beſides double Equipage, Ammunition, Wages, and Victuals for each Ship, are ſet down in this Tome of the Fœdera, from p. 658, to 670, as follows.

CHARLES I.

MR. Ruſhworth is apprehenſive, that there may be ſome Miſtake committed in the Sums of the Welch Counties, becauſe the Copy thereof, given to the Printer, was obſcurely written.

HE has given the Names of thoſe Lords who ſigned the Inſtructions for aſſeſſing and levying the Ship-Money for 1635, as follows:

William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.
Lord-Keeper Coventry.
Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London.
Henry Mancheſter.
J. Lenox.
Lindſey.
Arundel.
Pembroke.
Edward Dorſet.
Edward Newburg.
Fra. Cottington.
Henry Vane.
Thomas Jermin.
John Cook.
Francis Windebank.

WHITELOCK ſays, that 'when the 'Judges were ordered by the Lord-Keeper 'Coventry to promote this Tax in their 'Circuits, and to perſuade the People to a 'ready Obedience to the Writs for Pay-'ment of it, they went about it in their 'Charges at the Aſſizes with great Zeal 'and Gravity, but did not convince many 'of the Legality of it; and tho' this ille-'gal Pill was gilt, it would not go down: 'but many People, eſpecially the knowing 'Gentry, expreſs'd great Diſcontent at this 'Burden, as an Impoſition againſt Law, and 'the Rights of the Subjects.'

FOEDERA Tom. XIX 697.

'2. A special Commission to Robert Earl 'of Lindsey and others, for the preparing 'and furnishing of Ships; dated at West-'minster, Nov. 16, 1635.'

IT declares that the King having sent his Writs to the Sheriffs of the Counties, and Magistrates of Towns, for providing and equipping 45 Ships and Pinnaces at their own Charges, with Men, Rigging, Ammunition, and other Necessaries for the Year ensuing, was pleased to lend Ships and Pinnaces of his own to those Counties and Towns that could not find them for the Service, and desired to be supplied therewith by the Government. Accordingly the Officers of the Army were to furnish them with such Ships, Men, and Provisions, and the Master of the Ordnance was to provide the necessary Guns and Ammunition, for which the Treasurer of the Navy was to receive from the Sheriffs and Magistrates of the Counties and Towns all the Moneys to be paid in for the said Ships, &c.

Titles to Estates.

4' 1. A Proclamation by the King at Whitehall, Dec. 6, 1628, declaring his Majesty's Royal Grace and Pleasure to confirm to his Subjects their defective Titles, Estates, and Possessions, (as well by colour of former Grants, as without any Grant from the Crown,) by his Commission issued for that 670. purpose. See others of the same kind, p. 167. All which were with a View to bring in more Revenue to the Crown: for the Monies which were to come to the Exchequer, upon the Composition with the Popish Recusants, fell very short; and the King, instead of receiving two full Thirds of their Estates, had little above a 10th or a 12th, especially in the North, where the Compositions were highest. For example, Roger Widdrington of Cartington in Northumberland, Esq; paid 60 l. a Year into the Exchequer, his Estate being worth above 500 l. a Year; William Anderton, of Anderton in Lancashire, Esq; paid but 20 l. a Year, his Estate being equal to Widdrington's; Francis Harcourt of Ranton in Staffordshire, paid but 25 l. a Year, tho' his Estate was worth above 200 l. a Year; Sir Henry Merry of Derbyshire, and Sir Ralph Ellecare of Yorkshire, whose Estates were worth 600 l. a Year, the former paid but 66 l. 13 s. 4 d. a Year, and the latter only 50 l. a Year; and Sir John Thimbleby of Lincolnshire, Knt. paid but 160 l. a Year, tho' his Estate was estimated at 1500 l. per Annum. The Deficiency of this and other Projects, put Noy the Attorney-General upon the above-mentioned Project of Ship-Money.

5. 2. AN Abstract of the several Heads and Branches of his Majesty's Commission of Grace, for the Securing, Settling, and Confirming to his Subjects their defective Titles, Estates, and Possessions, by which his Majesty's Commissioners have power to compound. CHARLES I.

97. 3. A special Commission, under the Privy-Seal, ordering Letters-Patent to be made forth, under the Great-Seal, and directed to certain Scots Gentlemen therein mentioned, to examine the Claim of the Earl and Countess of Suffolk on the one part, and of Sir David Hume of Wedderbury on the other, to certain Fisheries in the Water of Tweed, which had been the occasion of unlawful Assemblies, Riots, and other Misdemeanors. 'Tis dated at Westminster, Aug. 5, 1629.

167 '4. A Proclamation, dated at Whitehall, 'May 27, 1630, of the same kind with the 'above, dated the 6th of December, 1628.'

THE Design of these Commissions was opposed by the Judges, who were the occasion of quashing it. But tho' the King receded, yet the Fondness he discovered for it, deprived him of the Merit of dropping it, for it look'd as if the Court was pursuing Measures not justifiable by Law. Mr. Rapin observes, that the King pretended these were Acts of pure Grace and Favour, and that all his Aim was to secure the Possession of Lands to those, who held them by disputable Titles. But notwithstanding this, these Commissions were look'd upon as a manifest Oppression. The truth is, says he, that under colour of examining defective Titles, all the Proprietors were obliged to produce their Titles; to which, how good soever they might be, the Commissioners were sure to make Objections. So, to avoid a Law-Suit with the King, in which they were certain they should be cast, considering how the Judges stood affected, the Proprietors were forced to compound with the Commissioners, and give a Sum of Money to secure their Lands from the danger of being re-annexed to the Crown. A certain Author says, these Commissions were much like to that granted by Henry VII. to Empson and Dudley, for taking Fines and Forfeitures on obsolete Penal Laws.

585. '5. A special Commission to the Lord 'Cottington, &c. to compound with the 'Owners of divers Lands, for the Purchase 'thereof, in order to inclose the same as a 'new Park for Deer near Richmond; dated 'at Westminster, under the Privy-Seal, 'December 12, 1634.'

IT extends into the Parishes, Villages, and Hamlets of Richmond, Petersham, and Ham, Kingston, Wimbledon, Mortlake, &c. and is inclosed by a Brick Wall of eleven Miles in circuit.

6. A Commission granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord High-Treasurer, the 670.

FOEDERA Tom. XIX.

the Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal, the Lord Privy-Seal, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the two Secretaries of State, &c. to confirm the defective Titles of ſuch as held Lands of the Crown; dated at Canbury, Aug. 23, 1635.

678. 7. A Schedule expreſſing the defective Titles in the above Commiſſin

681. 8. A Proclamation declaring his Majeſty's Royal Grace and Pleaſure to confirm to his Subjects their defective Titles in their Lands and Poſſeſſions, by his Commiſſion lately renewed and enlarged to that purpoſe; dated the 24th of Auguſt at Oatlands.

Tobacco.

235. ‘1. A Proclamation concerning Tobacco, ‘dated at Whitehall the 6th of January, ‘1631.’

IT commanded that no Tobacco ſhould be planted, preſerved, or maintained in England, Ireland, or Wales, or in the Iſles of Jerſey and Guernſey, and that no Perſon ſhould buy or ſell ſuch Tobacco, the ſame being unwholeſome, and therefore to be diſplanted and deſtroyed. That no Tobacco ſhould be imported from Countries under the Obedience of any Foreign Prince or State, but ſuch only as ſhould particularly be allowed to be imported from thence according to Treaties, leſt the Subjects ſhould unthriftily vent the ſolid Commodities of our own Kingdoms, and return the Proceed thereof in Smoak. And that no Tobacco of our Plantations in America be imported at any other Port but London, and even there no more than what ſhould be declared under the Privy-Seal to be ſufficient for Home-Conſumption, to prevent an immoderate Expence of ſo vain and needleſs a Commodity, which ought to be uſed as a Drug only, and not ſo vainly and wantonly, as an evil Habit of late Times hath brought it into. Care was alſo to be taken in the ordering of it, that the Subjects ſhould not be abuſed by corrupt Tobacco.

THIS Proclamation was founded upon a Petition of the Virginia Planters, and the Retailers and Sellers of Tobacco in and about London and Weſtminſter, ſetting forth, that by the Importation of Braſil and Spaniſh Tobacco, and of unſerviceable Tobacco brought from our own Plantations, and by the Uſe of Tobacco planted in ſeveral Parts of this Kingdom, our American Plantations, depending ſolely on Tobacco, were in danger of being ruined, and the Bodies and Manners of our People in a fair way to be corrupted.

474. ‘2. A Proclamation for preventing of ‘the Abuſes owing to the unordered Re‘tailing of Tobacco; dated at Whitehall, ‘October 13, 1633.’

IT takes notice that Tobacco, which was at firſt imported in ſmall Quantities under the Notion of a Medicine, and ſo uſed by divers People, came in proceſs of time to be taken in great Quantities for Wantonneſs and Exceſs, to ſatisfy the inordinate Appetite of great numbers of both Sexes, whom it provoked to Drinking and other Inconveniencies, to the great impairing of their Healths, and depraving of their Manners. Therefore no Perſon that kept a publick Houſe, or ſold any ſtrong Liquors, were to vend it, nor any others, without a Licence. CHARLES I.

3. ANOTHER Proclamation for reſtraining the abuſive Vent of Tobacco, forbidding all Perſons to ſell it by Retail without a Licence from his Majeſty; dated at Newmarket, March 13, 1634. 512.

4. A Proclamation concerning the Landing of Tobacco, and alſo forbidding the Planting of it in the King's Dominions; dated May 19, at Greenwich. 553.

560. ‘5. A Commiſſion under the Privy-Seal, ‘to treat with the Perſons intereſted in the ‘Tobacco Plantations, that the King might ‘have the ſole Pre-emption of all that grew ‘on them, at ſuch Rates and Prices as were ‘fit to ſupport the ſaid Colonies; dated ‘June 19, 1634, at Weſtminſter.’

THIS Commiſſion was founded upon credible Information, as well as on the Petition of many of the poor Planters, that they were grievouſly oppreſs'd by the ſecret and indirect Trade of particular Merchants and Shop-keepers; who made a Prey of them and their Labours, by ſupplying their Neceſſities with Commodities at ſuch unreaſonable Rates, that they were uſually forced to pay 50 or 60 Pound Weight of Tobacco for a pair of Shoes, with ſuch like unconſcionable Advantages in other Merchandizes, that the poor Planters have ſcarce had Neceſſaries for their Bodies, but had engaged the greateſt part of their Crops beforehand to their ſaid Merchants and Shopkeepers; inſomuch that they only laboured and lived to inrich thoſe, who thus worked upon their Neceſſities, without being able to pay the King's Duties, or to apply themſelves to more noble, or ſtaple Commodities, whereby they might become of conſequence to the Crown of England; which unjuſt, and unconſcionable Courſe of the ſaid Merchants and Shopkeepers (as 'tis expreſs'd in the Commiſſion) had for ſome Years paſt been ſo grievous to the ſaid Planters, that they were forced, contrary to Expectation, not only to petition for Abatement of the Duties, but to beg their Bread from door to door, without any Help or Relief from the ſaid Merchants and Shop-keepers; by which means, and out of the woful Experience of their Miſeries, they had of late Years been compelled to offer their Tobacco to divers of the Merchants of London, tendring unto them a Contract for a Term of Years; which being refuſed, they were afterwards forced to ſend moſt of their Tobacco for Foreign Parts, without any Payment of the ordinary Duties to the King, any Regulation, either in quality or quantity of Tobacco, or any Reſpect to the King or his Dominions, from whence they had their annual Support of Men, Ammunition, and Proviſions: and this contrary to ſeveral Proclamations and Orders of Council; whereby the Plantations were in danger of being utterly ruined, and the Planters (who ſenſibly groaned under the Burthen,) of being wholly diſabled and impoveriſh'd.

CHARLES I.

Treaties.

66. 1. A Proclamation of the Peace concluded between England and France; dated May 10, 1629.

86. 2. A Commiſſion, under the Great-Seal, to Sir Thomas Edmond, Treaſurer of the King's Houſhold, to deliver the Articles to the King of France; dated at Weſtminſter, June, 11, 1629.

87. 3. The Articles of the Treaty, and their Ratification, by King Charles; dated as above.

88. 4. A ſpecial Commiſſion, under the Great-Seal, to Sir Thomas Rowe, Knt. to mediate a Peace betwixt the Kings of Poland and Sweden; ſigned on the ſame Day with the King's own Hand.

101. 5. King Charles's Oath to obſerve it; ſigned with his own hand, Sept. 6.

172. '6. HIS Commiſſion to Sir Robert Anſtruther, to treat with the Electoral Princes, or the Ambaſſadors of the Empire at Ratisbon; ſign'd by the King at Weſtminſter, June 22.'

THE Ambaſſador preſented his Majeſty's earneſt Requeſt to the Emperor, that in regard to the many Interceſſions of his late Father, and other Kings and Princes, he would remit the Diſpleaſure conceived againſt his Brother the Elector-Palatine, and recall the Proſcription iſſued out againſt him; but all the Anſwer he received was, that the preſent Affairs depending in the Dyet were too important to admit of any Foreign Debate, but that the King of Great-Britain ſhould receive ſatisfaction at a more convenient Opportunity.

211. 7. A Proclamation for Peace with Spain; dated Dec. 5.

211. '8. THE King's Oath to obſerve the 'Treaty of Peace; dated Dec. 7.'

MR. Rapin obſerves, that after the King had undertaken the War with France, the Spaniſh War was no more talk'd of than if there had been no ſuch thing, tho' in all the Speeches to the foregoing Parliaments, and in all the Meſſages to the Commons, he had endeavoured to make believe how neceſſary this War was for the Welfare of all Europe, and eſpecially of England. Nay, he had frequently hinted that England and Ireland were in ſo great Danger of being invaded by the Spaniards, that it was impoſſible to be too ſpeedy in applying a Remedy to ſo urgent an Evil. And yet the Spaniards never made any Attempt that might confirm the Fears the King would have inſpir'd the Parliament with. The King of Spain, contented with not being attack'd, undertook nothing againſt England, well-knowing he was in no danger from that Quarter. However, after the Peace was concluded betwixt France and England, his Catholick Majeſty thought it likewiſe proper to clap up a Peace with England, in which he met with no manner of difficulty, Charles being by no means in a condition to carry it on.

219. 9. THE Treaty of Peace and Commerce, between King Charles and Philip IV. of Spain; ſign'd the 15th of November.

226. 10. THE King of Spain's Oath to obſerve the ſaid Treaty; ſworn at Madrid the 17th of December.

267. 11. ANOTHER Commiſſion under the Great Seal to Sir Robert Anſtruther, to treat with the Emperor for the reſtoring the Elector Palatine to his Dominions, and for confirming the Peace; dated at Weſtminſter the 27th of March 1631.

268. 12. ANOTHER of the ſame date to treat with the Electoral Princes for the Purpoſes aforeſaid.

302. 13. A ſpecial Commiſſion to Sir Iſaac Wake, to treat of and conclude Matters for confirming the Peace, &c. with the King of France; dated at Greenwich, June 29.

303. 14. KING Charles's Letter of the ſame date, promiſing to deliver up the Fort and Settlement of Quebec in Canada to the King of France, in purſuance of the Treaty of Peace.

317. 15. A ſpecial Commiſſion to Sir Henry Fane, Comptroller of the Houſhold, to confirm the Treaty of Alliance with Chriſtian IV. King of Denmark; ſign'd by the King's own Hand at Weſtminſter, Sept. 20, and ſealed with the Great Seal.

318. 16. ANOTHER of the ſame date, for his treating of, and concluding a more firm Peace with the King of Sweden and other Princes of Germany.

361. 17. A Treaty between King Lewis XIII. and King Charles for the Reſtoration of New France, Acadia, and Canada, and of the Ships and Merchandiſe taken on both ſides. And,

364. 18. A Treaty between the two Kings for re-eſtabliſhing Commerce; dated at St. Germain-en-Laye, March 29, 1632.

'19. KING Charles's Ratification of the 'two Treaties; dated April 13, 1632.'

[BOTH

FOEDERA Tom. XIX. [BOTH theſe Treaties are alſo to be found in the ſecond Volume of the General Collection printed for our Bookſellers.]

397. 20. COMMISSIONS, under the Great-Seal, to Sir Robert Anſtruther, to treat with the King of Denmark, (Chriſtian IV.) for renewing the League, &c. with the Princes and States of the Empire, for a Public Peace, and the Reſtoration of the King's Siſter, and Nephews; and with the Queen of Sweden; ſigned by the King at Weſtminſter, Dec. 20.

546. 21. A ſpecial Commiſſion, under the Great-Seal, to Sir Sackvill Crowe, one of the Gentlemen of the Privy-Chamber, to confirm the Friendſhip with the Grand Sultan, Amurath Han, and to eſtabliſh the Privileges, and all Matters relating to Commerce in the Turkiſh Coaſts; dated at Weſtminſter, April 9, 1634.

548. 22. A Commiſſion, under the Great-Seal, to Sir Robert Anſtruther, to treat with the Ambaſſador of the Crown of Sweden, the Director-General of the Evangelic League, and the confederate Princes and States, and each of them, or their Ambaſſadors, or Deputies, at Francfort on the Maine, of all Matters relating to the Preſervation of Religion, to the Liberty of Germany, and to the King's Siſter, and Nieces; dated April 22.

638. 23. A ſpecial Commiſſion, to Simon Digby, Eſq; to be Agent in Ruſſia; dated June 23, 1635, at Weſtminſter.

Trials.

278. 'I. A ſpecial Commiſſion to Thomas, 'Lord Coventry, Lord-Keeper of the Great 'Seal, to officiate as High-Steward, at the 'Trial of Mervin Touchet, Lord Audley, 'of Fountell Gifford in the County of 'Wilts, and Earl of Caſtlehaven in Ire-'land; dated at Weſtminſter, under the 'Privy-Seal, April 16, 1631.' This Lord had three Indictments found againſt him at Salisbury Aſſizes, for a Rape committed on his own Lady, with his Aſſiſtance, by Broadway one of his Servants, and for that other deteſtable Crime of Sodomy with Fitz-Patrick another of his Servants. His Trial, which was very ſolemn, came on at Weſtminſter-Hall, on the 25th of April, before the ſaid Lord Steward and eight Judges, Aſſiſtants, and twenty-ſeven Peers, who found him guilty, for which he was condemned, and ſoon after executed. His Sentence was to be hanged; but by the King's Clemency, it was changed into beheading, which was performed upon Tower hill.

284. 2. THE King's ſpecial Warrant to the Lord-Keeper, to make out due Proceſs for his Execution, declares, that his Majeſty was determined to have him beheaded rather than hanged, in regard, among other Reaſons, not only to his Nobility, but to his Deſcent from thoſe noble Anceſtors who had formerly done worthy Services to the Crown of England. CHARLES I.

3. THE Commiſſion to Sir William Balfour Lieutenant of the Tower to deliver his Perſon to the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex: And,

4. THE Warrant to the Sheriffs to receive him, and to cauſe him to be beheaded on Tower-hill, which follow the above Warrant, are dated May 12. All the Peers except Dudley, Lord North, voted him guilty of the Rape, and fifteen of them declared him guilty of the Sodomy. Broadway and Fitz-Patrick were executed at Tyburn.

321. 4. THE Pardon of his Counteſs for all Crimes of Adultery, Fornication, and Inceſt; dated Nov. 14, at Weſtminſter.

Univerſities.

70. 'I. A particular Conſtitution for the Elec-'tion and better Management of the Scholars 'of St. Peter's College in Cambridge; da-'ted at Weſtminſter, May 15, 1629, under 'the Privy-Seal.'

No more than two out of any County were to be Fellows of this College at any one time, except only Cambridgeſhire and the County of Middleſex, including the City of London, which two Counties were allowed four each; becauſe Cambridgeſhire with the Iſle of Ely furniſhed the far greateſt Share of Proviſions for the Maintenance of the College, and Middleſex and London ſent moſt Boys thither for Learning.

393. 2. A Privilege, under the Privy-Seal, granted to the Maſter and Scholars of the Univerſity of Oxford, to give a Licence to three Bookſellers and Printers, whether Natives or Foreigners, to print and ſell within or without the Univerſity all Books not publickly prohibited, after approbation thereof by the Chancellor, Vice Chancellor, or three Doctors, empowered by the ſaid Chancellor, Maſters, and Scholars, to examine and approve the ſame; dated at Weſtminſter, Nov. 12, 1632.

638. '3. A ſpecial Licence under the Privy-'Seal, incorporating Sir Francis Kinaſton, '(who was one of the four Eſquires of the 'King's Body) as Regent, and ſix other 'Perſons, as Profeſſors of a College erected 'in Covent-Garden, with the Title of Mi-'nerva's Muſæum, for the Inſtruction of the 'young Nobility in the Liberal Arts and 'Sciences. 'Tis dated at Canbury, June 26, '1635.'

THE Profeſſors were Edward May Doctor of Philoſophy and Phyſick, Thomas Hunt Batchelor of Muſick, Nicholas Phiske Profeſſor of Aſtronomy, John Spidell a Geometrician, Walter Salter a Linguiſt, and Michael Maſon a Fencing-Maſter.

'1. A Commiſſion, under the Privy-Seal, 'dated Dec. 17, 1633, at Weſtminſter, and 'directed to Richard Earl of Portland, 'Lord High-Treaſurer, &c. to call the Of-'ficers of the King's Wardrobes to account; 'to which are annex'd the King's Orders for 'Regulation of the Wardrobes, and pay-'ing the Officers Wages; dated April 15, '1630.'

WHEREBY it appears, that the Maſter of the great Wardrobe was to be allowed 16,000*l.* a Year by way of Impreſt, upon account, towards defraying the general and yearly Expences of the Wardrobe; and the Gentleman of the Robes was alſo to have an Aſſignment of 500*l.* a Year by way of Impreſt upon Accompt, for defraying of all manner of Expences belonging to the Office of his Majeſty's Robes.

875. 2. A Grant of certain Fees to the Officers of the Wardrobe, by a Writ of Privy-Seal; dated October 13, 1634, at Weſtminſter.

634. 3. A ſpecial Commiſſion to the Earl of Pembroke, Lord-Chamberlain, &c. to take a Survey and Account of the King's Wardrobes; dated May 9, 1635.

Wines.

405. 1. A Proclamation for Prizing of Wines, declaring that for one Year next following, Canary, Muſcadel, and Alicant Wines be ſold in Groſs at 16*l.* a Pipe, and at 12*d.* a Quart by Retale; Sacks and Malagoes at 13*l.* the Butt in Groſs, and 9*d.* a Quart Retale; the beſt Gaſcoigne and French Wines at 18*l.* a Tun in Groſs, and 6*d.* a Quart by Retale; and the Rochel and other ſmall thin Wines at 15*l.* a Tun in Groſs, and 5*d.* a Quart by Retale. And where Wines were conveyed by Land-Carriage, the ſeveral Sorts of Wines were to be ſold according to the Rates aforeſaid, allowing 4*l.* a Tun, and 1*d.* a Quart for the Carriage thereof upon Land every 30 Miles. The Proclamation is dated at Whitehall, Feb. 18, 1633.

429. 2. ANOTHER Proclamation for the Priſing of French Wines, wherein 'tis declared, that becauſe this preſent Year ſome of the Wines of Gaſcoigne are very ſmall and thin, and ſcarce to be diſcerned from the thinner Sort of Wines; and that becauſe ſome of the thinner Wines are very good and deſirable, and others ſo thin and ſmall, that they are not to be ſold at ſo high a rate as 5*d.* a Quart: Therefore his Majeſty orders that the good and wholeſome Wines of the Growth of France, as well thoſe of Rochel, as the reſt, ſhould be ſold by Retale at reaſonable Prices, not exceeding 6*d.* a Quart. This Proclamation is dated at Whitehall, March 22.

503. 3. ANOTHER Proclamation for the Prizing of Wines; dated Jan. 25, 1634. declaring that Canary Wines, Muſcadel, and Alicant be ſold in Groſs at 17*l.* a Pipe, and at 12*d.* a Quart by Retale; Sacks, and Wines of Malaga at 15*l.* the Butt in Groſs, and 10*d.* a Quart Retale; the beſt Gaſcoigne and French Wines at 18*l.* a Tun, and at 6*d.* the Quart by Retale; and the Rochel and other ſmall thin Wines at 15*l.* a Tun in Groſs, and 6*d.* a Quart Retale. But in Places above ten Miles from the Ports where the Wines are landed, they were to be ſold according to the Rates aforeſaid, allowing 4*l.* a Tun, and one Penny per Quart for the Carriage thereof by Land every 30 Miles.

716. 4. A Privy-Seal granting to Francis Chamberlayne, Eſq; for 14 Years, the ſole making of Wines of dried Grapes and Raiſins, which he had invented in his Travels, on paying 40*s.* a Year to the Crown; dated at Weſtminſter, Jan. 4, 1636. See Manufactures and Monopolies.
